FOR INFORMATION

MONITORING GROUP PAST INTERVENTION – WALEED ALBULKHAIR

SUMMARY

1. On April 1, 2015, Lawyers' Rights Watch Canada asked the Law Society of Upper Canada to join a Petition to the UN Working Group on Arbitrary Detention for Saudi Arabian lawyer Waleed Albulkhair, on whose behalf the Law Society has intervened twice, most recently in early March 2015.
2. Waleed Albulkhair is serving a 15 year sentence for peacefully advocating reforms necessary to protect rights. He is a lawyer and has been an outspoken advocate for an elected parliament, an independent judiciary, a constitutional monarchy and recognition of human rights. He has also advocated on behalf of prisoners of conscience and written many articles identifying human rights abuses and the need for legal reform. In 2012 he was awarded the Olof Palme Prize for his strong, self-sacrificing and sustained struggle to promote respect for human and civil rights for both men and women in Saudi Arabia.<sup>[1]</sup>
3. In April 2012 the Government of Saudi Arabia banned him from traveling outside Saudi Arabia. Some of the advocacy for recognition of human rights and democratic reform that led to his prosecution and imprisonment include:
  - o In 2007 he signed the Features of a Constitutional Monarchy a petition calling for a constitutional monarchy;
  - o In 2008 he founded the Monitor for Human Rights in Saudi Arabia (MHRSA). MHRSA and the Saudi Civil and Political Rights Association (ACPRA) became the first to highlight the plight of prisoners of conscience in Saudi Arabia;
  - o In 2008 he initiated a 48-hour hunger strike for prisoners of conscience which led to sit-ins and demonstrations;
  - o In 2011 he signed Towards a State of Rights and Institutions, a 9-point petition calling for elections, an independent judiciary and the establishment of civil society institutions and labour unions. The petition was posted on a dedicated website and Facebook and signed by over 9,000 before it was removed;

- In 2012 he began hosting weekly meetings in his home called 'samood' (which connotes resistance or steadfastness) to discuss social, political and philosophical issues. He was arrested temporarily in October 2013 as a result of these meetings. These sessions began in reaction to the government clamp down on gatherings in public places following the 8 February 2012 arrest of journalist Hamza Kashgari;
  - In 2012 he publically criticized the "war" on freedom of expression and the "criminalization" of thought in Saudi Arabia;
  - In 2013 he publically criticized the lack of codified laws and interference by the Minister of the Interior as factors contributing to "religious extremism and intolerance among the judiciary" and the conviction of human rights and civil society advocates;<sup>[2]</sup>
  - He has represented Raif Badawi, the organizer of the Saudi Liberal Network internet discussion group who was convicted of insulting Islam and sentenced to 10 years in prison, a fine, and 1,000 lashes to be administered 50 lashes at a time; and
  - He has attended meetings regarding human rights concerns with the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC).
4. As this matter was of an urgent nature, the Treasurer approved the request to support the petition and informs Convocation of this action. The action was taken in accordance with the Monitoring Group's mandate stating "where Convocation's meeting schedule makes such a review and approval impractical, the Treasurer may review such responses in Convocation's place and take such steps, as he or she deems appropriate. In such instances, the Human Rights Monitoring Group shall report on the matters at the next meeting of Convocation."

<sup>[2]</sup> "The legal system is based on uncodified principles of Islamic law, which leaves judges largely free to decide what actions, in their view, are crimes, as well as the appropriate punishments. I believe that the Interior Ministry actively encourages religious extremism and intolerance among the judiciary, recognizing that judges with these views are far more willing to convict human rights and civil society advocates of vague religious and social offenses." ## Introduction

This interim report to Convocation provides an overview of the consultations by the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group (the Working Group) based on the findings in its consultation paper published in October of 2014, “Developing Strategies for Change: Addressing Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees”.<sup>1</sup>

From across the legal and paralegal professions, there has been an interested and enthusiastic response to addressing the challenges. We heard from all parts of the province that the Law Society has a role to play in being part of the solution to the challenges identified in the consultation report. The following sections outline the background to the consultation process and summarize the ideas for fostering growth and positive change that we have heard during our discussions with the profession and the public.

Background

Since 2012, the Law Society’s Working Group has been mandated to:

- a. Identify challenges faced by racialized licensees in different practice environments, including entry into practice and advancement;
- b. Identify factors and practice challenges faced by racialized licensees that could increase the risk of regulatory complaints and discipline;
- c. Consider best practices for preventative, remedial and/or support strategies;
- d. If appropriate, design and develop preventative, remedial, enforcement, regulatory and/or support strategies, for consideration by the Equity Committee and other committees, to address these challenges.

The Working Group gathered information about the challenges using formal and informal engagement processes. Further information about this part of our work can be found at: <http://www.lsuc.on.ca/racialized-licensees/>.

The qualitative and quantitative data we obtained from the engagement processes identified widespread barriers experienced by racialized licensees within the legal profession at all stages of their careers. Examples of challenges faced in the legal profession include discrimination and stereotyping, negotiating concepts of “culture” and “fit”, and lack of mentors, networks and role models. Participants also noted that race-based barriers are often complicated by the additional experiences of discrimination based on gender identity, gender expression, disability, sexual orientation, class and creed.

Some participants in the engagement process believed that racialized licensees were more likely to go into sole practice as a result of barriers faced in other practice environments. They also noted that internationally trained lawyers and paralegals face additional barriers in the profession. Generally, participants noted the vulnerability of racialized licensees in the legal profession in the context of professional regulation and discipline.

The challenges faced by racialized licensees impact the reputation of the legal system in Ontario, affect access to justice for Ontarians and affect the quality of legal services for the public.

The Working Group reviewed all of the information we gathered and drafted a consultation paper titled Developing Strategies for Change: Addressing Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees.<sup>2</sup> The consultation paper summarized the findings of the engagement process and posed seven (7) questions for the profession focused on addressing the challenges faced by racialized licensees. The questions are organized within five themes:

- Enhancing the internal capacity of organizations;
- Mentoring, advisory services and networking;
- Enhancing cultural competence in the profession;
- Discrimination and the role of the complaints process; and
- The operations of The Law Society of Upper Canada.

Convocation approved the consultation paper in November 2014, and the Working Group consulted with lawyers, paralegals and members of the public throughout the province of Ontario between January and March 2015

The Consultation

The Working Group embarked on a journey of listening and learning, which involved holding twelve (12) open house learning and consultation programs around the province and participating in meetings with representatives from law firms, legal clinics, banks, government and legal associations. A summary of activities and submissions is presented in a separate report entitled Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group – Consultation Activities and Overview of Observations (TAB 5.2.2.1).

These meetings were focused on practical solutions the Law Society could initiate or facilitate to specifically address the challenges faced by racialized licensees and to enhance diversity and inclusion within the legal profession.

The Working Group has heard from over 1,000 racialized and non-racialized lawyers, paralegals, law students, articling students and members of the public in the Greater Toronto Area (Downtown Toronto, Brampton, Newmarket, Oshawa), Hamilton, London, Ottawa, Sudbury, Thunder Bay, and Windsor. Three Toronto open houses (one in French and two in English) were webcast to ensure full access to all lawyers, paralegals and members of the public in Ontario.

The Working Group has met or heard from a broad range of organizational stakeholders including:

- The Advocates' Society;
- The African Canadian Legal Clinic;
- The Arab Canadian Lawyers Association;
- The Association des juristes d'expression française de l'Ontario;
- The Association of Law Officers of the Crown;
- The Canadian Association of Black Lawyers;
- The Canadian Association of South Asian Lawyers;
- The Canadian Association of Muslim Women in Law;
- The Canadian Hispanic Bar Association;
- The Canadian Italian Advocates Association;
- The Canadian Muslim Lawyers Association;
- The Canadian Somali Lawyers Association;
- The County & District Law Presidents' Association;
- The Family Lawyers Association;
- The Federation of Asian Canadian Lawyers;
- The Human Rights Legal Support Centre;
- The Indigenous Bar Association;
- The Law Firms Diversity and Inclusion Network;
- The Law Society's Equity Advisory Group;
- The Law Students Society of Ontario
- The Legal Leaders for Diversity and Inclusion (LLD);
- The Ontario Bar Association;
- The Ontario Paralegal Association;
- The South Asian Bar Association;
- The Roundtable of Diversity Associations of the Toronto Lawyers' Association<sup>3</sup>;
- The University of Windsor, Equity and Diversity Committee;
- The University of Ottawa, Faculty of Law, faculty
- The Women Legal Mentoring Program;
- The Women Paralegal Association of Ontario; and
- law students and professors.

As part of the consultation process, the Working Group also reached out to larger law firms in Toronto to discuss the questions raised in the consultation paper. The Chair of the Working Group and Law Society staff met with managing partners and often recruitment partners or partner representatives on the Law Firms Diversity and Inclusion Network. The meetings have yielded positive discussions about policy options for addressing many of the challenges identified in the consultation paper. There has been interest and enthusiasm expressed for working collaboratively with the Law Society. Firms have begun a number of initiatives to create more inclusive workspaces. There is recognition of the business and human drivers for increasing competence in the diversity and inclusion aspects of hiring and retention.

We expect to complete the meetings in April so that the information obtained at these meetings can be considered in the context of our policy work. It is gratifying to see that a corresponding amount of interest exists within the larger firms in addition to the interest already demonstrated by the bar across Ontario during our meetings with groups, individuals and via webcast.

Also noteworthy is the exceptional amount of media interest in the consultation paper from media outlets across the province. In total, 18 stories appeared via mainstream, regional and legal media outlets, including the Globe and Mail, CBC Metro Morning, the Hamilton Spectator, the Brampton Guardian, CKPR Thunder Bay, 1310 News Ottawa, the Lawyers Weekly, Law Times, and CBA National Magazine. All coverage was extremely positive and included key messages from the consultation paper. This underscores the importance of the project to the professions and the public.

White Privilege

Consultant participants spoke of “white privilege”<sup>4</sup>, and expressed the need for all of us to acknowledge its existence in order to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees. A number of participants noted that it is important for licensees to understand how power operates to produce advantages for some and deny advantages to others.

Aboriginal Licensees and Racialized Licensees: Historical and Geographical Differences

Open house learning and consultation programs in Northern Ontario yielded interesting information about the similarities and differences between the experiences of Aboriginal licensees and licensees that self-identify as racialized in the context of the definition put forward by the Working Group and the importance of considering geographical location. Participants in Thunder Bay noted that, in terms of race and racism, the population in northern areas of the province is often divided into Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal peoples. Participants identified several examples where they had witnessed racism directed at Aboriginal people and where they had observed that racialized people were not treated differently from non-racialized people. It was noted that because of constitutionally protected Aboriginal and Treaty rights, Aboriginal peoples are in a different position than racialized and non-racialized peoples in Canada. As a result of these distinctive histories, strategies to respond to racism faced by Aboriginal peoples and to racism faced by racialized peoples should differ. The Law Society's policy work reflects this uniqueness, including the work of the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee and other initiatives that are outside the scope of this Working Group. The Law Society is also vigorously pursuing an Aboriginal Strategy in consultation with the Aboriginal Bar.

The Consultation Results:

The Working Group encouraged written submissions on the questions posed in the consultation paper or any additional initiatives, ideas or practices that could address the challenges faced by racialized licensees. The deadline for submissions was extended from March 1, 2015 to March 15, 2015, as a result of a number of requests for extra time.

This report summarizes the comments and ideas we have received to date from our meetings and consultations. A more complete record of the consultation activities and aggregated comments is available in a separate report entitled Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group – Consultation Activities. At the time of writing this report, we were still receiving written submissions. These will be discussed and considered in a separate report. However, the written submissions received to date and for which we have received the expressed consent to publish are available on-line at <http://www.lsuc.on.ca/racialized-licensees/>. The list of those who have provided their express consent is available at Appendix 1 of this report.

A. Enhancing the internal capacity of organizations

The Working Group posed the following questions related to this theme in the consultation paper:

- How should the Law Society act as a catalyst for the establishment of diversity programs within firms<sup>5</sup> and why?
- What is the preferred model for the collection of firm demographic data and why?
- How could the Law Society work with in-house legal departments to develop model contract compliance programs for in-house legal departments that retain firms?

Diversity Programs

"We need to encourage firms to be champions of diversity."
-Participant

There is significant support for the creation of diversity programs for the recruitment, retention and advancement of racialized licensees in firms and other legal organizations. Participants have reminded the Working Group that firm size, industry and geographical location need to be considered should the Law Society decide to develop diversity programs.

A number of participants support the creation of a diversity project modelled on the Law Society of Upper Canada's Justicia Project.<sup>6</sup> Participants are divided, however, on whether diversity programs should be mandatory or voluntary. Some participants have noted that voluntary programs create buy-in and a willingness to create change. A number of participants have stated that it is important to have "diversity champions" who will lead change from the top-down. Participants outside of the GTA that work in small firms see the value of voluntary programs as small firms may lack the resources to implement mandatory programs. Some participants have noted that mandatory programs could create backlash.

Participants in favour of mandatory programs argue that mandatory programs create stronger awareness of equity and diversity issues. One participant, who had experience with employment equity programs, said it is necessary to have an enforcement mechanism in place. Other participants believe that, at the very least, the Law Society should require firms and legal organizations to have equity and diversity policies in place. Some participants suggested that the Law Society ask licensees to answer questions related to their firm's policies in the annual report in order to prompt change. Some participants suggested that requirements could include quotas for the number of racialized licensees that must be interviewed or hired by firms and legal organizations; however the majority of participants were strongly opposed to the creation of quota systems.

Some participants support the proposal that firms complete a self-assessment about their diversity performance, which would include more than an analysis of demographic data. One participant stated, Beyond numbers, look at the way in which interactions are made, the ways in which people are hired, anti-nepotism policies, mentoring programs. All of these things are bigger pieces of the diversity pie.

The majority of participants interested in this idea indicated that the self-assessment should be voluntary, however the Law Society could provide incentives for firms to engage in this process. There were some participants who were in support of mandatory self-assessments that would be conducted by employees instead of firm management to garner more valuable results. Additionally, participants stated that the Law Society should provide law firms and legal organizations with self-assessment templates and tools.

Collecting Demographic Data

"Data collection is a humble but important first step."

<sup>6</sup> The Justicia Project was launched in 2008 to create a collaboration between medium and large sized firms and the Law Society. The participants signed agreements and committed to develop policies, resources, practices and programs that would address barriers women face in the legal profession in relation to retention and career advancement. The Justicia Project prompted law firms to review policies and practices and to participate in the creation of resources on subjects such as leadership, business development, career advancement, parental leave and flexible work engagements, in order to increase the retention and advancement of women lawyers.

-Participant

The Working Group has heard a broad range of views on the issue of demographic data collection; however, most participants agreed that the collection of data would be, as one participant noted, “a humble but important first step”. Some participants believe that mandatory data collection is crucial to advancing diversity and inclusion, while others believe that mandatory collection could halt the progress that is already being made by firms and legal organizations in the area of equity and diversity.

Participants on the side of mandatory collection had a number of suggestions related to the methods of collection and reporting. The majority of participants, including those in small firms and outside of Toronto, were in favour of the Law Society collecting demographic data. Some participants suggested that the Law Society could use the data collected in the annual report to provide firms and legal organizations with their individual firm/organization demographic data and aggregate demographic data of firms of similar size and location to provide a benchmark. Participants also noted that it would be useful to capture information about inclusion and advancement in addition to numbers. Some participants in favour of mandatory reporting stated that, in order to create change, the demographic information for each firm should be publicly available.

One participant noted that if the Law Society determines that firms and legal organizations should be required to provide their own demographic data, the Law Society should ensure that there are processes in place for employees to self-identify.

Participants in favour of voluntary data collection have noted that a number of large firms are already engaging in demographic data collection and inclusion surveys, and are committed to this work - should the Law Society mandate data collection, it could have a negative effect on the work already being done. Participants from small firms have indicated that they are unsure how mandatory data collection would be enforced. Some participants believe that demographic data should be reported but on a voluntary basis. A number of participants suggested setting data collection as a criterion of a voluntary diversity program. The Law Society could then incentivize data collection by providing ratings or awards for meeting certain levels of diversity and inclusion.

In 2009, the Law Society began collecting demographic data, including race-based data, through the Lawyer Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report. A self-identification question was included in the annual reports to allow the Law Society to be aware of the extent to which the legal profession is reflective of the broader community it serves, to help meet the needs of the public, and to develop programs to enhance the diversity of the profession. The Law Society does not link demographic information to firms or legal organizations, however the Law Society could consider doing so.

Contract Compliance

- Participant

We heard that the Law Society could play a facilitative role by encouraging corporate procurement policies that consider supplier equity and diversity. A number of participants have highlighted the Bank of Montreal's contract compliance program and the work of the Legal Leaders for Diversity (LLD) as best practices in this area.

Some participants noted that they would discourage mandatory contract compliance as often people respond better to incentives rather than punitive consequences. Some participants from small firms pointed out that strict mandatory contract compliance related to diversity could be difficult for small firms and lead to smaller firms being unable to compete for work for larger entities and corporations.

B. Mentoring, advisory services and networking

The Working Group posed the following questions related to this theme in the consultation paper:

- What are the preferred mentoring and/or advisory services models for racialized licensees?
- What are the preferred networking models for racialized licensees?

Mentoring and Advisory Services

"Mentorship is not one size fits all"
- Participant

In November 2013, Convocation created the Mentoring and Advisory Services Proposal Task Force (the Task Force), which is examining the issue of mentoring. The Working Group will consult with the Task Force concerning the information obtained on mentoring and advisory services from our consultation process.

Types of Mentoring and Advisory Services

Generally, the Working Group has heard that there is no "one-size-fits all" model for mentorship. Different types of mentorship may be required at different stages of a person's career for different purposes. For example, mentoring could be case-specific or it could be related to how to navigate the profession as a racialized licensee.

A number of participants highlighted the importance of providing mentoring for sole practitioners. Paralegal participants told us that there is a shortage of mentorship programs in the paralegal community and thus a significant need. Other participants have noted that racialized licensees in large firms do not have role models within their firms so they should be provided with assistance to find mentors from outside their firms.

A significant number of participants emphasized that sponsorship is also essential to the career advancement of racialized licensees, noting that it would be helpful to have sponsors or champions advocating for individual licensees at decision-making tables.

Structure of Mentoring and Advisory Services

Some participants stated that it would be useful to have a panel of mentors who could address different facets a licensees' career, including providing advice on navigating barriers, substantive legal issues or on career advancement . Participants have also noted that mentorship should be provided to students before law school, to address pipelines issues, and in law school.

A number of organizations have described their mentoring programs and expressed interest in working collaboratively with the Law Society to help licensees in need of mentorship. One way in which this could take place using enhanced website services, the creation of a highly functional and welcoming on line mentoring community with links to partner organizations. As many organizations have their own websites, the Law Society could function as a connector to these kinds of services.

Participants have proposed various mentorship models, which include: one-on-one mentoring with various mentors for different purposes, study groups with people who have similar challenges and group mentoring to assist with practice management and career advancement. Some participants have suggested that junior licensees could also mentor other junior licensees from same racialized community. In a similar vein, some participants have stated that junior racialized licensees could act as effective mentors to senior non-racialized licensees.

Participants have noted that often mentoring programs have difficulty finding willing mentors. One participant also noted difficulties finding racialized mentors because, "we are not grooming racialized lawyers to become leaders." Some participants suggested that the Law Society have licensees note on the annual report if they are willing to be mentors. The Law Society could then create a mentor roster. Similarly, other participants suggested having a web-based sign up for mentors, which would allow the mentors to indicate their area of law and their time availability. Incentives for mentors could include the receipt of professionalism hours for mentoring services. Participants also suggested that mentors receive cultural competence training.

Participants outside of the GTA highlighted specific issues related to mentoring in their regions. A number of participants noted that the majority of professional associations that represent equity-seeking groups do not operate outside of the GTA, which limits access to association-based mentorship programs. One participant stated that if mentorship was to be offered in-person, it should be geographically accessible for licensees in under-served areas.

Networking

"Have more inclusive events."

- Participant

Many participants have stated that associations of racialized lawyers and paralegals are beneficial for fostering collaboration and creating a sense of belonging. Some participants have suggested that it would be useful for the Law Society to facilitate collaboration amongst the various associations. Some participants told us that legal associations are often too costly to join. Some of the associations also described concern with the cost of holding events for their sectors of the bar at the Law Society and expressed interest in having “in-kind” support and partnership from the Law Society to make those events accessible to diverse communities of lawyers.

Some participants have proposed that the Law Society hold regional networking events for licensees. Others note that Continuing Professional Development (CPD) programs can be good networking opportunities.

Participants have highlighted the fact that internationally trained lawyers and sole practitioners feel particularly isolated so networking opportunities should also be targeted to these groups.

C. Enhancing cultural competence in the profession

The Working Group posed the following question related to this theme in the consultation paper:

- How could the Law Society enhance the profession’s cultural competence through its CPD programs?

CPD Programs

“We need to be educated about diversity.”

-Participant

A large number of participants were in favour of the Law Society requiring licensees to participate in mandatory CPD training on cultural competence, unconscious bias, and anti-racism. Others suggested that this CPD training be provided on a voluntary basis. There was concern expressed that requiring this form of training to be taken by all would be counter-productive. In either case however, participants agreed that professionalism credits should be provided for CPD training on these topics.

Some participants highlighted the importance of requiring licensees involved in recruitment, hiring and promotion decisions to participate in CPDs related to cultural competence and unconscious bias, specifically addressing topics such as bias-free interviews. One participant stated, “If attitudes don’t change, the numbers are not going to change.” Participants suggested that this CPD programming could be offered via webcast during summer student and articling interview periods. It was also proposed that the Law Society deliver these programs and other cultural competence and anti-discrimination and harassment programs at firms.

A number of participants noted the need to ensure that education on cultural competence, unconscious bias, anti-racism and anti-oppression start at law school and in the licensing process. A participant suggested that the Law Society use its seat on the Federation of Law Societies to encourage the inclusion of cultural competency and diversity awareness as part of the core law school curriculum.

It was proposed that all benchers be provided with the training under consideration in order to create a deeper policy understanding of this aspect of the report and to inform Convocation's discussions of the policy alternatives.

Generally, participants stated that CPD programs should be widely available via webcast and recorded. Additionally, some participants suggested that the cost of CPD be reduced, perhaps by working with regional associations.

D. Discrimination and the role of the complaints process

The Working Group posed the following question related to this theme in the consultation paper:

- How should the Law Society best ensure that complaints of discrimination are brought to its attention and effectively addressed?

Complaints of Discrimination

"People have to feel comfortable in accessing policies."

- Participant

The Working Group heard a range of suggestions on encouraging licensees to bring forward complaints of discrimination.

Participants suggested updating the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of conduct to specifically address systemic discrimination and subtle forms of discrimination, so licensees are aware that the Rules do allow for complaints of systemic discrimination to be made to the Law Society. Some participants recommended advertising that complaints of discrimination can be made through the complaints process.

Participants noted that licensees will often refrain from reporting experiences of discrimination because they fear the negative impact a complaint might have on their careers and reputations. One participant stated, "We don't want to rock the boat or be considered a troublemaker".

Participants also noted they feared "micro-aggressions"<sup>7</sup> In order to address this fear, some participants are in favour of the Law Society creating an anonymous system of receiving complaints; however, licensees in small firms said this would not be helpful for them as their firms are too small for them to remain anonymous. Some participants that support an anonymous complaints process recommended that the Law Society investigate firms that have been the subject of a number of anonymous complaints. Participants have also suggested amending the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct to include a provision that states that reprisals for complaints of discrimination and harassment are prohibited.

Participants believe that bringing a complaint through an association may not alleviate the issues raised. Some participants have suggested that the Law Society ask licensees, using the annual report, whether they have ever experienced discrimination. This information could then be collected by firm or legal organization and provided to firm or legal organization management. Other participants propose that the Law Society audit firms to ensure that they have policies related to equity, diversity, discrimination and harassment.

Regardless of the method taken to receive complaints, participants have noted that it is important for the Law Society to advise complainants of what action was taken.

E. The Operations of the Law Society of Upper Canada

The best thing the Law Society can do is start to mirror the behaviour they want to see.
-Participant

The Law Society has received support from participants for its proposals to enhance its current Equity Compliance Program, conduct an internal equity audit, collect further data on the regulatory process and to develop a more diverse public face/image for the Law Society. A number of participants have emphasized that the Law Society must model the change it is seeking to create in the legal profession, which would include increasing diversity at both the governance and the staff levels.

On a few occasions, participants at the meetings and open houses noted the lack of diversity of Working Group presenters. Working Group members attended and presented at open houses and meetings when their schedules permitted, and at some meetings, the group of presenters did not reflect the diversity of racialized licensees at those meetings. That became a point of discussion with participants expressing concern about the overall diversity of Convocation, but also expressing satisfaction that there were those from the dominant culture who are interested in being part of change and in hearing from licensees on these subjects.

Moving Forward

-Participant

The Working Group believes that we are at a particular point in the history of the legal professions where there is a significant possibility for change in the way in which the professions engage with equity and diversity principles and practices. There is a role for the Law Society to play in ensuring that we can be a part of a turning point that leads to positive change for racialized licensees and the professions in general.

As a result, the Working Group plans to continue to consider the balance of the submissions, to consider policy options that are within the mandate of the Law Society, apply what we have heard about best practices and bring a final report to Convocation in fall 2015.

The Consultation Paper and the Consultation Methodology

1. Based on the findings of the informal and formal engagement process, the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group (RWG) drafted a consultation paper for the profession's feedback. In October 2014, the RWG also consulted with members of the Equity Advisory Group, the Community Liaisons, the Canadian Association of Black Lawyers (CABL), the Canadian Association of South Asian Lawyers (CASAL), the Federation of Asian Canadian Lawyers (FACL) and the South Asian Bar Association (SABA) and received very helpful and important feedback on the consultation paper and consultation methodology.
2. The RWG relied on the advice received to develop the following consultation methodology:
  - a. Posting the consultation paper on-line and inviting written submissions from the profession, the judiciary, academia and the public;
  - b. Holding open house meetings across Ontario, including in Durham region, Hamilton, London, Ottawa, Peel region, Sudbury, Thunder Bay, Windsor and York region.
  - c. Holding two open house meetings in English and one in French in Toronto. These meetings were held at the Law Society and webcast.
  - d. Meeting with associations such as the County and District Law Presidents' Association, the Ontario Bar Association, the Ontario Paralegal Association, CABL, SABA, CASAL, FACL, the African Canadian Legal Clinic, the Canadian Association of Muslim Women Lawyers in Law, and the Arab Canadian Lawyers Association. Members of the judiciary and academia were also included, along with associations representing members of the public.
  - e. Meeting with representatives of law firms, including Managing Partners.
3. On October 27, 2014, the consultation paper was posted in French and English on-line with a deadline for written submissions of March 1, 2015. This deadline was extended to March 15, 2015. The following reports were also included on-line: the Stratcom Final Report, the Law Society Studies and Scan of Best Practices Report, the Equity Advisory Group Submissions, the Community Liaison Report and the Results from Informal Engagements report.

Promotional activities

4. On November 3, 2014, the Treasurer's office sent an email informing a number of associations and individuals of the consultation paper, the consultation process and inviting written submissions. The list of individuals and organizations included,
  - the African Canadian Legal Clinic;

Observations to Date

The following are observations raised by participants in the consultation meetings outlined above.

Question 1: How should the Law Society act as a catalyst for the establishment of diversity programs within firms and why?

Diversity Programs

- Interested in the Law Society of England and Wales model. The Law Society of Upper Canada could adopt an inclusion charter. Participating in the inclusion charter project would not be mandatory but once committed to the program, firms would have to report annually to the Law Society. The charter would be a principles-based document that could address articling, recruitment and promotion practices, and there could be incentives to adhere to the charter. Participants could be asked to report to the Law Society about systems improvements and progress. The firms would collaborate to develop relevant resources. Voluntary participation would be better as it creates buy-in.
- Not in favour of requiring standards and compelling someone to do something but in favour of a self-assessment approach. Reforming the culture from the top down is a good approach. Putting the ideas into the mainstream discourse would have a huge impact on large firms.
- Adopting a model like the Justicia project would be good because it was a successful project.
- Proposing several approaches targeted to different types of practices could be an acceptable approach. For example, a small firm may not have the resources to undertake a voluntary project. However, if standards and resources are made available, that could be helpful. For the larger firm environment, different factors are at play.
- Not in favour of mandating programs. The research from the Law Society of England and Wales and Australia show that change happens slowly. If the Law Society asks firms to self-assess, it should ask more than numbers.
- There are a variety of tools on diversity and inclusion. It is important to look beyond the numbers, for example, consider the way in which interactions are made, the way in which people are hired, the way in which mentoring programs are structured.
- Where the Law Society can really assist is by developing an assessment tool that can be used by all law firms and even beyond, for example by government and the judiciary.
- The idea of a diversity project or education in firms is good but firms should do more than provide bare minimum training that does not address cultural inclusivity. Measuring the quality and implementation of programs is important.
- Law Society should consider adopting programs for regions and for all sizes of firms.
- Racialized lawyers do not want to be recognized because of their race, they want to be recognized because of their competency. It is important to hire based on competence, not colour.
- Doing a project on race without looking at other factors such as gender, sexual orientation, religion, socioeconomic class, is incomplete. It might be a richer picture to look at intersectional matrixes and those who are particularly vulnerable.

- For many of the firms, they are just starting to measure progress through for example inclusion and diversity surveys. Mandatory reporting would lead to losing faith in the system. Change is slow and we need to do things that have an impact.
- Because we are just starting to implement strategies for change, the Law Society should start with the carrot rather than a stick.
- For larger firms, look at whether they are hiring diverse cultures. Diversity makes good business sense and the Law Society should impose self-assessments.
- It is difficult for the Law Society to regulate certain policies in law firms. Mandatory programs would not be effective.
- Problem with mandatory diversity programs is the risk of backlash from the bar. If anything is going to be implemented, such as a diversity project or initiative, it should be on a voluntary basis by building the social consciousness of the bar. We have a larger responsibility as members of the Law Society to increase access to justice. If voluntary, then there can be a genuine impact on society.
- Required standards would be too bold. If it is a requirement, it gets peoples` back up.
- Mandatory hiring practices would make those who are already feeling marginalized, feel even more so.
- It is not just an issue of human rights, it is an issue of professional conduct. There are rules prohibiting discrimination already. The approach ignores the fact that this is a professional conduct issue. The requirement that there must be a policy is important but imposing what the policy must look like would not be as useful. The Justicia model is a wonderful idea. We are well beyond whether or not we should have discrimination policies.
- Not seeing anything regarding setting the example, templates for what policies should look like, hiring people to work in the office to assist firms to create these policies. Have meetings with managing partners and offer to assist in recruiting better and interviewing using questions that do not focus on fit. Model questions to pass to recruiters.
- When we talk about mandatory, paralegals struggle to make ends meet. More mandatory programs would impact on paralegals more than lawyers.
- Programs have to start with the Law Society as the governing body. It will not happen by relying on the firms only. This is an issue that has been ongoing for many years.

Mandatory Programs and External Monitoring

- These are really important issues and if we are going to make programs mandatory, education should be a component.
- Based on the experience with employment equity in the federal sector, it is not successful when it is voluntary. You need the mechanism for enforcement. It works if you have bonuses attached to promoting equity. People say the right things on paper but not in practice.

- The Law Society could do audits. What works is shaming.
- There needs to be outside monitoring. It is more than demographics and one needs to look at the quality of work etc.
- The Law Society has access to the data from the lawyer and paralegal annual reports. Include broader questions to the members such as “does your law firm have diversity policies”? If a lawyer or paralegal does not know the answer, he or she can go to the managing partner to ask for the policies. And if enough members go to their managing partner with that question, if there isn't a policy, the managing partner may decide to set up a committee to develop a diversity policy.
- If you don't comply with CPD requirements, the sanction is suspension of license. Maybe something like that could be implemented.
- We need to look at what has happened in the past. The gender equity gap is still there even with employment equity. The problem was partly lack of enforcement. The example of the Securities Commission and women on boards is good. Organizations have to self-report and they will make the numbers public or the organizations will and then the clients can make informed decisions. Put things in place so firms can see it is within their own best interest.
- There should be a requirement for a diversity policy, at the very minimum. If you have the policy or are required to have the policy, eventually people start talking about it. For example, workplace violence policies led to employees and clients talking about the issue. If you want law firms to start doing things and talking about it, should require at a minimum diversity policies. Encourage firms to conduct interviews with standardized and non-discriminatory questions.
- Requiring standards model is the best model because there are concerns with leaving it up to firms. Making it mandatory would be more efficient. Mandatory standards for larger firms only, not sole practitioners or sole firms - don't want to add to their burden.
- Mandatory standard for hiring practices – make hiring committee itself more diverse, where applicable. This to apply at all stages, i.e. articling hiring committee to consider diversity when picking which articling students to interview. Diversity lens to be applied at all stages, and if people equally qualified and one racialized and one not, racialized licensee should at least be considered.
- The Law Society should enforce minimum standards so there is consistency in the province in terms of diversity standards and goals. Ontario is a diverse place but in some communities there are few racialized licensees. Firms can report on these standards in the “comply or explain” method. No one wants the Law Society to impose punitive measures for not meeting certain standards.
- Mandatory self-examination is the right approach, for example: self-examination with demographics, contract compliance, what steps have you taken this year to augment your firm's knowledge of diversity issues.
- If firms have implemented a diversity project and it is not meeting the benchmark, they should explain.

- The Law Society could require firms to interview a certain number of students from racialized backgrounds.
- In the same way that lawyers have to submit a yearly report about their practice at the end of the year, they should also have to report on diversity within their firm, the demographics of their firm, what policies they have in place to accommodate diverse identities and which areas they should improve on –i.e. recruiting and retaining racialized articling students and lawyers.

Create Incentives

- Reward firms that demonstrate that they are diverse by giving them reduced fees. Do not force them, but encourage them to bear that in mind when hiring.
- Don't know if offering incentives for diverse workforces would be particularly feasible or correct. It doesn't get to the root of the problem.
- We should propose that if a firm is hiring diverse candidates and have diversity and inclusion program, they will be honoured and there will be financial benefits. There can be a financial penalty for not following policies. Prefer honouring than shaming.

Begin at Law School

- Inappropriate comments are made in interviews and at the workplace, but they are also made as early as law school. Those at law school don't have the tools to address inappropriate comments.
- Many students do not know what is and isn't appropriate. Some students do not know that there are programs to report inappropriate behaviour. They attend all kinds of seminars, such as how to dress for an interview, but there is nothing about how and where to report inappropriate questions or comments. Some of the information provided during interviews for example is inappropriate and borders on offensive. It would be great to make students aware that if they are asked inappropriate questions, they can report.
- The report talked about how large numbers of racialized licensees are forced into sole practice. What is the Law Society doing with the community colleges to teach them how to build and run a business?
- The Law Society should offer resources at an earlier point. It could offer more mentoring and resources for students.
- Some form of education should be done with professors at law schools. They invite their preferred students to social events, they help them with job opportunities, and they provide references. This starts at university. Not just in the workplace.
- The articling recruitment process is not transparent enough. It is unsettling that students don't know why they didn't get hired.

Conduct Continuing Profession Development Programs (CPD) on Cultural Competence

- Firms could do general CPDs on cultural competence, inclusiveness and unconscious bias. Only one firm is conducting CPD programs on those topics at the managing partner levels.

Consider Diversity at the Law Society

- To "act as a catalyst", you need to look at how many benchers are racialized and whether it reflects the 17% in the profession.
- The Law Society needs benchers who are champions and champions in firms.
- There are deeper issues than numbers, such as the difference in perception of understanding of issues. The best thing the Law Society can do is start to mirror the behaviour it wants to see. Have a more reflective Law Society.
- How The Law Society should be a role model to other firms. Diversity at the board level and committees is important. They should all show and lead by example.

Impact of Fees

- Have you considered that many racialized licensees do not come from affluent backgrounds and have to open sole practices to work? Fees are prohibitive.

Question 2: What is the preferred model for the collection of firm demographic data and why?

- The data has to be voluntary, confidential.
- It might be difficult to make self-identification an obligation as part of the lawyers or paralegals job.
- In order to be measurable, the data collection piece is crucial. One of the thing, in addition to tracking how many racialized lawyers there may be (not sure whether mandatory or voluntary) is to track progress of racialized lawyers. It is more difficult to do. The advancement is where the consultation has revealed that there is a lot of concerns/challenges in the profession.
- Reporting on a firm by firm basis is important. Let firms know the number of racialized licensees in their firms and then publish the information. Take them to task for their business case on diversity.
- If we are reporting either through mandatory reporting to the Law Society or through the annual report, the firms should be aware of the numbers for their firms.
- The Law Society should have mandatory data collection. Not so you can identify specific individuals, but so you can see trends in the profession. Provide incentives for firms to disclose the data. The Law Society could work with firms to develop incentivized systems. The Law Society could report on an aggregate basis and could include the Law Society reporting to firms.
- To implement change we need more stick than carrot.
- Developing a matrix with respect to the assessment tool and then requiring the firms to be champions of diversity is a good idea. You can then rate them: gold, silver, bronze.
- Firms need to feel comfortable that they have contributed in the way the data is collected. It is also important to capture more than just data, more particularly inclusion information. How lawyers feel in their firms.
- The annual report does not have to be only about head count. If you ask questions about equity programs in the annual report, then the lawyers would ask their firms about those programs.
- Racialized lawyers have gravitated to public sector/government. The Judicial Appointments Advisory Committee (JAAC) is a good model to follow. The hiring committee is very diverse and the onus is to be more representative. There was an analysis done of the 27 years that they have been in existence. When they first started, the provincial bench was over 95% White male and less than 3 or 4% women. Now it's 37% of women. And racialized judges were way less than 1% and now it is at 7.5%. It was not mandatory, but just having a mandate, a public policy and committee that was diverse and had an open mind made change happen. It took 25 years.

- Do not think you would prompt firms to make changes if the Law Society just collects and aggregate the numbers. The Law Society would need to identify firms.
- There is value in looking at how long licensees stay at a firm. For example, if you have a first year associate who stays one year and gets replaced by someone else. How do you count?
- When measuring becomes mandatory how do you deal with the perception that it is quotas?
- Data should be collected. We are in a privileged profession that few people have access to – we should know its composition. Like the idea of Law Society collecting the data because every individual licensee can report on their own. Maybe the Law Society can do both: from the firm's perspective and from the individual basis. Perhaps it should be voluntary.
- There is a big debate on who considers themselves to be racialized. When other people identify the diversity of the firm membership it is problematic.
- If you don't collect the data, how do you understand the problem?
- There is no real debate about the need for data collection. The issue is how we do it and how we use it. To collect data and not share it is useless. Firms collecting data internally and not reporting is meaningless. It doesn't do anything to help us understand what is going on and it doesn't help to see what is happening over time. We need the data shared, not just collected. Yes, it should be mandatory because if not, there will be holes. There will be some reporting and some not. In order to understand the whole, we need to have all the information available to us.
- We need to collect data, but what data? Not just how many people in the firm but also what are they doing in the firm? Are they sitting on boards? We need to start with Law Society not just firms. Entry into profession: we should ask questions on the Licensing exam regarding responsibilities to uphold equity and diversity. The Law Society should collect numbers for the Law Society itself - staff, benchers.
- Le premier point c'est le Barreau. Il faudrait que tous les comités du Barreau aient des personnes racialisées.
- We need to have policies. We can't legislate kindness and fairness. If firms have to say how many people are racialized, that works. If numbers are published, firms will change.
- Would like to see law firms promote diversity through their website by publishing the numbers of different diverse lawyers. The Law Society can encourage instead of punish. If I can go to a website one day and see people from different countries that makes me feel welcome.
- Mandatory monitoring leads to push back. Before we resort to the stick, try the carrot first.
- More data needs to be collected in addition to someone's skin colour. Some tend to hire from the same race. Not all racialized licensees come from the same background. This needs to be addressed.

- All the findings should be disclosed by the firms. The new generation is interested in companies that are hiring diversity. In 10 to 20 years, having the data out there will have an impact.
- Consistent demographic data standards are important, data should also be public to legal profession. This will help with consistency of data: number of racialized licensees at associate, partner, new hire, articling student, summer student levels.
- Need to also collect and analyze data, more specifically, which racialized groups are moving up and which are not.
- The voluntary self-identification survey in annual report should be mandatory. The Law Society should get firm data. The comparison should be to the Ontario population. The results should be provided to everyone in the firm.
- The Law Society should make firms disclose publicly. If it is public, things will change.
- Firms could report demographic data to a third party, instead of the Law Society.
- The gathering of demographic data should be mandatory because without numbers, many people deny that there is even a problem. That data is essential to moving forward with effective diversity and inclusion initiatives and having a broader impact on access to justice.

Question 3: How could the Law Society work with in-house legal departments to develop model contract compliance programs for in-house legal departments that retain firms?

- The Law Society should work with the Legal Leaders for Diversity to develop model contract compliance programs that would require potential suppliers to provide diversity statistics during the RFP process.
- This depends on firm size. Data gathering in a bigger firm is a lot easier. They are more institutionally disposed.
- The recruitment for in-house legal departments should be more transparent.
- There needs to be some process where large organizations like banks collect data. How do lawyers give input so that they are not excluded from the process?
- The Law Society could create tools for clients who can ask their law firms to reflect these characteristics.
- The Law Society could tell people in CPD that this is coming – provide examples of companies that do impose.
- While the idea of contract compliance is a good one, would discourage any mandatory contract compliance.
- In-house departments can hire consultants in race relations and diversity to help them with contract compliance - not the Law Society's role. The Law Society's role should be limited because of the private nature of contracts and tenders.
- The Law Society could have a roster of firms and members that have said they are committed to diversity and these are the steps they are taking and then get recognized for it. If someone is looking for firm to do business with, they can go to the Law Society website and see firms that have committed to diversity.

Question 4 and 5: What are the preferred mentoring and/or advisory services models for racialized licensees?

- Mentorship is not one-size fits all. There are different types of mentorship needs at different stages of your career for different things.
- Substance based and professional based mentoring is needed. It is needed in law school.
- Racialized lawyers also need guidance from non-racialized lawyers. Their network is so small.
- There is a lot of value in one-on-one contact. However, it is better to have a diversity of perspectives. Especially new lawyers - they don't necessarily have the connections so a mix based on the person's interests is important. Mentors do not necessarily have to be racialized. There needs to be adequate representation.
- Limited scope advisory services provide opportunities to have conversations about work in a structured way.
- Reservations about remunerated services because of potential failure. Also, remuneration changes the dynamic of the relationship (e.g. the time is limited).
- Legal Leaders for Diversity's mentorship program is great. They get mentees to come to each event. Mentorship outside of the firm is important.
- We need to move away from looking at senior lawyers being a mentor to junior lawyers from same community. We should train recent lawyers on how to become leaders in law firms or organizations.
- The Law Society has huge resources. Have an incentive for mentoring and put it on the website (on-line mentoring). Form a culture about giving our time.
- Mentoring is challenging. People do not understand what mentoring means. It is hard to develop that relationship with someone and get them interested. Mentoring should be a combination of one-on-one and group - depending on what the person needs.
- If racialized and born outside Canada, the problem is compounded. You turn to your community and they are your competitors. Mentors are not opening up.
- Reward positive behaviour - give recognition for mentoring. In firms, you can give compensation.
- In terms of what the mentoring would look like: large firms could provide mentoring for paralegals. They could provide the experience of working in a firm.
- The Law Society could disseminate the information more broadly - notices to the profession, more marketing.
- The Law Society should offer resources at an earlier point. More emphasis should be placed on pre-law.

- Racialized licensees need to have someone who understands their experience and the mainstream experience.
- Study groups would be great to integrate racialized licensees with people who have the same challenges.
- There is a lot of value in peers getting together.
- The profession does not really know the professional associations of racialized licensees. It would be a good practice to disseminate that information more broadly so if a licensee has an issue, they can call upon one of these associations.
- It is useful to have different mentors that can speak to different challenges - gender, advancement, moving into new area; to have more than one person who can provide that unique perspective that someone that is young might need.
- Law schools have mentors for law students. Racialized students work together and talk to each other. There are not a lot of role models (even on faculty). We need to have a safe place to have discussions.
- A good mentor (could have more than one) gives you career advice and substantive advice. You can have all of that but if there is still systemic discrimination, it does not work.
- It is worth thinking about the value of cross cultural mentorship. The Law Society could play a real leadership role there. In terms of gender too, senior women can mentor young men.
- The Law Society should have people note on annual report that they are willing to be mentor and create a roster.
- By the time people have their licenses it's too late. Schools are supposed to provide networks.
- Mentorship must be work-related. Mentorship should be within organizations by senior dominant people with women or racialized individuals.
- The Law Society should encourage recognition amongst members of the bar that mentoring should not just be unidirectional. It can help to develop relationships with younger lawyers because mentors and mentees have a lot to learn from each other. Intercultural, intergenerational.
- The Law Society could develop an initiative addressing specific areas where a sole practitioner may need assistance. Licensees could apply to a fellow-type program (e.g. Maytree's fellow program) where you have a series of different sessions on how to run a practice.
- Mentoring or networking events have to be able to cater to racialized licensees who work in under services areas.
- The Law Society could give an incentive of 1 professional hour for mentoring.

- The Law Society should send a mass e-mail to new licensees, at first contact with the Law Society, encouraging them to contact organizations such as the South Asian Bar Association and the Federation of Asian Canadian Lawyers. The Law Society should train mentors within those associations to standardize mentorship and provide logistical support, like meeting space.
- Why reinvent the wheel – mentoring can be done through organizations. Organizations would require some support, but organizations would best serve needs of mentees.
- Sponsorship is different than mentoring because sponsors take an ongoing interest in the career development of the mentee.
- There are too many mentoring options – Law Society, Ontario Bar Associations, law schools, large firms etc. There must be a better way of coordinating. The regulator has a role in this.

Question 5: What are the preferred networking models for racialized licensees?

- CPD budgets are small for sole practitioners. It would be useful to have CPD sessions that the Ontario Bar Association and the Law Society could jointly host. There could be well-known experts in the area and they could make a presentation for free. This could be mandatory. There would be one event per section per year.
- Having organizations of specific cultures that can relate and assist is helpful.
- When racialized licensees are restricted to racialized groups, they can sympathize and develop opportunities within these groups – but this also insulates them from the rest of the networking that could be much larger and provide more opportunities. Networking should be available to everyone.
- The Law Society should have regional networking events sponsored by the Law Society and encourage people to come out.
- Networking should start very early. The Law Society should provide internationally trained lawyers with networking opportunities – the exemption from articling results in internationally trained lawyers having no contacts in legal community. This should be communicated to lawyers applying for an exemption.
- Associations are costly and for someone unemployed, it may be difficult to join.
- The Law Society should have more inclusive events - e.g. consider excluding alcohol from some networking events, to make them more accessible. The Law Society should also have events that are more financially accessible. The Law Society could provide space/other support.
- The Law Society should not charge organizations so much to have events. They should recognize that organizations are in the trenches (working with lawyers, volunteers). There should be some recognition that the Law Society has a facility, and organizations can come and use it.
- There should be more broad-based networking events that are not focused on being culturally in Canada for a long time to understand them. Because events are informal, there is a lowering of formality in the sense of how you deal with individuals.

Question 6: How could the Law Society enhance the profession's cultural competence through its Continuing Professional Development (CPD) programs?

- In favour of having some type of CPD to address unconscious/semi-conscious bias as a start. CPD should start early. Networking, mentoring and CPD should start at law school - then Licensing Process and running through the profession. The break between the Law Society and law schools is an artificial division because a lot of problems start at law school. The Law Society should tell, suggest, and strongly encourage law schools to adopt programs. There should be meshing between law schools and the Law Society.
- Unconscious bias training should start the top down. This could be done in firms of more than 10 people – does not have to be only in 50 person law firms.
- The cost of CPD is a big issue for sole and small practitioners. The prices of the programs could be reduced. More sessions means more socialization.
- In order for people to go to cultural competence training, there needs to be a draw factor. It would be challenging to attend if it is not attached to substantive topics.
- The starting point is to take the dominance and understand the privilege that we face. Teaching White people about their privilege is a good starting point. Don't teach about cultural competence, teach about privilege.
- This would require a mandatory CPD hour on understanding of the barriers as an initial step. One hour for 1 professional credit. The Law Society can then build on that. Do not teach on cultural competence –teach on understanding the barriers.
- Racialized lawyers tend to work in smaller firms. Smaller firms don't have money for CPD. The Law Society should not make cultural competence CPD mandatory because a lot of firms don't have money to spend.
- The Law Society should have cultural competence CPDs with professionalism credits. This should be offered as webinar and should be recorded.
- The Law Society should have all interviewers do unconscious bias training, delivered as a webinar. There would be good uptake.
- The Law Society could go to law firms and provide training programs on workplace harassment.
- The Law Society requires CPD for professional content hours, why not include certain hours dealing with cultural exploration or understanding?
- Cultural competence training should be offered in law school and to those responsible for student applications for law schools. There should be mandatory CPD programs that address these issues and an incentive provided for participation.
- Cultural competence is not recognized as an important competency for lawyers in Canada, but it should be. The Law Society could use its seat on the Federation to include cultural competency and diversity awareness as part of core curriculum.

- Diversity education should be over and above current CPD. There should be a different category that is a requirement (i.e. under professionalism).
- This is a systemic issue. There are a lot of CPD programs on cultural competency. The Law Society has to get to decision makers - it's about unconscious bias. The Law Society needs to provide mandated topics that firms have to talk about and do some work on.
- Cultural competence training could be mandatory to allow for standardized values across the province. The profession needs to be educated about our diversity. Make the training affordable for everyone.
- One of the main problems is accessibility of education. The Law Society should make it easier to get the education in the regions.
- The Law Society should consider anti-racist programs. The Law Society could include an element into each CPD programs, for example in anti-racist education. The Law Society cannot legislate societal change.
- "Anti-discrimination" might be more useful terminology as opposed to "cultural competency". It can be hard to avoid stereotypes and hard to have sophisticated conversation about these issues.
- There is CPD on how to not get sued/how to be professional/get retainers/protect yourself. This should be more of an education process. The Law Society should start bringing in a bit more awareness through the education process of what the issues are and how you can become better person. A little bit could be included at one CPD or more at another. We should be made to realize that there are some biases there.
- For cultural competence CPD, The Law Society will have to use associations. Big providers will not be able to do it and people will not be able to pay for it. Big firms give their employees all of their professionalism hours - not everyone has access. Associations can provide CPD at a reasonable cost.
- The Law Society should have more diversity on CPD panels.
- Canadian law firms could benefit from direction on best practices in creating diversity programming. It is not enough to do a one or two hour workshop for 150 lawyers to provide 2 hours of CPD accreditation. It takes 30-50 hours of individual self-work to move up in cultural competence. Canadian law firms should have intensive, in-depth behavioural change programming that causes people to be more inclusive. Key challenges - behavioural change both individual and systemic. It costs money to drive behavioural change. The Law Society can provide guidance when it comes behavioural change and cultural competence.

Question 7: How should the Law Society best ensure that complaints of discrimination are brought to its attention and effectively addressed?

- Increase the knowledge of the complaint process.
- The Law Society could have an anonymous process to receive complaints.
- There should be a 'no reprisal' section in the Rules.
- A place to start to make sure all licensees know about the possibility of systemic complaints would be updating the Rules of Professional Conduct.
- The associations may have a role to play.
- One issue is that the Rules do not get at subtle forms of discrimination - discrimination on a daily basis. The Law Society should give thought as to how the Rules can be crafted to address subtle discrimination.
- The issue of fear is a really significant issue, especially for younger lawyers who are afraid of what a complaint would mean for their career. Bringing a complaint through an association may not alleviate the problem. The Law Society could build in confidentiality mechanisms.
- If anonymous complaints regarding the same firm are made, then the Law Society could send investigators.
- An anonymous complaints service might be helpful, especially because data shows that a huge part of this is invisible biases. People don't even realize when they are discriminating. The Law Society should inform them that there is a problem. This does not address the situation in smaller or medium sized firms. The Law Society could ask licensees in the annual report whether they have ever experienced discrimination, collect the information by firm, and pass it on to managing or senior partners.
- The concept of the complaint process is key. People have to feel comfortable in accessing the process. The idea of an audit can be helpful. It takes the onus off the individuals and puts the onus on the firm. Firms will feel they have to answer if the Law Society is asking.

On Connections between Aboriginal Peoples' and Racialized Peoples' Experiences

- Indigenous is not defined along the basis of race, but of nationhood. The obligation the Canadian government owes to Indigenous people is very different from what is owed to racialized people in Canada. Therefore, the strategies to respond to racism against Indigenous people will be different because of that history.
- Geography can be a factor in understanding racism.
- There are important reasons for keeping key, specific concerns relating to Aboriginal issues separate. The acuteness of the Indigenous experience of racism relates to the history of Indigenous people in Canada. It's a problem that needs to be named, identified, and addressed. It's a complex problem and not enough research has been done on it yet.
- It's a false dichotomy to force people to either follow the Aboriginal or the racialized path. There can be both alliances and specialized paths to create solutions that recognize the different issues.
- There are parallels between various groups in the experience of racism that can be discussed under the umbrella of diversity. But Indigenous people are not the same as others. The diversity umbrella came after Indigenous people were here. Anti-racism can be discussed along multi-cultural themes.
- Aboriginal people are between a rock and a hard place when talking about racism. There are commonalities but the unique historical context that makes succeeding in the legal professional for Aboriginal people additionally hard needs to be acknowledged. The way that "business is done" in the legal world is a cultural barrier for Aboriginal people. There is the added responsibility of representing your own community. You are seen as an expert in all Aboriginal issues by non-Aboriginals. There is also an expectation that you will go home to work for your community. There is pressure to bring your education back home that non-Aboriginal students would not feel. These different pressures and stresses mean that supports for Aboriginal lawyers would be very different.

Other

- Racialized licensees are more likely to be unemployed or underemployed, yet the fees that they pay are exorbitant (approximately $500 a year for non-practising or unemployed licensees). The Law Society should implement a fee waiver/fee reduction program to alleviate some of the disproportionate burden that racialized licensees face (or all licensees for that matter). Part-time lawyers, including those on parental leave, would also benefit.

Statistical Snapshot of Lawyers in Ontario

from the Lawyer Annual Report (LAR) 2013

RESPONSE RATES

The Law Society of Upper Canada has been collecting self-identification data in the Lawyer Annual Report since 2009. The structure of the survey at the time permitted the lawyer to opt to pass over the question and provide no response. This option has been modified so that, while a lawyer can still decline to self-identify, the person must now so indicate by expressly entering this response.

RESPONSE RATES FOR EACH QUESTION

The response rate for each question is as follows:

- Aboriginal 88%
- Racialized 77%
- Sexual orientation 81%
- Francophone 91%
- Able to practice in French 87%
- Disability 85%
- Gender 100%

Age, Race and Aboriginal — in Percentages

The proportion of racialized and Aboriginal lawyers continues to increase.

For Aboriginal lawyers, it goes from 0.6 percent of the group age 65 and older to 1.5 percent of the group under 35 and 1.7 of lawyers age 35-44. For racialized lawyers, it goes from 3.9 percent of the group age 65 and older to 27.5 percent of the group under 35 and 23.7 percent of lawyers age 35-44.

Except for Black and Aboriginal lawyers, the representation of each group is greater, in many cases much greater, in the 35-44 than in the 45-54 age group. For a number of groups, the percentage doubles or nearly doubles in that 10-year interval showing an increase the proportion of those lawyers entering the profession.

It is important to note that the similarity in the proportion of Aboriginal lawyers in the 25-34, 35-44 and 45-54 age groups, and of Black lawyers under 35, and in the 35-44 and 45-54 age groups suggests that their proportion entering the profession is not increasing.

Aboriginal and racialized lawyers, compared to White lawyers, are more likely to be in sole practice or in a legal clinic and less likely to be law firm partners. Age could account for some of these differences. Aboriginal lawyers are more likely to work in government

Disability is significantly related to sector of employment. Most notably, 25.7 percent of lawyers with a disability work for government, compared to 15.0 percent of those without a disability. While total employment is much smaller, 3.3 percent of lawyers with a disability work for government, compared to 1.4 percent for those without and the corresponding figures for legal clinics are 3.6 and 1.0 percent. They are less likely to be associates when they are young and less likely to be law firm partners when they are older.

Statistical Snapshot of Paralegals in Ontario

from the Paralegal Annual Report (PAR) 2013

RESPONSE RATES

The Law Society of Upper Canada has been collecting self-identification data in the Paralegal Annual Report since 2009. The structure of the survey at the time permitted the paralegal to opt to pass over the question and provide no response. This option has been modified so that, while a paralegal can still decline to self-identify, the person must now so indicate by expressly entering this response.

RESPONSE RATES FOR EACH QUESTION

- Aboriginal 90%
- Racialized 82%
- Sexual orientation 86%
- Francophone 92%

The National Household Survey uses the term "Black" only.

The National Household Survey uses the categories of "Korean" and "Japanese" separately

The National Household Survey uses the following examples for South Asian: "East Indian, Pakistani, Sri Lankan, etc."

Just over one-third, 34.9 percent, of Ontario paralegals are Aboriginal or Racialized, compared to 28.2 percent of the Ontario population, 26.7 percent of labour force participants 25 or older and 33.5 percent of university graduates in the labour force and 25 or older. Thus, one cannot argue that paralegals are disproportionately White.

Aboriginal paralegals account for 1.7 percent of the total, compared to 2.3 percent of the Ontario population, 1.9 percent of labour force participants who are 25 or older and 0.8 percent of university graduates of the labour force who are 25 or older. For members of racialized groups the figures are 33.2 percent of paralegals, 25.9 percent of the population, 24.8 percent of labour force participants who are 25 or older and 32.7 percent of university graduates in the labour force who are 25 or older.

Exact comparisons are difficult, but there are quite large differences between racialized groups. The Black, Latino, Southeast Asian and West Asians communities include more paralegals than their representation in the population.

Some of the groups are small numerically: The data indicates that there are just 76 Aboriginal paralegals in Ontario, 57 Arab paralegals, 46 East Asian paralegals, 108 Southeast Asian and 108 West Asian paralegals.

Seventy-six percent of paralegals age 60 and older are White, compared to 70.1 percent of paralegals age 50-59 and about 61 percent of paralegals under 50. There is no consistent trend among the three youngest ten-year groups, suggesting that the shift towards an increased proportion of non-White paralegals was a phenomenon of the 1970s and 1980s.

Aboriginal paralegals are small in number and their age distribution suggests no trend in their share of the profession over the years.

There is continuing growth in the proportion of paralegals who identify as Arab and, not quite so consistently, as West Asian.

There are substantially fewer Black paralegals under 30 than between 30 and 39, down from 8.4 percent to 5.3 percent, and Chinese paralegals, down from 6.0 percent to 2.8 percent.

There is a significant geographical aspect to the distribution of paralegals. By a wide margin, the largest numbers are in Toronto and in the combination of the Durham, Halton, Peel and York areas surrounding Toronto; respectively, they account for 39 and 32 percent of all paralegals. Seven percent of paralegals are in Ontario's Southwest, 7 percent in the Central South and 6 percent in the Central North. Just 2 percent of paralegals are in the North, 4 percent in Ottawa and 3 percent in the East.

Just over half of racialized paralegals, 52 percent, are in Toronto and 39 percent are in Durham, Halton, Peel and York. This leaves just 9 percent in the entire rest of the province. In contrast, only 44 percent of Aboriginal paralegals are in these two largest areas and they are over-represented everywhere else. The North accounts for 13 percent of Aboriginal paralegals, compared to 3 percent of White paralegals and almost no racialized paralegals.

Paralegals are most likely to work as sole practitioners, including 41 percent of Aboriginal paralegals, 38 percent of racialized paralegals and 30 percent of White paralegals.

The moderate difference in the employment profiles of Aboriginal, racialized and White paralegals could in part result from the White paralegals being older.

Disregarding the “others”, the second largest category of paralegal employment is working for a law firm, which accounts for 10, 12 and 16 percent of Aboriginal, racialized and White paralegals, respectively.

Other paralegals are employed “in house” and by government, and a small number are classified as law firm partners and law firm associates.

Because of the small numbers in the various racialized groups and uncertainty due to the large “other” category, we cannot with confidence describe differences in type of employment between the specific racialized groups.

In 2013, 58.4 percent of paralegals were women, a figure that will definitely increase in coming years. There is a strong and consistent increase in the representation of women, from just 23.0 percent of paralegals age 60 and older, to 48.6 percent for paralegals age 50 to 59, 55.7 percent for ages 40-49, 66.9 percent for ages 30-39 and 77.4 percent for paralegals under 30.

Men are much more likely to be sole practitioners, partners in a firm and to be employed “in house”, while women paralegals are more likely to be employed as law firm employees – though this different is largely attributable to lower ages of women paralegals, and in legal clinics (though the number is small).

A. INTRODUCTION

1. The DHC provides a wide range of services to individuals who make discrimination or harassment complaints about lawyers, articling students or paralegals. Complaints are received from both members of the public and members of the legal profession.
2. The complaints arise in a variety of contexts, such as clients who report that they have been subjected to sexual harassment and/or sexual assault by their lawyer or paralegal, lawyers who are experiencing workplace discrimination relating to a maternity leave, law firm employees with disabilities who confront discriminatory barriers to employment or challenges in obtaining appropriate workplace accommodation, and paralegals, articling students and lawyers who are experiencing discriminatory (eg. racist, sexist, homophobic) treatment by opposing counsel in their cases.
3. The DHC provides complainants with safe counsel, coaching, information, referrals to other agencies and resources, informal mentoring, and general (non-legal) advice about options and avenues of recourse – some on an ongoing basis. The DHC also provides mediation services, described below.

B. SERVICES PROVIDED TO COMPLAINANTS

4. Complainants who contact the DHC are advised of various avenues of recourse open to them, including (where applicable):
  - confronting the respondent lawyer or paralegal directly with their concerns;
  - speaking to their union representative (if they are unionized and their complaint relates to their employment by a lawyer or paralegal);

- filing an internal discrimination or harassment complaint within their workplace;
  - making a complaint to the law firm that employs the respondent lawyer;
  - filing an Application with the Human Rights Tribunal of Ontario;
  - filing a complaint about professional misconduct with the Law Society;
  - reporting to the police (where criminal conduct is alleged); and
  - consulting a lawyer for legal advice regarding possible claims and causes of action.
5. Complainants are provided with information about each of these options, including:
- what (if any) costs might be involved in pursuing an option;
  - whether legal representation is required in order to pursue an option;
  - referral to resources on how to obtain legal representation (actual referrals to lawyers are not made by the DHC);
  - how to file a complaint, Application or report (eg. whether it can be done electronically, whether particular forms are required, etc.)
  - the processes involved in each option (eg. investigation, conciliation, mediation, hearing, etc.)

- the general types of remedies that may be available in different fora (eg. compensatory remedies in contrast to disciplinary penalties, reinstatement to employment versus monetary damages, public interest remedies); and
  - the existence of time limits for each avenue of redress (complainants are advised to seek legal advice with respect to precise limitation periods).
6. Complainants are told that the options available to them are not mutually exclusive.
  7. In some cases, upon request, strategic tips and/or coaching are provided to complainants about how to handle a situation without resort to a formal complaints process (eg. confronting the offender, documenting incidents, speaking to a mentor).
  8. Student complainants whose articles are terminated or who decide to withdraw from their articles before completion also receive counselling and advice from the DHC about transferring their articles, as well as support in their job search for a new articling position. They are also referred to appropriate resources within the Law Society.
  9. Some complainants are referred to other agencies/organizations (such as the Law Society's Member Assistance Program and the Human Rights Legal Support Centre) or are directed to relevant resource materials available from the Law Society, the Ontario Human Rights Commission, or other organizations.

C. MEDIATION / CONCILIATION

10. In addition to being advised about the above-noted options, where appropriate, complainants are offered the mediation or conciliation/intervention services of the DHC Program.

11. Whenever formal mediation is offered, the nature and purpose of mediation is explained, including that it is a confidential and voluntary process, that it does not involve any investigation or fact finding, and that the DHC acts as a neutral facilitator to attempt to assist the parties in negotiating the terms of a mutually satisfactory resolution of the complaint.
12. When a complainant opts for mediation, s/he is given the choice of contacting the respondent to propose the mediation or having the DHC contact the respondent to canvass his/her willingness to participate. If the complainant elects to have the DHC contact the respondent, written instructions must be provided. If both parties are willing to participate, they are required to sign a mediation agreement prior to entering into mediated discussions with the DHC.
13. Where informal conciliation/intervention services are offered, the complainant is advised that the DHC could contact the respondent confidentially and discuss the complainant's concerns, in the hope of achieving a resolution to the complaint. Where such an intervention occurs, both the complainant and respondent are advised that the DHC is not acting as the complainant's counsel or representative, but rather as a go-between to facilitate constructive dialogue between the parties. When a complainant requests such an intervention, written consent must be provided before the DHC contacts the respondent.
14. Some complainants decline the offer of the DHC's mediation and conciliation services, notwithstanding that the services are free, confidential, and in the case of formal mediation, subject to a mutual "without prejudice" undertaking by both parties. The reasons why complainants decline mediation are varied and include: a complainant desiring to have a fact-finding investigation, believing that the respondent will not participate in good faith, wanting to create a formal record of the respondent's misconduct through an adjudicative process, and/or hoping to have professional discipline imposed on the respondent.

15. During this reporting period, there were no formal in-person mediation sessions conducted by the DHC. Formal mediation was not requested by any complainants.
16. There were, however, a number of informal interventions made at complainants' request. The DHC spoke with the respondents in several cases and, in all but one instance, was thereby able to achieve resolutions to complaints.

D. OVERVIEW OF NEW CONTACTS WITH THE DHC PROGRAM

17. During this six month reporting period, 109 individuals contacted the DHC Program with a new matter.<sup>1</sup> This represents average of 18 new contacts per month.
18. The volume of new contacts with the Program was distributed as follows:

19. Of the 109 individuals who contacted the DHC, 72 (66%) used the telephone to make their initial contact and 37 (34%) used email.
20. During this reporting period, four (4) individuals were provided services in French. The remaining clients of the Program were provided services in English.

E. SUMMARY OF DISCRIMINATION AND HARASSMENT COMPLAINTS

21. Of the 109 new contacts with the Program, 36 individuals reported specific complaints of discrimination or harassment by a lawyer or paralegal in Ontario.
22. In this reporting period, 2 complaints were made against paralegals. The remaining 34 complaints were made against lawyers. There were no complaints about articling students.
23. The 2 complaints against paralegals were made by members of the public. Of the 34 complaints against lawyers, 18 (53%) were made by members of the public and 16 (47%) were made by members (including student members) of the Law Society.

F. COMPLAINTS AGAINST LAWYERS BY LICENSEES

24. In this reporting period, there were 16 complaints against lawyers by members (or student members) of the Law Society. Nine (9) of these complaints were made by lawyers and 7 were made by articling students. There were no complaints about lawyers made by paralegals.
25. Of the 16 complaints by members of the Law Society, 14 (87%) were made by women and 2 (13%) were made by men. All of the student complainants were female.

26. Of the 9 complaints made by lawyers, 6 (67%) arose in the context of the complainant's employment. Of the remaining 3 complaints, one complaint was made against a lawyer who was providing a public service to the complainant, one was made about opposing counsel involved in litigation, and one was made about a lawyer with whom the complainant was professionally acquainted.
27. All of the student complaints arose in the context of the complainants' employment.
28. There were 11 complaints against lawyers based (in whole or in part) on sex. Of these,
- Six (6) involved allegations of sexual harassment:
    - Three (3) female students reported sexual harassment by their male principal or by a male partner in their firm. (In one case, the allegations included unwanted sexual touching and the withholding of wages for refusal to submit to sexual advances.)
    - A female junior associate in private practice reported sexual harassment by a male partner in her firm.
    - A female lawyer employed in a government legal office reported suffering employment reprisals for having made a sexual harassment complaint against her male manager.<sup>2</sup>
    - A female lawyer reported stalking by a male lawyer with whom she was professionally acquainted.

- Four (4) involved complaints about gender-based harassment and discriminatory behaviour by male lawyers, including inappropriate comments about women's bodies and misogynist name calling ("bitch"). Two female lawyers and one female articling student reported such behaviour by male lawyers in their workplace and one female lawyer reported such behaviour by an opposing counsel in one of her cases.
  - One involved allegations by an articling student of discrimination in employment based on her pregnancy.
29. All of the complainants who reported sex-based discrimination or harassment were female and all of the respondent lawyers were male.
30. There were 3 complaints against lawyers based (in whole or in part) on disability:
- A male law student reported that an offer of articles was rescinded after the employing sole practitioner learned that he had a disability.
  - A female articling student reported that her principal was not providing appropriate workplace accommodation relating to her disability.
  - A male lawyer claimed that he was being subjected to discrimination based on his disability in the provision of services by another lawyer.
31. There were 2 complaints based (in whole or in part) on race. Both involved Black female lawyers who reported racial discrimination in their employment. One of these complaints was against a supervising female lawyer to whom the complainant reported (in a government legal office) and the other was against a male co-worker of the complainant in private practice.

32. There was one complaint of discrimination in employment based on family status, involving the denial of a female lawyer's request for flexible work hours to enable her to meet her parenting/childcare needs.
33. There was one complaint based on religion. A female lawyer reported that her employer made derogatory statements about her religion.<sup>3</sup>
34. In summary, the number of complaints<sup>4</sup> by lawyers and articling students in which each of the following prohibited grounds of discrimination was raised are:

- sex 11 (6 sexual harassment; 1 pregnancy)
- disability 3
- race 2
- family status 1
- religion 1

Grounds Raised in Complaints against Lawyers by Members of the Bar

- 10 -

G. COMPLAINTS AGAINST LAWYERS BY THE PUBLIC

35. During this reporting period, there were 18 complaints against lawyers made by members of the public.
36. Thirteen (72%) of the public complaints were made by women and 5 (28%) were made by men.
37. Of the 18 public complaints:
  - Twelve (12) involved clients complaining about the conduct of their own lawyer;
  - Four (4) involved litigants complaining about the conduct of opposing counsel in their cases; and
  - Two (2) involved employment-related complaints by individuals working in law firms.
38. There were 9 complaints from members of the public based (in whole or in part) on sex:
  - Seven (7) of these complaints involved allegations of sexual harassment:
    - Five (5) of these consisted of complaints by clients about sexual harassment by their own lawyer.
    - One complaint was by a litigant who alleged that she was being sexually harassed by the opposing counsel in her case.

- 11 -

- One complaint was by a legal assistant employed in a law firm who reported sexual harassment by her boss.

Six of the sexual harassment complainants were female and all of the respondent lawyers were male. One of the sexual harassment complainants was male, but he was calling on behalf of his female partner who he claimed had been subjected to sexual harassment by her male lawyer.

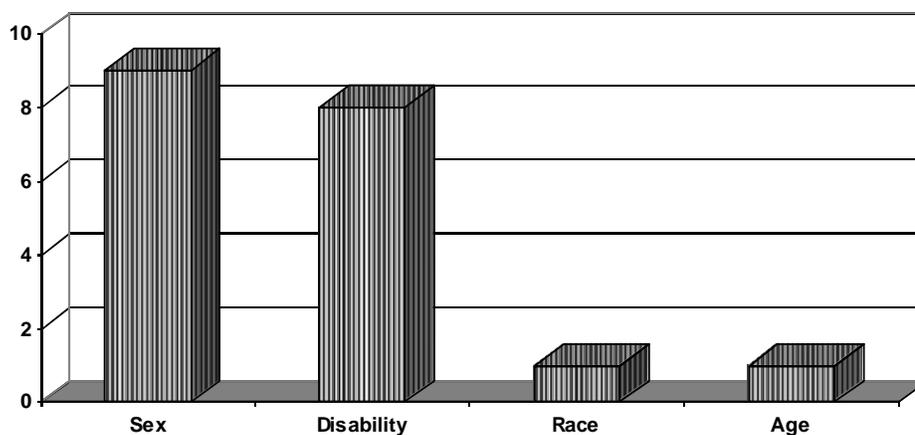

- One client complained about sexist remarks and discriminatory treatment by her male lawyer based on her pregnancy.
  - One man complained about the anti-male (and ageist) discriminatory recruitment and hiring practices of a lawyer who advertised a job posting for a “young female” legal assistant.
39. There were 8 complaints from members of the public based on disability:
- Three (3) litigants with disabilities complained about the discriminatory conduct and/or derogatory comments of opposing counsel in their cases.
  - Five (5) clients complained about their lawyers’ failure to accommodate their disability-related needs by providing accessible legal services.
40. There was one complaint from the public based on race. A client complained about derogatory racist language used by his lawyers.
41. There was one complaint from the public based in part on age. As previously mentioned, a man complained about a lawyer who advertised a job posting for a “young female” legal assistant.

- 12 -

42. In summary, the number of public complaints<sup>5</sup> in which each of the following grounds of discrimination was raised are as follows:

- sex 9
- disability 8
- race 1
- age 1

Grounds Raised in Complaints by Members of the Public

H. COMPLAINTS AGAINST LAWYERS BY PARALEGALS

43. During this reporting period, there were no complaints about lawyers by paralegals.

I. COMPLAINTS AGAINST PARALEGALS

44. During this reporting period, there were 2 complaints against paralegals.<sup>6</sup> Both were made by members of the public and both were based on the prohibited ground of sex:

- A female client complained about gender based discriminatory language used by a male paralegal who was representing her; and
- A woman complained about sexual harassment by a male paralegal with whom she was acquainted.

G. GENERAL INQUIRIES

45. Of the 109 new contacts with the DHC during this reporting period, 20 involved general inquiries about matters within the mandate of the DHC program and did not involve reports of misconduct by licensees.

H. MATTERS OUTSIDE THE DHC MANDATE

46. During this reporting period, the DHC received 45 calls and emails relating to matters outside the Program's mandate.

47. These contacts included complaints about paralegals and lawyers that did not involve allegations of discrimination or harassment based on human rights grounds (such as allegations of unethical behaviour, confidentiality breaches, bullying, or incivility). They also included complaints about discriminatory and/or

48. Several individuals contacted the DHC to obtain a referral to a lawyer to deal with a harassment or discrimination case. They were referred to the Law Society's Lawyer Referral Service.
49. An explanation of the DHC's mandate, role and duties was provided to each person who called with a matter outside the Program's mandate. Some of these individuals were referred to other agencies for assistance.
50. Although there are a number of these "outside mandate" contacts during every reporting period, they typically do not consume much of the DHC's time or resources, since we do not assist these individuals beyond their first contact with the Program.

J. PROMOTIONAL ACTIVITIES

51. The LSUC maintains a bilingual website for the DHC Program. During this reporting period, the website content was reviewed and updated. The new revised website should be on-line shortly. It will be fully compliant with the requirements of the Accessibility for Ontarians with Disabilities Act.
52. Throughout this reporting period, periodic advertisements were placed (in English and French) in the Ontario Reports to promote the DHC Program. In addition, French and English brochures (updated in 2013) continued to be placed in circulation in legal clinics, law firms, community centres, libraries, government agencies, faculties of law, etc.
53. The DHC works closely with the Law Society's Director of Equity (Josée Bouchard) to design and deliver Discrimination and Harassment Prevention and

- 15 -

Violence Prevention workshops to law firms across Ontario and also within the Law Society (for Law Society managers and staff). In addition to delivering important educational content, these workshops also serve as a useful opportunity to promote awareness of the DHC Program's services.

TAB 6.1

DECISION

PROPOSAL FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF THE
J. SHIRLEY DENISON AWARD*Motion

3. That Convocation approve the establishment of the J. Shirley Denison Award as set out in paragraph 13 of this Report, with the first award to be made in 2016.

Proposal for Consideration

4. The Heritage Committee, with the support of the Access to Justice Committee, is recommending the establishment of a J. Shirley Denison Award to be awarded annually for significant contribution to access to justice and/or poverty issues. The award would be named in Mr. Denison's honour to recognize his commitment to helping others.

Rationale for the Project

5. John Shirley Denison K.C. was born in 1870, was called to the bar in 1892 and practised in Toronto. He was a bencher from 1931-1944, a life bencher from 1946-1951 and Treasurer from 1944-1947. He died in 1951. Mr. Denison's Treasurer's portrait hangs in the public area of the Law Society with a plaque describing his bequest, which became the J. Shirley Denison Fund.
6. He was particularly well known for his great interest and contribution to the work of the Law Society. In 1968 Mr. Denison made a significant contribution to the Law Society and the legal profession by leaving the residue of his estate to the Law Society to be used to assist impoverished or indigent members and their families.
7. His will contained the following provision: "my Trustee shall ... pay to or deliver to the Law Society of Upper Canada the residue of my estate the same to be applied from time to time by the Treasurer and Benchers and both as to capital and income as they may see fit for the relief of impoverished or indigent members of the Law Society and of their wives widows and children including among such wives widows and children those of any member of the Law Society who may have been disbarred or suspended."
8. The capital receipt in 1968 was $190,005. There were times when payments from the Fund did not exceed the interest earned on the capital sum. More recently, payments increased due to factors such as increased publicity for the Fund. Since 2000, the Fund has paid a total of $432,000 to 134 applicants. The final payment from the fund was made in November 2014.

9. The J. Shirley Denison bequest to the Law Society was noteworthy for a number of reasons, but in the context of the proposed award, is particularly noteworthy because it sought to assist the vulnerable within the profession and their families. Moreover, unlike many bequests of its day it contained no restrictions by race, gender or otherwise. It passed no judgment on those members or former members of the profession who had been suspended or disbarred.
10. Given J. Shirley Denison's significant contribution to the profession, the amount of money paid out of his estate to assist people and the number of years over which the bequest lasted it is important that Mr. Denison not be forgotten.
11. By naming an award in his honour the importance of his legacy will be recognized and celebrated each year as will the activities of recipients in making a significant contribution in the area of access to justice and/or poverty issues.

Key Considerations

12. In considering the nature of the proposed award the following considerations have been taken into account:
  - a. The award's purpose should be simply stated to ensure that nominees can be drawn from a broad spectrum of those working in the area sought to be recognized.
  - b. To reflect J. Shirley Denison's inclusive attitudes, the award should be open to both lawyer and paralegal nominees.
  - c. In recognition of the need to manage Law Society costs and use of resources, the award process and ceremony should make use of infrastructure already in place to determine recipients and present the award. As such there will be no significant additional costs to introducing the award or managing the process.

The Proposal

13. In keeping with these considerations the Heritage Committee, with the support of the Access to Justice Committee, proposes the following:

The award's name:                   The J. Shirley Denison Award.

The award's purpose:               To recognize outstanding contributions to access to justice and/or poverty issues.

The criteria for the award:       The recipient must have demonstrated an outstanding contribution (either a single outstanding contribution or over a long term) to efforts to promote access to justice and/or address poverty issues. The recipient must not have received the award previously. (The award, in consultation with the proposed recipient's family/next of kin, may be granted posthumously.)

Eligibility for the Award:	Lawyer and paralegal licensees of the Law Society of Upper Canada.
Frequency of the Award:	Annually
Process and Ceremony:	The process should be similar to that followed for the Law Society Medal, Lincoln Alexander Award and Laura Legge Award, using the Law Society Awards Committee. To reflect that a recipient may be a paralegal the Committee's membership for consideration of this award should be expanded to include paralegal representation from the Paralegal Standing Committee. The award should be presented at the same event as the Law Society Medals.
Award Commemoration:	The details of this will be finalized once the award is approved, but would likely include an engraved award and a certificate.

DECISION

CPD COMPLIANCE AUDITS*Motion

2. That Convocation approve the elimination of Continuing Professional Development (“CPD”) desk audits.

Matter for Consideration

3. The mandatory CPD program, originally approved in 2010, includes provision for annual CPD audits to monitor compliance. The audits were to be done in two circumstances:
  - a. As part of a lawyer practice management reviews and paralegal practice audits.
  - b. By random selection chosen from among all paralegals and lawyers subject to the requirement. These are referred to as desk audits as no site visit is required.
4. Based on the results of audits conducted since the inception of the program, it appears that CPD compliance desk audits are no longer necessary. The audits conducted as part of lawyer practice management reviews and paralegal practice audits would continue.

Rationale

5. The effectiveness and impact of the CPD compliance and monitoring approach was to be analyzed after a period of time as part of the evaluation of various components of the CPD recommendations.
6. Much has been done over the last number of years to streamline the program to make it as user-friendly as possible while maintaining its integrity. This is an ongoing process. Consideration of the audit process is important to the program evaluation as well as relevant for resource allocation.

Key Issues and Considerations

7. The report at TAB 7.1.1: CPD Audit Results Report sets out the compliance process that has been followed, its results and reasons for considering a change to the compliance process.
8. Adoption of the proposal to eliminate the desk audits would lead to a reduction of a full-time equivalent staff for the 2016 budget year.
9. Licensees, particularly those in sole and small practices, have indicated that they prefer a reduction in unnecessary regulatory administrative requirements. TAB 7.1.1 confirms such a reduction is viable without negatively affecting the program.

April 2015

Report on CPD Audit Activities: Proposed Change in Audit Process

In 2010 Convocation approved a continuing professional development requirement. At the same time it approved a compliance process in which the Professional Development and Competence Division's practice audit team would conduct annual compliance reviews of lawyer and paralegal CPD completion.

The terms of the CPD audit policy were set out in the joint report of the PD&C Committee and the PSC Committee to Convocation on February 25, 2010. In that report, the following recommendations relating to CPD audits were made and approved:

Recommendation 16

That there be provision for random annual CPD audits to monitor compliance with the CPD requirement, to be undertaken as part of a practice management review or paralegal practice audit; and by random selection chosen from among all paralegals and lawyers subject to the requirement.

Recommendation 17

That the randomly selected CPD audits take the form of a written request for proof of completion.

Recommendation 18

That there be a total of 500 audits of lawyers and 25 audits of paralegals annually respecting CPD compliance.

The program's annual objective, as approved by Convocation, is to conduct 1,000 CPD audits (lawyers: 900 and paralegals: 100) through a combination of practice management review engagements (recommendation 16 above) and desk audits (recommendation 17 and 18 above), with both audit streams assessing a licensee's compliance with the CPD documentation requirements set out in section 4 of By-law 6.1.

The records that must be maintained by licensees in support of the reporting of CPD hours filed with the Law Society include a range of information as proof of completion depending on the type of eligible activity. In a CPD audit, the compliance review will confirm of program/course/seminar registration, receipts for payment of activities, date and times and locations of attendances, sponsoring organization, copies of CPD materials, documentation supporting publications or oral presentations or groups work with colleagues.

No immediate action is taken when a licensee is found not to be in compliance. Following the CPD audits, detailed and specific information is provided to licensees to assist them to support full compliance with their CPD record keeping requirements for future activities. The licensee receives a warning, is provided with information to correct reporting in the following year, and then revisited with an audit in the following year.

No licensee has in fact been the subject of additional regulatory review or procedures for failing to meet the requirements during the initial audit or in any follow up audit. This outcome is distinct from those licensees who may have failed to report their CPD completion at year end and were administratively suspended.

Set out below are the compliance statistics for both CPD Desk Audits and Practice Management Review/Practice Audits CPD activities since 2012.

The Practice Audits department has conducted 3,161 CPD compliance audits, comprised of 1,854 CPD compliance desk audits of lawyers and paralegals and 1,307 Practice Management (lawyer) and Practice Audit (paralegal) reviews.

Of the 1,854 CPD compliance desk audits, less than 0.3% (5 licensees) were not in compliance with the record keeping requirements. A slightly higher incidence of non-compliance has been found through the in-person CPD audits conducted during reviews at the licensees' places of business.

	579		37		363		79

Evaluation of Process

The PD&C Division employs two full-time equivalent staff to support the CPD compliance audit program. In addition to conducting the desk audits, CPD compliance staff facilitate the CPD audit reviews conducted by the reviewers at the licensee's place of business by pre-reviewing the CPD audit reports, verifying all internal courses and identifying specific sections for the reviewer to assess in more detail.

Of the 1,307 practice management review files conducted during the 2012-2014 period, almost 50% of the CPD compliance component of the engagement was conducted by the desk audit staff. This alleviated the need for Reviewers to conduct the preparatory work for the compliance review component, allowing them more time to focus on other more critical practice management components of the review engagement. CPD continues to be an important component of practice management and development for licensees, and part of an appropriately holistic practice review and audit process that should be conducted by the regulator, providing an opportunity for the Reviewer to discuss ongoing learning and competence development strategies with licensees, as necessary.

However, to date the outcomes of the CPD compliance audit programs suggest that there is no further need to continue with the CPD Compliance Desk Audit Program. The number of licensees with CPD record keeping deficiencies is extremely low. In addition, the Law Society now has very robust reminder processes and sanctions, including the application of late fees, to ensure that licensees maintain their CPD requirements.

Recommendation

It is recommended that the PD&C Committee consider a change in the mandatory CPD requirements that would eliminate CPD compliance Desk Audits, while maintaining CPD audits conducted in formal Practice Management Review (lawyer) and Practice Audit (paralegal) visits. This in turn will lead to a reduction of one full time equivalent staff for the 2016 budget year.

FOR DECISION

HOUSEKEEPING AMENDMENTS – HEARING DIVISION FORMS*Motion

2. That Convocation revoke Hearing Division Forms 9A, 9B, 13A and 24A (English and French) and replace them with revised Hearing Division Forms 9A, 9B, 13A and 24A (English and French) as set out in the motion at TAB 8.1.1.

Proposal for Consideration

3. The Tribunal will be moving during the week of August 10, 2015 to its new premises at 375 University, 4th Floor.
4. Hearing Division Forms 9A, 9B, 13A and 24A make specific reference to the Tribunal address at 130 Queen Street West and must be amended.

Rationale

5. It is necessary to replace the specific address on the forms templates to remove the current address for the Tribunal. It is most efficient to replace a specific address with a generic reference in which the relevant address can be inserted.

TRIBUNAL ANNUAL REPORT

6. Pursuant to the June 2012 Tribunal Reform Report (the “2012 Report”) the Tribunal Chair is to provide an Annual Report to Convocation on Tribunal operations.
7. The Chair’s Annual Report, in French and English, is set out at TABS 8.2.1: Annual Report (English) and 8.2.2: Annual Report (French) for Convocation’s information.
8. The annual report requirement provides for an annual snapshot of the Tribunal’s operations and developments. The 2014 Tribunal Annual Report also provides an overview to the progress of the 2012 reforms implementation. As an electronic document the Annual Report enables readers to access additional, more specific information in many of the areas touched on. As a public document it also reflects the Tribunal’s and the Law Society’s commitment to transparent processes.

Message from the Chair

I am pleased to present the first Annual Report of the Law Society Tribunal, which was formally established in March 2014. This report describes the many initiatives we undertook throughout 2014 in support of the establishment of an independent administrative tribunal within The Law Society of Upper Canada. These initiatives are designed to enhance the quality of the Tribunal's work in fairly and impartially processing, hearing and deciding the cases that come before us.

Tribunal members include benchers, who also have a role in governance of the Law Society, and other appointees to the Tribunal who are lawyers, paralegals and members of the public. Each panel is assigned by the Chair; important considerations in composing panels include ensuring bencher and lay representation and diversity in expertise and experience.

David A. Wright
Chair, Law Society Tribunal

Several types of cases are worth highlighting. Decisions on allegations of professional misconduct connected to mortgage fraud were prominent. Also significant were issues relating to mental health. Decisions addressed incapacity, health as a mitigating factor in penalty and requests to order an independent medical examination. Finally, the Tribunal's single-adjudicator summary hearing process dealt with many cases alleging failure to respond to the Law Society or violations of rules relating to financial records.

We continue to develop our jurisprudence. Significant 2014 Appeal Division decisions provided guidance on transparency of hearings (Law Society of Upper Canada v. Xynnis, 2014 ONLSAP 9); ungovernability and the application of progressive discipline (Law Society of Upper Canada v. Shifman, 2014 ONLSTA 21); and standards in criminal law practice (Law Society of Upper Canada v. Besant, 2014 ONLSTA 50).

We are committed to enhancing case management and alternative dispute resolution in the pre-hearing process, thereby reducing hearing time and adjournments. A small group of Tribunal members presides at pre-hearing conferences, and meets regularly to discuss common issues and promote consistency in approach.

This year, our staff's reporting relationships changed: the Registrar and Senior Counsel, who manages the Tribunal Office, now reports to the Chair. Staff have embraced the Tribunal's identity and put in extra effort in a year filled with changes to their work and a busy caseload.

I have learned a great deal from the Tribunal's stakeholders, members and staff in my first full year as Chair. I look forward to continued input and feedback from them, the Tribunal Committee, Convocation and the public as we continue the process of building an independent tribunal within self-governance of the legal and paralegal professions.

Tribunal Evolution

A Distinct Identity

MISSION STATEMENT AND CORE VALUES

The Law Society Tribunal is an independent adjudicative tribunal within The Law Society of Upper Canada. The Tribunal was formally established on March 12, 2014, through implementation of the Modernizing Regulation of the Legal Profession Act, 2013.

In recognition of the Tribunal's distinct identity and commitment to an enhanced tribunal process, a mission statement and core values were created and implemented through a process of consultation with stakeholders and members.

The Law Society Tribunal processes, hears and decides regulatory cases about Ontario lawyers and paralegals in a manner that is fair, just and in the public interest. The work of Tribunal members and staff is informed and governed by this mission statement and the core values of fairness, quality, transparency and timeliness.

TRIBUNAL TEAM

The Tribunal is made up of members and staff. Tribunal members are the adjudicators who hear and decide cases. All are part-time, with the exception of the Chair. There are 13 full-time staff, including the Chair, and one part-time staff member.

Members

The Tribunal consists of a Hearing and Appeal Division. The Chair of the Tribunal is Chair of both the Hearing and Appeal Divisions, and each Division has a Vice-Chair. Pursuant to the Law Society Act, the Chair must be a lawyer who is not a benchner and the Vice-Chairs must be elected benchers.

Other tribunal members include elected and other lawyer and paralegal benchers, lay (public) benchers appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council and lawyers, paralegals and lay (public) Tribunal members appointed by Convocation on recommendation of the Chair. Public members must also be approved by the Attorney General for Ontario. Currently, there are 81 members of the Tribunal in addition to the Chair and Vice-Chairs. All Tribunal members are members of the Hearing Division. Twenty Tribunal members are also members of the Appeal Division. The Chair is appointed for a four-year term, and Vice-Chairs and members are appointed for terms of up to two years.

Members sit in panels of one, three or five to hear and decide cases. Panels are composed by the Chair in accordance with the requirements set out in Ontario Regulation 167/07.

Tribunal Office

The Tribunal Office is led by the Registrar and Senior Counsel, who reports to the Chair. Tribunal Office staff support the adjudicative work of the Tribunal by coordinating file management, scheduling hearings, releasing orders and reasons and providing support at hearings.

Tribunal Committee

The Tribunal Committee is a standing committee of Convocation. Its mandate is to develop for Convocation's approval, in conjunction with the Chair, policy options on all matters relating to the Tribunal, including practice directions, the Adjudicator Code of Conduct, publication protocols for tribunal decisions, Tribunal member professional development and rules of practice and procedure.

TRIBUNAL STRUCTURE

Tribunal Advancement

The Law Society Tribunal is committed to continuous improvement and advancement. As part of this commitment, a detailed Tribunal member position description and formal performance development process for members have been approved by Convocation and implemented.

APPOINTMENT AND REAPPOINTMENT PROCESS

Members are appointed and reappointed to the Tribunal by Convocation on recommendation of the Chair. Benchers are eligible to be appointed to an initial term by virtue of their position. Other members are appointed following a competitive process and must have adjudicative experience. Tribunal members must adhere to the Law Society Tribunal Adjudicator Code of Conduct and demonstrate many aptitudes, including:

- Knowledge of administrative law, legislation and rules
- Commitment to procedurally fair and transparent hearings
- Production of quality jurisprudence
- Collegiality and self-reflection
- Continuous development through education of adjudicative skills and knowledge of issues before the Tribunal

RECRUITMENT

In 2014, the Law Society Tribunal initiated two separate competitive processes to recruit public and lawyer appointee members. As a result of these competitions, five public and four lawyer appointees were added to the Tribunal. The addition of these members strengthens the Tribunal's ability to conduct French language hearings and increases the diversity of expertise and experience among Tribunal members.

ORIENTATION AND EDUCATION

All new Tribunal members attend a multi-day orientation. Continuing education is offered to members and staff throughout the year, and attendance at two half-day sessions is mandatory for all members. This year's sessions focused on evidence, the role of the adjudicator and reason writing.

Outreach

STAKEHOLDER INPUT

The new Chair's Practice Roundtable has given Tribunal stakeholders a collegial forum in which to comment on the work of the Tribunal. The Chair's Practice Roundtable is comprised of duty counsel who regularly assist lawyers and paralegals at the Tribunal and individuals who regularly represent lawyers and paralegals or The Law Society of Upper Canada before the Tribunal.

The Chair's Practice Roundtable also provides an effective channel for the Tribunal to share and receive comment on developments and proposals about its processes.

Lawyers, paralegals and members of the public can receive email updates and consultation documents from the Tribunal by asking to be included on the Tribunal's Stakeholder's List.

REGULATORY AND ADMINISTRATIVE JUSTICE COMMUNITY

The Law Society Tribunal continues to establish its new identity within the regulatory and administrative justice community through the Chair's speaking engagements at conferences and events, including:

- Canadian Institute for the Administration of Justice Conference – Advanced Judicial Seminar on Administrative Law
- Federation of Law Societies of Canada – The Law Society of Upper Canada's Independent Tribunal Model
- The Society of Ontario Adjudicators and Regulators and Osgoode Professional Development – Ethics of Alternative Dispute Resolution in Administrative Justice

Tribunal Operations

Core Values

FAIRNESS

Fairness – Legislative Amendments

To create the Law Society Tribunal, the Law Society Act, By-Law 3, Ontario Regulation 167/07 and the Rules of Practice and Procedure were amended.

More recently, the Rules of Practice and Procedure were amended to require a lawyer, paralegal or lawyer or paralegal applicant involved in a Tribunal proceeding to prepare a pre-hearing conference (PHC) memorandum. Previously, only the Law Society was required to do so. Requiring both parties to prepare a PHC memorandum gives equal opportunity to state a position and promotes more detailed discussions at the PHC.

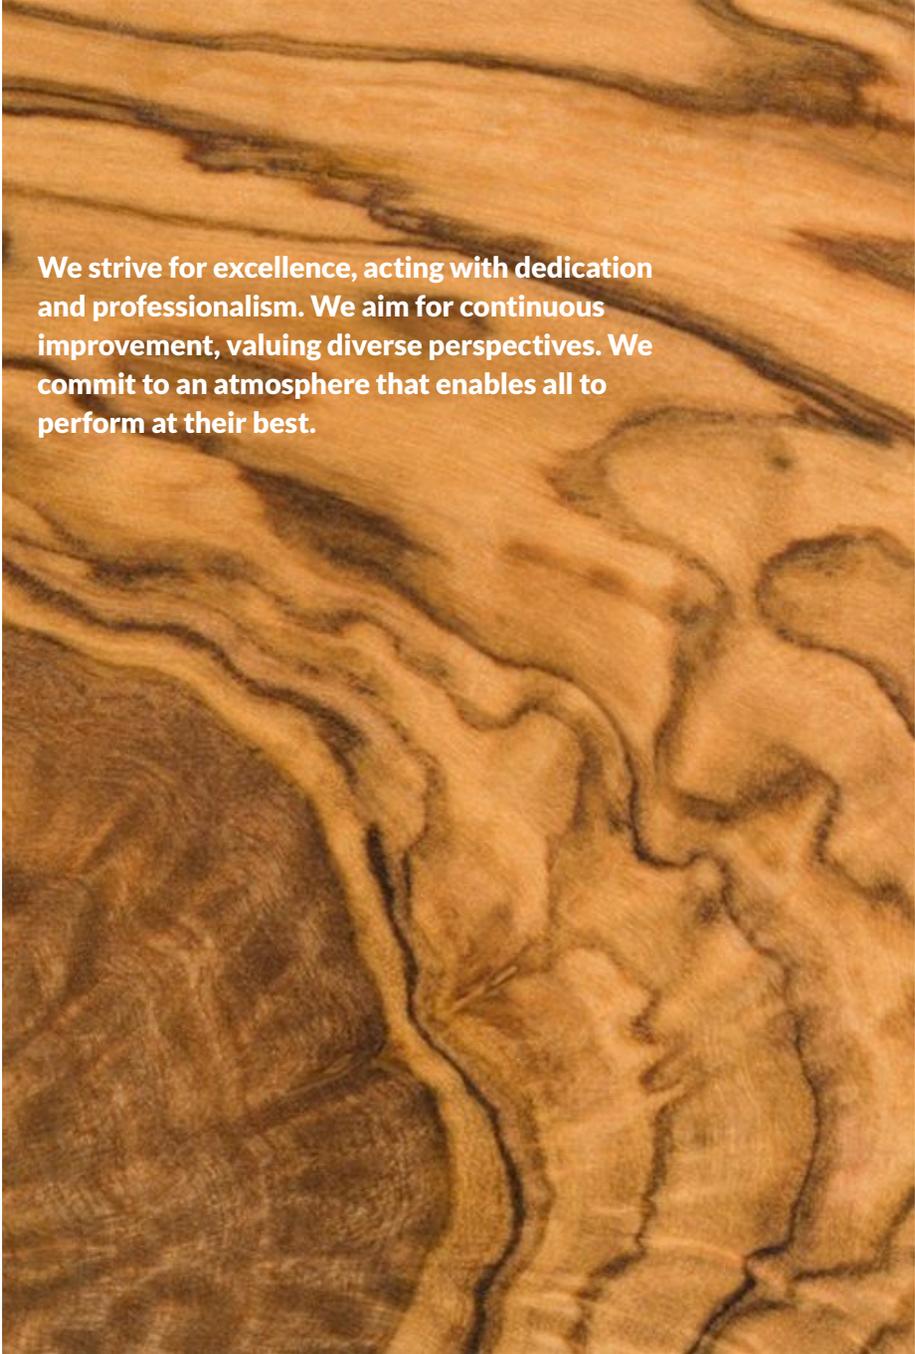

We will be fair and impartial in our processes and proceedings, treating all with respect, courtesy and dignity.

QUALITY

Quality - Case Management System

Work is underway, together with the Law Society's Project Management Office, to create a new electronic case management system to facilitate the filing of documents and the work of Tribunal members and staff, and to easily generate statistics about the Tribunal's work. The Tribunal's new case management system is being built within SharePoint to capitalize on The Law Society of Upper Canada's decision to move to this platform across the organization.

We strive for excellence, acting with dedication and professionalism. We aim for continuous improvement, valuing diverse perspectives. We commit to an atmosphere that enables all to perform at their best.

TRANSPARENCY

Transparency – Website and Law Society Tribunal Identity

The Law Society Tribunal website was created and launched on March 12, 2014. Internet presence through an independent website has dramatically increased the profile and transparency of the Tribunal. It allows for ease of access to Tribunal information by the public, media and parties. The website contains a wealth of information about the Tribunal and its activities.

A unique Law Society Tribunal identity was enhanced with the design of a logo and stationery allowing lawyers, paralegals, the public and the media to visualize the Tribunal's independence within The Law Society of Upper Canada. This has assisted in educating parties and stakeholders about the distinction between the Law Society Tribunal and The Law Society of Upper Canada's Professional Regulation Division while emphasizing the Tribunal's independence and neutrality.

We will act in a manner that bears the closest scrutiny. Our decisions, rules, processes and policies will be available to licensees and the public, accessible and easily understandable.

TIMELINESS

Timeliness – New Scheduling Process

On May 2, 2014, the Law Society Tribunal initiated a new scheduling process. The new scheduling process maximizes hearing date options and provides parties with exact hearing dates, as opposed to a range of dates as was the former practice. Certainty of hearing dates promotes timely scheduling and translates into cost savings for parties as representatives are only required to attend on actual hearing dates.

We are guided by the importance of timely resolution of all matters. We will schedule hearing and continuation dates expeditiously and complete written reasons promptly.

Tribunal Metrics

The Law Society Tribunal's 2014 statistics may be found here.

HEARING AND APPEAL FILES OPENED IN 2014

HEARING AND APPEAL FILES OPENED BY YEAR

Statistical Highlights and Trends

FILES OPENED

The Law Society Tribunal continued to administer a very busy caseload in 2014. While fewer originating processes were filed with the Tribunal than the year before, the overall work of the Tribunal remained steady as more files were closed by the Tribunal than in 2013. The Tribunal Office received 125 notices of application or referral for hearing and motions for interlocutory suspension or practice restriction to be considered by the Hearing Division, compared to 159 filings in 2013, a 21% decrease. The Tribunal Office also received 23 notices of appeal to be considered by the Appeal Division compared to 20 filings in 2013, a 15% increase. The total number of filings in 2014 is similar to that of 2012 filings.

Tribunal Metrics

The Law Society Tribunal's 2014 statistics may be found here.

HEARING AND APPEAL FILES CLOSED IN 2014

HEARING AND APPEAL FILES CLOSED BY YEAR

FILES CLOSED

In 2014, the Tribunal closed 152 files that were before the Hearing Division compared to 134 closed files in 2013, a 13% increase. The Tribunal also closed 28 files that were before the Appeal Division compared to 22 closed files in 2013, a 27% increase.

OPEN FILES BY AGE

At year-end 2014, the Tribunal's open or active file inventory of 152 files may be sorted by age as:
0 to 6 months - 64 files (42%), 7 to 18 months - 60 files (40%), 19 to 24 months - 17 files (11%) and over 24 months - 11 files (7%).

Almost half of the Tribunal's open or active inventory at 2014 year-end is less than six months old and 82% of the Tribunal's open or active inventory is less than 18 months old. These figures are identical to year-end 2013 figures and improve on 2012 percentages of 33% and 76%, respectively. At 2014 year-end, only 7% of open or active files were over 24 months old, compared to 13% in 2013 and 16% in 2012.

NUMBER OF FILES AND FREQUENCY BEFORE THE TRIBUNAL

Case management and adjudication activity before the Tribunal remained high in 2014. The proceeding management conference considered 144 files and the Hearing Division considered 190 files in 2014. The appeal management conference considered 15 files and the Appeal Division considered 26 files.

TOTAL HEARINGS SCHEDULED AND VACATED

In 2014, hearings were scheduled on 96% of all available calendar days. A total of 450 single-day or multiple day hearing blocks were scheduled before the Hearing and Appeal Divisions. Of these, 407 were for Hearing Division hearings and 43 were for Appeal Division hearings. Of the 407 Hearing Division blocks scheduled, 17% were vacated which is an improvement from the 23% and 22% of vacated hearings in 2013 and 2012, respectively. The Appeal Division experienced the same improvement as only 12% of blocks scheduled were vacated, compared to 16% in 2013 and 13% in 2012. The decrease in adjournments is likely due to an emphasis on more active pre-hearing case management and more consistent application and awareness of the Tribunal's practice direction for adjournment requests.

TRIBUNAL REASONS PRODUCED AND PUBLISHED

In 2014, 183 written reasons were produced, an increase of 29% from 2013 and 27% from 2012. Tribunal written and oral reasons continue to be published on The Canadian Legal Information Institute website to ensure that Law Society Tribunal jurisprudence is available to licensees and the public in an accessible format that may be researched.

Message du président

Je suis heureux de présenter le premier rapport annuel du Tribunal du Barreau, officiellement créé en mars 2014. Le présent rapport décrit les nombreuses initiatives entreprises en 2014 pour soutenir la création d'un tribunal administratif indépendant au sein du Barreau du Haut-Canada. Le but de ces initiatives est d'améliorer la qualité du travail du Tribunal ainsi que de traiter, d'entendre et de trancher de façon juste et impartiale les causes qui nous sont présentées.

Les membres du Tribunal comprennent des conseillers et des conseillères, qui jouent un rôle dans la gouvernance du Barreau, et d'autres membres avocats, parajuristes et membres du public nommés au Tribunal. Chaque formation est affectée par le président; la composition des formations tient compte du besoin de représenter les conseillers et les non-juristes, ainsi que de la diversité de l'expertise et de l'expérience.

Plusieurs types de causes valent la peine d'être soulignés. Les décisions portant sur les allégations de manquement professionnel liées à la fraude hypothécaire sont d'une importance considérable, tout comme les questions liées à la santé mentale. Les décisions ont porté sur la capacité, la santé comme facteur atténuant pour déterminer la sanction et les demandes d'ordonner un examen médical indépendant. Enfin, le processus d'audience sommaire du Tribunal devant un seul arbitre traite de nombreuses causes alléguant un manquement à répondre au Barreau ou des violations des règles du Code de déontologie portant sur les registres financiers.

David A. Wright, président,
Tribunal du Barreau

Nous continuons à développer notre jurisprudence. Des décisions majeures de la Section d'appel en 2014 ont orienté la transparence des audiences (Barreau du Haut-Canada c. Xynnis, 2014 ONLSAP 9); l'ingouvernabilité et l'application de la discipline progressive (Barreau du Haut-Canada c. Shifman, 2014 ONLSTA 21); et les normes de la pratique de droit criminel (Barreau du Haut-Canada c. Besant, 2014 ONLSTA 50).

Nous sommes engagés à améliorer la gestion des cas et la résolution extra judiciaire de différends dans le processus préalable aux audiences, réduisant ainsi la durée des audiences et les ajournements. Un petit groupe de membres du tribunal préside les conférences préalables à l'audience et se réunit régulièrement pour discuter des problèmes communs et promouvoir une approche uniforme.

Cette année, nos liens hiérarchiques ont changé : la greffière et avocate principale, qui gère le greffe du Tribunal, se rapporte maintenant au président. Le personnel a accepté l'identité du Tribunal et fourni un effort additionnel pendant cette année de changements et de volume de travail considérable.

J'ai beaucoup appris des intervenants du Tribunal, des membres et du personnel en cette première année entière comme président. Je compte sur leurs commentaires continus, ainsi que sur ceux du comité du Tribunal, du Conseil et du public pour développer un tribunal indépendant au sein de professions juridique et parajuridique autogouvernées.

Évolution du Tribunal

Identité distincte

MISSION ET VALEURS

Le Tribunal du Barreau est un tribunal d'arbitrage indépendant au sein du Barreau du Haut-Canada. Le Tribunal du Barreau a été constitué officiellement le 12 mars 2014 en vertu de la Loi de 2013 sur la modernisation de la réglementation de la profession juridique.

En reconnaissance de l'identité du Tribunal et de son engagement envers l'amélioration de sa procédure, un énoncé de mission et de valeurs a été créé et mis en œuvre après une consultation avec les intervenants et les membres.

Le Tribunal du Barreau traite, entend et tranche des cas de réglementation concernant les avocates, les avocats et les parajuristes de l'Ontario de manière équitable, juste et dans l'intérêt public. Ces valeurs essentielles guident et gouvernent le travail des membres et du personnel du Tribunal : équité, qualité, transparence et délais.

ÉQUIPE DU TRIBUNAL

Le Tribunal est formé de membres du tribunal et de personnel. Les membres du Tribunal sont les arbitres qui entendent et tranchent les causes. Tous les arbitres agissent à temps partiel, à l'exception du président. Le Tribunal compte 13 employés à temps plein, dont le président, et un employé à temps partiel.

Membres

Le Tribunal est constitué d'une section de première instance et d'une section d'appel. Le président du Tribunal préside ces deux sections, chacune ayant un vice-président. Conformément à la Loi sur le Barreau, le président doit être avocat non conseiller et les vice-présidents doivent être des conseillers élus.

Les autres membres du Tribunal comprennent des conseillers avocats ou parajuristes élus ou non élus; des conseillers non juristes (public) nommés par le Lieutenant-gouverneur en conseil, et des membres du Tribunal avocats, parajuristes et non-juristes (public) nommés par le Conseil sur recommandation du président. Les membres publics doivent aussi être approuvés par la procureure générale de l'Ontario. En ce moment, le Tribunal compte 81 membres, en plus du président et des vice-présidents. Tous les membres du Tribunal sont membres de la Section de première instance. Vingt membres du Tribunal sont également membres de la Section d'appel. Le président est nommé pour un mandat de quatre ans, et les vice-présidents et membres sont nommés pour des mandats de deux ans maximum.

Les membres siègent à des formations de un, trois ou cinq pour entendre et trancher les causes. Les formations sont composées par le président conformément aux exigences énoncées dans le Règlement de l'Ontario 167/07.

Greffe du Tribunal

Le greffe du Tribunal est mené par la greffière et avocate principale, qui se rapporte au président. Le personnel du greffe du Tribunal soutient le travail d'arbitrage du Tribunal en coordonnant la gestion des dossiers, l'établissement d'horaires, la publication des ordonnances et des motifs, et en fournissant un appui aux audiences.

Comité du Tribunal

Le Comité du Tribunal est un comité permanent du Conseil. Son mandat est d'élaborer, de concert avec le président du Tribunal du Barreau, pour approbation du Conseil, différentes politiques sur toutes les questions portant sur le Tribunal, y compris l'élaboration ou la préparation des directives de cabinet, le Code de déontologie des arbitres, un protocole de publication pour rendre les décisions du tribunal, le perfectionnement professionnel des arbitres et des règles de pratique et de procédure.

STRUCTURE DU TRIBUNAL

Avancement du Tribunal

Le Tribunal du Barreau s'engage à continuer de s'améliorer. Dans le cadre de cet engagement, une description de postes pour les membres du Tribunal et un processus de perfectionnement professionnel officiel pour les membres ont été approuvés par le Conseil et mis en œuvre.

PROCESSUS DE NOMINATION ET DE RENOUVELLEMENT DES NOMINATIONS

Les membres sont nommés et renommés au Tribunal par le Conseil, sur recommandation du président. Les conseillers peuvent être nommés pour un mandat initial du fait de leur charge. D'autres membres sont nommés après un processus concurrentiel et doivent avoir une expérience d'arbitrage. Les membres du Tribunal doivent respecter le Code de déontologie des arbitres du Tribunal du Barreau et faire preuve de diverses aptitudes, comme :

- La connaissance du droit administratif, de la loi et des règles
- Un engagement envers des audiences équitables et transparentes
- La production de jurisprudence de qualité
- La collégialité et la réflexion personnelle
- Le perfectionnement continu par l'éducation des habiletés d'arbitrage et des connaissances des questions présentées au Tribunal

RECRUTEMENT

En 2014, le Tribunal du Barreau a amorcé deux processus concurrentiels séparés pour recruter des membres du public et des avocats. À l'issue de ces compétitions, cinq membres du public et quatre avocats additionnels ont été nommés au Tribunal. L'ajout de ces membres renforce la capacité du Tribunal de mener des audiences en français et augmente la diversité de l'expertise et de l'expérience parmi les membres du Tribunal.

ORIENTATION ET ÉDUCATION

Tous les nouveaux membres du Tribunal participent à une orientation sur plusieurs jours. La formation continue est offerte aux membres et au personnel durant l'année, et la participation aux séances de deux demi-journées est obligatoire pour tous les membres. Les séances de cette année portaient sur la preuve, le rôle de l'arbitre et la rédaction de motifs.

Rayonnement

OPINIONS DES INTERVENANTS

La nouvelle Table ronde du président concernant les pratiques a fourni aux intervenants du Tribunal un forum collégial pour exprimer leurs opinions sur le travail du Tribunal. La Table ronde du président est constituée d'avocats de service qui aident régulièrement les avocats et les parajuristes au Tribunal, et de personnes qui représentent régulièrement les avocats et les parajuristes ou le Barreau du Haut-Canada devant le Tribunal.

La Table ronde du président fournit également un canal efficace au Tribunal pour partager et recevoir des commentaires sur les développements et les propositions concernant ses processus.

Les avocates, avocats, parajuristes et membres du public peuvent recevoir les mises à jour et les documents de consultation du Tribunal en demandant d'être ajoutés à la liste des intervenants.

COMMUNAUTÉ DE JUSTICE ADMINISTRATIVE ET RÉGLEMENTAIRE

Le Tribunal du Barreau continue d'établir sa nouvelle identité dans la communauté de justice administrative et réglementaire grâce aux engagements oratoires du président à des conférences et événements, y compris :

- Conférence de l'Institut canadien d'administration de la justice – séminaire sur le droit administratif pour la magistrature
- Fédération des ordres professionnels de juristes du Canada – le modèle de tribunal indépendant du Barreau du Haut-Canada
- La Society of Ontario Adjudicators and Regulators et perfectionnement professionnel d'Osgoode – éthique et règlement extra judiciaire des différends en justice administrative

Opérations du Tribunal

Valeurs

ÉQUITÉ

ÉQUITÉ – Modifications législatives

La Loi sur le Barreau, le Règlement administratif n° 3, le Règlement de l'Ontario 167/07 et les Règles de pratique et de procédure ont été modifiés pour créer le Tribunal du Barreau.

Plus récemment, les Règles de pratique et de procédure ont également été modifiées pour exiger que les avocats, parajuristes ou demandeurs avocats ou parajuristes engagés dans une instance du Tribunal préparent un mémoire de conférence préparatoire à l'audience (CPA), ce qui auparavant incombait seulement au Barreau. En préparant un tel mémoire, les deux parties ont ainsi la même chance de se positionner et de favoriser des discussions plus approfondies au stade de la CPA.

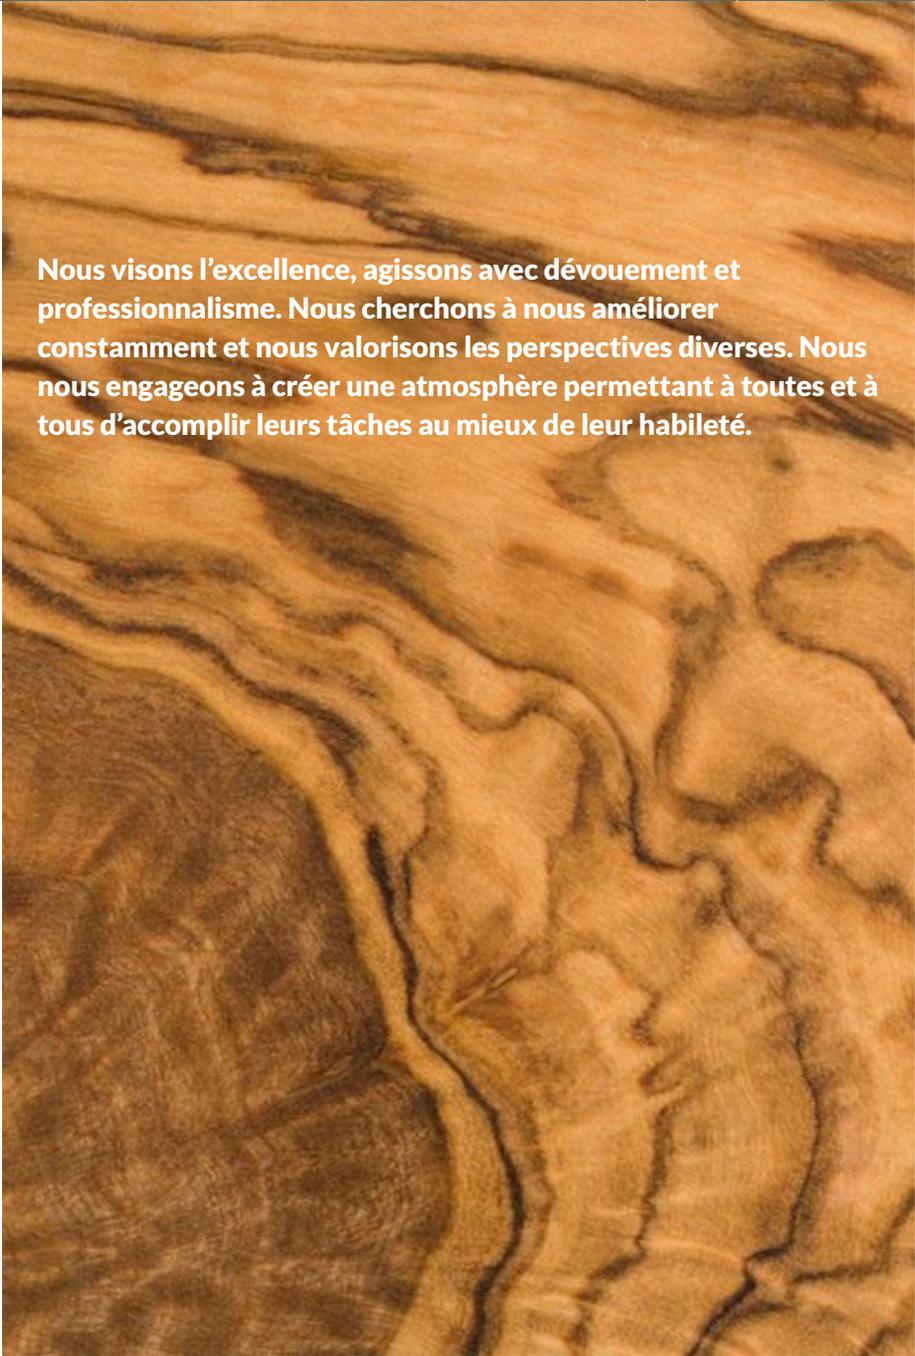

Nous serons équitables et impartiaux dans nos procédures et nos instances, et traiterons toutes les parties avec respect, courtoisie et dignité.

QUALITÉ

QUALITÉ – Système de gestion des cas

Le travail est en cours avec le Bureau de gestion de projets du Barreau pour créer un nouveau système électronique de gestion des cas visant à faciliter le dépôt de documents au Tribunal et le travail des membres et du personnel du Tribunal, ainsi qu'à facilement produire des statistiques sur le travail du Tribunal. Le nouveau système de gestion des cas du Tribunal est développé dans SharePoint pour mettre à profit la décision du Barreau du Haut-Canada de passer à cette plate-forme dans toute l'organisation.

Nous visons l'excellence, agissons avec dévouement et professionnalisme. Nous cherchons à nous améliorer constamment et nous valorisons les perspectives diverses. Nous nous engageons à créer une atmosphère permettant à toutes et à tous d'accomplir leurs tâches au mieux de leur habileté.

TRANSPARENCE

Transparence – Site Web et identité du Tribunal du Barreau

Le site Web du Tribunal du Barreau a été créé et lancé le 12 mars 2014. La présence sur Internet d'un site Web indépendant a considérablement augmenté le profil et la transparence du Tribunal. Il permet une facilité d'accès aux renseignements sur le Tribunal par le public, les médias et les parties. Le site Web contient une mine de renseignements sur le Tribunal et sur ses activités.

L'identité unique du Tribunal du Barreau a été améliorée par la conception d'un logo et de papier à entête permettant aux avocats, parajuristes, membres du public et aux médias de visualiser l'indépendance du Tribunal au Barreau du Haut-Canada. Cela a aidé à instruire les parties sur la distinction entre le Tribunal du Barreau et la Direction de la réglementation professionnelle du Barreau du Haut-Canada tout en mettant l'accent sur l'indépendance et la neutralité du Tribunal.

Nous agissons d'une manière qui résiste à l'examen le plus minutieux. Nos décisions, règles, procédures et politiques seront à la disposition de tous les titulaires de permis et du public, en format accessible et facile à comprendre.

DÉLAIS

Délais – nouveau processus d'établissement des horaires

Le 2 mai 2014, le Tribunal du Barreau amorçait un nouveau processus d'établissement des horaires. Ce nouveau processus optimise les choix de dates d'audience et offre aux parties des dates exactes, au lieu d'une gamme de dates comme avant. La certitude des dates d'audience favorise des délais rapides et se traduit par un gain de temps pour les parties puisque les représentants n'ont besoin de comparaître qu'aux dates réelles de leur audience.

Nous sommes guidés par l'importance d'une résolution de toutes les affaires en temps utile. Nous fixerons rapidement des dates d'audition et de reprise et rendrons promptement des motifs écrits.

DOSSIERS D'AUDIENCE ET D'APPEL OUVERTS PAR ANNÉE

Sommaire et tendances statistiques

DOSSIERS OUVERTS

Le Tribunal du Barreau a continué de gérer une forte charge de travail en 2014. Si les actes introductifs d'instance déposés auprès du Tribunal ont été moins nombreux que l'année précédente, le travail global du Tribunal, lui, est demeuré constant et le nombre de dossiers clos a été plus élevé qu'en 2013. Le greffe du Tribunal a reçu 125 avis de requête ou de renvoi pour des audiences et des motions de suspension interlocutoire ou de restriction de la pratique à présenter à la Section de première instance, comparativement à 159 dépôts en 2013, soit une diminution de 21 %. Le greffe du Tribunal a également reçu 23 avis d'appel à présenter devant la Section d'appel, comparativement à 20 dépôts en 2013, soit une augmentation de 15 %. Le nombre total de dépôts en 2014 est le même qu'en 2012.

DOSSIERS CLOS

En 2014, le Tribunal a clos 152 dossiers dont la Section de première instance était saisie, comparativement à 134 dossiers clos en 2013, soit une augmentation de 13 %. Le Tribunal a également clos 28 dossiers introduits à la Section d'appel, comparativement à 22 dossiers clos en 2013, soit une augmentation de 27 %.

DOSSIERS OUVERTS SELON L'ANCIENNETÉ

À la fin de 2014, l'inventaire de 152 dossiers ouverts ou actifs du Tribunal peut être classé selon l'ancienneté de la façon suivante : 0 à 6 mois – 64 dossiers (42 %), 7 à 18 mois – 60 dossiers (40 %), 19 à 24 mois – 17 dossiers (11 %) et plus de 24 mois – 11 dossiers (7 %).

Près de la moitié de l'inventaire de dossiers actifs ou ouverts du Tribunal à la fin de 2014 sont de moins de six mois et 82 % de l'inventaire de dossiers actifs ou ouverts du Tribunal sont de moins de 18 mois. Ces chiffres sont identiques à ceux de la fin de 2013 et marquent une amélioration par rapport aux pourcentages de 2012, soit 33 % et 76 %, respectivement. À la fin de 2014, seulement 7 % de dossiers ouverts ou actifs étaient de plus de 24 mois, par rapport à 13 % en 2013 et 16 % en 2012.

NOMBRE DE DOSSIERS ET FRÉQUENCE DE COMPARUTION DEVANT LE TRIBUNAL

La gestion des cas et l'arbitrage devant le Tribunal sont demeurés élevés en 2014. La conférence de gestion de l'instance a examiné 144 dossiers et la Section de première instance en a examiné 190 en 2014. La gestion des appels a examiné 15 dossiers et la Section d'appel en a examiné 26.

NOMBRE TOTAL D'AUDIENCES PRÉVUES ET ANNULÉES

En 2014, les audiences se sont réparties sur 96 % de tous les jours civils disponibles. Un total de 450 groupes de dates d'audience sur un jour ou sur plusieurs jours ont été fixés devant les sections de première instance ou d'appel. De ce nombre, 407 visaient la Section de première instance et 43 la Section d'appel. Sur les 407 groupes prévus devant la Section de première instance, 17 % ont été annulés, une amélioration par rapport aux 23 % et 22 % des audiences annulées en 2013 et en 2012. La Section d'appel a connu la même amélioration puisque seulement 12 % des groupes prévus ont été annulés, par rapport à 16 % en 2013 et à 13 % en 2012. La réduction du nombre d'ajournements est vraisemblablement due à une gestion préalable des cas plus active et à une application et une sensibilité plus constante de la direction sur la pratique du Tribunal relative aux demandes d'ajournement.

PRODUCTION ET PUBLICATION DES MOTIFS DU TRIBUNAL

En 2014, 183 motifs ont été écrits, une augmentation de 29 % par rapport à 2013 et de 27 % par rapport à 2012. Les motifs écrits et oraux du Tribunal continuent d'être publiés sur le site Web de l'Institut canadien d'information juridique pour veiller à ce que les décisions du Tribunal du Barreau soient à la portée des titulaires de permis et du public dans un format accessible et consultable.

FOR INFORMATION*ELECTION OF THE PARALEGAL STANDING COMMITTEE CHAIR

13. Sections 130.1 to 130.13 of By-law 3 provide for the annual election of the Chair of the Paralegal Standing Committee. The By-Law requires the election of the Chair to be the first item of business at the meeting one year from the last Committee Chair election, or, in a year in which the paralegal members of the Committee are elected, the first meeting of the Committee following that election.
14. Since the last election of the Committee Chair was in April 2014, election of the Chair was required to be the first item of business at the meeting in April 2015.
15. In accordance with section 130.4 of the by-law, the Director of Policy, Jim Varro, was appointed Elections Officer by the CEO, Robert Lapper. Mr Varro attended the meeting and administered the election.
16. The By-law further requires that the person elected be appointed Chair.
17. Since there was only one nomination for the position, Ms Michelle Haigh, Ms Haigh was declared elected and was therefore appointed Chair of the Committee for a one year term.

INTRODUCTION

1. The Federation of Law Societies of Canada (the “Federation”) is the national coordinating body for Canada’s 14 law societies. It operates the National Committee on Accreditation (“NCA”), a Standing Committee at the Federation whose primary mandate is to assess the legal education and professional experience of persons whose legal education and professional experience were obtained outside of Canadian common law jurisdictions and who wish to be admitted to a common law bar in Canada. It provides administrative support to the National Criminal Law Program and the National Family Law Program. The Federation additionally engages in a number of national initiatives on which reports are received at its annual and semi-annual meetings.
2. Former Treasurer Thomas Conway is the Federation’s President for 2014-2015. Former Treasurer Laurie Pawlitza serves as the Federation Council member representing the Law Society of Upper Canada.
3. More information about the Federation can be found on its website at www.flsc.ca/.
4. The Federation typically organizes two conferences a year, at the times of its business meetings, for Council members, benchers and law society staff addressing regulatory themes of national importance.<sup>1</sup> At its most recent meetings, held March 25-28, 2015 in Ottawa, Ontario, in addition to a Council Meeting (March 26), the Federation held governance meetings in the context of its governance review with Federation Council members, Law Society CEOs and Law Society Presidents and Vice-Presidents on March 25 and 26, and a governance workshop for all participants on March 27 and 28.
5. Treasurer Janet Minor, Federation Council member Laurie Pawlitza, and staff Robert Lapper and Jim Varro attended the meetings on behalf of the Law Society of Upper Canada. Staff members Mary Shena and Marisha Roman were also present to assist with the organization of the dinner for delegates hosted by the Law Society on Friday, March 27.

GOVERNANCE MEETINGS

6. In June 2014, Federation Council approved the creation of a Governance Review Committee to conduct a governance review of the Federation. The review was prompted by, among other things, the growing demands on the Federation to lead national regulatory initiatives and the expectation that the Federation will perform at high standards.

7. In July 2014, Council approved the composition of the Committee, which includes the Law Society of Upper Canada's Robert Lapper, as well as Marie-Claude Bélanger-Richard, Past Federation President (Chair); Jeff Hirsch, Federation Vice President; Sheila Greene, Council member for the Law Society of Newfoundland & Labrador; Sheila MacPherson, Council member for the Law Society of the Northwest Territories; Steve Raby, Council member for the Law Society of Alberta; Johanne Brodeur, former Bâtonnière of the Barreau du Québec, and Tim McGee, CEO, Law Society of British Columbia.
8. The Ottawa meeting provided all Federation member law societies with an opportunity to continue to work on the important governance issues.
9. The Governance Review Committee will endeavor to bring proposals for change to Council and law societies later in 2015.

COUNCIL MEETING

10. The Council met on March 26, 2015. It received reports from the Federation's President, Thomas Conway, and its CEO, Jonathan Herman. The Council Meeting agenda addressed a range of Federation matters, including the following.

National Mobility

11. Council received an update regarding the status of national mobility. The National Mobility Agreement 2013 and Territorial Mobility Agreement 2013 have been approved by all jurisdictions, but have not yet been implemented.
12. Implementation is awaiting approval by the government of Quebec of the required changes to the Barreau's regulations. Pursuant to the statutory regime governing all professions in Quebec, amendments to regulations require government approval.

National Committee on Accreditation (NCA)

13. The NCA reports that in the first eight months of 2014/2015 it:
  - a. received 847 applications for assessment (consistent with the number of applications received last year);
  - b. issued 662 Certificates of Qualification;
  - c. considered 11 appeals of NCA assessments (8 dismissed, 2 successful in whole or in part, and 1 requiring further materials to be provided); and

- d. delivered 3,724 examinations, which were written both in Canada and in locations around the world.
14. The NCA also approved a new Assessment Policy, effective January 1, 2015 that brings it into compliance with the National Requirement.

Standing Committee on Access to Legal Services

15. The Standing Committee on Access to Legal Services (“SCALS”) facilitates the Federation’s strategic objective of collaborating with other participants in the legal system to foster greater public satisfaction with access to legal services. Law Society CEO Robert Lapper is a member of this Standing Committee. The Standing Committee has recently:
- a. Established a working group to facilitate exchange of information between law societies about access to justice;
  - b. Assisted in planning and attended an in-person meeting of representatives of provincial and territorial access to justice committees held in Toronto on March 13, 2015; and
  - c. Prepared a submission to the Federal Court’s Rules Committee in response to a public consultation, describing the Federation and law society approaches taken with respect to limited scope retainers.

Standing Committee on the Model Code of Professional Conduct

16. The mandate of the Standing Committee is to monitor changes in the law of professional responsibility and legal ethics, to receive and consider feedback from the law societies and other interested parties regarding the Model Code, and to make recommendations to Council with respect to any changes to the Model Code. The Law Society’s Jim Varro, Director of Policy, serves on the Standing Committee.
17. In the first quarter of 2015, the Standing Committee has engaged in numerous discussions with its law society liaisons, in an effort to more deeply integrate law society and Standing Committee work on the Model Code. Several of its members participated in a CBA-Federation Annual Ethics Forum, held in Toronto on March 6, 2015.
18. The Standing Committee also continues to consider potential amendments to the Model Code. It is studying submissions it received in response to public consultations held between July and November 2014 on a number of draft amendments to the Model Code, including, for example, proposed rule changes to eliminate language that stigmatizes those suffering from mental health problems or that might discriminate against equity seeking groups, and proposed new guidance for communicating with expert witnesses. The Standing Committee is also drafting amendments related to lawyers departing from law firms, having consulted with several law society liaisons regarding this area. It is also preparing draft amendments related to dishonesty/fraud by lawyers, which will be included in its next round of consultations with all law societies.

National Requirement Review Committee

19. The National Requirement for entry to law society admission or licensing programs was approved in 2010, and takes effect in 2015. In June 2014, the Federation Council approved the establishment of a National Requirement Review Committee (the “Review Committee”), and at its October meeting Council approved this Committee’s Terms of Reference for it to:
  - a. Conduct an initial evaluation of the National Requirement focusing on identifying immediate issues that have become evident as part of early implementation; and
  - b. Consider and make recommendations on whether to include a non-discrimination provision in the National Requirement.

20. Following extensive consultations by the Federation Executive with respect to the composition of the Review Committee, at its Ottawa meeting Council approved the appointment of the following individuals to the Review Committee:
  - (a) Thomas G. Conway, Federation President, Chair
  - (b) Herman Van Ommen, Q.C. (Law Society of British Columbia)
  - (c) Kevin Feth, Q.C. (Law Society of Alberta)
  - (d) Peter Wardle (Law Society of Upper Canada)
  - (e) Tilly Pillay, Q.C. (Nova Scotia Barristers’ Society)
  - (f) Shauna Van Praagh (Faculty of Law, McGill University)
  - (g) Trevor Farrow (Osgoode Hall Law School)
  - (h) Diana Miles (Executive Director, Organizational Strategy /Professional Development & Competence, Law Society of Upper Canada)

21. In addition, the Chairs of the Canadian Common Law Program Approval Committee and the National Committee on Accreditation or their respective designates will be appointed as ex officio members without voting rights so as to ensure effective dialogue between the Canadian Common Law Program Approval Committee, the National Committee on Accreditation and the Review Committee.

22. Council approved amended terms of reference which require the Review Committee to report to Council by May 2015 with its proposed work plan.

Canadian Common Law Program Approval Committee

23. Laurie Pawlitz, Treasurer Emeritus of the Law Society and Chair of the Canadian Common Law Program Approval Committee (the “Approval Committee”), presented a report on the Approval Committee’s recent activities. Approval Committee members include Morgan Cooper (Newfoundland & Labrador), Steve Raby (Alberta), Alan Treleaven (British Columbia), Dean Lorne Sossin (Osgoode Hall Law School), Dean Mary Anne Bobinski (University of British Columbia) and Dean Sébastien Lebel-Grenier (Université de Sherbrooke). Law Society of Upper Canada policy counsel Sophia Sperdakos and Juda Strawczynski are providing policy and operational support to the Approval Committee.

24. Council reappointed Laurie Pawlitzka and Steve Raby to the Approval Committee for three year terms. Ms. Pawlitzka was re-appointed as Chair.
25. Dean Bobinski is stepping down as Dean of the University of British Columbia Faculty of Law, and her replacement will be determined later this year based on a nomination by the Canadian Council of Law Deans ("CCLD").
26. The Approval Committee is engaged in the iterative process of determining law school program compliance with the Federation's national requirement for entry to law society admission programs in Canadian common law jurisdictions (the "National Requirement"), which took effect January 2015.
27. Over the past several months, the Approval Committee's work has included:
  - a. Evaluating and making decisions on all Canadian JD programs, approving 19 programs, and providing preliminary approval for 2 programs, pending graduation of their first classes;
  - b. Finalizing the 2015 law school report form;
  - c. Developing criteria to evaluate joint programs (as joint and dual programs will be subject to the National Requirement in 2017);
  - d. Liaising with the CCLD; and
  - e. Developing a list of issues which should be considered by the National Requirement Review Committee.
28. As described above, the Approval Committee will work closely with the Review Committee, in addition to continuing with its regular mandate. It will be meeting in June 2015 to, inter alia, consider the 2015 law school reports.

National Admission Standards Project (NASP)

29. The National Admission Standards Project ("NASP") was established in 2009. At that time, the CEOs of the law societies and the Council of the Federation identified the need to develop national standards for admission to practice. The project reflects an important strategic priority identified by the Council of the Federation: the development and implementation of high, consistent and transparent national standards for the regulation of the legal profession.
30. The driving force behind national admission standards is mobility. Through the Federation's mobility agreements, members of the legal profession in Canada today enjoy unprecedented mobility between jurisdictions. Changes to the federal provincial-territorial Agreement on Internal Trade have also resulted in mobility rights for all licensed professionals and certified workers being enshrined in legislation.

31. Mobility has generated increased reflection about what the law societies do and why. With admission as a lawyer in one jurisdiction effectively opening the door to admission in all jurisdictions in Canada, mobility may make different regulatory practices difficult to justify as being in the public interest. The NASP seeks to address this concern through common and consistent standards.
32. General oversight of the project is provided by a Steering Committee comprised of:
  - (a) Don Thompson, Q.C., Executive Director, Law Society of Alberta, Chair;
  - (b) Tim McGee, Q.C., CEO, Law Society of British Columbia;
  - (c) Alan Treleaven, Director, Education and Practice, Law Society of British Columbia;
  - (d) Jeff Hirsch, Council Vice-President and President-elect and past president, Law Society of Manitoba;
  - (e) Allan Fineblit, Q.C., former CEO, Law Society of Manitoba;
  - (f) Laurie Pawlitzka, Council member and past Treasurer, Law Society of Upper Canada;
  - (g) Robert Lapper, CEO, Law Society of Upper Canada;
  - (h) Diana Miles, Executive Director, Organizational Strategy / Professional Development and Competence, Law Society of Upper Canada;
  - (i) Lise Tremblay, CEO, Barreau du Quebec;
  - (j) Bâtonnier Bernard Synnott, Barreau du Quebec;
  - (k) Darrel Pink, Executive Director, Nova Scotia Barristers' Society;
  - (l) Bâtonnière Marie-Claude Bélanger-Richard, Q.C., Federation past president and former Bâtonnière, Law Society of New Brunswick; and
  - (m) Jonathan Herman, Federation CEO.
33. The Steering Committee is supported by Frederica Wilson, Senior Director, Regulatory and Public Affairs, Stephanie Spiers, Director, Regulatory Affairs and project manager, and Daphne Keevil-Harrold, Policy Counsel.
34. The NASP's work relates to the development of a profile of the competencies required upon entry to the profession and their assessment, and developing a standard for ensuring that applicants meet the requirement to be of good character.
35. The NASP developed the National Competency Profile, a profile competency required upon entry to the profession. It has been adopted by 13 law societies subject to the development and approval of a plan for implementation, including developing an appropriate assessment mechanism.
36. The NASP continues to focus on how the National Competency Profile will be assessed. In 2014, the NASP met with ten law societies to consider a range of possible methods for assessing the competencies. It is now developing a Business Plan to provide the vision and structure for moving forward with developing a national qualifying assessment regime. It will be based on developing a defensible assessment program that will be developed and implemented in phases, with each phase building on the last. The Business Plan will also outline costs and timelines for the initiative.

37. The NASP intends to circulate the Business Plan together with a proposal for consideration, and to begin meeting with law societies in the spring of 2015.
38. It will be up to each law society to decide whether they are ready to commit to the proposed plan, and it may be that not all law societies will be ready to move forward at the same time. Law societies that commit at the outset will have the opportunity to be involved in the development process. Some law societies may decide to take a wait and watch approach, and join in at a later stage of implementation. Once a critical mass of law societies have decided to participate in the assessment plan, the technical work required to develop the assessment will begin. Development will involve law society staff from the participating jurisdictions with the relevant expertise. Law societies involved in the new assessment regime will be consulted and have opportunities to provide their input as the project progresses.
39. In addition to its work related to assessing competencies, the NASP continues to consider the development of a national Suitability to Practice / Good Character Standard through its Suitability to Practice Working Group comprised of staff from several law societies. The Law Society of Upper Canada's Sophia Sperdakos and Naomi Bussin serve on this Working Group.
40. The Suitability to Practice Working Group has considered feedback received in response to a fall 2013 consultation report on the Suitability to Practice / Good Character standard, and, based on the feedback received to date, will be circulating a further consultation report to law societies shortly.

National Discipline Standards Project (NDSP)

41. The National Discipline Standards Project ("NDSP") was launched in 2010 to develop national standards for the handling of complaints and discipline matters. After piloting 23 standards, 21 standards were included in the final National Discipline Standards. These final standards were approved on April 3, 2014 by Council for referral to the law societies for adoption and implementation by January 1, 2015. The Law Society of Upper Canada and all other law societies have now approved the standards and have agreed to participate in the implementation phase of the National Discipline Standards project.
42. On April 3, 2014 Council also approved terms of reference for a standing committee of the Federation to monitor implementation of the standards and to recommend such refinements to them as might be advisable in the future. Zeynep Onen, the Law Society's Director of Professional Responsibility, has been appointed to the standing committee.

43. The standing committee has begun considering a variety of issues related to the implementation of the standards. Most law societies provided a first progress report in early 2015, and a further report will be provided later this year. Reporting data will assist the standing committee in identifying problems with the standards and areas for fine tuning.
44. Finally, as Standard 20 requires mandatory, annual training for adjudicators and references an optional national curriculum, the Standing Committee has established an Adjudicator Training Working Group whose mandate is to make a recommendation on a national curriculum for adjudicator training and effective delivery methods. The Law Society Tribunal's David Wright has been appointed to this Working Group which first met in March 2015.

Government Relations – Submission on Bill C-44

45. The Federation monitors federal legislative initiatives to determine whether they raise any issues of concern falling within the mandate of the Federation and its members. When proposed legislation raises issues relating to such matters as protection of solicitor-client privilege, the rule of law, or the independence of the legal profession, or where there might be an impact on the regulatory functions of law societies, the Federation's Executive assesses whether it would be appropriate to make submissions to the government and perhaps seek the opportunity to appear in person before parliamentary committees reviewing the legislation.
46. Where the position that might be taken by the Federation is consistent with those it has previously taken publicly, the Executive authorizes the submissions. In the event that a legislative initiative raises novel concerns, the Executive seeks the approval of Council and the views of the law societies before taking any position.
47. In November 2014 the Executive approved submissions regarding Bill C-44, An Act to Amend the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act and other Acts. The Federation's submissions related to concerns that the proposed amendments could lead to situations in which a person who has been detained on the basis of confidential human source information may not know the basis for detention and may be denied the right to effective counsel. The Federation's submissions were sent to the Standing Committee on Public Safety and National Security. As the proposed legislation was approved by the House of Commons without change, referred to the Senate earlier this year, and subsequently referred to the Senate Standing Committee on National Security and Defense, the Executive has renewed the Federation's submission before this Senate committee.

CanLII REPORT

48. The Federation is the sole member of the Canadian Legal Information Institute (CanLII), which is financed by a separate membership levy paid through the Federation. CanLII President and CEO Colin Lachance reported on CanLII's activities and plans to Federation Council.
49. As announced in February, Mr. Lachance will be stepping down as President and CEO of CanLII effective April 30, 2015. A national search to find the next CanLII leader is ongoing.

TAB 12.1

INFORMATION*INTERIM REPORT*MENTORING AND ADVISORY SERVICES PROPOSAL TASK FORCE*Issue under Consideration

2. The Task Force is mandated to consider the nature of current mentoring and advisory services programs and possible initiatives for enhancing services, while addressing a number of factors, including the financial consequences of various approaches.

Rationale

3. The components of the 2011-2015 strategic plan relating to post-licensing competence included as one element of its work plan “developing initiatives to institutionalize mentoring, advisor and other support services for lawyers and paralegals.”
4. The Task Force was established in November 2013 to consider issues that could guide the realization of this component of the strategic plan. Other key elements of the post-licensing competence priority put in place over the last four years have enabled the discussion of advisory initiatives to be more coherently situated within the Law Society’s competence mandate.

Key Issues and Considerations

5. There are currently numerous mentoring programs offered by legal organizations and the Law Society to address a variety of licensee needs. In general, however, they do not reflect a coherent developmental framework.
6. In considering the development of enhanced mentoring and advisory initiatives the Task Force has determined that it is essential to consider,
  - a. specific goals and objectives;
  - b. the fundamental components of any initiative, including measurements of success;
  - c. whether the initiative should be directed at mentoring for career networking, advisory services for addressing substantive file issues, coaching with a view to longer term professional development or some combination;
  - d. the intended audience/participants and relevant stakeholder input;

- e. the appropriate advisor/mentor/coach profiles, including attention to, and training for, cultural competence;

DISCUSSION

Background

7. The Task Force's mandate has included considering mentoring initiatives in place in Ontario and in other jurisdictions. The Task Force has examined reports and information on mentoring done over a number of years on this subject. TAB 12.1.1: Mentoring Programs for Regulated Professionals looks at international programs for lawyers and other professions. The Task Force has also reviewed preliminary information on mentoring programs for lawyers and paralegals in Ontario. The information does not provide an exhaustive survey of initiatives and the number and nature of programs vary over time, with some ending or becoming inactive and others beginning. The information has been useful to highlight the kinds of programs that exist or have existed. The Task Force continues to update its information.
8. In considering the information, the Task Force has noted that with respect to international programs in law or programs in other professions, their nature and profile must be analyzed with an understanding of their specific context. For example, some are developed in jurisdictions where pre-licensing experiential training requirements are minimal. Programs are not identical, have different goals, occur at different points in professionals' careers and are in some cases mandatory, in others voluntary and in still others a mixture. In the Ontario context, programs offered by legal organizations are diverse and designed in the context of the organizations' needs, budget and mandate.
9. The information has been helpful to enable the Task Force to see a snapshot of the mentoring landscape and to reflect on interesting and often innovative approaches. At the same time, the Task Force has concluded that to frame the development of a broad reaching initiative in Ontario, it will be more useful to consider the specific factors that that should underlie the initiative in the Ontario context. In its view, based on its observations and research to date, the following factors should play a role in the development of the Task Force's ultimate proposal:

- a. Mentoring and advisory services are linked to a post-licensing preventive competence strategy that may enhance practices and assist practitioners to avoid the Law Society's discipline or other conduct streams.
- b. While "mentoring," as used in the traditional sense to mean networking and general career advice is a valuable tool, what is better described as an advisory and coaching program may more effectively address licensee needs.
- c. A well-focused system of advisor and coaching services, designed to support the needs of lawyers and paralegals who might otherwise not have practical guidance from experienced colleagues, may address a gap in the professional development of such legal practitioners.
- d. Access to information on substantive law and practice management to assist legal practitioners has never been more readily available and easier to access. At the same time, however, sole and small firm practitioners may lack the contacts and advisors who can assist them to distill the wealth of information, apply it most effectively and develop advising relationships that can become part of their professional development plan.
- e. The usefulness of a coherent advisory services initiative would be in its ability to support the needs of those lawyers and paralegals to whom services are directed in completion of legal tasks, including daily management of client files, substantive and procedural issues relating to those files and practice management obligations.
- f. Any proposal the Law Society puts forward must have articulated goals and be capable of evaluation and measurement to determine,
  - i. its progress;
  - ii. whether its goals are being met;
  - iii. whether it is focusing on those most likely to benefit from it;
  - iv. the seriousness and commitment of those who are using it;
  - v. the effectiveness of the advisors, including assessing their cultural competence; and
  - vi. whether it has the appropriate scope.
- g. Any discussion of an advisory services initiative with which the Law Society is to be involved must continue to come within its strategic priorities.

- h. Any discussion of an advisory services initiative with which the Law Society is to be involved must reflect a consideration of immediate and long term financial implications.

Next Steps

- 10. The Task Force will continue to consider the factors set out above in the context of the Law Society's strategic priority development, with a view to developing a proposal for Convocation's consideration for an appropriate advisory and coaching service initiative.

April 2013

This paper examines a variety of mandatory and optional mentoring programs that are provided to lawyers by their regulatory bodies and bar associations outside Canada, including the Hong Kong and Singapore Law Societies, U.S. State Courts, and the bar associations in Australia, New Zealand, and in England and Wales. For comparison purposes, the paper also includes a brief outline of the mandatory and optional mentoring programs developed by provincial and national organizations in Canada that are responsible for regulating the professions of accountancy, architecture, engineering, and medicine.

1. LAW

United States of America

a) Mandatory Programs

In Georgia, Kentucky, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, and Utah, new lawyers are required to participate in a prescribed mentoring program. The programs are similar to the Law Society of Upper Canada's articling program, in that they are required as a condition of licensing or registration and the regulator prescribes learning objectives and other rules for the mentoring relationship.

Georgia was the first jurisdiction to make mentoring mandatory. Its "Transition into Practice Program" took effect on January 1, 2006 and it has since become a mentoring model for the other mandatory states. It combines mentoring with CLE in that the CLE component lays the groundwork for and supports the mentoring component.

The program offers three types of mentoring:

1. If a lawyer practises in a firm or organizational setting, s/he will have an "inside mentor" from that practice.
2. If the new lawyer does not practise with other lawyers (for instance, is a sole practitioner) s/he will have an "outside mentor" – someone who works outside of the new lawyer's office.
3. Group mentoring is available when the new lawyer is unemployed or does not work in a legal setting. Some firms, government agencies, and other organizations have developed their own "Master Mentoring Plans" that they use for all newly admitted attorneys subject to the Transition into Law Program. If an employer has such a plan, the mentor and mentee do not need to create and submit a written mentoring plan.

The only mentoring activity that new lawyers must complete is the Advocacy Experience and only if they appear as sole or lead counsel in Georgia's Superior or State Courts in a contested civil case or criminal trial. Mentoring activities and experiences can be created to best suit the needs and circumstances of the mentor and the mentee but must include the following:

1. Regular contact and meetings between the mentor and new lawyer
2. Continuing discussions between the mentor and new lawyer on at least the following topics: a) ethics and professionalism; b) relationships with clients, other lawyers (both in and outside the firm), the judiciary and the public, including unrepresented parties; c) professional work habits, organizational skills and practice management; d) economics

- of practising law in the relevant practice setting; e) responsibility and opportunities for pro bono work, Bar activities, and community service
- 3. Introduction to the local legal community
- 4. Specific planning for professional development and continuing legal education in and outside the firm
- 5. Periodic evaluation of the mentor-new lawyer relationship

If the lawyer fails to complete the mentoring program within one year, s/he must complete an approved Rehabilitation Plan or attend a session of the State Bar's Ethics School.

The results of a telephone survey, conducted by the Schapiro Research Group at one-year intervals during Georgia's two-year Pilot Project, showed that approximately 85% of both the mentors and the new lawyers rated the Pilot Project as satisfactory in varying degrees. The Committee on the Standards of the Profession noted that on professionalism measures, such as dealing with clients, the new lawyer's self-perceptions of their skills matched the perceptions of their mentors. Additionally, "the beginning lawyers' rating of their ability to handle the ethical aspects of law practice increased consistently from the baseline over the course of the Pilot Project. This was also true for dealing with other lawyers, judges, and court personnel." The Schapiro Survey also revealed that new lawyers' self-perceptions were positive and career satisfaction increased over the course of the Pilot Project. At the end of the second year, "60% of the group rated themselves "very satisfied with their legal careers." ("Best Practices for Legal Education: Mentoring Programs in the U.S.", <http://bestpracticeslegaled.albanylawblogs.org/2011/01/31mentoring-programs-in-the-u-s/>)

Utah's New Lawyer Training Program (NLTP) is very similar to the Georgia program and includes the same three kinds of mentoring. However, Utah provides fewer guidelines for mandatory activities, e.g. working with clients is mandatory, while negotiation is elective. For both mandatory and elective subjects, new lawyers have a variety of activities that they either must or may complete. After the mentor and new lawyer develop a plan, they must submit it for approval by the NLTP program administrator and the New Lawyer Training Committee. Once the plan is approved, the new lawyer has 12 months to complete the NLTP.

The Oregon State Bar launched the New Lawyer Mentoring Program (NLMP) for incoming bar members in May of 2011. This mandatory program formalizes a process that for many decades took place organically, through connections forged at law firms and other close-knit bar communities. The NLMP offers new bar members one-on-one guidance on the elements of a highly competent practice, while promoting professionalism, civility and collegiality.

The program is loosely modeled on programs in Georgia and Utah, which have received accolades for giving all new bar members meaningful access to experienced lawyers and a well-developed mentoring program in their first year. The Oregon model emphasizes a flexible approach in which mentors and new lawyers take the core curriculum and shape it to best meet the needs of the new lawyer.

Pilot/Proposed Mandatory Mentoring Programs

The Supreme Court of South Carolina ordered a pilot mandatory mentoring program for all newly admitted lawyers, which ran through 2012 and is being evaluated. The pilot required one-on-one mentoring for every new lawyer on nine separate areas important to a successful, ethical practice. Law firms could be certified to mentor their own new associates. The program had to be completed within 12 months and mentees had to certify completion. New lawyers were expected to find their own mentors. Mentors received 2 hours of CLE credit.

The Wyoming Bar has proposed a New Lawyer Mentoring Program for all newly admitted lawyers. Mentors who complete the plan with at least one mentored new lawyer will receive an annual maximum of 15 hours of CLE, including one ethics hour.

b) Optional Programs

To date, optional programs for new and/or less experienced lawyers have been established by state bars in 20 U.S. states. For example, in the Arizona Bar Association's One-to-One Mentor Program, experienced lawyers answer substantive and procedural questions from mentees either over the telephone or in person.

The Connecticut Bar Association provides every newly admitted lawyer with access to an experienced member of the Bar, who has volunteered to provide guidance, direction, and advice for the new lawyer's first year of practice. The Texas Bar Association offers a similar program. Every other month, a group meeting of all participants takes place with programming planned around one or more specific mentoring topics. During alternate months, mentors and mentees meet in small groups or one-on-one.

Pilot Optional Mentoring Programs

Colorado is piloting an optional new member program in which the executive director of the Bar reviews applications and facilitates a match. Upon completion of the program, both the mentor and mentee are awarded 15 hours of CLE credit.

The Maryland Court of Appeals has adopted a pilot optional mentoring program for newly admitted applicants. The program is administered by the Court through the Executive Director of the Commission on Professionalism. The new law applicants and mentors select activities and topics from a Mentoring Plan, which guides their meetings throughout the course of a one-year mentoring term. Mentors and new applicants meet in-person at least 6 times.

The Mississippi Bar's Professionalism Committee is in the initial stages of establishing a pilot mentoring program for new applicants. The committee, in cooperation with both Mississippi law schools, is assigning applicants to participate in the program.

The Young Lawyer's Division (YLD) of the South Dakota Bar will choose mentors to participate in the program on an optional basis. Although the goal is that the mentor/mentee relationship will be indefinite, mentors and mentees are entitled to end their relationship at any time. The YLD requires mentors to sign and submit an agreement before they contact their mentees.

The Alabama Bar has discontinued its mentoring program. The program had matched 2 volunteer mentors with 8 mentees, each with fewer than 5 years as members of the Alabama Bar.

Note: The National Legal Mentoring Consortium consists of administrators and contributors of mentoring programs sponsored by law schools, Bar associations, State supreme courts, law firms, and other organizations. The Consortium is supported by the Nelson Mullins Riley & Scarborough Center on Professionalism at the University of South Carolina School of Law. The purposes of the Consortium are

- to encourage mentoring in the legal profession
- to provide a venue for the exchange of ideas related to mentoring in the legal profession
- to provide resources to aid in the successful creation and operation of mentoring initiatives within law firms, Bar organizations, law schools, courts, and other entities within the legal profession

The Consortium's online list of state-level mentoring programs for mostly new lawyers is set out in Appendix A (p. 10).

Australia

Law Society-sponsored mentoring programs in Australia include the following:

1. The Law Institute Victoria (<http://www.liv.asn.au/For-Lawyers/Careers-Centre/LIV-Mentoring-Program>) offers an optional Mentoring Program that links experienced legal practitioners with those seeking professional development, support or guidance. Mentees can view the list of potential mentors on the Law Institute's online Mentor Directory.
2. The Law Society of New South Wales launched an optional Women's Mentoring Program in 2012. Female members of the Law Society and 10-15 years post-admission submitted applications to be matched with more senior and experienced members. There were 42 applications from mentees and only 25 mentors. Applications for the 2013/14 program opens in July 2013.
3. The Law Society of Western Australia (<http://www.lawsocietywa.asn.au>) offers an optional mentoring program for Aboriginal or Torres Strait Islander law students. They encourage lawyers who are members of those groups to apply to be mentors. Mentors must participate in a 2-hour training session focussing on the skills necessary to develop a mentoring relationship.
4. The Family Law Committee of the Law Society of Australian Capital Territory (<http://www.lawsocact.asn.au/content/home2/index.asp>) has offered an optional mentoring program for family lawyers since 2005. The program serves a wide range of practitioners in all areas of the territory. Each paired mentor and mentee normally work together for 2 or 3 years. Materials and general guidelines are provided to participants but the mentor and mentee agree at the outset what the role the mentor is to take, the mode and frequency of contact between the mentee and mentor, the goals, and the duration of the mentoring relationship.

England and Wales

The Law Society of England and Wales' Law Society Diversity Access Scheme, which has been in operation since 2004, provides full scholarships for the Legal Practice Course (LPC) to entrants to the solicitors' profession who also face exceptional, social, educational, financial or personal obstacles to qualification.

This optional program is aimed at boosting social mobility and making the legal profession more accessible to those from diverse backgrounds who are financially disadvantaged. The students receive insights into working in certain areas of law as well as support and advice on obtaining a training contract, flexible working, paralegal work, and issues for mature/disabled students.

Mentors sign up to a minimum of 12 months (October to September) and complete a detailed application form on the area(s) where they are able to offer assistance; mentees do the same. Both mentors and mentees are issued detailed mentoring guidelines outlining the mentoring process, to ensure that both have a clear understanding and are then matched by areas of experience and specialism, as opposed to by geographical location.

All mentors must attend a free half-day training session in order to be able to participate in the scheme. It is accredited with 3.5 CPD hours and mentors are required to sign the registration form on the day to claim the allocated hours.

The Law Society has also developed an Advocacy Section to provide solicitor advocates with optional mentoring, training, and networking opportunities at the circuit and national level. It was developed for the 5,200 solicitors who have qualified as higher court advocates in either criminal or civil jurisdictions. The objective of the new service is to equip solicitors with the necessary skills and confidence to appear in the courts. In the first half of 2012, the section focused on the criminal solicitor advocates, as their needs were considered the most acute. The Law Society also wanted to help them prepare for the introduction of the new Quality Assurance Scheme for Advocates assessment regime. The service will also cater to the needs of advocates at the magistrates' and county court levels, as well as civil, family, and children advocates.

Ireland

The Law Society of Ireland launched a new optional Mentor Support Programme in 2012. Its goal is to provide support to newly qualified solicitors by putting them in touch with more senior colleagues who provide guidance based on their own experience. The program was designed to help new solicitors, qualified for fewer than three years, to build their confidence and knowledge about the legal profession and further develop their professional skills. The programme is being provided on a pilot basis initially, with a limited number of mentors. If a suitable match is made, the mentor and new solicitor work together over a 12-month period to confidentially discuss issues by face-to-face meetings, telephone, and/or e-mail. A guide to the new program, and the new solicitor application form and agreement are provided on the members' area of the "support services" section of the Law Society's website.

New Zealand

The New Zealand Bar Association offers an optional Mentoring Programme designed to help new members and less experienced practitioners receive support and guidance in their professional development from a senior member of the Association.

The Bar Association states on its website (<http://www.nzBar.org.nz/MainMenu>) that “[T]he Mentoring Programme is an informal arrangement that is made between a mentor and mentee.” The New Zealand Law Society Council, of which the Bar Association is a member, describes the approach as follows: “[T]here are far too many variables to consider a “one size fits all” approach. For that reason the aim of the programme is to be flexible in a way that allows a mentee to develop at a comfortable pace...the program is not a substitute for continuing legal education or intended as a junioring scheme. Nor is it a ‘friends panel.’ Essentially, the mentor is someone who can provide a helpful ‘sounding board’ for the mentee in advancing his/her professional development.”

Singapore

The Law Society of Singapore offers an optional PracMentor program under which young lawyers may seek guidance and advice from a senior volunteer lawyer on issues in the following practice areas: administrative and constitutional law; arbitration; banking; bankruptcy; insolvency and judicial management; civil procedure; construction; conveyancing; corporate; criminal; defamation; equity and trusts; evidence; family law; intellectual property; international business transactions; labour and employment; personal injury claims; shipping and admiralty; tax; probate and wills. To seek guidance, lawyers call a staff member whose name and number appears on the Law Society’s website (<http://www.lawsociety.org.sg/>)

The Law Society also runs two optional mentoring programs for lawyers who have started their own practice. Under the Practice Consult scheme, practitioners with queries on legal practice management issues such as practice risk management, business development and planning, human resources and personnel management, and client relationships and communication may seek assistance from a legal practice management consultant. The cost of the first hour of consultation is borne by the Society. Under the Mentoring Scheme for Small Firms, proprietors of small law practices may seek the mentorship of senior lawyers on practice management issues. Mentorship is provided on an ex gratia basis.

2. OTHER PROFESSIONAL ENVIRONMENTS

A. Accounting

CMA Ontario (<http://www.cmaontario.org/Home.aspx>) requires new Consulting Certified Management Accountants who offer Compilation, Financial Statement Preparation, and/or Personal or Corporate Taxation services, to engage a CMA Ontario approved mentor. New CMA’s receive details about the mandatory mentoring program when they receive their Practice Registration Form. The Consulting CMA must engage a mentor for a minimum of 6 months. At the end of that period, the mentor issues a report to the Society indicating any strengths or weaknesses in the management of the member’s practice. If the Society’s practice standards have not been met, the mentoring period is extended. In geographic regions where a CMA mentor is not available, the Society establishes a list of acceptable non-CMA licensed public accountants. The mentor is required to review all engagements undertaken by the member prior to any release to a client.

The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Alberta (ICAA) offers a Foreign Trained CAs Mentoring Program designed to facilitate the exchange of knowledge from more experienced CAs to less experienced CAs and registered CA students. It matches CA mentors with foreign-trained professionals who are either internationally trained and are interested in earning, or in the process of earning, their CA designation, or foreign-trained CAs very early in their careers. The duration of the program is one year and the focus is on soft skills, workplace/employment skills, and cultural norms and expectations. Mentors do not necessarily have to possess a background similar to that of the mentee.

The ICAA intends to expand the mentorship program to the wider CA and CA student community. To assist their mentors and mentees, the ICAA adapted the Association of Professional Engineers and Geoscientists of Alberta's (APEGA) mentorship handbook, which includes worksheets and guidelines. The program's guiding principles are set out on the ICAA website: <https://www.albertacas.ca/ServicesforCAs/MentorshipProgram>

B. Architecture

Canadian architecture graduates are required to secure a mentor during their internship with the Intern Architect Program (IAP) as a condition of licensure. The IAP is a national mandatory program that documents and evaluates internship activities, provides structure to the transition between education and registration, and encourages involvement of practitioners in the development of new architects. The IAP was established by the Committee of Canadian Architectural Councils \(CCAC\), which is composed of representatives from each of the ten provincial associations of architects.

Mentors, who must be Ontario Architects, are required to meet with their interns two or three times a year, review their progress, and offer constructive advice. The OAA notes that every year, interns delay licensure because they have difficulty finding a mentor. Mentors are eligible to claim up to six Continuing Education hours per cycle.

The OAA's Young Architects and Interns Forums are considering the introduction of supplemental and optional forms of mentorship that could be offered in addition to the existing mandatory system. Forms of mentorship could include collaborative design projects for not-for-profits, design charettes (group problem-solving activities) and/or community build projects.

C. Engineering

Professional Engineers Ontario (PEO), the licensing and regulating body for engineers in the province, offers the PEO Mentorship Program (<http://www.peop.on.ca/Program/mentorship.html>), which links Engineering Interns with Professional Engineers licensed with PEO to provide guidance and support as the interns progress toward professional licensure status. The program is optional and not all PEO Chapters participate in it.

Women in Engineering Mentoring Initiative (WEMI) is an initiative of the Ministry of the Environment and supported by partner ministries and organizations. Launched in 2011, WEMI provides mentoring and guidance to women engineering students in their final year of study by partnering them with women engineers working across the Ontario Public Service. It is a virtual mentoring program, making it flexible and accessible to mentors and mentees across Ontario. Mentors and mentees connect at least six times during the course of the program, which follows the academic year from September to May. It is designed as an optional learning and development opportunity for women engineering students in their final year of study and women engineers in the Ontario Public Service (OPS). Participants are encouraged to share insights and experiences through formal and informal meetings and dialogue.

D. Medicine

The College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario (CPSO) defines “Mentor” as a member of the CPSO who serves to guide the physician through the health care system in Ontario.” The mentor’s role is to provide advice on how to deal with clinical and other practice concerns. Mentors do not have the responsibilities of supervisors, who are required to provide supervision reports to the CPSO, although mentors may sometimes augment supervision arrangements. Some residencies include a mentoring component.

In 2007, an e-Mentorship Program was launched by the Hamilton-based de Souza Institute (http://fhsson.mcmaster.ca/apnment/index.php?option=com\_content&view=article&id=51) with funding from the Ontario Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care Inter-professional Coaching and Mentorship Fund. The initial program focused on the mentorship needs of oncology advanced practice nurses in Ontario and was led by the Mentorship Sub-Committee of Cancer Care Ontario's Advanced Practice Nursing Community of Practice in partnership with the School of Nursing at McMaster University. During the first year of the program, a rigorous evaluation demonstrated high participant satisfaction with program services and a positive impact on mentee and mentor job satisfaction and role implementation.

In September 2008, the de Souza Institute collaborated with Cancer Care Ontario and McMaster University to become a formal partner and the primary funder of the Oncology Advanced Practice Nurse Inter-professional e-Mentorship Program.

The program has now expanded to provide career development and mentorship services to all nurses in the province involved in cancer care. In 2009, a Steering Committee involving nurses and healthcare leaders from a variety of sectors led the completion of a comprehensive needs assessment to inform the development of the expanded program. The program is located at the Juravinski Cancer Centre in Hamilton, Ontario.

Participants attend an in-person or online career development workshop to help them determine what their career and professional development needs are. Mentors and mentees use e-mail, Skype, online discussions, videoconferencing, and teleconferencing to communicate across Canada.

Mandatory

Status: Ongoing

Type: Individual New Lawyer Mentoring Program

The transition into law program assists beginning lawyers with their transition from student to professional. The educational program combines a mentoring component with a CLE component. It is mandatory for any newly admitted active member of the State Bar of Georgia admitted after June 30, 2005.

Idaho

http://isb.idaho.gov/member\_services/mentorprogram.html

Optional

Status: Ongoing

Type: Individual New Lawyer Assistance

The program assists new lawyers in the transition from law school to a successful new practice. Mentees are paired with an experienced lawyer in their local community who has agreed to respond to general questions, give suggestions, and offer guidance about the practical aspects of practicing law.

Illinois

<http://www.isba.org/mentorcenter/>

Optional

Status: Ongoing

Type: Individual New Lawyer Assistance

The ISBA offers a Commission-Approved Mentoring Program. In this year-long mentoring program, the ISBA uses the Commission developed structured curriculum which pairs experienced lawyers with new lawyers to provide guidance during the first year of practice. Upon successful completion of the curriculum, both the mentor and mentee will be eligible to receive 6 hours of PMCLE credit.

Indiana

<http://www.inBar.org/ISBALinks/MentorMatch/tabid/382/Default.aspx>

Optional

Status: Ongoing

Type: Individual New Lawyer Mentoring Program

The ISBA will help locate a mentor from their database or new attorneys can find a mentor on their own. Once mentees have a mentor, they schedule their first meeting they submit the "Mentoring Agreement" to the ISBA. Once the individual curriculum is designed for the program to receive your CLE/Ethics/APC Credits, all the features of the program and the curriculum can easily be downloaded from the ISBA website. The ISBA gives some materials to read for the program. Lastly, when the necessary 6 hours of mentoring time are completed and the mentor and mentee have concluded all four quarters of time and discussion, they can submit the Certificate of Completion signed by the mentor and mentee to receive the appropriate accreditation.

Kentucky

<http://www.kyBar.org/>

Mandatory

Status: Pilot

Type: Individual New Lawyer Mentoring Program

The Kentucky New Lawyer Pilot Program assists beginning lawyers in their transition from student to professional. The main goal of the program is to determine whether a mandatory uniform mentoring program is appropriate and practical to all types of legal practice.

Louisiana

<http://www.lsba.org/Mentoring/Mentoring.asp>

Optional

Status: Ongoing

Type: Informal Question/ Answer Assistance Via an Internet Based Program

The program enables Bar members to seek advice and discuss topics including: (1) practice and law office management related issues; (2) issues involving such matters as personnel, escrow or other accounts; (3) substantive areas of law and related procedural issues; (4) appropriate and professional conduct and how to deal with inappropriate conduct; and (5) the importance and means of being involved in Bar and community activities and in developing a support network for a lawyer's practice. The purpose of the mentoring relationship is to provide counseling, guidance and an open atmosphere for learning.

Maryland

<http://mdcourts.gov/professionalism/mentoringprogram.html>

Optional

Status: Pilot

Type: Individual New Lawyer Mentoring Program

The Court of Appeals has adopted a pilot mentoring program for newly admitted Maryland attorneys. The pilot program is administered by the Court through the Executive Director of the Commission on Professionalism. New admittees and mentors select activities and topics from a Mentoring Plan, which guides their meetings throughout the course of a one-year mentoring term. Mentors and new admittees meet in-person at least six times, during which they will engage in various professional activities.

Massachusetts

<http://www.massBar.org/for-attorneys/mentor-program>

Status: Ongoing

Type: Informal Question/ Answer Assistance Via Telephone

The program offers Massachusetts Bar Association members the opportunity to speak with an experienced attorney for advice. Mentors are MBA members who are knowledgeable practitioners, in good standing, have practiced law for more than seven years and have volunteered to advise other attorneys on selected legal topics.

Mississippi

Optional

Status: Ongoing

Type: Individual New Lawyer Mentoring Program

Practicing law is a very complex profession. Through The Missouri Bar Mentoring Program you can regularly meet and talk with a lawyer who will answer your questions or help you find the answers, guide you, and ultimately help you make decisions that may affect your life for years to come.

Nebraska

Nevada

MandatoryStatus: OngoingType: Individual New Lawyer Mentoring Program*

All newly admitted members of the State Bar of Nevada must participate in "Transitioning into Practice" unless exempt or deferred. New lawyers must enroll in the TIP program by filing the enrollment form within four weeks after admission to the Bar. Unless otherwise arranged, all new lawyers will begin the next available program cycle following their admission to the Bar. There are three ways that mentors will be identified for new lawyers. If a newly admitted lawyer is hired by a firm or organization, their employer may assign a senior associate to serve as their mentor. The second option is for a new lawyer to select a mentor from the published list of Supreme Court-appointed mentors or seek out a respected member of the Bar and ask if they are willing to serve as a mentor (in this latter instance, the Mentor will be provisionally approved pending their appointment by the Supreme Court). In the event that a new lawyer's choice of Mentor is not available, the Bar will match the new attorney with a mentor based principally on geographical and practice area.

New Hampshire<http://www.nhBar.org/uploads/pdf/MentorProgramBooklet.pdf>OptionalStatus: OngoingType: Individual New Lawyer Mentoring Program

Principle goals of the program are to promote professional development and provide assistance regarding ethical, practical and professional issues and concerns; helping support lawyers with their transition into the New Hampshire legal community, and promoting positive relationships among members of the Bar Association. Mentors and mentees are matched by the program.

New Jersey<http://www.njsba.com/about/news-archives/archived-press-releases/345.html>OptionalStatus: OngoingType: Individual New Lawyer Mentoring Program

Mentors and mentees can obtain applications to be a mentor or a protégé online. Mentors must have at least 15 years of practical experience and 10 years in the New Jersey Bar to serve as a mentor.

New Mexico<http://www.nmBar.org/Attorneys/Mentorship/mentorship.html>MandatoryStatus: OngoingType: Individual New Lawyer Mentoring Program

The Bridge the Gap Mentorship Program was approved by the New Mexico Supreme Court, through NMRA 24-110. Bridge the Gap joins new attorneys, who have recently been admitted to practice, with experienced attorneys who serve as mentors for a twelve-month period. Mentors and new lawyers meet in person a minimum of seven times a year to discuss the practice of law and work on activities they choose from a mentoring plan.

North Carolina<http://www.ncBar.org/about/ncba-mentorship-program.aspx>OptionalStatus: OngoingType: Individual New Lawyer Mentoring Program

The goal of the program is to help the entire legal profession by assisting young lawyers develop good character, competence, and a deeper appreciation for the responsibilities of the profession. The program offers two distinct mentoring opportunities. The first is the more traditional approach in which a new lawyer and a more experienced lawyer develop an ongoing relationship, wherein the mentor guides the mentee through the many pitfalls associated with early practice. The second branch of the program is the situational mentoring initiative.

Ohio<http://www.sconet.state.oh.us/AttySvcs/mentoring/default.asp>Optional

Type: Individual New Lawyer Mentoring Program

The program links experienced attorneys with new lawyers who have recently been admitted to the practice of law. Mentors and new lawyers meet in person six times during the course of a year to discuss topics and engage in activities they select from a mentoring plan. Upon completion of the program, mentors receive CLE credit and new lawyers receive required new lawyer training credit.

Oklahoma

Status: Ongoing

Type: Group/ Individual/ Transitional Lawyer Mentoring Program

The program attempts to match new attorneys with mentors based on criteria for compatibility. It utilizes group mentoring, individual mentoring and also limited mentoring and is designed not only for new attorneys but also for experienced attorneys who may be venturing into a new area of the law. The program started as a pilot program in 2007 with plans to expand to a full program in 2008.

Oregon

<http://www.osBar.org/programs/mentoring>

Mandatory

Status: Ongoing

Type: Individual New Lawyer Mentoring Program

The New Lawyer Mentoring Program (launched for incoming Bar members in May of 2011) formalizes a process that for many decades took place organically, through connections forged at law firms and other close-knit Bar communities. As the Oregon Bar has grown, the process of introducing new lawyers to the legal community, and guiding them through the transition to law practice, has grown more amorphous. The NLMP offers new Bar members one-on-one guidance on elements of a highly competent practice, while promoting the professionalism, civility and collegiality that make Oregon among the best places in the country to practice law. The program is loosely modeled on programs in Georgia and Utah, which have received accolades for giving all new Bar members meaningful access to experienced lawyers and a well-developed mentoring program in their first year. The Oregon model emphasizes a flexible approach in which mentors and new lawyers take the core curriculum and shape it to best meet the needs of the new lawyer.

South Carolina

<http://www.sccourts.org/Bar/PilotMentoringProgram.htm>

Mandatory

Type: Individual New Lawyer Mentoring Program

The Supreme Court of South Carolina has ordered a pilot mandatory mentoring program for all newly admitted lawyers. The pilot program will run through 2012 and will be evaluated at that time for permanent adoption. The pilot program requires one on one or group mentoring for every new lawyer on nine separate areas important to successful, ethical practice. Law firms can be certified to mentor their own new associates. The program must be completed within 12 months and mentees must certify completion. New lawyers are expected to find their own mentors. Mentors receive 2 hours of CLE credit. Mentors also must not have a history of grievances.

South Dakota

Optional

Status: Pilot

Type: Individual New Lawyer Mentoring Program

Mentors chosen by the YLD participate in the program on an optional basis. Although the goal is that the mentor/mentee relationship will be indefinite, mentors and mentees are entitled to end their relationship at any time. They YLD must receive the signed mentor agreement before mentors are able to contact their mentees.

Tennessee

<http://www.tba.org/programs/mentoring-program>

OptionalStatus: OngoingType: Individual New Lawyer Mentoring Program

During the mentoring experience, lawyers would be able to explore issues of professionalism, client and practice management, legal ethics, professional and leadership development, life balance and well-being, and pro bono/charitable work. The mentoring pair is required to complete exercises associated with the proposed eight core topics and any number of elective topics in its plan. Progress reports would be filed with the TBA, with CLE credit to be awarded at the completion of the program.

Texashttp://www.texasBar.com/AM/PrinterTemplate.cfm?Section=Transition\_to\_PracticeOptionalStatus: OngoingType: Individual New Lawyer Mentoring Program

The program is targeted to lawyers in their first several years of licensure. Newly-licensed lawyers are matched with more experienced attorneys who volunteer to participate in the project. Mentoring covers many areas, including law practice management, effective client representation, pro bono opportunities, career development, and other aspects of successfully practicing law. Every other month, a group meeting of all participants takes place with programming planned around one or more specific mentoring topics. During alternate months, mentors and mentees meet in small groups or one-on-one.

Utah<http://www.utahBar.org/nltp/Welcome.html>MandatoryStatus: OngoingType: Individual New Lawyer Mentoring Program

The program matches new lawyers with more experienced lawyers for training during their first year of practice in professionalism, ethics, and civility; to assist new lawyers in acquiring the practical skills and judgment necessary to practice in a highly competent manner; and to provide a means for all Utah attorneys to learn the importance of organizational mentoring, including the building of developmental networks and long-term, multiple mentoring relationships. Lawyers newly admitted to the Bar with an active license are required to complete the program their first year of practice in Utah. The requirement for judicial law clerks is deferred until completion of the clerkship.

Vermont<https://www.vtBar.org/FOR%20ATTORNEYS/Mentorship%20Program/What%20is%20the%20Mentor%20Program.a>SDXOptionalStatus: OngoingType: Individual Mentor Matching Assistance

The VBA Mentoring Program provides VBA members a way to seek and receive advice on, and to discuss, a wide range of general issues in the practice of law. These issues include, but are not limited to, substantive law questions, attorney-client communications, law office management, and professional ethics. The purpose of the program is to provide counseling, guidance, and an open atmosphere for learning and developing professional skills.

Wyoming<http://www.wyomingBar.org/>MandatoryStatus: ProposedType: Individual Mentor Matching Assistance

All new lawyers admitted to practice law in Wyoming on active status must timely complete the requirements of the NLMP unless otherwise specified in these Rules. Mentors who successfully complete the NLMP Plan with at least one mentored new lawyer will receive an annual maximum of 15 hours of CLE, which includes one ethics hour.

FOR INFORMATION*COMPLIANCE BASED, ENTITY REGULATION

44. Further to its report to January 2015 Convocation, the Committee provides this status report on the development of a framework for compliance based, entity regulation at the Law Society.
45. As reported in January, on February 27, 2014, Convocation approved the development of a framework for the regulation of firms using a compliance based approach but has not yet determined a specific direction on the subject. The framework is being prepared for the consideration of Convocation. The Professional Regulation Committee has directed Law Society staff to develop models for its consideration.
46. A compliance-based, entity approach to professional regulation is characterized by the following:
  - a. acting proactively in addressing issues of public protection and the quality of services provided to the public;
  - b. enhancing public protection and public confidence in the Law Society and licensees by focusing on management principles and systems to improve practise and controlling practise management risks;
  - c. regulating more effectively through firm regulation in addition to regulation of individuals;
  - d. enhancing the autonomy of licensees and firms; and
  - e. designing changes that are efficient and not costly to the extent that is possible.
47. Entity regulation can be defined as the regulation of legal services provided by any entity, including a law firm. Currently law firms are the only type of entity that is permitted by the Law Society. Consequently, only law firms would be regulated unless any other type of entity were permitted by the Law Society.
48. In a compliance based model, the regulator sets out expected outcomes and licensees have flexibility in how they meet those objectives. The Law Society currently engages in some compliance based activities but the regulatory process is generally reactive, rules based, and focussed on the individual licensee.

49. The following advantages of entity-based compliance regulation have been identified:
- a. Entity regulation would permit a more proactive, compliance based approach for firms. In other jurisdictions, compliance based regulation has been found to have a significant positive effect on the number of complaints received about a firm and its licensees. Establishing regulatory objectives for entities may improve practice and therefore better protect clients and the public interest.
  - b. Entity regulation may enhance the Law Society's ability to respond to complaints, through systems that could, for example, provide for a designated person to respond to the Law Society or ensure that a response is obtained; a designated person responsible for trust accounting matters and for ensuring that the firm's record-keeping is current; a process where the Law Society provides notification to the firm that one of its licensees is under investigation; and addressing issues that are firm level, for example, lack of supervision, advertising or conflicts issues.
50. Entity regulation may also be a more effective response for regulation of entities that provide legal services both within and outside of Ontario.
51. Some of the issues being considered by the Committee, which are part of regulatory systems in other jurisdictions, are described in greater detail in this report are as follows:
- a. the role of a "Legal Director";
  - b. establishing an "ethical infrastructure" in a firm; and
  - c. the development of rules specific to firms.
52. A Legal Director, or designated person in a law firm or regulated entity, can be a component of a compliance-based entity regulatory scheme. The Legal Director may be designated by the firm to receive notice about complaints. They may also be required to take reasonable steps to address a firm's failure to meet its regulatory responsibilities.
53. An "ethical infrastructure" describes a law firm's organization, policies and operating procedures.<sup>1</sup>
54. Jurisdictions that have adopted compliance based regulation have used different tools to build an ethical infrastructure for firms. One area of focus has been to adopt outcomes focused principles applicable to firms – firms are required to comply but the regulator does not prescribe how to achieve compliance.

<sup>1</sup> This term was first used by Professor Ted Schneyer of the University of Arizona; see, for example, "On Further Reflection: How 'Professional Self-Regulation' Should Promote Compliance With Broad Ethical Duties of Law Firm Management", (2011) 53 Arizona Law Review Vol. 577 at 585.

55. For example, a principle for firms would be to avoid conflicts of interest. One way to achieve compliance would be to implement a conflicts checking system. The key principle is that the responsibility is that of the firm to determine how to achieve compliance. The regulator would assist firms to achieve compliance by providing tools and templates and working with firms if they are non-compliant.
56. Other Canadian legal and financial services regulators have adopted requirements regarding firm-wide policies and procedures. One specific area of focus for firms could be trust accounts. Law societies in Nova Scotia and Alberta, for example, have specific compliance oriented rules regarding firm trust accounts:
  - a. The Nova Scotia Barristers Society requires an annual law firm report and a specific trust account report, which must be signed by at least four partners of the firm.
  - b. The Law Society of Alberta requires a number of specific controls on trust accounts.
  - c. The Ontario Securities Commission requires a firm to set up a compliance system which includes internal controls for safeguarding client and firm assets and accuracy of books and records.
57. Some regulators require law firms to make reasonable efforts to ensure that all licensees comply with the Rules. A law firm may demonstrate compliance with this requirement by demonstrating that it has policies and procedures.
58. Some of these regulators also have rules specifically for firms. These can include the duty to report certain breaches, inappropriate advertising, failure to serve a client, sexual harassment, conflict of interest, failure to supervise, failure to maintain financial records and failure to respond to or cooperate with the regulator.

Next Steps

59. The Committee will continue its consideration of these issues and report back to Convocation as appropriate.

Update Report TAG – The Action Group on Access to Justice

---

This report provides a brief overview of TAG's evolving structure and an update of recent TAG activities.

National Action Committee Meeting

The Law Society hosted a meeting of the National Action Committee (NAC) on March 9, 2015. Justice Cromwell, the Treasurer and representatives from across the country engaged in productive dialogue about the ongoing role of NAC in raising the profile of access to justice. Discussions also focused on how best to coordinate communication across jurisdictions about access to justice best practices, initiatives and news.

Improving Access to Justice - Flip Your Wig CPD Event

On April 8, 2015 TAG participated in Improving Access to Justice, a CPD event organized by Flip Your Wig. Panelists included Justice Cromwell (Supreme Court of Canada), Ron Franklin (Franklinlaw) and Patricia Hughes (Law Commission of Ontario) with Lorne Sossin (Osgoode Hall Law School) as moderator. The speakers provided insight into the various barriers and potential opportunities that exist within the sphere of access to justice concerns. Additional comments were featured from Michele M. Leering (Community Advocacy & Legal Centre), Barbara Grossman (Dentons) and Grant Wedge (Law Society of Upper Canada).

Reference Group

The Reference Group, which acts as the TAG planning committee, met on March 2, 2015 and is working on developing and implementing a public engagement strategy. The aim is to produce a destination for organizations, individuals and institutions from across the province that are interested in developing or learning more about innovative solutions to Ontario's access to justice crisis. The group's next meeting is scheduled for late May 2015.

Clusters

Online Family Law Shared Steps Resource

This initiative focuses on common legal problems faced by people who have low or moderate incomes or face other disadvantages. The project is aimed at the first-contact community workers whom these people trust and turn to for help. The resource is currently being beta tested with assistance from Ryerson University. We look forward to supporting its official launch this summer.

Targeted Legal Services

“Targeted Legal Services & Access to Justice: We Are All Pieces of the Puzzle” is a series of three symposia organized by TAG, Social Justice Tribunals Ontario and the Law Society of Upper Canada. On May 12, 2015, the second symposium in this series will build on the discussion at the first symposium by focussing on “success stories” in the delivery of targeted legal services. The final symposium in this series will take place in September 16, 2015.

Task Force on Custody and Access Assessors

For the past five years, family justice system participants, including lawyers, judges, psychologists, social workers and psychiatrists have been calling for reforms to address the shortage of qualified custody and access assessors in the family court system. One of the major concerns that has repeatedly been identified as contributing to this problem is the impact of insufficient complaints on the willingness of assessors to do this important and challenging work. On June 8, 2015 TAG will hold a facilitated session about Professional Complaints Against Custody/Access Assessors. This session will convene family justice system participants in order to explore potential solutions and considerations to this significant access to justice problem.

Aboriginal Restorative Justice

In order to develop a strong, collaborative, consultative relationship TAG is focusing on outreach with Aboriginal licensees, organizations and communities. What are the key action items for Aboriginal communities and how can we develop measures that promote Aboriginal justice? At this early stage in outreach we see an emerging role for TAG as a support for restorative justice programs within First Nations, Metis and Inuit communities.

In Development

Additional clusters addressing Mental Health issues related to client service and Public Legal Education are expected to be starting shortly.

I. INTRODUCTION

1. Good Morning. My name is Robert Lapper and I'm the CEO of the Law Society of Upper Canada. I'm here today with Ms. Sheena Weir, our Director of Public Affairs, and Ms. Elliot Spears, our General Counsel.
2. The Law Society of Upper Canada is the independent regulator of Ontario's over 47,000 lawyers and 7,000 licensed paralegals. The Law Society appreciates the opportunity to contribute to this Committee's study of Bill 49, the Ontario Immigration Act, 2015 (the "Bill").

II. SUBMISSION HIGHLIGHTS

3. As you know, the Bill's general purpose is to implement a provincial immigration system that recognizes the important role that immigrants play in Ontario's economic and social fabric. The Bill would establish two classes of persons, recruiters and representatives, to provide services in connection with the programs established by the government to promote the settlement and integration of immigrants and foreign nationals to Ontario.
4. Today, the Law Society wishes to comment on three aspects of the Bill, aspects that relate to the Law Society's mandate to regulate Ontario's lawyers and paralegals in the public interest. These three aspects are as follows:
  - 1) Safeguarding solicitor-client privilege;
  - 2) Ensuring that the Bill's definition of a representative is drafted so as to be consistent with the existing law as to who may act as a representative; and
  - 3) Providing for continued dialogue between the government and the Law Society to ensure that areas of concurrent regulation in the new immigration system are addressed by having our regulatory spheres work in concert.

III. SAFEGUARDING SOLICITOR-CLIENT PRIVILEGE

5. The Law Society's first point relates to safeguarding solicitor-client privilege. The Bill requires representatives and recruiters to disclose information. Applied to lawyers and paralegals, this requirement is at odds with protections granted to clients through confidentiality and solicitor-client privilege.

6. The Bill as currently drafted grants broad search and investigatory powers to inspectors and investigators. It expressly permits warrantless searches of "representatives" premises in certain circumstances (Bill, s.23.(2)4). As "representatives" includes lawyers and licensed paralegals, this would expressly permit warrantless law and paralegal office searches. Investigators would be permitted to obtain materials which would otherwise be privileged (Bill, s.23.3). These materials could be used in proceedings. It is also possible that they would be shared with other government agencies and the federal government. (Searches may also be conducted with a warrant.) It is an offence under the Bill to obstruct an investigation.
7. There is no exception for lawyers or licensed paralegals with respect to confidential or privileged information. The Bill does not expressly provide any mechanisms to protect privileged information.
8. In 2015, the Supreme Court of Canada stated that it is a "principle of fundamental justice that the state cannot impose duties on lawyers that undermine their duty of commitment to their clients' causes."<sup>1</sup> It has also described solicitor-client privilege as "a principle of fundamental justice and a civil right of supreme importance in Canadian law" and "must remain as close to absolute as possible if it is to retain relevance."<sup>2</sup>
9. These statements from the Supreme Court reflect the fact that our system of justice relies on full and frank communication between clients and their legal representatives. Without it, legal representatives would be unable to protect or advance the legal rights of their clients. As the Supreme Court has also stated, "[i]t is in the public interest that this free flow of legal advice be encouraged. Without it, access to justice and the quality of justice in this country would be severely compromised."<sup>3</sup>

10. When applied to lawyers and licensed paralegals, the effect of the investigatory provisions of the Bill is akin to a law office search. The Law Society would expect that these provisions would not require disclosure of privileged information and that the protections set out by the courts to govern such searches would apply.
11. An amendment to the Bill to make the protection of privileged information explicit would be appropriate. Given the importance accorded to solicitor-client privilege, any amendment must be carefully drafted and meet established judicial precedent. For example, in Lavallee, Rockel & Heintz v. Canada (Attorney General), [2002] 3 S.C.R. 209, the Supreme Court of Canada struck down s.488.1 of the Criminal Code, which set out a procedure for searching law offices. It held that the section violated s.8 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the right to be secure against unreasonable search and seizure. The Court set out the features that law office searches are required to ensure solicitor-client privilege is safeguarded.
12. The Law Society has provided guidance in this area by issuing Guidelines for Law Office Searches which were developed in response to the Supreme Court's statements about how law office searches may be conducted. The Law Society would appreciate the opportunity to work with the government to develop an appropriate amendment that would expressly protect privileged information in a manner that would be consistent with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

IV. DEFINING THE TERM "REPRESENTATIVE" HAVING REGARD TO CURRENT LAW

13. Our second point concerns the definition of the term "representative". The Bill defines a "representative" as a person who, for consideration, represents, assists or advises an applicant in connection to an application. The Bill limits who may act (or offer to act) as a representative. As presently drafted, lawyers and licensed paralegals would be able to act as "representatives" (Bill, s.14(1)).
14. The Law Society Act grants the Law Society the authority to regulate the practice of law and the provision of legal services in Ontario. The Law Society is authorized to establish classes of licence to practise law and provide legal services, to determine the scope of activities authorized under each class of licence and to impose any terms, conditions, limitations or restrictions on any class of licence (Law Society Act, s. 27 (1)).

15. In exercising its authority to regulate the practice of law and the provision of legal services, the Law Society is guided by a description of its function and a set of principles that are set out in the Law Society Act. The Law Society's function (as set out in the Law Society Act) includes ensuring that "all persons who practise law in Ontario or provide legal services in Ontario meet standards of learning, professional competence and professional conduct that are appropriate for the legal services they provide". The principles that guide the Law Society's activities include a duty to maintain and advance the cause of justice and the rule of law, a duty to act so as to facilitate access to justice for the people of Ontario and a duty to protect the public interest.
16. In Ontario, lawyers and paralegals practise law and provide legal services within the scope of activities defined for them by the Law Society. The Law Society seeks to ensure that the Bill reflects this with respect to immigration law.

V. CONCURRENT REGULATION AND THE NEED FOR CONTINUED DIALOGUE

17. The Law Society's third and final point relates to how issues arise in the context of concurrent regulation and the need for continued dialogue. The Law Society highlights three examples of areas of dual or concurrent regulation which could arise if Ontario enacts the proposed new immigration system. These are:
  - 1) Concurrent regulation of lawyer or paralegal licensees governed by the Law Society who act as "representatives";
  - 2) Concurrent regulation of lawyer or paralegals who act as both "representatives and recruiters"; and
  - 3) Concurrent regulatory responsibility to address unauthorized practice.

(1) Regulating Lawyer or Paralegal "Representatives"

18. The Bill does not contain any specific provisions for the regulation of "representatives", although by creating the new field of "representatives", the Bill appears to anticipate their regulation. The Law Society would be interested in receiving more information about any contemplated regulatory oversight of representatives. The Law Society would appreciate being consulted in advance of any regulations being developed in this regard, so as to ensure that any regulations regarding “representatives” are developed in a way that recognize and work together with the Law Society’s regulatory authority.

(2) Regulating Lawyer or Paralegal “Representatives and Recruiters”

19. The Bill contemplates that an individual may act as both a recruiter and a representative in relation to an applicant (Bill, subsection 1(2)). As noted previously, the Bill contemplates regulation of representatives. Similarly, the Bill contemplates regulation of recruiters.
20. As also noted previously, lawyers and licensed paralegals who act as representatives are already subject to regulation by the Law Society.
21. It is possible that some lawyers and licensed paralegals will act in dual roles, as both representatives and recruiters. This raises questions about regulation. The Law Society believes that further clarification is needed on how the government proposes to regulate persons acting as both recruiters and representatives and, specifically, on how the government proposes to address lawyers and licensed paralegals working as both representatives and recruiters. The Law Society would welcome the opportunity to work with government to ensure any of its licensees who also act as recruiters and representatives are regulated by the appropriate entities in the appropriate circumstances.

(3) Addressing Unauthorized Practice

22. Finally, section 29 of the Bill sets out the offence of acting as a representative without the authority to do so. The Law Society similarly acts in the public interest by prosecuting unauthorized practice of law and provision of legal services. It is possible that both the Bill’s offence of acting as a representative without the authority to do so and the Law Society’s unauthorized practice of law and provision of legal services provisions will target the same activities. In such circumstances, it will be important to have a coordinated, collaborative approach to dealing with the unauthorized activities. In the absence of a coordinated, collaborative approach, it is possible that unauthorized activities will go unchecked, resulting in a risk of harm to the public.

The Law Society urges the development of clear frameworks to govern the handling of instances of unauthorized activities when the activities could constitute unauthorized practice in two or more statutes.

23. The three examples demonstrate that continued collaboration will be necessary in order to regulate areas of concurrent regulation in the public interest. The Law Society looks forward to continuing to work in an open and collaborative manner with government to ensure that areas of concurrent regulation are addressed from the outset in a way that protects the public and the public interest.

VI. CONCLUDING REMARKS

24. We again thank the Committee for the opportunity to appear here today. We would be pleased to discuss the issues raised in this submission with you further, and answer any questions.

This is Exhibit K to the Affidavit of Jacqueline Horvat of the City of Windsor, in the Province of Ontario, sworn before me at the City of Toronto, in the Province of Ontario, on September 1, 2023 in accordance with O. Reg. 431/20, Administering Oath or Declaration Remotely.

Motion

That Convocation approve the following thirteen recommendations outlined in the Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions report:

Recommendation 1 – Reinforcing Professional Obligations

The Law Society will review and amend, where appropriate, the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, and Commentaries to reinforce the professional obligations of all licensees to recognize, acknowledge and promote principles of equality, diversity and inclusion consistent with the requirements under human rights legislation and the special responsibilities of licensees in the legal and paralegal professions.

Recommendation 2 – Diversity and Inclusion Project

The Law Society will work with stakeholders, such as interested legal workplaces, legal associations, law schools and paralegal colleges to develop model policies and resources to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees.

Recommendation 3 – The Adoption of Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Principles and Practices

The Law Society will:

- 1) ~~require every licensee to adopt and to abide by a statement of principles acknowledging their obligation to promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally, and in their behaviour towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public;~~ See note at page 4a
- 2) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy for their legal workplace addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement, which will be available to members of the professions and the public upon request;
- 3) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to complete, every two years, an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment for their legal workplace, to be provided to the Law Society; and
- 4) encourage legal workplaces to conduct inclusion surveys by providing them with sample templates.

Recommendation 4 – Measuring Progress through Quantitative Analysis

Each year, the Law Society will measure progress quantitatively by providing legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees in Ontario with the quantitative self-identification data of their licensees compiled from the Lawyers Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report in a manner consistent with the best practices established to protect licensees vulnerable to harm that may flow from this disclosure, so they can compare their data with the aggregate demographic data gathered from the profession as a whole through the annual reports.

Note: Convocation amended Recommendation 4 by adding the above, underlined content. References to Recommendation 4 have been updated throughout the report.

Recommendation 5 – Measuring Progress through Qualitative Analysis

The Law Society will measure progress by:

- 1) asking licensees to voluntarily answer inclusion questions, provided by the Law Society, about their legal workplace, every four years; and
- 2) compiling the results of the inclusion questions for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees in Ontario and providing the legal workplace with a summary of the information gathered

Recommendation 6 – Inclusion Index

Every four years, the Law Society will develop and publish an inclusion index that reflects the following information, including, for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees: the legal workplace's self-assessment information (Recommendation 3(3)), demographic data obtained from the Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report (Recommendation 4) and information gathered from the inclusion questions provided by the Law Society (Recommendation 5).

Recommendation 7 – Repeat Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project Inclusion Survey

The Law Society will conduct inclusion surveys with questions similar to those asked in Appendix F of the Stratcom Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Final Report (March 11, 2014) (available online at <http://www.stratcom.ca/wp-content/uploads/manual/Racialized-Licensees-Full-Report.pdf>). The first inclusion survey will be conducted within one year of the adoption of these recommendations, and thereafter every four years, subject to any recommendation by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee to Convocation.

Recommendation 8 – Progressive Compliance Measures

The Law Society will consider and enact, as appropriate, progressive compliance measures for legal workplaces that do not comply with the requirements proposed in Recommendation 3 and/or legal workplaces that are identified as having systemic barriers to diversity and inclusion.

Recommendation 9 – Continuing Professional Development (CPD) Programs on Topics of Equality and Inclusion in the Professions

The Law Society will:

- 1) launch a three hour accredited program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions;
- 2) develop resources to assist legal workplaces in designing and delivering their own three hour program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions, to be accredited by the Law Society; and
- 3) require each licensee to complete three hours of an accredited program focused on equality and inclusion within the first three years following the adoption of these recommendations and one hour per year every year thereafter, which will count towards the licensee's professionalism hours for that year.

Recommendation 10 – The Licensing Process

The Law Society will include the topics of cultural competency, equality and inclusion in the professions as competencies to be acquired in the Licensing Process.

Recommendation 11 – Building Communities of Support

The Law Society, in collaboration with legal associations where appropriate, will provide support to racialized licensees in need of direction and assistance through mentoring and networking initiatives.

Recommendation 12 – Addressing Complaints of Systemic Discrimination

The Law Society, in light of the findings of this project and emerging issues in the professions, will:

- 1) review the function, processes and structure of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC), including considering effective ways for the DHC to address issues of systemic discrimination;
- 2) revise the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, where appropriate, so that systemic discrimination and reprisal for complaints of discrimination and harassment are clearly identified as breaches of professional conduct requirements;
- 3) create effective ways for the Professional Regulation Division to address complaints of systemic discrimination; and
- 4) create a specialized and trained team to address complaints of discrimination.

Recommendation 13 – Leading by Example

- 1) The Law Society will continue to monitor and assess internal policies, practices and programs, to promote diversity, inclusion and equality within the workplace and in the provision of services by:
  - a) as required, adopting, implementing and maintaining a human rights/diversity policy addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement;
  - b) measuring quantitative progress through a census of the workforce or other method;
  - c) measuring qualitative progress by conducting inclusion surveys;
  - d) conducting regular equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessments; and
  - e) based on the results from b), c) and d), identifying gaps and barriers and adopting measures to address the gaps and barriers;
  - f) publishing relevant findings from b), c), d) and e); and
  - g) providing equality and inclusion education programs for staff at the Law Society on a regular basis.
- 2) The Law Society will:
  - a) conduct an internal diversity assessment of the bench composition and publicize the results;
  - b) provide equality and inclusion education programs for Convocation on a regular basis

Note:

Recommendation 3.1 of this report regarding the Statement of Principles was repealed by Convocation on September 11, 2019. At that time, Law Society benchers approved a motion to require licensees to acknowledge in their annual reports, in accordance with the professional conduct rules, their special responsibility as a lawyer or paralegal to respect the requirements of human rights laws in Ontario and to honour the obligation not to discriminate.

Overview of Submissions

The Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group (“the Working Group”) provided its final report, Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions on September 22, 2016 for information. The report is to be before Convocation for decision on December 2, 2016.

Members of the legal professions and the public were invited to provide comments on the recommendations outlined in the report until November 14, 2015. The Law Society received 46 submissions – 23 from individuals and 23 from organizations (see TAB 3.1.1). The Working Group has determined that only submissions from organizations are to be public. Many of the individual submissions speak to personal experiences and the Working Group believes that should those individuals wish to make their views public, they should have the option to do so on their own. What follows is a summary of both individual and organization submissions divided by the five interrelated categories outlined in the report: accelerating culture shift; measuring progress; educating for change; implementing supports; and operations of the Law Society.

The Working Group received positive comments from the professions and the public, with many individuals and organizations commending the Law Society for taking steps to address issues of systemic racism in the legal professions. The Working Group is encouraged by the submissions it received.

Many of the comments spoke to the implementation of the recommendations in the report. These comments are not outlined in this document – however, should the recommendations be approved by Convocation, the comments will be considered during the implementation phase.

General comments

All of the submissions from organizations representing licensees from equality-seeking organizations expressed support for the 13 recommendations put forward by the Working Group, with suggestions provided on how to strengthen the recommendations. Generally, no organizations were opposed to the recommendations.

Specifically, the submissions from the Canadian Association of Black Lawyers, the Roundtable of Diversity Associations, the Metro Toronto Chinese & Southeast Asian Legal Clinic, the South Asian Bar Association, the Equity Advisory Group, the Canadian Hispanic Bar Association, and the Federation of Asian Canadian Lawyers stressed that Convocation should vote on the thirteen recommendations as a package and not individually.

In addition, many of the submissions from organizations suggested that the recommendations outlined in the Working Group’s report should apply to all equality-seeking groups and not solely to racialized licensees. Some submissions also noted that the report and the recommendations should recognize how intersections of gender, race, sexual orientation, disability and other aspects of identity shape the experiences of licensees.

Accelerating culture shift

The Working Group received submissions supporting the need to accelerate cultural change in the legal professions.

The Working Group received a comment about the importance of taking an approach that recognizes the unique barriers faced by Indigenous licensees and the challenges that both racialized and Indigenous licensees face. Additionally, the comment asked that the Working Group make specific mention of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's final report and the need to address reconciliation between Indigenous and non-Indigenous peoples.

The Working Group is thankful for this comment and has included text that reflects this suggestions in the "Guiding Principles" section of the report.

One comment received by the Working Group advised that the Law Society should require law schools to remove obstacles against racialized licensees. The Working Group notes that the Law Society does not have authority over law schools; however, law schools are encouraged to participate in the Diversity and Inclusion Project outlined in Recommendation 2.

Some submissions suggested that the Law Society, under Recommendation 3, should require all legal workplaces, not just workplaces of at least 10 licensees, to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy and complete an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment. In determining the size of workplace for this requirement, the Working Group considered balancing burden and benefit. Although the requirement applies to workplaces of at least 10 licensees, workplaces of less than 10 licensees are strongly encouraged to develop policies and complete self-assessments. This encouragement is reflected in the text that accompanies the recommendation.

One submission suggested that legal workplaces' diversity policies should be made publicly available on the workplace website. In considering this suggestion, the Working Group determined that not all legal workplace websites are used as a recruitment tool - some are intended as advocacy tools, for example. The Working Group, however, noted that policies should be available to the public. Consequently, the Working Group has modified Recommendation 3(2) to note that the policies should be available to members of the professions and the public upon request.

An additional submission proposed that an exemption be provided for legal workplaces that have existing human rights/diversity policies provided they satisfy the Law Society's requirements. The text that accompanies Recommendation 3 recognizes that licensees' employers may already have workplace policies that satisfy the requirement under Recommendation 3(2)

Measuring Progress

The Working Group received positive responses to the recommendations regarding data collection.

One submission suggested that the quantitative self-identification data collected by the Law Society should be published in an aggregate manner. The Working Group notes that the Law Society currently provides race-based self-identification data by size of firm in its annual statistical snapshots, which are available at: https://www.lsuc.on.ca/uploadedFiles/Equity\_and\_Diversity/Members2/TAB%207.3.1%20-%20Snapshot-Lawyers16\_apr13.pdf (lawyers) and https://www.lsuc.on.ca/uploadedFiles/Equity\_and\_Diversity/Members2/TAB%207.3.2-%20Paralegal-Snapshot16\_apr13.pdf (paralegals).

One comment proposed that equity-seeking legal associations should have access to the data collected by the Law Society and that data should be made public at the law school level. The Working Group is of the view that the data should be disseminated to the public through the annual statistical snapshots and that the inclusion index will provide equity-seeking associations and law schools with insights into diversity and inclusion in various workplaces.

Another submission recommended that legal workplaces should be required to engage in internal collection of data in their workplaces. The Working Group is conscious of the fact that many firms may not have the resources to properly collect data from licensees and that there may be privacy concerns if legal workplaces are collecting data from licensees directly. The Working Group asserts that privacy and confidentiality are essential principles to uphold in collecting quantitative demographic data and qualitative inclusion data from licensees.

One comment suggested that the inclusion index include information for all legal workplaces regardless of their size, not just workplaces of at least 25 licensees. Legal workplaces of less than 25 licensees are encouraged to participate in the inclusion index; however, in balancing benefit with burden, the Working Group has determined that 25 licensees and above is an appropriate number.

In terms of conducting inclusion surveys that are similar to the Stratcom survey, the Working Group received a comment that an interval of four years would not capture the issues the Working Group seeks to identify given the rate at which lawyers leave law firms. The Working Group carefully considered this time interval and notes that four years was seen as an appropriate amount of time for changes to take hold.

The Working Group received questions about the nature of the progressive compliance measures outlined in Recommendation 8. The Working Group notes that the nature of the compliance measures will be carefully considered by the Law Society in due course. The intent of the Working Group is to foster cooperation to the extent possible and engage in reactive measures only when necessary.

Educating for Change

The Working Group is pleased that, from the comments received, the professions and the public are in agreement with the requirement for licensees to complete equality and inclusion Continuing Professional Development hours.

The Working Group received a number of comments that suggested that licensees be required to complete a one hour equality and inclusion program per year instead of three hours once every three years. One submission suggested that the Law Society require licensees to participate in an equality and inclusion program once every year following an initial three hour training program. The Working Group believes that this is an excellent suggestion as the three hour training program will allow for licensees to develop a foundation in equality and inclusion principles. The annual one hour requirement, following the initial three hour program, will ensure that equality and inclusion principles are top of mind for licensees.

Building Communities of Support

Comments on the final report reiterated the importance of mentoring and networking. Suggestions made included the creation of a mentoring initiative specifically for junior racialized licensees, free mentoring services to all new lawyers of any background and mentoring for law students. One submission also proposed that the Law Society monitor the success of all mentoring and networking initiatives and identify any improvements. The Working Group notes that the Law Society recently launched the Coach and Advisor Network, which will, in addition to providing advisor and coaching services, act “a centralized source of information to the professions on mentorship programs in Ontario.”<sup>1</sup>

The Working Group received a submission that noted the importance of employing an approach that addresses the unique experiences of Indigenous licensees and the similar barriers faced by Indigenous and racialized licensees – in addition to a suggestion that mentioned be made of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission’s final report. The Working Group has incorporated this suggestion in the “Guiding Principles” section of the report.

The Working Group notes that in November 2016, Convocation determined that the Law Society will engage in an analysis of the licensing process. The Working Group expects that the principles of equality and inclusion will be considered during this process.

The Law Society received submissions regarding the review of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel (“DHC”) program outlined in Recommendation 12 – particularly related to the need to maintain the confidentiality and independence of the DHC program. The Working Group notes that the Law Society’s Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee (“EAIC”) commenced a review of the DHC program in Fall 2016. EAIC is alive to the importance of the DHC’s duty of confidentiality and the arms-length position of the DHC.

Leading by Example

Comments regarding leading by example spoke largely to the bench election process. The Working Group notes that in September 2016, the Law Society established a Governance Task Force to make recommendations in regard to the Law Society’s governance structure.

A suggestion was made that Recommendation 13(1)(a) should include the words “discipline, discharge and revocation”, however, the Working Group points out that the requirement for the Law Society to adopt, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy speaks to the need for the policy to address at the very least recruitment, retention and advancement. The wording of this recommendation is broad in order to allow for the Law Society to examine various aspects of its operations.

Other comments

The Working Group received submissions that outlined the importance of addressing the challenges faced by racialized licensees in law school and upon entry into the profession. The Diversity and Inclusion Project, contemplated in Recommendation 2, is intended to allow for a forum to address these issues. Other submissions suggested that the Working Group should address the pathways to licensing for lawyers. The Working Group notes, again, that Convocation has already approved a review of the licensing process.

One submission noted that the report has been silent on the unique needs of racialized internationally trained lawyers without Canadian education or experience. It is the Working Group's intention that the implementation of the recommendations will consider all racialized licensees and the intersections of their experiences, including the experiences of internationally trained racialized licensees.

Some submissions suggested that the Law Society should consider the economic barriers for racialized licensees and other licensees from equity-seeking groups. The Working Group notes that in the implementation of the recommendations, economic barriers will be considered.

One submission noted that the report had failed to direct the Law Society to develop mental health strategies specific to racialized licensees. The Working Group notes that in April 2016, the Law Society approved a long-term mental health strategy, which "builds on the Law Society's existing mental health initiatives and lays the groundwork to explore additional supports or programs that fall within the organization's mandate."<sup>2</sup>

One submission suggested that the Report should call upon the Law Society to work with the Roundtable of Diversity Associations (RODA) and other associations serving racialized lawyers across Ontario using a similar approach to The Action Group on Access to Justice. It is contemplated that the Diversity and Inclusion Project under Recommendation 2 will be a forum for the Law Society to work with associations serving racialized licensees.

Executive Summary

“Inclusion is not about bringing people into what already exists; it is making a new space, a better space for everyone.”<sup>3</sup>

This is the unanimous final report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group. The fifteen Benchers on the Working Group have reviewed the written submissions and other input of Benchers and many external stakeholders since the initial presentation of the report to Convocation on September 22, 2016. After discussion and some revisions, the Working Group now presents this Report, unanimous in its 13 recommendations and the rationale supporting them, for approval by Convocation on December 2, 2016.

This Report represents the final stage of a lengthy consultative and study exercise which has led to the conclusion that racialized licensees<sup>4</sup> face widespread barriers within the professions at all stages of their careers. As the title “Working Together for Change” bears out, the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group is confident that there is a unique opportunity for change, based on collaborative, concrete steps to implement solutions. That said, the challenges faced by racialized licensees are both longstanding and significant. In our view, the Law Society must take a leadership role in giving legal workplaces reasonable deadlines to implement steps that are important to bringing about lasting culture change. The Working Group has concluded that prescribing minimum standards of equality, diversity and inclusion are consistent with the human rights responsibilities of the profession — obligations already required by the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct and, more generally, the Human Rights Code.

Reform in addressing barriers faced by racialized licensees is an essential component of ensuring a healthy and successful legal profession, and to advancement of the public interest — goals that we all share and must achieve.

Background

1. The Law Society of Upper Canada (The Law Society) has a duty to maintain and advance the cause of justice and the rule of law, to facilitate access to justice for the people of Ontario and to protect the public interest. Furthermore, the Law Society is committed to adhering to its obligations under the Human Rights Code. In fulfilling its mandate, the Law Society integrates equality and diversity values and principles into all of its policies, practices and programs. The

<sup>4</sup> The Ontario Human Rights Commission notes that using the terminology “racialized person” or “racialized group” is more accurate than “racial minority”, “visible minority”, “person of colour” or “non-White”. Race is the socially constructed differences among people based on characteristics such as accent or manner of speech, name, clothing, diet, beliefs and practices, leisure preferences, places of origin and so forth. Racialization is the “process by which societies construct races as real, different and unequal in ways that matter to economic, political and social life”. See Ontario Human Rights Commission, Racial discrimination, race and racism, online: Ontario Human Rights Commission <http://www.ohrc.on.ca/en/racial-discrimination-race-andracism>

Law Society works to ensure that the law and the practice of law are reflective of all the people of Ontario, including Indigenous peoples, Francophones and equality-seeking communities. The Law Society also seeks to ensure that its workplace and the legal professions are free of harassment and discrimination.

In 2012, the Law Society created the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group (“the Working Group”) to:

- a. identify challenges faced by racialized licensees in different practice environments, including entry into practice and advancement;
- b. identify factors and practice-challenges faced by racialized licensees that could increase the risk of regulatory complaints and discipline;
- c. consider best practices for preventative, remedial and/or support strategies;
- d. if appropriate, design and develop preventative, remedial, enforcement, regulatory and/or support strategies, for consideration by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee (“EAIC”) and other committees, to address these challenges.

The Working Group’s Approach

Since 2012, the Working Group has been actively engaged in gathering information about the challenges faced by racialized licensees and developing recommendations to address these challenges.

In order to fulfil its mandate, the Working Group gathered information about the challenges faced by racialized licensees using consultant and community engagement processes.<sup>5</sup> Further information about this part of the Working Group’s activities can be found at: <http://www.lsuc.on.ca/racialized-licensees/>.

The Working Group reviewed all of the information gathered through the engagement process and drafted a consultation paper titled Developing Strategies for Change: Addressing Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees.<sup>6</sup>

Convocation approved the consultation paper in November 2014, and the Working Group consulted with over 1,000 racialized and non-racialized lawyers, paralegals, law students, articling students and members of the public throughout the province of Ontario between January and March 2015. The Working Group met with organizational stakeholders and members of the Law Firms Diversity and Inclusion Network. The Working Group also received feedback from 45 individuals and organizations in the form of written submissions.<sup>7</sup>

Engagement Process Results

The qualitative and quantitative data the Working Group obtained from the engagement process identified widespread barriers experienced by racialized licensees within the legal professions at all stages of their careers. Examples of challenges faced in the legal professions include discrimination and stereotyping, negotiating concepts of “culture” and “fit”, and lack of mentors, networks and role models. Participants also noted that race-based barriers are often complicated by additional intersecting experiences of discrimination based on gender identity, gender expression, disability, sexual orientation, class and creed.

Some participants in the engagement process believed that racialized licensees were more likely to go into sole practice as a result of barriers faced in other practice environments. They also noted that internationally trained lawyers and paralegals face additional barriers in the professions. Generally, participants noted the vulnerability of racialized licensees in the legal professions in the context of professional regulation and discipline.

Consultation Process Results

The information gathered from the consultation process is summarized as follows:

- Consultation participants expressed significant support for the creation of diversity programs for the recruitment, retention and advancement of racialized licensees in legal workplaces.
- The Working Group heard a broad range of views on the issue of demographic data collection. However, most participants agreed that the collection of data would be, as one participant noted, “a humble but important first step”.
- The Working Group heard that the Law Society could play a facilitative role by encouraging corporate procurement policies that consider suppliers that promote equality and diversity.
- The majority of participants in the consultation process emphasized the importance of mentoring for racialized licensees. Generally, the Working Group heard that there is no “one size fits all” model for mentoring.
- Many participants stated that associations of racialized lawyers and paralegals are beneficial for fostering collaboration and creating a sense of belonging.
- A large number of participants were in favour of the Law Society requiring licensees to participate in mandatory Continuing Professional Development (CPD) training on cultural competence, unconscious bias, and anti-racism.

- Participants suggested updating the Rules of Professional Conduct<sup>8</sup> and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct<sup>9</sup> to specifically address systemic discrimination and subtle forms of discrimination.

Objectives

The Working Group has distilled the themes in the consultation into the following three objectives:

1. Inclusive legal workplaces in Ontario;<sup>10</sup>
2. Reduction of barriers created by racism, unconscious bias and discrimination; and
3. Better representation of racialized licensees, in proportion to the representation in the Ontario population, in the professions, in all legal workplaces and at all levels of seniority.

The Working Group makes 13 recommendations in order to meet these objectives. They fall within four interrelated categories: accelerating culture shift, measuring progress, educating for change and implementing supports. The final recommendation speaks to the operations of the Law Society.

Recommendations

Recommendation 1 – Reinforcing Professional Obligations

The Law Society will review and amend, where appropriate, the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, and Commentaries to reinforce the professional obligations of all licensees to recognize, acknowledge and promote principles of equality, diversity and inclusion consistent with the requirements under human rights legislation and the special responsibilities of licensees in the legal and paralegal professions.

Recommendation 2 – Diversity and Inclusion Project

The Law Society will work with stakeholders, such as interested legal workplaces, legal associations, law schools and paralegal colleges to develop model policies and resources to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees.

Recommendation 3 – The Adoption of Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Principles and Practices

The Law Society will:

- 5) ~~require every licensee to adopt and to abide by a statement of principles acknowledging their obligation to promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally, and in their behaviour towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public;~~ *See note at page 4a

<sup>8</sup> Rules of Professional Conduct, The Law Society of Upper Canada available online at <http://www.lsuc.on.ca/WorkArea/DownloadAsset.aspx?id=2147486159>

<sup>9</sup> Paralegal Rules of Conduct The Law Society of Upper Canada available on-line at <http://www.lsuc.on.ca/paralegal-conduct-rules/>

- 6) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy for their legal workplace addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement, which will be available to members of the professions and the public upon request;
- 7) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to complete, every two years, an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment for their legal workplace, to be provided to the Law Society; and
- 8) encourage legal workplaces to conduct inclusion surveys by providing them with sample templates.

Recommendation 4 – Measuring Progress through Quantitative Analysis

Each year, the Law Society will measure progress quantitatively by providing legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees in Ontario with the quantitative self-identification data of their licensees compiled from the Lawyers Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report in a manner consistent with the best practices established to protect licensees vulnerable to harm that may flow from this disclosure, so they can compare their data with the aggregate demographic data gathered from the profession as a whole through the annual reports.

Recommendation 5 – Measuring Progress through Qualitative Analysis

The Law Society will measure progress by:

- 3) asking licensees to voluntarily answer inclusion questions, provided by the Law Society, about their legal workplace, every four years; and
- 4) compiling the results of the inclusion questions for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees in Ontario and providing the legal workplace with a summary of the information gathered

Recommendation 6 – Inclusion Index

Every four years, the Law Society will develop and publish an inclusion index that reflects the following information, including, for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees: the legal workplace's self-assessment information (Recommendation 3(3)), demographic data obtained from the Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report (Recommendation 4) and information gathered from the inclusion questions provided by the Law Society (Recommendation 5).

Recommendation 7 – Repeat Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project Inclusion Survey

The Law Society will conduct inclusion surveys with questions similar to those asked in Appendix F of the Stratcom Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Final Report (March 11, 2014) (available online at http://www.stratcom.ca/wp-content/uploads/manual/Racialized-Licensees\_Full-Report.pdf). The first inclusion survey will be conducted within one year of the adoption of these recommendations, and thereafter every four years, subject to any recommendation by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee to Convocation.

Recommendation 8 – Progressive Compliance Measures

The Law Society will consider and enact, as appropriate, progressive compliance measures for legal workplaces that do not comply with the requirements proposed in Recommendation 3 and/or legal workplaces that are identified as having systemic barriers to diversity and inclusion.

Recommendation 9 – Continuing Professional Development (CPD) Programs on Topics of Equality and Inclusion in the Professions

The Law Society will:

- 4) launch a three hour accredited program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions;
- 5) develop resources to assist legal workplaces in designing and delivering their own three hour program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions, to be accredited by the Law Society; and
- 6) require each licensee to complete three hours of an accredited program focused on equality and inclusion within the first three years following the adoption of these recommendations and one hour per year every year thereafter, which will count towards the licensee's professionalism hours for that year.

Recommendation 10 – The Licensing Process

The Law Society will include the topics of cultural competency, equality and inclusion in the professions as competencies to be acquired in the Licensing Process.

Recommendation 11 – Building Communities of Support

The Law Society, in collaboration with legal associations where appropriate, will provide support to racialized licensees in need of direction and assistance through mentoring and networking initiatives.

Recommendation 12 – Addressing Complaints of Systemic Discrimination

The Law Society, in light of the findings of this project and emerging issues in the professions, will:

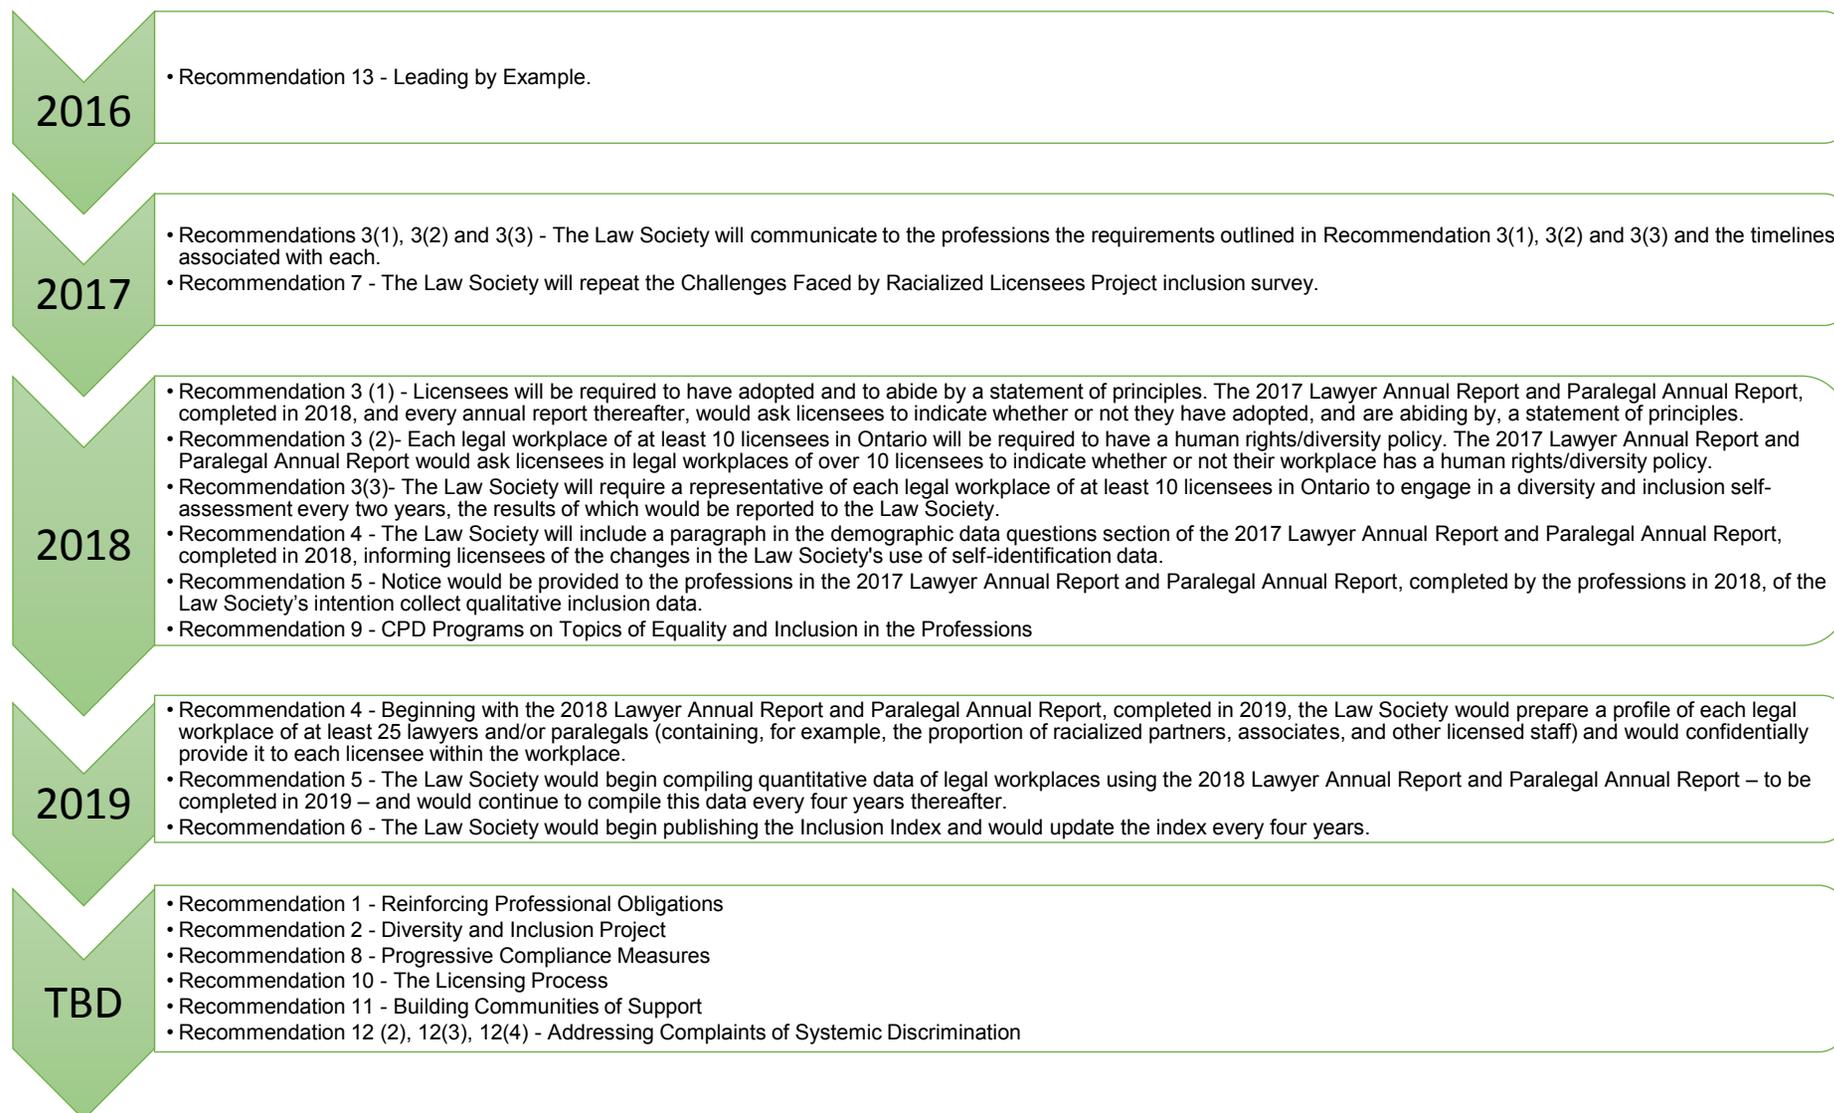

- 5) review the function, processes and structure of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC), including considering effective ways for the DHC to address issues of systemic discrimination;

- 6) revise the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, where appropriate, so that systemic discrimination and reprisal for complaints of discrimination and harassment are clearly identified as breaches of professional conduct requirements;
- 7) create effective ways for the Professional Regulation Division to address complaints of systemic discrimination; and
- 8) create a specialized and trained team to address complaints of discrimination.

Recommendation 13 – Leading by Example

- 3) The Law Society will continue to monitor and assess internal policies, practices and programs, to promote diversity, inclusion and equality within the workplace and in the provision of services by:
  - a) as required, adopting, implementing and maintaining a human rights/diversity policy addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement;
  - b) measuring quantitative progress through a census of the workforce or other method;
  - c) measuring qualitative progress by conducting inclusion surveys;
  - d) conducting regular equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessments; and
  - e) based on the results from b), c) and d), identifying gaps and barriers and adopting measures to address the gaps and barriers;
  - f) publishing relevant findings from b), c), d) and e); and
  - g) providing equality and inclusion education programs for staff at the Law Society on a regular basis.
- 4) The Law Society will:
  - a) conduct an internal diversity assessment of the bench composition and publicize the results;
  - b) provide equality and inclusion education programs for Convocation on a regular basis.

Timeline for Implementation of Recommendations

Introduction

“What we need to do is learn to respect and embrace our differences until our differences don’t make a difference in how we are treated.”

— Yolanda King<sup>11</sup>

Background

1. The Law Society of Upper Canada (“The Law Society”) is the governing body for more than 50,000 lawyers and 8,000 paralegals in Ontario. The Law Society is committed to advancing equality, diversity and inclusion in the legal professions — a commitment which includes addressing any barriers faced by lawyers and paralegals to full and active participation in the professions. The Law Society’s Rules of Professional Conduct and Paralegal Rules of Conduct specifically prohibit discrimination and harassment and speak to lawyers’ and paralegals’ responsibility to adhere to human rights laws in Ontario.
2. Since 2001, the proportion of racialized<sup>12</sup> lawyers in the Ontario legal profession has doubled, rising from 9% of the profession in 2001 to 18% in 2014.<sup>13</sup> This is compared to 23% of the Ontario population who indicated in the 2006 Canada Census that they are racialized and 26% of the Ontario population who indicated in the 2011 National Household Survey that they are racialized.<sup>14</sup> The Law Society’s Statistical Snapshot of Paralegals from the Paralegal Annual Report 2014 also show a high proportion of racialized paralegals at 34% of the paralegal profession.<sup>15</sup> The Law Society’s Statistical Snapshots of Paralegals also indicate that 34% of licensed paralegals in Ontario are racialized.
3. A review of statistical data, research findings and anecdotal evidence suggested that, notwithstanding their increase in representation, racialized lawyers face challenges in the practice of law. The Law Society also noted a lack of information about the challenges faced, if any, by racialized paralegals.
4. In 2012, the Law Society created the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group (“the Working Group”) to:

<sup>12</sup> The Ontario Human Rights Commission notes that using the terminology “racialized person” or “racialized group” is more accurate than “racial minority”, “visible minority”, “person of colour” or “non-White”. Race is the socially constructed differences among people based on characteristics such as accent or manner of speech, name, clothing, diet, beliefs and practices, leisure preferences, places of origin and so forth. Racialization is the “process by which societies construct races as real, different and unequal in ways that matter to economic, political and social life”.   - b. identify factors and practice-challenges faced by racialized licensees that could increase the risk of regulatory complaints and discipline;<sup>16</sup>
  - c. consider best practices for preventative, remedial and/or support strategies; and
  - d. if appropriate, design and develop preventative, remedial, enforcement, regulatory and/or support strategies, for consideration by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee (“EAIC”) and other committees, to address these challenges.
5. Since 2012, the Working Group has been actively engaged in gathering information about the challenges faced by racialized licensees and developing recommendations to address these challenges.

The Process: Listening and Learning

6. The members of the Working Group began their work by conducting a review of the data and literature available on the challenges faced by racialized licensees. The Working Group then gathered information about the challenges using an engagement process, followed by an extensive consultation process.<sup>17</sup>

7. The qualitative and quantitative data obtained from the engagement processes identified widespread barriers experienced by racialized licensees within the professions at all stages of their careers.
8. Through the consultation process, the Working Group received rich feedback on questions organized under the following themes:

<sup>16</sup> The Working Group considered available information regarding the experience of racialized licensees in the regulatory process and determined that there is more work to be done. The preliminary work thus far will be continued.

Recommendations: Framework to Address the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees

On Racism and Initiatives for Change

— Ontario Human Rights Commission

10. The Working Group acknowledges that the legal professions operate in a broader social context in which racism continues to negatively impact the lives of racialized people. During the consultation phase, a participant noted that society could currently be at an inflection point – a point at which there is a significant possibility for change in the way in which the professions engage with equality and diversity principles and practices.
11. Recently, the Ontario government announced the establishment of an Anti-Racism Directorate tasked with “increas[ing] public education and awareness of racism to create a more inclusive province” and “apply[ing] an anti-racism lens in developing, implementing and evaluating government policies, programs and services.”<sup>19</sup> Similarly, in November 2015, the Ontario Public Service (OPS) launched an Anti-Racism Action Plan. This plan focuses on “preventing race-based discrimination and harassment; further diversifying the public service at every level, including senior management; and increasing OPS employees’ awareness of racism and its impacts.”<sup>20</sup>
12. In the academic sphere, in February 2016, University of Toronto committed to collecting race-based data from its students in an effort to “tackle a lack of representation in the lecture hall among some groups and lend hard numbers to the push for equity in the public realm.”<sup>21</sup> In the area of child welfare, in June 2016, children’s aid societies agreed to collect race-based data to address concerns that there are a high number of black and Indigenous children in care.
13. On the popular culture front, in early 2016, media attention turned to #OscarsSoWhite<sup>22</sup> — Hollywood actors and filmmakers who were speaking up against the lack of diversity in the nominations for the Academy Awards. Those who work in Hollywood note that the lack of

14. Race and racism are also at the forefront of issues in the justice system — from the overrepresentation of black and Indigenous peoples in federal prisons<sup>24</sup> to police violence to calls for judicial diversity and beyond. In spring 2016, Black Lives Matter Toronto, “a coalition of black Torontonians working in solidarity with communities/individuals seeking justice from state-sanctioned violence”<sup>25</sup> occupied the space in front of Toronto Police Headquarters for two weeks to protest police violence against the black community. Acknowledging that racialized communities are “over-represented and subject to different treatment in the justice system as a whole”,<sup>26</sup> Legal Aid Ontario is currently developing a strategy to “identify the legal needs and to protect the legal rights of racialized communities in the justice system”.
15. Additionally, the Ontario Human Rights Commission is currently working on a new policy on racial profiling that will “provide guidance on combatting racial profiling in a range of institutional and community settings” and “seek to support and enable Ontario organizations, legal decision-makers and affected community members to better identify, address and prevent racial profiling as a prohibited form of discrimination under the Ontario Human Rights Code.”<sup>27</sup>
16. The information outlined is only a snapshot of the efforts in Ontario and beyond to address racial discrimination. The Working Group is encouraged by these initiatives and is hopeful that implementation of the recommendations listed in this report will lead to systemic change.

Guiding Principle

17. The Working Group’s recommendations stem from an intention to create long lasting systemic change within the professions. The recommendations are put forward in an effort to support the Law Society’s ongoing commitment to ensure that both the law and the practice of law are reflective of all peoples in Ontario and that the professions are free of discrimination and harassment. The Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct speak to the special responsibility of lawyers and paralegals to adhere to the requirements of human rights laws in Ontario, including the obligation not to discriminate.
18. Although the Working Group’s report does not speak to the experiences of Indigenous licensees, the Working Group recognizes that Indigenous peoples face barriers that are unique to Indigenous licensees and barriers that are shared by both racialized and Indigenous licensees. The Working Group notes the importance of addressing the ongoing colonial violence experienced by Indigenous communities and of working towards reconciliation between Indigenous and non-Indigenous peoples. As expressed in the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's final report, "Reconciliation is not an Aboriginal problem; it is a Canadian one. Virtually all aspects of Canadian society need to be reconsidered."<sup>29</sup> The Law Society is currently working on a framework of reconciliation, with the guidance of the Indigenous Advisory Group, comprised of First Nation, Inuit and Métis community representatives, to address unique issues faced by Indigenous peoples in Ontario. The framework of reconciliation is also intended to promote responses to and implementation of the Calls to Action from the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada's final report and the First Nations Representation on Ontario Juries report by The Honourable Frank Iacobucci.

19. In working towards achieving the Working Group's overriding objective, establishing partnerships is important. How we do this is integral to what we do, and 'we' are all lawyers and paralegals, not just the Law Society. The Law Society's consultation was successful in part because the Working Group used a spirit of open inquiry. The consultation was also well attended. There was general acceptance that there is a problem and that it is time to address it.
20. The Working Group heard offers to assist with mentoring, that changes are beginning to happen within firms, that the Law Society should support work that is already being done, and that legal workplaces are willing to share best practices and collaborate to create effective models for progressive change in all parts of the professions. Representatives of the Working Group spoke with firms that provide unconscious bias training to all members, firms that have affinity groups in their workplace and firms that are actively participating in the Law Firm Diversity and Inclusion Network. There were requests that the Law Society not impose mandatory hiring targets and timetables, but accelerate a culture change that has already begun as a result of business imperatives, changing demographics and the interests expressed by clients, students, lawyers, paralegals and indeed the public.
21. At the same time, the Working Group heard concerns that the identified challenges were longstanding, and that change would occur very slowly without strong leadership from the Law Society. The Working Group heard generally that the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project has raised the profile and understanding of these issues, but the Working Group was also urged to use the Law Society's authority to effect change.
22. To satisfy these goals, the Working Group concluded that the Law Society should use a combination of voluntary and mandatory measures, fulfilling its multiple roles in the public interest as change agent, facilitator, resource and regulator. The Law Society's authority to adopt mandatory measures must be interpreted and understood in light of its rights and obligations under the Human Rights Code to protect the public interest balanced with the current explicit authority under the Law Society Act<sup>30</sup> and By-Laws<sup>31</sup> and recent jurisprudence. Within this overarching goal, partnerships with legal workplaces and associations are essential to the success of the proposed measures and projects detailed below.

Objectives

23. The Working Group has identified the following three objectives:
1. Inclusive legal workplaces in Ontario;<sup>32</sup>
  2. Reduction of barriers created by racism, unconscious bias and discrimination; and
  3. Better representation of racialized licensees, in proportion to the representation in the Ontario population, in the professions, in all legal workplaces and at all levels of seniority.
24. The Working Group puts forward the following recommendations in order to meet these objectives. It is anticipated that in order to implement a number of the mandatory recommendations, the Law Society will need to consider appropriate by-law amendments. Additionally, the Law Society will need to invest in information technology that will allow it to effectively record and analyze progress across workplaces. The Working Group has contemplated budgetary considerations in developing these recommendations and it is anticipated that a senior staff implementation working group will be involved in implementing the recommendations.
25. The recommendations fall within four interrelated categories: accelerating culture shift, measuring progress, educating for change and implementing supports. The final recommendation speaks to the operations of the Law Society.

Recommendations

Accelerating Culture Shift

Recommendation 1 – Reinforcing Professional Obligations

The Law Society will review and amend, where appropriate, the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, and Commentaries to reinforce the professional obligations of all licensees to recognize, acknowledge and promote principles of equality, diversity and inclusion consistent with the requirements under human rights legislation and the special responsibilities of licensees in the legal and paralegal professions.

26. The Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct outline the professional and ethical obligations of lawyers and paralegals. The Working Group recommends that in order to ensure that licensees infuse the principles of equality, diversity and inclusion into their everyday practice, the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct and/or the Commentaries be reviewed to determine how this objective can be advanced.

Recommendation 2 – Diversity and Inclusion Project

The Law Society will work with stakeholders, such as interested legal workplaces, legal associations, law schools and paralegal colleges to develop model policies and resources to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees.

27. The Working Group recommends that the Law Society engage in a collaboration between, for example, legal associations, government legal departments, the Law Firms Diversity and Inclusion Network (“LFDIN”), Legal Leaders for Diversity and Inclusion (“LLD”), sole practitioners, licensees in private practice, and law schools to develop and support diversity and inclusion policies, programs and practices intended to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees. The project would focus on the following areas:
- Developing resources on competency hiring, unconscious bias training, barriers to inclusion in the workplace, affinity group development, contract compliance and best practices within firms and workplaces;
  - Considering the assignment of work and career development, particularly understanding the impact of cultural homophily on career development,<sup>33</sup> and
  - Working with law schools to create or provide better sources of information on what is needed to apply, interview and succeed in a larger legal workplace. This could include enhancing or using the On Campus Interview (“OCI”) process for the dissemination of information. This would also include outreach to the National Committee on Accreditation (“NCA”) candidates.
28. The proposed project would build upon the Law Society’s experience with its Justicia Project, created in 2008 with the goal of retaining and advancing women in private practice. The project saw more than 55 law firms voluntarily sign agreements with the Law Society to develop practical resources for law firms and women lawyers. The Justicia resources addressed topics such as: leadership, career advancement, business development, flexible work arrangements and parental leave.
29. A number of participants in the engagement and consultation processes supported the creation of a diversity project similar to the Justicia Project.
30. During the consultation process, the Working Group received feedback from a number of legal workplaces that were actively engaging in work related to enhancing diversity and inclusion in their workplaces. The Working Group also heard from legal workplaces that would benefit from support in developing diversity and inclusion policies and practices.
31. The Working Group concluded that a Justicia-type project would benefit the professions by creating a space where legal workplaces can openly discuss challenges in addressing the barriers faced by racialized licensees in the professions and by creating a forum to document and share best practices. Furthermore, legal workplaces could develop, in advance and with the support of the Law Society, policies that they will be required to have in place under Recommendation 3.

32. Currently, a number of large firms are engaged in a collaborative diversity initiative through the LFDIN and in-house counsel through LLD. Unlike the Justicia Project, which was focused on private practice, the proposed project would bring together legal workplaces from various practice environments and practice areas, in addition to associations and law schools to discuss overlapping concerns and to work on collaborative solutions.
33. In 2009, the Law Society of England and Wales (“LSEW”) created the Diversity and Inclusion Charter (the “Charter”). The LSEW describes the Charter as follows:

The purpose of the Charter is to help practices turn their commitment to diversity and inclusion into positive, practical action for their businesses, staff and clients. This is achieved by helping practices to record and measure their procedures against a set of diversity and inclusion standards and by providing them with opportunities to share best practice advice and guidance with colleagues from across the profession. To date over 300 practices have signed up to the Charter, representing more than a third of all solicitors in private practice.

The Diversity and Inclusion Charter is a public commitment by legal practices to promote the values of diversity, equality and inclusion throughout their business. Whether it's through recruitment, retention, career progression or training and development, all our signatories are committed to improving opportunities for people in the legal profession, regardless of their background or circumstances.<sup>34</sup>

34. Practices that commit to the Charter are required to report biennially and show how well they are meeting their Charter commitments, and where more work needs to be done. Practices complete an online self-assessment report about their progress and performance. The results are published in aggregate by the LSEW and used to identify trends, successes and areas for improvement.
35. The Charter is accompanied by a set of protocols to help practices fulfil their commitments in key areas, such as reporting and monitoring, flexible working and procuring legal services. In addition, checklists, best practice guidance, case studies and toolkits are available.
36. The LSEW has also developed diversity and inclusion standards to help the signatories complete their annual self-assessment form. The standards help to show how well a legal practice is complying with equality legislation, regulation and equality and diversity standards. The Diversity and Inclusion Standards are accompanied by best practice guidance that provide examples of positive diversity and inclusion practices, as well as advice on where to get more help or information.
37. The Barreau du Québec, following a consultation regarding the challenges faced by racialized licensees practising in Québec, developed a three-year action plan, which includes creating Justicia-type project to increase the recruitment, retention and advancement of racialized licensees.<sup>35</sup> In June 2016, the Barreau launched Projet Panorama, a project aimed at recruiting, retaining and advancing lawyers from ethnocultural groups within law firms and legal departments in Québec.<sup>36</sup> Participants have committed to compiling demographic statistics, sharing and implementing best practices, measuring progress in terms of hiring, retention and advancement, implementing measures to enhance diversity and inclusion, and publishing annual reports of work accomplished.<sup>37</sup>

Recommendation 3 – The Adoption of Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Principles and Practices

The Law Society will:

- 1) ~~require every licensee to adopt and to abide by a statement of principles acknowledging their obligation to promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally, and in their behaviour towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public; see note at page 4 a~~
- 2) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy for their legal workplace addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement, which will be available to members of the professions and the public upon request;
- 3) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to complete, every two years, an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment for their legal workplace, to be provided to the Law Society; and
- 4) encourage legal workplaces to conduct inclusion surveys by providing them with sample templates.

38. Some licensees are employed by non-licensees, including, for example, in-house counsel. Both employers and employees in legal workplaces have obligations under the Human Rights Code. Licensees have professional obligations with respect to human rights established by the Rules of Professional Conduct or the Paralegal Rules of Conduct. For licensees employed by non-licensees, the human rights/diversity policy contemplated by this recommendation is a policy in respect of their individual obligations addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement, which may of course be addressed by the employer's policy.

39. To ensure the consistent implementation of this recommendation, the Law Society will guide licensees in the development of statements of principles, and legal workplaces in the development of policies and self-assessment tools. In consultation with legal workplaces, it will develop resources, such as templates, guides and model policies.

40. Recognizing that sole practitioners and small legal workplaces may have limited resources, the Working Group has determined that the requirements under Recommendation 3 (2) and Recommendation 3(3) should apply to legal workplaces of at least 10 licensees; however, legal workplaces comprised of less than 10 licensees are strongly encouraged to develop human rights/diversity policies and complete equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessments.

41. It is anticipated that the nature of the policies and self-assessment tools will vary based on the size and type of legal workplace. As a result, we propose that the Law Society, through the diversity and inclusion project described in Recommendation 2, develop the templates for the statements of principles, policies and self-assessment tools in collaboration with legal workplaces that wish to participate in the project. We believe that this approach would increase the awareness of legal workplaces, begin the cultural shift, create greater buy-in and allow for the development of resources that take into account the realities of legal workplaces.
42. The Working Group believes that the Law Society should minimize unnecessary burdens, and recognize that many licensees and workplaces have already moved forward proactively with equality measures on their own. Licensees and workplaces will be free to adopt templates and model policies where appropriate to their needs, or to create their own statements of principles and policies that include the elements covered by the Law Society's sample documents, but tailor them to their specific contexts.
43. The stages for the implementation of this recommendation would be as follows:
- Stage 1: In 2017, the Law Society would communicate to the professions the requirements outlined in Stages 1-3.
  - Stage 2: By January 1, 2018, licensees would be required to have adopted and to abide by a statement of principles, and each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario would be required to have a human rights/diversity policy as described above.
  - Stage 3: The 2017 Lawyer Annual Report ("LAR") and Paralegal Annual Report ("PAR"), which would be completed by licensees in early 2018, and every annual report thereafter, would ask licensees to indicate whether or not they have adopted, and are abiding by, a statement of principles. The 2017 LAR and PAR would also ask licensees in designated legal workplaces to indicate whether or not their legal workplace has a human rights/diversity policy.
  - Stage 4: By the end of 2018, and every two years thereafter, the Law Society would require a representative of each designated legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to engage in a diversity and inclusion self-assessment. Legal workplaces would then report to the Law Society on whether they had completed the self-assessment and, if not, explain their reasons for not having done so.
44. The Working Group believes that requiring licensees to make a clear commitment to equality, diversity and inclusion will encourage licensees to consider their individual roles in creating lasting change.
45. Section 4.1 of the commentary under section 2.1-1 of the Rules of Professional Conduct reads as follows:

A lawyer has special responsibilities by virtue of the privileges afforded the legal profession and the important role it plays in a free and democratic society and in the administration of justice, including a special responsibility to recognize the diversity of the Ontario community, to protect the dignity of individuals, and to respect human rights laws in force in Ontario.<sup>38</sup>

46. Similarly, section 2.03 of the Paralegal Rules of Conduct state “the principles of the Ontario Human Rights Code and related case law apply to the interpretation of this rule [the rule on Harassment and Discrimination].”<sup>39</sup>
47. A number of consultation participants supported the Law Society’s role in setting guidelines for equality, diversity and inclusion in the professions and requiring legal workplaces to report on their progress in this area. As one group of consultation participants noted, “This would increase the accountability and transparency of legal workplaces in their treatment of racialized licensees, while encouraging a culture of compliance across the province.”<sup>40</sup>
48. The Working Group considered requesting that legal workplaces voluntarily adopt policies. The research and the consultation process, however, made clear that the challenges faced by racialized licensees are both longstanding and significant. In our view, the Law Society must take a leadership role in giving legal workplaces reasonable, but fixed, deadlines to implement steps that are important to achieve lasting change. Indeed, many of these steps have been taken, or will be taken by legal workplaces voluntarily, because of their acknowledged importance.
49. The Working Group concluded that required minimum standards of equality, diversity and inclusion will reinforce the human rights responsibilities of licensees — obligations already required by the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct and, more generally, the Human Rights Code. Furthermore, as the Ontario Human Rights Commission (“OHRC”) notes:

In addition to addressing obligations under the Human Rights Code, the adoption and implementation of an effective anti-racism vision statement and policy has the potential of limiting harm and reducing liability. It also promotes the equality and diversity goals of organizations and institutions and makes good business sense.<sup>41</sup>
50. It is the Working Group’s intention that legal workplaces will take this opportunity to implement comprehensive equality, diversity and inclusion policies, and will consider whether progress is being achieved by engaging in periodic self-assessment.
51. Some organizations have adopted a similar approach by creating a “comply or explain” approach. For example, the Ontario Securities Commission (“OSC”) requires companies regulated by the OSC to disclose the following gender-related information: the number of women on the board and in executive positions; policies regarding the representation of women on the board; the board or nominating committee’s consideration of the representation of women in the director identification and selection process; and director term limits and other mechanisms of renewal on their board.<sup>42</sup> The OSC requires companies to either report their implementation or consideration of the items listed above, or to explain their reasons for not doing so.

52. The Working Group's recommendation that legal workplaces of at least 10 licensees in Ontario complete a self-assessment about diversity performance, and report the results to the Law Society stems from an intention to have legal workplaces engage in dialogue and reflection on the current state of diversity and inclusion within their workplace, and an intention to encourage legal workplaces to work proactively to advance diversity and inclusion efforts.
53. The Working Group has reviewed the Canadian Bar Association's ("CBA") guide Assessing Ethical Infrastructure in Your Law Firm: A Practical Guide for Law Firms.<sup>43</sup> The document was drafted to "assist lawyers and firms by providing practical guidance on law firm structures, policies and procedures to ensure that ethical duties to clients, third parties and the public are fulfilled".
54. The document contains a detailed self-evaluation tool for firms, the CBA Ethical Practices Self-Evaluation Tool, which outlines 10 key areas of ethical infrastructure and provides questions related to firm policies and procedures under each identified area.<sup>44</sup>
55. The self-evaluation tool is modelled on the approach used in New South Wales for regulation of incorporated legal practices. Rather than being required to follow specific rules, the firms are required to self-assess whether their practices and policies are effective in ensuring professional conduct and to establish practices and policies that are effective in their specific context. The result has been a two-third reduction in client complaints for firms regulated in this way.<sup>45</sup>
56. A similar approach has been used for the assessment of diversity performance. The U.S.-based Minority Corporate Counsel Association has developed the Diversity Self-Assessment Tool for Law Firms, in an effort to "stimulate thought and open a dialogue within a firm regarding how to advance its diversity efforts."<sup>46</sup> Firms are asked to assess diversity performance in the following areas: leadership and commitment, professional development, recruitment and retention, representation/demographics, workplace culture and diversity, and external face of the firm.
57. The Law Society of England and Wales ("LSEW") also asks firms that have signed on to its Diversity and Inclusion Charter to complete a self-assessment (discussed previously in Recommendation 2).

58. In addition to the information gathered through the self-assessment, legal workplaces would be encouraged to conduct their own comprehensive inclusion surveys to establish benchmarks and identify and address concerns related to workplace culture. The Law Society has developed a number of model policies and guides to assist law firms in their efforts to ensure that their policies and practices are in keeping with equality and diversity principles. Again, the Law Society would develop sample inclusion survey templates, which would be shared with the profession.

Measuring Progress

59. The Working Group proposes, based on the consultation findings and our review of the literature and best practices on measuring systemic change that both the Law Society and legal workplaces should partner in collecting and analyzing qualitative and quantitative information about diversity. The Law Society would collect demographic data through the annual LAR and PAR, and qualitative information through a periodic questionnaire and a quadrennial province wide cultural inclusion survey similar to the one conducted by Stratcom on behalf of the Law Society in 2013. Legal workplaces of a sufficient size would obtain both quantitative and qualitative information about their workplaces in order to analyze the results, and ultimately an inclusion index would be published by the Law Society.
60. The 2012 CBA guide, Measuring Diversity in Law Firms: A Critical Tool for Achieving Diversity Performance, identifies two types of data for measuring a law firm's diversity performance — self-identification data and diversity climate data. Self-identification data is collected “to assess the representativeness of [a] firm's workforce”<sup>47</sup>, whereas diversity climate data is “focus[ed] on the perceptions and attitudes about diversity held about the members of the firm.”<sup>48</sup>
61. The collection of both self-identification data and diversity climate or inclusion data provides a more complete picture of diversity and inclusion in the professions. In Data & Diversity in the Canadian Legal Community, Dean Lorne Sossin and Sabrina Lyon, basing their conclusion on extensive interviews, a review of ongoing policy initiatives and a comprehensive analysis, state “generating rigorous and meaningful data, both quantitative and qualitative, would advance a culture of inclusion and accountability in the Canadian justice community.”<sup>49</sup>

Recommendation 4 – Measuring Progress through Quantitative Analysis

Each year, the Law Society will measure progress quantitatively by providing legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees in Ontario with the quantitative self-identification data of their licensees compiled from the Lawyers Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report in a manner consistent with the best practices established to protect licensees vulnerable to harm that may

62. Since 2009, the Law Society has collected demographic data based on race, Indigenous identity, gender, Francophone identity, disability, and lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer (“LGBTQ”) identity through the Lawyer Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report. Self-identification questions were included in the annual reports to inform the Law Society of the extent to which the professions are reflective of the broader community they serve, to help meet the needs of the public, and to develop programs to enhance the diversity of the professions. These demographic data are analyzed and published in aggregated form under the following categories: age, year of call, type of employment, size of firm (for those in private practice), and region.<sup>51</sup>
63. In the consultation paper, the Working Group highlighted the importance of gathering and maintaining demographic data, providing the following reasons for engaging in this practice:
- a. Firms can demonstrate that they value equality, diversity and inclusion in their firm’s culture;
  - b. Maintaining demographic data allows firms to monitor diversity in recruitment and advancement and to adjust policies and practices accordingly;
  - c. Diversity, and data on diversity, assist firms in attracting a strong talent base at all levels. The pool of law students is increasingly diverse, and so is the pool of legal talent. Graduating law students are often interested in the diversity characteristics of the legal workplaces to which they can apply;
  - d. Such data can be a tool to increase a firm’s competitiveness. Numerous large clients in the U.S., and now in Canada, issue requests for proposals (“RFPs”) to select their legal counsel, requiring firms to produce demographic data of their workforce. For example, the Bank of Montreal’s Legal, Corporate & Compliance Group (“LCCG”) requires disclosure of a firm’s diversity statistics as part of its RFP process for legal suppliers;<sup>52</sup>
  - e. Demographic data assist firms to enhance their client services and professional reputation, and to become role models by ensuring representation at all levels;
  - f. Demographic data provide background and incentives for firms to develop programs that enhance inclusion; and
  - g. The information may assist in developing initiatives to enhance access to justice.

64. Dean Lorne Sossin and Sabrina Lyon, in their article Data & Diversity in the Canadian Legal Community, also underline the importance of data collection, noting that while “collecting and publishing data on diversity will not in and of themselves make the justice community more inclusive, it is difficult if not impossible to see how the justice community could become more inclusive without meaningful data.”<sup>53</sup>
65. The options outlined in the Consultation Paper regarding data collection largely focused on the collection of demographic data, including:
- collecting demographic data of licensees through the LAR and PAR, publicly reporting the demographic data based on firm size and disclosing to firms their own demographic data;
  - working with firms to develop consistent templates for demographic data collection and encouraging firms to collect such data on a regular basis;
  - setting parameters for the voluntary collection of demographic data by firms and requiring firms to report either that they are collecting this information or the rationale for not collecting such data; and
  - setting parameters for mandatory collection of demographic data by firm.
66. Throughout the consultant and community engagements and the consultation process, the Working Group heard concerns from some participants that the information obtained from the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project would be shelved and the project would not result in meaningful change. By engaging in periodic litmus tests of equality and inclusion in the professions, the Law Society will ensure that its efforts to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees are ongoing and will evolve based on the issues identified by the inclusion surveys. As the OHRC notes, “When data is gathered, tracked and analyzed in a credible way over time, it becomes possible to measure progress and success (or lack of it). Budgets, policies, practices, processes, programming, services and interventions can then be evaluated, modified and improved.”<sup>54</sup>
67. The Legal Services Board (“LSB”), the independent body responsible for overseeing the regulation of lawyers in England and Wales, has taken a proactive approach to gathering demographic data. In 2011, the LSB published statutory guidance outlining its expectation of approved regulators to measure levels of diversity and mobility in the legal workforce. Approved regulators, including the Solicitors Regulation Authority,<sup>55</sup> now require all practices they regulate to collect, report and publish data annually on the diversity of their workforce. The LSB has cited transparency as the rationale for requiring the publication of diversity data.<sup>56</sup>
68. Information about the demographic composition of legal workplaces would be compiled through the Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report data, which would comprise of the statistical snapshots of the professions as a whole and the data compiled for each firm. This data would be provided to each legal workplace on an annual basis. In considering privacy concerns of individual licensees and the Law Society’s ability to ensure confidentiality, the

Working Group has suggested that this recommendation be applicable only to legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees in Ontario.

69. The Working Group has considered the input received from the engagements and the consultation process and proposes the following stages for the collection of self-identification data by firm:
- Stage 1: The Law Society would continue to measure the representation of racialized licensees using the information in the 2016 Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report, completed by the professions in 2017, by providing the demographic data in aggregate form to the public as general snapshots of the professions in 2018.
  - Stage 2: The introductory paragraph of the self-identification demographic questions of the 2017 Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report, completed by the professions in 2018, would be adapted to inform licensees of the change in the Law Society's use of the self-identification data.
  - Stage 3: Beginning with the 2018 LAR and PAR, completed by licensees in 2019, the Law Society would prepare a profile (containing, for example, the proportion of racialized partners, associates and other licensed staff) of each legal workplace of at least 25 lawyers and/or paralegals, and would confidentially provide it to each licensee within the workplace.

Recommendation 5 – Measuring Progress through Qualitative Analysis

The Law Society will measure progress qualitatively by:

- 1) asking licensees to voluntarily answer inclusion questions, provided by the Law Society, about their legal workplace, every four years; and
  - 2) compiling the results of the inclusion questions for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees in Ontario and providing the legal workplace with a summary of the information gathered.
70. In implementing this recommendation, the Law Society would take into account issues of privacy and confidentiality. The qualitative information about legal workplaces would be gathered by asking licensees voluntary inclusion questions about their legal workplace using a tool that would allow for the information to be compiled and provided to each legal workplace. This information would be collected by the Law Society with the purpose of tracking trends over time and refining and developing programs and initiatives to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees and other equality-seeking groups.
71. Licensees would be asked about their experiences in their workplaces, including subjects such as career advancement opportunities, feelings of belonging, and experiences of discrimination. The questions would be drafted with the assistance of stakeholders and experts in the diversity and inclusion field. Much like the current demographic questions in the Lawyer Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report, answers would be voluntary. The information would be shared in aggregate form, with legal workplaces of at least 25 lawyers and/or paralegals.
72. The Working Group proposes the following stages for the collection of qualitative data:

- Stage 1: Notice would be provided to the professions in the 2017 Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report, completed by the professions in 2018, of the Law Society's intention collect qualitative inclusion data.
- Stage 2: The Law Society would begin compiling quantitative data of legal workplaces using the 2018 Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report – to be completed in 2019 – and would continue to compile this data every four years thereafter.

Recommendation 6 – Inclusion Index

Every four years, the Law Society will develop and publish an inclusion index that reflects the following information, including, for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees: the legal workplace's self-assessment information (Recommendation 3(3)), demographic data obtained from the Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report (Recommendation 4) and information gathered from the inclusion questions provided by the Law Society (Recommendation 5).

73. The Working Group has considered a number of options for data collection and has arrived at the recommendations to measure progress outlined in Recommendations 3(3) (self-assessment), 4 and 5. The Working Group also believes that accountability and transparency are key to increasing equality and diversity in the professions. Members of the Working Group have considered a number of methods to ensure that these principles are reflected in the recommendations. The Working Group has decided that in addition to gathering qualitative and quantitative data about legal workplaces, the creation and publication of an inclusion index – an index that would include legal workplaces' assessments of their diversity and inclusion-related achievements and that would allow legal workplaces to demonstrate their performance and progress – would advance the goals of equality, diversity and inclusion. The Law Society would create this index and would determine the categories of information to be included in the index, as well as the weight provided to each category.
74. The Working Group is of the view that a public inclusion index would serve the many objectives cited earlier in relation to the benefits of collecting demographic data. The index would be a valuable tool for legal workplaces and the Law Society to determine whether there is progress in the professions. Legal workplaces could also use the index to attract prospective clients and to recruit talent.
75. A number of consultation participants as well as courts and commentators<sup>57</sup> have stated that to truly understand the equality and inclusion climate in a workplace, it is necessary to look at both quantitative and qualitative data. Sossin and Lyon exemplify this perspective, noting that “a blended ‘index’ of quantitative and qualitative factors best responds to the need for outcomes to matter (how many diverse lawyers a legal workplace is able to recruit relative to the available pool of candidates) and the need for inputs to matter (a legal workplace's policies, participation in proactive recruitment, establishing an inclusive firm culture, etc.).”<sup>58</sup>

76. As Sossin and Lyon note, “the process of collecting and disseminating qualitative and quantitative data is not just an end in itself (to promote transparency, accountability, profile, etc.) but a means to developing responsive and effective policies [...] a range of innovations are already in place to build on – from mentorship programs, to career orientation and outreach, to equity and inclusion officers within legal workplaces, to media and public information campaigns.”<sup>59</sup>
77. The LSEW publishes an annual diversity and inclusion report, which includes the results of self-assessments completed by the signatories to the Diversity and Inclusion Charter. According to the LSEW, “all signatories are required to self-assess against a set of standards and report on diversity data across their organisation, with smaller practices responding to a set of questions tailored to the needs of smaller firms”.<sup>60</sup> Although the data is collected by firm, it is published in aggregate form. In 2015, 341 firms submitted their self-assessment information to the LSEW.
78. For the last 10 years, the Black Solicitors Network (“BSN”), also based in the UK, has published The BSN Diversity League Table, a comprehensive report on diversity and inclusion in the legal profession, on an annual basis. The LSEW is the main sponsor of this initiative. According to the LSEW:
- The Diversity League Table has become an invaluable resource for the legal profession. Each year, the performance of participating law firms and chambers is measured across a range of demographic profiles. This provides an opportunity for firms to compare their performance against peers across key areas. The Diversity League Table also offers an opportunity to monitor the sector as a whole, facilitating a more diverse and transparent profession.<sup>61</sup>
79. The LSEW further notes that the LSEW Diversity and Inclusion Charter and the BSN Diversity League Table are complementary initiatives, as they both “provide comprehensive data sets [and] promote collaboration in equality and diversity matters and best practice across a range of key business areas”.<sup>62</sup>
80. The Diversity League Table includes aggregate demographic data based on gender, ethnicity, LGBTQ and disability status, published by firm. Firms also provide information about policies & practices, specifically addressing the following categories: Monitoring; Leadership and Policy; External Face; Staff Development and Support; and Recruitment, Promotion and Retention. Firms are then given a score and a rank, based on the quantitative and qualitative data obtained. In 2015, 56 firms and chambers participated in the Diversity League Table.<sup>63</sup>
81. A number of organizations have developed similar inclusion indices, detailing aggregate inclusion information about legal workplaces and workplaces in other industries.<sup>64</sup>

82. The Law Society believes that stakeholder participation in the development of the inclusion index is important, such as the participation of the LFDIN, LLD and associations with mandates to represent racialized licensees.
83. The Working Group suggests that the Law Society create a similar inclusion index to those described above, which would reflect the demographic information about the composition of each legal workplace and would include scores and rankings based on the presence or lack thereof of equality-related policies and practices. The Law Society would report this information by legal workplace for all legal workplaces with over 25 licensees. The Law Society would begin publishing the inclusion index in 2019 and would update the index every four years.

Recommendation 7 – Repeat Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project Inclusion Survey

The Law Society will conduct inclusion surveys with questions similar to those asked in Appendix F of the Stratcom Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Final Report (March 11, 2014) (available online at <http://www.stratcom.ca/wp-content/uploads/manual/Racialized-Licensees-Full-Report.pdf>) The first inclusion survey will be conducted within one year of the adoption of these recommendations, and thereafter every four years, subject to any recommendation by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee to Convocation.

84. The Stratcom survey was sent to all licensees, both racialized and non-racialized, in 2013. The anonymous 35-question survey included questions on topics such as: career opportunities and professional growth; disrespect and disadvantage; career setbacks; barriers to entry and advancement; and stereotyping.
85. In order to evaluate the success of the proposed initiatives and to identify any potential areas where barriers to inclusion may remain, the Working Group proposes repeating the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project inclusion questions within the abovementioned timeline. The proposed timeline is based on the Working Group's understanding and acknowledgement that systemic change will take time to occur. Four years was seen as an appropriate timespan for changes to take hold.

Recommendation 8 — Progressive Compliance Measures

The Law Society will consider and enact, as appropriate, progressive compliance measures for legal workplaces that do not comply with the requirements proposed in Recommendation 3 and/or legal workplaces that are identified as having systemic barriers to diversity and inclusion.

86. The Working Group, having outlined some mandatory initiatives in the aforementioned recommendations, recognizes that there must be mechanisms in place to deal with non-compliance. The Working Group recommends that the Law Society take a progressive compliance approach with legal workplaces that do not meet the requirements outlined in the recommendations. The Working Group envisions a gradation of responses, beginning with remedial approaches, such as meeting with representatives of legal workplaces to discuss concerns with their policies and/or practices, to disciplinary approaches if there is deliberate non-compliance with requirements, despite multiple warnings, or no efforts are made to address systemic barriers.

Educating for Change

Recommendation 9 – Continuing Professional Development (CPD) Programs on Topics of Equality and Inclusion in the Professions

The Law Society will:

- 1) launch a three hour accredited program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions;
  - 2) develop resources to assist legal workplaces in designing and delivering their own three hour program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions, to be accredited by the Law Society; and
  - 3) require each licensee to complete three hours of an accredited program focused on equality and inclusion within the first three years following the adoption of these recommendations and one hour per year every year thereafter, which will count towards the licensee’s professionalism hours for that year.
87. The Working Group recommends that the Law Society launch an innovative accredited program focused on topics such as equality and inclusion in the professions to assist licensees with promoting these principles. The Law Society would also support legal workplaces in developing their own programs that could be accredited by the Law Society. This would allow legal workplaces and legal associations to build their capacity in this area while addressing the needs of their membership base. The Law Society would work with associations to develop criteria for accreditation and to assist legal workplaces and legal associations in developing their own accredited courses. Programs could be delivered in any format already approved under the eligible education activities criteria available on the Law Society website.
88. In order to create awareness and engagement of the professions, the Law Society would require each licensee to complete three hours of an accredited program focused on equality and inclusion within the first three years following the adoption of these recommendations and one hour per year every year thereafter. . These programs count towards professionalism CPD requirements for the year in which the hours were taken. The monitoring of these activities to confirm completion of hours would be the same as any monitoring conducted to confirm completion of professionalism hours. No additional oversight would be required.
89. Training sessions could cover topics such as unconscious bias, the impact of daily verbal, behavioural and environmental indignities, the value of diversity and inclusion, understanding power and privilege and addressing discrimination and harassment.

90. The Working Group also suggests that the Law Society, as part of its commitment to providing accessible education, offer an online program on topics related to equality and inclusion in the professions. Such program could contain a video presentation with best practices and links to resources, for licensees who wish to complete their professionalism requirements in an online environment. If delivered online, the program could consist of integrated learning modules with integrated polling or test questions, as already done in various contexts including the Accessibility for Ontarians with Disabilities Act training and existing Law Society CPD programs.
91. The Working Group considered the option that the Law Society provide voluntary accredited CPD programs on topics such as equality and inclusion in the professions. However, the Working Group has determined that participation in equality and inclusion-related education is essential to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees. The OHRC notes, in its Policy and Guidelines on Racism and Racial Discrimination, that “mandatory education, training and development initiatives” may be required for an anti-racism policy and program to be effective.<sup>65</sup>
92. The Working Group initially considered training that would focus on “cultural competence”. Ritu Bhasin, a lawyer consultant in this area, defines cultural competence as “how we connect with people who are different than us” or “The ability to relate to others comfortably, respectfully and productively.”<sup>66</sup> A significant number of consultation participants agreed that mandatory CPD would assist in addressing the challenges faced by racialized licensees. A number of consultation participants emphasized the need for training to be delivered through an anti-discrimination or anti-oppression lens. The same participants noted discomfort with the term “cultural competence” due to the focus on understanding difference or “the other” as opposed to encouraging reflection on power and privilege. Consequently, the Working Group has chosen to focus the training on the principles of equality and inclusion, incorporating concepts of unconscious bias and cultural homophily.
93. The Rules of Professional Conduct speak to the responsibility of lawyers to recognize the diversity of the Ontario community. Both the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct require that licensees protect the dignity of individuals and respect human rights laws in force in Ontario. Equality and inclusion training will assist licensees in understanding their obligations under the rules.

Recommendation 10 – The Licensing Process

The Law Society will include the topics of cultural competency, equality and inclusion in the professions as competencies to be acquired in the Licensing Process.

94. The Working Group wishes to integrate the topics of cultural competency, equality and inclusion into the Licensing Process, as appropriate, including within the reference materials for licensing, and in any program or course work that is completed during the Licensing Process.

95. A number of consultation participants emphasized the importance of incorporating teachings of equality and inclusion into the Licensing Process. For example, one participant noted that integrating cultural competence training in the Licensing Process would be “well-suited to ensuring that a strong foundation of diversity awareness and cultural consciousness is in place from the beginning of an individual’s legal career.”<sup>67</sup>
96. The Entry-Level Solicitor Competencies and the Entry-Level Barrister Competencies both include the following section under Ethical and Professional Responsibilities:
19. respects human rights (e.g. does not engage in sexual harassment, discrimination or other human rights violations) (Rules 6.3-0 and 6.3.1. (Part of 24)
97. Additionally, under Client Communications, both sets of competencies include the following:
192. recognizes and is sensitive to clients’ circumstances, special needs and intellectual capacity (e.g. diversity, language, literacy, socioeconomic status, disability, health).
98. Similarly, the Paralegal Competencies, under Ethical and Professional Responsibilities, read:
3. Maintains appropriate professional relationships with clients, other licensees, employees and others (e.g. does not engage in sexual harassment, discrimination and human rights violations, respects multi-cultural issues).
99. Under section 27(2) of the Law Society Act and section 8(1) of By-Law 4, Licensing, a recipient of a lawyer or paralegal licence is also required to be of good character. The Law Society has indicated that adherence to human rights and equality principles should be considered in a determination of good character. The November 2013 Submission on The Federation of Law Societies of Canada’s National Suitability to Practise Standard Consultation Report<sup>68</sup> identifies that “specific reference to respect for and adherence to human rights and equality principles sends an important message to those entering the professions.”
100. The Working Group believes that the integration of equality and inclusion information, presented through an anti-discrimination or anti-oppression lens, will assist in preparing candidates to be competent members of the professions.

Implementing Supports

Recommendation 11 – Building Communities of Support

The Law Society, in collaboration with legal associations where appropriate, will provide support to racialized licensees in need of direction and assistance through mentoring and networking initiatives.

101. In considering this recommendation, the Working Group noted that in November 2013, the Law Society created a Mentoring and Advisory Services Proposal Task Force to consider mentoring

<sup>68</sup> “Federation of Law Societies of Canada – Suitability to Practise Standard” – Report to Convocation, November 21, 2014 – Professional Regulation Committee, online: The Law Society of Upper Canada http://www.lsuc.on.ca/uploadedFiles/For\_the\_Public/About\_the\_Law\_Society/Convocation\_Decisions/2013/convov2013\_PRC.pdf

and advisory services models. The Working Group provided input to the Task Force on the development of models to best address the needs and facilitate the success of racialized licensees. The Task Force provided its final report to Convocation in January 2016. Convocation approved the creation of a law practice and advisory services initiative, which, at the outset of its implementation, "...will focus on providing supports for already identified communities of need, namely, sole practice and small firm licensees, new licensees, racialized licensees, those seeking succession planning supports and those within certain defined practice areas."<sup>69</sup>

102. Data gathered through the LAR and PAR show that 24% of racialized lawyers are in sole practice and 33% of racialized lawyers practice in legal workplaces of two to five. Similarly, 25% of racialized paralegals are in sole practice. Engagement and consultation process participants highlighted the vulnerability of racialized sole practitioners in the professions — emphasizing the need for sole practitioners and licensees in small firms to have strong mentors and networks. The Working Group also recognizes that it is essential to be responsive to the needs and challenges of racialized licensees in a broad range of practice/work settings and practice areas, which will require approaches that are not "one size fits all".
103. The Law Society currently offers mentorship initiatives that will be enhanced by the new Law Practice Coach and Advisor Initiative.<sup>70</sup> Additionally, the Law Society, in partnership with legal associations and community groups, offers educational programs to promote discussion among members of the professions and the public on the challenges and opportunities for Francophone, Indigenous and equality-seeking communities in the legal professions. These Equity Legal Education events are often followed by networking receptions for members of the professions.
104. The Working Group heard that there is a need for increased, and in some cases, revamped, mentoring and networking initiatives to combat the isolation faced by racialized sole practitioners and racialized licensees practising in small firms. In considering potential mentoring and networking initiatives to support racialized licensees, the Working Group has identified the following objectives:
  1. Encourage the development of communities of support in the professions, including facilitating the search for multiple points for direction and assistance (e.g. peers, subject-matter experts, ethics sounding boards);
  2. Increase the capacity of legal associations to reach more licensees for trusted, nonjudgmental advice; and
  3. Foster connections for licensees who feel isolated, recognizing that feeling professionally isolated is not limited to those in small firms and sole practitioners or those in certain practice areas.

105. The Working Group highlighted the importance of working with legal associations in meeting the abovementioned objectives. The Working Group is also mindful of different types of mentoring, including both advisory services and coaching.<sup>71</sup>
106. As a first step, the Working Group proposes the following:
- Enhanced use of technology to facilitate the development of communities of trust;
  - Enhanced networking opportunities.

107. The Working Group believes that any successful mentorship initiative should reach racialized licensees across the province. This proposal would involve the robust use of technology to increase the ability of racialized licensees to access information and support, with the goal of enhancing learning, competence and success. For example, the Law Society could work with associations of racialized licensees, where appropriate, to create an online resource centre for racialized lawyers and paralegals. This resource centre could act as a hub to bring together the various mentorship initiatives available around the province. The resource centre could include materials geared toward the needs, concerns and unique situations of licensees in sole practice, associations of sole practitioners and small partnerships. Resources could cover topics such as finding a mentor, action plans for mentor-mentee relationships, networking, and the benefits of joining associations. The resource centre could also include a forum for racialized licensees to discuss topics relevant to their practice environments and a podcast series on a range of topics related to race and racism in the professions and supports for racialized licensees.
108. The Working Group has also considered an initiative that would involve working with stakeholders, existing mentoring groups and others to develop the technology that would allow any licensee (racialized or otherwise) to have access to a diverse group of mentors. It may be helpful to ask licensees to indicate whether they are interested in participating in such a program when they fill out their LAR or PAR or through other methods, such as the Law Society Portal. Alternatively, mentors and mentees could be matched using a mobile application (app) with programmed algorithms to increase the potential of having successful relationships. Similar mobile apps have been created to assist with the search for a mentor or mentee in other industries.<sup>72</sup> For example, Menteer, a free, open source online platform,<sup>73</sup> works to match job seekers and mentors. Potential mentors and mentees are asked to answer a series of questions about their skills, interests and backgrounds to assist with finding suitable matches to meet their needs. Mentees are provided with a number of mentor profiles, which the algorithm has

109. This project involves reviewing current practices around Law Society events and events co-hosted with equality-seeking legal associations to ensure that networking events are affordable, inclusive and relevant to licensees.

Recommendation 12 – Addressing Complaints of Systemic Discrimination

The Law Society, in light of the findings of this project and emerging issues in the professions, will:

- 1) review the function, processes and structure of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC), including considering effective ways for the DHC to address issues of systemic discrimination;
- 2) revise the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, where appropriate, so that systemic discrimination and reprisal for complaints of discrimination and harassment are clearly identified as breaches of professional conduct requirements;
- 3) create effective ways for the Professional Regulation Division to address complaints of systemic discrimination; and
- 4) create a specialized and trained team to address complaints of discrimination.

Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC)

110. The Working Group recommends that the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC) undergo a review of its function, processes and structure. Although the DHC Program does not maintain self-identification information about complainants, it is noteworthy that for the 10-year-period of 2003 to 2012, only 16% of complaints of discrimination were based on race, 3% on ethnic origin, a nominal number on ancestry and place of origin, while 26% and 50% of complaints were based on the grounds of disability and sex, respectively. This is in contrast with the applications received at the Human Rights Tribunal where 22% of applications are based on race, 16% on colour, 17% on ethnic origin, 15% on place of origin and 13% on ancestry with 54% of applications based on disability and 25% based on sex, pregnancy and gender identity.<sup>75</sup> The lower proportion of race-based complaints to the DHC Program warrants a review of the DHC Program to identify possible barriers to accessing that program, more particularly by members of the racialized, Indigenous and disability communities.
111. In Fall 2016, the Law Society's Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee commenced a review of the DHC Program. The objective of this review is to identify how this role can be better used to address discrimination and harassment in the professions, including systemic discrimination, while keeping in mind the independent arms-length position of the DHC and the duty of the DHC to maintain the confidentiality of any individuals who use the Program.

Rules of Professional Conduct and Paralegal Rules of Conduct

112. The Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct outline the responsibility of licensees to respect human rights laws — more specifically, not to engage in discrimination or harassment. The Law Society may investigate complaints of systemic discrimination; however, this is not widely known. The Working Group recommends explicitly stating in the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct that systemic discrimination is considered a violation of the rules. The Working Group also recommends that the rules make clear that reprisal for complaints of discrimination and harassment is prohibited.

Specialized Professional Regulation Team

113. The Working Group recognizes that racism is complex and can manifest itself in subtle ways. The Working Group recommends that the Law Society create a specialized team of Professional Regulation staff members to address complaints of racial discrimination. The members of this team would undergo extensive training on issues of race and racism in order to prepare them to effectively handle these types of complaints.

Review Professional Regulation Processes to Effectively Address Systemic Discrimination

114. Along with the creation of a specialized team of Professional Regulation staff members to address complaints of discrimination, including racial discrimination, it is suggested that the Law Society review its complaints process to consider ways to collect data from different sources and identify instances of systemic discrimination. It is recommended that the Law Society consider specific processes to effectively address systemic discrimination.
115. Racialized consultation participants described discriminatory experiences that had serious impacts on their careers, including career opportunities and earnings. Some described experiences of overt discrimination, such as situations of being on the receiving end of racist jokes, comments or assumptions.
116. In addition to the barriers identified through the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project, in its 2009 Aboriginal Bar Consultation<sup>76</sup>, the Law Society found that 26% of Indigenous lawyers felt that their Indigenous status was a negative factor in their experiences in the professions and the majority stated that they attributed their feeling to the racism and discrimination that they faced in their work experiences.
117. It is clear from the Working Group's engagement and consultation processes that discrimination based on race is a daily reality for many racialized licensees; however, many participants stated that they would not file a discrimination complaint with the Law Society for various reasons, including fear of losing their job, fear of being labeled as a troublemaker, and other reprisal-related concerns. Participants also noted that although racism can be experienced on an individual basis, racial discrimination can also be institutional or systemic in nature. Participants did not believe that an effective process was available at the Law Society to address systemic complaints. The Working Group heard from a number of participants who stated that a system of anonymous complaints would assist in alleviating some of the concerns about reporting cases of racial discrimination.

118. The Task Force on Misogyny, Sexism and Homophobia in Dalhousie University Faculty of Dentistry, which was mandated to inquire into a significant number of sexist, misogynist, and homophobic remarks and images posted on Facebook by fourth year male dentistry students at Dalhousie University, noted the pressing need for anonymous reporting mechanisms so that victims can protest such conduct without putting themselves at risk. This proposal was raised as a result of many who spoke to the Task Force about the need to be able to make anonymous complaints, especially in cases of sexual harassment and sexual assault. The Task Force notes “The biggest concern about anonymous complaints is that there is no way to effectively assess the merits of a particular complaint. However, a group of anonymous complaints all reflecting the same concern provides a signal that there may be a problem that requires some attention. Soliciting anonymous complaints for this purpose could be very useful.”<sup>77</sup>
119. Princeton University allows for anonymous complaints of discrimination, harassment and other violations of policies and regulations through an independent provider of hotline services. Complainants can submit a report online or by calling a free hotline to speak with a trained specialist.<sup>78</sup> Similarly, the City of Copenhagen in Denmark has developed an anonymous app for people to report incidents of discrimination. The purpose of the app is “to understand how widespread discrimination is and where and which groups are most likely to be targeted.”<sup>79</sup>
120. In 2010, the Nova Scotia Barristers’ Society (“NSBS”) launched a successful postcard campaign. The purpose of this campaign was “to raise awareness and generate feedback about gender harassment and discrimination in the legal profession.” Licensees were encouraged to share their experiences of gender harassment and discrimination by submitting accounts of their experiences via anonymous postcards.<sup>80</sup> In 2012, the NSBS noted that over 50 postcards had been received, outlining the experiences and viewpoints of lawyers across Nova Scotia.<sup>81</sup>
121. The Working Group envisions a system through which anonymous discrimination complaints can be made to the DHC. If a certain threshold of complaints about a legal workplace is reached, the DHC can speak with the management of the legal workplace regarding the culture of the workplace and systemic issues. The purpose of these discussions would be remedial, rather than punitive. Proposed solutions could include implementing or adjusting policies and procedures or delivery of educational programs.

122. A review of the functions, process and structure of the DHC should take into consideration the concerns raised through the engagement and consultation processes and the anonymous complaint models outlined above.
123. In addition to feedback about the DHC Program, the Working Group heard concerns from consultation participants that systemic discrimination and reprisal for filing complaints are not explicitly cited as conduct violations in the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct. Although the Law Society may investigate complaints of systemic discrimination and reprisal, the Working Group believes that it is important to state this plainly in the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct so that all licensees and members of the public are aware.
124. The Working Group has also heard that a certain level of expertise is essential in dealing with complaints to the Law Society of racial discrimination, particularly systemic discrimination. A trained team of Professional Regulation staff, equipped to deal with racial discrimination complaints, would assist in understanding and addressing the subtleties that often exist in racial discrimination cases.
125. In addition, racial discrimination often has systemic roots. It is suggested that the Law Society review its processes and consider ways to make them more effective in addressing systemic discrimination.
126. The Working Group believes that in order to create a safe space in which licensees can feel comfortable in making complaints of racial discrimination, including complaints related to systemic discrimination, the Law Society should engage in the abovementioned initiatives.

The operations of the Law Society of Upper Canada

Recommendation 13 – Leading by Example

- 1) The Law Society will continue to monitor and assess internal policies, practices and programs, to promote diversity, inclusion and equality within the workplace and in the provision of services by:
  - a) as required, adopting, implementing and maintaining a human rights/diversity policy addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement;
  - b) measuring quantitative progress through a census of the workforce or other method;
  - c) measuring qualitative progress by conducting inclusion surveys;
  - d) conducting regular equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessments;
  - e) based on the results from b), c) and d), identifying gaps and barriers and adopting measures to address the gaps and barriers;

- f) publishing relevant findings from b), c), d) and e); and
- g) providing equality and inclusion education programs for staff at the Law Society on a regular basis.

2) The Law Society will:

- a) conduct an internal diversity assessment of the bench composition and publicize the results;
- b) provide equality and inclusion education programs for Convocation on a regular basis.

127. The rationale for the adoption of human rights/diversity policies to address fair recruitment, retention and advancement; for measuring quantitatively and qualitatively progress; and for conducting self-assessments is well articulated in this report. The strength of having diversity at the board level is also well documented. The Maytree Foundation, for example, notes that,

Governance is the top tier of leadership, where ultimate oversight, strategic direction and policy are determined. But equally important is the representational role that boards uphold. A lack of diversity at this level has sweeping implications for how underrepresented groups see themselves, their relevance and their place at the decision-making table.<sup>82</sup>

128. During the engagement and consultation processes, participants indicated support for an internal equality audit of the Law Society workforce and the development of a more diverse public face/image for the Law Society, including at the governance level. The Working Group is of the view that the Law Society must take a leadership role and model the change it is seeking to create in the professions, which would include increasing diversity at both the governance and the staff levels, and engaging in the same initiatives and measures proposed to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees in the professions.

129. The Law Society has committed to a number of initiatives to increase diversity and inclusion in the organization:

- Operational Equity Audit: In 2015, with the assistance of Canadian Centre for Diversity and Inclusion (CCDI), the Law Society undertook an Operational Equity and Diversity Audit to assess the services provided to licensees and the public and to determine whether there are barriers that are contributing to inequality or perceived inequality in the provision of those services – in particular, involving members of racialized and Aboriginal communities. The Law Society is currently working through the results of this audit to determine where improvements can be made in its operations.
- Employee Diversity Census and Inclusion Survey: Earlier this year, the Law Society, also with the assistance of CCDI, launched an employee diversity census and inclusion survey. The purpose was to collect data to help the Law Society better understand the make-up of its organization and how to best serve Law Society staff's needs. There was a 72% response rate, which was excellent, and the results will assist with the Law Society's efforts to promote a diverse and inclusive culture that is supportive to all employees.
- Employee Engagement and Enablement Survey: This year the Law Society has also conducted an Employee Engagement and Enablement Survey, assisted by the Hay Group, in order to improve the effectiveness of its organization and enhance communications between management and employees at all levels.

- Bencher Diversity Survey: Convocation has identified conducting a diversity survey of the bencher composition as a priority for this term. We are currently working on finalizing this survey.

130. As mentioned above, both the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct provide that licensees have special responsibility to uphold human rights principles, protect the dignity of individuals and recognize diversity and inclusion. The Law Society is committed to identifying barriers and gaps in its workforce and governance and implementing comprehensive equality, diversity and inclusion initiatives to improve equality, diversity and inclusion.

Results

Summary of Community and Consultant Engagement Process Results

“You work harder to prove yourself. You cannot necessarily do things that your white colleagues can do as there is a different connotation. Generally I have always been told that I have to work harder than my white counterparts. Which in some respects is sadly still true at this day and age.”

— Community Liaison Meeting

The qualitative and quantitative data obtained from the engagement processes identified widespread barriers experienced by racialized licensees within the professions at all stages of their careers.

Key informants, focus group participants and survey respondents identified racialization as a significant factor that shapes the experiences and career outcomes of racialized licensees. The consultant engagement results indicated that racialized licensees have a lower success rate in securing job placements, finding first jobs and securing suitable practice environments. Moreover, racialized licensees felt that they were disadvantaged in law school and that they had not advanced in their careers at the same rate as their non-racialized colleagues.

Racial and ethnic barriers were ranked highly among the barriers to entry and advancement. Forty percent (40%) of racialized licensees identified their ethnic/racial identity as a barrier to entry to practice, while only 3% of non-racialized licensees identified ethnic/racial identity as a barrier. Racialized licensees frequently identified physical appearance, socioeconomic status, place of birth and upbringing, age, manner of speaking English/French and gender identity as barriers — more so than non-racialized licensees. Racialized licensees were also more likely to have struggled to find an articling position or training placement.

Similarly, 43% of racialized licensees identified ethnic/racial identity as a barrier/challenge to advancement, while only 3% of non-racialized licensees identified ethnic/racial identity as a barrier. Racialized licensees were more likely than non-racialized licensees to believe they had not advanced as rapidly as colleagues with similar qualifications.

Racialized participants identified a number of specific challenges faced in the professions. Community liaison process participants, key informants and focus group participants provided numerous examples of discrimination and stereotyping faced in the everyday professional experiences of racialized licensees. Some experiences were overt, while others were more subtle. Participants spoke of assumptions by members of the professions and clients that racialized lawyers are unskilled employees, interpreters, social workers, students or clients. Participants also identified situations where racialized licensees were excluded from files and client meetings based on personal characteristics. Some participants stated that in some cases, licensees from certain parts of the world were associated with terrorism. The Working Group heard a number of participants say, “you can’t just be good, you have to be better.”

Racialized participants spoke about challenges linked to cultural differences and fit. Many racialized licensees stated that they felt alienated from the dominant culture of firms. They provided examples of firm-related social events, which involved playing hockey, playing golf and drinking alcohol. Some racialized licensees indicated that they did not participate in these activities and therefore they did not “fit”, noting that “fit” was important for entry and advancement. Some participants also stated that they were not offered career opportunities because of their “foreign sounding” names.

Participants spoke in detail about the lack of access for racialized licensees to mentors, networks and role models. Racialized participants indicated that they were not aware of programs or resources available to them. They also noted that they did not have the same professional connections and networks as their non-racialized colleagues and lacked role models in their field within their ethnic communities.

Participants noted that race-based barriers are often complicated by the additional experiences of discrimination based on sex, gender identity, gender expression, disability, sexual orientation, class and creed.

Some participants believed that racialized licensees were more likely to go into sole practice as a result of barriers faced in other practice environments. They also noted that internationally trained lawyers and paralegals face additional barriers in the professions.

Generally, participants noted that the challenges faced by racialized licensees impact the reputation of the legal system in Ontario, affect access to justice for Ontarians and affect the quality of legal services for the public.

Summary of Consultation Process

The Working Group received thoughtful oral and written submissions from the professions regarding strategies to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees.

A. Enhancing the internal capacity of organizations

The Working Group posed the following questions related to this theme in the consultation paper:

- How should the Law Society act as a catalyst for the establishment of diversity programs within firms and why?
- What is the preferred model for the collection of firm demographic data and why?
- How could the Law Society work with in-house legal departments to develop model contract compliance programs for in-house legal departments that retain firms?

Diversity Programs

“We need to encourage firms to be champions of diversity.”

— Participant

Consultation participants showed significant support for the creation of diversity programs for the recruitment, retention and advancement of racialized licensees in legal workplaces. Participants reminded the Working Group that a “one size fits all” approach should be avoided — firm size, industry and geographical location should be considered if the Law Society is to develop diversity programs.

A number of participants supported the idea of creating a diversity project modelled on the Law Society of Upper Canada’s Justicia Project. Such a project would include the development and adoption of resources for the fair recruitment, retention and advancement of racialized licensees.<sup>83</sup> Participants were divided, however, on whether diversity programs should be mandatory or voluntary. Some participants noted that voluntary programs create buy-in and a willingness to create change. A number of participants stated that it is important to have “diversity champions” who will lead change from the top-down. Participants outside of the Greater Toronto Area (GTA) that work in small firms saw the value of voluntary programs as small firms may lack the resources to implement mandatory programs. Some participants noted that mandatory programs could create backlash.

Participants in favour of mandatory programs argued that mandatory programs create stronger awareness of equality and diversity issues. One participant, who had experience with employment equality programs, said that it is necessary to have an enforcement mechanism in place. Other participants believed that, at the very least, the Law Society should require legal workplaces to have equality and diversity policies in place. Some participants suggested that the Law Society ask licensees to answer questions related to their firm’s policies in the annual report in order to prompt change. Although it was suggested by some that requirements could include mandatory targets for the number of racialized licensees that must be interviewed or hired by legal workplaces; the majority of participants were strongly opposed to the creation of mandatory hiring targets and timelines.

Some participants supported the proposal that firms complete a self-assessment about their diversity performance, which would include more than an analysis of demographic data. One participant stated:

Beyond numbers, look at the ways in which interactions are made, the ways in which people are hired, anti-nepotism policies, mentoring programs. All of these things are bigger pieces of the diversity pie.

The majority of participants interested in this idea indicated that the self-assessment should be voluntary; however, the Law Society could provide incentives for firms to engage in this process. There were some participants who were in support of mandatory self-assessments that would be conducted by employees instead of firm management to garner more valuable results. Additionally, participants stated that the Law Society should provide legal workplaces with self-assessment templates and tools.

Collecting Demographic Data

— Participant

The Working Group heard a broad range of views on the issue of demographic data collection; however, most participants agreed that the collection of data would be, as one participant noted, “a humble but important first step”. Some participants believed that mandatory data collection is crucial to advancing diversity and inclusion, while others believed that mandatory collection could halt the progress that is already being made by legal workplaces in the area of equality and diversity.

Participants on the side of mandatory collection had a number of suggestions related to the methods of collection and reporting. The majority of participants, including those in small firms and outside of

Toronto, were in favour of the Law Society collecting demographic data. Some participants suggested that the Law Society could use the data collected in the annual report to provide legal workplaces with their individual legal workplace demographic data and aggregate demographic data of legal workplaces of similar size and location to provide a benchmark. Participants also noted that it would be useful to capture information about inclusion and advancement in addition to numbers. Some participants in favour of mandatory reporting stated that, in order to encourage change, the demographic information for each firm should be publicly available.

Participants in favour of voluntary data collection noted that a number of large firms are already engaging in demographic data collection and inclusion surveys, and are committed to this work. Should the Law Society mandate data collection, it could have a negative effect on the work already being done. Participants from small firms indicated that they are unsure how mandatory data collection would be enforced. Some participants believed that demographic data should be reported, but on a voluntary basis. A number of participants suggested setting data collection as a criterion of a voluntary diversity program. The Law Society could then incentivize data collection by providing ratings or awards for meeting certain levels of diversity and inclusion.

Contract Compliance

“The case for diversity and inclusion has a business foundation”
— Participant

The Working Group heard that the Law Society could play a facilitative role by encouraging corporate procurement policies that consider suppliers that promote equality and diversity. A number of participants highlighted the Bank of Montreal’s contract compliance program and the work of the Legal Leaders for Diversity (“LLD”) as best practices in this area. Some participants suggested that the Law Society work with LLD, other in-house counsel associations and firms to develop model diversity-related procurement and contract compliance policies.

Some participants noted that they would discourage mandatory contract compliance as often people respond better to incentives rather than punitive consequences. Some participants from small firms pointed out that strict mandatory contract compliance related to diversity could be difficult for small firms and lead to them being unable to compete for work.

B. Mentoring, advisory services and networking

The Working Group posed the following questions related to this theme in the consultation paper:

- What are the preferred mentoring and/or advisory services models for racialized licensees?
- What are the preferred networking models for racialized licensees?

Mentoring and Advisory Services

“Mentoring is not one size fits all.”
— Participant

The majority of participants in the consultation process emphasized the importance of mentoring for racialized licensees; however, ne group of participants noted that, some cases, mentoring “...serves to reproduce institutional inequality and assist white licensees in securing inclusion within social institutions and the professions”.

In November 2013, Convocation created the Mentoring and Advisory Services Proposal Task Force (“Mentoring Task Force”) to consider mentoring, advisor and other support services for lawyers and paralegals. The Working Group worked with the Task Force and shared with the Task Force members the information obtained on mentoring and advisory services from the consultation process. In January 2016, Convocation approved a new law practice coaching and advisory initiative, which “...will assist in the development of competent legal professionals by supporting the growing need in the professions for short-term advisor supports addressing file-specific and substantive/procedural matters, and longer term coaching supports to foster best practices.”<sup>84</sup>

Types of Mentoring and Advisory Services

Generally, the Working Group heard that there is no “one-size-fits-all” model for mentoring. Different types of mentoring may be required at different stages of a person’s career for different purposes. For example, mentoring could be offered to provide assistance on specific cases or it could be related to how to navigate the professions as a racialized licensee.

A number of participants highlighted the importance of providing mentoring for sole practitioners and internationally trained lawyers. Paralegal participants told the Working Group that there is a shortage of mentoring programs in the paralegal community and thus a significant need. Other participants noted that racialized licensees in large firms do not have role models within their firms so would benefit from some assistance to find mentors from outside their firms.

A significant number of participants emphasized that sponsorship<sup>85</sup> is also essential to the career advancement of racialized licensees, noting that it would be helpful to have sponsors or champions advocating for individual licensees at decision-making tables.

Structure of Mentoring and Advisory Services

Some participants stated that it would be useful to have a panel of mentors who could address different facets of a licensee’s career, including providing advice on navigating barriers, substantive legal issues or career advancement. Participants also noted that mentoring should be provided to students before law school, to address pipeline issues, and in law school.

A number of legal workplaces described their mentoring programs and expressed interest in working collaboratively with the Law Society to help licensees in need of mentoring. One way in which this could take place is using enhanced website services and creating a highly functional and welcoming online mentoring community with links to partner legal workplaces. As many legal workplaces have their own websites, the Law Society could function as a connector to these kinds of services. Participants also suggested that the Law Society develop, in collaboration with legal workplaces, best practices toolkits and/or guidelines on mentoring.

Participants proposed various mentoring models including one-on-one mentoring with various mentors for different purposes, study groups with licensees who have similar challenges and group mentoring to assist with practice management and career advancement. Some participants suggested that junior licensees could also mentor other junior licensees from the same racialized community. In a similar vein, some participants stated that junior racialized licensees could act as effective mentors to senior non-racialized licensees.

Participants noted that it is often difficult to find willing and experienced mentors. One participant for example noted difficulties finding racialized mentors because, “we are not grooming racialized lawyers to become leaders.” Some participants suggested that the Law Society could ask licensees to indicate in the annual report or using another methodology such as the Law Society Portal, their willingness to act as mentors. The Law Society could then create a mentor roster. Similarly, other participants suggested having a web-based registry for mentors, which could include the mentors’ area of law and their time availability. Incentives for mentors could include the receipt of professionalism hours for mentoring services or discounted CPD programming. Some participants believed that the Law Society should compensate mentors, while others believed this would negatively impact the mentor-mentee relationship. Participants suggested that mentors should be culturally competent.

Participants outside of the GTA highlighted specific issues related to mentoring in their regions. A number of participants noted that the majority of professional associations that represent equality-seeking groups do not operate outside of the GTA, which limits access to association-based mentoring programs. One participant stated that if mentoring was to be offered in-person, it should be geographically accessible for licensees in areas across the province.

Networking

“Have more inclusive events.”
— Participant

Many participants stated that associations of racialized lawyers and paralegals are beneficial for fostering collaboration and creating a sense of belonging. Some participants suggested that it would be useful for the Law Society to facilitate collaboration between the various associations and/or to promote already-existing networking opportunities provided by the associations.

Some participants told the Working Group that legal associations are often too costly to join. One group of participants suggested that the Law Society provide subsidies to racialized licensees to assist them to join associations.

Some of the associations also described concern with the cost of holding events for their sectors of the bar at the Law Society and expressed interest in having “in-kind” support and partnership from the Law Society to make those events accessible to diverse communities of lawyers.

Some participants proposed that the Law Society hold regional networking events for licensees. Others noted that CPD programs can be good networking opportunities. However, some participants stated that the cost of CPD programs can be prohibitive and suggested that the Law Society provide low-cost or sliding scale CPD programs. One participant suggested that the Law Society “host planned and structured networking events that are, in location and content, culturally relevant to different groups of racialized licensees.” Some participants noted that hosting alcohol-free events would increase inclusivity.

Participants highlighted the fact that internationally trained lawyers and sole practitioners feel particularly isolated, so networking opportunities should also be targeted to these groups.

C. Enhancing cultural competence in the professions

The Working Group posed the following question related to this theme in the consultation paper:

- How could the Law Society enhance the professions' cultural competence through its CPD programs?

CPD Programs

"We need to be educated about diversity."

— Participant

A large number of participants were in favour of the Law Society requiring licensees to participate in mandatory CPD training on cultural competency, unconscious bias, and anti-racism. Some participants suggested that refresher sessions should be mandated "at intervals over the course of licensees' careers."

Others suggested that this CPD training be provided on a voluntary basis. There was concern expressed that requiring this form of training to be taken by all could be counter-productive. In either case however, participants agreed that professionalism credits should be provided CPD training on these topics.

In terms of content, participants suggested that cultural competency training should go "beyond learning about cultural practices of 'other' cultures and towards an examination of bias, inequality and discrimination". Similarly, one participant noted that the Law Society should "utilize an anti-discrimination, anti-racism and anti-oppression framework focused on deconstructing power structures and privilege — not on cultural competency." Participants also suggested that the Law Society work with associations of racialized licensees and/or with knowledgeable experts to develop content for the training sessions.

Some participants highlighted the importance of requiring licensees involved in recruitment, hiring and promotion decisions to participate in CPDs related to cultural competency and unconscious bias, specifically addressing topics such as bias-free interviews. One participant stated, "If attitudes don't change, the numbers are not going to change." Participants suggested that this CPD programming could be offered via webcast during summer student and articling interview periods. It was also proposed that the Law Society deliver these programs and other cultural competence and anti-discrimination and harassment programs at firms.

A number of participants noted the need to ensure that education on cultural competency, unconscious bias, anti-racism and anti-oppression start at law school and in the Licensing Process. A participant suggested that the Law Society use its seat on the Federation of Law Societies to encourage the inclusion of cultural competency and diversity awareness as part of the core law school curriculum. One group of participants suggested adding a cultural competency course to the college curriculum for paralegal programs. Some participants proposed including cultural competency, diversity and inclusion in the Professional Responsibility and Practice Course that articling students must complete.

It was proposed that all benchers attend cultural competency training in order to enhance awareness at the governance level and ensure that equality, diversity and inclusion are taken into account throughout the policy development process.

Generally, participants stated that CPD programs should be widely available via webcast and recorded. Additionally, some participants suggested that the cost of CPD be reduced, perhaps by working with regional associations.

D. Discrimination and the role of the complaints process

The Working Group posed the following question related to this theme in the consultation paper:

- How should the Law Society best ensure that complaints of discrimination are brought to its attention and effectively addressed?

Complaints of Discrimination

“People have to feel comfortable in accessing policies.”
— Participant

The Working Group heard a range of suggestions on encouraging licensees to bring forward complaints of discrimination.

Participants suggested updating the Rules of Professional Conduct<sup>86</sup> and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct<sup>87</sup> to specifically address systemic discrimination and subtle forms of discrimination. Some participants recommended advertising that complaints of discrimination can be made through the complaints process and devoting more resources to promoting the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program.

Participants noted that licensees will often refrain from reporting experiences of discrimination because they fear the negative impact a complaint might have on their careers and reputations. One participant stated, “We don’t want to rock the boat or be considered a troublemaker”.

Some participants were in favour of the Law Society creating an anonymous system of receiving complaints. However, licensees in small firms said this would not be helpful for them as their firms are too small for them to remain anonymous. Some participants that supported an anonymous complaints process recommended that the Law Society investigate firms that have been the subject of a number of anonymous complaints. Participants also suggested amending the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct to include a provision that states that reprisals for complaints of discrimination and harassment are prohibited.

Participants believed that bringing a complaint through an association may not alleviate the issues raised. Some participants suggested that the Law Society ask licensees, using the annual report, whether they have ever experienced discrimination. This information could then be compiled by legal workplace and provided to legal workplace management. Other participants proposed that the Law Society audit firms to ensure that they have policies related to equality, diversity, discrimination and harassment.

Regardless of the method taken to receive complaints, participants noted that it is important for the Law Society to advise complainants of what action was taken.

Some participants noted it would be helpful to have a group of diverse expert Professional Regulation staff who are trained in cultural competency and have an understanding of racial discrimination.

E. The operations of the Law Society of Upper Canada

— Participant

The Law Society received support from participants for its proposals to enhance its current equality compliance program, conduct an internal equality audit, collect further data on the regulatory process and develop a more diverse public face/image for the Law Society. A number of participants have emphasized that the Law Society must model the change it is seeking to create in the professions, which would include increasing diversity at both the governance and the staff levels, and engaging in the same initiatives and measures proposed to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees in the professions.

On a few occasions, participants at the meetings and open houses noted the lack of diversity of Working Group presenters. Working Group members attended and presented at open houses and meetings when their schedules permitted, and at some meetings, the group of presenters did not reflect the diversity of racialized licensees at those meetings. That became a point of discussion with participants expressing concern about the overall diversity of Convocation, but also expressing satisfaction that there are non-racialized benchers who are interested in being part of change and in hearing from licensees on these subjects. It is important to note that a bencher election was conducted during the consultation process and the composition of Convocation appears to be more racially diverse than ever and representative of the professions.

White Privilege

Consultation participants spoke of “white privilege”<sup>88</sup>, and expressed the need for all to acknowledge its existence in order to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees. A number of participants noted that it is important for licensees to understand how power operates to produce advantages for some and deny advantages to others.

Daily Verbal, Behavioural and Environmental Indignities

Consultation participants provided descriptions of their experiences of commonplace daily verbal, behavioural, and environmental indignities, whether intentional or unintentional, that communicate

<sup>88</sup> The Ontario Human Rights Commission defines “privilege” generally as ‘unearned power, benefits, advantages, access and/or opportunities that exist for members of the dominant group(s) in society. It can also refer to the relative privilege of one group compared to another. “Policy and guidelines on racism and racial discrimination”, online: Ontario Human Rights Commission <http://www.ohrc.on.ca/en/book/export/html/2475>

hostile, derogatory or negative racial slights.<sup>89</sup> Examples ranged from assumptions that they are not licensees but in fact interpreters or accused, to inappropriate questions regarding their perceived “otherness.” Participants noted that it is important for licensees to understand the impact of such behaviour and for the Law Society to find ways to address these subtle forms of discrimination.

Indigenous Licensees and Racialized Licensees: Historical and Geographical Differences

Open house learning and consultation programs in Northern Ontario yielded interesting information about the similarities and differences between the experiences of Indigenous licensees and licensees that self-identify as racialized. Participants in Thunder Bay noted that, in terms of race and racism, the population in northern areas of the province is often divided into Indigenous and non-Indigenous peoples. Participants identified several examples where they had witnessed racism directed at Indigenous people and where they had observed that racialized people were treated differently from non-racialized people. It was noted that because of the distinctive histories of Indigenous peoples, strategies to respond to racism faced by Indigenous peoples and to racism faced by racialized peoples may need to differ. The Law Society’s policy work reflects this uniqueness, including the work of the EAIC and other initiatives that are outside the scope of this project. The Law Society is also currently developing a framework of reconciliation in consultation with the Indigenous Advisory Group, established in 2016 with the Law Society to guide the Law Society and the legal community towards a better understanding of how to address unique issues faced by Indigenous peoples in Ontario and promote responses to and implementation of the Calls to Action from the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada’s final report and the First Nations Representation on Ontario Juries report by The Honourable Frank Iacobucci.

TREASURER’S REMARKS

The Treasurer welcomed those joining Convocation by webcast.

The Treasurer recognized that the meeting is held in Toronto, which is a Mohawk word meaning “where there are trees standing in the water”, and thanked the First Nations people who lived and live in these lands for sharing them with us in peace. The Treasurer also acknowledged that Convocation is meeting on the traditional territory of the Mississaugas of New Credit First Nation, acknowledged the Haudenosaunee, and recognized the long history of all First Nations in Ontario and the Métis and Inuit peoples.

The Treasurer advised that December 2, 2016 Convocation will be held in the Lamont Learning Centre.

The Treasurer expressed condolences to the family of former appointed benchers Robert Tebbutt, of Toronto and Andrew Coffey of Thunder Bay, who recently passed away.

The Treasurer informed Convocation of the work of the Treasurer's Appointments Advisory Group, and the urgent request for nominees for the federal Judicial Advisory Committees for Ontario, and encouraged benchers to provide names of appropriate individuals for consideration.

The Treasurer informed benchers of The Action Group (TAG)'s very successful Access to Justice Week, and noted the interest expressed in the Law Society's Public Perceptions of Access to Justice in Ontario study. The Treasurer congratulated Sabreena Delhon, Law Society staff, for her efforts in supporting this event.

The Treasurer announced the formation and composition of the Legal Aid Working Group and referred to its terms of reference at Tab 12 of the Convocation materials.

The Treasurer informed Convocation of various outreach initiatives and meetings, including the Federation of Law Societies of Canada's meeting in St. Andrews-by-the-Sea, New Brunswick, a meeting with the Treasurer's Liaison Group and various conferences, including that of the Federation of Ontario Law Associations (FOLA).

The Treasurer congratulated Sandra Nishikawa on receiving the Lawyer of Distinction Award at the Federation of Asian Canadian Lawyers' 10th Annual Conference and Gala on October 29, 2016.

The Treasurer advised of upcoming events, including the Remembrance Day ceremony tomorrow, Louis Riel Day on November 17, 2016, and the Paralegal Welcome Reception on December 1, 2016.

The Treasurer advised that nominations are now open for the Law Society Awards, and that nominations close on January 27, 2017.

REPORT OF THE CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICER

Mr. Lapper presented the Chief Executive Officer's Report for information.

CEO's REPORT

This has been a particularly busy period for operations at the Law Society. Since my last report to Convocation in June 2016, outside of day to day regulatory activities the organization has focused much of its efforts on the following initiatives:

- Budget planning for 2017 and beyond;
- Review of Professional Regulation Division processes and structure;
- Development and launch of the new Coach and Advisor Network program;
- Administration and ongoing review of LibraryCo and library services;
- Development and roll-out of the Share-Point based case management system for the Law Society Tribunal;
- Completion of a risk assessment to support the Relationship Management System Project;
- Completion of a Law Society Diversity Census and Inclusion Survey;
- Completion of an Employee Engagement and Enablement Survey;
- Ongoing work on various policy initiatives including Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees, review of the Law Practice Program, advertising and fees, and Compliance-Based Entity Regulation;
- Continuing support of TAG - The Action Group on Access to Justice.

This report will provide an overview of operational trends and activities and policy and other initiatives that are currently underway or in development to support strategic priorities.

STRATEGIC PLANNING UPDATE

We continue to make very good progress on Convocation's strategic priorities. Since the last update in June, work has advanced on a number of initiatives, some mentioned later in this report – an extension of the LPP for another two years and a comprehensive analysis of the licensing process, a disclosure policy framework for PRD investigations, launch of the new coach and advisor network ("CAN"), implementation of our mental health strategy, a new task force on governance and the final report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group. Work on other initiatives is ongoing, including our policy development "rethink" and the diversity survey of benchers.

In addition to operational work plans related to the priorities, in September the Treasurer set out his expectations for policy work during his term in his memoranda to committee chairs, linked to the strategic plan's priorities. In this report, I aim to show that the priorities are being achieved in an effective, efficient way.

2016 BUDGET UPDATE AND DEVELOPMENT OF THE 2017 BUDGET PLAN

Financial Reporting

Interim financial statements for the third quarter for the Law Society, LawPro and LibraryCo have been reviewed by the Audit & Finance Committee and are reported to Convocation this month. The Society is on track to exceed its 2016 budget expectations and its financial position remains strong. Some specific notes are:

- The Lawyer General Fund incurred a surplus of $4.8 million compared to a surplus of $2.6 million in 2015 and a break-even position for the prorated budget period.
- The Paralegal General Fund generated a surplus of $1.3 million at the end of the third quarter compared to $945,000 for 2015 and a budgeted deficit for the period of $243,000.
- The main revenue sources are above budget and all of the major expense categories on the financial statements are less than budget.

- There was a deficit of $927,000 in the Lawyer Compensation Fund as claims incurred to date exceed budgeted funding for the year.
- The projection for 2016 year end is for a surplus of approximately $4 million in the combined Lawyer and Paralegal General Funds.

Planning for the 2016 year-end audits has been ongoing and the Audit & Finance Committee met with PWC in November to formalize these plans.

Budget

The 2017 Budget process has completed its normal cycle of review by the Audit and Finance Committee in September and October. Convocation approved the budget on November 9, which sets the annual fee for lawyers at $1,916 and for paralegals at $1,046, an increase of $50 for both professions, with an option to reduce the fee by $50.00 if it is paid by pre-authorized debit (see below).

Operational Activities

The Finance department is working with the Audit & Finance Committee to ensure appropriate accountability and fiscal responsibility by organizations funded by the Law Society such as the Federation of Law Societies, FOLA and the Law Commission of Ontario.

The Finance department processes the applications for the Parental Leave Assistance Program. The number of applicants approved continues to decrease below projections estimated during program development. To the end of September 2016, payments for the year total $128,000. The budget funding request for 2016 was $200,000. For the 2017 budget, the fund balance ($437,000 at September 30, 2016) is sufficient will not require a further contribution to the Parental Leave Assistance Plan for 2017.

The Society introduced electronic fee billing in 2015. Along with this, an on-line application process for payment by preauthorized electronic debit was also created. With the automation of the application process, a second preauthorized payment plan (PAP) option in addition to the existing monthly PAP has been introduced for 2017. This annual PAP plan withdraws the balance on their account in the first week of February each year. There is no administration fee for this plan. In the 2017 budget, a discount of $50 (prorated by fee category, $25 for 50% fee and $12.50 for 25% fee) will be offered to members enrolling in this plan.

Since my last report, the Finance department is currently conducting or has conducted its periodic review of the following policies:

- Investment Policy – changes are being assessed to slightly increase the equity component of the asset mix;
- Treasurer and Benchers Expense Reimbursement and Remuneration Policies – the assessment is still in the early stage;
- Business Conduct Policy – periodic update including assessment of whistleblowing provisions;
- Compensation Fund Balance Policy - reducing the minimum balance from three one-in-one hundred year events to one one-in-two hundred year event.

LibraryCo

The Finance department continues to provide financial services to LibraryCo through the Administrative Services Agreement that includes preparation of financial reports, development of the annual budget and administrative assistance to county associations on financial matters. The Law Society is working with the other shareholders of LibraryCo (Federation of Ontario Law Associations and Toronto Lawyers' Association) to set a direction for the evolution of libraries and library services going forward. In November, Convocation approved LibraryCo's budget for 2016, incorporating a contingency for the transition process and increased funding to county libraries.

REGULATION

COMPLAINTS, INVESTIGATIONS AND PROSECUTIONS

Complaint Trends

Complaint trends fluctuate year by year. While 2013 showed a noticeable increase in new cases, a downward trend in 2014 continued in 2015. In 2016, the downward trend has reversed. Between January 1 and October 31, the Division received 4016 new complaints, an increase of approximately 2% from the same period in 2015. An analysis of the complaints received during the period reveals the following:

- consistent with previous years, approximately 75% of new complaints involve lawyers and 12% of new complaints involve paralegals.
- sole practitioners and licensees in small firms (up to 5 licensees) continue to receive the largest number and proportion of complaints (approximately 74% for lawyers and 93% for paralegals).
- as in other years, the highest proportion received contain service related issues (approximately 50% of all new complaints) followed by integrity issues (46% of all new complaints), governance issues (17% of all new complaints), financial issues (10% of all new complaints) and conflict issues (8% of all new complaints).
- the highest proportion (30%) of new complaints received by lawyers and by paralegals continues to be in the area of civil litigation, for lawyers, in family and real estate law and for paralegals, in criminal/quasi-criminal matters.

Investigations

The focus in the investigating departments, particularly in the past 5 months, has been on the backlog of cases in the departments. A number of process changes and strategies have been instituted and with the additional resources which Convocation initially approved in February 2016 (and included in the approved 2017 budget), staff have effectively increased the number of case completions and reduced investigation inventories. To date, the inventory of investigations has decreased to a total of 2322 complaints, down from an inventory of 2493 complaints at the beginning of 2016.

In the first 10 months of 2016, 3817 complaints have been closed at the end of the investigative phase. Of these 3817 complaints:

- 111 (3% of all closings), a substantial increase over 2015, have been closed with diversion (e.g. invitation to attend, letter of advice, practice review/spot audit recommendation, undertaking, mentoring).
- 550 complaints were closed with a staff caution or best practises advice in 2016 to date.

The number of reports received of lawyers engaged in mortgage fraud remains at an average of about 2.5 per month. However, the inventory of investigations remains lower than in previous years (42% fewer than at the end of October 2015). In addition, the number of matters proceeding to Discipline remains low (5 licensees in 2016 to date). The Investigations department continues to closely track and regularly monitor these matters for timely completion.

Advertising & Fee Issues

One of the early steps taken by the new Executive Director, Professional Regulation was to form a strategic priority team within the Professional Regulation Division to undertake investigations and, where required, prosecutions in the area of advertising and referral fees. The creation of this team will facilitate a timely and focused response to these issues. The work of the team is informed by the work of the Advertising & Fee Issues Working Group, to ensure that policy focused attention is brought to bear on the Law Society's regulatory response. There are currently approximately 90 cases involving advertising and referral fees that are under active investigation.

Discipline

The number of new matters coming into Discipline fluctuates from year to year. The number of licensee / applicant matters coming into the department in the first 10 months of 2016 appear to be similar to the numbers in the same period in 2015. However, the number of Notices issued by Discipline to commence a proceeding before the Hearing Division has increased.

As at October 31, 2016, Discipline had issued a total of 140 Notices: 110 Notices of Application (conduct and capacity prosecutions), 12 Notices of Referral for Hearing (good character and reinstatement/terms dispute prosecutions) and 18 Notices of Motion for interlocutory suspension/restriction. In 2014, a total of 124 Notices were issued and in 2015 a total of 142 Notices were issued.

The number of motions for interlocutory suspension / restrictions (18 as at October 31) have increased from the 14 issued in all of 2014 and the 14 issued in all of 2015.

Court Decisions

In 2016, the Law Society received ten decisions from the Ontario Superior Court; and eight decisions from the Court of Appeal.

Seventeen of these matters were initiated by a licensee or an applicant for a license. The Law Society initiated one matter and brought two cross appeals.

Issues considered by the courts in these decisions included:

- Prematurity of court intervention regarding constitutional issues that can be heard by the Law Society Tribunal – DioGuardi Tax Law et al
- Jurisdiction to award costs when a licensing application is abandoned after the notice of hearing is issued but prior to the commencement of good character hearing on the merits – Riddell
- Penalty – the effect to be given to delay in an investigation in what would otherwise be a revocation case – Abbott
- Jurisdiction to provide relief sought – Speck, Amiri
- Failing to perfect application/extension of time for motion for leave – Ebagua, Amiri
- Delay by licensee in seeking appellate relief – Coady
- What is a final order – Kivisto
- Factors to be considered in a motion for delay – Totera
- Ability to raise new issues on appeal – Molson
- Costs awarded as a result of the recusal of panellists – James
- Validity of the presumptive disposition of revocation – Bishop
- Jurisdiction of the Law Society to regulate in-court civility, the definition of civility and the duty to advocate zealously – Groia

Trusteeships, Compensation Fund And Monitoring & Enforcement

Between January 1 and October 31, 2016, Trustee Services has obtained 14 new formal trusteeship matters, which are dealt with in the Superior Court, and 17 formal trusteeships have been completed and closed. An additional 39 cases have been opened in which guidance and information has been provided on how to wind up a licensee's practice. The department has received 1211 and closed 1061 requests from clients and others concerning licensees' practices.

Between January 1 and October 31, 2016, a total of 143 applications for compensation have been received by the Compensation Fund: 131 claims involving 45 lawyers and 12 claims involving 9 paralegals. During this period, a total of 29 claims have been granted: $2,798,897 has been paid on 93 claims against 26 lawyers and $36,221 has been paid on 18 claims against 7 paralegals. The Compensation Fund continues to carry a number of potential claims related to a very high-profile real estate loss.

In the period from January 1 to October 31, 2016, Monitoring & Enforcement has:

- collected a total of $410,658 in costs, including $311,005 in discipline costs
- received 79 new undertakings to be monitored. This represents an increase from the number of new undertakings received in all of 2015 (63) and 2014 (58).
- received 125 new orders to be monitored.
- received and responded to 3944 regulatory inquiries involving 4431 licensees.

PROCESS AND STRUCTURAL CHANGES IN THE PROFESSIONAL REGULATION DIVISION

The Professional Regulation Division is currently undergoing a restructuring process. The key changes can be summarized as:

- more robust, early triage and resolution carried out by a larger Intake Resolution department
- merger of the Complaints Resolution and Investigations departments
- creation of new multi-functional Enforcement teams with different types of Investigators and Discipline Counsel working together in teams
- creation of an Technology & Evidence Control department to enhance the Division's ability to receive, produce, manage and control electronic data.

Transitional planning is already underway and a multi-functional team is already underway on a pilot project basis. Throughout 2016, steps have been taken to streamline processes and increase efficiencies. The new organizational structure will come into effect on February 6, 2017. Next steps are to design the physical changes required to fully implement the new structure.

ADMINISTRATIVE SUSPENSION DUE DILIGENCE

In addition to the over 1500 notices and reminders that were published to licensee LSUC Portal accounts this quarter, the staff in the CSC continue to uphold due diligence standards regarding licensee administrative obligations.

For example, during the Annual Report suspension follow-up process, the By-Law Administration Services Department has sent 128,411 automated emails to licensees reminding them of their filing obligation. At the end of the 60 day default period, 2,584 licensees had yet to file their Annual Report and staff in the CSC will attempt to personally contact each licensee at least one final time. Law Society staff similarly followed up with 957 licensees who had not fulfilled their CPD obligations and 2149 licensees who did not fulfill their Annual Fee obligations.

QUALITY ASSURANCE

Practice Audits

In addition to continuing to provide proactive supports to law practitioners and law practices across the province, Practice Review and Spot Audit have conducted a number of presentations as part of their outreach program to licensees to support ongoing learning related to establishing and maintaining viable and vibrant practices. During 2016, Practice Review developed a CPD webcast for paralegals on how to assess practice management processes to improve efficiencies. Reviewers have also responded to invitations to present on practice management topics to various law associations, such as Prescott, Peel and Hamilton, and to the University of Ottawa Business Law Clinic.

Outreach to paralegal practitioners included best practices presentations to paralegal classes at both Algonquin and Conestoga Colleges, and to the Ontario Paralegal Association.

Spot Audit has been actively involved on a number of educational presentations to the Law Society's Professional Conduct and Practice in Ontario program, the Ontario Bar Association, the Barrie Real Estate Law Association and the Peel Real Estate Law Association to discuss Spot Audit processes and a variety of financial books and records topics.

Spot Audit and Practice Review representatives were present at the June 9th Sole Practitioner and Small Firm Conference's "Ingenious Bar" to respond to licensees' questions on the Practice Review and Spot Audit programs, books and records, and practice management systems. The Spot Audit and Practice Review outreach initiatives continue to be well received and appreciated by licensees, and reinforce the importance of the Law Society's Competence Mandate and focus on providing proactive assistance.

PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT AND COMPETENCE

The Professional Development and Competence Committee evaluated the Pathways Pilot Project and proposed enhancements to the licencing process in its September 2016 Report. As a result of careful consideration of the 93 public submissions from individuals, 104 individual comments linked to a petition and 32 submissions from organizations, associations, legal clinics, law schools and others, the Committee recommended that the Pathways Pilot Project be continued for two years and that a complete review of the licensing process be undertaken. PD&C will develop a plan to implement this review which will include an engagement strategy to involve relevant stakeholders throughout the process.

Continuing Professional Development

While the CPD department has kept the number of unique programs it produces at 90 for the last several years, and then provides replays bringing the actual amount of program offerings to between 125 and 140 per year, it has been making changes to operations and planning in 2016 to vary those offerings. This provides additional flexibility and CPD opportunities for members.

For example, the team increased the number of replay programs offered, from 34 in 2015 to 58 in 2016 and offered replay programs in July and August for the first time, so that lawyers and paralegals could watch them during the sometimes-quieter summer months. These replays were well received, with the August programs attracting an average of 72 registrants at each. While members can purchase any CPD program to view "on demand" at their convenience after the live date for the program, some members prefer viewing the archive at a scheduled time. The group will offer summer replay programming again in 2017.

Five online eCourse titles were produced in 2016, adding to the current stable of 13 eLearning programs. eCourses are a popular alternative (or adjunct) to attending traditional CPD programs for many members.

While the trend of live, in-person attendance continues to decline in favour of the flexibility of webcast viewing - currently at a ratio of four who watch the webcast for every one live attendee, the large one and two-day Summit programs maintain a high demand related to on-site attendance. These flagship programs, held in core practice areas including real estate and family law, among others, provide an annual forum for practitioners to come together for networking, to share ideas and stories and to experience their professional learning within a community environment. These programs account for a significant portion of the organization's net CPD revenue. The team is currently planning a new cross-disciplinary two-day program, to be held in November 2017 that will be similar to the Special Lectures series which the Law Society previously hosted. To commemorate the country's sesquicentennial, the focus for this special program will be on constitutional law issues and its impact in several practice areas. The Symposium will culminate in the publication of a hard-bound volume of materials authored by its speakers.

We continue to work on refinements to the new eCommerce platform, the "LSUC Store" which was launched in mid-May. This new system allows members to log on using their Law Society portal credentials instead of requiring an additional set of user names and passwords as in the previous e-commerce site. This functionality makes ordering easier and more convenient for our members, and improves security by funneling members' sensitive information, such as credit card information, through a dedicated eCommerce platform.

The CPD department, in accordance with the Law Society's strategic priorities, has transformed program planning to ensure that all programs are developed with reference to a draft set of learning competencies at stages of basic, intermediate and advanced levels of learning. This focus assists to better articulate the educational and experiential objectives to be achieved in each practice area throughout a member's professional practice life. The framework will be further refined and finalized in 2017 through a series of consultations with the professions to discuss and validate the listings, and more formally identify the competencies to be covered in CPD programming on a yearly (and multi-year) basis in major practice areas.

Certified Specialist Program

The Law Society's Certified Specialist Program is adding a new area of specialization in Indigenous Legal Issues. This will be the 16th practice area now available through this competence-based credentialing process, which promotes high standards of knowledge, skill, experience and professional conduct to support access to quality legal representation by the public. Development of the new area began in early 2014 and has involved subject matter area experts and senior practitioners from a broad array of practice contexts, client groups and geographical locations to assist with the drafting, review and validation of the standards. Input on the standards was sought from client and professional stakeholder groups. The new specialization in Indigenous Legal Issues is expected to be available to the profession in the fall of 2016.

Practice Supports and Resources

The Department's work has been focused on launching the new Coach and Advisor Network ("CAN"), while maintaining and enhancing the quality of service provided by the Practice Management and the CPD Accreditation teams.

CAN is now online and accepting applications for volunteer Coaches and Advisors. Orientation materials and templates for Coaches and Advisors have been posted on CAN's Resources page and additional training materials and supports will soon be available at no cost through the LSUC store. In November, lawyers and paralegals will be able to submit Requests for Time with a CAN Coach or Advisor and resources to support preparation by those Participants will be available.

CAN has developed "The Introduction to the CAN Coaching Model" program and will offer this skills training in a number of locations throughout the province in the coming year. In addition, CAN is developing e-learning options to ensure that all CAN Coaches will have ready access to quality training.

CAN has initiated contact with the leadership of mentorship programs provided by law associations and legal professional organizations in Ontario. CAN plans to host an information sharing and mentoring best practices event with interested representatives of those organizations before year-end.

The Practice Management Helpline (PMH) has answered more than 7,300 inquiries since the beginning of the year, and anticipates more than 8,000 inquiries by year end, representing a notable increase year to year. Between 2007 and 2015, PMH inquiries steadily increased from 4,337 to 7,423 per year. This is an overall increase of 71%. From January to October 2016, PMH handled 6,951 inquiries, which is a further increase of 9.8% over the same period in 2015. New resources have been developed and existing resources updated to reflect the recent amendments to the Rules of Professional Conduct and paralegal Rules of Conduct. A number of new Practice Tips on emerging technology issues have also been created and are now available online in MP3 and transcribed formats.

CPD Accreditation has developed a comprehensive audit process for Accredited Providers of Professionalism Content to ensure alignment of their programming with the Accreditation Criteria. CPD Accreditation has begun to implement this audit process with 10 of its Accredited Providers.

LICENSING UPDATE

Lawyer Licensing Process

There are approximately 2350 newly registered lawyer licensing candidates in the 2015-16 process which is now well under way, with most candidates having been called to the bar recently. The new group of licensing candidates for 2016-17 have started their process and licensing examinations were held this past June.

The second year of the Pathways Pilot Project is also now completed. The Law Practice Program alternative pathway was selected by 231 candidates for the 2015-16 licensing year – 220 completing the English program with Ryerson University and 11 completing the French program with the University of Ottawa. In the 2016-17 licensing year, there are currently 234 candidates in the English program and 23 candidates in the French program.

In the June 2016 call to the bar ceremonies, the Law Society called 1600 candidates to the Bar of Ontario. In addition to the ceremonial calls held in January and September, and administrative calls throughout the year, it is anticipated that the Law Society will call over 2200 lawyer licensing candidates to the Bar in 2016.

Paralegal Licensing Process

Following the introduction of new accreditation protocols for Paralegal College Programs, which took effect in the 2015-16 academic year for the colleges, 11 intakes of paralegal college programming were not entitled to proceed. This was predominantly due to lack of sufficient enrollment in those intakes. At this time, there are 29 approved paralegal programs, at 45 college campuses, with 64 class intakes on a cohort to cohort basis. Since the inception of the paralegal college program audits for accreditation and ongoing quality assurance, the Law society has conducted 51 rigorous audits and continues to do so.

LEGAL INFORMATION AND LIBRARY SERVICES

The Great Library is moving toward providing additional space for use by members, in response to needs expressed by members themselves. They have finished transitioning the Riddell print collection of historic books donated by Justice Riddell to new high-density shelving. This compact, rolling shelving has freed up significant storage space in the basement of Osgoode Hall, which the library will now fill with older parts of the print collection shifted from the Main and first floors of the library. These shifts will eventually culminate in increased research space on the main floor of the library.

Corporate Records and Archives continues to work on SharePoint related projects related to document retention and tracking protocols. In particular, they have been working closely with Information Technology staff for the past year and are close to a working prototype that will enable document tagging within SharePoint by Law Society staff. Once in place, this will provide a foundation for a SharePoint-based records centre in 2018.

POLICY, EQUITY AND PUBLIC AFFAIRS (PEPA)

Advertising and Fee Arrangements Issues

As referred to above, the Advertising and Fee Arrangements Issues Working Group is considering the issues raised in the Working Group's paper of June 2016 and the submissions received following a call for feedback. The Working Group is examining issues of advertising and marketing that may be false or misleading and fees that are not transparent and may have an impact on the way in which legal services are provided. The Working Group is expected to continue its work into early 2017.

Disclosure Working Group

In September 2016 Convocation adopted a report from the Disclosure Working Group recommending the approval of a disclosure policy framework regarding the disclosure of information about complaints and investigations. Statutory amendments may be required to fully implement the framework.

Governance Task Force

The Governance Task Force was established in September 2016 following a commitment by Convocation to review the Law Society's governance structure in the Strategic Plan. The Task Force has commenced meeting and is discussing the principles to govern its work, as directed by the Strategic Plan and the Task Force's terms of reference. The Task Force is considering a broad range of governance initiatives and will be reporting to Convocation on an on-going basis.

The Real Estate Issues Working Group

The Real Estate Issues Working Group continues to deal with issues and developments related to real estate practice in Ontario. The Working Group is currently considering the implications of third party electronic funds transfer products for the public and for lawyers, including the extent to which the use of such products is consistent with lawyers' professional obligations.

Mental Health Strategy Task Force

A Mental Health Strategy Implementation Task Force has been established to monitor implementation of the Mental Health Strategy Convocation approved this year. Building on the efforts the Law Society is already undertaking in this area, the Strategy includes a Vision and Commitment to underpin the Law Society's work, two Strategic Directions with a focus on preventive/management strategies and regulatory strategies and a number of Key Elements and Initiatives that will advance those Directions. As implementation progresses, we expect that policy issues related to the strategy will be referred to the appropriate committees for consideration.

Access to Justice and the Action Group (TAG)

TAG coordinated Ontario's first Access to Justice Week with a wide range of partners from October 17 to 21. The week resulted in engagement with the public as well as representatives from technology, business, social sectors in addition to our justice system partners. Together, these participants explored different elements of the access to justice crisis such as public opinion, child welfare and importance of innovative collaborations in the development of meaningful solutions.

The events received coverage from 25 media outlets as well as letters of support from The Honourable Beverley McLachlin, as well as Federal Justice Minister Jody Wilson Raybould. As well the Attorney General of Ontario, Yasir Naqvi made a ministerial statement commending Access to Justice week.

Equity Initiatives

The Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group is reporting to Convocation this month with 13 recommendations aimed at addressing these challenges. This is the culmination of a lengthy study, including a comprehensive consultative phase, and I look forward to the results of Convocation's consideration of the report.

Our Equity and Aboriginal Affairs Committee and its Indigenous Advisory Group (IAG) continue their joint development of an Indigenous Strategy/Framework that will formulate approaches to priorities set out in Treasurer's Memorandum to the Committee. This includes developing programs to enhance cultural competence on the part of the professions and Law Society in dealings with Indigenous peoples, improving access to the complaints process for Indigenous communities and supporting and implementing the work of reconciliation, in collaboration with IAG, by responding to and implementing the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada's Final Report (TRC Final Report) Calls to Action related to the Law Society's mandate.

We have also begun consideration of the process for review of the Discrimination and Harassment Council program as set out in the Treasurer's Memorandum.

Federation of Law Societies of Canada

The Law Society's contribution in both human and financial resources to the Federation continues to be significant. The report on the Federation's October 2016 meetings to Convocation this month shows the extensive contribution from the Law Society benchers and staff. In particular, several senior staff are involved in a number of initiatives. These include Diana Miles, Executive Director, Organizational Strategy /Professional Development & Competence, who participates as a member of the National Requirement Review Committee and serves on the CanLII Board Nominating Committee, Karen Manarin who serves on the Standing Committee on National Discipline Standards, Jim Varro who serves on the Anti-Money Laundering and Terrorist Financing Working Group and Naomi Bussin, Senior Counsel, Professional Regulation who is a member of the Standing Committee on the Model Code of Professional Conduct. I serve as a member of the Finance and Audit Committee.

Special mention should be made of Policy Counsel Juda Strawczynski who did an extraordinary amount of work in preparing submissions in concert with the Federation on a number of government-initiated consultations this past summer.

Government Relations

Public Affairs liaises with all levels of government to ensure ongoing and enhanced networks and relationships. In addition, Government initiatives that affect the Law Society's mandate currently being monitored and addressed include:

- The expansion of Unified Family Courts in Ontario
- Legal Aid (both as a supporter seeking enhanced funding to address eligibility levels, and as a partner in recommending appointments to the board)
- Paralegal Exemptions
- Real Estate issues
- Monitoring search and seizure provisions in provincial regulatory statutes, to protect privilege
- Working with the government on new initiatives on issues such as prevention of sexual violence and managing auto insurance costs
- Managing the Law Society's legislative agenda
- Public policy participation thru various think tanks and forums

Treasurer's Appointments Advisory Group (TAAG)

In September 2016, the Treasurer established a group of benchers to co-ordinate the process for the various external appointments made by the Law Society and to provide advice to the Treasurer on these appointments. Public Affairs is assisting with outreach to stakeholders and the recruitment of diverse candidates. TAAG is currently reviewing a recruitment process policy, which will include a policy statement and appropriate criteria that will guide the appointment of well-qualified persons to the various boards, councils and committees of external bodies and has already provided names to both the Federal and Provincial governments for appointments.

Legal Aid Working Group

In October 2016, the Treasurer established the Legal Aid Working Group (LAWG) to identify opportunities for engagement and enhancement of the Law Society's relationship with Legal Aid Ontario (LAO), Alliance for Sustainable Legal Aid (ASLA), government and other justice system and community services partners in accordance with and further to the Law Society's functions and duties respecting competence, access to justice, the rule of law and the public interest. Public Affairs has played a significant role in developing and organizing the committee and will continue to play a supporting role. The Law Society is also a member organization of the ASLA and provides bencher support for the Alliance. Its mandate is to communicate to the provincial and federal government the importance of the provision of properly funded and consistently high quality legal aid services in a cost-effective and efficient manner to low-income Ontarians throughout the province.

Real Estate Liaison Group (RELG)

The Real Estate Liaison Group, created by the Treasurer together with the Ontario Bar Association, FOLA and LawPRO engages in dialogue on real estate issues of common interest and planning in response to expressed concern about the future and current state of real estate practice in Ontario. The group continues to meet to discuss current issues, including ABS, regulatory policy issues touching on real estate practice and legislative developments.

MEDIA RELATIONS AND ISSUES MANAGEMENT (MRIM)

The Media Relations and Issues Management (MRIM) team works to ensure that the Law Society, its mandate, initiatives and operations are positively and accurately represented in the public sphere.

These activities include managing a high volume of media enquiries and pursuing positive earned media coverage. MRIM also supports external communications activities for the Treasurer, Convocation and the work of their committees.

Over the last year, MRIM has taken a proactive approach to media relations and to communicating Law Society initiatives which have resulted in expanded editorial reach and increased coverage, most of it positive or neutral in tone. For example in the third quarter alone, total editorial reach was over seventy three million with 790 stories related to the Law Society.

MRIM this year has also strived to have a significant spokesperson quote in media stories that invokes one of our strategic priorities and/or the Law Society's public protection mandate. In the last quarter, 55% of coverage included a spokesperson quote.

MRIM continues to distribute weekly to media all of the Law Society Tribunal proceedings and notices which have contributed to a continual increase in media coverage for the Law Society.

In addition, MRIM has received and responded to 320 different media inquiries to date. Overall, discipline matters garner the most interest and coverage.

Other topics of interest include TWU, Challenges faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group, the LPP, new Treasurer election, Calls to the Bar, Personal Injury Advertising and Compensation Fund increase. TAG's first Access to Justice Week last October also garnered significant coverage in 25 different media outlets across the province.

As well, over the past year, the Treasurer, working group chairs and other Law Society representatives conducted a number of interviews, both with legal trade and mainstream publications or networks MRIM also initiates a broad range of internal and external communications materials. To date this year, the department prepared over 70 speeches or speaker notes in addition to news releases, positioning statements, media plans and Convocation News that support Law Society priorities and the Treasurer's outreach initiatives. MRIM also developed and maintains a targeted community partner and justice sector distribution process for legal information guides available in Cree, Oji-Cree and Northwestern Ojibway, as well as English and French.

COMMUNICATIONS AND MARKETING (C&M)

Over the course of the year, the focus for Communications and Marketing continues to be the strategic evolution of digital initiatives and communications as directed by the Law Society's strategic priorities for 2015-2019.

Social Media

In March 2016, the Law Society revised its approach to strategic content marketing through Facebook, Twitter and LinkedIn with the intent of growing social media audiences, increasing engagement and enhancing the Law Society's reputation and brand.

For other channels such as YouTube, we implemented a plan this quarter to better utilize the platform by reorganizing video inventory and increasing new, well-branded and timely content. This included the launch of the Treasurer's video blog, which was developed to provide opportunities to increase engagement. The Treasurer's Twitter account incorporates an integrated communications approach with the Law Society Twitter account. Communications and Marketing has also tested Instagram as a new platform to focus on Law Society news. .

The Law Society's social media audience continues to grow: our Facebook page now has 3,785 likes; 8,108 follow us on LinkedIn; and we've reached the 10,000 mark for Twitter followers. Overall, the results indicate that targeted messaging on timely topics has increased engagement.

Websites

Communications and Marketing together with Information Technology, is leading a corporate website redesign project to engage the public, professions and stakeholders and to build a strategic communications tool that effectively supports the organization's core work. The new Law Society website will offer target audiences a cohesive online experience where relevant information, services and resources can be easily accessed in an understandable way.

An extensive content inventory and audit of the current website was completed, along with interviews with key stakeholders and departments. The content strategy and design phase of the project will begin in late November and will continue into the first quarter of 2017.

The Gazette, the Law Society's online magazine, has had a 15% increase in 2016, most notably from referral traffic from social channels and the corporate website. Mobile traffic, an important and growing source, has increased 81% in 2016. The top performing Gazette article was our Mental Health Week promotion, which had the most views this year.

TECHNOLOGY

SharePoint

Our largest SharePoint related project in 2016 has been the design and rollout of the Tribunal Information Management (TIM) System, a SharePoint-based case management system for use by Law Society Tribunals staff. The development is complete, with implementation scheduled for December and go-live for January 2017. We are also in discussions to plan the next phase of this project, which involves the redevelopment of the portions of the process which are currently hosted on the AS/400. This year we also successfully completed the Discipline History SharePoint Scanning Integration project, which involved transferring approximately 23,000 discipline history files from a network drive to SharePoint to make them easier to access and search.

Relationship Management System Project (RMS)

The Relationship Management System is the name of the project to modernize the Lawyer & Paralegal Database, or as many people call it, the AS/400 (after the name of the IBM server it runs on). In this age of "big data," and with the demand for more automation and self-service, the current system severely limits us from being as effective, proactive, and service-oriented as we can and should be. In addition to addressing technical risks, one of the major business goals of the RMS is to increase the efficiency of our existing staff to prepare us for taking on new, data-intensive initiatives. Other goals, requested by users, include redesigning the class/status code system, and working towards a more comprehensive, “one-stop-shop” approach to data access to improve staff efficiency and service quality.

As part of our extensive work plan this year, we have:

- Developed initial estimates of the cost, duration, and platform options for the project
- Created a representative Steering Committee, led by Terry Knott, for strategic guidance and business decisions
- Engaged a professional consulting firm to provide advice and assistance in planning
- Developed detailed business requirements and data model for use in purchasing.

As the project funding has been approved, the Steering Committee plans to initiate the detailed design and implementation of the Relationship Management System in 2017. The Request for Proposal will be released in the first quarter of 2017; followed by the beginning of the Discovery Phase with the selected vendor late in the second quarter. Design and Development will begin in the fourth quarter, provided a fixed price contract is negotiated after the Discovery Phase.

LSUC Portal

The Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report will look different for the 2016 filing year, as they will be fully integrated into the LSUC Portal. The Annual Report section of the Portal will look more like the other portlets and will provide more flexibility for development in the future.

The Law Society Referral Service application and renewal process moved into the LSUC Portal in the middle of November. This allows licensees to manage their own LSRS profile, including areas of law and dates they are not available to accept referrals.

Digital Information Risk Management Program

Having designated Information Security as a major theme of this year, we have taken serious action on a number of fronts to increase our security against the growing tide of hacker attacks, data breaches, and increasingly destructive malware. This summer, for example, we encrypted the hard drives of over 300 laptops, so that the data they contain remains secure even if they should be lost or stolen. We also connected 66 iPads to our mobile device management server, which allows us to lock them down and to remotely wipe them should they be lost or stolen—and which allowed us to provide secure access to SharePoint on them. On the server side, we are adding some additional layers of protection against the new wave of malware attacks that come in via email and USB drives; by our latest measurement, almost 2% of incoming email contains a virus (and is blocked by our servers).

Other Projects

Other business-focused projects we have completed this year include the replacement the Law Society's old eCommerce system with a newer high-capacity system, the update of the Articling Registry application to improve its security and usability, and the implementation of changes in iLaws to support Experiential Training.

OUR PEOPLE

Diversity Census and Inclusion Survey initiative

In March, the Law Society launched its first Diversity Census and Inclusion Survey - to help us better understand the demographic characteristics that make up our team. There was a 72% participation rate, with high rates of feelings of inclusion overall. We communicated the final analysis and action plans from the survey results to employees during the Town Hall meeting in September, and plan to discuss them with the Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee early in the New Year.

Employee Engagement and Enablement Survey

In June 2016 the Law Society conducted an Employee Engagement and Enablement Survey to help improve the effectiveness of our organization and enhance communications between management and employees at all levels. The results were as follows:

- 77% employee response rate – 427 participants
- 73% employee engagement – (commitment & discretionary effort)
- 71% employee enablement – (optimized roles & supportive environment)

These scores are very high, positioning the Law Society above the average for public/not-for-profit organizations, and for organizations in Canada generally.

SERVICES FOR MEMBERS AND THE PUBLIC

LAW SOCIETY REFERRAL SERVICE

From January 1, 2016 to October 31, 2016, the Law Society Referral Service provided 36,745 referrals. Of those, 26,087 were provided through the online service; 9,734 referrals were provided through the crisis line; and 924 referrals were provided by email.

From January 1 to October 31, 2016, LSRS also provided the names of 11,106 LSRS members to people who did not qualify for a referral. A member of the public would not qualify for a referral if they do not live in Ontario, if their legal matter is urgent and they cannot wait up to three business days for the licensee to arrange a consultation, or if they have already received a referral for the same legal issue within the calendar year.

MEMBER ASSISTANCE PLAN (MAP)

Usage

For the period of January 1 to September 30, 2016 there were 1,115 MAP cases. As a result, Homewood Health, the Law Society's Member Assistance Program provider, has a projected an annual utilization rate for 2016 to be 5.13%.

The awareness source of the MAP continues to arrive predominantly from a previous client (36.1%), which again allows us to infer that the program is being shared through word of mouth from prior recipients of the program.

There was good distribution of age groups accessing MAP, with the largest cohorts in the age ranges of 21-30 (25.6%) and 31-40 (36.9%).

The top MAP counselling categories for this time period in 2016 was psychological counselling (49.7%); work counselling (18.7%) and marital/relationship counselling (16.2%). Of the psychological cases, stress had the highest number of cases at 14.3%, followed by anxiety at 14.2% and depression at 10.4%.

The method of distribution for counselling was 77.4% face-to-face; 16.8% over the phone; and 5.8% over the web.

Looking at overall utilization, the top area of Plan Smart cases were: career counselling at 38.9%, 12 weeks to wellness at 21.6% and nutritional counselling at 10.8%.

Peer Conclave

Friday, October 28th, marked the second annual Peer Conclave. The objective of this event is to bring together volunteers from across the membership with a shared mission towards supporting professionals in the legal profession in managing some of their most challenging mental, physical and social health issues. Peers come from all corners of the profession - lawyers, judges, paralegals and students.

In this year's program, the Peers were joined by Mr. Michael Bryant, former Attorney General. Mr. Bryant, a recovering alcoholic, openly shared his story, more specifically, his struggle with addiction, and its impact on his personal and professional life. Mr. Bryant's willingness to share his story of recovery had a tremendous and positive impact on the Peer group.

A long term commitment has been made to ensure that Peers continue to receive this type of inspiration, along with the education, training and support provided by MAP Program.

CONCLUSION

It is when my staff assembles the information for this report that I perhaps most often marvel at the depth and breadth of the operations of the Law society of Upper Canada and the dedication of our staff to delivering on our strategic priorities that are informed by our statutory mandates. As always, I want to acknowledge my appreciation for that dedication. As we look back on the year, 2016 has been a time of significant and exciting changes in some important parts of our operation. These aren't easy. They challenge staff and management to think and work differently. I have been deeply impressed and grateful for the willingness of staff and our management teams to embrace change, and their patience in working through it. I am also most grateful for the support of our new Treasurer, Paul Schabas, and Members of Convocation. The change management process is made easier and more interesting by their commitment to it.

Motion

That Convocation approve the following thirteen recommendations outlined in the Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions report:

Recommendation 1 – Reinforcing Professional Obligations

The Law Society will review and amend, where appropriate, the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, and Commentaries to reinforce the professional obligations of all licensees to recognize, acknowledge and promote principles of equality, diversity and inclusion consistent with the requirements under human rights legislation and the special responsibilities of licensees in the legal and paralegal professions.

Recommendation 2 – Diversity and Inclusion Project

The Law Society will work with stakeholders, such as interested legal workplaces, legal associations, law schools and paralegal colleges to develop model policies and resources to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees.

Recommendation 3 – The Adoption of Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Principles and Practices

The Law Society will:

- 1) require every licensee to adopt and to abide by a statement of principles acknowledging their obligation to promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally, and in their behaviour towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public;
- 2) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy for their legal workplace addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement, which will be available to members of the professions and the public upon request;
- 3) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to complete, every two years, an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment for their legal workplace, to be provided to the Law Society; and
- 4) encourage legal workplaces to conduct inclusion surveys by providing them with sample templates.

Recommendation 4 – Measuring Progress through Quantitative Analysis

Each year, the Law Society will measure progress quantitatively by providing legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees in Ontario with the quantitative self-identification data of their licensees compiled from the Lawyers Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report so they can compare their data with the aggregate demographic data gathered from the profession as a whole through the annual reports.

Recommendation 5 – Measuring Progress through Qualitative Analysis

The Law Society will measure progress by:

- 1) asking licensees to voluntarily answer inclusion questions, provided by the Law Society, about their legal workplace, every four years; and
- 2) compiling the results of the inclusion questions for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees in Ontario and providing the legal workplace with a summary of the information gathered

Recommendation 6 – Inclusion Index

Every four years, the Law Society will develop and publish an inclusion index that reflects the following information, including, for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees: the legal workplace's self-assessment information (Recommendation 3(3)), demographic data obtained from the Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report (Recommendation 4) and information gathered from the inclusion questions provided by the Law Society (Recommendation 5).

Recommendation 7 – Repeat Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project Inclusion Survey

The Law Society will conduct inclusion surveys with questions similar to those asked in Appendix F of the Stratcom Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Final Report (March 11, 2014) (available online at <http://www.stratcom.ca/wp-content/uploads/manual/Racialized-Licensees-Full-Report.pdf>). The first inclusion survey will be conducted within one year of the adoption of these recommendations, and thereafter every four years, subject to any recommendation by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee to Convocation.

Recommendation 8 – Progressive Compliance Measures

The Law Society will consider and enact, as appropriate, progressive compliance measures for legal workplaces that do not comply with the requirements proposed in Recommendation 3 and/or legal workplaces that are identified as having systemic barriers to diversity and inclusion.

Recommendation 9 – Continuing Professional Development (CPD) Programs on Topics of Equality and Inclusion in the Professions

The Law Society will:

- 1) launch a three hour accredited program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions;
- 2) develop resources to assist legal workplaces in designing and delivering their own three hour program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions, to be accredited by the Law Society; and
- 3) require each licensee to complete three hours of an accredited program focused on equality and inclusion within the first three years following the adoption of these recommendations and one hour per year every year thereafter, which will count towards the licensee's professionalism hours for that year.

Recommendation 10 – The Licensing Process

The Law Society will include the topics of cultural competency, equality and inclusion in the professions as competencies to be acquired in the Licensing Process.

Recommendation 11 – Building Communities of Support

The Law Society, in collaboration with legal associations where appropriate, will provide support to racialized licensees in need of direction and assistance through mentoring and networking initiatives.

Recommendation 12 – Addressing Complaints of Systemic Discrimination

The Law Society, in light of the findings of this project and emerging issues in the professions, will:

- 1) review the function, processes and structure of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC), including considering effective ways for the DHC to address issues of systemic discrimination;
- 2) revise the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, where appropriate, so that systemic discrimination and reprisal for complaints of discrimination and harassment are clearly identified as breaches of professional conduct requirements;
- 3) create effective ways for the Professional Regulation Division to address complaints of systemic discrimination; and
- 4) create a specialized and trained team to address complaints of discrimination.

Recommendation 13 – Leading by Example

- 1) The Law Society will continue to monitor and assess internal policies, practices and programs, to promote diversity, inclusion and equality within the workplace and in the provision of services by:
  - a) as required, adopting, implementing and maintaining a human rights/diversity policy addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement;
  - b) measuring quantitative progress through a census of the workforce or other method;
  - c) measuring qualitative progress by conducting inclusion surveys;
  - d) conducting regular equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessments; and
  - e) based on the results from b), c) and d), identifying gaps and barriers and adopting measures to address the gaps and barriers;
  - f) publishing relevant findings from b), c), d) and e); and
  - g) providing equality and inclusion education programs for staff at the Law Society on a regular basis.
- 2) The Law Society will:
  - a) conduct an internal diversity assessment of the bench composition and publicize the results;
  - b) provide equality and inclusion education programs for Convocation on a regular basis

Overview of Submissions

The Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group (“the Working Group”) provided its final report, Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions on September 22, 2016 for information. The report is to be before Convocation for decision on December 2, 2016.

Members of the legal professions and the public were invited to provide comments on the recommendations outlined in the report until November 14, 2015. The Law Society received 46 submissions – 23 from individuals and 23 from organizations (see TAB 3.1.1). The Working Group has determined that only submissions from organizations are to be public. Many of the individual submissions speak to personal experiences and the Working Group believes that should those individuals wish to make their views public, they should have the option to do so on their own. What follows is a summary of both individual and organization submissions divided by the five interrelated categories outlined in the report: accelerating culture shift; measuring progress; educating for change; implementing supports; and operations of the Law Society.

The Working Group received positive comments from the professions and the public, with many individuals and organizations commending the Law Society for taking steps to address issues of systemic racism in the legal professions. The Working Group is encouraged by the submissions it received.

Many of the comments spoke to the implementation of the recommendations in the report. These comments are not outlined in this document – however, should the recommendations be approved by Convocation, the comments will be considered during the implementation phase.

General comments

All of the submissions from organizations representing licensees from equality-seeking organizations expressed support for the 13 recommendations put forward by the Working Group, with suggestions provided on how to strengthen the recommendations. Generally, no organizations were opposed to the recommendations.

Specifically, the submissions from the Canadian Association of Black Lawyers, the Roundtable of Diversity Associations, the Metro Toronto Chinese & Southeast Asian Legal Clinic, the South Asian Bar Association, the Equity Advisory Group, the Canadian Hispanic Bar Association, and the Federation of Asian Canadian Lawyers stressed that Convocation should vote on the thirteen recommendations as a package and not individually.

In addition, many of the submissions from organizations suggested that the recommendations outlined in the Working Group’s report should apply to all equality-seeking groups and not solely to racialized licensees. Some submissions also noted that the report and the recommendations should recognize how intersections of gender, race, sexual orientation, disability and other aspects of identity shape the experiences of licensees.

Accelerating culture shift

The Working Group received submissions supporting the need to accelerate cultural change in the legal professions.

The Working Group received a comment about the importance of taking an approach that recognizes the unique barriers faced by Indigenous licensees and the challenges that both racialized and Indigenous licensees face. Additionally, the comment asked that the Working Group make specific mention of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's final report and the need to address reconciliation between Indigenous and non-Indigenous peoples.

The Working Group is thankful for this comment and has included text that reflects this suggestions in the "Guiding Principles" section of the report.

One comment received by the Working Group advised that the Law Society should require law schools to remove obstacles against racialized licensees. The Working Group notes that the Law Society does not have authority over law schools; however, law schools are encouraged to participate in the Diversity and Inclusion Project outlined in Recommendation 2.

Some submissions suggested that the Law Society, under Recommendation 3, should require all legal workplaces, not just workplaces of at least 10 licensees, to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy and complete an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment. In determining the size of workplace for this requirement, the Working Group considered balancing burden and benefit. Although the requirement applies to workplaces of at least 10 licensees, workplaces of less than 10 licensees are strongly encouraged to develop policies and complete self-assessments. This encouragement is reflected in the text that accompanies the recommendation.

One submission suggested that legal workplaces' diversity policies should be made publicly available on the workplace website. In considering this suggestion, the Working Group determined that not all legal workplace websites are used as a recruitment tool - some are intended as advocacy tools, for example. The Working Group, however, noted that policies should be available to the public. Consequently, the Working Group has modified Recommendation 3(2) to note that the policies should be available to members of the professions and the public upon request.

An additional submission proposed that an exemption be provided for legal workplaces that have existing human rights/diversity policies provided they satisfy the Law Society's requirements. The text that accompanies Recommendation 3 recognizes that licensees' employers may already have workplace policies that satisfy the requirement under Recommendation 3(2)

Measuring Progress

The Working Group received positive responses to the recommendations regarding data collection.

One submission suggested that the quantitative self-identification data collected by the Law Society should be published in an aggregate manner. The Working Group notes that the Law Society currently provides race-based self-identification data by size of firm in its annual statistical snapshots, which are available at: https://www.lsuc.on.ca/uploadedFiles/Equity\_and\_Diversity/Members2/TAB%207.3.1.%20-%20Snapshot-Lawyers16\_apr13.pdf (lawyers) and https://www.lsuc.on.ca/uploadedFiles/Equity\_and\_Diversity/Members2/TAB%207.3.2-%20Paralegal-Snapshot16\_apr13.pdf (paralegals).

One comment proposed that equity-seeking legal associations should have access to the data collected by the Law Society and that data should be made public at the law school level. The Working Group is of the view that the data should be disseminated to the public through the annual statistical snapshots and that the inclusion index will provide equity-seeking associations and law schools with insights into diversity and inclusion in various workplaces.

Another submission recommended that legal workplaces should be required to engage in internal collection of data in their workplaces. The Working Group is conscious of the fact that many firms may not have the resources to properly collect data from licensees and that there may be privacy concerns if legal workplaces are collecting data from licensees directly. The Working Group asserts that privacy and confidentiality are essential principles to uphold in collecting quantitative demographic data and qualitative inclusion data from licensees.

One comment suggested that the inclusion index include information for all legal workplaces regardless of their size, not just workplaces of at least 25 licensees. Legal workplaces of less than 25 licensees are encouraged to participate in the inclusion index; however, in balancing benefit with burden, the Working Group has determined that 25 licensees and above is an appropriate number.

In terms of conducting inclusion surveys that are similar to the Stratcom survey, the Working Group received a comment that an interval of four years would not capture the issues the Working Group seeks to identify given the rate at which lawyers leave law firms. The Working Group carefully considered this time interval and notes that four years was seen as an appropriate amount of time for changes to take hold.

The Working Group received questions about the nature of the progressive compliance measures outlined in Recommendation 8. The Working Group notes that the nature of the compliance measures will be carefully considered by the Law Society in due course. The intent of the Working Group is to foster cooperation to the extent possible and engage in reactive measures only when necessary.

Educating for Change

The Working Group is pleased that, from the comments received, the professions and the public are in agreement with the requirement for licensees to complete equality and inclusion Continuing Professional Development hours.

The Working Group received a number of comments that suggested that licensees be required to complete a one hour equality and inclusion program per year instead of three hours once every three years. One submission suggested that the Law Society require licensees to participate in an equality and inclusion program once every year following an initial three hour training program. The Working Group believes that this is an excellent suggestion as the three hour training program will allow for licensees to develop a foundation in equality and inclusion principles. The annual one hour requirement, following the initial three hour program, will ensure that equality and inclusion principles are top of mind for licensees.

Building Communities of Support

Comments on the final report reiterated the importance of mentoring and networking. Suggestions made included the creation of a mentoring initiative specifically for junior racialized licensees, free mentoring services to all new lawyers of any background and mentoring for law students. One submission also proposed that the Law Society monitor the success of all mentoring and networking initiatives and identify any improvements. The Working Group notes that the Law Society recently launched the Coach and Advisor Network, which will, in addition to providing advisor and coaching services, act “a centralized source of information to the professions on mentorship programs in Ontario.”<sup>1</sup>

The Working Group received a submission that noted the importance of employing an approach that addresses the unique experiences of Indigenous licensees and the similar barriers faced by Indigenous and racialized licensees – in addition to a suggestion that mentioned be made of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission’s final report. The Working Group has incorporated this suggestion in the “Guiding Principles” section of the report.

The Working Group notes that in November 2016, Convocation determined that the Law Society will engage in an analysis of the licensing process. The Working Group expects that the principles of equality and inclusion will be considered during this process.

The Law Society received submissions regarding the review of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel (“DHC”) program outlined in Recommendation 12 – particularly related to the need to maintain the confidentiality and independence of the DHC program. The Working Group notes that the Law Society’s Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee (“EAIC”) commenced a review of the DHC program in Fall 2016. EAIC is alive to the importance of the DHC’s duty of confidentiality and the arms-length position of the DHC.

Leading by Example

Comments regarding leading by example spoke largely to the bench election process. The Working Group notes that in September 2016, the Law Society established a Governance Task Force to make recommendations in regard to the Law Society’s governance structure.

A suggestion was made that Recommendation 13(1)(a) should include the words “discipline, discharge and revocation”, however, the Working Group points out that the requirement for the Law Society to adopt, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy speaks to the need for the policy to address at the very least recruitment, retention and advancement. The wording of this recommendation is broad in order to allow for the Law Society to examine various aspects of its operations.

Other comments

The Working Group received submissions that outlined the importance of addressing the challenges faced by racialized licensees in law school and upon entry into the profession. The Diversity and Inclusion Project, contemplated in Recommendation 2, is intended to allow for a forum to address these issues. Other submissions suggested that the Working Group should address the pathways to licensing for lawyers. The Working Group notes, again, that Convocation has already approved a review of the licensing process.

One submission noted that the report has been silent on the unique needs of racialized internationally trained lawyers without Canadian education or experience. It is the Working Group's intention that the implementation of the recommendations will consider all racialized licensees and the intersections of their experiences, including the experiences of internationally trained racialized licensees.

Some submissions suggested that the Law Society should consider the economic barriers for racialized licensees and other licensees from equity-seeking groups. The Working Group notes that in the implementation of the recommendations, economic barriers will be considered.

One submission noted that the report had failed to direct the Law Society to develop mental health strategies specific to racialized licensees. The Working Group notes that in April 2016, the Law Society approved a long-term mental health strategy, which "builds on the Law Society's existing mental health initiatives and lays the groundwork to explore additional supports or programs that fall within the organization's mandate."<sup>2</sup>

One submission suggested that the Report should call upon the Law Society to work with the Roundtable of Diversity Associations (RODA) and other associations serving racialized lawyers across Ontario using a similar approach to The Action Group on Access to Justice. It is contemplated that the Diversity and Inclusion Project under Recommendation 2 will be a forum for the Law Society to work with associations serving racialized licensees.

Executive Summary

“Inclusion is not about bringing people into what already exists; it is making a new space, a better space for everyone.”<sup>3</sup>

This is the unanimous final report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group. The fifteen Benchers on the Working Group have reviewed the written submissions and other input of Benchers and many external stakeholders since the initial presentation of the report to Convocation on September 22, 2016. After discussion and some revisions, the Working Group now presents this Report, unanimous in its 13 recommendations and the rationale supporting them, for approval by Convocation on December 2, 2016.

This Report represents the final stage of a lengthy consultative and study exercise which has led to the conclusion that racialized licensees<sup>4</sup> face widespread barriers within the professions at all stages of their careers. As the title “Working Together for Change” bears out, the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group is confident that there is a unique opportunity for change, based on collaborative, concrete steps to implement solutions. That said, the challenges faced by racialized licensees are both longstanding and significant. In our view, the Law Society must take a leadership role in giving legal workplaces reasonable deadlines to implement steps that are important to bringing about lasting culture change. The Working Group has concluded that prescribing minimum standards of equality, diversity and inclusion are consistent with the human rights responsibilities of the profession — obligations already required by the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct and, more generally, the Human Rights Code.

Reform in addressing barriers faced by racialized licensees is an essential component of ensuring a healthy and successful legal profession, and to advancement of the public interest — goals that we all share and must achieve.

Background

1. The Law Society of Upper Canada (The Law Society) has a duty to maintain and advance the cause of justice and the rule of law, to facilitate access to justice for the people of Ontario and to protect the public interest. Furthermore, the Law Society is committed to adhering to its obligations under the Human Rights Code. In fulfilling its mandate, the Law Society integrates equality and diversity values and principles into all of its policies, practices and programs. The

<sup>4</sup> The Ontario Human Rights Commission notes that using the terminology “racialized person” or “racialized group” is more accurate than “racial minority”, “visible minority”, “person of colour” or “non-White”. Race is the socially constructed differences among people based on characteristics such as accent or manner of speech, name, clothing, diet, beliefs and practices, leisure preferences, places of origin and so forth. Racialization is the “process by which societies construct races as real, different and unequal in ways that matter to economic, political and social life”. See Ontario Human Rights Commission, Racial discrimination, race and racism, online: Ontario Human Rights Commission <http://www.ohrc.on.ca/en/racial-discrimination-race-andracism>

Law Society works to ensure that the law and the practice of law are reflective of all the people of Ontario, including Indigenous peoples, Francophones and equality-seeking communities. The Law Society also seeks to ensure that its workplace and the legal professions are free of harassment and discrimination.

In 2012, the Law Society created the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group (“the Working Group”) to:

- a. identify challenges faced by racialized licensees in different practice environments, including entry into practice and advancement;
- b. identify factors and practice-challenges faced by racialized licensees that could increase the risk of regulatory complaints and discipline;
- c. consider best practices for preventative, remedial and/or support strategies;
- d. if appropriate, design and develop preventative, remedial, enforcement, regulatory and/or support strategies, for consideration by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee (“EAIC”) and other committees, to address these challenges.

The Working Group’s Approach

Since 2012, the Working Group has been actively engaged in gathering information about the challenges faced by racialized licensees and developing recommendations to address these challenges.

In order to fulfil its mandate, the Working Group gathered information about the challenges faced by racialized licensees using consultant and community engagement processes.<sup>5</sup> Further information about this part of the Working Group’s activities can be found at: <http://www.lsuc.on.ca/racialized-licensees/>.

The Working Group reviewed all of the information gathered through the engagement process and drafted a consultation paper titled Developing Strategies for Change: Addressing Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees.<sup>6</sup>

Convocation approved the consultation paper in November 2014, and the Working Group consulted with over 1,000 racialized and non-racialized lawyers, paralegals, law students, articling students and members of the public throughout the province of Ontario between January and March 2015. The Working Group met with organizational stakeholders and members of the Law Firms Diversity and Inclusion Network. The Working Group also received feedback from 45 individuals and organizations in the form of written submissions.<sup>7</sup>

Engagement Process Results

The qualitative and quantitative data the Working Group obtained from the engagement process identified widespread barriers experienced by racialized licensees within the legal professions at all stages of their careers. Examples of challenges faced in the legal professions include discrimination and stereotyping, negotiating concepts of “culture” and “fit”, and lack of mentors, networks and role models. Participants also noted that race-based barriers are often complicated by additional intersecting experiences of discrimination based on gender identity, gender expression, disability, sexual orientation, class and creed.

Some participants in the engagement process believed that racialized licensees were more likely to go into sole practice as a result of barriers faced in other practice environments. They also noted that internationally trained lawyers and paralegals face additional barriers in the professions. Generally, participants noted the vulnerability of racialized licensees in the legal professions in the context of professional regulation and discipline.

Consultation Process Results

The information gathered from the consultation process is summarized as follows:

- Consultation participants expressed significant support for the creation of diversity programs for the recruitment, retention and advancement of racialized licensees in legal workplaces.
- The Working Group heard a broad range of views on the issue of demographic data collection. However, most participants agreed that the collection of data would be, as one participant noted, “a humble but important first step”.
- The Working Group heard that the Law Society could play a facilitative role by encouraging corporate procurement policies that consider suppliers that promote equality and diversity.
- The majority of participants in the consultation process emphasized the importance of mentoring for racialized licensees. Generally, the Working Group heard that there is no “one size fits all” model for mentoring.
- Many participants stated that associations of racialized lawyers and paralegals are beneficial for fostering collaboration and creating a sense of belonging.
- A large number of participants were in favour of the Law Society requiring licensees to participate in mandatory Continuing Professional Development (CPD) training on cultural competence, unconscious bias, and anti-racism.

- Participants suggested updating the Rules of Professional Conduct<sup>8</sup> and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct<sup>9</sup> to specifically address systemic discrimination and subtle forms of discrimination.

Objectives

The Working Group has distilled the themes in the consultation into the following three objectives:

1. Inclusive legal workplaces in Ontario;<sup>10</sup>
2. Reduction of barriers created by racism, unconscious bias and discrimination; and
3. Better representation of racialized licensees, in proportion to the representation in the Ontario population, in the professions, in all legal workplaces and at all levels of seniority.

The Working Group makes 13 recommendations in order to meet these objectives. They fall within four interrelated categories: accelerating culture shift, measuring progress, educating for change and implementing supports. The final recommendation speaks to the operations of the Law Society.

Recommendations

Recommendation 1 – Reinforcing Professional Obligations

The Law Society will review and amend, where appropriate, the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, and Commentaries to reinforce the professional obligations of all licensees to recognize, acknowledge and promote principles of equality, diversity and inclusion consistent with the requirements under human rights legislation and the special responsibilities of licensees in the legal and paralegal professions.

Recommendation 2 – Diversity and Inclusion Project

The Law Society will work with stakeholders, such as interested legal workplaces, legal associations, law schools and paralegal colleges to develop model policies and resources to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees.

Recommendation 3 – The Adoption of Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Principles and Practices

The Law Society will:

- 5) require every licensee to adopt and to abide by a statement of principles acknowledging their obligation to promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally, and in their behaviour towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public;

<sup>8</sup> Rules of Professional Conduct, The Law Society of Upper Canada available online at <http://www.lsuc.on.ca/WorkArea/DownloadAsset.aspx?id=2147486159>

<sup>9</sup> Paralegal Rules of Conduct The Law Society of Upper Canada available on-line at <http://www.lsuc.on.ca/paralegal-conduct-rules/>

- 6) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy for their legal workplace addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement, which will be available to members of the professions and the public upon request;
- 7) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to complete, every two years, an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment for their legal workplace, to be provided to the Law Society; and
- 8) encourage legal workplaces to conduct inclusion surveys by providing them with sample templates.

Recommendation 4 – Measuring Progress through Quantitative Analysis

Each year, the Law Society will measure progress quantitatively by providing legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees in Ontario with the quantitative self-identification data of their licensees compiled from the Lawyers Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report so they can compare their data with the aggregate demographic data gathered from the profession as a whole through the annual reports.

Recommendation 5 – Measuring Progress through Qualitative Analysis

The Law Society will measure progress by:

- 3) asking licensees to voluntarily answer inclusion questions, provided by the Law Society, about their legal workplace, every four years; and
- 4) compiling the results of the inclusion questions for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees in Ontario and providing the legal workplace with a summary of the information gathered

Recommendation 6 – Inclusion Index

Every four years, the Law Society will develop and publish an inclusion index that reflects the following information, including, for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees: the legal workplace's self-assessment information (Recommendation 3(3)), demographic data obtained from the Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report (Recommendation 4) and information gathered from the inclusion questions provided by the Law Society (Recommendation 5).

Recommendation 7 – Repeat Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project Inclusion Survey

The Law Society will conduct inclusion surveys with questions similar to those asked in Appendix F of the Stratcom Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Final Report (March 11, 2014) (available online at http://www.stratcom.ca/wp-content/uploads/manual/Racialized-Licensees\_Full-Report.pdf). The first inclusion survey will be conducted within one year of the adoption of these recommendations, and thereafter every four years, subject to any recommendation by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee to Convocation.

Recommendation 8 – Progressive Compliance Measures

The Law Society will consider and enact, as appropriate, progressive compliance measures for legal workplaces that do not comply with the requirements proposed in Recommendation 3 and/or legal workplaces that are identified as having systemic barriers to diversity and inclusion.

Recommendation 9 – Continuing Professional Development (CPD) Programs on Topics of Equality and Inclusion in the Professions

The Law Society will:

- 4) launch a three hour accredited program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions;
- 5) develop resources to assist legal workplaces in designing and delivering their own three hour program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions, to be accredited by the Law Society; and
- 6) require each licensee to complete three hours of an accredited program focused on equality and inclusion within the first three years following the adoption of these recommendations and one hour per year every year thereafter, which will count towards the licensee's professionalism hours for that year.

Recommendation 10 – The Licensing Process

The Law Society will include the topics of cultural competency, equality and inclusion in the professions as competencies to be acquired in the Licensing Process.

Recommendation 11 – Building Communities of Support

The Law Society, in collaboration with legal associations where appropriate, will provide support to racialized licensees in need of direction and assistance through mentoring and networking initiatives.

Recommendation 12 – Addressing Complaints of Systemic Discrimination

The Law Society, in light of the findings of this project and emerging issues in the professions, will:

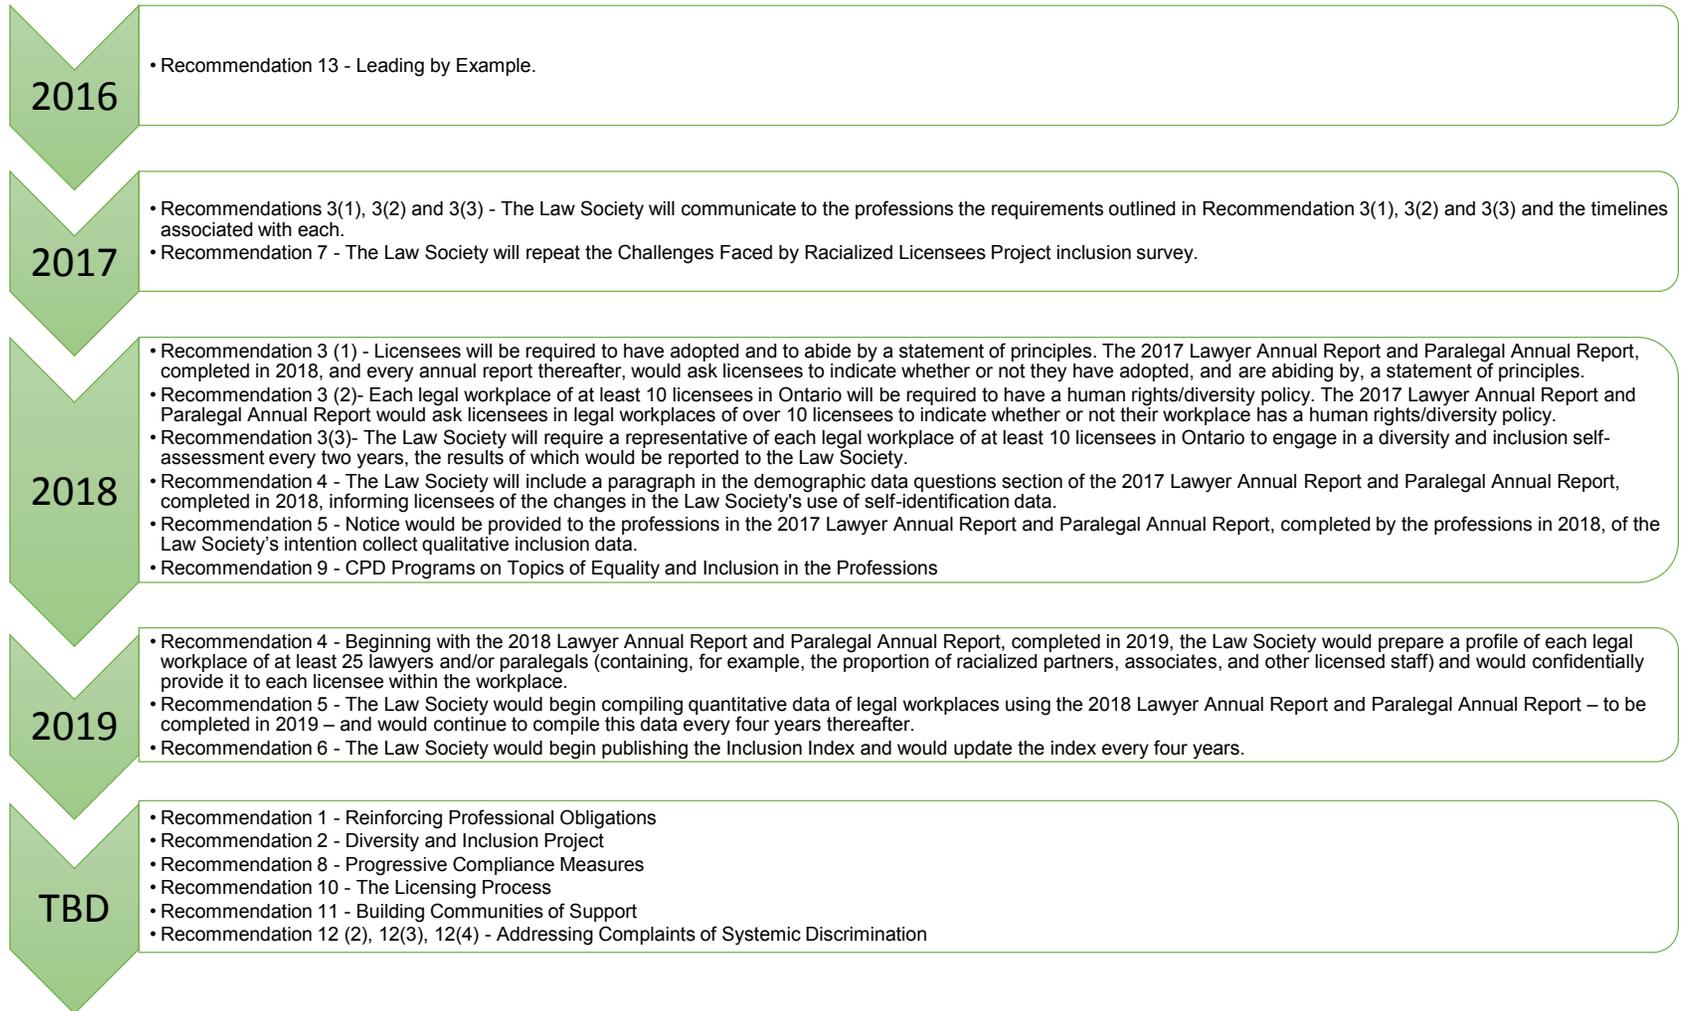

- 5) review the function, processes and structure of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC), including considering effective ways for the DHC to address issues of systemic discrimination;

- 6) revise the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, where appropriate, so that systemic discrimination and reprisal for complaints of discrimination and harassment are clearly identified as breaches of professional conduct requirements;
- 7) create effective ways for the Professional Regulation Division to address complaints of systemic discrimination; and
- 8) create a specialized and trained team to address complaints of discrimination.

Recommendation 13 – Leading by Example

- 3) The Law Society will continue to monitor and assess internal policies, practices and programs, to promote diversity, inclusion and equality within the workplace and in the provision of services by:
  - a) as required, adopting, implementing and maintaining a human rights/diversity policy addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement;
  - b) measuring quantitative progress through a census of the workforce or other method;
  - c) measuring qualitative progress by conducting inclusion surveys;
  - d) conducting regular equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessments; and
  - e) based on the results from b), c) and d), identifying gaps and barriers and adopting measures to address the gaps and barriers;
  - f) publishing relevant findings from b), c), d) and e); and
  - g) providing equality and inclusion education programs for staff at the Law Society on a regular basis.
- 4) The Law Society will:
  - a) conduct an internal diversity assessment of the bench composition and publicize the results;
  - b) provide equality and inclusion education programs for Convocation on a regular basis.

Introduction

“What we need to do is learn to respect and embrace our differences until our differences don’t make a difference in how we are treated.”

— Yolanda King<sup>11</sup>

Background

1. The Law Society of Upper Canada (“The Law Society”) is the governing body for more than 50,000 lawyers and 8,000 paralegals in Ontario. The Law Society is committed to advancing equality, diversity and inclusion in the legal professions — a commitment which includes addressing any barriers faced by lawyers and paralegals to full and active participation in the professions. The Law Society’s Rules of Professional Conduct and Paralegal Rules of Conduct specifically prohibit discrimination and harassment and speak to lawyers’ and paralegals’ responsibility to adhere to human rights laws in Ontario.
2. Since 2001, the proportion of racialized<sup>12</sup> lawyers in the Ontario legal profession has doubled, rising from 9% of the profession in 2001 to 18% in 2014.<sup>13</sup> This is compared to 23% of the Ontario population who indicated in the 2006 Canada Census that they are racialized and 26% of the Ontario population who indicated in the 2011 National Household Survey that they are racialized.<sup>14</sup> The Law Society’s Statistical Snapshot of Paralegals from the Paralegal Annual Report 2014 also show a high proportion of racialized paralegals at 34% of the paralegal profession.<sup>15</sup> The Law Society’s Statistical Snapshots of Paralegals also indicate that 34% of licensed paralegals in Ontario are racialized.
3. A review of statistical data, research findings and anecdotal evidence suggested that, notwithstanding their increase in representation, racialized lawyers face challenges in the practice of law. The Law Society also noted a lack of information about the challenges faced, if any, by racialized paralegals.
4. In 2012, the Law Society created the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group (“the Working Group”) to:

5. Since 2012, the Working Group has been actively engaged in gathering information about the challenges faced by racialized licensees and developing recommendations to address these challenges.

The Process: Listening and Learning

6. The members of the Working Group began their work by conducting a review of the data and literature available on the challenges faced by racialized licensees. The Working Group then gathered information about the challenges using an engagement process, followed by an extensive consultation process.<sup>17</sup>

7. The qualitative and quantitative data obtained from the engagement processes identified widespread barriers experienced by racialized licensees within the professions at all stages of their careers.
8. Through the consultation process, the Working Group received rich feedback on questions organized under the following themes:

<sup>16</sup> The Working Group considered available information regarding the experience of racialized licensees in the regulatory process and determined that there is more work to be done. The preliminary work thus far will be continued.

Recommendations: Framework to Address the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees

On Racism and Initiatives for Change

— Ontario Human Rights Commission

10. The Working Group acknowledges that the legal professions operate in a broader social context in which racism continues to negatively impact the lives of racialized people. During the consultation phase, a participant noted that society could currently be at an inflection point – a point at which there is a significant possibility for change in the way in which the professions engage with equality and diversity principles and practices.
11. Recently, the Ontario government announced the establishment of an Anti-Racism Directorate tasked with “increas[ing] public education and awareness of racism to create a more inclusive province” and “apply[ing] an anti-racism lens in developing, implementing and evaluating government policies, programs and services.”<sup>19</sup> Similarly, in November 2015, the Ontario Public Service (OPS) launched an Anti-Racism Action Plan. This plan focuses on “preventing race-based discrimination and harassment; further diversifying the public service at every level, including senior management; and increasing OPS employees’ awareness of racism and its impacts.”<sup>20</sup>
12. In the academic sphere, in February 2016, University of Toronto committed to collecting race-based data from its students in an effort to “tackle a lack of representation in the lecture hall among some groups and lend hard numbers to the push for equity in the public realm.”<sup>21</sup> In the area of child welfare, in June 2016, children’s aid societies agreed to collect race-based data to address concerns that there are a high number of black and Indigenous children in care.
13. On the popular culture front, in early 2016, media attention turned to #OscarsSoWhite<sup>22</sup> — Hollywood actors and filmmakers who were speaking up against the lack of diversity in the nominations for the Academy Awards. Those who work in Hollywood note that the lack of

14. Race and racism are also at the forefront of issues in the justice system — from the overrepresentation of black and Indigenous peoples in federal prisons<sup>24</sup> to police violence to calls for judicial diversity and beyond. In spring 2016, Black Lives Matter Toronto, “a coalition of black Torontonians working in solidarity with communities/individuals seeking justice from state-sanctioned violence”<sup>25</sup> occupied the space in front of Toronto Police Headquarters for two weeks to protest police violence against the black community. Acknowledging that racialized communities are “over-represented and subject to different treatment in the justice system as a whole”,<sup>26</sup> Legal Aid Ontario is currently developing a strategy to “identify the legal needs and to protect the legal rights of racialized communities in the justice system”.
15. Additionally, the Ontario Human Rights Commission is currently working on a new policy on racial profiling that will “provide guidance on combatting racial profiling in a range of institutional and community settings” and “seek to support and enable Ontario organizations, legal decision-makers and affected community members to better identify, address and prevent racial profiling as a prohibited form of discrimination under the Ontario Human Rights Code.”<sup>27</sup>
16. The information outlined is only a snapshot of the efforts in Ontario and beyond to address racial discrimination. The Working Group is encouraged by these initiatives and is hopeful that implementation of the recommendations listed in this report will lead to systemic change.

Guiding Principle

17. The Working Group’s recommendations stem from an intention to create long lasting systemic change within the professions. The recommendations are put forward in an effort to support the Law Society’s ongoing commitment to ensure that both the law and the practice of law are reflective of all peoples in Ontario and that the professions are free of discrimination and harassment. The Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct speak to the special responsibility of lawyers and paralegals to adhere to the requirements of human rights laws in Ontario, including the obligation not to discriminate.
18. Although the Working Group’s report does not speak to the experiences of Indigenous licensees, the Working Group recognizes that Indigenous peoples face barriers that are unique to Indigenous licensees and barriers that are shared by both racialized and Indigenous licensees. The Working Group notes the importance of addressing the ongoing colonial violence experienced by Indigenous communities and of working towards reconciliation between Indigenous and non-Indigenous peoples. As expressed in the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's final report, "Reconciliation is not an Aboriginal problem; it is a Canadian one. Virtually all aspects of Canadian society need to be reconsidered."<sup>29</sup> The Law Society is currently working on a framework of reconciliation, with the guidance of the Indigenous Advisory Group, comprised of First Nation, Inuit and Métis community representatives, to address unique issues faced by Indigenous peoples in Ontario. The framework of reconciliation is also intended to promote responses to and implementation of the Calls to Action from the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada's final report and the First Nations Representation on Ontario Juries report by The Honourable Frank Iacobucci.

19. In working towards achieving the Working Group's overriding objective, establishing partnerships is important. How we do this is integral to what we do, and 'we' are all lawyers and paralegals, not just the Law Society. The Law Society's consultation was successful in part because the Working Group used a spirit of open inquiry. The consultation was also well attended. There was general acceptance that there is a problem and that it is time to address it.
20. The Working Group heard offers to assist with mentoring, that changes are beginning to happen within firms, that the Law Society should support work that is already being done, and that legal workplaces are willing to share best practices and collaborate to create effective models for progressive change in all parts of the professions. Representatives of the Working Group spoke with firms that provide unconscious bias training to all members, firms that have affinity groups in their workplace and firms that are actively participating in the Law Firm Diversity and Inclusion Network. There were requests that the Law Society not impose mandatory hiring targets and timetables, but accelerate a culture change that has already begun as a result of business imperatives, changing demographics and the interests expressed by clients, students, lawyers, paralegals and indeed the public.
21. At the same time, the Working Group heard concerns that the identified challenges were longstanding, and that change would occur very slowly without strong leadership from the Law Society. The Working Group heard generally that the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project has raised the profile and understanding of these issues, but the Working Group was also urged to use the Law Society's authority to effect change.
22. To satisfy these goals, the Working Group concluded that the Law Society should use a combination of voluntary and mandatory measures, fulfilling its multiple roles in the public interest as change agent, facilitator, resource and regulator. The Law Society's authority to adopt mandatory measures must be interpreted and understood in light of its rights and obligations under the Human Rights Code to protect the public interest balanced with the current explicit authority under the Law Society Act<sup>30</sup> and By-Laws<sup>31</sup> and recent jurisprudence. Within this overarching goal, partnerships with legal workplaces and associations are essential to the success of the proposed measures and projects detailed below.

Objectives

23. The Working Group has identified the following three objectives:
1. Inclusive legal workplaces in Ontario;<sup>32</sup>
  2. Reduction of barriers created by racism, unconscious bias and discrimination; and
  3. Better representation of racialized licensees, in proportion to the representation in the Ontario population, in the professions, in all legal workplaces and at all levels of seniority.
24. The Working Group puts forward the following recommendations in order to meet these objectives. It is anticipated that in order to implement a number of the mandatory recommendations, the Law Society will need to consider appropriate by-law amendments. Additionally, the Law Society will need to invest in information technology that will allow it to effectively record and analyze progress across workplaces. The Working Group has contemplated budgetary considerations in developing these recommendations and it is anticipated that a senior staff implementation working group will be involved in implementing the recommendations.
25. The recommendations fall within four interrelated categories: accelerating culture shift, measuring progress, educating for change and implementing supports. The final recommendation speaks to the operations of the Law Society.

Recommendations

Accelerating Culture Shift

Recommendation 1 – Reinforcing Professional Obligations

The Law Society will review and amend, where appropriate, the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, and Commentaries to reinforce the professional obligations of all licensees to recognize, acknowledge and promote principles of equality, diversity and inclusion consistent with the requirements under human rights legislation and the special responsibilities of licensees in the legal and paralegal professions.

26. The Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct outline the professional and ethical obligations of lawyers and paralegals. The Working Group recommends that in order to ensure that licensees infuse the principles of equality, diversity and inclusion into their everyday practice, the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct and/or the Commentaries be reviewed to determine how this objective can be advanced.

Recommendation 2 – Diversity and Inclusion Project

The Law Society will work with stakeholders, such as interested legal workplaces, legal associations, law schools and paralegal colleges to develop model policies and resources to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees.

27. The Working Group recommends that the Law Society engage in a collaboration between, for example, legal associations, government legal departments, the Law Firms Diversity and Inclusion Network (“LFDIN”), Legal Leaders for Diversity and Inclusion (“LLD”), sole practitioners, licensees in private practice, and law schools to develop and support diversity and inclusion policies, programs and practices intended to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees. The project would focus on the following areas:
  - Developing resources on competency hiring, unconscious bias training, barriers to inclusion in the workplace, affinity group development, contract compliance and best practices within firms and workplaces;
  - Considering the assignment of work and career development, particularly understanding the impact of cultural homophily on career development;<sup>33</sup> and
  - Working with law schools to create or provide better sources of information on what is needed to apply, interview and succeed in a larger legal workplace. This could include enhancing or using the On Campus Interview (“OCI”) process for the dissemination of information. This would also include outreach to the National Committee on Accreditation (“NCA”) candidates.
28. The proposed project would build upon the Law Society’s experience with its Justicia Project, created in 2008 with the goal of retaining and advancing women in private practice. The project saw more than 55 law firms voluntarily sign agreements with the Law Society to develop practical resources for law firms and women lawyers. The Justicia resources addressed topics such as: leadership, career advancement, business development, flexible work arrangements and parental leave.
29. A number of participants in the engagement and consultation processes supported the creation of a diversity project similar to the Justicia Project.
30. During the consultation process, the Working Group received feedback from a number of legal workplaces that were actively engaging in work related to enhancing diversity and inclusion in their workplaces. The Working Group also heard from legal workplaces that would benefit from support in developing diversity and inclusion policies and practices.
31. The Working Group concluded that a Justicia-type project would benefit the professions by creating a space where legal workplaces can openly discuss challenges in addressing the barriers faced by racialized licensees in the professions and by creating a forum to document and share best practices. Furthermore, legal workplaces could develop, in advance and with the support of the Law Society, policies that they will be required to have in place under Recommendation 3.

32. Currently, a number of large firms are engaged in a collaborative diversity initiative through the LFDIN and in-house counsel through LLD. Unlike the Justicia Project, which was focused on private practice, the proposed project would bring together legal workplaces from various practice environments and practice areas, in addition to associations and law schools to discuss overlapping concerns and to work on collaborative solutions.
33. In 2009, the Law Society of England and Wales (“LSEW”) created the Diversity and Inclusion Charter (the “Charter”). The LSEW describes the Charter as follows:

The purpose of the Charter is to help practices turn their commitment to diversity and inclusion into positive, practical action for their businesses, staff and clients. This is achieved by helping practices to record and measure their procedures against a set of diversity and inclusion standards and by providing them with opportunities to share best practice advice and guidance with colleagues from across the profession. To date over 300 practices have signed up to the Charter, representing more than a third of all solicitors in private practice.

The Diversity and Inclusion Charter is a public commitment by legal practices to promote the values of diversity, equality and inclusion throughout their business. Whether it's through recruitment, retention, career progression or training and development, all our signatories are committed to improving opportunities for people in the legal profession, regardless of their background or circumstances.<sup>34</sup>

34. Practices that commit to the Charter are required to report biennially and show how well they are meeting their Charter commitments, and where more work needs to be done. Practices complete an online self-assessment report about their progress and performance. The results are published in aggregate by the LSEW and used to identify trends, successes and areas for improvement.
35. The Charter is accompanied by a set of protocols to help practices fulfil their commitments in key areas, such as reporting and monitoring, flexible working and procuring legal services. In addition, checklists, best practice guidance, case studies and toolkits are available.
36. The LSEW has also developed diversity and inclusion standards to help the signatories complete their annual self-assessment form. The standards help to show how well a legal practice is complying with equality legislation, regulation and equality and diversity standards. The Diversity and Inclusion Standards are accompanied by best practice guidance that provide examples of positive diversity and inclusion practices, as well as advice on where to get more help or information.
37. The Barreau du Québec, following a consultation regarding the challenges faced by racialized licensees practising in Québec, developed a three-year action plan, which includes creating Justicia-type project to increase the recruitment, retention and advancement of racialized licensees.<sup>35</sup> In June 2016, the Barreau launched Projet Panorama, a project aimed at recruiting, retaining and advancing lawyers from ethnocultural groups within law firms and legal

The Law Society will:

- 1) require every licensee to adopt and to abide by a statement of principles acknowledging their obligation to promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally, and in their behaviour towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public;
- 2) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy for their legal workplace addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement, which will be available to members of the professions and the public upon request;
- 3) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to complete, every two years, an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment for their legal workplace, to be provided to the Law Society; and
- 4) encourage legal workplaces to conduct inclusion surveys by providing them with sample templates.

38. Some licensees are employed by non-licensees, including, for example, in-house counsel. Both employers and employees in legal workplaces have obligations under the Human Rights Code. Licensees have professional obligations with respect to human rights established by the Rules of Professional Conduct or the Paralegal Rules of Conduct. For licensees employed by non-licensees, the human rights/diversity policy contemplated by this recommendation is a policy in respect of their individual obligations addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement, which may of course be addressed by the employer's policy.

39. To ensure the consistent implementation of this recommendation, the Law Society will guide licensees in the development of statements of principles, and legal workplaces in the development of policies and self-assessment tools. In consultation with legal workplaces, it will develop resources, such as templates, guides and model policies.

40. Recognizing that sole practitioners and small legal workplaces may have limited resources, the Working Group has determined that the requirements under Recommendation 3 (2) and Recommendation 3(3) should apply to legal workplaces of at least 10 licensees; however, legal workplaces comprised of less than 10 licensees are strongly encouraged to develop human rights/diversity policies and complete equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessments.

41. It is anticipated that the nature of the policies and self-assessment tools will vary based on the size and type of legal workplace. As a result, we propose that the Law Society, through the diversity and inclusion project described in Recommendation 2, develop the templates for the statements of principles, policies and self-assessment tools in collaboration with legal workplaces that wish to participate in the project. We believe that this approach would increase the awareness of legal workplaces, begin the cultural shift, create greater buy-in and allow for the development of resources that take into account the realities of legal workplaces.
42. The Working Group believes that the Law Society should minimize unnecessary burdens, and recognize that many licensees and workplaces have already moved forward proactively with equality measures on their own. Licensees and workplaces will be free to adopt templates and model policies where appropriate to their needs, or to create their own statements of principles and policies that include the elements covered by the Law Society's sample documents, but tailor them to their specific contexts.
43. The stages for the implementation of this recommendation would be as follows:
- Stage 1: In 2017, the Law Society would communicate to the professions the requirements outlined in Stages 1-3.
  - Stage 2: By January 1, 2018, licensees would be required to have adopted and to abide by a statement of principles, and each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario would be required to have a human rights/diversity policy as described above.
  - Stage 3: The 2017 Lawyer Annual Report ("LAR") and Paralegal Annual Report ("PAR"), which would be completed by licensees in early 2018, and every annual report thereafter, would ask licensees to indicate whether or not they have adopted, and are abiding by, a statement of principles. The 2017 LAR and PAR would also ask licensees in designated legal workplaces to indicate whether or not their legal workplace has a human rights/diversity policy.
  - Stage 4: By the end of 2018, and every two years thereafter, the Law Society would require a representative of each designated legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to engage in a diversity and inclusion self-assessment. Legal workplaces would then report to the Law Society on whether they had completed the self-assessment and, if not, explain their reasons for not having done so.
44. The Working Group believes that requiring licensees to make a clear commitment to equality, diversity and inclusion will encourage licensees to consider their individual roles in creating lasting change.
45. Section 4.1 of the commentary under section 2.1-1 of the Rules of Professional Conduct reads as follows:

A lawyer has special responsibilities by virtue of the privileges afforded the legal profession and the important role it plays in a free and democratic society and in the administration of justice, including a special responsibility to recognize the diversity of the Ontario community, to protect the dignity of individuals, and to respect human rights laws in force in Ontario.<sup>38</sup>

46. Similarly, section 2.03 of the Paralegal Rules of Conduct state “the principles of the Ontario Human Rights Code and related case law apply to the interpretation of this rule [the rule on Harassment and Discrimination].”<sup>39</sup>
47. A number of consultation participants supported the Law Society’s role in setting guidelines for equality, diversity and inclusion in the professions and requiring legal workplaces to report on their progress in this area. As one group of consultation participants noted, “This would increase the accountability and transparency of legal workplaces in their treatment of racialized licensees, while encouraging a culture of compliance across the province.”<sup>40</sup>
48. The Working Group considered requesting that legal workplaces voluntarily adopt policies. The research and the consultation process, however, made clear that the challenges faced by racialized licensees are both longstanding and significant. In our view, the Law Society must take a leadership role in giving legal workplaces reasonable, but fixed, deadlines to implement steps that are important to achieve lasting change. Indeed, many of these steps have been taken, or will be taken by legal workplaces voluntarily, because of their acknowledged importance.
49. The Working Group concluded that required minimum standards of equality, diversity and inclusion will reinforce the human rights responsibilities of licensees — obligations already required by the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct and, more generally, the Human Rights Code. Furthermore, as the Ontario Human Rights Commission (“OHRC”) notes:

In addition to addressing obligations under the Human Rights Code, the adoption and implementation of an effective anti-racism vision statement and policy has the potential of limiting harm and reducing liability. It also promotes the equality and diversity goals of organizations and institutions and makes good business sense.<sup>41</sup>
50. It is the Working Group’s intention that legal workplaces will take this opportunity to implement comprehensive equality, diversity and inclusion policies, and will consider whether progress is being achieved by engaging in periodic self-assessment.
51. Some organizations have adopted a similar approach by creating a “comply or explain” approach. For example, the Ontario Securities Commission (“OSC”) requires companies regulated by the OSC to disclose the following gender-related information: the number of women on the board and in executive positions; policies regarding the representation of women on the board; the board or nominating committee’s consideration of the representation of women in the director identification and selection process; and director term limits and other mechanisms of renewal on their board.<sup>42</sup> The OSC requires companies to either report their implementation or consideration of the items listed above, or to explain their reasons for not doing so.

52. The Working Group's recommendation that legal workplaces of at least 10 licensees in Ontario complete a self-assessment about diversity performance, and report the results to the Law Society stems from an intention to have legal workplaces engage in dialogue and reflection on the current state of diversity and inclusion within their workplace, and an intention to encourage legal workplaces to work proactively to advance diversity and inclusion efforts.
53. The Working Group has reviewed the Canadian Bar Association's ("CBA") guide Assessing Ethical Infrastructure in Your Law Firm: A Practical Guide for Law Firms.<sup>43</sup> The document was drafted to "assist lawyers and firms by providing practical guidance on law firm structures, policies and procedures to ensure that ethical duties to clients, third parties and the public are fulfilled".
54. The document contains a detailed self-evaluation tool for firms, the CBA Ethical Practices Self-Evaluation Tool, which outlines 10 key areas of ethical infrastructure and provides questions related to firm policies and procedures under each identified area.<sup>44</sup>
55. The self-evaluation tool is modelled on the approach used in New South Wales for regulation of incorporated legal practices. Rather than being required to follow specific rules, the firms are required to self-assess whether their practices and policies are effective in ensuring professional conduct and to establish practices and policies that are effective in their specific context. The result has been a two-third reduction in client complaints for firms regulated in this way.<sup>45</sup>
56. A similar approach has been used for the assessment of diversity performance. The U.S.-based Minority Corporate Counsel Association has developed the Diversity Self-Assessment Tool for Law Firms, in an effort to "stimulate thought and open a dialogue within a firm regarding how to advance its diversity efforts."<sup>46</sup> Firms are asked to assess diversity performance in the following areas: leadership and commitment, professional development, recruitment and retention, representation/demographics, workplace culture and diversity, and external face of the firm.
57. The Law Society of England and Wales ("LSEW") also asks firms that have signed on to its Diversity and Inclusion Charter to complete a self-assessment (discussed previously in Recommendation 2).

58. In addition to the information gathered through the self-assessment, legal workplaces would be encouraged to conduct their own comprehensive inclusion surveys to establish benchmarks and identify and address concerns related to workplace culture. The Law Society has developed a number of model policies and guides to assist law firms in their efforts to ensure that their policies and practices are in keeping with equality and diversity principles. Again, the Law Society would develop sample inclusion survey templates, which would be shared with the profession.

Measuring Progress

59. The Working Group proposes, based on the consultation findings and our review of the literature and best practices on measuring systemic change that both the Law Society and legal workplaces should partner in collecting and analyzing qualitative and quantitative information about diversity. The Law Society would collect demographic data through the annual LAR and PAR, and qualitative information through a periodic questionnaire and a quadrennial province wide cultural inclusion survey similar to the one conducted by Stratcom on behalf of the Law Society in 2013. Legal workplaces of a sufficient size would obtain both quantitative and qualitative information about their workplaces in order to analyze the results, and ultimately an inclusion index would be published by the Law Society.
60. The 2012 CBA guide, Measuring Diversity in Law Firms: A Critical Tool for Achieving Diversity Performance, identifies two types of data for measuring a law firm's diversity performance — self-identification data and diversity climate data. Self-identification data is collected “to assess the representativeness of [a] firm's workforce”<sup>47</sup>, whereas diversity climate data is “focus[ed] on the perceptions and attitudes about diversity held about the members of the firm.”<sup>48</sup>
61. The collection of both self-identification data and diversity climate or inclusion data provides a more complete picture of diversity and inclusion in the professions. In Data & Diversity in the Canadian Legal Community, Dean Lorne Sossin and Sabrina Lyon, basing their conclusion on extensive interviews, a review of ongoing policy initiatives and a comprehensive analysis, state “generating rigorous and meaningful data, both quantitative and qualitative, would advance a culture of inclusion and accountability in the Canadian justice community.”<sup>49</sup>

Recommendation 4 – Measuring Progress through Quantitative Analysis

Each year, the Law Society will measure progress quantitatively by providing legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees in Ontario with the quantitative self-identification data of their licensees compiled from the Lawyer Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report so they can compare

— Canadian Institute of Diversity and Inclusion

62. Since 2009, the Law Society has collected demographic data based on race, Indigenous identity, gender, Francophone identity, disability, and lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer (“LGBTQ”) identity through the Lawyer Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report. Self-identification questions were included in the annual reports to inform the Law Society of the extent to which the professions are reflective of the broader community they serve, to help meet the needs of the public, and to develop programs to enhance the diversity of the professions. These demographic data are analyzed and published in aggregated form under the following categories: age, year of call, type of employment, size of firm (for those in private practice), and region.<sup>51</sup>
63. In the consultation paper, the Working Group highlighted the importance of gathering and maintaining demographic data, providing the following reasons for engaging in this practice:
  - a. Firms can demonstrate that they value equality, diversity and inclusion in their firm’s culture;
  - b. Maintaining demographic data allows firms to monitor diversity in recruitment and advancement and to adjust policies and practices accordingly;
  - c. Diversity, and data on diversity, assist firms in attracting a strong talent base at all levels. The pool of law students is increasingly diverse, and so is the pool of legal talent. Graduating law students are often interested in the diversity characteristics of the legal workplaces to which they can apply;
  - d. Such data can be a tool to increase a firm’s competitiveness. Numerous large clients in the U.S., and now in Canada, issue requests for proposals (“RFPs”) to select their legal counsel, requiring firms to produce demographic data of their workforce. For example, the Bank of Montreal’s Legal, Corporate & Compliance Group (“LCCG”) requires disclosure of a firm’s diversity statistics as part of its RFP process for legal suppliers;<sup>52</sup>
  - e. Demographic data assist firms to enhance their client services and professional reputation, and to become role models by ensuring representation at all levels;
  - f. Demographic data provide background and incentives for firms to develop programs that enhance inclusion; and
  - g. The information may assist in developing initiatives to enhance access to justice.

64. Dean Lorne Sossin and Sabrina Lyon, in their article Data & Diversity in the Canadian Legal Community, also underline the importance of data collection, noting that while “collecting and publishing data on diversity will not in and of themselves make the justice community more inclusive, it is difficult if not impossible to see how the justice community could become more inclusive without meaningful data.”<sup>53</sup>
65. The options outlined in the Consultation Paper regarding data collection largely focused on the collection of demographic data, including:
- collecting demographic data of licensees through the LAR and PAR, publicly reporting the demographic data based on firm size and disclosing to firms their own demographic data;
  - working with firms to develop consistent templates for demographic data collection and encouraging firms to collect such data on a regular basis;
  - setting parameters for the voluntary collection of demographic data by firms and requiring firms to report either that they are collecting this information or the rationale for not collecting such data; and
  - setting parameters for mandatory collection of demographic data by firm.
66. Throughout the consultant and community engagements and the consultation process, the Working Group heard concerns from some participants that the information obtained from the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project would be shelved and the project would not result in meaningful change. By engaging in periodic litmus tests of equality and inclusion in the professions, the Law Society will ensure that its efforts to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees are ongoing and will evolve based on the issues identified by the inclusion surveys. As the OHRC notes, “When data is gathered, tracked and analyzed in a credible way over time, it becomes possible to measure progress and success (or lack of it). Budgets, policies, practices, processes, programming, services and interventions can then be evaluated, modified and improved.”<sup>54</sup>
67. The Legal Services Board (“LSB”), the independent body responsible for overseeing the regulation of lawyers in England and Wales, has taken a proactive approach to gathering demographic data. In 2011, the LSB published statutory guidance outlining its expectation of approved regulators to measure levels of diversity and mobility in the legal workforce. Approved regulators, including the Solicitors Regulation Authority,<sup>55</sup> now require all practices they regulate to collect, report and publish data annually on the diversity of their workforce. The LSB has cited transparency as the rationale for requiring the publication of diversity data.<sup>56</sup>
68. Information about the demographic composition of legal workplaces would be compiled through the Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report data, which would comprise of the statistical snapshots of the professions as a whole and the data compiled for each firm. This data would be provided to each legal workplace on an annual basis. In considering privacy concerns of individual licensees and the Law Society’s ability to ensure confidentiality, the

Working Group has suggested that this recommendation be applicable only to legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees in Ontario.

69. The Working Group has considered the input received from the engagements and the consultation process and proposes the following stages for the collection of self-identification data by firm:
- Stage 1: The Law Society would continue to measure the representation of racialized licensees using the information in the 2016 Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report, completed by the professions in 2017, by providing the demographic data in aggregate form to the public as general snapshots of the professions in 2018.
  - Stage 2: The introductory paragraph of the self-identification demographic questions of the 2017 Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report, completed by the professions in 2018, would be adapted to inform licensees of the change in the Law Society's use of the self-identification data.
  - Stage 3: Beginning with the 2018 LAR and PAR, completed by licensees in 2019, the Law Society would prepare a profile (containing, for example, the proportion of racialized partners, associates and other licensed staff) of each legal workplace of at least 25 lawyers and/or paralegals, and would confidentially provide it to each licensee within the workplace.

Recommendation 5 – Measuring Progress through Qualitative Analysis

The Law Society will measure progress qualitatively by:

- 1) asking licensees to voluntarily answer inclusion questions, provided by the Law Society, about their legal workplace, every four years; and
  - 2) compiling the results of the inclusion questions for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees in Ontario and providing the legal workplace with a summary of the information gathered.
70. In implementing this recommendation, the Law Society would take into account issues of privacy and confidentiality. The qualitative information about legal workplaces would be gathered by asking licensees voluntary inclusion questions about their legal workplace using a tool that would allow for the information to be compiled and provided to each legal workplace. This information would be collected by the Law Society with the purpose of tracking trends over time and refining and developing programs and initiatives to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees and other equality-seeking groups.
71. Licensees would be asked about their experiences in their workplaces, including subjects such as career advancement opportunities, feelings of belonging, and experiences of discrimination. The questions would be drafted with the assistance of stakeholders and experts in the diversity and inclusion field. Much like the current demographic questions in the Lawyer Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report, answers would be voluntary. The information would be shared in aggregate form, with legal workplaces of at least 25 lawyers and/or paralegals.
72. The Working Group proposes the following stages for the collection of qualitative data:

- Stage 1: Notice would be provided to the professions in the 2017 Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report, completed by the professions in 2018, of the Law Society's intention collect qualitative inclusion data.
- Stage 2: The Law Society would begin compiling quantitative data of legal workplaces using the 2018 Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report – to be completed in 2019 – and would continue to compile this data every four years thereafter.

Recommendation 6 – Inclusion Index

Every four years, the Law Society will develop and publish an inclusion index that reflects the following information, including, for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees: the legal workplace's self-assessment information (Recommendation 3(3)), demographic data obtained from the Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report (Recommendation 4) and information gathered from the inclusion questions provided by the Law Society (Recommendation 5).

73. The Working Group has considered a number of options for data collection and has arrived at the recommendations to measure progress outlined in Recommendations 3(3) (self-assessment), 4 and 5. The Working Group also believes that accountability and transparency are key to increasing equality and diversity in the professions. Members of the Working Group have considered a number of methods to ensure that these principles are reflected in the recommendations. The Working Group has decided that in addition to gathering qualitative and quantitative data about legal workplaces, the creation and publication of an inclusion index – an index that would include legal workplaces' assessments of their diversity and inclusion-related achievements and that would allow legal workplaces to demonstrate their performance and progress – would advance the goals of equality, diversity and inclusion. The Law Society would create this index and would determine the categories of information to be included in the index, as well as the weight provided to each category.
74. The Working Group is of the view that a public inclusion index would serve the many objectives cited earlier in relation to the benefits of collecting demographic data. The index would be a valuable tool for legal workplaces and the Law Society to determine whether there is progress in the professions. Legal workplaces could also use the index to attract prospective clients and to recruit talent.
75. A number of consultation participants as well as courts and commentators<sup>57</sup> have stated that to truly understand the equality and inclusion climate in a workplace, it is necessary to look at both quantitative and qualitative data. Sossin and Lyon exemplify this perspective, noting that “a blended ‘index’ of quantitative and qualitative factors best responds to the need for outcomes to matter (how many diverse lawyers a legal workplace is able to recruit relative to the available pool of candidates) and the need for inputs to matter (a legal workplace's policies, participation in proactive recruitment, establishing an inclusive firm culture, etc.).”<sup>58</sup>

76. As Sossin and Lyon note, “the process of collecting and disseminating qualitative and quantitative data is not just an end in itself (to promote transparency, accountability, profile, etc.) but a means to developing responsive and effective policies [...] a range of innovations are already in place to build on – from mentorship programs, to career orientation and outreach, to equity and inclusion officers within legal workplaces, to media and public information campaigns.”<sup>59</sup>
77. The LSEW publishes an annual diversity and inclusion report, which includes the results of self-assessments completed by the signatories to the Diversity and Inclusion Charter. According to the LSEW, “all signatories are required to self-assess against a set of standards and report on diversity data across their organisation, with smaller practices responding to a set of questions tailored to the needs of smaller firms”.<sup>60</sup> Although the data is collected by firm, it is published in aggregate form. In 2015, 341 firms submitted their self-assessment information to the LSEW.
78. For the last 10 years, the Black Solicitors Network (“BSN”), also based in the UK, has published The BSN Diversity League Table, a comprehensive report on diversity and inclusion in the legal profession, on an annual basis. The LSEW is the main sponsor of this initiative. According to the LSEW:
- The Diversity League Table has become an invaluable resource for the legal profession. Each year, the performance of participating law firms and chambers is measured across a range of demographic profiles. This provides an opportunity for firms to compare their performance against peers across key areas. The Diversity League Table also offers an opportunity to monitor the sector as a whole, facilitating a more diverse and transparent profession.<sup>61</sup>
79. The LSEW further notes that the LSEW Diversity and Inclusion Charter and the BSN Diversity League Table are complementary initiatives, as they both “provide comprehensive data sets [and] promote collaboration in equality and diversity matters and best practice across a range of key business areas”.<sup>62</sup>
80. The Diversity League Table includes aggregate demographic data based on gender, ethnicity, LGBTQ and disability status, published by firm. Firms also provide information about policies & practices, specifically addressing the following categories: Monitoring; Leadership and Policy; External Face; Staff Development and Support; and Recruitment, Promotion and Retention. Firms are then given a score and a rank, based on the quantitative and qualitative data obtained. In 2015, 56 firms and chambers participated in the Diversity League Table.<sup>63</sup>
81. A number of organizations have developed similar inclusion indices, detailing aggregate inclusion information about legal workplaces and workplaces in other industries.<sup>64</sup>

82. The Law Society believes that stakeholder participation in the development of the inclusion index is important, such as the participation of the LFDIN, LLD and associations with mandates to represent racialized licensees.
83. The Working Group suggests that the Law Society create a similar inclusion index to those described above, which would reflect the demographic information about the composition of each legal workplace and would include scores and rankings based on the presence or lack thereof of equality-related policies and practices. The Law Society would report this information by legal workplace for all legal workplaces with over 25 licensees. The Law Society would begin publishing the inclusion index in 2019 and would update the index every four years.

Recommendation 7 – Repeat Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project Inclusion Survey

The Law Society will conduct inclusion surveys with questions similar to those asked in Appendix F of the Stratcom Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Final Report (March 11, 2014) (available online at <http://www.stratcom.ca/wp-content/uploads/manual/Racialized-Licensees-Full-Report.pdf>) The first inclusion survey will be conducted within one year of the adoption of these recommendations, and thereafter every four years, subject to any recommendation by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee to Convocation.

84. The Stratcom survey was sent to all licensees, both racialized and non-racialized, in 2013. The anonymous 35-question survey included questions on topics such as: career opportunities and professional growth; disrespect and disadvantage; career setbacks; barriers to entry and advancement; and stereotyping.
85. In order to evaluate the success of the proposed initiatives and to identify any potential areas where barriers to inclusion may remain, the Working Group proposes repeating the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project inclusion questions within the abovementioned timeline. The proposed timeline is based on the Working Group's understanding and acknowledgement that systemic change will take time to occur. Four years was seen as an appropriate timespan for changes to take hold.

Recommendation 8 — Progressive Compliance Measures

The Law Society will consider and enact, as appropriate, progressive compliance measures for legal workplaces that do not comply with the requirements proposed in Recommendation 3 and/or legal workplaces that are identified as having systemic barriers to diversity and inclusion.

86. The Working Group, having outlined some mandatory initiatives in the aforementioned recommendations, recognizes that there must be mechanisms in place to deal with non-compliance. The Working Group recommends that the Law Society take a progressive compliance approach with legal workplaces that do not meet the requirements outlined in the recommendations. The Working Group envisions a gradation of responses, beginning with remedial approaches, such as meeting with representatives of legal workplaces to discuss concerns with their policies and/or practices, to disciplinary approaches if there is deliberate non-compliance with requirements, despite multiple warnings, or no efforts are made to address systemic barriers.

Educating for Change

Recommendation 9 – Continuing Professional Development (CPD) Programs on Topics of Equality and Inclusion in the Professions

The Law Society will:

- 1) launch a three hour accredited program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions;
  - 2) develop resources to assist legal workplaces in designing and delivering their own three hour program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions, to be accredited by the Law Society; and
  - 3) require each licensee to complete three hours of an accredited program focused on equality and inclusion within the first three years following the adoption of these recommendations and one hour per year every year thereafter, which will count towards the licensee's professionalism hours for that year.
87. The Working Group recommends that the Law Society launch an innovative accredited program focused on topics such as equality and inclusion in the professions to assist licensees with promoting these principles. The Law Society would also support legal workplaces in developing their own programs that could be accredited by the Law Society. This would allow legal workplaces and legal associations to build their capacity in this area while addressing the needs of their membership base. The Law Society would work with associations to develop criteria for accreditation and to assist legal workplaces and legal associations in developing their own accredited courses. Programs could be delivered in any format already approved under the eligible education activities criteria available on the Law Society website.
88. In order to create awareness and engagement of the professions, the Law Society would require each licensee to complete three hours of an accredited program focused on equality and inclusion within the first three years following the adoption of these recommendations and one hour per year every year thereafter. . These programs count towards professionalism CPD requirements for the year in which the hours were taken. The monitoring of these activities to confirm completion of hours would be the same as any monitoring conducted to confirm completion of professionalism hours. No additional oversight would be required.
89. Training sessions could cover topics such as unconscious bias, the impact of daily verbal, behavioural and environmental indignities, the value of diversity and inclusion, understanding power and privilege and addressing discrimination and harassment.

90. The Working Group also suggests that the Law Society, as part of its commitment to providing accessible education, offer an online program on topics related to equality and inclusion in the professions. Such program could contain a video presentation with best practices and links to resources, for licensees who wish to complete their professionalism requirements in an online environment. If delivered online, the program could consist of integrated learning modules with integrated polling or test questions, as already done in various contexts including the Accessibility for Ontarians with Disabilities Act training and existing Law Society CPD programs.
91. The Working Group considered the option that the Law Society provide voluntary accredited CPD programs on topics such as equality and inclusion in the professions. However, the Working Group has determined that participation in equality and inclusion-related education is essential to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees. The OHRC notes, in its Policy and Guidelines on Racism and Racial Discrimination, that “mandatory education, training and development initiatives” may be required for an anti-racism policy and program to be effective.<sup>65</sup>
92. The Working Group initially considered training that would focus on “cultural competence”. Ritu Bhasin, a lawyer consultant in this area, defines cultural competence as “how we connect with people who are different than us” or “The ability to relate to others comfortably, respectfully and productively.”<sup>66</sup> A significant number of consultation participants agreed that mandatory CPD would assist in addressing the challenges faced by racialized licensees. A number of consultation participants emphasized the need for training to be delivered through an anti-discrimination or anti-oppression lens. The same participants noted discomfort with the term “cultural competence” due to the focus on understanding difference or “the other” as opposed to encouraging reflection on power and privilege. Consequently, the Working Group has chosen to focus the training on the principles of equality and inclusion, incorporating concepts of unconscious bias and cultural homophily.
93. The Rules of Professional Conduct speak to the responsibility of lawyers to recognize the diversity of the Ontario community. Both the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct require that licensees protect the dignity of individuals and respect human rights laws in force in Ontario. Equality and inclusion training will assist licensees in understanding their obligations under the rules.

Recommendation 10 – The Licensing Process

The Law Society will include the topics of cultural competency, equality and inclusion in the professions as competencies to be acquired in the Licensing Process.

94. The Working Group wishes to integrate the topics of cultural competency, equality and inclusion into the Licensing Process, as appropriate, including within the reference materials for licensing, and in any program or course work that is completed during the Licensing Process.

95. A number of consultation participants emphasized the importance of incorporating teachings of equality and inclusion into the Licensing Process. For example, one participant noted that integrating cultural competence training in the Licensing Process would be “well-suited to ensuring that a strong foundation of diversity awareness and cultural consciousness is in place from the beginning of an individual’s legal career.”<sup>67</sup>
96. The Entry-Level Solicitor Competencies and the Entry-Level Barrister Competencies both include the following section under Ethical and Professional Responsibilities:
19. respects human rights (e.g. does not engage in sexual harassment, discrimination or other human rights violations) (Rules 6.3-0 and 6.3.1. (Part of 24)
97. Additionally, under Client Communications, both sets of competencies include the following:
192. recognizes and is sensitive to clients’ circumstances, special needs and intellectual capacity (e.g. diversity, language, literacy, socioeconomic status, disability, health).
98. Similarly, the Paralegal Competencies, under Ethical and Professional Responsibilities, read:
3. Maintains appropriate professional relationships with clients, other licensees, employees and others (e.g. does not engage in sexual harassment, discrimination and human rights violations, respects multi-cultural issues).
99. Under section 27(2) of the Law Society Act and section 8(1) of By-Law 4, Licensing, a recipient of a lawyer or paralegal licence is also required to be of good character. The Law Society has indicated that adherence to human rights and equality principles should be considered in a determination of good character. The November 2013 Submission on The Federation of Law Societies of Canada’s National Suitability to Practise Standard Consultation Report<sup>68</sup> identifies that “specific reference to respect for and adherence to human rights and equality principles sends an important message to those entering the professions.”
100. The Working Group believes that the integration of equality and inclusion information, presented through an anti-discrimination or anti-oppression lens, will assist in preparing candidates to be competent members of the professions.

Implementing Supports

Recommendation 11 – Building Communities of Support

The Law Society, in collaboration with legal associations where appropriate, will provide support to racialized licensees in need of direction and assistance through mentoring and networking initiatives.

101. In considering this recommendation, the Working Group noted that in November 2013, the Law Society created a Mentoring and Advisory Services Proposal Task Force to consider mentoring

and advisory services models. The Working Group provided input to the Task Force on the development of models to best address the needs and facilitate the success of racialized licensees. The Task Force provided its final report to Convocation in January 2016. Convocation approved the creation of a law practice and advisory services initiative, which, at the outset of its implementation, "...will focus on providing supports for already identified communities of need, namely, sole practice and small firm licensees, new licensees, racialized licensees, those seeking succession planning supports and those within certain defined practice areas."<sup>69</sup>

102. Data gathered through the LAR and PAR show that 24% of racialized lawyers are in sole practice and 33% of racialized lawyers practice in legal workplaces of two to five. Similarly, 25% of racialized paralegals are in sole practice. Engagement and consultation process participants highlighted the vulnerability of racialized sole practitioners in the professions — emphasizing the need for sole practitioners and licensees in small firms to have strong mentors and networks. The Working Group also recognizes that it is essential to be responsive to the needs and challenges of racialized licensees in a broad range of practice/work settings and practice areas, which will require approaches that are not "one size fits all".
103. The Law Society currently offers mentorship initiatives that will be enhanced by the new Law Practice Coach and Advisor Initiative.<sup>70</sup> Additionally, the Law Society, in partnership with legal associations and community groups, offers educational programs to promote discussion among members of the professions and the public on the challenges and opportunities for Francophone, Indigenous and equality-seeking communities in the legal professions. These Equity Legal Education events are often followed by networking receptions for members of the professions.
104. The Working Group heard that there is a need for increased, and in some cases, revamped, mentoring and networking initiatives to combat the isolation faced by racialized sole practitioners and racialized licensees practising in small firms. In considering potential mentoring and networking initiatives to support racialized licensees, the Working Group has identified the following objectives:
  1. Encourage the development of communities of support in the professions, including facilitating the search for multiple points for direction and assistance (e.g. peers, subject-matter experts, ethics sounding boards);
  2. Increase the capacity of legal associations to reach more licensees for trusted, nonjudgmental advice; and
  3. Foster connections for licensees who feel isolated, recognizing that feeling professionally isolated is not limited to those in small firms and sole practitioners or those in certain practice areas.

105. The Working Group highlighted the importance of working with legal associations in meeting the abovementioned objectives. The Working Group is also mindful of different types of mentoring, including both advisory services and coaching.<sup>71</sup>
106. As a first step, the Working Group proposes the following:
- Enhanced use of technology to facilitate the development of communities of trust;
  - Enhanced networking opportunities.

107. The Working Group believes that any successful mentorship initiative should reach racialized licensees across the province. This proposal would involve the robust use of technology to increase the ability of racialized licensees to access information and support, with the goal of enhancing learning, competence and success. For example, the Law Society could work with associations of racialized licensees, where appropriate, to create an online resource centre for racialized lawyers and paralegals. This resource centre could act as a hub to bring together the various mentorship initiatives available around the province. The resource centre could include materials geared toward the needs, concerns and unique situations of licensees in sole practice, associations of sole practitioners and small partnerships. Resources could cover topics such as finding a mentor, action plans for mentor-mentee relationships, networking, and the benefits of joining associations. The resource centre could also include a forum for racialized licensees to discuss topics relevant to their practice environments and a podcast series on a range of topics related to race and racism in the professions and supports for racialized licensees.
108. The Working Group has also considered an initiative that would involve working with stakeholders, existing mentoring groups and others to develop the technology that would allow any licensee (racialized or otherwise) to have access to a diverse group of mentors. It may be helpful to ask licensees to indicate whether they are interested in participating in such a program when they fill out their LAR or PAR or through other methods, such as the Law Society Portal. Alternatively, mentors and mentees could be matched using a mobile application (app) with programmed algorithms to increase the potential of having successful relationships. Similar mobile apps have been created to assist with the search for a mentor or mentee in other industries.<sup>72</sup> For example, Menteer, a free, open source online platform,<sup>73</sup> works to match job seekers and mentors. Potential mentors and mentees are asked to answer a series of questions about their skills, interests and backgrounds to assist with finding suitable matches to meet their needs. Mentees are provided with a number of mentor profiles, which the algorithm has determined would be a good fit. Mentors wait for mentees to communicate with them to ask if they would like to establish a mentor-mentee relationship.<sup>74</sup>

Enhanced Networking Opportunities

109. This project involves reviewing current practices around Law Society events and events co-hosted with equality-seeking legal associations to ensure that networking events are affordable, inclusive and relevant to licensees.

Recommendation 12 – Addressing Complaints of Systemic Discrimination

The Law Society, in light of the findings of this project and emerging issues in the professions, will:

- 1) review the function, processes and structure of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC), including considering effective ways for the DHC to address issues of systemic discrimination;
- 2) revise the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, where appropriate, so that systemic discrimination and reprisal for complaints of discrimination and harassment are clearly identified as breaches of professional conduct requirements;
- 3) create effective ways for the Professional Regulation Division to address complaints of systemic discrimination; and
- 4) create a specialized and trained team to address complaints of discrimination.

Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC)

110. The Working Group recommends that the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC) undergo a review of its function, processes and structure. Although the DHC Program does not maintain self-identification information about complainants, it is noteworthy that for the 10-year-period of 2003 to 2012, only 16% of complaints of discrimination were based on race, 3% on ethnic origin, a nominal number on ancestry and place of origin, while 26% and 50% of complaints were based on the grounds of disability and sex, respectively. This is in contrast with the applications received at the Human Rights Tribunal where 22% of applications are based on race, 16% on colour, 17% on ethnic origin, 15% on place of origin and 13% on ancestry with 54% of applications based on disability and 25% based on sex, pregnancy and gender identity.<sup>75</sup> The lower proportion of race-based complaints to the DHC Program warrants a review of the DHC Program to identify possible barriers to accessing that program, more particularly by members of the racialized, Indigenous and disability communities.
111. In Fall 2016, the Law Society's Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee commenced a review of the DHC Program. The objective of this review is to identify how this role can be better used to address discrimination and harassment in the professions, including systemic discrimination, while keeping in mind the independent arms-length position of the DHC and the duty of the DHC to maintain the confidentiality of any individuals who use the Program.

Rules of Professional Conduct and Paralegal Rules of Conduct

112. The Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct outline the responsibility of licensees to respect human rights laws — more specifically, not to engage in discrimination or harassment. The Law Society may investigate complaints of systemic discrimination; however, this is not widely known. The Working Group recommends explicitly stating in the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct that systemic discrimination is considered a violation of the rules. The Working Group also recommends that the rules make clear that reprisal for complaints of discrimination and harassment is prohibited.

Specialized Professional Regulation Team

113. The Working Group recognizes that racism is complex and can manifest itself in subtle ways. The Working Group recommends that the Law Society create a specialized team of Professional Regulation staff members to address complaints of racial discrimination. The members of this team would undergo extensive training on issues of race and racism in order to prepare them to effectively handle these types of complaints.

Review Professional Regulation Processes to Effectively Address Systemic Discrimination

114. Along with the creation of a specialized team of Professional Regulation staff members to address complaints of discrimination, including racial discrimination, it is suggested that the Law Society review its complaints process to consider ways to collect data from different sources and identify instances of systemic discrimination. It is recommended that the Law Society consider specific processes to effectively address systemic discrimination.
115. Racialized consultation participants described discriminatory experiences that had serious impacts on their careers, including career opportunities and earnings. Some described experiences of overt discrimination, such as situations of being on the receiving end of racist jokes, comments or assumptions.
116. In addition to the barriers identified through the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project, in its 2009 Aboriginal Bar Consultation<sup>76</sup>, the Law Society found that 26% of Indigenous lawyers felt that their Indigenous status was a negative factor in their experiences in the professions and the majority stated that they attributed their feeling to the racism and discrimination that they faced in their work experiences.
117. It is clear from the Working Group's engagement and consultation processes that discrimination based on race is a daily reality for many racialized licensees; however, many participants stated that they would not file a discrimination complaint with the Law Society for various reasons, including fear of losing their job, fear of being labeled as a troublemaker, and other reprisal-related concerns. Participants also noted that although racism can be experienced on an individual basis, racial discrimination can also be institutional or systemic in nature. Participants did not believe that an effective process was available at the Law Society to address systemic complaints. The Working Group heard from a number of participants who stated that a system of anonymous complaints would assist in alleviating some of the concerns about reporting cases of racial discrimination.

118. The Task Force on Misogyny, Sexism and Homophobia in Dalhousie University Faculty of Dentistry, which was mandated to inquire into a significant number of sexist, misogynist, and homophobic remarks and images posted on Facebook by fourth year male dentistry students at Dalhousie University, noted the pressing need for anonymous reporting mechanisms so that victims can protest such conduct without putting themselves at risk. This proposal was raised as a result of many who spoke to the Task Force about the need to be able to make anonymous complaints, especially in cases of sexual harassment and sexual assault. The Task Force notes “The biggest concern about anonymous complaints is that there is no way to effectively assess the merits of a particular complaint. However, a group of anonymous complaints all reflecting the same concern provides a signal that there may be a problem that requires some attention. Soliciting anonymous complaints for this purpose could be very useful.”<sup>77</sup>
119. Princeton University allows for anonymous complaints of discrimination, harassment and other violations of policies and regulations through an independent provider of hotline services. Complainants can submit a report online or by calling a free hotline to speak with a trained specialist.<sup>78</sup> Similarly, the City of Copenhagen in Denmark has developed an anonymous app for people to report incidents of discrimination. The purpose of the app is “to understand how widespread discrimination is and where and which groups are most likely to be targeted.”<sup>79</sup>
120. In 2010, the Nova Scotia Barristers’ Society (“NSBS”) launched a successful postcard campaign. The purpose of this campaign was “to raise awareness and generate feedback about gender harassment and discrimination in the legal profession.” Licensees were encouraged to share their experiences of gender harassment and discrimination by submitting accounts of their experiences via anonymous postcards.<sup>80</sup> In 2012, the NSBS noted that over 50 postcards had been received, outlining the experiences and viewpoints of lawyers across Nova Scotia.<sup>81</sup>
121. The Working Group envisions a system through which anonymous discrimination complaints can be made to the DHC. If a certain threshold of complaints about a legal workplace is reached, the DHC can speak with the management of the legal workplace regarding the culture of the workplace and systemic issues. The purpose of these discussions would be remedial, rather than punitive. Proposed solutions could include implementing or adjusting policies and procedures or delivery of educational programs.

122. A review of the functions, process and structure of the DHC should take into consideration the concerns raised through the engagement and consultation processes and the anonymous complaint models outlined above.
123. In addition to feedback about the DHC Program, the Working Group heard concerns from consultation participants that systemic discrimination and reprisal for filing complaints are not explicitly cited as conduct violations in the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct. Although the Law Society may investigate complaints of systemic discrimination and reprisal, the Working Group believes that it is important to state this plainly in the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct so that all licensees and members of the public are aware.
124. The Working Group has also heard that a certain level of expertise is essential in dealing with complaints to the Law Society of racial discrimination, particularly systemic discrimination. A trained team of Professional Regulation staff, equipped to deal with racial discrimination complaints, would assist in understanding and addressing the subtleties that often exist in racial discrimination cases.
125. In addition, racial discrimination often has systemic roots. It is suggested that the Law Society review its processes and consider ways to make them more effective in addressing systemic discrimination.
126. The Working Group believes that in order to create a safe space in which licensees can feel comfortable in making complaints of racial discrimination, including complaints related to systemic discrimination, the Law Society should engage in the abovementioned initiatives.

The operations of the Law Society of Upper Canada

Recommendation 13 – Leading by Example

- 1) The Law Society will continue to monitor and assess internal policies, practices and programs, to promote diversity, inclusion and equality within the workplace and in the provision of services by:
  - a) as required, adopting, implementing and maintaining a human rights/diversity policy addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement;
  - b) measuring quantitative progress through a census of the workforce or other method;
  - c) measuring qualitative progress by conducting inclusion surveys;
  - d) conducting regular equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessments;
  - e) based on the results from b), c) and d), identifying gaps and barriers and adopting measures to address the gaps and barriers;

- f) publishing relevant findings from b), c), d) and e); and
- g) providing equality and inclusion education programs for staff at the Law Society on a regular basis.

2) The Law Society will:

- a) conduct an internal diversity assessment of the bench composition and publicize the results;
- b) provide equality and inclusion education programs for Convocation on a regular basis.

127. The rationale for the adoption of human rights/diversity policies to address fair recruitment, retention and advancement; for measuring quantitatively and qualitatively progress; and for conducting self-assessments is well articulated in this report. The strength of having diversity at the board level is also well documented. The Maytree Foundation, for example, notes that,

Governance is the top tier of leadership, where ultimate oversight, strategic direction and policy are determined. But equally important is the representational role that boards uphold. A lack of diversity at this level has sweeping implications for how underrepresented groups see themselves, their relevance and their place at the decision-making table.<sup>82</sup>

128. During the engagement and consultation processes, participants indicated support for an internal equality audit of the Law Society workforce and the development of a more diverse public face/image for the Law Society, including at the governance level. The Working Group is of the view that the Law Society must take a leadership role and model the change it is seeking to create in the professions, which would include increasing diversity at both the governance and the staff levels, and engaging in the same initiatives and measures proposed to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees in the professions.

129. The Law Society has committed to a number of initiatives to increase diversity and inclusion in the organization:

- Operational Equity Audit: In 2015, with the assistance of Canadian Centre for Diversity and Inclusion (CCDI), the Law Society undertook an Operational Equity and Diversity Audit to assess the services provided to licensees and the public and to determine whether there are barriers that are contributing to inequality or perceived inequality in the provision of those services – in particular, involving members of racialized and Aboriginal communities. The Law Society is currently working through the results of this audit to determine where improvements can be made in its operations.
- Employee Diversity Census and Inclusion Survey: Earlier this year, the Law Society, also with the assistance of CCDI, launched an employee diversity census and inclusion survey. The purpose was to collect data to help the Law Society better understand the make-up of its organization and how to best serve Law Society staff's needs. There was a 72% response rate, which was excellent, and the results will assist with the Law Society's efforts to promote a diverse and inclusive culture that is supportive to all employees.
- Employee Engagement and Enablement Survey: This year the Law Society has also conducted an Employee Engagement and Enablement Survey, assisted by the Hay Group, in order to improve the effectiveness of its organization and enhance communications between management and employees at all levels.

- Bencher Diversity Survey: Convocation has identified conducting a diversity survey of the bencher composition as a priority for this term. We are currently working on finalizing this survey.

130. As mentioned above, both the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct provide that licensees have special responsibility to uphold human rights principles, protect the dignity of individuals and recognize diversity and inclusion. The Law Society is committed to identifying barriers and gaps in its workforce and governance and implementing comprehensive equality, diversity and inclusion initiatives to improve equality, diversity and inclusion.

— Community Liaison Meeting

The qualitative and quantitative data obtained from the engagement processes identified widespread barriers experienced by racialized licensees within the professions at all stages of their careers.

Key informants, focus group participants and survey respondents identified racialization as a significant factor that shapes the experiences and career outcomes of racialized licensees. The consultant engagement results indicated that racialized licensees have a lower success rate in securing job placements, finding first jobs and securing suitable practice environments. Moreover, racialized licensees felt that they were disadvantaged in law school and that they had not advanced in their careers at the same rate as their non-racialized colleagues.

Racial and ethnic barriers were ranked highly among the barriers to entry and advancement. Forty percent (40%) of racialized licensees identified their ethnic/racial identity as a barrier to entry to practice, while only 3% of non-racialized licensees identified ethnic/racial identity as a barrier. Racialized licensees frequently identified physical appearance, socioeconomic status, place of birth and upbringing, age, manner of speaking English/French and gender identity as barriers — more so than non-racialized licensees. Racialized licensees were also more likely to have struggled to find an articling position or training placement.

Similarly, 43% of racialized licensees identified ethnic/racial identity as a barrier/challenge to advancement, while only 3% of non-racialized licensees identified ethnic/racial identity as a barrier. Racialized licensees were more likely than non-racialized licensees to believe they had not advanced as rapidly as colleagues with similar qualifications.

Racialized participants identified a number of specific challenges faced in the professions. Community liaison process participants, key informants and focus group participants provided numerous examples of discrimination and stereotyping faced in the everyday professional experiences of racialized licensees. Some experiences were overt, while others were more subtle. Participants spoke of assumptions by members of the professions and clients that racialized lawyers are unskilled employees, interpreters, social workers, students or clients. Participants also identified situations where racialized licensees were excluded from files and client meetings based on personal characteristics. Some participants stated that in some cases, licensees from certain parts of the world were associated with terrorism. The Working Group heard a number of participants say, “you can’t just be good, you have to be better.”

Racialized participants spoke about challenges linked to cultural differences and fit. Many racialized licensees stated that they felt alienated from the dominant culture of firms. They provided examples of firm-related social events, which involved playing hockey, playing golf and drinking alcohol. Some racialized licensees indicated that they did not participate in these activities and therefore they did not “fit”, noting that “fit” was important for entry and advancement. Some participants also stated that they were not offered career opportunities because of their “foreign sounding” names.

Participants spoke in detail about the lack of access for racialized licensees to mentors, networks and role models. Racialized participants indicated that they were not aware of programs or resources available to them. They also noted that they did not have the same professional connections and networks as their non-racialized colleagues and lacked role models in their field within their ethnic communities.

Participants noted that race-based barriers are often complicated by the additional experiences of discrimination based on sex, gender identity, gender expression, disability, sexual orientation, class and creed.

Some participants believed that racialized licensees were more likely to go into sole practice as a result of barriers faced in other practice environments. They also noted that internationally trained lawyers and paralegals face additional barriers in the professions.

Generally, participants noted that the challenges faced by racialized licensees impact the reputation of the legal system in Ontario, affect access to justice for Ontarians and affect the quality of legal services for the public.

Summary of Consultation Process

The Working Group received thoughtful oral and written submissions from the professions regarding strategies to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees.

A. Enhancing the internal capacity of organizations

The Working Group posed the following questions related to this theme in the consultation paper:

- How should the Law Society act as a catalyst for the establishment of diversity programs within firms and why?
- What is the preferred model for the collection of firm demographic data and why?
- How could the Law Society work with in-house legal departments to develop model contract compliance programs for in-house legal departments that retain firms?

Diversity Programs

“We need to encourage firms to be champions of diversity.”
— Participant

Consultation participants showed significant support for the creation of diversity programs for the recruitment, retention and advancement of racialized licensees in legal workplaces. Participants reminded the Working Group that a “one size fits all” approach should be avoided — firm size, industry and geographical location should be considered if the Law Society is to develop diversity programs.

A number of participants supported the idea of creating a diversity project modelled on the Law Society of Upper Canada’s Justicia Project. Such a project would include the development and adoption of resources for the fair recruitment, retention and advancement of racialized licensees.<sup>83</sup> Participants were divided, however, on whether diversity programs should be mandatory or voluntary. Some participants noted that voluntary programs create buy-in and a willingness to create change. A number of participants stated that it is important to have “diversity champions” who will lead change from the top-down. Participants outside of the Greater Toronto Area (GTA) that work in small firms saw the value of voluntary programs as small firms may lack the resources to implement mandatory programs. Some participants noted that mandatory programs could create backlash.

Participants in favour of mandatory programs argued that mandatory programs create stronger awareness of equality and diversity issues. One participant, who had experience with employment equality programs, said that it is necessary to have an enforcement mechanism in place. Other participants believed that, at the very least, the Law Society should require legal workplaces to have equality and diversity policies in place. Some participants suggested that the Law Society ask licensees to answer questions related to their firm’s policies in the annual report in order to prompt change. Although it was suggested by some that requirements could include mandatory targets for the number of racialized licensees that must be interviewed or hired by legal workplaces; the majority of participants were strongly opposed to the creation of mandatory hiring targets and timelines.

Some participants supported the proposal that firms complete a self-assessment about their diversity performance, which would include more than an analysis of demographic data. One participant stated:

Beyond numbers, look at the ways in which interactions are made, the ways in which people are hired, anti-nepotism policies, mentoring programs. All of these things are bigger pieces of the diversity pie.

The majority of participants interested in this idea indicated that the self-assessment should be voluntary; however, the Law Society could provide incentives for firms to engage in this process. There were some participants who were in support of mandatory self-assessments that would be conducted by employees instead of firm management to garner more valuable results. Additionally, participants stated that the Law Society should provide legal workplaces with self-assessment templates and tools.

Collecting Demographic Data

— Participant

The Working Group heard a broad range of views on the issue of demographic data collection; however, most participants agreed that the collection of data would be, as one participant noted, “a humble but important first step”. Some participants believed that mandatory data collection is crucial to advancing diversity and inclusion, while others believed that mandatory collection could halt the progress that is already being made by legal workplaces in the area of equality and diversity.

Participants on the side of mandatory collection had a number of suggestions related to the methods of collection and reporting. The majority of participants, including those in small firms and outside of

Toronto, were in favour of the Law Society collecting demographic data. Some participants suggested that the Law Society could use the data collected in the annual report to provide legal workplaces with their individual legal workplace demographic data and aggregate demographic data of legal workplaces of similar size and location to provide a benchmark. Participants also noted that it would be useful to capture information about inclusion and advancement in addition to numbers. Some participants in favour of mandatory reporting stated that, in order to encourage change, the demographic information for each firm should be publicly available.

Participants in favour of voluntary data collection noted that a number of large firms are already engaging in demographic data collection and inclusion surveys, and are committed to this work. Should the Law Society mandate data collection, it could have a negative effect on the work already being done. Participants from small firms indicated that they are unsure how mandatory data collection would be enforced. Some participants believed that demographic data should be reported, but on a voluntary basis. A number of participants suggested setting data collection as a criterion of a voluntary diversity program. The Law Society could then incentivize data collection by providing ratings or awards for meeting certain levels of diversity and inclusion.

Contract Compliance

“The case for diversity and inclusion has a business foundation”

— Participant

The Working Group heard that the Law Society could play a facilitative role by encouraging corporate procurement policies that consider suppliers that promote equality and diversity. A number of participants highlighted the Bank of Montreal’s contract compliance program and the work of the Legal Leaders for Diversity (“LLD”) as best practices in this area. Some participants suggested that the Law Society work with LLD, other in-house counsel associations and firms to develop model diversity-related procurement and contract compliance policies.

Some participants noted that they would discourage mandatory contract compliance as often people respond better to incentives rather than punitive consequences. Some participants from small firms pointed out that strict mandatory contract compliance related to diversity could be difficult for small firms and lead to them being unable to compete for work.

B. Mentoring, advisory services and networking

The Working Group posed the following questions related to this theme in the consultation paper:

- What are the preferred mentoring and/or advisory services models for racialized licensees?
- What are the preferred networking models for racialized licensees?

Mentoring and Advisory Services

— Participant

The majority of participants in the consultation process emphasized the importance of mentoring for racialized licensees; however, one group of participants noted that, some cases, mentoring “...serves to reproduce institutional inequality and assist white licensees in securing inclusion within social institutions and the professions”.

In November 2013, Convocation created the Mentoring and Advisory Services Proposal Task Force (“Mentoring Task Force”) to consider mentoring, advisor and other support services for lawyers and paralegals. The Working Group worked with the Task Force and shared with the Task Force members the information obtained on mentoring and advisory services from the consultation process. In January 2016, Convocation approved a new law practice coaching and advisory initiative, which “...will assist in the development of competent legal professionals by supporting the growing need in the professions for short-term advisor supports addressing file-specific and substantive/procedural matters, and longer term coaching supports to foster best practices.”<sup>84</sup>

Types of Mentoring and Advisory Services

Generally, the Working Group heard that there is no “one-size-fits-all” model for mentoring. Different types of mentoring may be required at different stages of a person’s career for different purposes. For example, mentoring could be offered to provide assistance on specific cases or it could be related to how to navigate the professions as a racialized licensee.

A number of participants highlighted the importance of providing mentoring for sole practitioners and internationally trained lawyers. Paralegal participants told the Working Group that there is a shortage of mentoring programs in the paralegal community and thus a significant need. Other participants noted that racialized licensees in large firms do not have role models within their firms so would benefit from some assistance to find mentors from outside their firms.

A significant number of participants emphasized that sponsorship<sup>85</sup> is also essential to the career advancement of racialized licensees, noting that it would be helpful to have sponsors or champions advocating for individual licensees at decision-making tables.

Structure of Mentoring and Advisory Services

Some participants stated that it would be useful to have a panel of mentors who could address different facets of a licensee’s career, including providing advice on navigating barriers, substantive legal issues or career advancement. Participants also noted that mentoring should be provided to students before law school, to address pipeline issues, and in law school.

A number of legal workplaces described their mentoring programs and expressed interest in working collaboratively with the Law Society to help licensees in need of mentoring. One way in which this could take place is using enhanced website services and creating a highly functional and welcoming online mentoring community with links to partner legal workplaces. As many legal workplaces have their own websites, the Law Society could function as a connector to these kinds of services. Participants also suggested that the Law Society develop, in collaboration with legal workplaces, best practices toolkits and/or guidelines on mentoring.

Participants proposed various mentoring models including one-on-one mentoring with various mentors for different purposes, study groups with licensees who have similar challenges and group mentoring to assist with practice management and career advancement. Some participants suggested that junior licensees could also mentor other junior licensees from the same racialized community. In a similar vein, some participants stated that junior racialized licensees could act as effective mentors to senior non-racialized licensees.

Participants noted that it is often difficult to find willing and experienced mentors. One participant for example noted difficulties finding racialized mentors because, “we are not grooming racialized lawyers to become leaders.” Some participants suggested that the Law Society could ask licensees to indicate in the annual report or using another methodology such as the Law Society Portal, their willingness to act as mentors. The Law Society could then create a mentor roster. Similarly, other participants suggested having a web-based registry for mentors, which could include the mentors’ area of law and their time availability. Incentives for mentors could include the receipt of professionalism hours for mentoring services or discounted CPD programming. Some participants believed that the Law Society should compensate mentors, while others believed this would negatively impact the mentor-mentee relationship. Participants suggested that mentors should be culturally competent.

Participants outside of the GTA highlighted specific issues related to mentoring in their regions. A number of participants noted that the majority of professional associations that represent equality-seeking groups do not operate outside of the GTA, which limits access to association-based mentoring programs. One participant stated that if mentoring was to be offered in-person, it should be geographically accessible for licensees in areas across the province.

Networking

“Have more inclusive events.”

— Participant

Many participants stated that associations of racialized lawyers and paralegals are beneficial for fostering collaboration and creating a sense of belonging. Some participants suggested that it would be useful for the Law Society to facilitate collaboration between the various associations and/or to promote already-existing networking opportunities provided by the associations.

Some participants told the Working Group that legal associations are often too costly to join. One group of participants suggested that the Law Society provide subsidies to racialized licensees to assist them to join associations.

Some of the associations also described concern with the cost of holding events for their sectors of the bar at the Law Society and expressed interest in having “in-kind” support and partnership from the Law Society to make those events accessible to diverse communities of lawyers.

Some participants proposed that the Law Society hold regional networking events for licensees. Others noted that CPD programs can be good networking opportunities. However, some participants stated that the cost of CPD programs can be prohibitive and suggested that the Law Society provide low-cost or sliding scale CPD programs. One participant suggested that the Law Society “host planned and structured networking events that are, in location and content, culturally relevant to different groups of racialized licensees.” Some participants noted that hosting alcohol-free events would increase inclusivity.

Participants highlighted the fact that internationally trained lawyers and sole practitioners feel particularly isolated, so networking opportunities should also be targeted to these groups.

C. Enhancing cultural competence in the professions

The Working Group posed the following question related to this theme in the consultation paper:

- How could the Law Society enhance the professions' cultural competence through its CPD programs?

CPD Programs

"We need to be educated about diversity."

— Participant

A large number of participants were in favour of the Law Society requiring licensees to participate in mandatory CPD training on cultural competency, unconscious bias, and anti-racism. Some participants suggested that refresher sessions should be mandated "at intervals over the course of licensees' careers."

Others suggested that this CPD training be provided on a voluntary basis. There was concern expressed that requiring this form of training to be taken by all could be counter-productive. In either case however, participants agreed that professionalism credits should be provided CPD training on these topics.

In terms of content, participants suggested that cultural competency training should go "beyond learning about cultural practices of 'other' cultures and towards an examination of bias, inequality and discrimination". Similarly, one participant noted that the Law Society should "utilize an anti-discrimination, anti-racism and anti-oppression framework focused on deconstructing power structures and privilege — not on cultural competency." Participants also suggested that the Law Society work with associations of racialized licensees and/or with knowledgeable experts to develop content for the training sessions.

Some participants highlighted the importance of requiring licensees involved in recruitment, hiring and promotion decisions to participate in CPDs related to cultural competency and unconscious bias, specifically addressing topics such as bias-free interviews. One participant stated, "If attitudes don't change, the numbers are not going to change." Participants suggested that this CPD programming could be offered via webcast during summer student and articling interview periods. It was also proposed that the Law Society deliver these programs and other cultural competence and anti-discrimination and harassment programs at firms.

A number of participants noted the need to ensure that education on cultural competency, unconscious bias, anti-racism and anti-oppression start at law school and in the Licensing Process. A participant suggested that the Law Society use its seat on the Federation of Law Societies to encourage the inclusion of cultural competency and diversity awareness as part of the core law school curriculum. One group of participants suggested adding a cultural competency course to the college curriculum for paralegal programs. Some participants proposed including cultural competency, diversity and inclusion in the Professional Responsibility and Practice Course that articling students must complete.

It was proposed that all benchers attend cultural competency training in order to enhance awareness at the governance level and ensure that equality, diversity and inclusion are taken into account throughout the policy development process.

Generally, participants stated that CPD programs should be widely available via webcast and recorded. Additionally, some participants suggested that the cost of CPD be reduced, perhaps by working with regional associations.

D. Discrimination and the role of the complaints process

The Working Group posed the following question related to this theme in the consultation paper:

- How should the Law Society best ensure that complaints of discrimination are brought to its attention and effectively addressed?

Complaints of Discrimination

“People have to feel comfortable in accessing policies.”

— Participant

The Working Group heard a range of suggestions on encouraging licensees to bring forward complaints of discrimination.

Participants suggested updating the Rules of Professional Conduct<sup>86</sup> and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct<sup>87</sup> to specifically address systemic discrimination and subtle forms of discrimination. Some participants recommended advertising that complaints of discrimination can be made through the complaints process and devoting more resources to promoting the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program.

Participants noted that licensees will often refrain from reporting experiences of discrimination because they fear the negative impact a complaint might have on their careers and reputations. One participant stated, “We don’t want to rock the boat or be considered a troublemaker”.

Some participants were in favour of the Law Society creating an anonymous system of receiving complaints. However, licensees in small firms said this would not be helpful for them as their firms are too small for them to remain anonymous. Some participants that supported an anonymous complaints process recommended that the Law Society investigate firms that have been the subject of a number of anonymous complaints. Participants also suggested amending the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct to include a provision that states that reprisals for complaints of discrimination and harassment are prohibited.

Participants believed that bringing a complaint through an association may not alleviate the issues raised. Some participants suggested that the Law Society ask licensees, using the annual report, whether they have ever experienced discrimination. This information could then be compiled by legal workplace and provided to legal workplace management. Other participants proposed that the Law Society audit firms to ensure that they have policies related to equality, diversity, discrimination and harassment.

Regardless of the method taken to receive complaints, participants noted that it is important for the Law Society to advise complainants of what action was taken.

Some participants noted it would be helpful to have a group of diverse expert Professional Regulation staff who are trained in cultural competency and have an understanding of racial discrimination.

E. The operations of the Law Society of Upper Canada

— Participant

The Law Society received support from participants for its proposals to enhance its current equality compliance program, conduct an internal equality audit, collect further data on the regulatory process and develop a more diverse public face/image for the Law Society. A number of participants have emphasized that the Law Society must model the change it is seeking to create in the professions, which would include increasing diversity at both the governance and the staff levels, and engaging in the same initiatives and measures proposed to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees in the professions.

On a few occasions, participants at the meetings and open houses noted the lack of diversity of Working Group presenters. Working Group members attended and presented at open houses and meetings when their schedules permitted, and at some meetings, the group of presenters did not reflect the diversity of racialized licensees at those meetings. That became a point of discussion with participants expressing concern about the overall diversity of Convocation, but also expressing satisfaction that there are non-racialized benchers who are interested in being part of change and in hearing from licensees on these subjects. It is important to note that a bencher election was conducted during the consultation process and the composition of Convocation appears to be more racially diverse than ever and representative of the professions.

White Privilege

Consultation participants spoke of “white privilege”<sup>88</sup>, and expressed the need for all to acknowledge its existence in order to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees. A number of participants noted that it is important for licensees to understand how power operates to produce advantages for some and deny advantages to others.

Daily Verbal, Behavioural and Environmental Indignities

Consultation participants provided descriptions of their experiences of commonplace daily verbal, behavioural, and environmental indignities, whether intentional or unintentional, that communicate

<sup>88</sup> The Ontario Human Rights Commission defines “privilege” generally as ‘unearned power, benefits, advantages, access and/or opportunities that exist for members of the dominant group(s) in society. It can also refer to the relative privilege of one group compared to another. “Policy and guidelines on racism and racial discrimination”, online: Ontario Human Rights Commission <http://www.ohrc.on.ca/en/book/export/html/2475>

hostile, derogatory or negative racial slights.<sup>89</sup> Examples ranged from assumptions that they are not licensees but in fact interpreters or accused, to inappropriate questions regarding their perceived “otherness.” Participants noted that it is important for licensees to understand the impact of such behaviour and for the Law Society to find ways to address these subtle forms of discrimination.

Indigenous Licensees and Racialized Licensees: Historical and Geographical Differences

Open house learning and consultation programs in Northern Ontario yielded interesting information about the similarities and differences between the experiences of Indigenous licensees and licensees that self-identify as racialized. Participants in Thunder Bay noted that, in terms of race and racism, the population in northern areas of the province is often divided into Indigenous and non-Indigenous peoples. Participants identified several examples where they had witnessed racism directed at Indigenous people and where they had observed that racialized people were treated differently from non-racialized people. It was noted that because of the distinctive histories of Indigenous peoples, strategies to respond to racism faced by Indigenous peoples and to racism faced by racialized peoples may need to differ. The Law Society’s policy work reflects this uniqueness, including the work of the EAIC and other initiatives that are outside the scope of this project. The Law Society is also currently developing a framework of reconciliation in consultation with the Indigenous Advisory Group, established in 2016 with the Law Society to guide the Law Society and the legal community towards a better understanding of how to address unique issues faced by Indigenous peoples in Ontario and promote responses to and implementation of the Calls to Action from the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada’s final report and the First Nations Representation on Ontario Juries report by The Honourable Frank Iacobucci.

Submissions to the Law Society of Upper Canada on the Experiences of Racialized Licensees

Background on the Barbra Schlifer Commemorative Clinic

The Barbra Schlifer Commemorative Clinic is the only Clinic of its kind in Canada. It has been providing legal representation, counselling, and interpretation in over 100 languages to women who have experienced all forms of violence, since 1985. The Clinic was established in the memory of Barbra Schlifer, an idealistic young lawyer whose life was cut short by violence on the night of her call to the bar of Ontario on April 11, 1980. The Clinic is not part of the LAO suite of community and specialized clinics. Rather, it is a separately incorporated not-for-profit that supplements the lack of legal services for survivors of violence.

We assist about 4,000 women every year. We also engage in various educational initiatives, including public legal education, professional development for legal and non-legal professionals, and clinical education for law students. We work on law reform activities both within Canada and internationally, and consult broadly with all levels of government on policy or legislative initiatives that impact women survivors of violence. The Clinic serves women from ethno-racially and socio-economically diverse backgrounds, frequently from highly marginalized communities. Our clients often experience multiple social inequalities, including poverty, homelessness, racism, and discrimination on the basis of religion, country of origin, newcomer status, mental health, and disability.

On the basis of the experiences of our staff, (among whom are a high number of racialized licensees) we recommend that the Law Society of Upper Canada ("LSUC") allocate resources and provide a platform for racialized licensees to combat systemic racism and ensure a lasting culture of change in the legal profession. In this way, LSUC could move its commitment toward systematically supporting the implementation of concrete initiatives. Racialized licensees in the profession should lead the discussion and planning that will create lasting change. This change is imperative to the ongoing success of the profession, which numerous reports have called for in response to barriers and an ossified professional culture.<sup>1</sup>

Professional Obligations and Practices

Relevant Recommendations: 1, 2, 3, 9, 10

The LSUC must ensure its commitment to reinforcing the professional obligations of its members to recognize and promote principles of equality, diversity and inclusion consistent with the requirements under human rights legislation. This includes, specifically and annually, addressing the lack of focus on diversity and systemic racism in law school curricula. Continuing professional development (“CPD”) for lawyers and legal practitioners must also emphasize this priority. To operationalize diversity and equality training, the LSUC should develop clear guidelines for delivering relevant, timely, and meaningful educational and CPD programs which address the historic inequalities in Canada for racialized communities and the lack of diversity and plurality that is a persistent problem in the legal profession. These programs should also focus on the experiences of licensees who may experience multiple and intersecting forms of marginalization, including racialized women, religious minorities, sexual and gender expression minorities, or licensees from low-income backgrounds.

Building Communities of Support and Addressing Systemic Discrimination

Relevant Recommendations: 11, 12

The LSUC must actively seek to build sustainable communities of support to recognize the unique experiences of racialized licensees. There is a profound lack of meaningful and ongoing mentorship for racialized licensees in the profession, and very little systematic fostering of natural connections and capacity building between senior and junior counsel. Building communities of support requires recognition of the social location of licensees and their lived experiences as minorities in a very hierarchical profession. Often, the narrative of “firsts” replaces the hard work of substantive and sustainable change, and creates an impression of “progress.”<sup>2</sup>

The LSUC and employers should also examine practices which reinforce so-called “token diversity,” which can result in the hiring of a few racialized licensees to meet the mandate of diversity and equality, without addressing ongoing oppressive workplace culture and the historical disadvantage faced by minority licensees. Ultimately, the concept of the plurality is useful here, as a commitment to diversity is empty without providing racialized and minority licensees access to meaningful positions of power within the legal profession.

Racialized licensees also experience gaps in employment equity, particularly if they are women. “Men are more likely to be in sole practice and law firm partners, while there is a higher proportion of women in all the other stations, especially in house, in clinics, in government and education.”<sup>3</sup> As with gender wage gaps in other fields, women lawyers are at a definite economic disadvantage vis-à-vis their male colleagues.<sup>4</sup>

Additionally, the gendered wage gap reveals and communicates to society more generally the relative valuing of the genders. Undervaluing women, exemplifying and maintaining women’s subordinate positions in such a material way, contributes to an overall vulnerability to violence and disrespect, including the daily experiences of racialized licensees who are women. The LSUC should commit to employment equity for all its licensees and create meaningful mechanisms to allow licensees to excel in their legal careers while living balanced lives. This commitment includes both an eradication of the gender and racial wage gap, as well as a commitment to providing equitable parental leave for families having children, and not penalizing women for taking time away from their legal practice.

Sexual violence and its impacts in the employment context highlight yet another dimension of the unique experiences of racialized licensees, particularly in a hierarchical profession such as law. In situations that exacerbate unequal power dynamics, such as employment contexts, women, particularly visible minorities, continue to be deterred from reporting sexual assault and adequate state protection mechanisms are often not available, especially when negative repercussions on one’s reputation or employment are at stake.<sup>5</sup>

The power dynamics inherent in the practice of law also exacerbate daily microaggressions experienced by racialized licensees in the workplace, such as when interacting with court staff, or with the judiciary. Our students report ongoing struggles with sexualized work environments throughout the profession. These power dynamics are also inherent in the employment opportunities, and the experiences of racialized licensees during interview processes, both at the entry-level during the law school On-Campus Interview (“OCI”) processes, as well as during individual interviews at law firms, clinics, and the government. Comments about a candidate’s ethnic background or chosen hairstyle may seem minimal, yet they underscore their minority status in a profession still mostly populated by white, male, Anglo-Saxon legal practitioners, particularly in positions of power such as partners, CEOs, or judges.

If the goal of the LSUC is to foster an inclusive profession responsive to the increasing diversity of the Canadian population, there must be a sustained commitment to address the root causes of discrimination and racism still inherent in the legal profession. This commitment must include law school initiatives as well as CPD initiatives for all members of the profession, including students, in a climate of careful monitoring and compliance within the profession to professional obligations of equity. It must also include profession-wide community building and meaningful solutions to the ongoing systemic inequality of racialized licensees, such as combating pay inequity, sexual violence in the workplace, and the inherent power imbalances. These goals are especially pertinent in a profession committed to providing justice and protecting the public interest.

Dear Ms. Quansah,

Re: Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions

The Black Law Students' Association of Canada ("BLSA Canada") is a national organization that represents Black law students across Canada in both official languages. Our purpose is to promote increased representation of Black students in law schools and to support and enhance academic and professional opportunities for Black law students. BLSA Canada and its chapters at law schools nationwide are concerned with the challenges faced by racialized licensees in the legal profession and the barriers these challenges represent with regard to entering the profession.

In its September 22, 2016 Report to Convocation, the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee of the Law Society of Upper Canada ("LSUC") released the final report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group ("The report"), containing 13 recommendations in 5 broad categories for addressing barriers faced by racialized licensees in the legal profession. In furtherance of our organizational purpose, BLSA Canada offers the following comments on the recommendations outlined in the report.

In providing these comments, it is not BLSA Canada's aim to critique each of the proposed recommendations set out in the report. Instead, BLSA Canada's comments are structured more broadly to point out overarching areas of concern and to highlight ways in which some of LSUC's recommendations might be better supplemented. In providing these comments, BLSA Canada believes it can offer some insight on the perspectives of racialized students who are not yet licensees but soon will be.

The need for the LSUC's leadership

BLSA Canada would first like to applaud the law society for undertaking this initiative and for creating space in which the concerns of racialized licensees can be heard. Racial inequality and discrimination have long been concerns for racialized licensees and any proposed solutions must address the systemic roots of the challenges which racialized licensees face. In taking this long overdue and much needed step, the LSUC is showing leadership in taking measures to eliminate the barriers which contribute to the underrepresentation, marginalization and isolation of racialized licensees in the legal profession. As the regulator of the legal profession, any success that is to be had in addressing these barriers requires that the LSUC shows strong leadership.

There must be a focus from the LSUC on challenges that arise before entry into practice

Challenges faced by racialized licensees do not all of a sudden arise at the point of entry into the profession. Racialized law students and licensing candidates experience many of the challenges that are identified in the report (i.e. discrimination and stereotyping, lack of mentors and role models) long before they are seeking articling placements, completing the licensing process or being called to the Bar.

It is our opinion, that if the LSUC is committed to addressing the systemic challenges faced by racialized licensees, it should look for ways to work with law schools to address these hurdles long before their entry into the legal profession. We believe that collecting this data would allow for the assessment and identification of existing issues from the moment future licensees enter law school.

Another way in which the LSUC could work more closely with law schools is during the LSUC-regulated recruitment processes (i.e. the summer recruitment of 1L and 2L students as well as articling recruitment). As the report considers developing guidelines and collecting information on hiring practices, recruitment and retention, this presents an opportunity for the LSUC to facilitate better assessment of hiring practices in the profession. As the LSUC already puts rules in place that firms are to abide by during the structured recruitment processes, it would require very little of the LSUC to have some sort of follow-up measures to ensure that these recruitment processes are sensitive to issues of discrimination and stereotyping.

In the report, Recommendation 2 contemplates enhancing the On-Campus Interview (“OCI”) process for the dissemination of information. We suggest that it would also be beneficial to consider how OCIs and other such recruitment processes could be enhanced to better collect information.

Exit surveys as a follow-up to recruitment processes

It has become a common practice at a number of law schools to conduct anonymous surveys once the OCI process is completed as a means for law faculties to provide useful information to their respective student populations about how the process unfolds (i.e. this has been done in recent years by way of student newspapers like Ultra Vires at the University of Toronto Faculty of Law and Obiter Dicta at Osgoode Hall Law School). Such anonymous surveys provide opportunities to collect qualitative and quantitative data about the OCI process. The information that is compiled has often been relied upon by other students as a source of candid information about a process that is largely driven by the pursuit of the elusively-defined and extremely subjective quality of firm culture “fit”.

In working with the law schools to gather information in this manner, the LSUC could potentially obtain much more relevant and reliable information than that which can be obtained through self-assessed and self-reported data about firm hiring practices. We suggest that such information be included as a helpful supplement to the proposed inclusion index recommended in the report.

Concerns about what information is shared publicly and what is only released to firms

The collection of quantitative self-identification data is beneficial and will in fact assist in measuring progress. However, information is only as valuable as it is accessible. Many legal employers already have diversity policies in place and even more state their commitment to fostering diverse workplaces, yet the manifestations of these policies and commitments are seldom disclosed. As a result, we are concerned that the data made available to the public will be insufficient.

Racialized candidates have an interest in knowing about the diversity and inclusion efforts and results of their prospective employers and not just those who are the top ranked diversity employers. Indeed, the accessibility of this information would be of great benefit in assisting students to make informed decisions about where they seek employment. And while we recognize that some are weary of adopting a “name and shame” approach to compliance, this legitimate concern of racialized students should be considered when determining what sort of information should be made publicly available.

While BLSA Canada recognizes that naming and shaming may not be the most useful approach, the accepted alternative should not be to deprive licensees of this valuable data. We encourage the law society to explore means to make the information publically available while mitigating the repercussions associated with so-called “name and shame” approaches.

Recognizing how the LPP oversight affects racialized licensees

By the LSUC’s own account, racialized candidates are overrepresented in the Law Practice Program (“LPP”). The overrepresentation of racialized candidates in this program is of concern to BLSA Canada. Further though, we also have concerns as to how participation in the LPP impacts their legal careers. Given the overrepresentation of racialized candidates in the LPP, we strongly advocate that these concerns must be considered by the LSUC if it is to successfully address the issue of systemic racism in the legal profession.

By virtue of the fact that the consultation process for the report began prior to the creation of the LPP, the implications the program has for racialized candidates seeking entry into the legal profession has thus been overlooked. It is our opinion that the LSUC must assess how the LPP impacts racialized licensees.

Though we are glad that the LSUC has backtracked on its recent proposal to discontinue the LPP, it is extremely concerning that this proposal was put forth in light of the LSUC’s knowledge that racialized candidates disproportionately rely on this program to satisfy their licensing requirements. Such a proposal to discontinue a program that is still very much needed at this time (especially by racialized candidates), without proposing any alternative to replace it contradicts the LSUC’s stated commitments to ensuring that the practice of law is reflective of all peoples in Ontario.

On a related note, the LSUC must recognize the impact its recent increase in licensing fees has on racialized licensees who have only recently entered or are trying to enter the profession. The increased cost places an extra burden on the shoulders of racialized licensees. While the LSUC endeavours to eliminate the systemic barriers that have long kept certain communities out of the profession, it should not introduce new ones.

BLACK LAW STUDENTS ASSOCIATION OF CANADA
L'ASSOCIATION DES ÉTUDIANTS NOIRS
EN DROIT DU CANADA

Mentorship for new entry racialized licensees needs to be a priority

The working group's final report aptly recognizes that racialized licensees require access to professional mentors and networking avenues. However, the LSUC must recognize that while mentoring is critical at all stages of a lawyer's career, it is perhaps most critical at the outset of their career. The demands and stresses placed on new entries are becoming increasingly burdensome and increasingly harder to overcome.

The continuous decrease in new articling positions and a lessened demand for first-year hires means that many new licensees are increasingly incapable of coping with their high debt burdens. The relative precariousness of their situation (as compared with those who have been called to the Bar for several years and have secured employment) coupled with the systemic challenges they face justifies the formation of an LSUC supported mentoring initiative specifically for new entry racialized licensees. While professional mentoring is undoubtedly significant, racialized new entries would benefit from additional support from their mentors that goes beyond simply developing their practice. This sort of mentoring—mentoring that extends beyond life in the office—is often difficult to find.

Final Remarks

BLSA Canada welcomes the final report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group as a first step taken by the LSUC towards reducing systemic racism and discrimination in the legal profession. The LSUC has identified many of the barriers impeding the development and progression of racialized lawyers. BLSA Canada applauds many of the working group's proposed recommendations. However, we believe that to reduce the systemic barriers that racialized licensees face requires that the LSUC considers the unique perspectives and experience of racialized students who ultimately represent the future of the legal profession.

The cyclical nature of the systemic challenges faced by racialized law students and licensing candidates needs to be properly addressed. Hence, if the Law Society of Upper Canada is committed to eliminating the longstanding barriers faced by racialized licensees and to ensuring that the practice of law is better reflective of Ontario's diverse peoples and communities, it must take an approach that considers the barriers that racialized licensees face before they even enter the profession.

Ultimately, the LSUC needs to have a holistic understanding and approach to the challenges faced by racialized law students, licensing candidates and racialized licensees.

Yours truly,

RE: BLSA Feedback – LSUC Report on Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees

To Whom It May Concern,

The Black Law Students' Association – Windsor Chapter is pleased to provide feedback regarding the Law Society of Upper Canada's report Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions. We have given careful thought to the report and its proposed recommendations and hope that our input will be strongly considered.

We would like to emphasize that the concerns raised by racialized licensees in Ontario are multi-faceted and occur at various stages in the lawyer's career. In providing feedback, we have focused our attention on racialized law school applicants, law students and those undertaking the licensing process. We believe that the Law Society cannot effectively address barriers experienced by racialized licensees without first actively working to eliminate the challenges that arise at these foundational stages.

Recommendations

Gather information: Law schools, the Ontario Universities' Application Centre, and the Law Society should keep track of the number of racialized (1) law school applicants, (2) admitted students, (3) participants in the OCI process, (4) participants who successfully attained positions through OCIs, and (5) licensing candidates who attained traditional articling positions (national, mid-size and small firms) and those entering the Law Practice Program. It would also be worthy to gather statistics regarding the number of racialized individuals that remain at a law firm after completing articles and the average length of time that these individuals remain at the firm.

The experiences will vary, but collecting and publishing statistics on these areas will assist the Law Society in determining how to help the upcoming generations of racialized licensees. In addition, this information may help to assess systemic factors that result in racialized individuals remaining overly represented in some categories and significantly underrepresented in others.

Understand the barriers that exist: Racialized licensees often come from cultural and socioeconomic backgrounds which place a strong emphasis on values that may be overlooked or minimized within the legal profession. Racialized law school applicants, in many cases, have had less exposure to mentors in the legal profession and face barriers through lack of resources, information or financial means. These factors create obstacles for racialized individuals with regards to developing effective law school applications and achieving academic success while in law school.

The Law Society must work to mitigate these early barriers faced by racialized applicants and law students as these initial challenges often lay the groundwork for further obstacles to be faced once these individuals become licensees. The Law Society should collaborate with law schools to reduce barriers that exist in the application and law school admissions processes and should consider developing guidelines to inform the admissions process, with a view to eliminating such obstacles.

Black Law Students Association, Windsor Chapter
 401 Sunset, Windsor ON N9B 3P4
 blsawin@gmail.com

Start early: The Law Society must invest in initiatives that focus on providing racialized law school applicants and law students with resources, support, mentorship and information. These tools are necessary to developing effective applications and succeeding academically. We recommend that the Law Society work collaboratively with law schools, dedicate funding and resources, and develop mentorship initiatives with an express focus on these early and crucial development stages for future licensees.

While we welcome recommendation 11 in the report which speaks to “building communities of support” through “mentoring and networking initiatives”, we again would like to emphasize that these measures should be extended to include racialized law school applicants and law students. Recommendation 2 aims to work with law schools, “to create or provide better sources of information on what is needed to apply, interview and succeed in a larger legal workplace.” The Law Society must be conscious of limited resources available within law schools and is strongly urged to dedicate adequate financial support to aid law schools in achieving this goal.

The Law Society should also examine initiatives that can cultivate safe spaces where racialized licensees and law students can express their concerns and receive practical advice on how to address the particular challenges they face. For instance, the Law Society provides a resource for licensees to obtain advice on matters concerning professional conduct. A similar resource made available to assist racialized licensees, and a separate initiative dedicated to law students, could be developed to ensure guidance is readily available. This resource is an important tool as the challenges faced by racialized licensees and law students can involve issues that are highly sensitive or controversial, and confidentiality may be a strong concern for individuals seeking advice.

Think critically about hiring and lack of opportunity in the profession: A significant number of law firms hire based on the ‘fit’. It must be acknowledged that many racialized candidates, by virtue of their diverse cultural and socioeconomic backgrounds, are disadvantaged by ‘fit-based hiring’. The Law Society must do more to encourage law firms to adopt hiring practices that strive to eliminate bias. In order for racialized licensees to move beyond sole practitioner and small firm practice, and gain access to a greater number of opportunities, inherently biased hiring practices must be critically examined and more strongly discouraged by the Law Society.

Meeting service needs: The report recommends developing a resource centre with materials for “licensees in sole practice, associations of sole practitioners and small partnerships” to help overcome the fact that “24% of racialized lawyers are in sole practice and 33% ...in legal workplaces of two to five.” Such resources should be extended to law schools to better prepare racialized students for the range of options available within the legal profession.

Sharing the responsibility for change: Recommendations 9 and 10 consider initiatives that seek to promote cultural competency, equity and inclusion within the profession. In order to be effective, these initiatives must assist in uncovering unconscious prejudices. Furthermore, it must be made clear that the responsibility of ensuring inclusion does not fall solely on the hands of racialized licensees. Eliminating the challenges faced by racialized licensees must be a shared responsibility that is also carried by non-racialized licensees and the Law Society must work to encourage this notion within the profession.

Thank you for the opportunity to provide feedback. We look forward to continuing this discussion with you should you require further information.

Best Regards,
 Black Law Students’ Association – Windsor Chapter

R6.3.1-4 Transparency and Cultural Competence in the Hiring Process Rule

Prepared by Students at Windsor Law

Prepared for Professor Tanovich's Legal Profession class Winter 2016

R6.3.1-4 – Transparency and Cultural Competence in the Hiring Process

Employers shall ensure transparency and abide by principles of cultural competence in their hiring processes. Employers have an obligation to disclose clear and definitive job descriptions, as well as all phases of any recruitment process, to all applicants.

Commentary*Preamble

[1] Although the legal profession is committed to diversifying its workforce, discriminatory hiring practices continue. This is demonstrated by reports of:

- a. Racialized applicants “whitening” their resumes and downplaying their ethnic experiences and / or feeling like they must to be more attractive to firms to secure employment
- b. Racialized licensees are severely underrepresented in big firms<sup>1</sup>
- c. Large numbers of women leaving firms as a result of lack of accommodation for maternity and parenting accommodations and for lack of promotion to partner<sup>2</sup>
- d. LGBTQ++ licensees are significantly underrepresented in big firms
- e. Licensees with disabilities are discriminated against in hiring processes as stereotypes and common misperceptions are relied on and a lack of accommodations are provided

[2] Ranking candidates based on how well they fit a firm’s image is a problem. This practice is ambiguous and could be coded language for discriminatory hiring practices. It presents barriers for persons who appear to be different than the workplace norm, and particularly for peoples protected under the Ontario Human Rights Code. Increased transparency and integrating cultural competence into the hiring processes will strengthen equity and diversity initiatives with the aim of reducing these barriers.

Cultural competency in hiring processes

[3] Principles of cultural competence can be useful outside of the lawyer-client relationship. Fundamentally, cultural competence training is an exercise in training lawyers to understand 1; that they are cultural beings and 2; that we cannot escape the influence culture has on our decisions. Susan Bryant, Associate Professor at CUNY School of Law, had this to say about culture's "invisible lens";

We are constantly attaching culturally-based meaning to what we see and hear, often without being aware that we are doing so. Through our invisible cultural lens, we judge people to be truthful, rude, intelligent or superstitious based on the attributions we make about the meaning of their behavior.

[4] Cultural competence training seeks to cultivate a legal profession wherein lawyers are capable of rendering their own personal "invisible cultural lenses" visible. Culturally competent lawyers acknowledge "racism, power, privilege, and stereotyped thinking as influencing [their] interactions [...] and [work] to lessen the effect of these pernicious influences." Infusing principles of cultural competence into the hiring process will serve to stifle conscious and unconscious bias and reliance on stereotypes.

Transparency/Disclosure

[5] Applicants must be given clear and consistent information about job requirements. A written job description should be available. A clear and definitive job description will include an outline of the actual work performed, necessary skills, and qualities expected of successful applications. Job requirements should be rationally connected to performing the job, adopted in good faith, and reasonably necessary to accomplish the work-related purpose.

[6] Information about the recruitment process, including the hiring committee membership and the use of any secondary interviews or receptions, must be disclosed to all applicants. Recruitment processes must be rationally connected to the job requirements and adopted in good faith.

[7] These principles are also applicable to student recruitment practices.

Reporting

[8] All law firms must disclose to the Law Society biennially their hiring criteria, processes, and demographics for further review. The report must be submitted to the Law Society Equity Director for inclusion in the Law Society's Model Policies, Publications and Reports. The records must include detailed information including gender and age of those hired by the firm, as well as information regarding Aboriginal and minority demographics.

[9] Law firms must keep up to date records of all employment practices, as the Law Society Equity Director may, at any time, conduct a random check of policies in order to ensure transparency. These records must include information on all lawyers, students and paralegals hired within the two-year period.

[10] Those firms that do not disclose their hiring practices or do not keep current records may be subject to fines and other disciplinary action that the Board deems fit.

Examples of contravening behavior

[11] Ambiguous terms such as 'Cultural Fit' must not be used as hiring criteria. All criteria must be clearly defined and in compliance with the Ontario Human Rights Code.

[12] Ambiguous language and terms used during the hiring process can have an adverse and discriminatory effect. These unintended consequences depart from the standards of employment prescribed in Rule 6.3.1-1.

[13] "Cultural Fit" is demonstrative of a term used in hiring practices that appears neutral, but has adverse effects. For example, "Cultural Fit" may present barriers for persons who are, or appear to be, different than the dominant group in a workplace. These barriers can manifest at all stages of the hiring process. When such ambiguous terms are offered as an explanation for unsuccessful applicants seeking feedback, they have the potential to conceal discriminatory practice, hamper diversity and equity initiatives and entrench the status quo.

Hiring Process Best Practices

[14] Legal recruitment practices should acknowledge that discrimination occurs in hiring processes and take steps to avoid perpetuating it. Employers should aim for fair processes that focus on each candidate's ability to perform essential job duties. For example, best practices within the legal profession can include;

- a. Having a multi-person panel conduct formal interviews;
- b. Establishing objective assessment criteria and marking schemes determined before answers are graded
- c. Ensuring consistency in interview questions, based on the job's essential duties and bona fide requirements.
- d. Documentation of any judgments based on appearances or other subjective features in order to eliminate unconscious bias.

[15] While not directly regulated by the Law Society, it is recommended that law schools engage in career preparation programming that does not perpetuate discriminatory practices. For example, guest speakers focusing on professional attire for women should not go into detail about length of skirts, cut of blouses, or colour of lipstick.

[16] In addition to ensuring substantial transparency within the hiring processes, rule 6.3.1, requires transparency in the retention process. As an example, although there has been a large number of women entering private practice, they have also been leaving in large numbers. This is a symptom of the fact that women retained by firms are not being promoted to partnership and other decision-making positions. To increase transparency, there must be ongoing research regarding the retention of individuals within gendered, racialized, lgbtq++, and disability communities in firms, government and private practice. The profession must recognize the challenges that these individuals face and make substantial efforts to accommodate their needs and reduce these barriers.

Racialized Licensee Response

Re: Recommendations for a Windsor Law / Canadian Council of Law Deans Response to the 2016 LSUC Report on Challenges faced by Racialized Licensees

You requested feedback from the EDC regarding this report. The EDC has consulted with the students via an email request for feedback, and has otherwise reviewed the report. We would make the following recommendations:

1. The Committee strongly supports Recommendation 1 “Reinforcing Professional Obligations.” This recommendation is important for ensuring that individual members of the Law Society are held accountable by the LSUC for their conduct. It also opens up new channels for those who interact with LSUC members to utilize the existing complaints mechanisms to resolve matters pertaining to equality, diversity and equity.
2. The Committee supports Recommendation 2 and notes that Law Schools could benefit from, and contribute to, the development and implementation of model policies and resources.
3. The Committee supports Recommendations 3, 4, 5 and 6 and notes the following:
  - a) Law Schools could adopt item 1) with respect to their own student populations. “The Law Society will require every licensee to adopt and to abide by a statement of principles acknowledging their obligation to promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally, and in their behaviour towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public”;
  - b) Are Law Schools considered “legal workplaces of at least 10 (or 25) licensees in Ontario” who would be subject to the data collection requirements?

We recommend that the LSUC define the term "legal workplaces". Law schools should be consulted when both the quantitative and qualitative surveys are being prepared. Law school student and applicant surveys could closely mirror the survey used by the LSUC so that the data can be used for comparative purposes.

- c) Qualitative data taken from inclusion surveys may also be useful to receive from law students, so as to ensure that the full picture of the challenges faced by racialized licensees can be demonstrated. This will ensure that broad context is provided in the Inclusion Index;

- d) The data collection requirements of law schools and other legal workplaces should be clearly stated from the outset when implementing this report, as it is an important aspect of the Inclusion Index. The Inclusion Index should not be built without taking this data into consideration. The power of statistical reporting is in being able to compare against historical data. If the Inclusion Index is not built properly from the outset, amending the formulas within it will be difficult later on, and will compromise the integrity of the data over time.

If the Law Society does not consider it to be within the scope of this report to require law schools to provide data about student populations, then we would recommend the Law Society raise the matter at the Federation of Law Societies of Canada.

4. Understanding the complex nature of systemic barriers to diversity and inclusion, the Committee strongly supports Recommendation 8 “Progressive Compliance Measures”, as another important measure for ensuring organizational accountability.
5. The Committee supports Recommendation 10 “The Licensing Process” but requests clarification from the LSUC about whether it is envisioned that law schools should also adopt cultural competency as a core competency. Again, if the LSUC does not envision that law schools should be included under this recommendation, then this recommendation should be forwarded to the Federation for implementation with respect to law schools.

The committee notes that “racialized licensee” is not defined in the report. The report would benefit from clarifying this point. For example, reference could be made to Statistics Canada “Visible Minority and Population Group Reference Guide, National Household Survey, 2011” Cat No 99-010-XWE2011009, online: <https://www12.statcan.gc.ca/nhs-enm/2011/ref/guides/99-010-x/99-010-x2011009-eng.cfm> to ensure a standard approach.

6. The Committee strongly supports Recommendation 12 as an important tool in ensuring that Recommendation 8 has effective enforcement measures. It will also ensure that the LSUC is appropriately prepared to deal with such complaints in the future. Without having these foundations in place, the LSUC itself will perpetuate discrimination by having inadequate processes in place, and inadequately trained personnel, to handle these complex and sensitive complaints. In particular, protecting persons from reprisal for making complaints is significant.
7. The committee strongly supports Recommendation 13 “Leading by Example”, as being tremendously important for creating strong foundations for the entire profession.

The Committee should be encouraged to share an anonymized version of the comments that were made by licensees during the consultation process. If these could be categorized so that, for example, law schools and other workplaces could have access to relevant feedback, this may be helpful.

Generally, we would commend the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee on the broad consultations that were undertaken to prepare this report, and for their responsiveness to the feedback that they received.

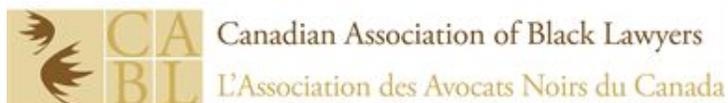

Please note that we have also received a written submission from the Black Law Students' Association, Windsor Chapter. That report is attached.

Respectfully submitted,

Dear Treasurer Schabas, Co-Chairs Leiper and Anand:

Re: Final Report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees (CFRL) Working Group

The Canadian Association of Black Lawyers (CABL) would like to comment on the final report submitted by the CFRL Working Group. We make these comments in light of our letter submitted to the Law Society of Upper Canada (LSUC) on May 14, 2015. In this letter we recommended a number of measures to the Working Group<sup>1</sup>.

CABL is a national network of law professionals with an overall mandate to promote the advancement of black lawyers within the profession. From the advent of the creation of the CFRL Working Group in 2012, CABL has been involved in supporting, informing and contributing to the process specifically in regards to research, analysis and discussions of the report.

CABL is a member of the Equity Advisory Group (EAG) of the LSUC and had a representative sitting on the EAG working group for the CFRL report. Our members participated in focus groups, town hall meetings, surveys and direct meetings with the CFRL Working Group.

CABL notes that the process of recalling, reliving and publicly discussing systemic and sometimes overt racism is gruelling and uncomfortable. Our members shared intimate details of their experiences in order to draw attention to the challenges faced by black and other minority lawyers in Ontario. We hope that our efforts will eventually lead to more than an initial step to change.

CABL acknowledges that the final report released by the CFRL Working Group highlights some of the challenges faced by racialized licensees and is an initial step towards addressing these challenges. The summary and expressions of hope set the tone for the 13 recommendations the report is making to Convocation.

CABL is fully in support of the LSUC addressing the challenges our members and other minority groups face in the practice of law. The members of the Bar have failed in their obligation not to “discriminate on the grounds of race, ancestry, pledge of origin, colour, ethnic origin, citizenship, creed, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity, gender expression, age, record of offences, marital status, family status or disability with respect to professional employment of other lawyers, articulated students, or any other person or in professional dealings with other licensees or any other person (as defined in the Ontario Human Rights Code)”<sup>2</sup> It is for this very reason that we believe the report places too much faith in the ability of the Bar to self-monitor and correct the systemic issues recognized in the report. There must be direct regulation from the LSUC. We believe that the recommendations should be strengthened to reflect LSUC regulation rather than suggestion.

In the short time available for submissions and commentary, CABL would like to highlight a few things that we suggested in May 2015 that we believe should have been adopted in the final report.

Data Collection:

We note that there is no mandatory internal collection of demographic data by legal organizations as we suggested. The LSUC will, through its licensee annual reporting mechanism, collect the data and present this to legal organizations. CABL notes that mandatory internal collection of data on an annual basis forces legal organization to “look at themselves in the mirror” and recognise the trends that so far they have not addressed. How will the LSUC ensure that legal organizations will review the numbers provided by the LSUC on a yearly basis? Our letter of May 14, 2015, noted that just as trust accounts and other features of legal organizations are regulated, data collection by legal organizations can be enforced and regulated.

Self-Assessment:

CABL is sceptical of the LSUC recommending to “encourage” legal workplaces to conduct inclusion surveys by providing them with sample templates. Despite the tenor of the report, the Working Group had concerns about unnecessary burdens placed on many groups that have already moved forward proactively with equality measures of their own. Legal Organizations that are ahead of the curve will not be burdened by less. On the other hand, the many that have nothing in place will have a standard to live up to. CABL would like the adoption of equality, diversity and inclusion principles to be more than voluntary and subject to periodic review for compliance. CABL notes that unconscious bias can be made conscious through self-assessment. However, we accept that the CFRL Working Group were weighing competing interests in deciding to adopt a less onerous approach. We hope that the global effect of the recommendations will lead to a future that includes compliance review.

Progressive Compliance Measures

CABL believes the LSUC must now commit to, not merely consider, developing and implementing progressive compliance measures for legal workplaces that do not comply with the requirements proposed in Recommendation 3 and/or legal workplaces that are identified as having systemic barriers to diversity and inclusion. The recommendations are not onerous. In light of the Working Group's findings, they reflect a basic standard required of any legal workplaces serious about diversity and inclusions.

In general the report falls short of adequately identifying enforcement mechanisms. What happens if legal organizations are not encouraged and/or do not adopt policies? Or even worse create policies and ignore them? The report does not address this.

CPD Training:

CPD programs limited to once in three years places the issue of systemic racism on the shelf only to be uncomfortably addressed after long periods. The issue can be addressed and kept alive by requiring an annual one hour program. The report is also vague on the implementation of the training. Who are the experts the LSUC will approach to help with developing this curriculum? CABL hopes that our organization will be consulted before the curriculum and process are discussed and implemented.

Complaints of Systemic Discrimination:

The Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program was created under a different principle and ideology. CABL would prefer to "create a specialized and trained team to address complaints of discrimination"<sup>3</sup> that reports to the LSUC disciplinary committee.

Conclusion:

Moving forward, CABL expects the LSUC to continue to involve us as well as the Roundtable of Diversity Associations (RODA), EAG and other equity seeking legal organizations in the implementation of the recommendations and the planning of new policies.

CABL's submission is a comment on some aspects of the report that we believe could be strengthened. However, there is no policy in place at this time and, as noted earlier, the adopting of this report would be a positive first step towards change. CABL fully supports Convocation adopting the CFRL Working Group Final Report in its entirety.

---

CABL does not support a vote of the CFRL Working Group Final Report on a recommendation by recommendation basis. We reiterate that our hope is that the global influence of the recommendations will effect change. A vote on recommendation by recommendation will most likely change the overall influence of the report.

CABL is aware that Convocation will also be considering a motion that the recommendations from the CFRL Working Group Report form the benchmark for approaching issues with other equity seeking groups. CABL supports this motion.

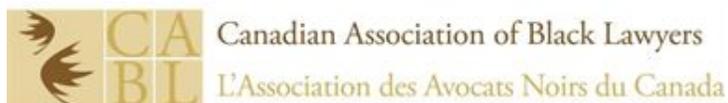

CABL will rely on the hope that the recommendations will become the root of a living tree that will grow, flourish and become stronger by the day. First let's plant the tree.

Yours truly,

Dear Ms. Bouchard:

Re: Developing Strategies for Change: Addressing Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Consultation Paper

The Canadian Association of Black Lawyers (“CABL”) takes this opportunity to offer the following submissions in respect to the above-noted Consultation Paper authored by The Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group (the “Working Group”). We note that CABL Board members and other CABL members have participated in the in-person consultation process following the publication of the Consultation Paper. These submissions are not meant to modify or abrogate from those individual submissions in any respect.

CABL is a national network of law professionals with an overall mandate to promote the advancement of black lawyers within the profession by providing support systems, promoting academic and professional excellence and advancing issues of equity and diversity among the bar and judiciary. CABL is both a member of The Law Society of Upper Canada (the “Law Society”)’s Treasurer’s Liaison Group and a member of the Law Society’s Equity Advisory Group (“EAG”). CABL is also a member of the Ontario Bar Association (“OBA”)’s Diversity Program and a member of the Toronto Lawyers Association (“TLA”)’s Roundtable of Diversity Associations (“RODA”). CABL has participated in numerous consultations with the Law Society, the Canadian Bar Association (“CBA”) and the OBA on issues of access, diversity and equity affecting the legal profession and the legal system within Canada and Ontario.

We wish to commend the Law Society and the Working Group on the comprehensive and detailed scope of the Consultation Paper. As you are aware, CABL has long been advocating for a comprehensive investigation by the Law Society into the experiences of Racialized Lawyers, and in particular Black Lawyers, based upon concerns raised by CABL members and others relating to their experiences within the profession; from the articling stage and subsequent. We note that a summary of those experiences have been materially captured throughout the Consultation Paper. In that regard, these submissions shall focus more particularly on responding to the Questions for the Profession section of the Consultation Paper and our additional submissions in relation thereto.

I. ENHANCING THE INTERNAL CAPACITY OF ORGANIZATIONS

The mandate, and reasons for the mandate of the Law Society in this area, is readily apparent: as a regulator, the Law Society's interest should be to ensure that members of the profession are being treated with fairness and dignity by other Licensees and in a manner which enhances the diversity of the profession and provides equal opportunities to all members thereof.

The Law Society has a crucial role to play to establish "best practices" by way of policies, standards and resources devoted to the recruitment, retention and career progression of Racialized Licensees within law firms and other legal organizations, such as legal clinics, in house legal departments, etc. (collectively "Legal Organizations").

Similar to the Justicia Project in respect to addressing gender imbalance and discrimination within the profession, the Law Society should be addressing the lack of opportunities for Racialized Licensees within the legal profession. While as a minimum, the Law Society should be expanding the scope of the Justicia Project to include Racialized Licensees, CABL maintains that more significant strategies are necessary to address the issues raised in the Consultation Paper.

A. Establishing Diversity Programs Within Firms

While the Law Society has identified three proposed models in this area, CABL does not see them as mutually exclusive. Rather, they are interrelated and complementary to each other.

As the Consultation Paper notes, the Law Society already has a template for approaching these issues by way of the Justicia Project materials distributed to law firms. However, CABL advocates that unlike the Justicia Project, the Law Society should be requiring Legal Organizations to commit, by way of a written agreement, to adopt diversity "best practices" within their respective Legal Organizations as per the Law Society guidelines and as more particularly discussed below.

B. Self-Assessment

There is little point to Legal Organizations developing and adopting "best practices" without a form of self-assessment tool to measure their progress in respect to both implementation and results. The self-assessment aspect is critical.

C. Requiring Standards

CABL recognizes that this could be a controversial issue. However, we query what concrete steps will be taken by Legal Organizations if there is no element of requirement, as there is with other forms of human rights related policies, so as to promote equality and protect the vulnerable from discriminatory practices. Granted, there are a number of firms who will "opt in" voluntarily, as with the Justicia Project. However, we can see that of the Firms of more than 25 lawyers within the province, only approximately 55 Firms have signed commitment agreements with the Law Society in respect to the current Justicia Project.

The issues identified in the Consultation Paper are also systemic in nature and arguably more difficult than gender discrimination for Legal Organizations to grapple with and address in any effective and systemic way.

Requiring Legal Organizations to adopt recruitment, retention and career advancement standards and resources to provide opportunities for Racialized Licensees would:

- (i) make the efforts of the Law Society in this area more far reaching by ensuring that every legal environment has considered these important issues and has put in place the necessary “best practices” to encourage racial diversity;
- (ii) remove the choice of “opting out” as a clear signal from the Law Society that equity is not a choice but a directive; and
- (iii) allow the Law Society to act as a vehicle for change; by requiring an infrastructure for inclusiveness and accountability within all Legal Organizations.

To be clear, while CABL believes that the Law Society should provide Legal Organizations with proposed best practices template standard policies for recruitment, retention and career advancement of Racialized Licensees, and require that every Legal Organization have such policies in place, the actual content of these policies, as long as they contain the essential elements of the best practices standards templates, would be for each Legal Organization to design for itself keeping in mind the nature of the particular Organization.

D. Collecting Demographic Data

CABL wholly endorses the mandatory internal collection of demographic data by Legal Organizations in respect of their Racialized Licensees. The internal mandatory collection of data is the only way in which Legal Organizations can monitor, in a transparent fashion, and be accountable for their progress in respect to the policy implementation and their corresponding recruitment, retention and advancement strategies, as well as the resources devoted to such strategies, so as to adjust and modify the strategies for efficacy.

In respect to what use should be made of the internal data collection, the Legal Organizations should be required to report, on a mandatory basis, certain aggregate demographic data to the Law Society. Such mandatory data would be in the nature of:

- (i) the size and geographic location of the firm;
- (ii) the racial demographics of the summer/articling/LPP students, associates, partners and paralegals within the Legal Organization;
- (iii) the number of racialized summer/articling students/LLP students who were hired and the number hired back to the Legal Organization and their areas of practice;

- (iv) the number of racialized associates who are employed, the length of employment and their areas of practice;
- (v) the number of racialized partners who are employed, their tenure, their areas of practice, how many were advanced to the partnership from associate status and after how many years;
- (vi) the number of racialized paralegals and their length of employment; and
- (vii) similar information in respect to the Legal Organization's non-racialized licensees for comparison purposes.

The Law Society must provide Legal Organizations with a standard data collection template with the required demographic data to be collected such that there is consistency and reliability among data collection and reporting in order to allow for meaningful analysis of trends and progress.

It has been suggested by some groups, such as the Federation of Asian Canadian Lawyers ("FACL"), that other types of equity demographic data (such as sexual orientation, abilities, socio-economic disadvantage) should also be collected so as to take an intersectionality approach to the analysis. CABL does not have the expertise to assess the proportionate value of such information for the purpose of addressing the issues raised in the Consultation Paper other than to acknowledge the well documented sociological evidence of the intersectionality of race and other factors, such as gender. Accordingly, it may be worthwhile for the Law Society to consult with equity experts as to what indicators would be worthwhile to track.

The mandatory data collected by the Legal Organizations and submitted to the Law Society should be summarized, on an aggregate basis, and reported by the Law Society to the profession annually. This information, together with the Law Society's collection of demographic data through the Licensees Members' Annual Reports (which reporting should also be made mandatory on the part of individual Licensees), will provide a clearer understanding of the existing profile of the legal profession within Ontario and can be used to track demographic trends on a short term and long term basis.

The above submissions are in no way meant to be a suggestion or recommendation for the implementation of diversity targets or "quotas". CABL does not believe that diversity targets or quotas are necessary if mandatory strategies are put in place, as endorsed above, to encourage and promote systemic organizational change.

CABL is of the view that a requirement of mandatory data reporting in respect to certain aggregate information does not require a regulation of Legal Organizations or firms in the same way that such regulation is not required for the Law Society to impose mandatory reporting requirements in respect to the handling of trust funds and other professional requirements. Also, many of the large firms are already required, through the process of diversity and contract compliance procedures, to report similar demographic information as is being proposed above.

Further, the Law Society must engage in a wide spread proactive strategy of education within the profession as to the purpose and goal of mandatory data collection and reporting and emphasize that the purpose is not punitive, but to obtain useful information in order to assist the profession as a whole with useful strategies to promote racial diversity and opportunities within Legal Organizations.

E. Diversity and Contract Compliance

The Law Society's role with in-house legal departments should be similar to that advocated above. In that regard, our recommendations in respect of the Law Society providing templates for mandatory "best practices" policies, standards, mandatory internal data collection and mandatory reporting of certain aggregate data to the Law Society would apply.

With respect to the data collection and reporting of data in relation to the procurement of legal services, CABL recommends that the Law Society works directly with the Legal Leaders for Diversity ("LLD"), Law Firm Diversity and Inclusion Network ("LFDIN"), Call to Action and other organizations, to discuss purchasing practices and to voluntarily develop model procurement and contract compliance policies as they relate to diversity in order to promote and/or expand the opportunities for Racialized Licensees on significant/important files. CABL also fully endorses that the Law Society encourage such organizations, on a voluntary basis, to provide demographic statistics during the RFP and in respect to the file progress.

II. MENTORING, ADVISORY SERVICES AND NETWORKING

A. Mentoring and Advisory Services

CABL is of the view that mentoring, both within the Racialized bar and outside the Racialized bar, is a necessary and crucial part of providing professional opportunities for Racialized Licensees. To that end, CABL approves of and endorses the following mentoring and advisory services:

- (i) that the Law Society develop technology based performance oriented and career and personal advice oriented mentoring and advisory services, based upon best practices, and widely promote their availability; with an emphasis on establishing short and long term mentoring relationships for Racialized Licensees;
- (ii) that the Law Society audit the formal (performance based) and informal (career and personal advice based) mentoring and advisory services available within Legal Organizations, with an emphasis on investigating what specific mentoring and advisory services have been established to address the concerns of Racialized Licensees;
- (iii) that the Law Society make available to Racialized Licensees advisors/coaches who have received diversity training and are available to provide one on one professional career counselling to Racialized

Licensees, from a pool of compensated coaches/advisors, at a cost fully borne by the Law Society;

- (iv) that the Law Society make available to Racialized Licensees performance mentors to provide practice based assistance to Racialized Licensees who do not have access to other practice based information/assistance, from a pool of compensated mentors, at a cost fully borne by the Law Society;
- (v) that the Law Society, in conjunction with Racialized legal and other associations, organize, promote and endorse informal mentorship events (i.e. CABL's Annual Speed Mentoring event). As the Racialized legal associations are not for profit organizations with limited funds, the Law Society should provide financial assistance at least by way of subsidizing the full cost of facilities, security and refreshments etc. to encourage such events; and
- (vi) that Racialized legal associations provide one on one volunteer professional career mentoring and advisory services to their members through a mentoring program organized and implemented by the associations.

B. Networking

As with mentoring, networking is a crucial tool for the creation of opportunities for Racialized Licensees, who, as noted in the Consultation Paper, are often more isolated and lacking support networks. Many of these Racialized Lawyers are in sole practice or small firms of one or two lawyers.

CABL believes that it is crucial to involve Racialized Licensees in both Racialized and non-Racialized network opportunities. Racialized networks are essential for validation, comradery and shared experiences. However, networking opportunities must also extend to the legal "mainstream" in order to create broader professional opportunities.

Resources are a significant impediment to formal networking structures, such as professional development. Racialized legal associations are therefore an excellent source of networking opportunities. To the extent that resources are an impediment for Racialized Licensees to become members of such associations, the Law Society could offer subsidies to assist Racialized Licensees to join such organizations for a fixed period of time (i.e. one or two year membership years). This would allow the Racialized Licensees to avail themselves of the networking (and mentorship) benefits of such associations at a reduced cost for a period of time and thereafter they would be persuaded to continue membership at regular cost on the basis of the beneficial networking and mentorship experiences/services such associations provide.

More difficult is how to achieve networking opportunities among the mainstream Legal Organizations. One way is for the Law Society to encourage mainstream Legal Organizations to offer regular “networking invitations” to Racialized Legal Associations to promote dialogue and interaction.

We note that the Internationally Trained Lawyers have the same access to Racialized Legal Associations as do other Racialized lawyers.

III. ENHANCING CULTURAL COMPETENCE IN THE PROFESSION

CABL believes that all of the three proposals contained in the Consultation Paper are advisable. There should certainly be more availability of accredited CPD Programs on cultural competence and equity principles of diversity inclusion and systemic bias. Further, the Professional Responsibility and Practice (“PRP”) Course should include cultural competency, diversity and inclusion as mandatory topics for accreditation.

In the same vein, accredited lawyers should be required to evidence their continued cultural competence by engaging in at least one hour of CPD annually, as part of the current 3 hours of mandatory professionalism hours, on cultural competence, equity and diversity as these issues impact upon the practice of law and the experiences of Racialized Licensees and their career development opportunities. Both the widespread availability of such programs and the one hour requirement go hand in hand. These CPD programs should be taught by individuals with equity and diversity expertise and they themselves should be demographically diverse.

IV. DISCRIMINATION AND THE ROLE OF THE COMPLAINTS PROCESS

The Law Society has a critical role to play in ensuring that Racialized Licensees’ legal right to be free from discrimination is enforced. While updating the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct is a first step, much more needs to be done to address what is essentially a systemic problem within the profession. Specific CPD programs and mandatory one hour CPD on cultural sensitivity/systemic bias has been mentioned above. Communication to the profession is another important element as are the recommended strategies outlined above in respect of establishing diversity programs within firms.

The Law Society should also take steps to publicize the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel to ensure that Racialized Licensees are fully aware of their right to make a complaint of incidents of harassment and discrimination engaged in by other Licensees to an independent “ombudsman”.

The Law Society should also be allocating resources to the training of specialized Professional Regulation staff to accept and process complaints of racial discrimination and bias as a breach of the Rules of Professional Conduct and Paralegal Rules of Conduct and to have available proper supports to assist complainants with the process. The Law Society should also provide coaches/advisors to discuss and address with complainants the personal and professional issues arising from discriminatory conduct.

The Law Society must be mindful that the confidential reporting of incidents of racial discrimination is extremely difficult for Racialized Licensees. By virtue of the paucity of Racialized Licensees within Legal Organizations, the fact of a complaint being made to the Law Society about a particular Legal Organization will, by its nature, most likely reveal the identity of the complainant.

Therefore, the Law Society must derive an effective investigation and enforcement mechanism which does not place the Racialized Licensee in harm or subject them to reprisals. Part of the investigation process might involve a general audit of the “respondent” Legal Organization for compliance in respect of the creation and implementation of the “best practices” policies/procedures and a general audit of all Racialized Licensees within the “respondent” as to their experiences so as to not single out the complainant. Again, the primary focus should be to protect the complainant, who is in an extremely vulnerable situation, from reprisal and to remediate the situation rather than to penalize. However, it should be made clear in the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct that reprisals, as well as the discriminatory conduct itself, is a breach subject to prosecution and penalties.

The Law Society should be engaging in direct dialogue with Racialized legal associations as well as the OBA/CBA and county and district law associations, to discuss specific suggestions in order to derive an effective, yet protective, investigation/enforcement process, and as to the mentoring/advisory capabilities of such organizations to assist the Law Society in supporting members engaged in initiating a complaint.

The tracking of such complaints is also necessary so as to create/modify existing strategies and policies based upon efficacy.

CABL is of the view that no regulatory changes would be required to implement the proposals outlined in the Consultation Paper or detailed above. The Law Society has, as part of its current mandate, the regulation of each Licensee and their conduct in respect to the practice of law. The implementation and enforcement of the proposals hereinbefore described are an integral part of such mandate, whether implemented on an individual Licensee or aggregate Firm basis.

V. THE OPERATIONS OF THE LAW SOCIETY OF UPPER CANADA

CABL is in favour of the Law Society’s adoption of Initiatives 1 through 4 of the Consultation Paper. It is important that the Law Society itself engage in, and be seen to be engaging in, the same initiatives as are being proposed for the profession as a whole; including, without limitation, the implementation of “best practices” policies and standards; mandatory internal data collection; mandatory reporting of certain aggregate data and the other proposals discussed herein.

An equity audit of the services provided by the Equity Initiatives Department and publication of such services to the profession would also enhance the importance of the work of the Department and the supports offered.

The “face” of the Law Society needs to undergo significant change. It is not reflective, from Benchers to staff, of the demographics of our profession or the population at large. The Law Society needs to “look at its own house” in respect to its recruitment and hiring practices as well as retention and career advancement of Racialized individuals (as well as individuals from the other equity seeking groups) to achieve a greater representation of equity seeking individuals in all areas of its operations.

As well, as a priority mandate, the Law Society should embark on equity sensitivity training for Benchers and staff. It is crucial that an equity “lens” be brought to all operations of the Law Society, including Finance and other operations, rather than to approach equity as a “silo” to be addressed only by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee and Equity Initiatives Department. Only by taking such a holistic approach will the Law Society truly achieve equity infused governance, for itself and for the profession as a whole.

We hope that the above submissions are of assistance to the Working Group. CABL remains committed to the work of the Law Society and the Working Group and is fully prepared to participate in the consultation process going forward with a view to finalizing and implementing the proposals under consideration in a fulsome and expeditious manner.

Chère Madame,

Je vous écris au nom de l'Association canadienne des avocats du mouvement syndical/Canadian Association of Labour Lawyers (ACAMS-CALL), laquelle représente les syndicats et les travailleurs dans l'ensemble du Canada.

Les membres de notre association, en tant qu'avocats de droit du travail et de la personne, souhaitent exprimer leur appui pour le travail accompli par votre groupe sur les difficultés auxquelles les titulaires de permis racialisés font face et pour votre rapport final intitulé Collaborer au changement : stratégies de lutte contre le racisme systémique dans les professions juridiques.

Nous apprécions le leadership du Barreau du Haut-Canada sur ces enjeux importants.

Veuillez recevoir, chère Madame, nos salutations le plus distinguées.

I write today in response to the Law Society of Upper Canada's ("The Law Society") public consultation related to challenges faced by racialized licensees and the 13 recommendations contained in the Racialized Licensees Working Group's (the "Working Group") final report, titled Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions.

We applaud the Working Group for their outstanding effort and the thoughtful and detailed presentation of their findings. From the outset, allow me to make it clear that we agree with the assertion that "racialized licensees face widespread barriers within the (legal) profession at all stages of their careers." Through our own research on the legal profession, we have come to a similar conclusion, however it is important to note that there are mitigating factors that have a significant impact on those barriers.

The Canadian Centre for Diversity and Inclusion ("CCDI") has a mission to generate the awareness, dialogue and action for Canadians to recognize diversity as an asset and not an obstacle. Through the research, reports and toolkits we develop and our workshops, events and workplace consultations, we're helping Canadian employers understand their diversity, plan for it and create inclusion.

CCDI's leadership has a proven model that's cultivated trust as an impartial third party. Our expertise is focused on the topics of inclusion that are relevant in Canada now and the regional differences that shape diversity.

A charitable organization that thinks like a business, we have created a niche with our innovative research technology and data analysis that brings a deeper understanding of Canadian diversity demographics and mindsets at any given moment.

In 2014 we developed and launched a project entitled Diversity by the Numbers: The Legal Profession ("DBTN"). This project is an exciting initiative that seeks to better understand the demographic makeup of the Legal Profession in Canada. To date, over thirty law firms across Canada have participated and over 8000 respondents have completed the census.

It is our experience with DBTN that brings us to prepare this response. And it is the mitigating factors indicated earlier that are the basis of, and reason for our response.

Overall Commentary

What should be measured?

Benchmarks, goals, and accountabilities.

A primary mandate of The Working Group report is to better understand systemic barriers within the legal profession through collecting Diversity and Inclusion data. In an article that critically assesses the implications of the report<sup>1</sup>, Joanne St. Lewis argues that the methods of addressing these barriers proposed in the report are ineffective because they are applied through codes of professional conduct rather than through “entity regulation.” That is to say, they do not measure and make accountable the workplaces in which these barriers play out.

We agree that effective movement on Diversity and Inclusion issues necessitates accountabilities specific to each firm. However, the question then becomes, what should be measured to expose the barriers firms will be accountable for? The report provides a clear objective to enhance representation of racialized licensees “in proportion to representation of the Ontario population, in the professions, in all legal workplaces and at all levels of seniority.” Irrespective of where accountabilities are placed, The Working Group's approach of analysis at each of these levels will help isolate instances of systemic discrimination. This is because each of these comparisons makes data accountable to the group they are being benchmarked against. However, efforts to counter systemic discrimination become regulated, these levels of data comparison will allow the setting of representation goals.

Focusing on ways to put Diversity and Inclusion into practice in law firms, the report proposes that a fairer culture will be fostered in firms if they are required to have a diversity policy. St. Lewis suggests that, to propel action, their needs to be outside scrutiny. To achieve this, she proposes that all law firms have a diversity strategy that is available to the public. Building on these points, we would further suggest processes surrounding how a diversity policy and strategy are actualized within firms. Initial questions that should be ask to enhance the effectiveness of any diversity strategy include:

- » Has the strategy been linked to a formal business case?
- » Are senior leaders being held accountable, and if so, how?
- » Does the strategy consider diversity in senior leadership appointments?
- » Is the strategy communicated, to and understood by all firm members?

These questions and the actions they stimulate will cast diversity as a genuine priority within an organization's culture rather than a well-intentioned, inactive edict.

Linking demographic and inclusion data.

The Working Group recognizes that analysis of diversity must be complemented by analysis of inclusion, stating that a law firm's diversity performance will be measured through "self-identification data" and "climate data." Throughout the report, specifically in relation to a proposed Inclusion Index, there are references to the measurement of both. However, the report does not specifically state that inclusion survey results will be presented and analyzed through demographic categories, which is vital to isolating specific groups that are feeling excluded.

What is the difference between demographic and inclusion data that is linked and unlinked? To explain the impact linking has on data insights, consider the demographic gender and the inclusion question "everybody at the firm has equal opportunity to advance." Unlinked data can only show the percentage of female, male, and trans-identified respondents and the overall percentage of respondents that agree, are neutral, or disagree with the statement. Linked data will allow you to isolate and compare the rates of agreement or disagreement between females, males, and trans-identified respondents. Understanding the insights you want to draw from the data is necessary before implementing a survey. Any gaps in data collection will limit the potential of the information that is gathered.

Reasons for a focus on Diversity and Inclusion.

The report proposes that Diversity and Inclusion will attract an ever-diversifying talent pool and give firms a competitive advantage in securing clients that request information on their demographic makeup. These statements are true, but do not comment on individual experiences in the workplace and the link these experiences have to business outcomes.

To the report's arguments for why Diversity and Inclusion should be fostered we would add findings from the growing research in this field. The research shows that nurturing diversity as well as inclusion (rather than one or the other) is necessary, and it can substantially increase the engagement of employees.

Research by Deloitte Australia found that strong focus on both can double employee engagement and increase the chances that "an employee is likely to stay with their employer, advocate for their employer and go the extra mile" at work<sup>[2]</sup>. An organization that does not prioritize Diversity and Inclusion is missing out on a truly talented and dedicated workforce. For the more bottom-line-minded audience, the research also shows that a focus on Diversity and Inclusion can increase organizational performance through increased sales, greater market share, and larger relative profits<sup>[3]</sup>.

How should Diversity and Inclusion data be analyzed?

Measuring the association between demographics.

When analyzing categorical demographic data, a methodology we use and recommend is cross-tabulations. Cross-tabulation is the measurement of the association between two variables, and it investigates how much the distribution of one variable differs according to the various levels of another variable. Further, when the goal is uncovering racialized barriers to things like advancement, you can construct cross-tabulations in a way that shows the representation of racialized and non-racialized respondents at different levels of an organization's hierarchy.

Using an example relevant to the legal profession, we can construct a cross-tabulation that measures racial representation by the roles in the Partner track hierarchy (Error! Reference source not found.). A comparison of these role-specific representations to the overall representation of race within a firm provides the contextual evidence needed to uncover barriers to advancement. This benchmarking technique exposes concentrations or omissions of racialized groups along the hierarchy, which can then guide hiring or advancement goals that can be measured over time.

	Racialized	Non-Racialized
OVERALL	127 33.87%	248 66.13%
Equity Partner	12 12.24%	86 87.76%
Income Partner	15 26.32%	42 73.68%
Associate	85 43.15%	112 56.85%
Articling or Summer Student	15 65.22%	8 34.78%

Are the differences significant or is it a product of chance?

To ensure that you are properly assessing an over- or under-representation, statistical techniques like the chi square test of association can be applied. Explained plainly, this test uses cross-tabulated data to see if any concentrations or omissions of groups are outside of the realm of mere chance. These tests of association can answer Diversity and Inclusion questions such as, “do non-racialized respondents have a statistically significant larger representation in Equity Partner roles?” or “do racialized respondents disagree at a statistically significant higher rate with an inclusion question asking if they feel there is equal opportunity to advance?”

Measuring outcomes based on overlapping demographic characteristics.

Up to now we have only suggested ways to analyze representation of one demographic at a time, which is a necessary start to measuring trends in any data set. However, to look only at single demographics is a disservice to the reality that experiences and outcomes vary based on overlapping demographic characteristics. This gap in The Working Group's recommendations was noted by St. Lewis, and she encouraged collecting data on all equality-seeking groups.

We support her in this recommendation - data needs to be collected and analyzed using an intersectional lens. We add to her recommendation methodologies that support an investigation of how multiple identities create unique experiences of discrimination.

Introduce a third demographic to analysis.

We previously mentioned a two-way cross-tabulation and tests of association between variables. If you are taking an intersectional approach, another demographic can be added to the data table to further segment the results to a more diverse subgroup: when race is added as the third variable, a data comparison of female versus male becomes a comparison of racialized female versus non-racialized female and racialized male versus non-racialized male. This analysis can be applied to representation as well as opinion data, as it can be performed on both demographic and inclusion results.

		Senior Level
		Yes	No
Female	Racialized	2 8.70%	21 91.30%
	Non-Racialized	23 40.35%	34 59.65%
Male	Racialized	65 66.33%	33 33.67%

A possible application with representation data would be an analysis of the interaction of race and gender on the likelihood of being at the senior level of a firm (Error! Reference source not found.). To do this, we test the association between race and seniority for females, and then males. A potential result would be that there is an association for females but not for males, meaning that the impact of race on career advancement is evident only for females.

The same process can be applied to perception-based data by substituting the senior level variable with agreement versus disagreement to an inclusion survey question. As an example, we will again use the inclusion survey question about equal opportunity to advance in the firm. If you found an association between race and agreement in equal opportunity to advance, you can add the third variable gender to see if the association holds for males and females. The results could show that racialized males showed significantly lower agreement than non-racialized males, suggesting a unique racialized experience for males in their perception of discrimination.

Compare odds of a specific outcome between subgroups.

Odds can be used to understand whether or not there is an association between two personal demographics (race and gender, Indigenous and disability status, sexual orientation and gender) and the likelihood of an outcome. Another method of exploring intersectionality would be comparing the odds

	Senior Level		Odds of being Senior Level
	Yes	No
Non-Racialized Male	92 66.19%	47 33.81%	2:1
Racialized Male	65 66.33%	33 33.67%	2:1
Non-Racialized Female	23 40.35%	34 59.65%	2:3

of a specific firm-based outcome like being senior level between groups. Once you filter the data to subgroups you could then calculate each of their odds of being senior level versus non-senior level and compare across these subgroups. The potential with this would be ranking the odds from highest to lowest to see a how these demographic combinations are positioned within the hierarchy of the firm.

We appreciate the opportunity to respond to this consultation and hope that this information is valuable. Should you have any questions regarding our submission, please do not hesitate to contact us.

TO: The Law Society of Upper Canada Convocation
FROM: The Canadian Hispanic Bar Association
DATE: November 14, 2016
RE: Submissions on the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Final Report

BACKGROUND

1. The Canadian Hispanic Bar Association (the "CHBA") is a national, non-profit organization representing Hispanic/Latin American lawyers, law students, Articling/LPP students and NCA students.
2. The CHBA was founded in 2005 and was formerly known as the Hispanic Ontario Lawyers Association (HOLA). The CHBA has member representatives in the Roundtable of Diversity Associations (RODA), the Equity Advisory Group (EAG), JusticeNet Ontario and the US National Hispanic Bar Association.
3. The CHBA works to promote diversity within the profession, to increase the number of Hispanic lawyers across Canada and to provide support to its members.
4. In March of 2015, the CHBA responded to the Working Group on the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees interim report by providing submissions to this group as well as participating in the submissions of the Equity Advisory Group.
5. Presently, the CHBA has also participated in EAG's Working Group on the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees in addition to providing its own submissions.

The Law Society Should Vote on the Recommendations as an Omnibus Motion

6. The CHBA submits that all thirteen (13) recommendations contained in the final report should be adopted in their entirety. The CHBA believes that the efficacy of the recommendations will increase if they are implemented together. As such, we do not support the motion to vote on the recommendations on an individual basis. We strongly urge Convocation to accept the recommendations as an omnibus package.
6. The CHBA submits that the recommendations contained in the final report are minimum requirements to create a regulatory framework and culture that is responsive to the varied and systemic needs of racialized licensees.
6. The CHBA also submits that the recommendations represent proposals that are fundamental and basic in nature, and that if needed, can be further expanded or refined in the future, after their implementation has been approved.

Comments on the Recommendations

9. The CHBA adopts and endorses the submissions of the EAG regarding the recommendations contained in the final report.
9. The CHBA agrees that anti-discrimination matters should be aligned with each licensee's professional obligations. It also agrees with the various manners outlined to measure progress, and believes that the collection of data will be a key driver to addressing issues of systemic discrimination while promoting inclusion.
9. For clarity, the CHBA is supportive of the recommended CPD requirement of three (3) hours every two (2) or three (3) years. The CHBA believes that such a requirement is not onerous, and will have a net benefit on the profession.

9. The CHBA strongly supports the further development of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program, as well as the development of alternative streams in which to address complaints.

9. The CHBA recognizes the Law Society as a strong driver in the organizational behaviour and culture of licensees and prospective licensees. As such, it agrees with the proposed changes to the Law Society's own processes and appreciates the Law Society's leadership in this respect.

Implementation Considerations

14. The CHBA strongly supports the motion brought forth by Bencher Joanne St. Lewis and Barbara Murchie to extend, as appropriate, the resulting policies, procedures, measures and initiatives to all equity-seeking groups. In this respect, we further submit that the Law Society should consider all motions from an equity-sensitive perspective as applicable.

15. The CHBA also submits that the Law Society should consult and work with various stakeholders, including the CHBA and other equity seeking legal associations on the implementation of the recommendations.

16. We thank the Working Group for the opportunity to make these submissions and we look forward to working with the Law Society to address the issues raised within the report.

Sincerely,

The CHBA Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group:

Attention: Ekua Quansah, Policy Secretariat

Dear Ms. Quansah,

Re: CCLA comments on the proposed LSUC Motion to approve Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group – Final Report

On behalf of the County of Carleton Law Association (CCLA), the CCLA Diversity Committee thanks you for this opportunity to contribute to the discussion on the Final Report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group, Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions (“the Report”).

The CCLA is Ottawa and Eastern Ontario’s leading association for the professional legal community. It has over 1,598 licensed members from all range of legal practice areas, including paralegals. Close to half of our members practice in firms of 9 licensees or less. While we acknowledge that our legal population is less racialized than the GTA, the racialized licensees in our region often face the same identified challenges but in a more isolated context.<sup>1</sup>

The CCLA Diversity Committee was created to assist the Membership Committee in identifying and determining the overall approach / philosophy that the CCLA should adopt to ensure it is inclusive of the entire legal community that the CCLA serves. Its purpose is to foster a culture of diversity and inclusion in the CCLA by enabling the values and principles of equality and equity in its organizational structure, policies, programs, and services.

We commend the Working Group on the work that has been completed to date. The Report makes thirteen recommendations that, in general, we support. However, the Report is noticeably silent on three key issues and two particular recommendations require a different approach. Before this is brought before Convocation for approval, these topics must be addressed.

We provide comments on the following five areas:

1. Racialized sole practitioners and small firms;
2. Economic vulnerability of racialized licensees;
3. Education and training;
4. Using the DHC as a way to address systemic racism; and
5. Monitoring and accountability.

Several of our suggestions should be accommodated at this time and could be undertaken with reasonable effort; other suggestions are intended to guide the LSUC on its next steps in taking action on the issues of systemic racism and bias within the profession.

COMMENTARY

1. Silence surrounding racialized sole practitioners and small firms

In short, the Report does not comment on this group. Many racialized licensees find themselves practicing in small firms or as sole practitioners; this is largely as a result of their lack of ties within the legal community and systemic racism. The Report addresses remedies for firms with over 25 licensees, but fails to address the sole practitioner and small firms who are already a marginalized group.

According to the LSUC's Statistical Snapshot of Lawyers in Ontario from the Lawyer Annual Report (2014)<sup>2</sup>:

- 24% of racialized lawyers practice as sole practitioners;
- 14% of racialized lawyers are in house counsel; and
- 14% of racialized lawyers are in government.

We further note that 33% of racialized lawyers work in firms of fewer than 5 people; 16% of racialized lawyers are in firms of 5-9 people.<sup>3</sup> Given that 49% of racialized lawyers work in practices of less than 9 people, this group has to be acknowledged in the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees. The Law Society of Upper Canada has this data readily available, therefore, it should be relied upon for the purposes of this Report. The Report fails to address the racism this particular group encounters and ways in which to eliminate the challenges faced by this racialized group.

If the report is approved as it is, we will be essentially failing to address almost half of the racialized lawyers who are encountering various forms of racism within their immediate work environments, the professional organizations they may or may not be a part of, and, within the legal community at large.

2. Economic vulnerability of racialized licensees

The Report does not address the issue of economic barriers for racialized licensees and licensees representing other equity-seeking groups. These begin as economic barriers to the profession and continue on through the licensee's career.

Racialized, first-generation law students, with little or no connections to the profession, often have limited familial financial support to help pay for their legal education. They may already be carrying significant student debt coming into law school. These students rely on government student loans and professional student lines of credit to finance their professional degree. This means that economically-disadvantaged students are graduating with extraordinary debt loads.

This economic stratification is amplified in the licensing process and an ultra-competitive articling system, in which law students vie for a limited number of well-paying articling positions. In order to become licenced, economically-disadvantaged law students may have to choose a low-paying or unpaid articling position with a sole practitioner or small firm or to enroll in the LPP. These low-paid / unpaid articling students and LPP students continue to accumulate debt during the licensing process. Further, licensing fees are the same for all licensing candidates, regardless of articling employer and articling remuneration, or unpaid experiential training through the LPP. These fees become disproportionately onerous when low-paid / unpaid articling students have to pay their licensing fees themselves, while large firms pay for their articling students' licensing fees as standard practice.

These economic barriers continue on after licensing. Whereas articling students at large firms have the opportunity to be hired back, those who articulated with sole practitioners or came through the LPP are more likely to become sole practitioners themselves or stay on at the small firm where they articulated.<sup>4</sup> These new practitioners may continue to rely on bank loans and lines of credit to finance the significant costs of opening a sole practice or contributing to the small practice. As sole practitioners, they must bear alone the regular costs of the profession, including law society fees and insurance premiums, law association membership fees, CPD courses and conference fees, etc.

These licensees juggle: the financial burdens of a sole practice, while attempting to build a client base and business; finding a way to support themselves, while paying off their student debt within a reasonable time; and making the pronounced effort to network and seek out mentorship in order to ameliorate the isolation of sole practice. These factors impede their progression in the profession, and hinder their ability to obtain leadership roles within the legal community or to devote time to volunteer positions or appointments on committees.

The Report must recognize that economic barriers disproportionately affect racialized licensees and that this may represent one of the most significant challenges facing racialized licensees.

3. Education and training

We believe that mandatory education and training are foundational to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees. However, the Report is not clear about what CPD programs would meet the criteria for accreditation and does not explain why three hours every three years is an appropriate benchmark. Developing an understanding of diversity does not flow from an intense one-off kind of event; it comes from an internalization of the issues and challenges by way of regular, ongoing and progressive dialogue that is relevant to our day-to-day ways of thinking and acting. The Report needs to require annual CPD/training as well as other means to demonstrate competence and currency in this area. Perhaps this could be part of a no charge professionalism credit.

4. Problematic use of the DHC as a way to address systemic racism

While a review of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (“DHCP”) is laudable, the LSUC should avoid tampering with the complete confidentiality and privacy that complainants currently enjoy. The small numbers of racialized licensees in particular locations make it difficult to remain anonymous should a complaint be acted upon or become public. If the sharing of a discriminatory experience automatically led to a formal investigation or complaint (and how would a particular licensee know they would be hitting a “threshold”), then this would undermine the confidence and trust that has been the key to the DHCP’s current ability to support racialized licensees.

5. Monitoring and Accountability

The Report should address monitoring and accountability. As we have seen from the limited progress made on similar past recommendations on this topic<sup>5</sup>, if there is no ongoing monitoring and reporting on progress, then action is simply not taken. With the evidence before us, we know that the identified challenges are longstanding, ongoing and increasing. There needs to be accountability processes built into the Recommendations right from the start.

One way that this could be done is through having the LSUC produce an annual report card on what progress has been made on each of the Recommendations. This report card should be reviewed by a committee of benchers but also include other stakeholders.

INTERSECTIONAL ISSUES

Amongst other issues that require further attention, we note that at page 4 of the Report, the Engagement Process Results identified the issue of additional intersecting experiences of discrimination, however the Report does not address this topic. The next phase should encompass an in-depth analysis and clear recommendations on intersectional issues.

CONCLUSION

Although this Report has been long anticipated and many in the profession are ready to act, it behooves us to step forward with the best foot we can. We are not advocating a complete rewrite of the Report, but believe that the Report should and could be modified within a reasonable timeframe.

On behalf of the CCLA, we urge you to consider expanding the scope, making some modifications and, ultimately, capitalizing on the impact of the Recommendations.

Dear Members of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group:

Re: Submission by the Federation of Asian Canadian Lawyers on *Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions

The Federation of Asian Canadian Lawyers (“FACL”) is pleased to comment on the recommendations outlined in the Law Society of Upper Canada’s (“Law Society”) Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees’ (“CFRL”) Working Group Final Report – Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions (“Final Report”).

As you are aware, FACL is a diverse coalition of Asian Canadian legal professionals working to promote equity, justice, and opportunity for Asian Canadian legal professionals and the wider community, and to foster advocacy, community involvement, legal scholarship, and professional development. FACL is a key stakeholder in this initiative and has long supported and contributed to the crucial work of this group. FACL applauds the efforts of the CFRL Working Group, the Final Report, and its recommendations.

FACL is of the view that the recommendations represent a critical step in the right direction towards addressing the challenges faced by racialized licensees. As such,

FACL urges the immediate adoption of these recommendations as an omnibus package by Convocation on December 2, 2016. The time to act is now.

FACL supports the Final Report's recommendations individually and categorically. A change in culture and attitudes in our profession is overdue and the recommended educational, policy, and regulatory measures will assist in accelerating this culture shift. FACL looks forward to working with the Law Society and other stakeholders in developing appropriate policies, practices, and resources aimed at addressing the many gaps and barriers encountered by racialized licensees.

FACL especially supports the regulated collection, analysis, and publication of demographic data as a means of measuring progress. This will enhance transparency and accountability in the legal profession's efforts to improve access to and public confidence in Ontario's legal profession, which is a necessary part of ensuring that all licensees have an equal chance of success in this profession.

FACL is encouraged by the consideration of progressive compliance measures but standards are only meaningful if they are enforceable and only effective if they are enforced. There must be real consequences for non-compliance and FACL looks forward to seeing the form and substance of such compliance measures as they evolve from this process.

FACL is pleased that the Law Society is taking a leadership role by internally promoting diversity, inclusion, and equality. FACL also strongly supports the recommendation to strengthen and better equip the Law Society's Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program to address complaints of systemic discrimination.

As FACL has previously commented, the challenges faced by women, Indigenous, LGBTQ, and disabled licensees intersect with those faced by racialized lawyers and paralegals. These issues should not be compartmentalized or separated. Thus, FACL is hopeful that the implementation process of the recommendations will situate race in an appropriate context and not in isolation from the intersecting challenges faced by all equity-seeking groups.

Accordingly, FACL supports the motion by Bencher Murchie to ensure that the recommendations herein are appropriately extended to all equality-seeking group and urges Convocation to pass this motion.

Historically, the voices of racialized communities in Ontario have been appropriated by having others speak for us. To maintain legitimacy, racialized licensees need a voice in the implementation of these recommendations. FACL believes that the dialogue initiated by this process must be continued by having all stakeholders meaningfully and regularly engaged throughout the process of implementing the recommendations.

Thank you for considering our comments. Should you have any questions about this matter, we would be happy to discuss this with you further.

Sincerely,

“The Voice of the Practising Lawyer in Ontario”

Dear Working Group Members,

The Federation of Ontario Law Associations (“FOLA”) commends the Law Society of Upper Canada in attempting to develop a concrete framework to recognize and address the challenges that are faced by racialized licensees throughout Ontario. The pragmatic approach and timeline suggested within the report illustrate an understanding by the Working Group of the time necessary to effect meaningful change moving forward.

FOLA notes, however, that while the Working Group’s mandate (established in 2012) focused only on racialized licensees, this restricted mandate, in and of itself, creates unnecessary barriers and limitations. Since 2012, a greater societal understanding of other disadvantaged groups including gender identity, gender expression, disability, sexual orientation, class and creed creates a need to ensure that these other groups are not left behind as we move forward with the Working Group’s recommendations. This proposed expansion would acknowledge the broad range of human rights issues which exist while not precluding the possibility of variations or focussed initiatives for certain groups where appropriate. It would also take into account the intersectionality issues associated with discrimination. FOLA therefore would propose that, as any recommendations move forward through development and implementation, the mandate of the Working Group expand beyond racialized licensees to include all areas of potential discrimination.

The expansion of mandate set out above would only require a slight adjustment to the three objectives stated by the Working Group. The objectives would become:

- a) Inclusive legal workplaces in Ontario
- b) Reduction of barriers created by unconscious bias and discrimination; and
- c) Better representation of all minority groups in proportion to the representation in the Ontario population, in the professions, in all legal workplaces and at all levels of seniority..

The public needs to trust the legal profession. A profession that does not reflect the diversity of the public creates both real and perceived barriers and there is no reason to break down these barriers one group at a time.

FOLA is also very mindful of the parallel mandates of the Law Society to promote access to justice and to protect the public interest. In that context, FOLA is very aware of the economic costs to the practice of law in Ontario and of the struggle that some practising lawyers – particularly those in marginalized communities – engage in every day to remain economically viable. Whether they are marginalized by geography or the economic situation of the clients they choose to represent, there are many lawyers in Ontario for whom it is a daily struggle to maintain an economically viable legal business.

Since FOLA’s mandate is primarily as an advocate for the interests of the practising lawyer – the majority of whom are in sole and small practice in Ontario – a good deal of our commentary is coming from this perspective. These comments are not, however, only concerned with the "cost" of implementing these recommendations. They are also mindful of the fact that many of the racialized or otherwise marginalized licensees entering the practice are working in solo or small practice and, in turn, serve minority populations that can often be economically disadvantaged in communities across Ontario. These economic pressures are, in our view, some of the greatest barriers to full equity. A key component to realizing the goal of equity in our profession is to make the practice of law and access to law more affordable to more people.

With that in mind, we contend that one of the most important ways the Law Society of Upper Canada can promote equity and access is to be ever mindful of the costs it imposes or has an influence on. Every regulatory mandate and licensing procedure has a cost and this cost should be kept as low as possible. CPD programming must be kept affordable and the operations of the Law Society, in general, must be constantly evaluated with a view to keeping costs down. Likewise, the Law Society should join others in the profession to maintain or increase pressure on law schools across the country to make law school more affordable and access to financial assistance less burdensome on practitioners in their early years of practice..

FOLA's position on the Recommendations made by the Working Group

FOLA agrees with Recommendations 1, 3, 8, 10, 12 and 13 without the need for further comment.

Recommendation 2 and 11

FOLA would appreciate the opportunity to work with the Law Society to develop policies to address the challenges licensees face through bias and discrimination. Our Executive Board has taken note that within the leadership of our member law associations, there is an apparent underrepresentation of lawyers who come from minority populations. While we cannot dictate the complement of our members' leadership structure, FOLA is committed to assisting the Law Society in effecting change at the ground level with the hope that this will create future change in the leadership of the profession. To that end, our Executive Board is more mindful of the need to recruit from minority populations to stand for Executive Board positions and we have implemented the practice of having at least one speaker from an equity-seeking bar association join our bi-annual Plenary meetings. These are small steps to be sure, but we think they are important and we are encouraging more of our members to do the same.

We also view the local associations and their Practice Resource Centres as a terrific conduit for the development of policies, the dissemination of information and the promotion of equity. A very large, but often overlooked, part of the mandate of our local associations is the promotion of collegiality and mentorship among the profession. This collegiality and relationship building cannot be underestimated in its ability to break down barriers and promote cross-cultural understanding. The primary user of the courthouse library is often a sole or small firm practitioner – the most likely current firm structure of minority licensees. Law Associations and the Practice Resource Centre staff are in the unique position of knowing these licensees, knowing potential mentors and providing a forum for mentorship, networking and collaboration. Further, the Law Association lounges in county courthouses across Ontario are places where all licensees should feel welcome and should find a colleague who is willing to help, consult or simply "shoot the breeze" fostering ongoing relationships. Likewise, it is critical that our local associations reach out to racialized and other minority populations for candid internal conversations to implement policies that removes all possible barriers. As such, in considering resources available to address the challenges faced by these licensees, FOLA considers our courthouse Practice Resource Centres (known in the past as libraries) to be a key component to this effort. In fact, we would argue that further investments in Practice Resource Centres will further assist racialized and other minority licensees to build sustainable legal practices.

Recommendation 4, 5, 6, and 7

It is FOLA's belief that in providing these recommendations, the Working Group has acknowledged the need for evidence based decision making. We believe this is a key precondition to any analysis by the Law Society when considering imposing further regulation on the profession.

Recommendation 9

FOLA does not disagree with the suggestion that there is value in CPD programs on equality and inclusion. We would however caution that any requirement for specific CPD courses recognize limitations for practitioners in the North or other parts of rural Ontario who cannot always access streamed CPD. In this regard, and to reiterate the point made above, the Practice Resource Centre network across Ontario can be an important, and inexpensive, conduit for the dissemination of this information and training. We suggest that these materials be made available through the Practice Resource Centres, and that the program be available for distribution in other formats for those practicing in remote locations.

Thank you for the opportunity to provide these submissions. We look forward to further dialogue and to standing with the Law Society and all of our colleagues across the legal profession in moving toward a goal of equity and inclusion.

FROM: Members of the Indigenous Advisory Group

DATE: November 17, 2016

RE: Submission by the Indigenous Advisory Group in response to Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions

The Indigenous Advisory Group was provided with a copy of the Final Report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group delivered to the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee. While Indigenous lawyers and paralegals were not included in the consultant or community engagement processes, we understand the findings of widespread barriers experienced by racialized licensees within the profession at all stages of their careers. The report provided, in summary form, some examples of the experiences faced in the legal profession including discrimination, negotiating concepts of "culture" and "fit", lack of mentors, networks and role models; we believe many of these same experiences are shared by Indigenous lawyers and paralegals.

As the report so aptly states, "the Law Society of Upper Canada has a duty to maintain and advance the cause of justice and the rule of law, to facilitate access to justice for the people of Ontario and to protect the public interest. The Law Society is committed to adhering to its obligations under the Human Rights Code".

All licensees should be committed to eliminating harassment and discrimination in the profession; however, the current experiences relayed by respondents during this consultation may run at odds to the very standard we are held to protect.

The Indigenous Advisory Group supports the implementation of the Report's recommendations by the Law Society staff as overseen by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee and is prepared to assist wherever necessary. To this end, we will be working with EAIC to articulate how the 7 Sacred Teachings of wisdom; love; respect; bravery; honesty; humility and truth must be practiced together to restore balance.

In our view, these teachings provide a framework through which all actions of the Law Society must be viewed and applied.

Respectfully,

Kathleen Lickers on behalf of
The Indigenous Advisory Group

Re: Response to the Working Group Final Report, *Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions

---

The Indigenous Bar Associations (IBA) would like to take this opportunity to thank the Law Society of Upper Canada's Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee for their initiative and dedication in completing this essential Final Report. The IBA appreciates the time expended by the Committee in addition to their comments and suggestions to continue to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees. In support of the Working Group Final Report the IBA provides the following comments.

Recommendation 1 – Reinforcing Professional Obligations

The IBA supports the recommendation of the Law Society to amend the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, and Commentaries to reinforce the professional obligations of all licensees to recognize, acknowledge and promote principles of equality, diversity and inclusion consistent with the requirements under human rights legislation and the special responsibilities of licensees in the legal and paralegal professions.

Due to the history and intergenerational impacts of colonialism, legislated assimilationist policies and Indian Residential Schools, Indigenous licensees face many complicated challenges due to the historic disadvantages that tend to be perpetuated by the status quo inherent in the legal system. In addressing these challenges LSUC is encouraged to employ an approach that addresses both the unique and collective challenges as well as the individual challenges facing Indigenous licensees. The IBA requests that the Law Society make specific mention of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Final Report and the requirement to address “reconciliation” between Indigenous and non-Indigenous Peoples.

Recommendations 4 to 7 (Collection of Data and Qualitative, Quantitative Analysis)

The collection of demographic data to identify racialized licensees is essential to addressing the issue of systemic discrimination. It is difficult to address the issue without the data to support the numbers and analytical trends. The IBA requests that this essential data be posted as it becomes available.

Recommendation 9 – Continuing Professional Development (CPD) Programs on Topics of Equality and Inclusion in the Professions

The IBA recommends that in developing continuing professional development programs on Equality and Inclusion special consideration be given to the unique challenges faced by Indigenous licensees, including remote access, and financial considerations for mandatory fees and materials.

Recommendation 10 – The Licensing Process

Please see the above noted comments with respect to Recommendation 1 – Reinforcing Professional Obligations in considering to include the topics of cultural competency, equality and inclusion in the profession as competencies as part of the Licensing Process.

Recommendation 11 – Building Communities of Support

The Law Society recommendation to provide support to racialized licensees through mentoring and networking initiatives was highlighted by the IBA as a key priority in its consultation submissions. It is important for the success of Indigenous licensees to connect and associate with other Indigenous law students and licensees. To the extent that its resources permit the IBA encourages the Law Society to seek its assistance in providing opportunities for Indigenous licensees to network with Indigenous law students, licensees, academics and judges and other members of the IBA.

The IBA also requests the Law Society undertake efforts towards monitoring the success of all mentoring and networking initiatives for racialized licensees and identify any improvements.

EQUITY INITIATIVES DEPARTMENT

TO: Members of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group

FROM: Members of the Equity Advisory Group Working Group

DATE: November 14, 2016

RE: Submission by the Equity Advisory Group Working Group in response to Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions

---

Members of the Equity Advisory Group (“EAG”) Working Group have carefully considered the thirteen recommendations presented in the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group Final Report (“final report”), Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions. The following document offers general comments on the final report as well as comments specific to some recommendations.

Background

1. EAG represents the diverse interests of lawyers and paralegals who identify as a member of one or more equity-seeking groups. EAG, through its organizational and individual members, is actively involved in the advancement of equity and inclusion within the legal professions with respect to gender, sexual orientation, gender identity, language, ability, religion, and most relevant to these submissions, race.

2. EAG's mandate includes commenting on Law Society reports and studies relating to equity issues and access to justice within the profession. EAG is of the view that the Report dated September 22 ought to be considered from an equity and diversity lens, access to justice, and the Law Society's mandate to protect the public interest.
3. EAG supports an approach that advances access to justice and protection of the public interest for equity seeking clients, while ensuring the regulatory balance struck does not disproportionately impact licensees from equity seeking groups, where it is unnecessary to protect the public interest.
4. The commitment of the EAG Working Group to the Challenged Faced by Racialized Licensees report has spanned two terms of Law Society Benchers as well as EAG members. The Working Group is currently comprised of the following individual and organizational members:
  - a. Tahlee Afzal, individual member;
  - b. Ranjan Agarwal, on behalf of the South Asian Bar Association;
  - c. Sharan Basran, individual member;
  - d. Maureen Bennett Henry, on behalf of the Canadian Association of Black Lawyers;
  - e. Gerald Chan, on behalf of the Federation of Asian Canadian Lawyers;
  - f. Gordon Cudjoe, on behalf of the Canadian Association of Black Lawyers;
  - g. Imtenan El-Razik, on behalf of the Canadian Association of Muslim Women in Law;
  - h. Lai-King Hum, on behalf of the Roundtable of Diversity Associations;
  - i. Leonard Kim, individual member;

- j. Ayesha Laldin, on behalf of the Women's Law Association of Ontario;
  - k. Sandra Lozano, on behalf of the Canadian Hispanic Bar Association;
  - l. Jennifer Quito, on behalf of the Canadian Hispanic Bar Association;
  - m. Paul Saguil, individual member;
  - n. Jason Tam, individual member; and
  - o. Joyce Tam, on behalf of the Federation of Asian Canadian Lawyers.
5. The EAG Working Group agreed to provide written submissions to the CFRL Working Group in response to the final report. The EAG Working Group provides submissions that focus on what the Law Society of Upper Canada proposes to do to remove barriers faced by racialized licensees in the legal profession.
6. The EAG Working Group submits its written feedback to the CFRL Working Group for its consideration, in preparation for the decision before Convocation on December 2, 2016.

Unequivocal Consensus among all EAG Working Group Members

7. There is unequivocal consensus among all EAG Working Group members that the thirteen recommendations should be approved in their entirety. The EAG Working Group urges the Law Society to vote on and approve the thirteen recommendations in the final report as an omnibus package at Convocation. The EAG Working Group is not supportive of the motion brought forward by Benchers Sidney Troister and Jeffrey Lem to vote on each recommendation on an individual basis. The challenges faced by racialized licensees must be addressed in a multi-faceted way that will be best achieved through the approval of all thirteen recommendations as an omnibus package.

8. The EAG Working Group is unanimous in its recommendation that the Executive Summary in the final report should include a reference to section 15(1) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.<sup>1</sup> An example of the included reference is below:

“The Working Group has concluded that prescribing minimum standards of equality, diversity and inclusion are consistent with the human rights responsibilities of the profession — obligations constitutionally enshrined in the *Charter of Canadian Rights and Freedoms, and already required by the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct and, more generally, the Human Rights Code.”

“In fulfilling its mandate, the Law Society integrates equality and diversity values and principles into all of its policies, practices and programs while upholding the spirit and letter of the law of equality rights outlined in the *Charter.”

Approving all Recommendations is a Necessary First Step

9. There is consensus among all EAG Working Group members that the approval of all recommendations is a basic, minimum first step that is required to begin to address and improve accessibility to and advancement within the legal professions for racialized licensees.
10. These thirteen recommendations work together to address the systemic issues faced by racialized licensees. Their interplay and resultant effects lay the foundation for initiatives that can begin to ameliorate systemic issues of race within the profession. Voting on each recommendation, one by one, will diminish their full impact and restrict how they can and must work together to create practical change.

11. The approval of all thirteen recommendations is urgent. This is not only fundamental to creating a more inclusive profession, but it is an action that is long overdue.
12. Considering the range of stakeholders that are represented by and actively involved in EAG, the EAG Working Group's inclusion in the future implementation of these recommendations is important and necessary, if the final report is approved at Convocation on December 2, 2016. The EAG Working Group is supportive of the motion brought forward by Benchers Barbara Murchie and Joanne St. Lewis to extend, as appropriate, the resulting policies, procedures, measures and initiatives to all equity-seeking groups, with the caveat that the Law Society must consider whether further consultation is required for the application in a manner that is responsive to the specific needs of a particular community.

Recommendation-Specific Comments by Theme

Accelerating Culture Shift: Recommendations 1 to 3

13. Although these recommendations are basic requirements, the EAG Working Group believes there is a need to identify these issues to address equality and anti-discrimination in alignment with each licensee's duty to fulfill their professional obligations. Aligning these principles with one's professional responsibilities requires each licensee to develop a sensitivity and an awareness of these issues. Each licensee will then have the capacity and responsibility to act according to these basic principles.
14. These are a minimum requirement that are important and necessary to deal with issues in a proactive manner.

Measuring Progress: Recommendations 4 to 8

15. EAG Working Group members suggest that the active gathering of this data will highlight to the profession that issues of diversity and inclusion remain a top priority for the Law Society.
16. EAG Working Group members identify the need for statistical information regarding the demographic composition of legal workplaces. EAG Working Group members agree that the Law Society mandate demographic data reporting and agree that this information should be publicly available.
17. The members of the EAG Working Group note that the Law Society already collects demographic information from licensees through the Lawyer Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report. The Law Society also has information regarding where licensees are employed. The Law Society could produce this information if legal workplaces are not willing to do so.
18. EAG Working Group members believe that legal workplaces should also track the progression of students and licensees within their workplaces, from the articling student level to the partner/managerial level. Demographic data should also include information that would indicate the number of members of different equity-seeking groups in various positions in legal workplaces – i.e. students, associates, and partners. This may help legal workplaces identify any issues that may exist with retention and may provide some insight as to why there may be a lack of representation of racialized groups. In the same vein, it is suggested that when licensees change their status with the Law Society, the form they are required to fill out should include a question as to why the licensee changed their status. This would assist in tracking retention and progression.

19. The EAG Working Group suggests that the Law Society continue to collect demographic data from licensees through the Lawyers Annual Report (LAR) and the Paralegal Annual Report (PAR). The Law Society should provide a clear explanation as to why licensees are being asked to provide demographic data and how the collected data will be used.
20. The Law Society could publicly report aggregate demographic data based on legal workplace size and region. The Law Society could then provide legal workplaces with their own demographic data and the Law Society could require legal workplaces to comment on their diversity statistics in light of the standards and resources they have adopted.

Educating for Change: Recommendations 9 to 10

21. The EAG Working Group agrees that cultural competency, equality and inclusion as competencies are basic job traits in today's legal profession. These are required qualities and measurement of professionalism for new lawyers that hope to effectively serve a diverse population in Ontario.
22. The EAG Working Group supports the CPD requirement of three hours every 2-3 years. This recommendation amounts to a net amount of 1 hour of CPD programs per year.

Implementing Supports: Recommendations 11 to 12

23. The EAG Working Group suggests that, despite much success, there is much work to do to develop the complaints process. The re-assessment of the function, processes and structure of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC) would be prudent considering the dynamic nature of this ongoing challenge in the legal profession. Furthermore, amending where necessary, the Rules of Professional Conduct and Paralegal Rules of Conduct is an important part of the review process in order to enable the Law Society to have the necessary tools to follow through.

24. Creative ways to address complaints and the formation of specialized teams to address complaints of discrimination (and systemic discrimination) may promote a mature and measured response to situations of discrimination or harassment that have the potential to be effectively addressed.

The Operations of the Law Society of Upper Canada: Recommendation 13

25. The EAG Working Group suggests that, by following through with this recommendation, the Law Society will add credibility to the process and to the profession. The Law Society will be in a position to gain a firsthand understanding of the advantages and limitations in fulfilling the full recommendations.

Conclusion

26. The EAG Working Group is united and absolute in its support for the approval of all thirteen recommendations in the report, Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions. The approval of these recommendations lay the foundation to initiate vital and long overdue policies and programs that advance the profession in the direction of equity, diversity and inclusion.
27. The EAG Working Group views the approval of these recommendations as a moment that could have a positive and profound impact on other equity-seeking groups. If these thirteen recommendations are approved at Convocation, the EAG Working Group urges the Law Society to extend, as appropriate, the resulting policies, procedures, measures and initiatives to all equity-seeking groups, with the caveat that the Law Society must consider whether further consultation is required for the application in a manner that appropriately addresses the specific needs of a particular community.

28. To summarize, EAG's unanimous position is outlined in the three following points:
- (i) The thirteen recommendations outlined in the final report should be voted on and approved as an omnibus package at Convocation on December 2, 2016;
  - (ii) The EAG Working Group is not supportive of the motion brought forward by Benchers Sidney Troister and Jeffrey Lem to vote on each recommendation on an individual basis; and,
  - (iii) The EAG Working Group is supportive of the motion brought forward by Benchers Barbara Murchie and Joanne St. Lewis to extend, as appropriate, the resulting policies, procedures, measures and initiatives to all equity-seeking groups, provided that the Law Society must consider whether further consultation is required to make these extensions in a manner that is responsive to the specific needs of equity-seeking communities on a case-by-case basis.

Re: Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions

Legal Aid Ontario congratulates the Law Society and the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee on its report "Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions". We support the goals of the report and the general framework established to support greater diversity and inclusion of racialized licensees within the legal profession. We would welcome an opportunity to meet with the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee and staff of the Law Society to discuss the report. As one of the largest employer of licensees, many of whom we are proud to say are from racialized communities, we would also like to extend an offer to work with the Law Society and the Committee to consider how Legal Aid Ontario can effectively implement the actions recommended in the report.

We wish you success on the consideration of the report by Convocation on December 2nd and look forward to hearing from you.

Yours truly,

David Field

Legal Leaders for Diversity and Inclusion (LLD) is an organization of General Counsel from across Canada which supports a more inclusive legal profession in Canada. In just over 5 years, our organization has grown to over 100 General Counsel from across Canada and across many business sectors. Thank you for providing us with the opportunity to respond to the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group Final Report titled “Working together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Profession” (“Final Report”).

We want to express our support for measures which create a more inclusive legal profession. Though it is difficult to comment on the right approach to be taken for law firms, we thought it might be helpful to the Law Society of Upper Canada to have the benefit of our insights on what LLD members are doing with respect to this issue in order to remove barriers faced by racialized lawyers in Ontario.

We believe that true and effective change within the legal profession will only come about through collaboration and cooperation. The LLD has created and supported a number of inclusive initiatives. Many of these are aligned with the recommendations found in the Final Report. These initiatives include:

- Building a relationship with LFDIN: One of LLD’s early successes was a collective ask to our external counsel community that they consider how the external bar could promote and support diversity and inclusiveness initiatives. The law firms answered with the Law Firm Diversity and Inclusiveness Network (“LFDIN”), which currently has 35 law firm members that have agreed to work together to promote diversity and encourage a culture of inclusion within their firms and within the broader legal profession.
- Mentorship Programs: LLD and the LFDIN established a formal Mentoring Program to match LFDIN member firm associate lawyers, who self-identify as being from groups that have been traditionally under-represented in the legal profession, with lawyers from LLD member organizations who have 10 or more years’ experience. At its core, is our belief that mentoring can help create an ‘equal playing field’ for lawyers who are from diverse backgrounds.
- Legal Programs: LLD members are also involved in programs such as Law in Action within Schools (LAWS) (sponsored by the University of Toronto Law School), the Internationally Trained Lawyers Program (ITLP) for foreign qualified lawyers, and other diversity focused organizations. All of these organizations provide access, exposure and opportunity for students and lawyers of diverse backgrounds. LLD members participate.

- Scholarship Support: LLD (supported by the LFDIN) established the Legal Leaders for Diversity Trust Fund to annually provide scholarships for law students with disabilities who are studying at Canadian law schools. In addition to this, an LLD scholarship was established for an in house lawyer with disabilities to attend the Canadian Corporate Counsel Association/Rotmans In House Counsel certification program.
- Indigenous Peoples, Laws, Reconciliation & Practice introductory CLE program: LLD is the driving force behind the First Nations Initiative which will be a CLE accredited program that will be used not only by General Counsel, but by many others as a core educational tool on Indigenous law.
- Affinity Relationships: The success of LLD also lies in the group's spirit of cooperation and sharing, and the power of collaborating with other organizations and speaking and participating on diversity related issues. By working together in this manner, we can best support each other and grow and learn together.

LLD supports initiatives which develop and advance our common objective of achieving a diverse and inclusive legal profession. The profession is being challenged within Canada and globally and law schools and law societies must take steps to make our profession globally competitive and reflective of the population in our communities. We believe that creating a more diverse legal profession in Canada will play a role in creating that competitive advantage.

We applaud the focus of the Law Society of Upper Canada on this important issue.

A Statement of Support for Diversity and Inclusion by General Counsel in Canada

We commit to promoting a diverse and inclusive workplace. We value the range of perspectives, ideas and experiences that diversity provides, whether grounded in gender, race, the spectrum of sexual orientation and gender identity, disability, cultural background, religion, economic position or age.

We believe diversity and inclusion create a broader, richer environment that enhances creative thinking, innovation and problem solving. Inclusive organizations attract and retain top talent.

We will therefore encourage greater diversity and inclusion in our own law departments, businesses and co-operate to foster these same values throughout the legal profession and the larger Canadian business community.

We undertake to practice and advance diversity and inclusion by:

- Promoting diversity within our own departments;
- Considering diversity in our hiring and purchasing practices;
- Working with Canadian law firms, law schools and others to advance these values;
- Promoting diversity initiatives at all levels in the legal and business community;
- Measuring the effectiveness of our efforts.

We, as advocates for diversity and inclusion, will demonstrate our commitment through specific actions including one or more of the "Be an Advocate" initiatives.

Comments on the Working Together for Change Report: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Profession

Submitted by Metro Toronto Chinese & Southeast Asian Legal Clinic

INTRODUCTION

The Metro Toronto Chinese & Southeast Asian Legal Clinic (MTCSALC) is a community based legal clinic which provides free legal services to low income Chinese, Vietnamese, Cambodian, and Laotian communities in the Greater Toronto Area. Established in 1987, MTCSALC has served thousands of immigrants and racialized members of the aforementioned communities.

The following are our comments and recommendations on the Law Society of Upper Canada's Working Together for Change Report ("Report").

COMMENTS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Addressing Systemic Racism Through a Holistic Approach

We fully endorse all 13 recommendations proposed by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee ("Committee") to achieve the stated objectives of inclusive legal workplaces, reduction of barriers created by racism, and better representation of racialized licensees in all legal workplaces and at all levels of seniority.

We stress the importance of adopting a holistic approach in achieving these overarching objectives. Systemic racism is a complex and multifaceted issue which takes on many forms. There is no singular manifestation of systemic racism in legal workplaces and consequently no single solution. The varied nature of systemic racism necessitates a holistic response. As such, we submit that all 13 recommendations should be adopted together as they complement and reinforce the overall scheme to reduce racial barriers and achieve equity in legal workplaces. From our perspective, the 13 recommendations collectively tackle the issue of systemic racism from different fronts:

- Recommendations 1 (reinforcing professional obligations), 9 (continuing professional development), and 10 (licensing process) engrain and reinforce the principles of equality and inclusion for current and future licensees.
- Recommendations 2 (diversity and inclusion project), 3 (adoption of diversity and inclusion practices), and 11 (building communities of support) create and maintain practices for eliminating barriers to racialized licensees.
- Recommendations 4 and 5 (measuring progress through quantitative and qualitative analysis), 6 (inclusion index), and 7 (racialized licensees project inclusion survey) create a process for gathering data to measure the effectiveness of the recommended substantive practices and publicizing the results.

- Recommendations 8 (progressive compliance measures) and 12 (addressing complaints of systemic discrimination) create and strengthen compliance measures to address non-conformity with the recommendations.
- Recommendation 13 reaffirms the leading role and responsibility that the Law Society of Upper Canada has in implementing the aforementioned recommendations.

We submit that each set of recommendations complement each other and form an intertwined web of diversity and inclusion strategies. The removal of any strand from the web through partial or non-adoption of any of the 13 recommendations would seriously undermine the effectiveness of all recommendations and the viability of the overarching objectives.

Publication of Inclusion Index, Progressive Compliance, and Complaints of Systematic Discrimination

As noted by the Committee, the publication of an inclusion index would allow legal workplaces to demonstrate their performance and progress by providing a transparent measure to prospective clients and licensees. We believe that this transparency is crucial in achieving the goals of the Report and to further encourage and reinforce diversity and inclusion practices within larger legal workplaces.

Compliance measures and investigation of complaints is a core responsibility of regulatory bodies and an integral part of ensuring adherence to prescribed rules and practices. We are supportive of progressive compliance measures and submit that immediate consultation should commence on the structure of specific measures once the Committee's recommendations are adopted.

Furthermore, we are in favor of an individual complaint process through a specialized professional regulation team as it would provide nuanced redress on an individual level from staff members of the Law Society of Upper Canada with expertise in discrimination complaints in the legal workplace context.

CONCLUSION

We ask the Law Society's Board of Directors to fully adopt all 13 recommendations in the Report as a cohesive whole and consider and incorporate these perspectives in the Convocation Decision.

The Law Society of Upper Canada
c/o Ekua Quansah, Policy Counsel
Osgoode Hall, 130 Queen Street West
Toronto, Ontario
M5H 2N6

Dear Ekua Quansah,

The Ministry of the Attorney General (MAG) is pleased with the opportunity to provide comments on the Law Society of Upper Canada (LSUC)'s final report on Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions. The Working Group's final report reflects a comprehensive approach, broad consultation and thoughtful analysis on the experiences of Racialized licensees and on how to identify and remove barriers to their inclusion and equal participation at all career stages. I commend the licensees and organizations who have shared their experiences and the LSUC's Working Group for this important report.

As you may know, the ministry made oral remarks to the Working Group in May 2015, and a written submission in November 2015. We highlighted diversity and inclusion initiatives of the ministry and the Ontario Public Service (OPS) including the policies and procedures in place, the compilation of an Inclusion Index through the OPS' Employee Engagement Survey, and the release of the OPS Anti-Racism Action Plan. In addition, as noted on page 13 of your final report, the OPS has created the Anti-Racism Directorate which will provide guidance to the OPS on addressing racism.

Since that time, the OPS has continued to implement further measures including:

- A review of both the OPS policy and program on workplace discrimination and harassment resulting in a new updated policy, the Respectful Workplace Policy that was effective September 1, 2016
- Collection of diversity data on senior executives through the Leadership Profile Data Collection pilot project
- Collection of data on interns through the Ontario Internship Program Applicant Survey.

In addition to the corporate initiatives identified above, the ministry is continuing to explore a variety of new initiatives including:

- A pilot of a roster of managers and subject matter experts to support diverse hiring panels
- A community outreach event to familiarize legal professionals from under-represented groups with the types of legal positions available in the Ontario Public Service
- A review of barriers in ministry hiring processes and practices.

As a ministry, we continue to focus our efforts on identifying and removing barriers in our workplace and on promoting greater diversity and cultivating an even more inclusive organization.

We recognize that the OPS is only one of a very diverse range of organizations that employ licensees, each of which are at various points on the inclusion continuum. Many of the recommendations in the final report will ensure the LSUC provides essential support to both licensees and organizations through CPD programs, clarifying professional obligations, collecting aggregate demographic data on the profession, and supporting mentoring and networking programs.

As part of our comments, we note the following points for consideration by the LSUC:

- Some recommendations, as drafted, appear to include requirements that may impact on governments and private organizations as employers of licensees (this potential impact is noted in footnote 7 of the report). At present it is difficult to determine whether the LSUC would have jurisdiction to regulate government and in-house legal departments as “legal workplaces” because the specific requirements of the Report’s proposed mandatory human rights policy/diversity policy have not yet been determined. In any event, given the fact that MAG shares the same goals as the LSUC on this matter, we do not find it necessary to express a view on this aspect of the Report.
- There may also be a need to consider the complexity of implementation of specific requirements. For example, all employees of an organization, including licensees, are usually subject to the same employer policies and initiatives.
- Some organizations may already have similar obligations as those proposed in the final report under the Federal Employment Equity Act and the Legislated Employment Equity Program, or under the Federal Contractors Program; programs which promote equitable representation for women, Aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities and members of visible minorities. Other organizations, as noted in the final report, have voluntarily implemented policies, training, and initiatives on diversity, inclusion or anti-racism that would potentially be duplicated by the proposed LSUC requirements.
- Given the diversity of organizations that employ licensees, there may not be a “one size fits all” approach but rather a need for a flexible approach that focuses on progress for each organization.

The Ontario Public Service and the Ministry of the Attorney General are committed to continuing efforts to identify, remove and prevent barriers to Racialized licensees in the Ontario Public Service. As a ministry, we look forward to working with the LSUC and other organizations where licensees work, to identify how we can each do our part to address the lived experience of Racialized licensees in the context of our own workplaces; for the benefit of the legal profession and society at large.

Thank you again for your strong effort and focus on this issue and for the opportunity for our ministry to provide comments.

Yours truly,

Patrick Monahan
Deputy Attorney General

Introduction

The Ontario Bar Association (“OBA”) appreciates the opportunity to comment on issues raised in the Law Society of Upper Canada (“Law Society”) Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group (“Working Group”) Final Report “Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions” (the “Final Report”).

The OBA

Established in 1907, the OBA is the largest voluntary legal association in Ontario and represents 16,000 lawyers, judges, law professors and law students. OBA members are on the frontlines of our justice system in no fewer than 40 different sectors and in every region of the province. In addition to providing legal education for its members, the OBA is pleased to assist government, the Law Society, and other decision-makers with dozens of policy initiatives each year – in the interests of the public, the profession, and the administration of justice.

In preparing this submission, the OBA has sought input from our governing council of members representing a critical cross-section of the bar, including senior and junior lawyers from managing partners to new calls, who practice across Ontario as solicitors and barristers in solo, small, medium and large firms from all eight judicial regions of the province. The submission has also sought input from members of the OBA’s Equality Committee, Young Lawyers Divisions, Women Lawyers Forum, the Sole, Small Firm and General Practice section, the Canadian Corporate Counsel Association – Ontario Chapter, and our new Student Section.

Response to the Final Report

General Comments

The Working Group was formed in 2012 to identify the challenges faced by racialized lawyers and paralegals and consider strategies for enhanced inclusion at all career stages. The Working Group conducted a process to collect information on those challenges, and subsequently released a consultation paper in 2014 to collect feedback from the profession and public on questions intended to engage the profession in a consideration of strategies to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees.<sup>1</sup>

Building on that work, the Final Report concludes that the challenges faced by racialized licensees are both longstanding and significant, that the Law Society must take a leadership role in bringing about a lasting culture change, and that prescribing minimum standards of equality, diversity and inclusion are consistent with human rights responsibilities of the profession that are already in place. The Final Report makes thirteen recommendations under five categories: accelerating culture shift, measuring progress, educating for change, implementing supports, and Law Society operations.

As we stated in our response to the Consultation Paper, the OBA is committed to enhancing and promoting equality and diversity within our association and the legal profession, including assisting the efforts of law firms to promote equity and diversity.<sup>2</sup> As set out in a recent CBA resolution, “ending discrimination in the legal profession benefits the profession by enabling it to represent itself with integrity as an advocate for justice.”<sup>3</sup> We therefore support the Working Group’s “intention to create long lasting systemic change within the professions,” and its recommendation that the Law Society use a combination of voluntary and mandatory measures.<sup>4</sup> The Working Group recognizes that lawyers are already bound by the Rules of Professional Conduct, and all recommendations proposed in the report should be interpreted consistently with those requirements.

Further, we agree that close collaboration between the Law Society, legal workplaces and associations will be “essential to the success of the proposed measures and projects” proposed by the Working Group.<sup>5</sup> As we set out in the OBA Initial Report, the OBA has a history of providing programming, mentoring and diversity initiatives for members, in addition to the tools and resources developed by the Canadian Bar Association (the “CBA”) to support diversity initiatives.<sup>6</sup> We believe that the Law Society should promote and support legal workplaces and associations to develop new, and deliver existing programming, initiatives and materials to support the Working Group’s recommendations.

<sup>6</sup> OBA Initial Report at p. 3-8. The CBA is the OBA’s national organization, which presently represents some 37,000 lawyers, judges, notaries, law teachers, and law students from across Canada. Approximately two-thirds of all practising lawyers in Canada belong to the CBA. See also the “The CBA Equity and Diversity Guide and Resource Manual for Successful Law Firms and Legal Organizations” and the “Measuring Diversity in Law Firms: A Critical Tool for Achieving High Performance”

Before moving on to provide specific comments relating to the five areas covered by the Final Report, we would like to provide some general comments on the recommendations contained in the Final Report.

First, we note that the Working Group has not provided recommended timelines for several of its recommendations.<sup>7</sup> The OBA supports the prompt implementation of the Final Report's recommendations. We request that the Law Society and/or the Working Group continue work with stakeholders to develop appropriate timelines for their implementation, along with appropriate plans to measure and report on their effectiveness, in order to allow for adjustment and renewal as necessary, and to ensure the approach adopted meets the intended goals.

Second, we recognize that the challenges faced by racialized licensees occur at all stages throughout their careers, starting with the Licensing Process. We note that the Law Society Professional Development and Competence Committee's recently released Final Report to Convocation dealing with the Pathways Pilot Project, which includes the Law Practice Program and other lawyer licensing elements, reported "interest from a range of perspectives for a broader analysis to be undertaken of the licensing process."<sup>8</sup> As part of this initiative, we support the recommendation that the Law Society consider the impact that the licensing process has on racialized licensees, including but not limited to systemic bias and economic barriers.

We also recognize that the challenges faced by racialized licensees occur whether they are members of large or small firms. Lawyers have a range of reasons to practice in solo and small firms and they comprise an important segment of the bar, however, we note that a disproportionate number of racialized licensees are counted in this group. We recommend that the Law Society continue to explore opportunities to ensure that the profession is inclusive of those individuals, regardless of firm size.

Finally, if approved, we recommend that the Law Society consider how the proposals might be extended to benefit other equity-seeking groups through a process of consultation and information sharing with the profession and legal associations.

Accelerating Culture Shift

As part of this category, the Working Group recommends several steps including amendments to the Rules of Professional Conduct to ensure licensees infuse the principles of equality, diversity and inclusion into their everyday practice; developing model policies and resources to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees using the Justicia Project as a model; and, requiring the adoption of equality, diversity and inclusion principles and practices by every licensee, with particular requirements for workplaces with 10 or more licensees. All licensees will be required to adopt a “statement of principles”, while workplaces with 10 or more licensees must implement a diversity policy, and complete diversity self-assessments.

The OBA has adopted a series of measures intended to support diversity in our association. Through a consultation led by the OBA’s Equality Committee, the OBA has adopted an organization-wide diversity statement, committed to maintain and report on self-identification membership data, and committed to maintain and report on diversity leadership targets.<sup>9</sup> In this context, several measures recommended by the Working Group are similar in their objective to measures already in place at the OBA. Accordingly, as stated in our Initial Report the OBA strongly supports assisting law firms to establish diversity programs that set out a firm’s commitment and plan for meeting its goals and collecting demographic data and assessing the diversity climate to analyze the successes and areas for improvement.<sup>10</sup>

Measuring Progress

As part of this category, the Working Group recommends for workplaces with more than 25 licensees a) quantitative self-identification data collected annually and provided in aggregate to the legal workplace, b) qualitative self-identification data collected every four years and provided to the legal workplace in summary form, and c) a workplace “Inclusion Index” developed and published every four years; repeating the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Inclusion Survey; and, developing and implementing progressive compliance measures for workplaces that do not comply with the required adoption of equality, diversity and inclusion principles and practices.

As noted above, the OBA has committed to measure diversity and inclusion data within its own organization. As noted in the Initial Report, in 2012 the Equality Committee of the CBA issued “Measuring Diversity in Law Firms: A Critical Tool for Achieving High Performance” (the “Measuring Diversity Guide”). The OBA Initial Report discussed the Measuring Diversity Guide in detail, providing recommendations with respect to the appropriate development, assessment, and continuous improvement of measurement tools for law firms.<sup>11</sup> We continue to encourage the Law Society to work with the profession to ensure that the proposed tools deliver meaningful and actionable results for the profession, while respecting the need to maintain the privacy and confidentiality of respondents.

While we support the Working Group’s recommendations to initiate the quantitative and qualitative data collection with larger firms, our members have also suggested that the Law Society allow for voluntary provision of diversity data from smaller firms that would not otherwise be subject to that requirement. That would allow for participation from the broadest possible segment of the profession.

In addition, the Law Society should commit to continually monitor and assess the effectiveness of any measures implemented and to share that information with the profession on an ongoing basis.

Educating for Change

The Final Report recommends requiring licensees to complete mandatory continuing professional development programs on topics of equality and inclusion, and including these topics as competencies to be acquired within the Licensing Process.

While we support the principle that training in equality and inclusion will benefit the profession, engendering understanding of diversity in the profession will require an ongoing commitment from the profession, of which training programs can form but one part. As part of our recommendation that the Law Society continually evaluate the effectiveness of the measures implemented, we note the need to assess whether the requirement adopted is proving effective. We look forward to further engagement with the Law Society to develop appropriate criteria for accreditation, and appropriate guides for these programs to ensure that the training received is both relevant and actionable.

As stated above, the OBA has a history of providing programming to support diversity initiatives. The Law Society Scan of Best Practices notes that legal associations are uniquely positioned to impact diversity within the legal profession.<sup>12</sup> In this regard, although the text of Recommendation #9 does not explicitly recognize the role of legal associations in delivering diversity programming, it is clear from the analysis that the Working Group provided in the Final Report that legal associations can continue to demonstrate leadership in the design and delivery of accredited programming focused on advancing equality and inclusion.<sup>13</sup>

We have also noted that the means by which topics of cultural competency, equality and inclusion will be included in the Licensing Process have not been particularized. Recent licensing candidates have noted that effectively implementing this recommendation will require careful consideration, in order to ensure that the Licensing Process achieves the desired learning outcomes. We would be pleased to provide input on developing appropriate materials if the Law Society implements this recommendation.

Implementing Supports

The Final Report provides several recommendations related to addressing complaints of systemic discrimination, and recommends providing support to racialized licensees through mentoring and networking initiatives. With respect to addressing complaints of systemic discrimination, the OBA supports the recommendations presented in the Final Report to review the function, processes and structure of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHCP), and the other related recommendations. We note that confidentiality is an important factor for the success of the current DHCP, and that appropriate confidentiality must be maintained if the program is to be modified to address complaints of systemic discrimination.

As stated in our Initial Report, an effective review of this area will require issues of human resources management within the Law Society structure. It is important for all individuals involved in the complaints process at the Law Society to be sensitive to unique issues that may arise with complaints of discrimination. This helps ensure that complaints are effectively addressed and instills confidence in the process for those wishing to bring a complaint.<sup>14</sup>

With respect to providing support to racialized licensees through mentoring and networking initiatives, the OBA provides a host of unique opportunities for racialized lawyers to network with colleagues through our governing bodies, 40 practice sections, Women Lawyers Forum (“WLF”), Sexual Orientation and Gender Identity Conference (“SOGIC”) and the Equality Committee.”<sup>15</sup> The OBA also offers high quality professional development programs, developed by our volunteer members and program planning lawyers that respond to current issues of diversity and inclusion.

The Law Society could play a helpful role by promoting awareness and encouraging participation in the mentoring, professional development, and networking opportunities already offered by legal associations. Increasing participation in core legal association offerings with a track record for success helps overcome the barriers of exclusion and isolation identified by racialized lawyers and promotes a more inclusive profession.<sup>16</sup>

Law Society Operations

We agree that the Law Society should lead efforts to promote diversity and inclusion by example. As we stated in our Initial Report, the Law Society should also continue and enhance its recruitment and hiring efforts to ensure diversity within and throughout the organization. This includes encouraging racialized lawyers to participate in the election of Convocation. The Law Society could examine making available and communicating more information about the election process and the importance of the work of benchers.<sup>17</sup>

Conclusion

The OBA appreciates the opportunity to comment on the important initiatives presented in the Working Group's Final Report.

The Working Group has been considering challenges faced by racialized licensees since 2012. The Final Report concludes that prescribing minimum standards of equality, diversity and inclusion are consistent with the human rights responsibilities of the profession — obligations already required by the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct and, more generally, the Human Rights Code.

The OBA has long recognized the importance of diversity and inclusion to the profession. While the Working Group could no doubt deliberate further on the best approaches to undertake, our members broadly support the recommendations articulated in the Final Report as a reasonable way of moving forward to address the concerns identified.

That said, while moving forward is important, the Law Society should do so with the commitment to continually monitor and assess the effectiveness of measures implemented and to share that information with the profession. Such an ongoing collaborative process would assist the Law Society in understanding the complexities of the issues and developing options that enjoy the confidence of racialized licensees and the profession as a whole. The OBA looks forward to the opportunity to participate in that process as it goes forward.

The Law Society of Upper Canada
c/o Ekua Quansah, Policy Counsel
Osgoode Hall, 130 Queen Street West
Toronto, ON M5H 2N6

Dear Ms. Quansah,

Re: Request for Comments on Final Report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group

The Ontario Crown Attorneys' Association (OCCA) welcomes the opportunity to provide comments about the recommendations contained in the final report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group entitled: Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Profession. We also wish to commend the members of the Working Group for the significant time and effort dedicated to the development of a comprehensive report that examines systemic racism in the legal profession and which provides strategies that encourage all stakeholders to work together in an effort to eliminate the systemic barriers that adversely impact fellow licensees in the profession.

The OCAA represents over 850 Assistant Crown Attorneys and Crown Counsel employed by the Ministry of the Attorney General (MAG). We are a labour organization that represents licensees employed within MAG's Criminal Law Division, and are distinct from the Association of Law Officers of the Crown (ALOC), whose members are employed in non-criminal legal service branches across government. Our members play an integral role in the administration of criminal justice in Ontario and are responsible for the administration of hundreds of thousands of criminal cases that flow through the courts every year in all regions across the province. As an association, the OCAA actively promotes the professional interests of its members, and frequently acts in a supportive role by providing continuing education and training in collaboration with MAG.

The OCAA supports the recommendations set out in the Working Group's final report. The recommendations provide important and concrete steps designed to reduce the disproportionate and adverse impact that systemic barriers have on racialized licensees in the profession. The recommendations promote increased awareness and inclusive practices that can help achieve better representation of racialized licensees in all practice settings in Ontario, including government legal departments and Crown Attorney offices. Implementation of the report's recommendations is good for the legal profession and for public confidence in the legal profession and the administration of the justice system as a whole. It is important that the demographics of our legal profession reflect the diversity of the public we serve.

With respect to the differing opinions on the definition of "legal workplace" at footnote 7 (and repeated at footnote 27) of the final report, we note that our members serve the public and are not subject to client decisions. We agree that, at a minimum, government and in-house legal departments should be encouraged to engage in the mandatory activities outlined in the report. We believe that the legal profession should constantly strive to develop, monitor and maintain better inclusive practices from student outreach and articling recruitment, through to hiring, promotion and retention. We also believe in the importance of leading by example.

As a strong leader in the development and dissemination of continuing legal education for our members, the OCAA welcomes opportunities to work with the Law Society in developing programs that are focused on enhancing inclusion and diversity in the profession.

We look forward to continuing our engagement with the Law Society and further opportunities to provide our input on the important work involved in addressing systemic racism in the legal profession.

Sincerely,

Kate Matthews
President
Ontario Crown Attorneys' Association

Dear Treasurer Schabas and Co-Chairs Anand and Leiper:

Re: Final Report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group,
*Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions

As Chair of the Roundtable of Diversity Associations (RODA)<sup>1</sup>, I convey RODA's written comments on the thirteen recommendations ("Recommendations") made in the Final Report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group, Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions ("Final Report").

<sup>1</sup> On November 29, 2016, RODA celebrates its 5th Diversity Soiree and its 2nd Diversity Conference. RODA's current member associations include the following: Arab Canadian Lawyers Association; Association of Chinese Canadian Lawyers of Ontario; Canadian Association of Black Lawyers; Canadian Association of South Asian Lawyers; Canadian Hispanic Bar Association; Canadian Italian Advocates Organization; Canadian Muslim Lawyers Association; Federation of Asian Canadian Lawyers; Hellenic Canadian Lawyers Association; Iranian Canadian Legal Professionals; Korean Canadian Lawyers Association; Macedonian Canadian Lawyers; OBA Equality Committee; Sexual Orientation & Gender Identity Caucus; South Asian Bar Association of Toronto; Toronto Lawyers Association; Women's Law Association of Ontario.

RODA brings together a diverse group of legal associations with the goal of fostering dialogue and creating initiatives relating to the advancement of diversity, equality and inclusion in the legal profession and within the community.

Of particular importance to RODA and its member associations is the issue of diversity in the legal profession, and the desire to hold law firms accountable to increasing diversity and breaking the privilege that non-racialized licensees have held, disproportionate to an increasingly diverse population.

A. BACKGROUND

RODA believes it is important not to be short-sighted and to remember the backdrop against which the Final Report is released. Many of our member associations have made significant contributions along the long path leading to the Final Report. Association representatives have changed over the years, but our member associations have been consistent in advocating for equity, diversity and inclusion over at least the last two decades, without seeing any concrete results. We should not lose sight of the battles that were previously fought.

The backdrop of decades laid the groundwork for the Final Report, which is the culmination of recent focused effort. In September 2011, Convocation of the Law Society of Upper Canada ("LSUC") first identified the enhancement of diversity within law firms as a priority. Under the aegis of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group ("CFRL Working Group"), and managed by the equity initiatives department at the LSUC, the LSUC hired an external consultant to:

- Identify challenges faced by racialized licensees in different practice environments, including entry into practice and advancement;
- Identify factors and practice challenges that could increase the risk of regulatory complaints and discipline against racialized licensees; and
- Identify perceptions of best practises for preventive, remedial, and support strategies.

Following the creation of the CFRL Working Group, RODA and representatives of our member associations:

- Engaged in the initial community engagement process;
- Reviewed the results of the Consultant Engagement Process (contained in the external consultant's Stratcom Report released in March 2014), and provided further input and insight into the challenges faced by racialized licensees;
- These comments were then integrated into the Consultation Paper, Developing Strategies for Change: Addressing Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees, released in October 2014;
- Between January and March 2015, provided comments to the Consultation Paper (this consultation process is said to include twelve (12) open house learning and consultation programs, and meetings with representatives from law firms, legal clinics, banks, government and legal associations, throughout the province);
- Reviewed an interim report released in April 23, 2015, Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group – Interim Report to Convocation, April 2015. This interim report stated that participants spoke of "white privilege" and the need for all of us to acknowledge its existence in order to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees, and the importance for licensees to understand how power operates to produce advantages for some and deny advantages to others. It is noted that the Ontario Human Rights Commission defines "privilege" generally as 'unearned power, benefits, advantages, access and/or opportunities that exist for members of the dominant group(s) in society. It can also refer to the relative privilege of one group compared to another.

- By late 2015, demanded that the CFRL Working Group account for its delays in framing the recommendation for concrete action items to address the conclusions in the Consultation Paper.
- Finally in September 2016, five years after the need was first formally identified by the LSUC, the Final Report was released with its thirteen recommendations.

Based on my observations, the initial reaction of equity seeking legal associations was understandingly sceptical. RODA and its members have met to discuss the Final Report. We have also had discussions and consultations with our colleagues, allies and other stakeholders. We have listened to members of the CFRL Working Group speak to the underlying rationale for the 13 recommendations.

B. RODA RECOMMENDATION

After a period of studying the Final Report, consultation and reflection, RODA is of the view that the Recommendations are an encouraging initial step that should be adopted, on an omnibus basis, by Convocation.

RODA also recommends that the LSUC be required to hold regular quarterly consultation meetings with RODA, the LSUC's Equity Advisory Group, and other racialized equity seeking legal associations, to monitor and ensure accountability over the implementation of the Recommendations. The results of these consultations should be put to Benchers at Convocation.

The Recommendations fall into 5 broad categories of action: measuring progress, accelerating culture shift, educating for change, implementing supports, and operations of the Law Society. These 5 categories are inter-related, and support each other. They provide basic specific action items that serve to address the various challenges faced by racialized licensees, and includes both mandatory and voluntary steps that law firms, licensees and the LSUC will take to tackle the long-standing issues of unconscious bias and systemic racism that have plagued racialized licensees.

RODA recognizes that the Final Report is the result of consensus amongst the Benchers in the CFRL Working Group. As will happen when consensus building is involved, the Final Report has not met all expectations of racialized equity seeking legal associations. However, RODA is encouraged, and its member associations have voted in favour of recommending that Convocation adopt the Recommendations on an omnibus basis.

We are aware that there is a Notice of Motion brought by Benchers, Sidney Troister and Jeffrey W. Lem. RODA is discouraged by this Motion that requests that each of the Recommendations be discussed and voted on separately. RODA fears that if passed, it could end up breaking down the cohesive nature of the Recommendations and lead to an impasse that will kibosh two decades of hard work that finally began to crystallize with the CFRL Working Group and its resulting Final Report and Recommendations. RODA strongly opposes this motion, and asks that Convocation vote against it.

However, if this motion is passed, RODA strongly recommends that Convocation pass each and every one of the Recommendations.

C. INTERSECTION WITH RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT

RODA understands that some have questioned the LSUC's jurisdiction to implement at least some of the Recommendations.

RODA submits that the Law Society Act, the Rules of Professional Conduct (see Schedule "A": Excerpt from the Rules of Professional Conduct), and Ontario's Human Rights Code provide a sufficient basis for the LSUC to implement all of the Recommendations. This position would be supplemented if the LSUC is able to adopt Compliance-Based Entity Regulation.

D. INTERSECTION WITH ENTITY REGULATION

RODA also encourages the CFRL Working Group to coordinate the implementation of action items arising from the Recommendations with the anticipated recommendations of the Task Force on Compliance-Based Entity Regulation ("Task Force"), should the Task Force's anticipated recommendations also be passed by Convocation. Given that the LSUC is self-funded by its licensees, coordination of the work of the CFRL Working Group and the Task Force is a more efficient use of limited resources. Actual implementation of the Recommendations is expected to start in 2018, after the year 2017 is devoted to educating the Ontario bar. This timeline aligns with the expected delivery in 2017 of the recommendations of the Task Force on Compliance-Based Entity, which recommendations could presumably be implemented in 2018<sup>2</sup>.

---

<sup>2</sup> RODA notes that on November 9, 2016, Convocation voted on and passed the LSUC's Professional Development and Competence Committee's recommendation to extend the LPP for an additional two years to enable the gathering of more data on the LPP and articling, and the larger analysis of licensing. Its work would also align with the work of the CFRL Working Group and the Task Force. All three initiatives have significant links to challenges faced by racialized licensees, and their work should be coordinated. For example, just as Compliance-Based Entity Regulation will require diversity and inclusion as a practice management principle, so the Final Report includes a recommendation to add cultural competency, diversity and inclusion, and education components into the licensing process.

RODA has expressed its support for compliance-based entity regulation, and in particular noted:

According to the Developing Strategies for Change: Addressing Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Consultation Paper, presented to Convocation in October 2014, Black, South Asian and West Asian lawyers are disproportionately represented in sole practice and are much less likely to practise in medium and large firms. In line with the “equity, diversity and inclusion” principle excepted above, and with a view to increasing equity and diversity in medium to large sized firms, RODA submits that:

1. RODA is encouraged by the inclusion of “equity, diversity and inclusion” in the list of practice management principles for compliance-based entity regulation, but asks that the Task Force consider some form of reporting requirement in order to ensure that “equity, diversity and inclusion” principles are not merely declarations of commitment but actually implemented throughout an entity’s hiring, promotion, and elevation to partnership practises. As such, RODA member associations are in favour of mandatory data collection for medium to large-sized firms; and

2. Diversity and cultural competency training should be part of required training within medium to large-sized firms.

The inclusion of a principle of equity, diversity and inclusion in compliance-based entity regulation provides the Law Society with a basis to better identify and address systemic discrimination within an entity. A means of monitoring the actual implementation of equity, diversity and inclusion within law firms would also provide the Law Society with the data and tools to investigate and discipline entities that have received multiple complaints of discrimination.<sup>3</sup>

RODA submits that the LSUC has sufficient authority to implement all the Recommendations without adopting Compliance-Based Entity Regulation. The adoption of Compliance Based-Entity Regulation will provide stronger enforcement mechanisms and make the implementation of the Recommendations more effective. As such, RODA recommends that the CFRL Working Group coordinate its efforts with the Task Force.

E. EXTENSION OF RECOMMENDATIONS TO ALL EQUALITY-SEEKING GROUPS

RODA is aware of a motion that will be brought by Benchers, Barbara Murchie and Joanne St. Lewis, to Convocation on December 2, 2016. The Notice of Motion asks that:

As it moves forward with implementation of the recommendations for racialized licensees, the Law Society will ensure that the policies, procedures, measures and initiatives are extended as appropriate to all equality-seeking groups while continuing to ensure that the needs of racialized licensees are fully acknowledged and addressed.

Consistent with its mandate to promote the advancement of diversity, equality and inclusion in the legal profession and within the community, RODA supports this motion, and asks that Convocation vote in its favour.

CONCLUSION

RODA has not provided comments on a recommendation by recommendation basis. Rather, RODA takes the position that the Final Report, and its Recommendations, are a cohesive whole and should be voted on an omnibus basis. The Recommendations are an encouraging starting point to address unconscious bias, systemic racism and the long-standing challenges faced by racialized licensees. The Final Report may not be a clarion call, but RODA believes that it and its member associations, and allies and stakeholders, can work with the Final Report's basic call to action.

RODA will continue to be engaged during the implementation process and provide input to flesh out the implementation and eventual enforcement mechanisms.

The Final Report will be before Convocation for decision on December 2, 2016. In light of the above, RODA strongly encourages all Benchers to vote in favour of adopting all the Recommendations.

Sincerely,

Lai-King Hum

Schedule "A"

Excerpt from the Rules of Professional Conduct

6.3.1-1 A lawyer has a special responsibility to respect the requirements of human rights laws in force in Ontario and, specifically, to honour the obligation not to discriminate on the grounds of race, ancestry, place of origin, colour, ethnic origin, citizenship, creed, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity, gender expression, age, record of offences (as defined in the Ontario Human Rights Code), marital status, family status, or disability with respect to professional employment of other lawyers, articulated students, or any other person or in professional dealings with other licensees or any other person.

Commentary

[1] The Law Society acknowledges the diversity of the community of Ontario in which lawyers serve and expects them to respect the dignity and worth of all persons and to treat all persons equally without discrimination.

[2] This rule sets out the special role of the profession to recognize and protect the dignity of individuals and the diversity of the community in Ontario.

[3] Rule 6.3.1-1 will be interpreted according to the provisions of the Human Rights Code (Ontario) and related case law.

[12] Human rights law in Ontario includes as discrimination, conduct which, though not intended to discriminate, has an adverse impact on individuals or groups on the basis of the prohibited grounds. The Human Rights Code (Ontario) requires that the affected individuals or groups must be accommodated unless to do so would cause undue hardship.

[13] A lawyer should take reasonable steps to prevent or stop discrimination by any staff or agent who is subject to the lawyer's direction or control.

To the Task Force on Compliance-Based Entity Regulation:

Re: Entity Regulation - Submission

On behalf of the Roundtable of Diversity Associations (RODA), I write to provide input on the Consultation Paper: Promoting better legal practices (the "Consultation Paper"), prepared by the Law Society's Task Force on Compliance-Based Entity Regulation.

*RODA's current member associations include the following: Arab Canadian Lawyers Association; Association of Chinese Canadian Lawyers of Ontario; Canadian Association of Black Lawyers; Canadian Association of South Asian Lawyers; Canadian Hispanic Bar Association; Canadian Italian Advocates Organization; Canadian Muslim Lawyers Association, Federation of Asian Canadian Lawyers; Hellenic Canadian Lawyers Association; Iranian Canadian Legal Professionals; Korean Canadian Lawyers Association; Macedonian Canadian Lawyers; OBA Equality Committee; Sexual Orientation & Gender Identity Caucus; South Asian Bar Association of Toronto; Toronto Lawyers Association; Women's Law Association of Ontario.

The Task Force was established by Convocation in June 2015 to study and make recommendations on options for professional regulation that focus on objectives for the entities, or organizations, through which lawyers and paralegals provide legal services.

RODA brings together a diverse group of legal associations with the goal of fostering a dialogue and initiatives relating to the advancement of diversity, equality and inclusion in the legal profession and the judiciary. RODA has a seat at the Equity Advisory Group at the Law Society of Upper Canada ("LSUC"). It is from this perspective that our input is provided.

In light of RODA's mandate, we are providing the Task Force with input on one of the key components, or principles, for compliance and entity regulation proposed in the Consultation Paper.

Specifically, the Task Force proposed that the following, described as principle 6 in the Consultation Paper, might be included as one of the key principles for compliance and entity regulation.

Equity, Diversity and Inclusion, which refers to the entity's policies regarding matters such as

- a respectful workplace environment that appropriately accommodates equity, diversity, inclusion, and disabilities;
- equality of opportunity and respect for diversity and inclusion in recruitment and hiring;
- equality of opportunity and respect for diversity and inclusion in decision-making regarding advancement; and
- cultural competency in the delivery of legal services.*

*The Challenges Faced By Racialized Licensees Working Group has been considering equity, diversity and inclusion issues for Racialized Licensees in the legal professions. It is expected that the Working Group will report to Convocation in 2016. In the event that Convocation adopts recommendations in these areas, there may be additional guidance respecting the implementation of this proposed framework.

The Consultation Paper was distributed to RODA member associations, and comments solicited. RODA wholeheartedly supports entity regulation in Ontario addressing equity and diversity considerations in an explicit and expansive manner, and supports its inclusion as a practice management principle.

According to the Developing Strategies for Change: Addressing Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Consultation Paper, presented to Convocation in October 2014, Black, South Asian and West Asian lawyers are disproportionately represented in sole practice and are much less likely to practise in medium and large firms. In line with the “equity, diversity and inclusion” principle excepted above, and with a view to increasing equity and diversity in medium to large sized firms, RODA submits that:

1. RODA is encouraged by the inclusion of “equity, diversity and inclusion” in the list of practice management principles for compliance-based entity regulation, but asks that the Task Force consider some form of reporting requirement in order to ensure that “equity, diversity and inclusion” principles are not merely declarations of commitment but actually implemented throughout an entity’s hiring, promotion, and elevation to partnership practises. As such, RODA member associations are in favour of mandatory data collection for medium to large-sized firms; and
2. Diversity and cultural competency training should be part of required training within medium to large-sized firms.

The inclusion of a principle of equity, diversity and inclusion in compliance-based entity regulation provides the Law Society with a basis to better identify and address systemic discrimination within an entity. A means of monitoring the actual implementation of equity, diversity and inclusion within law firms would also provide the Law Society with the data and tools to investigate and discipline entities that have received multiple complaints of discrimination.

We thank the Task Force for its work and we are encouraged by its proposed addition of equity, diversity and inclusion as a principle of Practice Management. for the opportunity to make submissions. We look forward to receiving its report.

Yours very truly,

Dear Ms. Quansah:

Re: Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions

The South Asian Bar Association of Toronto (SABA Toronto) makes these written comments on the Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions report (the Report).

SABA Toronto is a voluntary bar organization and the local Toronto chapter of SABA North America. SABA Toronto provides professional growth and advancement for South Asian lawyers in the Greater Toronto Area and seeks to protect the rights and liberties of the South Asian community across Ontario.

SABA Toronto's position is Convocation should pass these recommendations as they are and as an omnibus motion. To the extent the Law Society is directed to apply these recommendations, where applicable, to other equality-seeking groups, SABA Toronto supports such a motion.

The Report is a long-time coming. For almost four years, racialized lawyers have waited for the Law Society to acknowledge what they have known all along: the profession, despite its facial commitment to inclusion, presents unique, profound and, in some cases, troubling challenges to racialized licensees. A quick perusal of the websites of Toronto's largest 30 firms, as an example, will quickly disclose that the profession remains largely white, especially at the equity partner and management level. Where, for example, South Asians are represented, it is rare to see, for example, an orthodox Sikh or Muslim, suggesting to us that where South Asians have overcome challenges, such success is still localized to certain members of our bar that look and act like their majoritarian colleagues.

This is not a "law firm" problem. This is not even a "lawyers" problem. This is an access to justice problem. If Ontarians do not believe that the justice system is fair because it is not representative, we do violence to the administration of that system. As officers of the court, we should be the first to demand that the public's confidence in the justice system is not undermined because our courtrooms look nothing like our communities, workplaces and public spaces.

Regarding the specific recommendations, our view is that they are a minimum baseline for any organization in Ontario, never mind a legal workplace that should have a commitment to diversity and inclusion. In our view, the most important recommendations are those around qualitative and quantitative analysis: SABA Toronto has long advocated for the profession to keep better statistics about racialized (and other equality-seeking) licensees. The profession should not fear the publication of an inclusion index. It is hard for us to believe that any legal workplace in Ontario would not be striving to be more inclusive and diverse, and therefore, more representative by 2020.

After four long years, the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group has reached a consensus. They have sent their best work to Convocation. Pass it.

Sincerely,

SOUTH ASIAN BAR ASSOCIATION OF TORONTO

Dear Ms Quansah:

RE: Response to the Final Report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group entitled *Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions

The Advocates' Society, founded in 1963, is a not-for-profit association of over 5,500 lawyers throughout Ontario and the rest of Canada. The mandate of The Advocates' Society includes, amongst other things, making submissions to governments and other entities on matters that affect access to justice, the administration of justice and the practice of law by advocates.

The Advocates' Society has reviewed with interest the Final Report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group entitled Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions ("Law Society Report"), presented to Convocation on September 22, 2016. As stated in our letter of February 27, 2015 to Josée Bouchard, past Director, Equity Initiatives Department, The Advocates' Society is committed to the principles of substantive equality and access to justice, and supports redressing the challenges faced by racialized licensees. The Advocates' Society makes the following comments on the Recommendations as outlined in the Report, speaking to the perspective of lawyers (based on the membership of The Advocates' Society) and not paralegals.

General Comment

In respect of many of these recommendations, The Advocates' Society believes that it is important that the Law Society deal with diversity as a whole (including disability, gender and sexual orientation) rather than focusing only on measuring progress and inclusion with respect to racialized licensees. Many of The Advocates' Society's members' firms have diversity committees and diversity policies which address the whole spectrum of diversity issues. Our view is that the Law Society ought to be addressing the entire spectrum of issues here; if the administrative infrastructure is being put into place to implement these recommendations with respect to racialized licensees, it would be most efficient to address all diversity issues, both in self-reporting and the proposed inclusion questions, subject to any additional privacy issues that this might raise.

Accelerating Culture Shift (Recommendations 1-3)Recommendation 1: Reinforcing Professional ObligationsSummary of the Working Group's Recommendation:

- The Law Society would amend the Rules of Professional Conduct to recognize, acknowledge and promote principles of equality, diversity and inclusion.

Comments:

- The Advocates' Society agrees with Recommendation 1 and would welcome the opportunity to provide input into proposed changes to the Rules of Professional Conduct and their Commentaries.

Recommendation 2: Diversity and Inclusion ProjectSummary of the Working Group's Recommendation:*

- The Law Society would develop model policies and resources to encourage best practices in legal workplaces.

Comments:

- The Advocates' Society agrees with Recommendation 2 and recognizes the central importance of diversity to the profession. It would welcome the opportunity to comment on model policies and resources to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees.
- The Advocates' Society would bring the perspective and experience of lawyers who practise as advocates to issues such as competency hiring, assignment of work and career development. The Advocates' Society also has expertise in the mentoring of young advocates and could offer its experience in the development of mentoring programs.

Recommendation 3: The Adoption of Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Principles and PracticesSummary of the Working Group's Recommendation:*

- The Law Society would require every licensee to adopt and abide by a statement of principles to promote equality, diversity and inclusion.
- The Law Society would require every legal workplace of at least 10 licensees to develop a diversity policy to cover recruitment, retention and advancement, and to file a compliance self-assessment every two years with the Law Society.

Comments:

- The Advocates' Society agrees with Recommendation 3 and supports the nuanced approach to implementation proposed by the Law Society which recognizes that the nature of policies and self-assessment tools will vary based on the size and type of legal workplace.
- The Advocates' Society supports the Law Society's proposal that templates for the statements of principles, policies and self-assessment tools be developed collaboratively with legal workplaces and organizations that wish to participate. The development of resources that take into account the realities of legal workplaces is important to the success of the initiative.

Measuring Progress (Recommendations 4-8)Recommendation 4: Measuring Progress through Quantitative AnalysisSummary of the Working Group's Recommendation:

- The Law Society would collect the self-identification data from licensees in the Lawyer Annual Report and provide reports to legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees, to compare to provincial statistics (and to use in requests for proposal, student recruitment, etc.).

Comments:

- The Advocates' Society believes that the proposal to analyze the self-identification data provided by licensees in their Annual Reports and to pass that information along to firms may provide useful information about their progress relative to the profession as a whole.
- However, The Advocates' Society believes that limiting this initiative to "legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees" would overlook a large group of lawyers in solo and smaller workplaces, practising in a wide range of practice areas and geographical areas.<sup>1</sup> Data from smaller workplaces could be aggregated and reported on an anonymous basis, by size of workplace and geographic region, for example.
- The Advocates' Society would also appreciate clarification from the Law Society as to whether it suggests that the diversity makeup in all legal workplaces should mirror the aggregate data, which may be an unreasonable expectation for certain workplaces.
- The Advocates' Society would also appreciate clarity as to whether organizations like banks or insurance companies that have more than 25 licensees qualify as "legal workplaces".

Recommendation 5: Measuring Progress through Qualitative Analysis

Summary of the Working Group's Recommendation:

- The Law Society would ask licensees, every four years, for their assessment of inclusion at their workplace, and then provide reports to the legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees.

Comments:

- The Advocates' Society believes that this recommendation raises privacy concerns; even workplaces with 25 or more licensees may have a small (and thus identifiable) number of racialized lawyers.
- The Advocates' Society is concerned that providing law firms, particularly smaller law firms closer to the 25-member end of the spectrum, with the results of inclusion questions and a summary of the information gathered will be problematic because the respondents will know that the data will be reported back to their place of employment, even if the information is in "summarized" or "compiled" form. The prospect of this disclosure may discourage candid responses.
- The Law Society should give consideration to collecting responses on an anonymous basis and advising individuals who provide responses that their views will be kept confidential by the Law Society and not provided to their places of employment. An anonymous and confidential elicitation of comments is more likely to capture representative information. The Law Society could then use this anonymous data for its own analysis and reporting on an aggregate basis to the profession.
- Consideration might also be given to advising or reminding all licensees of the existing avenues available to them (or perhaps new avenues) to make an anonymous whistleblower comment or complaint with the Law Society if the individual wishes the Law Society to do something about a particular incident or workplace.
- To the extent the Law Society decides to collect this information for its own purposes, but not report or publish the information, with attributions, to law firms or the public, it should consider whether to collect this information from smaller law firms as well (given that privacy would no longer be an issue). Proceeding with anonymous or confidential comments would allow the Law Society to canvass a broader cross-section of licensees than simply licensees at workplaces with 25 or more licensees. A large part of the practice would be excluded numerically, geographically and by practice area in focusing on licensees in these larger workplace environments – thereby not providing a truly accurate measurement of progress, insight or accountability across the profession.

Recommendation 6: Inclusion Index

Summary of the Working Group's Recommendation:

- The Law Society will publish the data about workplaces of at least 25 licensees – meaning the self-assessment; the quantitative data; and the qualitative data – as a means of transparency and accountability.

Comments:

- The Advocates' Society is concerned about the publication of the qualitative information recorded in the proposed "inclusion index" on an individual firm basis without any consideration of the merits or context of the comments.
- Further, there are more robust means of reviewing a workplace's commitment to racialized persons and diversity than simply looking at quantitative numbers, which may under-represent the initiatives of employers. For example, a more comprehensive matrix of indices of commitment to diversity can be developed (e.g. TSX board matrix) that not only looks at the number of racialized licensees, but also elements such as programs and training implemented, outreach program participation, articling positions offered to racialized licensees (whether or not accepted), and participation in workplace leadership positions.

Recommendation 7: Repeat Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project Inclusion SurveySummary of the Working Group's Recommendation:*

- In 2013, the Law Society had all licensees complete an anonymous survey as to career barriers, stereotypes, and disadvantages. A similar survey would be conducted every four years to evaluate systemic change.

Comments:

- The Advocates' Society believes that an interval of four years for measuring and reporting data on diversity and inclusion will not capture the full story, given the rate at which lawyers, particularly young lawyers and lawyers from diverse backgrounds, leave law firms. The administrative burden posed by a shorter interval must be balanced with the quality and impact of the data collection.

Recommendation 8: Progressive Compliance MeasuresSummary of the Working Group's Recommendation:*

- The Law Society would use graduated responses to address non-compliance by legal workplaces, from meetings and warnings, to discipline.

Comments:

- The Advocates' Society believes the profession would benefit from further detail on progressive compliance. It is unclear how the Law Society proposes to deal with compliance on an entity-based level and it is unclear how enforcement will define or address issues of systemic discrimination.

Educating for Change (Recommendations 9-10)

Recommendation 9: Continuing Professional Development (CPD) Programs on Topics of Equality and Inclusion in the Professions

Summary of the Working Group's Recommendation:

- The Law Society will offer a three-hour accredited program for equality and inclusion, and will assist workplaces to offer their own programs.
- Licensees will be required to complete a three hour CPD program every three years.

Comments:

- The Advocates' Society supports the recommendation of a three-hour accredited program. Program developers should consult not only legal resources, but also equity-seeking groups and leading thinkers in the areas of psychology, neuroscience and organizational behavior, with materials tailored to the legal context. Other groups (e.g. Human Resources Professionals Association) may be well ahead in the development of appropriate programming, and, in any event, can offer a diverse perspective.
- The Advocates' Society recommends that the Law Society actively work with groups in other jurisdictions experienced in the development of diversity and inclusion practices to ensure that we are meeting or exceeding the international standards in development.
- Given the importance of early and frequent exposure to effect change, the Law Society should consult with law faculties to express the Law Society's commitment to issues of diversity, equality and inclusion, to allow it to benefit from programs deployed in law schools, and to coordinate the development of programs to ensure educational continuity.
- The Advocates' Society also supports the recommendation of having licensees complete accredited programming focused on equality and inclusion, but would suggest one hour every year, rather than three hours every three years, as a minimum requirement, following an initial, three-hour training program.

Recommendation 10: The Licensing Process

Summary of the Working Group's Recommendation:

- The Law Society would include equality and inclusion principles in licensing materials.

Comments:

- The Advocates' Society supports this recommendation, subject to its comments above.

Supporting Racialized Licensees (Recommendations 11-12)

Recommendation 11: Building Communities of Support

Summary of the Working Group's Recommendation:

- The Law Society would increase mentoring and advisory services to address in particular the isolation of racialized lawyers in sole or small firms.
- The Law Society would assist legal associations and support networking events.

Comments:

- The Advocates' Society commends the Law Society for its commitment to improving access to mentoring and networking opportunities for racialized licensees. Improving access to mentoring improves access to the profession, and improves the opportunities for racialized licensees to excel in the profession. The Advocates' Society supports the specific proposals put forward by the Law Society, and thanks the Law Society for having considered and adopted many of the recommendations put forward by The Advocates' Society in our letter of February 25, 2015.
- The Advocates' Society would be pleased to share information with the Law Society about the mentoring and programming initiatives which are offered by The Advocates' Society.
- As noted in our letter for February 25, 2015, The Advocates' Society offers a variety of mentoring programs and initiatives that our young advocate members (advocates who have been called to the bar for 10 years or less) have found to be beneficial in their professional development. For example, The Advocates' Society offers a variety of Group Mentoring programs. While Group Mentoring events have their own limitations and are not meant to be a substitute for one-on-one mentoring relationships that should ideally be developed within a licensee's own practice setting, Group Mentoring has several benefits. Group Mentoring events offer mentees the opportunity to pose questions to mentors in a safe environment outside the mentees' own firm settings, where they may be reluctant to ask certain questions or otherwise do not have good (or any) internal mentoring networks. Mentees also benefit from hearing the questions posed by their peers, which lets them know they are not alone in their questions or concerns. The social setting demonstrates that a variety of approaches and styles can be used to address challenges and achieve success in the profession.
- The Advocates' Society would welcome the development by the Law Society of cultural/diversity content that organizations such as The Advocates' Society can incorporate into their mentoring, education and other programs.
- In addition to the networking opportunities available at our mentoring programs, The Advocates' Society also offers a variety of affordable networking opportunities, including: family-friendly programs; Brown Bag and Court House continuing legal education series; Young Advocates' Pub Nights; and Practice Group programs and events.
- For all of our mentoring and networking programs, The Advocates' Society will continue to advertise these events in the normal course, but they could also be promoted through the Law Society and through groups representing racialized licensees to increase diversity of attendance and communication/collaboration among associations.

Recommendation 12: Addressing Complaints of Systemic Discrimination

Summary of the Working Group's Recommendation:

- The Law Society is concerned that incidents of systemic discrimination are not being reported. It plans to review its own processes, and the Rules of Professional Conduct, and re-train its disciplinary staff, including creating a specialized team, all to raise awareness and effectiveness in responding.
- The Law Society is considering soliciting anonymous complaints, in order to approach identified workplaces for remedial, not punitive, discussions.

Comments:

- The Advocates' Society commends the Law Society for its commitment to addressing issues of systemic discrimination in the legal profession.
- The Report proposes, among other things, to amend the Rules of Professional Conduct (the "Rules") so that systemic discrimination is clearly identified as a breach of professional conduct. Given that the Rules presently focus on individual accountability, whereas systemic discrimination operates on a systems-wide and institutional level, this endeavour will undoubtedly involve challenging practical and legal questions. We look forward to working with the Law Society and other stakeholders in exploring these questions further.
- Recognizing the limits of enforcement in combating the root causes of systemic discrimination, The Advocates' Society emphasizes the importance of education, training and remediation in identifying and eliminating systemic discrimination. Where possible, professional regulation should focus on securing voluntary compliance with best practices rather than enforcement through the disciplinary process.

Thank you for providing The Advocates' Society with the opportunity to make these submissions. I would be pleased to discuss these submissions with you at your convenience.

Yours very truly,

Bradley E. Berg
President

Dear Mesdames/Sirs,

RE: Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions dated September 22, 2016

The Toronto Lawyers' Association (TLA) is the voice of its 3,200 members who practise law in all disciplines across the Greater Toronto Area. The TLA is pleased to provide its comments to the Law Society of Upper Canada (LSUC) on the final report dated September 22, 2016 of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group (the Working Group) entitled Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions (the Report).

It is indeed unfortunate that despite the progress that has been made by many lawyers and law firms in the elimination of racism and other discrimination within their firms, racism still exists in our profession to the extent that the LSUC is required to mandate policies for lawyers and firms. As a lawyer, I have had the privilege of being a student, associate and now partner at a firm without such barriers. Upon reading the Report, I realize that I may have taken my good fortune for granted, as I believed that my experience was the norm for many firms and lawyers. It is the only firm at which I have worked since articling in 1999. Before and since, my firm has hired students and lawyers with the primary consideration being merit. In the process, without intention or design, we have created a firm of female and male lawyers, students and staff of different backgrounds, races, cultures, religions and sexual orientation, which reflects the wonderful mosaic found in Canada, and specifically Toronto.

As President of the TLA, I can attest to the TLA's dedication to eliminating racism and ensuring that our profession is more inclusive. The TLA, which itself has a diverse board of directors, is also a member of the Roundtable of Diversity Associations (RODA).

Apparently, given the Report and the recommendations contained therein, our profession is not moving forward quickly enough on its own and requires a helping hand from the LSUC. However, I am indeed optimistic that with our generation of lawyers, and each successive one that follows, systemic racism and the barriers for racialized lawyers will continue to erode until they no longer exist. The LSUC report contains a similarly optimistic quote from Yolanda King, daughter of Martin Luther King, Jr.:

What we need to do is learn to respect and embrace our differences until our differences don't make a difference in how we are treated.

— Yolanda King

The TLA commends the Working Group for its efforts and, subject to our comments below, recommends that the Report be adopted by Convocation. The TLA recognizes and supports the importance of this initiative and the need to dismantle barriers within the legal profession faced by racialized licensees.

Timeline for Implementation of Recommendations

Page 10 of the Report contains a timeline for implementation of the recommendations in the Report. We note that the implementation dates for recommendations 1, 2, 8, 10, 11, 12(2), 12(3) and 12(4) have yet to be determined. To enhance accountability and ensure that these important recommendations are implemented in a timely way, we encourage the LSUC to adopt at the outset clear dates for the implementation of all of these recommendations.

Recommendation 3 – The Adoption of Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Principles and Practices

The Law Society will:

- 1) require every licensee to adopt and to abide by a statement of principles acknowledging their obligation to promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally, and in their behavior towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public;
- 2) require a representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy for their legal workplace addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement;
- 3) require a representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to complete, every two years, an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment for their legal workplace, to be provided to the Law Society; and
- 4) encourage legal workplaces to conduct inclusion surveys by providing them with sample templates.

We are concerned that item 1) of Recommendation 3 is overly broad and has the potential to conflict with certain practice areas. For example, could a professional who advocates on behalf of a client find himself or herself offside this item because the client's interests do not "promote equality, diversity and inclusion"? Moreover, we question whether the requirement to adopt and to abide by such a statement of principles is necessary in light of Recommendation 1.

We also have concerns that the requirement in item 2) that each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario develop a human rights/diversity policy for their legal workplace by January 1, 2018 could be burdensome to smaller legal workplaces and may result in a lack of uniformity in such policies. We acknowledge the LSUC's stated intention to guide legal workplaces in the development of policies and to "develop resources, such as templates, guides and model policies." It is the TLA's view that the templates, guides and model policies need to be developed well in advance of the effective date of the requirement.

Similarly, we recommend that the LSUC create a template for the "equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment" referred to in item 3) of Recommendation 3 to encourage consistency of assessments and avoid placing undue burden on legal workplaces.

Recommendation 8 – Progressive Compliance Measures

The Law Society will consider developing and implementing progressive compliance measures for legal workplaces that do not comply with the requirements proposed in Recommendation 3 and/or legal workplaces that are identified as having systemic barriers to diversity and inclusion.

Recommendation 8 does not provide us sufficient information to provide constructive feedback. We request the opportunity to comment on the development of compliance measures by the LSUC in connection with this recommendation.

Recommendation 12 – Addressing Complaints of Systemic Discrimination

The Law Society, in light of the findings of this project and emerging issues in the professions, will:

- 1) review the function, processes and structure of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC), including considering effective ways for the DHC to address complaints of systemic discrimination;
- 2) revise the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, where appropriate, so that systemic discrimination and reprisal for complaints of discrimination and harassment are clearly identified as breaches of professional conduct requirements;
- 3) create effective ways for the Professional Regulation Division to address complaints of systemic discrimination; and
- 4) create a specialized and trained team to address complaints of discrimination.

Items 3) and 4) of Recommendation 12 also do not provide us sufficient information to provide constructive feedback. We request an opportunity to comment on the development of effective ways to address complaints of systemic discrimination and on the creation of a specialized team to address complaints of discrimination.

Furthermore, the TLA supports the motion to be made at Convocation to extend the implementation of recommendations for racialized licensees to all equality-seeking groups while continuing to ensure that the needs of racialized licensees are fully acknowledged and addressed.

The TLA appreciates the opportunity to comment on the Report and looks forward to a continuing dialogue with the LSUC as it continues to address systemic racism in the legal professions.

Yours very truly,

Dear Ms. Spears:

RE: Opinion on Working Group's Recommendations re Challenges Facing Racialized Licensees

The Law Society of Upper Canada ("Law Society") has asked us to provide a legal opinion on the following question in respect of its Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group Final Report, ("Final Report"):

Are any of the following recommendations – 3 (1), (2) and (3) – inconsistent with the rights and obligations of The Law Society of Upper Canada and its licensees under the Law Society Act, the Ontario Human Rights Code and/or the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

The recommendations constitute three subsections of Recommendation 3 in the Final Report dealing with:

The Adoption of Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Principles and Practices

The Law Society will:

- 1) require every licensee to adopt and to abide by a statement of principles acknowledging their obligation to promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally, and in their behaviour towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public;

- 2) require a representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy for their legal workplace addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement; and
- 3) require a representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to complete, every two years, an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment for their legal workplace, to be provided to the Law Society.

(Hereinafter the “Recommendations”)

Our opinion is organized as follows:

1. Executive Summary

The Law Society has identified a significant problem in the lawyer and paralegal professions: widespread barriers experienced by racialized licensees at all stages of their careers. In its Final Report, the Working Group noted, at page 4:

The qualitative and quantitative data the Working Group obtained from the engagement process identified widespread barriers experienced by racialized licensees within the legal professions at all stages of their careers.

The Working Group has proposed several recommendations, in particular, Recommendation 3, dealing with the Adoption of Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Principles and Practices. The Law Society has asked us to determine whether the three specific recommendations under Recommendation 3 are inconsistent with the Law Society Act (“LSA”), the Ontario Human Rights Code (“Code”), and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms (“Charter”). We have concluded as follows:

- Recommendation 3(1) is consistent with the rights and obligations of the Law Society and its licensees under the LSA, the Code, and the Charter. The Law Society has an obligation to promote human rights in the legal profession and licensees are already bound by human rights equality, diversity and inclusion principles under their respective professional rules of conduct and the Code.

The implementation challenge that we envisage is that, for in-house licensees or licensees working in government, their employer may already have a human rights policy in place so there may be inconsistencies between the employer’s policy and the licensee’s statement of principles. While we describe this as a “challenge,” the challenge may be more apparent than real.

- Recommendation 3(2) is consistent with the rights and obligations of the Law Society and its licensees under the LSA, the Code, and the Charter assuming that the “representative” referred to in the Recommendation is a licensee of the Law Society and assuming that the intended benefit of such a human rights/diversity policy is limited in its application to licensees only. We recommend that the Working Group amend this Recommendation to clarify the above limits and application of the Recommendation.

While we acknowledge that Recommendation 3(2) may face some implementation challenges, we do not see them as insurmountable. We note that Recommendation 3(2) uses the word “maintain,” which we interpret as meaning “maintenance of” or “providing support to.” However, “maintain” does not necessarily mean making decisions under the policy. We suggest that the measure of whether the representative is implementing and maintaining the human rights/diversity policy be based on effort and not purely on outcome.

- Recommendation 3(3) is consistent with the rights and obligations of the Law Society and its licensees under the LSA, the Code, and the Charter assuming that the “representative” referred to in the recommendation is a licensee of the Law Society and assuming that the intended benefit of the self-assessment is limited in its application to licensees only. We recommend that the Working Group amend this Recommendation to clarify the above limits and scope of application to the Recommendation.

We acknowledge that nothing in Recommendation 3(3) can compel an employer (who is not a licensee) to complete and submit a self-assessment for its workforce. Rather, this Recommendation simply requires a representative licensee in a given legal workplace of 10 licensees or more to conduct a self-assessment amongst licensees and report their findings to the Law Society. This is more akin to a licensee completing their annual report for the Law Society, but in a collaborative way with all other licensees in their workplace.

We determined that, under the LSA, the Law Society and its licensees have the following relevant rights and obligations:

- The Law Society has a duty to advance the cause of justice and the rule of law.
- The Law Society has a duty to facilitate access to justice for the people of Ontario.
- The Law Society has a duty to protect the public interest.
- The Law Society has a duty to act in a timely, open and efficient manner.
- Regulation should be proportionate to the regulatory objectives intended.
- Licensees have a duty to discharge all their professional responsibilities including to other members of the profession honourably and with integrity.
- Licensees have a special responsibility to recognize the diversity of the Ontario community and to respect human rights.
- Licensees have a duty to advance the goals of the legal profession.

- Lawyers should not hesitate to speak out against an injustice.
- Licensees have a special responsibility to respect the requirements of human rights including with respect to the professional employment of others in the profession and with respect to licensees' employment practices.
- The Law Society has historically acted to remove obstacles to the profession and to provide previously excluded groups the opportunity to become members of the profession.

The Law Society's regulatory authority under the LSA extends to regulating licensees. The Law Society does not have authority to regulate non-licensees or other types of enterprises. However, there is nothing in the LSA that prohibits the Law Society from regulating licensees that are employed "in-house" or in government legal departments.

Human rights law in Ontario is governed by the Code. The Code applies to every person in Ontario, including public and private institutions and businesses. The Code regulates conduct in certain social areas and in respect of certain prohibited grounds. It does not regulate thought, belief, or conscience. Individuals are free to think and believe what they want including disagreeing with the precepts of equality and non-discrimination in the Code; however, it is at the point of conduct that their freedom is constrained.

The Code has primacy over any other statute in Ontario (generally, in cases of conflict, other legislation must conform to the Code); and is viewed by the courts as being quasi-constitutional in nature because of its unique and fundamental importance.

The rights and obligations deriving from the Code that are applicable to the Law Society and its licensees are as follows:

- Licensees have the right to be free from discrimination on the basis of race (and any other enumerated ground of discrimination) in their employment (which includes hiring and promotion), in contracts (which might include partnership agreements), and in vocational associations (including membership in the Law Society). This right of a licensee to be free from discrimination in employment entails the corollary, namely, that employers of licensees have a duty under the Code to ensure a discrimination-free environment for its licensees.

- Licensees also have obligations not to discriminate against members of the public who seek out or retain their legal services, or with regard to one another in their employment.
- Licensees also have a right not to be forced to disclose a human rights ground, such as their sexual orientation, age or disability, since such disclosure would have a disproportionate impact on certain Code-protected groups and has, historically, led to discrimination.
- The Law Society has an obligation not to discriminate against its members. Under the Code, promoting equality, diversity and inclusion is not inconsistent with this obligation.

The Charter is part of the Constitution of Canada. It is the supreme law of the land and all federal and provincial/territorial laws, and government action under those laws, must comply with the Charter. Law societies may be subject to the Charter where they are exercising statutory authority. In Doré v Barreau du Québec (“Doré”), the Supreme Court directed that law societies must take Charter values into account in their discretionary regulatory decisions.

The Charter applies to the Law Society’s Recommendations and how they will impact licensees. Per Doré, a court or tribunal would examine whether the Law Society has sufficiently balanced its statutory objectives against licensees’ Charter rights and freedoms.

The Charter values that appear to be implicated are: freedom of conscience; freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression; freedom of association; right to liberty; and the right to equality. It is conceivable that a licensee may assert that some or all of the above constitutional rights and freedoms are compromised by the implementation of the Recommendations. However, the Recommendations sufficiently represent a balancing of the Law Society’s statutory objectives (which include ameliorating discrimination) and protecting licensees’ constitutional rights. If the Recommendations are challenged from the perspective that they constitute discrimination against non-equity seeking groups, the Law Society would likely be able to characterize its equity, diversity and inclusion initiatives as an ameliorative program, defensible under section 15(2) of the Charter.

Perfection can be the enemy of the good. The Law Society should be careful not to see only problems in the implementation of the Recommendations where, in fact, opportunities to make progress through the Recommendations exist.

2. Our Approach

We consider it helpful to indicate what our opinion entails. We are being asked about whether the Recommendations are inconsistent with the rights and obligations of the Law Society and its licensees under the three statutes. While the question does not ask us to opine directly on whether the Recommendations are workable in practice, our opinion ultimately entails an examination of the Law Society's regulatory reach, particularly beyond licensee firms and into corporations and governments where licensees work, yet where the Law Society has no control.

The Law Society is interested in knowing whether the Recommendations can be implemented given that the Law Society does not regulate non-licensees, yet the Recommendations appear on their face to require licensees to promote certain principles, develop / implement / maintain a policy, and report to the Law Society in respect of their "legal workplaces." We are asked whether the implementation of the Recommendations can be reconciled with the principle that the Law Society has no power to regulate non-licensees, corporations or governments.

Recommendations 3(2) and 3(3) refer specifically to "legal workplaces" which is a term that is not defined, including in any of the three statutes we were tasked with reviewing. In its Final Report, the Working Group noted an internal disagreement about the meaning of "legal workplace" and whether the Recommendations should apply in the same way to all types of legal workplaces:

Working Group members' opinions differ as to the definition of "legal workplace". The majority of Working Group members believe that all law firms, in-house legal departments, government legal departments, clinics and other practise settings in Ontario should be subject to the requirements outlined in the recommendations. Other members of the Working Group, however, believe that at this time, government legal departments and in-house legal departments should not be required to comply with the mandatory recommendations as government and in-house licensees are employees whose hiring, promotion and retention are client decisions. Government and in-house legal departments should, however, be encouraged to engage in the mandatory activities outlined in this report. The definition of "legal workplaces" used in the report is that of the majority perspective.<sup>1</sup>

In our legal review and analysis below, we bear in mind the above noted concern about the definition of “legal workplace” raised within the Working Group, and whether and how the Recommendations may apply to in-house counsel and licensees who work in government. It is vital to note that limiting and applying the Recommendations only to licensee firms misses the opportunity to effect change throughout the professions who work in diverse organizational settings. This was emphasized by the Working Group’s guiding principle:

The Working Group’s recommendations stem from an intention to create long lasting systemic change within the professions. The recommendations are put forward in an effort to support the Law Society’s ongoing commitment to ensure that both the law and the practice of law are reflective of all peoples in Ontario and that the professions are free of discrimination and harassment. The Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct speak to the special responsibility of lawyers and paralegals to adhere to the requirements of human rights laws in Ontario, including the obligation not to discriminate.<sup>2</sup>

We propose to look at the relevant rights and obligations under the three statutes first, and then apply those rights and obligations to the Recommendations we have been asked to review.

Unless otherwise noted, underlined passages indicate our own emphasis, as opposed to emphasis in the original.

3. The Law Society Act

A. Functions, Duties and Powers of the Law Society

The Law Society is a not-for-profit corporation that derives its authority from its enabling statute the Law Society Act.<sup>3</sup> The LSA creates a framework of authority for the Law Society to regulate lawyers and paralegals in Ontario by way of legislated functions, duties and powers, including the power to make by-laws.

Section 4.1 of the LSA sets out the Law Society’s functions:

4.1 It is a function of the Law Society to ensure that,

(a) all persons who practise law in Ontario or provide legal services in Ontario meet standards of learning, professional competence and professional conduct that are appropriate for the legal services they provide; and

(b) the standards of learning, professional competence and professional conduct for the provision of a particular legal service in a particular area of law apply equally to persons who practise law in Ontario and persons who provide legal services in Ontario.

Section 4.2 of the LSA sets out the principles to be applied by the Law Society:

4.2 In carrying out its functions, duties and powers under this Act, the Law Society shall have regard to the following principles:

1. The Law Society has a duty to maintain and advance the cause of justice and the rule of law.
2. The Law Society has a duty to act so as to facilitate access to justice for the people of Ontario.
3. The Law Society has a duty to protect the public interest.
4. The Law Society has a duty to act in a timely, open and efficient manner.
5. Standards of learning, professional competence and professional conduct for licensees and restrictions on who may provide particular legal services should be proportionate to the significance of the regulatory objectives sought to be realized.

We consider the Recommendations to fall within the Law Society's regulation of "professional conduct," although some may consider that the Recommendations relate as well to professional competence or standards of learning that are necessary for licensees in a pluralistic society.

We note that, with respect to section 4.2 of the LSA, the Law Society's duty is not just to maintain but also advance the cause of justice and the rule of law; and that it must do so in a timely, open and efficient manner. It appears that acting in an untimely manner, or simply maintaining the status quo which perpetuates injustice would be contrary to the principles that govern the Law Society in the conduct of its functions. Finally, on this point, we note that the Law Society should regulate in a manner proportionate to the significance of the regulatory objectives sought to be realized.

The recommendations we are asked to look at refer to a “licensee,” which is defined in the LSA as:

- (a) a person licensed to practise law in Ontario as a barrister and solicitor, or
- (b) a person licensed to provide legal services in Ontario.<sup>4</sup>

B. Rules of Conduct for Licensees

The Law Society’s Rules of Professional Conduct and Paralegal Rules of Conduct (collectively, the “Rules of Conduct”) set out the standards of professional conduct for lawyers and paralegals, respectively.<sup>5</sup>

The Rules of Conduct and their Commentaries indicate strong support for the principle that licensees have special duties and responsibilities in terms of recognizing diversity and respecting human rights. For example, the Rules of Professional Conduct state:

Rule 2.1-1 A lawyer has a duty to carry on the practice of law and discharge all responsibilities to clients, tribunals, the public and other members of the profession honourably and with integrity

Commentary

[4.1] A lawyer has special responsibilities by virtue of the privileges afforded the legal profession and the important role it plays in a free and democratic society and in the administration of justice, including a special responsibility to recognize the diversity of the Ontario community, to protect the dignity of individuals, and to respect human rights laws in force in Ontario.

The duty of a lawyer also extends to advancing the goals of the legal profession and improving the administration of justice.

<sup>5</sup> Under section 62(0.1) -10 of the LSA, Convocation may make by-laws regarding a Code of Professional Conduct and Ethics. Under section 120(b) of By-Law 3 (Bencher, Convocation and Committees), the Professional Regulations Committee has a mandate to provide policy options for Convocation’s approval in relation to the Rules of Professional Conduct. Under section 130-4 of By-Law 3, the Paralegal Standing Committee has the mandate to provide the equivalent for paralegals.

Rule 2.1-2 A lawyer has a duty to uphold the standards and reputation of the legal profession and to assist in the advancement of its goals, organizations and institutions.

Based on the concept that lawyers have greater responsibilities than private citizens and lawyers' special role in the community, lawyers' obligations to encourage public respect for, and to try to improve the administration of justice, extends beyond their professional activities.

Rule 5.6-1 A lawyer shall encourage public respect for and try to improve the administration of justice.

Commentary

[1] The obligation set out in the rule is not restricted to the lawyer's professional activities but is a general responsibility resulting from the lawyer's position in the community. A lawyer's responsibilities are greater than those of a private citizen. A lawyer should take care not to weaken or destroy public confidence in legal institutions or authorities by irresponsible allegations. The lawyer in public life should be particularly careful in this regard because the mere fact of being a lawyer will lend weight and credibility to public statements. Yet for the same reason, a lawyer should not hesitate to speak out against an injustice.

Non-Discrimination Rule: Rule 6.3.1 deals specifically with lawyers' special responsibility not to discriminate including with respect to the professional employment of licensees:

6.3.1-1 A lawyer has a special responsibility to respect the requirements of human rights laws in force in Ontario and, specifically, to honour the obligation not to discriminate on [grounds prohibited in the Code] with respect to professional employment of other lawyers, articulated students, or any other person or in professional dealings with other licensees or any other person.

Moreover, Rule 6.3.1 contains a comprehensive Commentary section, fleshing out a lawyer's human rights duties and responsibilities. Key points from the commentary are:

Commentary

[1] The Law Society acknowledges the diversity of the community of Ontario in which lawyers serve and expects them to respect the dignity and worth of all persons and to treat all persons equally without discrimination.

[2] This rule sets out the special role of the profession to recognize and protect the dignity of individuals and the diversity of the community in Ontario.

And, further, Rule 6.3.1 states:

Rule 6.3.1-2 A lawyer shall ensure that no one is denied services or receives inferior service on the basis of the grounds set out in this rule.

Rule 6.3.1-3 A lawyer shall ensure that their employment practices do not offend rule 6.3.1-1 and 6.3.1-2.

Section 2.03 of the Paralegal Rules of Conduct contains a similar requirement to acknowledge and abide by human rights laws in Ontario with respect to both the provision of services to the public and employment practices.

C. Judicial Commentary on the *Law Society Act

In Trinity Western University v The Law Society of Upper Canada,<sup>6</sup> the Divisional Court held that a complete reading of the LSA shows that the Law Society is empowered to carry out more functions than just the one set out in s. 4.1 and that:

[58] For all of these reasons, therefore, we conclude that the principles that are set out in s. 4.2, and that are to govern the respondent's exercise of its functions, duties and powers under the Law Society Act, are not restricted simply to standards of competence. Rather, they engage the respondent in a much broader spectrum of considerations with respect to the public interest when they are exercising their functions, duties and powers, including whether or not to accredit a law school.

[96] In addition to those realities, we are satisfied that, in carrying out its mandate under its enabling statute, the respondent, throughout its long history, has acted to remove obstacles based on considerations, other than ones based on merit, such as religious affiliation, race, and gender, so as to provide previously excluded groups the opportunity to obtain a legal education and thus become members of the legal profession in Ontario.

[97] In keeping with that tradition, throughout those many years, the respondent has acted to remove all barriers to entry to the legal profession save one – merit. It is the respondent's position that it is in the public interest to ensure that the legal profession is open to everyone. It views that approach as being fundamental to its functions. In adopting that position, the respondent says that it achieves two companion objectives. One is to ensure diversity in the legal profession. The other is that, if the legal profession is open to everyone then, perforce, it is open to "the best and the brightest".

On appeal of that decision, the Ontario Court of Appeal grappled with section 4.1 and 4.2 of the LSA, finding that:

[108] I agree with Ms. Kristjanson's analysis and the Divisional Court's conclusion. There is no wall between ss. 4.1 and 4.2 of the LSA. The LSUC has an obligation to govern the legal profession in the public interest: see Groia v. Law Society of Upper Canada, 2016 ONCA 471 (CanLII), at para. 89. In setting and maintaining standards of learning, professional competence and professional conduct under s. 4.1 of the LSA, the LSUC is entitled to do so against the backdrop of the composition of the legal profession, including the desirable goal of promoting a diverse profession.

[110] That the LSUC is also subject to the Charter and the HRC means that Charter and human rights values must inform how the LSUC pursues its stated objective of ensuring equal access to the profession.<sup>7</sup>

The Court of Appeal also noted a key component of the Divisional Court's reasons that:

...in assessing the "public interest", the LSUC is entitled to consider that the impact of TWU's Community Covenant on members of the LGBTQ community is contrary to the equality rights protections in the Charter and the HRC;<sup>8</sup>

Similarly, we might say that in its duty to advance the cause of justice, the Law Society is entitled to consider that the impact of systemic barriers on racialized licensees in the legal professions is contrary to their equality rights protections in the Charter and the Code.

<sup>7</sup> Trinity Western University v The Law Society of Upper Canada, 2016 ONCA 518 ["TWU"].

D. Summary of the Law Society Act

Our review of the LSA, the Rules of Conduct and relevant judicial commentary indicates that:

- The Law Society has a duty to advance the cause of justice and the rule of law.
- The Law Society has a duty to facilitate access to justice for the people of Ontario.
- The Law Society has a duty to protect the public interest.
- The Law Society has a duty to act in a timely, open and efficient manner.
- Regulation should be proportionate to the regulatory objectives intended.
- Licensees have a duty to discharge all their professional responsibilities including to other members of the profession honourably and with integrity.
- The Law Society's exercise of its functions, duties and powers are not restricted simply to standards of competence and engage a much broader spectrum of considerations with respect to the public interest.
- Licensees have a special responsibility to recognize the diversity of the Ontario community and to respect human rights.
- Licensees have a duty to advance the goals of the legal profession.
- Lawyers should not hesitate to speak out against an injustice.
- Licensees have a special responsibility to respect the requirements of human rights including with respect to professional employment of others in the profession and with respect to licensees' employment practices.
- With the desirable and legitimate goal of ensuring diversity in the profession, the Law Society has historically acted to remove obstacles to the profession and to provide previously excluded groups the opportunity to become members of the profession.

4. The Ontario Human Rights Code

Human rights law in Ontario is governed by the Human Rights Code.<sup>9</sup> The Code applies to every person in Ontario, including both public and private institutions and businesses. "Person" is broadly defined and includes an individual as well as a corporation.<sup>10</sup>

The Preamble to the Code states that it is public policy in Ontario to recognize the dignity and worth of every person and to provide for equal rights and opportunities without discrimination.

The Code aims to create a climate of understanding and mutual respect for the dignity and worth of each person.

The Code provides protection from discrimination in the following five “social areas”:

- employment
- goods, services and facilities
- accommodation (housing)
- membership in a vocational association (including a self-governing profession)
- contracts

There are 17 “prohibited grounds” of discrimination under the Code:

- race, ancestry, place of origin, colour, ethnic origin
- citizenship
- creed
- sex
- sexual orientation
- gender identity
- gender expression
- disability
- age
- marital status
- family status
- receipt of public assistance (in accommodation only)
- record of offences (in employment only)

The Code regulates conduct in the above social areas and in respect of the prohibited grounds. It does not regulate thought, belief, or conscience. This point cannot be overstated. Individuals are free to think and believe what they want including disagreeing with the precepts of equality and non-discrimination in the Code; however, it is at the point of conduct that their freedom is constrained. The Supreme Court of Canada explained this succinctly: “The freedom to hold beliefs is broader than the freedom to act on them.”<sup>11</sup> In other words, people are entitled to hold prejudicial views; but they are not entitled to act upon them (i.e. discriminate) in the social areas identified in the Code.

The Code has primacy over any other statute in Ontario (generally, in cases of conflict, other legislation must conform to the Code); and is viewed by the courts as being quasi-constitutional in nature because of its unique and fundamental importance.<sup>12</sup>

The Code prohibits both direct and indirect discrimination. Section 9 of the Code provides that: “No person shall infringe or do, directly or indirectly, anything that infringes a right under this Part.”

The sections of the Ontario Code that are germane to this opinion are:

- Section 1 (equal treatment without discrimination in services);
- Section 5 (equal treatment without discrimination in employment);
- Section 6 (equal treatment without discrimination in the area of vocational associations, which includes membership in a self-governing profession);
- Section 14 (special programs)

The Code makes specific provision for the implementation of a special program designed to ameliorate discrimination and disadvantage. Section 14 of the Code states:

14. (1) A right under Part I is not infringed by the implementation of a special program designed to relieve hardship or economic disadvantage or to assist disadvantaged persons or groups to achieve or attempt to achieve equal opportunity or that is likely to contribute to the elimination of the infringement of rights under Part I.

In Carter v Elementary Teachers Federation of Ontario, the Human Rights Tribunal of Ontario held:

[24] Section 14 of the Code is a complete defence to an allegation of discrimination when the challenge to the program comes from someone whose needs do not fall within the purpose or underlying rationale of the program (Ball v. Ontario (Community and

(“Roberts”), at page 401, the court stated that the exemption of section 14 is invoked when the challenge to the program comes from a member of a historically privileged group. A special program can only be challenged by a member of a disadvantaged group that the special program is designed to assist, but who is otherwise excluded from that program (on the basis of age, for example).<sup>13</sup> (Emphasis in original)

The rights and obligations deriving from the Code that are applicable to the Law Society and its licensees are as follows:

- Licensees have the right to be free from discrimination on the basis of race (and any other enumerated ground of discrimination) in their employment (which includes hiring and promotion), in contracts (which might include partnership agreements), and in vocational associations (including membership in the Law Society). This right of a licensee to be free from discrimination in employment entails the corollary, namely, that employers of licensees have a duty under the Code to ensure a discrimination-free environment for its licensees.<sup>14</sup>
- Licensees also have obligations not to discriminate against members of the public who seek out or retain their legal services, or with regard to one another in their employment.
- Licensees also have a right not to be forced to disclose a human rights ground, such as their sexual orientation, age or disability, since such disclosure would have a disproportionate impact on certain Code-protected groups and has, historically, led to discrimination. In the section below dealing with Recommendation 3(3) (self-assessment survey) we deal with the question of whether asking individuals to self-disclose is inconsistent with the Code.
- The Law Society has an obligation not to discriminate against its members. In the section below dealing with Recommendation 3(1) (adopt and abide by a set of principles) we deal with the question of whether this obligation extends to “promoting equality, diversity and inclusion” in the professions.

5. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms

The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms<sup>15</sup> is part of the Constitution of Canada. It is the supreme law of the land and all federal and provincial/territorial laws, and government action under those laws, must comply with the Charter. The Charter does not directly regulate private activity or activity where there is no state involvement. Law societies and quasi-governmental institutions like universities may be subject to the Charter where they are found to be implementing a specific governmental policy or program, or exercising statutory authority.<sup>16</sup>

In Mahmud Jamal’s legal opinion on the Charter,<sup>17</sup> provided to Convocation in the context of TWU’s request for accreditation, he explained how the Law Society may be subject to the Charter:

The Charter may apply to an organization such as the Society as part of the apparatus of government or as a delegate of statutory authority. Even though the Society is insufficiently linked to or controlled by government to be considered part of its apparatus (given the independence of the bar), the Charter applies to the Society when it exercises its statutory discretion to set the requirement for licensing under the LSA. The Society must in these instances reach a decision that is consistent with the Charter.

Mr. Jamal’s opinion went on to describe the impact of the Supreme Court’s decision in Doré v Barreau du Québec:<sup>18</sup>

In Doré, the Court had to decide whether the Disciplinary Council of the Barreau du Québec had failed to respect a lawyer’s freedom of expression under s. 2(b) of the Charter when it decided to reprimand him for writing an inflammatory letter to a judge

after a court hearing. In addressing this issue, the Court took the opportunity to clarify “how to protect Charter guarantees and the values they reflect in the context of adjudicated administrative decisions.”

The Court held that administrative decision-makers must consider the Charter when they exercise discretion granted under statutory authority. The Court stated that “administrative decision-makers must act consistently with the values underlying the grant of discretion, including Charter values.” The Court embraced what it called a “richer conception of administrative law, under which discretion is exercised ‘in light of constitutional guarantees and the values they reflect’”, such that “administrative decisions are always required to consider fundamental values.” The Court stated that “administrative bodies are empowered, and indeed required, to consider Charter values within their scope of expertise.”

Doré also provides guidance on how the Charter applies when a decision-maker exercises discretion granted under statutory authority. The Court stated that, fundamentally, a statutory decision-maker must “balance the Charter values with the statutory objectives.” This involves a two-step process:

At the first stage, “the decision-maker should first consider the statutory objectives.”

At the second stage, “the decision-maker should ask how the Charter value at issue will best be protected in view of the statutory objectives.” This “requires the decision-maker to balance the severity of the interference of the Charter protection with the statutory objectives.”

The Court explained that this decision-making process is fundamentally about ensuring “balance and proportionality.” That is, the decision-maker must strike “an appropriate balance between rights and objectives” to ensure that the “rights at issue are not unreasonably limited.” Put differently, the decision-maker must ensure that any decision “interferes with the relevant Charter guarantee no more than is necessary given the statutory objectives.”

In Doré and TWU, the Barreau du Québec and the Law Society respectively were making specific discretionary decisions that would directly impact a licensee (or potential licensee). Here, the Law Society is engaged in a similar kind of exercise, the imposition of conditions on licensees in relation to their acknowledgment and promotion of equality, diversity and inclusion principles, and certain reporting requirements. Accordingly, we believe that Doré applies.

The first stage of the analysis, considering the statutory objectives, has already been done (see the above section on Summary of the LSA). The Law Society is pursuing a statutory mandate to advance justice in the public interest to eradicate barriers for racialized licensees, and others, in the legal professions.

The second stage involves identifying the Charter values at issue and determining if the Law Society has struck the appropriate balance to ensure Charter rights are not unreasonably limited. In Doré, the Supreme Court clarified that, to determine whether administrative decision-makers have exercised their statutory discretion in accordance with Charter protections, the review should be in accordance with an administrative law approach (set out in Doré), not a s. 1 Oakes analysis. The standard of review is reasonableness.

The Charter values (and corresponding Charter sections) that appear to be implicated are:

- Freedom of conscience (s. 2a)
- Freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression (s. 2b)
- Freedom of association (s. 2d)
- Right to liberty (s. 7); and
- Right to Equality (s.15).

It is conceivable that a licensee may assert that some or all of the above constitutional rights and freedoms are compromised by the implementation of the Recommendations. The licensee could assert that, pursuant to the Recommendations, they must abide by a statement of principles that they may not believe in; hire, promote and associate with licensees they may otherwise avoid; and complete certain reporting activities that they would rather not. Further, the licensee may take the position that the Recommendations favour racialized and/or other equity seeking groups and, in that sense, discriminate against other licensees contrary to the equality provisions of the Charter.

On the last point, we are confident that the Law Society would avoid liability and be able to characterize its Recommendations as an ameliorative program, defensible under section 15(2) of the Charter. In R v Kapp, the Supreme Court held that:

[3] ...where a program makes a distinction on one of the grounds enumerated under s. 15 or an analogous ground but has as its object the amelioration of the conditions of a disadvantaged group, s. 15's guarantee of substantive equality is furthered, and the claim of discrimination must fail. ...<sup>19</sup>

With respect to the other Charter rights and freedoms, the question is whether the Recommendations strike the appropriate balance between removing barriers for entry and progression in the professions and licensees' constitutional freedoms. We think they do. The Divisional Court in Ontario, albeit in the TWU context, has already spoken favourably about the Law Society attempting to eradicate discrimination in its ranks:

[116] In exercising its mandate to advance the cause of justice, to maintain the rule of law, and to act in the public interest, the respondent was entitled to balance the applicants' rights to freedom of religion with the equality rights of its future members, who include members from two historically disadvantaged minorities (LGBTQ persons and women). It was entitled to consider the impact on those equality rights of accrediting TWU's law school, and thereby appear to give recognition and approval to institutional discrimination against those same minorities. Condoning discrimination can be ever much as harmful as the act of discrimination itself.

We provide further reasons for why the Recommendations likely satisfy the Doré requirement to balance statutory objective with Charter values in our discussion of the specific Recommendations below.

In summary, the Charter applies to the Recommendations and how they will impact licensees. Per Doré, a court or tribunal would examine whether the Law Society has sufficiently balanced its statutory objectives against licensees' Charter rights and freedoms. If the Recommendations are challenged from the perspective that they constitute discrimination against non-equity seeking groups, the Law Society would likely be able to characterize its equity, diversity and inclusion initiatives as an ameliorative program, defensible under section 15(2).

6. Analysis

Are any of the following recommendations – 3 (1), (2) and (3) – inconsistent with the rights and obligations of The Law Society of Upper Canada and its licensees under the Law Society Act, the Ontario Human Rights Code and/or the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

In this section we apply the rights and obligations of the Law Society and its licensees in the LSA, Code, and Charter to determine whether or not the Recommendations are inconsistent with these rights and obligations. We also identify any implementation challenges.

A. Recommendation 3(1)

The Law Society will... require every licensee to adopt and to abide by a statement of principles acknowledging their obligation to promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally, and in their behaviour towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public.

In our view, there is nothing inconsistent with Recommendation 3(1) having regard to the rights and obligations of the Law Society and its licensees under the LSA, Code, or Charter. The reality is that licensees are already bound by human rights equality, diversity and inclusion principles under the LSA, lawyer and paralegal Rules, and the Code. What Recommendation 3(1) would do, is:

- i. Require licensees to adopt a statement of principles regarding their own behaviour;
- ii. Require licensees to abide by and acknowledge their own statement of principles;
- iii. Require that the statement of principles acknowledges the obligation is to promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally; and
- iv. Specifically in their behaviour towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public.

We deal with each of these aspects in turn to determine if the proposal is inconsistent with the three statutes or raises implementation challenges.

i) Require licensees to adopt a statement of principles regarding their own behaviour

The Law Society is within its authority to require the adoption of a statement of principles since section 62 of the LSA provides Convocation with the power to make By-Laws including with respect to “prescribing oaths and affirmations for applicants for a license” and “authorizing and providing for the preparation, publication and distribution of a code of professional conduct and ethics.” By-Law 4 sets out the general requirements for issuing a license, which includes an applicant taking an oath.<sup>20</sup>

Furthermore, By-Law 3 of the Law Society creates and empowers the Professional Regulation Committee and Paralegal Committee to recommend, for Convocation’s approval, policy options in relation to the regulation of licensees, and creates and empowers the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee to develop policy options for the promotion of equity and diversity related to the practice of law and provision of legal services in Ontario.<sup>21</sup> In our view, the Law Society does not need to create a new By-Law specifically for a “Human Rights Statement of Principles.”

Conceptually, requiring licensees to adopt a human rights statement of principles is likely to make tangible, more personal and more readily accessible what is currently a generic human rights obligation towards the professions that already exists in the LSA, lawyer and paralegal Rules, and the Code.

ii) Require licensees to abide by and acknowledge their own statement of principles

Under this Recommendation, not only must licensees adopt a human rights statement of principles, but they must also abide by it. This represents licensees having to “walk the walk” in respect of their human rights obligations towards the professions. Once again, we do not see this as inconsistent, in any way, with licensees’ current obligations as outlined above, except the obligations would be specified in an “in-house” statement of principles document, not located in some regulatory document maintained by the Law Society.

iii) Require that the statement of principles acknowledges the obligation to promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally

The Final Report has identified a significant problem of system discrimination in the lawyer and paralegal professions:

The qualitative and quantitative data the Working Group obtained from the engagement process identified widespread barriers experienced by racialized licensees within the legal professions at all stages of their careers.<sup>22</sup>

Recommendation 3(1) represents the Law Society taking action on this problem by requiring that every licensee effectively promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally. At first glance, this particular aspect of the Recommendation gave us pause. We wondered whether the obligation on licensees to “promote” equality, diversity and inclusion is something wholly different than a mere obligation to not discriminate; and further, we were uncertain what promoting equality, diversity and inclusion “generally” meant (discussed below).

We concluded that promoting means “to encourage” and encouraging equality, diversity and inclusion is indeed something more than not discriminating. It connotes taking an active, not passive, role. However, given statutory mandates to “advance the cause of justice,” “act in a timely manner,” and act “in the public interest” nothing in this Recommendation was inconsistent with the three statutes. We also do not think that the language of “promoting equality, diversity and inclusion” is so vague as to set an impossible standard of professional regulation. The Rules of Professional Conduct, for instance, contain other terms such as acting “honourably and with integrity,” which similarly have a broad meaning.

Recall that the Commentary to the non-discrimination Rule 6.3.1 speaks of “the special role of the profession to recognize and protect the dignity of individuals and the diversity of the community in Ontario,” and that Rule 6.3.1-2 requires that lawyers ensure that their employment practices do not offend the non-discrimination Rule. Also recall the Ontario Court of Appeal’s language in TWU that “the LSUC is entitled [in setting and maintaining standards of professional conduct] to do so against the back drop of the composition of the legal profession, including the desirable goal of promoting a diverse profession.”<sup>23</sup> Furthermore, since the Law Society has identified systemic barriers facing licensees as a significant problem, and eradicating those barriers as a goal, lawyers have a duty to advance that goal (Rule 2.1-2). Mandating promotion of equality, diversity and inclusion is within the scope of permissible regulation, not something outside of it.

iv) Promoting equality, diversity and inclusion “generally” versus “in their behaviour towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public”

We had difficulties interpreting the word “generally” in the Recommendation. Does the Recommendation mean that licensees have a general responsibility to promote equality, diversity and inclusion beyond their professional activities? This would be akin to a lawyer’s obligation, resulting from the lawyer’s position in the community, to encourage public respect for and to try to improve the administration of justice.<sup>24</sup>

Conversely, does the Recommendation mean that licensees must promote equality, diversity and inclusion in their professional practices only? Or does the word “generally” refer to the breadth and variety of the groups that are to be assisted under promotion of equality, diversity and inclusion? For instance, even though the focus of the Final Report is on racialized licensees, perhaps the Law Society is encouraging licensees to think of equality, diversity and inclusion in all its facets (gender, regional, income, etc.). Or alternatively, is the juxtaposition of “generally” and what follows meant to suggest that licensees have an obligation to promote equality, diversity and inclusion in their behaviour and other people’s behaviour towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public?

We recommend that the Law Society clear up this ambiguity but, without necessarily knowing the Law Society’s exact intention here, we feel that the present language is not inconsistent with the LSA or the Code.

With respect to the Charter, Recommendation 3(1) appears to balance the Law Society’s statutory objectives sufficiently with licensees’ constitutional rights and freedoms. The words “acknowledging their obligation to promote” suggest that freedom of conscience, and freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression are all constrained. However given that:

- equality and non-discrimination (s.15) is a Charter value itself;
- s.15(2) of the Charter permits an ameliorative program to combat discrimination;
- the LSA already incorporates a balancing requirement whereby professional regulation for licensees must “be proportionate to the significance of the regulatory objectives sought to be realized”;

- the statutory mandate of the Law Society includes non-discrimination as per the Code, which is quasi-constitutional legislation; and
- the special responsibility of licensees to respect human rights including with respect to professional employment of others in the profession, it appears that the Recommendation is not a disproportionate response to a serious problem.

The Law Society is not ordering licensees, as a condition of their license, to hire and promote racialized lawyers and paralegals. Rather, the Law Society is requiring licensees to adopt and abide by a set of principles which will inform how they approach recruitment, retention and promotion decisions. Systemically, Recommendation 3(1) is designed to create a new framework where licensees adopt a set of principles that is more likely to reduce or remove barriers for racialized licensees and other equity seeking groups in the legal professions, but it does not direct a particular hiring or promotion outcome in any given case.

The implementation challenge that we envisage is that, for in-house licensees or licensees working in government, their employer may already have a human rights policy in place so there may be inconsistencies between the employer's policy and the licensees' statement of principles. While we describe this as a "challenge," the challenge may be more apparent than real.

First, we assume that any human rights policy will promote ("encourage") equality. We cannot imagine a so-called human rights policy that promotes "inequality." Second, while many institutional human rights policies may not necessarily promote diversity and inclusion, it would be surprising if the licensees' new Law Society obligation to promote diversity and inclusion contradicts the corporation's or government's human rights policy. Finally, federal, provincial and municipal governments all now have diversity and inclusion principles so, upon closer examination, we do not believe that the implementation of this Recommendation places the licensee, or for that matter their employer, in conflict.<sup>25</sup>

We repeat, however, that in implementing this Recommendation the Law Society is not regulating the employer of the licensee. Instead, the Law Society is imposing upon licensees a new obligation, as per Recommendation 3(1), that is based on a duty that already exists arising from, inter alia, the Non-Discrimination Rule (Rule 6.3.1): a special responsibility to respect the requirements of human rights including with respect to the professional employment of others in the profession and with respect to licensees' employment practices.

B. Recommendation 3(2)

The Law Society will... require a representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy for their legal workplace addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement.

In our opinion, Recommendation 3(2) is consistent with the LSA, Code, and Charter assuming that the "representative" referred to in the recommendation is a licensee of the Law Society and assuming that the intended benefit of such a human rights/diversity policy is limited in its application to licensees only. We recommend that the Working Group amend this Recommendation to clarify the above limits and application of the Recommendation.

There are a variety of examples in the law where an employer is required to develop and implement a workplace policy. The Occupational Health and safety Act, for example, requires that an employer prepare policies addressing workplace violence and harassment, including workplace sexual harassment.<sup>26</sup> The Accessibility for Ontarians with Disabilities Act, 2005, requires certain organizations to develop, implement and maintain accessibility standards for persons with disabilities.<sup>27</sup> We note that there will be a subset of licensees in Ontario who work for federally regulated entities or the federal government that are already subject to the federal Employment Equity Act. The Employment Equity Act seeks to achieve employment equity in private sector employers as well as portions of the federal public administration in part through instituting "positive policies and practices... as will ensure that persons in designated groups achieve a degree of representation in each occupational group in the employer's workforce...."<sup>28</sup>

The Ontario Code has no such requirement to develop and implement a human rights or diversity policy. Notwithstanding this lack of statutory obligation, in our opinion it is not inconsistent with the Code for the Law Society to be proactive and require certain legal workplaces to do so.

First, the Ontario Human Rights Commission (the “Commission”) strongly encourages organizations to have an internal human rights policy for their workplace and the Commission has prepared two documents to assist organizations with developing human rights policies and procedures.<sup>29</sup>

Second, in the Human Rights Tribunal of Ontario’s (“Tribunal”) Form 2 (Response to an Application under Section 34 of the Human Rights Code), the Tribunal explicitly asks organizational respondents whether or not they have internal human rights policies related to the alleged discrimination.

Third, section 45.2 of the Code vests the Tribunal with a remedial power to make an order in the public interest and aimed at future compliance with the Code. In practice, this often translates into an order requiring an employer that is found to have violated a right under the Code to develop and implement a human rights policy if it does not already have one.

Thus, we can take from the above that the creation of a human rights and diversity policy under Recommendation 3(2) is consistent with the Code.

We also believe that Recommendation 3(2) represents a reasonable balancing between the Law Society’s statutory objectives, including with respect to advancing human rights, and licensees’ Charter rights. We do not take a position on what number of licensees should be present in each legal workplace before the obligation to maintain a human rights/diversity policy is engaged. However, for reasons similar to those explained in regards to Recommendation 3(1), we believe that Recommendation 3(2) is not inconsistent with the Charter. Requiring a group of licensees in a legal workplace to develop, implement and maintain a policy, while constraining their Charter liberty rights, among others, does not seem to attack the core of an individual’s liberty interests. Put another way, if a licensee were to define his or her liberty interest as “the right to do whatever I want to in my legal workplace,” even in the face of non-discrimination laws, that liberty interest is not the kind that has enjoyed much protection at law.

To the extent that someone may object to this requirement, the Law Society may look to avail itself of the Special Program exemption under the Code or the protection of section 15(2) under the Charter.

In summary, nothing in this Recommendation is inconsistent with the LSA, the Code, or the Charter so long as the representative in question is a licensee.

Notwithstanding our view that this Recommendation is consistent with the three statutes, we wish to comment on the issue of the Recommendation applying to a “representative of each legal workplace... to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy for their legal workplace....”

First, the Law Society has regulatory authority over licensees only. To the extent that this Recommendation purports to regulate a non-licensee “representative” it goes beyond the Law Society’s scope of authority. Thus, we recommend that the Working Group amend the wording of this recommendation to clarify that a “representative” must be a licensee.

Second, as noted above and in the Final Report, the term “legal workplace” is not defined in the LSA and remains a contentious term within the Working Group. We note that Recommendations 3(2) and 3(3) use the terminology “their legal workplace.” This suggests that the target of the Recommendations 3(2) and 3(3) is, or ought to be, the licensees in a licensee firm, corporation or government. With respect to Recommendation 3(2), once there are more than 10 licensees in an Ontario workplace (howsoever defined), the Recommendation would require that a licensee representative (i) develop; (ii) implement; and (iii) maintain a human rights/diversity policy for the benefit of the licensees in that workplace; (iv) with the specification that a minimum standard for the content of the human rights/diversity policy is that it address fair recruitment, retention and advancement.

We see the implementation of Recommendation 3(2) occurring along a spectrum: the further one moves away from law firms / paralegal firms, and the more employers object to the “licensees only” human right/diversity policy, the greater the challenge.

Let's start with the easy end of the spectrum: Recommendation 3(2) applying to a firm of lawyers and/or paralegals. The Law Society clearly regulates licensees so when the representative licensee is developing, implementing and maintaining the human rights/diversity policy, as required by the Law Society, the representative's actions can speak to and for the entire organization made up of licensees.

Moving further along the spectrum we next envisage the example of licensees employed by the Government of Ontario, which has its own human rights, diversity and inclusion principles and policies. There, the Law Society is not purporting to regulate the government, however, under Recommendation 3(2) a representative of those licensees (or multiple representatives if there are multiple workplaces) would be charged with developing, implementing and maintaining a human rights/diversity policy for those licensees which may or may not "bump up" against the government's human rights policy. While this scenario is clearly different than the law firm scenario, the implementation challenges may not be all that difficult if, in practice, it means that the representative can adopt or "tweak and adopt" the government's human rights/diversity policy assuming that the government's policy addresses "fair recruitment, retention and advancement" practices.

Moving even further along the spectrum, let's use the example of a large private corporation with 15 licensees with no human rights/diversity policy. In the extreme scenario, the corporate employer may reject outright and prohibit a licensee from developing, implementing and maintaining a human rights/diversity policy for licensees at its workplace. However, the employer would still be legally bound by the Code to ensure its employment practices are non-discriminatory, which, in effect, would require substantive compliance by the employer with the "unwritten" policy. We would envisage that the resolution of this issue may be left to discussions amongst the representative, the licensees, the Law Society and the corporation. We see outright non-cooperation with the Law Society's Recommendation 3(2) and the failure of a resolution a rather farfetched scenario.

In a less extreme scenario, while we do not think that the representative "developing" a policy just for the 15 licensees presents much of an issue, the employer may raise an issue around who controls the implementation of the policy; that is, the representative's vision of what that the policy means for the corporation's employment practices may diverge from the corporation's vision. We note that Recommendation 3(2) uses the word "maintain," which we interpret as meaning "maintenance of" or "providing support to." However, "maintain" does not necessarily mean making decisions under the policy. But even if we were to assume that "maintain" included a decision-making role, we think the representative's role would be advisory and not necessarily determinative. For instance, with respect to the promotion of a racialized lawyer to a General Counsel position, the representative may, on balance, believe that the racialized lawyer is deserving of the position including based on an interpretation of the representative's human rights/diversity policy, whereas the corporation may see things differently. Does this mean that if the corporation places another candidate in the General Counsel position that the representative has failed to "implement and maintain" the licensees' human rights/diversity policy? We think not.

In both corporate employer scenarios described above, we believe that the concept of best efforts or, in the alternative, reasonable efforts, as opposed to outcome should be the correct measure of whether the representative has, in fact, complied with their regulatory obligation.

So, while we acknowledge that Recommendation 3(2) may face some implementation challenges, we do not see them as insurmountable so long as:

- (a) The representative is a licensee;
- (b) The target or beneficiaries of the human rights/diversity policy are only licensees; and
- (c) The measure of whether the representative is implementing and maintaining the human rights/diversity policy is based on effort and not purely on outcome.

We think that the Law Society should be candid about the impact and cultural change that it seeks to achieve by the implementation of Recommendation 3(2): requiring all entities that employ licensees, including corporations and governments, to use the proposed human rights/diversity policy and thereby be more self-conscious about the impact of their recruitment, retention and advancement decisions on racialized licensees. However, while this is the goal, it does not mean that the Law Society is now regulating these entities. The effects of the Recommendation should be distinguished from the Recommendation itself, which is limited in scope to licensees.

C. Recommendation 3(3)

The Law Society will... require a representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to complete, every two years, an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment for their legal workplace, to be provided to the Law Society.

In our opinion, Recommendation 3(3) is consistent with the LSA, Code, and Charter assuming that the “representative” referred to in the recommendation is a licensee of the Law Society and assuming that the intended benefit of the self-assessment is limited in its application to licensees only. We recommend that the Working Group amend this recommendation to clarify the above limits and scope of application to the Recommendation.

The Recommendation raises a few questions, including whether the intention is for a representative to complete a self-assessment of only licensees for their legal workplace, or of all employees at a legal workplace; would this create a mandatory requirement on licensees to answer the self-assessment or can a licensee opt not to answer, in similar fashion to the voluntary self-assessment contained in a licensee’s annual report?

In its Final Report, the Working Group provided further insight into the motivation behind and intention of this Recommendation:

- Legal workplaces would report to the Law Society on whether they had completed the self-assessment and, if not, explain their reasons for not having done so
- Recommendation 3(3) stems from an intention to have legal workplaces engage in dialogue and reflection on the current state of diversity and inclusion within their workplace, and an intention to encourage legal workplaces to work proactively to advance diversity and inclusion efforts<sup>30</sup>

To the extent that this recommendation would make it mandatory for every licensee (in a legal workplace of 10 or more licensees) to disclose personal information, it may run afoul of the Code unless they can opt out.

The Law Society already has a self-assessment demographic survey for licensees, but it qualifies the survey with it being voluntary, confidential and anonymous.<sup>31</sup> The survey asks about a licensee’s Francophone status, Indigenous status, ethnic identity, religion or creed, disability status, and sexual orientation. For each question there is an option to select “I do not wish to answer.” This type of survey is not inconsistent with either the Code or the Charter. And, if this type of survey qualifies as “completing” a self-assessment for a legal workplace, then there should be no concern.

<sup>31</sup> The Demographic Survey is part of the Law Society’s Lawyer Annual Report and the Law Society’s Equity Initiatives Department, made pursuant to section 62 of the LSA and By-law 8. Convocation approved the inclusion of the voluntary question in these reports at its May 2009 meeting.

It is also the view of the Ontario Human Rights Commission that seeking such demographic information is not a violation of the Code. The Commission makes recommendations for how to undertake such data collection to ensure it is compliant with the Code.<sup>32</sup> The Commission makes the following recommendations to collecting data in a Code-consistent way:

- Clearly set out a purpose that is consistent with the Code such as an intention to assist disadvantaged licensees in the profession;
- Advise why such information is being gathered and its potential uses;
- Inform how the data will be collected, steps that will be taken to protect privacy and confidentiality, benefits of collecting data, and progress reached in achieving stated goals and objectives;
- Consult with affected communities about the need for data collection and appropriate methodology;
- Use the least intrusive means that most respects the dignity and privacy of individuals: one means is self-identification, another is observation through a trained employee or external expert;
- Assure anonymity;
- Distinguish between collection, use and disclosure; and
- Comply with freedom of information and privacy protection legislation.

With respect to the Charter, Recommendation 3(3) appears to be very reasonable when it requires, only once every two years, the completion of an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment. It seems a stretch for a licensee to assert that their Charter liberty interest or freedom of conscience is constrained in a disproportionate manner.

We acknowledge that nothing in Recommendation 3(3) can compel an employer (who is not a licensee) to complete and submit a self-assessment for its workforce. Rather, this Recommendation simply requires a representative licensee in a given legal workplace of 10 licensees or more to conduct a self-assessment amongst licensees and report their findings to the Law Society. There is nothing inconsistent in this Recommendation with respect to the Law

Society or its licensees' rights and obligations under the three statutes. We do not see the concern that requiring licensees in non-law firm settings somehow overreaches on the Law Society's regulatory authority; or that this Recommendation in any way places an obligation on non-licensees or their employer. Rather, this is more akin to a licensee completing their annual report for the Law Society, but in a collaborative way with all other licensees in their workplace.

7. Conclusion

The process of determining whether the Recommendations are inconsistent with the LSA, the Code and the Charter should begin by acknowledging the reality of the situation. That reality, according to the Final Report, is “widespread barriers experienced by racialized licensees within the legal professions at all stages of their careers”<sup>33</sup> As the Divisional Court noted in TWU, “condoning discrimination can be ever much as harmful as the act of discrimination itself.”<sup>34</sup>

It is unlikely that most licensees intend to discriminate. Yet, it is the impact of conduct on protected groups and not intention that counts. The Final Report concluded that systemic barriers for racialized licensees continue to persist. The Recommendations represent the Working Group's proposal to do something about the problem consistent with the Law Society's obligation to advance the cause of justice and the rule of law in the public interest. Whereas constraints and implementation challenges do exist, in terms of how far the Law Society can go, our review of the Recommendations suggests that they do not cross the line into impermissible professional regulation. They are not inconsistent with the LSA, the Code or the Charter. Some of the implementation challenges are more apparent than real and, in the most challenging scenario where employers and representatives disagree on the outcome of employment decisions, it does not mean that the representative has necessarily failed to abide by their professional obligation.

Perfection can be the enemy of the good. The Law Society should be careful not to see only problems in the implementation of the Recommendations where, in fact, opportunities to make progress through the Recommendations exist.

We hope that the Law Society will find our opinion of assistance in their upcoming deliberations.

Pursuant to a notice of motion provided November 9, 2016, it was moved by Ms. Murchie, seconded by Ms. St. Lewis, that as it moves forward with implementation of the recommendations for racialized licensees, the Law Society will ensure that the policies, procedures, measures and initiatives are extended as appropriate to all equality-seeking groups while continuing to ensure that the needs of racialized licensees are fully acknowledged and addressed.

Carried

The Treasurer thanked members of the Working Group and staff for their hard work on this initiative.

THE LAW SOCIETY OF UPPER CANADA

Notice of Motion made pursuant to Section 93 of By-Law 3 [Benchers, Convocation and Committees]

Notice is hereby given of the following motion to be made at Convocation on December 2, 2016

Whereas the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group (the "Working Group") and racialized communities have taken a leadership role in developing recommendations for Convocation to address direct and systemic discrimination against racialized licensees;

Whereas the recommendations seek to create a framework for equality initiatives that are also valuable and should be extended to licensees from other equality-seeking communities who are not racialized;

Whereas extending the recommendations facilitates an intersectional approach that recognizes that racialized and other equality-seeking licensees are vulnerable to compounded inequalities as members of more than one equality-seeking community;

And whereas extension of the recommendations to acknowledge the intersectionality of disadvantage and discrimination ensures that data is sufficiently comprehensive to support the goals of the Working Group's Report;

Whereas the recommendations of the Working Group's Report as adopted by Convocation will be implemented by the Law Society through staff as overseen by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee and other committees as may be appropriate with input from the Equity Advisory Group and the Indigenous Advisory Group in the normal course;

I MOVE THAT:

As it moves forward with implementation of the recommendations for racialized licensees, the Law Society will ensure that the policies, procedures, measures and initiatives are extended as appropriate to all equality-seeking groups while continuing to ensure that the needs of racialized licensees are fully acknowledged and addressed.

Mover: Barbara Murchie

FOR INFORMATION*LAW SOCIETY OF UPPER CANADA FINANCIAL STATEMENTS FOR THE NINE MONTHS ENDED SEPTEMBER 30, 2016

6. Convocation is requested to receive the third quarter financial statements for the Law Society for information.

Rationale

7. This is part of the quarterly financial reporting schedule to Convocation. These interim statements convey the performance of the Law Society before the end of the year. Unlike annual statements, interim statements are not audited.
8. The quarterly financial statements for the subsidiary, LibraryCo is included in this Committee material. The quarterly financial statements for the subsidiary, LAWPRO, will be presented to the Committee and Convocation after approval by LAWPRO's board.

Law Society of Upper Canada
Financial Statements
For the nine months ended September 30, 2016

Financial Statement Highlights

9. The Lawyer General Fund incurred a surplus of $4.8 million at the end of the third quarter of 2016, compared to a surplus of $2.6 million in 2015.
10. The Paralegal General Fund generated a surplus of $1.3 million at the end of the third quarter of 2016 compared to $945,000 at the end of the third quarter of 2015. For the year, the 2016 budget uses $340,000 of the General Fund accumulated surplus as a source of funding to mitigate a fee increase for paralegals.
11. As noted on the Schedule of Revenues and Expenses for the Lawyer and Paralegal General Fund the total surplus for the nine months is $6.1 million compared to a nominal deficit for the prorated budget for the period. In comparing revenues to budget, there are some large positive variances, specifically in the licensing process and other revenues such as late fees. In comparing expenses to budget, variances in the major income statement categories are all positive. While some variances from budget are attributable to timing differences, a surplus for the year is projected, although as set out on the Projection for the Year Ended December 31, the total lawyer and paralegal General Fund surplus is forecast to be closer to $4 million because of the weighting of some expenses towards the end of the year.
12. The Law Society's restricted funds report a deficit of $2.1 million (2015: deficit of $8.7 million). The deficit in 2015 was primarily in the Lawyer Compensation Fund and in the current year the deficit primarily comprises:
  - $927,000 in the Lawyer Compensation Fund as the claims from two major defalcations continue to be processed. The 2016 budget included a provision of $700,000 to replenish the lawyer Compensation Fund balance.
  - $2.2 million in the Invested in Capital Assets Fund, representing amortization.These deficits are slightly offset by a surplus of $895,000 in the Errors & Omissions Insurance Fund from investment income.

Potential Negative Variances

13. At the end of June, the Ontario Court of Appeal dismissed Trinity Western University's (TWU) appeal of the Divisional Court's decision, upholding the Law Society's denial of accreditation of TWU's proposed law school. TWU has requested the Supreme Court of Canada to hear an appeal. The timing and extent of costs for this process is uncertain.

14. There is at least a reasonable possibility that one or more cost awards from the Law Society's regulatory proceedings may be awarded against the Law Society but the amount of any losses cannot be reliably estimated at this time. The Society has determined that the ultimate settlement for these costs awards could range from nil to approximately $5 million, of which only $500,000 has been included in accrued liabilities.

Background

15. The Financial Statements are prepared under Generally Accepted Accounting Principles for Canadian not-for-profit organizations using the restricted fund method of accounting.
16. The Financial Statements for the nine months ended September 30, 2016 comprise the following statements:
  - Balance Sheet
  - Statement of Revenues and Expenses and Change in Fund Balances, detailing results of operations for lawyers and paralegals
  - Schedule of Restricted Funds
  - Supplemental schedules include Schedules of Revenues and Expenses for the Combined General Fund, Lawyer and Paralegal General Funds, the Compensation Fund, the Errors and Omissions Insurance Fund and a Combined General Fund Projection for the Year Ended December 31, 2016.

Statement of Revenues and Expenses and Change in Fund Balances

17. The Lawyer General Fund has a surplus of $4.8 million at the end of the third quarter of 2016, compared with a surplus of $2.6 million in the first nine months of 2015. As noted in the highlights, the reasons for this positive financial performance are spread across most revenue and expense categories. The 2016 budget incorporated $1.2 million in funding from surplus investment income in the E&O Fund which has not been used because of the General Fund surplus.
18. The Paralegal General Fund had a surplus of $1.3 million versus a surplus of $945,000 last year. The 2016 budget allocated $340,000 from the General Fund accumulated surplus to mitigate fee increase for paralegals. Actual use of these funds is contingent on results for the year.
19. The Law Society's restricted funds report a deficit of $2.1 million (2015: deficit of $8.7 million). The deficit in 2015 was primarily in the Lawyer Compensation Fund and in the current year the deficit primarily comprises:
  - $927,000 in the Lawyer Compensation Fund as the claims from two major defalcations continue to be processed. The 2016 budget included a provision of $700,000 to replenish the lawyer Compensation Fund balance.
  - $2.2 million in the Invested in Capital Assets Fund, representing amortization.

In the Errors & Omissions Insurance Fund, the current annual premium revenue typically matches current annual premium expenses. In 2016, revenue is higher than expenses for the first nine months due to investment income of $0.9 million and there has been no premium contribution under the insurance contract with LAWPRO to mitigate insurance premiums for lawyers.

The Capital Allocation Fund had $1.6 million in revenues and $1.5 million in expenses. The Law Society is in the third year of a three year, $8 million Information Technology capital plan.

20. Annual fee revenue is recognized on a monthly basis. One of the goals of having a three-year rolling budget is to stabilize fees and the 2016 budget maintained the annual fee for lawyers ($1,866) and paralegals ($996) at 2014 and 2015 levels although there were fluctuations in the individual fee components. Total annual fees recognized in the first nine months of the year of $58.1 million have increased slightly compared to 2015 because the number of lawyers and paralegals billed increased. Based on the number of new lawyers and paralegals to date, the increase in the number of licensees will exceed budget in 2016.
21. Revenue from insurance premiums and levies is recognized on a monthly basis. LAWPRO's base annual premium of $3,350 has not changed in recent years, with the increase in number of insureds leading to a slight increase in premium and levy revenue to $80 million.
22. Professional development and competence revenue comprises licensing process and continuing professional development revenue:
  - Lawyer licensing process revenue has increased by $500,000 to $9.3 million. This revenue also significantly exceeds the prorated budget for the year and the 2017 budget has been increased as a result of this experience. The total lawyer Licensing Process fee for 2015-2016, including the fees for the initial application, the Barrister and Solicitor Licensing Examinations and the Call to the Bar is $4,710, the same as last year. There is a higher number of licensing process candidates contributing to both the lawyer and paralegal licensing revenues. In addition, there is an increase in the number of candidates writing the exams multiple times. As noted in the expense section, the higher numbers have increased the expenses to administer exams.
  - At $1.6 million, paralegal licensing process revenue is nominally higher than last year and is more than the prorated budget for the year.
  - Through September 2016, CPD revenue of $5.2 million exceeds both the prior year comparative and the prorated budget by $500,000. Traditionally, the Fall is CPD's busiest period.
23. At $1.4 million, investment income continues the decreasing trend from previous years reflecting market conditions of low fixed income returns. The positive change in the fair value of investments ($1.4 million) compared to the loss in the comparative period also reflects market conditions.

24. Other income primarily comprises late fees, catering, monitoring & enforcement revenues, Ontario Reports and the LibraryCo administration fee.
25. Total regulatory expenses of $20.3 million are effectively the same as last year and are under budget with spending constrained throughout the division, in particular some unfilled staff positions. The additional resources approved by Convocation in February are being phased in. The projection for complaints received in the division during this year follows the trend of slight decreases over recent years although the 2016 budget noted other factors such as increasing case complexity. Outside counsel fees are a significant variable expense and are at lower levels than the prorated budget.
26. Total professional development and competence expenses have increased from $18.8 million to $19.5 million. As approved in the 2016 budget, CPD staffing increased with more resources devoted to program development and webcast services. As this increase phases in, total CPD expenses of $2.6 million are well under budget but slightly more than last year. In the Licensing Process, the higher candidate numbers have increased the expenses to administer exams. Also, there has been an increase in the number of candidates requiring special services, for instance rooms, chairs, proctors, software. At $7.7 million, Licensing Process expenses are slightly more than budget and last year. Ultimately, the licensing process anticipates a net favourable position compared to budget at the end of the year.
27. Corporate services expenses include Finance & the CEO, Facilities, the Client Service Centre, Information Technology, Office of the General Counsel (OGC) and Human Resources and have decreased from $17 million to $16.7 million.
28. Convocation, Policy and Outreach Expenses include Policy, Equity, Public Affairs, Bencher expenses and Communications and at $6 million are effectively the same as last year at this time. These expenses are under budget with bencher expenses being the biggest contributor to this variance although the timing of bencher remuneration and expenses is not regular and depends on submissions from benchers. The Society has received a $400,000 grant from the Law Foundation of Ontario funding the development and delivery of Access to Justice initiatives.
29. Service to members and the public expenses primarily comprise the Law Society Referral Service, Catering, CANLII and the Member Assistance Plan and total $3 million, slightly more than the first three quarters of 2015 and in line with the budget for the first three quarters of 2016.

Schedule of Restricted Funds

30. The Errors & Omissions Insurance (E&O) Fund accounts for the mandatory professional liability insurance program of the Law Society which is administered by LAWPRO. The insurance premium expense, as well as related levies and income from their investment are tracked within this fund. The Law Society is insured for lawyers' professional liability and recovers annual premium costs from lawyers through a combination of annual base levies and additional levies that are charged based on a lawyer's claims history, status, and real estate and litigation levies. The fund is reporting a surplus of $895,000 (2015 - $1.9 million deficit) due to investment income and the lack of any contribution in the current year to mitigate the base insurance levy for lawyers. Revenue from insurance premiums and levies is recognized on a monthly basis. LAWPRO's base premium of $3,350 has not changed from 2014, with the increase in number of insured's leading to a slight increase in premium and levy revenue to $80 million. Expenses in the Errors and Omissions Insurance Fund are consistent at $80 million.
31. The lawyer Compensation Fund annual fee income increased from $6.4 million in 2015 to $7.4 million in line with the increase in the levy from $225 to $254 per lawyer. The paralegal levy also increased. The Compensation Fund's total investment results have swung from a small loss to income of $1.3 million in 2016 due market conditions. Other income representing recoveries also substantially increased to $547,000. Recoveries do not follow a pattern.
32. The Compensation Fund continues to experience a high claims experience with provision for unpaid grant expenses increasing from $3.7 million in 2015 to $4.3 million in 2016. The Compensation Fund balance management policy was amended by Convocation in September.
33. County Libraries Fund revenues and expenses are relatively static at $5.7 million.
34. Use of the Parental Leave Assistance Plan, included in Other Restricted Funds, continues to decline with expenses of $120,000 in the first nine months of 2016 compared to $156,000 in 2015.

Balance Sheet

35. Cash and short-term investments have increased by $7 million to $61 million over the last twelve months after operating surpluses, capital transfers from portfolio investments and the investment manager adopting a conservative approach with an increased short-term orientation.
36. Most of the prepaid expense balance relates to annual E&O insurance premiums paid or payable for the year, which are expensed over the full year.

37. The Investment in LAWPRO totaling $36 million is made up of two parts. The investment represents the share capital of $5 million purchased in 1991 when LAWPRO was established, plus contributed capital of $31 million accumulated between 1995 and 1997 from a special capitalization levy by the Law Society.
38. Portfolio investments are shown at fair value of $67 million, compared to $70 million in 2015. The short-term components of these investments are re-categorized to the “cash and short-term investments” line on the balance sheet which have increased reflecting the investment manager’s asset mix. Approximately 20% of the portfolio is held in equity investments.
39. Deferred revenue ($47 million) is made up of annual fees, licensing process revenues and insurance premiums which are recognized over the full year with the increased balance at the end of September reflecting the increased underlying revenues in 2016.
40. Due to LAWPRO ($25 million) will decline by year-end as insurance premiums and levies collected are paid to LAWPRO.
41. The provision for unpaid grants of $21 million (2015 - $22 million) represents the estimate for unpaid claims and inquiries against the Compensation Fund, supplemented by the costs for processing these claims. The Fund continues to process some large alleged defalcations on the part of certain licensees. The Compensation Fund describes a major defalcation as being over 35 claims arising from the conduct of one licensee in a single year and the Fund currently has two of these major defalcations. In September, Convocation approved an increase in the individual grant limit from $150,000 to $500,000.
42. The paralegal Compensation Fund provision for unpaid grants comprises $178,000 of the total Compensation Fund provision for unpaid grants.
43. The Law Society Act permits a member who has dormant trust funds, to apply for permission to pay the money to the Society. Money paid to the Society is held in trust in perpetuity for the purpose of satisfying the claims of the persons who are entitled to the capital amount. At the end of September, unclaimed money held in trust amounts to nearly $5 million, compared to $4 million in the prior year.

Other Schedules

44. Supplementary budget to actual income and expense schedules for the Lawyer General Fund and the Paralegal General Fund are included. Significant variances have been analyzed above.
45. A supplementary income and expense schedule for the Compensation Fund is included with variances analyzed above.

46. A supplementary income and expense schedule for the E&O Fund is also shown with variances analyzed above.
47. A combined General Fund Projection for the Year Ended December 31, 2016 is also provided.

Conclusion

48. Overall, the first three quarters of the year have resulted in greater than projected revenues and less than projected expenses. The Law Society is on track to exceed its 2016 budget expectations, its financial position remains strong although claims against the Compensation Fund continue to reduce the fund balance.

TAB 10.2

FOR INFORMATION
LIBRARYCO INC. FINANCIAL STATEMENTS FOR THE NINE MONTHS ENDED
SEPTEMBER 30, 2016

49. Convocation is requested to receive the third quarter financial statements for LibraryCo Inc. for information.

Rationale

50. The quarterly financial statements have been presented to the LibraryCo Board.

LIBRARYCO INC.
FINANCIAL REPORT
For the nine months ended September 30, 2016

KEY POINT SUMMARY

Overall Results

51. Results for the third quarter identify a deficit of $5,968 compared to a budgeted deficit of $102,988 for the 9 months. The 2016 budget envisages a $143,000 deficit for the year through the use of the General Fund balance.
52. The positive variance from budget of $97,020 is spread across most expense categories particularly consulting fees, publications, the group benefit plan and the bursaries, capital and special needs expenses.

Revenues

53. The Law Society grant (line 1) includes amounts for central administration and quarterly transfers to the 48 libraries. The actual grant from the Law Society was $5.7 million and matched budgeted amounts for the period.
54. Interest Income (line 2) is earned on LibraryCo's cash and short term investments.

Expenses

55. Total expenses (line 16) were $5,725,491 compared to a budgeted total for the period of $5,849,489.
56. The administration expense (line 4) of $228,750 represents the fee paid to the Law Society and equals budget. The fee was reduced from 2015.
57. Professional fees (line 5) include audit expenses and consulting fees. The consulting fee budget remains unspent which has resulted in a positive variance of $13,095. Unspent amounts will be used to augment the budget for transition expenses.
58. Transition expenses (line 6) of $85,852 represents three of the four payments for a user needs survey. Expenses associated with the transition initiative are projected to exceed the total transition expense budget of $84,836 by approximately $40,000. The currently unused budget of $17,000 for consulting and positive variances in other expense accounts can be used to fund the full amount.
59. Other head-office expenses (line 7) include the production of the Annual Report, head office courier/postage costs, Directors and Officers insurance, bank charges, website maintenance costs, the cost of providing most libraries with a toll free telephone number and governance meeting expenses.

60. Totalling $13,449, other head-office expenses are lower than budget for the period by approximately $24,454 primarily as a result of underspending for the production of the Annual Report, board of directors' meetings, web initiatives, toll free telephone charges, and miscellaneous expenses.
61. Electronic product expenses of $254,250 (line 9) are in line with the agreement with LexisNexis and budget.
62. Group benefits and insurance (line 10) of $234,334 consist of the Group Benefits for enrolled library staff and library D&O and property insurance.
63. Group benefits and insurance are lower than budget by $21,818 as group benefits premiums are negotiated after the budget and these are budgeted conservatively. Based on the program's claims experience, a return of premium is unlikely in the current year.
64. Given that both the D&O and property insurance policies expired at the end of April, a conservative increase in insurance for the remainder of 2016 was also taken into consideration when budgeting for 2016.
65. Other centralized expenses (line 11) of $46,773 include continuing education bursaries for library staff, library courier costs for inter-library loans of materials, publications provided by the Law Society to each of the 48 law libraries, and the Federation of Ontario Law Associations' (FOLA) meeting expenses for their Library Committee.
66. Other centralized expenses are lower than budget by $22,352 due to underspending in continuing education bursaries, publications and courier costs.
67. County and District law libraries grants (line 13) are in line with budget at $4,857,573 and increased from 2015.
68. Bursaries, capital and special needs grants (line 14) of $25,766 consist of computer refreshment grants, special needs grants and conference bursaries for library staff. Computer purchases by the libraries during the year do not follow a pattern.

Balance Sheet

69. Short-term investments (line 2) of $402,159 consist of a one year GIC and accrued interest.
70. Accounts receivable (line 3) are long term disability benefits premiums paid by LibraryCo on the libraries' behalf for the past quarter. These receivables are usually repaid early in the next quarter.
71. Prepaid expenses (line 4) primarily represent the property and D&O insurance policies for LibraryCo and the libraries which were renewed at the end of April.

72. Accounts payable and accrued liabilities (line 6) are $16,675 higher than 2015 due to the accrual for Phase 5's third invoice.
73. The General Fund has increased to $247,113. The 2016 budget forecasted a decrease of $143,000 during the year however, based on information available at September 30, 2016, estimates for year-end show a decrease in the General Fund of approximately $70,000, meaning a projected General Fund balance at 2016 year-end of $183,000. LibraryCo's budget for 2017 envisages using $158,000 of this fund balance to finance operations next year.
74. The Reserve Fund has a balance at the end of September of $500,000 comprising a general component of $200,000, a capital and special needs component of $150,000, and a staffing and severance component of $150,000 in accordance with Board policy.

TREASURER'S REMARKS

The Treasurer welcomed everyone joining Convocation by webcast.

The Treasurer recognized that Convocation is meeting in Toronto, which is a Mohawk word that means “where there are trees standing in the water.”

The Treasurer acknowledged that Convocation is meeting in the traditional territory of the Mississaugas of New Credit First Nation and also acknowledged the Haudenosaunee, and recognized the long history of all First Nations in Ontario and the Métis and Inuit peoples, and thanked the First Nations people who lived and live in their lands for sharing them with us in peace.

The Treasurer welcomed everyone to Convocation in the Lamont Learning Centre, including public attendees.

The Treasurer addressed protocols for Convocation in the Lamont Learning Centre.

The Treasurer advised that he attended the launch of the Coach and Advisor Network on November 24, 2016 and thanked Diana Miles and Kerry Boniface for their work on this initiative.

The Treasurer advised that he recently hosted a dinner for the new Indigenous Legal Issues Specialist Certification designation. The Treasurer thanked the Law Society staff team and volunteer subject matter advisors for their work on the initiative.

The Treasurer noted his meetings with the Minister of Justice and Attorney General for Ontario last week.

The Treasurer reminded benchers that the Honourable Justice Annemarie E. Bonkalo will be submitting her Family Law Services Review Report to the Attorney General and the Law Society by the end of December.

The Treasurer announced the recipients of the Law Society Human Rights Award:

- Dr. Cindy Blackstock
- Waleed Abu al-Khair

and that the awards will be bestowed at a ceremony on February 22, 2017.

The Treasurer reminded benchers that nominations for the Law Society Awards close on January 27, 2017.

The Treasurer thanked Policy Counsel Sophia Sperdakos, who will be leaving the Law Society this month, for her outstanding contribution to the work of the Law Society over the past 26 years.

TREASURER’S REMARKS

The Treasurer welcomed those joining Convocation by webcast.

The Treasurer recognized that the meeting is held in Toronto, which is a Mohawk word meaning “where there are trees standing in the water”, and thanked the First Nations people who lived and live in these lands for sharing them with us in peace. The Treasurer also acknowledged that Convocation is meeting on the traditional territory of the Mississaugas of New Credit First Nation, acknowledged the Haudenosaunee, and recognized the long history of all First Nations in Ontario and the Métis and Inuit peoples.

The Treasurer advised that December 2, 2016 Convocation will be held in the Lamont Learning Centre.

The Treasurer expressed condolences to the family of former appointed benchers Robert Tebbutt, of Toronto and Andrew Coffey of Thunder Bay, who recently passed away.

The Treasurer informed Convocation of the work of the Treasurer's Appointments Advisory Group, and the urgent request for nominees for the federal Judicial Advisory Committees for Ontario, and encouraged benchers to provide names of appropriate individuals for consideration.

The Treasurer informed benchers of The Action Group (TAG)'s very successful Access to Justice Week, and noted the interest expressed in the Law Society's Public Perceptions of Access to Justice in Ontario study. The Treasurer congratulated Sabreena Delhon, Law Society staff, for her efforts in supporting this event.

The Treasurer announced the formation and composition of the Legal Aid Working Group and referred to its terms of reference at Tab 12 of the Convocation materials.

The Treasurer informed Convocation of various outreach initiatives and meetings, including the Federation of Law Societies of Canada's meeting in St. Andrews-by-the-Sea, New Brunswick, a meeting with the Treasurer's Liaison Group and various conferences, including that of the Federation of Ontario Law Associations (FOLA).

The Treasurer congratulated Sandra Nishikawa on receiving the Lawyer of Distinction Award at the Federation of Asian Canadian Lawyers' 10th Annual Conference and Gala on October 29, 2016.

The Treasurer advised of upcoming events, including the Remembrance Day ceremony tomorrow, Louis Riel Day on November 17, 2016, and the Paralegal Welcome Reception on December 1, 2016.

The Treasurer advised that nominations are now open for the Law Society Awards, and that nominations close on January 27, 2017.

Mr. Lapper presented the Chief Executive Officer's Report for information.

CEO's REPORT

This has been a particularly busy period for operations at the Law Society. Since my last report to Convocation in June 2016, outside of day to day regulatory activities the organization has focused much of its efforts on the following initiatives:

- Budget planning for 2017 and beyond;
- Review of Professional Regulation Division processes and structure;
- Development and launch of the new Coach and Advisor Network program;
- Administration and ongoing review of LibraryCo and library services;
- Development and roll-out of the Share-Point based case management system for the Law Society Tribunal;
- Completion of a risk assessment to support the Relationship Management System Project;
- Completion of a Law Society Diversity Census and Inclusion Survey;
- Completion of an Employee Engagement and Enablement Survey;
- Ongoing work on various policy initiatives including Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees, review of the Law Practice Program, advertising and fees, and Compliance-Based Entity Regulation;
- Continuing support of TAG - The Action Group on Access to Justice.

This report will provide an overview of operational trends and activities and policy and other initiatives that are currently underway or in development to support strategic priorities.

STRATEGIC PLANNING UPDATE

We continue to make very good progress on Convocation's strategic priorities. Since the last update in June, work has advanced on a number of initiatives, some mentioned later in this report – an extension of the LPP for another two years and a comprehensive analysis of the licensing process, a disclosure policy framework for PRD investigations, launch of the new coach and advisor network (“CAN”), implementation of our mental health strategy, a new task force on governance and the final report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group. Work on other initiatives is ongoing, including our policy development “rethink” and the diversity survey of benchers.

In addition to operational work plans related to the priorities, in September the Treasurer set out his expectations for policy work during his term in his memoranda to committee chairs, linked to the strategic plan's priorities. In this report, I aim to show that the priorities are being achieved in an effective, efficient way.

2016 BUDGET UPDATE AND DEVELOPMENT OF THE 2017 BUDGET PLAN

Financial Reporting

Interim financial statements for the third quarter for the Law Society, LawPro and LibraryCo have been reviewed by the Audit & Finance Committee and are reported to Convocation this month. The Society is on track to exceed its 2016 budget expectations and its financial position remains strong. Some specific notes are:

- The Lawyer General Fund incurred a surplus of $4.8 million compared to a surplus of $2.6 million in 2015 and a break-even position for the prorated budget period.
- The Paralegal General Fund generated a surplus of $1.3 million at the end of the third quarter compared to $945,000 for 2015 and a budgeted deficit for the period of $243,000.
- The main revenue sources are above budget and all of the major expense categories on the financial statements are less than budget.

- There was a deficit of $927,000 in the Lawyer Compensation Fund as claims incurred to date exceed budgeted funding for the year.
- The projection for 2016 year end is for a surplus of approximately $4 million in the combined Lawyer and Paralegal General Funds.

Planning for the 2016 year-end audits has been ongoing and the Audit & Finance Committee met with PWC in November to formalize these plans.

Budget

The 2017 Budget process has completed its normal cycle of review by the Audit and Finance Committee in September and October. Convocation approved the budget on November 9, which sets the annual fee for lawyers at $1,916 and for paralegals at $1,046, an increase of $50 for both professions, with an option to reduce the fee by $50.00 if it is paid by pre-authorized debit (see below).

Operational Activities

The Finance department is working with the Audit & Finance Committee to ensure appropriate accountability and fiscal responsibility by organizations funded by the Law Society such as the Federation of Law Societies, FOLA and the Law Commission of Ontario.

The Finance department processes the applications for the Parental Leave Assistance Program. The number of applicants approved continues to decrease below projections estimated during program development. To the end of September 2016, payments for the year total $128,000. The budget funding request for 2016 was $200,000. For the 2017 budget, the fund balance ($437,000 at September 30, 2016) is sufficient will not require a further contribution to the Parental Leave Assistance Plan for 2017.

The Society introduced electronic fee billing in 2015. Along with this, an on-line application process for payment by preauthorized electronic debit was also created. With the automation of the application process, a second preauthorized payment plan (PAP) option in addition to the existing monthly PAP has been introduced for 2017. This annual PAP plan withdraws the balance on their account in the first week of February each year. There is no administration fee for this plan. In the 2017 budget, a discount of $50 (prorated by fee category, $25 for 50% fee and $12.50 for 25% fee) will be offered to members enrolling in this plan.

Since my last report, the Finance department is currently conducting or has conducted its periodic review of the following policies:

- Investment Policy – changes are being assessed to slightly increase the equity component of the asset mix;
- Treasurer and Benchers Expense Reimbursement and Remuneration Policies – the assessment is still in the early stage;
- Business Conduct Policy – periodic update including assessment of whistleblowing provisions;
- Compensation Fund Balance Policy - reducing the minimum balance from three one-in-one hundred year events to one one-in-two hundred year event.

LibraryCo

The Finance department continues to provide financial services to LibraryCo through the Administrative Services Agreement that includes preparation of financial reports, development of the annual budget and administrative assistance to county associations on financial matters. The Law Society is working with the other shareholders of LibraryCo (Federation of Ontario Law Associations and Toronto Lawyers' Association) to set a direction for the evolution of libraries and library services going forward. In November, Convocation approved LibraryCo's budget for 2016, incorporating a contingency for the transition process and increased funding to county libraries.

REGULATION

COMPLAINTS, INVESTIGATIONS AND PROSECUTIONS

Complaint Trends

Complaint trends fluctuate year by year. While 2013 showed a noticeable increase in new cases, a downward trend in 2014 continued in 2015. In 2016, the downward trend has reversed. Between January 1 and October 31, the Division received 4016 new complaints, an increase of approximately 2% from the same period in 2015. An analysis of the complaints received during the period reveals the following:

- consistent with previous years, approximately 75% of new complaints involve lawyers and 12% of new complaints involve paralegals.
- sole practitioners and licensees in small firms (up to 5 licensees) continue to receive the largest number and proportion of complaints (approximately 74% for lawyers and 93% for paralegals).
- as in other years, the highest proportion received contain service related issues (approximately 50% of all new complaints) followed by integrity issues (46% of all new complaints), governance issues (17% of all new complaints), financial issues (10% of all new complaints) and conflict issues (8% of all new complaints).
- the highest proportion (30%) of new complaints received by lawyers and by paralegals continues to be in the area of civil litigation, for lawyers, in family and real estate law and for paralegals, in criminal/quasi-criminal matters.

Investigations

The focus in the investigating departments, particularly in the past 5 months, has been on the backlog of cases in the departments. A number of process changes and strategies have been instituted and with the additional resources which Convocation initially approved in February 2016 (and included in the approved 2017 budget), staff have effectively increased the number of case completions and reduced investigation inventories. To date, the inventory of investigations has decreased to a total of 2322 complaints, down from an inventory of 2493 complaints at the beginning of 2016.

In the first 10 months of 2016, 3817 complaints have been closed at the end of the investigative phase. Of these 3817 complaints:

- 111 (3% of all closings), a substantial increase over 2015, have been closed with diversion (e.g. invitation to attend, letter of advice, practice review/spot audit recommendation, undertaking, mentoring).
- 550 complaints were closed with a staff caution or best practises advice in 2016 to date.

The number of reports received of lawyers engaged in mortgage fraud remains at an average of about 2.5 per month. However, the inventory of investigations remains lower than in previous years (42% fewer than at the end of October 2015). In addition, the number of matters proceeding to Discipline remains low (5 licensees in 2016 to date). The Investigations department continues to closely track and regularly monitor these matters for timely completion.

Advertising & Fee Issues

One of the early steps taken by the new Executive Director, Professional Regulation was to form a strategic priority team within the Professional Regulation Division to undertake investigations and, where required, prosecutions in the area of advertising and referral fees. The creation of this team will facilitate a timely and focused response to these issues. The work of the team is informed by the work of the Advertising & Fee Issues Working Group, to ensure that policy focused attention is brought to bear on the Law Society's regulatory response. There are currently approximately 90 cases involving advertising and referral fees that are under active investigation.

Discipline

The number of new matters coming into Discipline fluctuates from year to year. The number of licensee / applicant matters coming into the department in the first 10 months of 2016 appear to be similar to the numbers in the same period in 2015. However, the number of Notices issued by Discipline to commence a proceeding before the Hearing Division has increased.

As at October 31, 2016, Discipline had issued a total of 140 Notices: 110 Notices of Application (conduct and capacity prosecutions), 12 Notices of Referral for Hearing (good character and reinstatement/terms dispute prosecutions) and 18 Notices of Motion for interlocutory suspension/restriction. In 2014, a total of 124 Notices were issued and in 2015 a total of 142 Notices were issued.

The number of motions for interlocutory suspension / restrictions (18 as at October 31) have increased from the 14 issued in all of 2014 and the 14 issued in all of 2015.

Court Decisions

In 2016, the Law Society received ten decisions from the Ontario Superior Court; and eight decisions from the Court of Appeal.

Seventeen of these matters were initiated by a licensee or an applicant for a license. The Law Society initiated one matter and brought two cross appeals.

Issues considered by the courts in these decisions included:

- Prematurity of court intervention regarding constitutional issues that can be heard by the Law Society Tribunal – DioGuardi Tax Law et al
- Jurisdiction to award costs when a licensing application is abandoned after the notice of hearing is issued but prior to the commencement of good character hearing on the merits – Riddell
- Penalty – the effect to be given to delay in an investigation in what would otherwise be a revocation case – Abbott
- Jurisdiction to provide relief sought – Speck, Amiri
- Failing to perfect application/extension of time for motion for leave – Ebagua, Amiri
- Delay by licensee in seeking appellate relief – Coady
- What is a final order – Kivisto
- Factors to be considered in a motion for delay – Totera
- Ability to raise new issues on appeal – Molson
- Costs awarded as a result of the recusal of panellists – James
- Validity of the presumptive disposition of revocation – Bishop
- Jurisdiction of the Law Society to regulate in-court civility, the definition of civility and the duty to advocate zealously – Groia

Trusteeships, Compensation Fund And Monitoring & Enforcement

Between January 1 and October 31, 2016, Trustee Services has obtained 14 new formal trusteeship matters, which are dealt with in the Superior Court, and 17 formal trusteeships have been completed and closed. An additional 39 cases have been opened in which guidance and information has been provided on how to wind up a licensee's practice. The department has received 1211 and closed 1061 requests from clients and others concerning licensees' practices.

Between January 1 and October 31, 2016, a total of 143 applications for compensation have been received by the Compensation Fund: 131 claims involving 45 lawyers and 12 claims involving 9 paralegals. During this period, a total of 29 claims have been granted: $2,798,897 has been paid on 93 claims against 26 lawyers and $36,221 has been paid on 18 claims against 7 paralegals. The Compensation Fund continues to carry a number of potential claims related to a very high-profile real estate loss.

In the period from January 1 to October 31, 2016, Monitoring & Enforcement has:

- collected a total of $410,658 in costs, including $311,005 in discipline costs
- received 79 new undertakings to be monitored. This represents an increase from the number of new undertakings received in all of 2015 (63) and 2014 (58).
- received 125 new orders to be monitored.
- received and responded to 3944 regulatory inquiries involving 4431 licensees.

PROCESS AND STRUCTURAL CHANGES IN THE PROFESSIONAL REGULATION DIVISION

The Professional Regulation Division is currently undergoing a restructuring process. The key changes can be summarized as:

- more robust, early triage and resolution carried out by a larger Intake Resolution department
- merger of the Complaints Resolution and Investigations departments
- creation of new multi-functional Enforcement teams with different types of Investigators and Discipline Counsel working together in teams
- creation of an Technology & Evidence Control department to enhance the Division's ability to receive, produce, manage and control electronic data.

Transitional planning is already underway and a multi-functional team is already underway on a pilot project basis. Throughout 2016, steps have been taken to streamline processes and increase efficiencies. The new organizational structure will come into effect on February 6, 2017. Next steps are to design the physical changes required to fully implement the new structure.

ADMINISTRATIVE SUSPENSION DUE DILIGENCE

In addition to the over 1500 notices and reminders that were published to licensee LSUC Portal accounts this quarter, the staff in the CSC continue to uphold due diligence standards regarding licensee administrative obligations.

For example, during the Annual Report suspension follow-up process, the By-Law Administration Services Department has sent 128,411 automated emails to licensees reminding them of their filing obligation. At the end of the 60 day default period, 2,584 licensees had yet to file their Annual Report and staff in the CSC will attempt to personally contact each licensee at least one final time. Law Society staff similarly followed up with 957 licensees who had not fulfilled their CPD obligations and 2149 licensees who did not fulfill their Annual Fee obligations.

QUALITY ASSURANCE

Practice Audits

In addition to continuing to provide proactive supports to law practitioners and law practices across the province, Practice Review and Spot Audit have conducted a number of presentations as part of their outreach program to licensees to support ongoing learning related to establishing and maintaining viable and vibrant practices. During 2016, Practice Review developed a CPD webcast for paralegals on how to assess practice management processes to improve efficiencies. Reviewers have also responded to invitations to present on practice management topics to various law associations, such as Prescott, Peel and Hamilton, and to the University of Ottawa Business Law Clinic.

Outreach to paralegal practitioners included best practices presentations to paralegal classes at both Algonquin and Conestoga Colleges, and to the Ontario Paralegal Association.

Spot Audit has been actively involved on a number of educational presentations to the Law Society's Professional Conduct and Practice in Ontario program, the Ontario Bar Association, the Barrie Real Estate Law Association and the Peel Real Estate Law Association to discuss Spot Audit processes and a variety of financial books and records topics.

Spot Audit and Practice Review representatives were present at the June 9th Sole Practitioner and Small Firm Conference's "Ingenious Bar" to respond to licensees' questions on the Practice Review and Spot Audit programs, books and records, and practice management systems. The Spot Audit and Practice Review outreach initiatives continue to be well received and appreciated by licensees, and reinforce the importance of the Law Society's Competence Mandate and focus on providing proactive assistance.

PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT AND COMPETENCE

The Professional Development and Competence Committee evaluated the Pathways Pilot Project and proposed enhancements to the licencing process in its September 2016 Report. As a result of careful consideration of the 93 public submissions from individuals, 104 individual comments linked to a petition and 32 submissions from organizations, associations, legal clinics, law schools and others, the Committee recommended that the Pathways Pilot Project be continued for two years and that a complete review of the licensing process be undertaken. PD&C will develop a plan to implement this review which will include an engagement strategy to involve relevant stakeholders throughout the process.

Continuing Professional Development

While the CPD department has kept the number of unique programs it produces at 90 for the last several years, and then provides replays bringing the actual amount of program offerings to between 125 and 140 per year, it has been making changes to operations and planning in 2016 to vary those offerings. This provides additional flexibility and CPD opportunities for members.

For example, the team increased the number of replay programs offered, from 34 in 2015 to 58 in 2016 and offered replay programs in July and August for the first time, so that lawyers and paralegals could watch them during the sometimes-quieter summer months. These replays were well received, with the August programs attracting an average of 72 registrants at each. While members can purchase any CPD program to view "on demand" at their convenience after the live date for the program, some members prefer viewing the archive at a scheduled time. The group will offer summer replay programming again in 2017.

Five online eCourse titles were produced in 2016, adding to the current stable of 13 eLearning programs. eCourses are a popular alternative (or adjunct) to attending traditional CPD programs for many members.

While the trend of live, in-person attendance continues to decline in favour of the flexibility of webcast viewing - currently at a ratio of four who watch the webcast for every one live attendee, the large one and two-day Summit programs maintain a high demand related to on-site attendance. These flagship programs, held in core practice areas including real estate and family law, among others, provide an annual forum for practitioners to come together for networking, to share ideas and stories and to experience their professional learning within a community environment. These programs account for a significant portion of the organization's net CPD revenue. The team is currently planning a new cross-disciplinary two-day program, to be held in November 2017 that will be similar to the Special Lectures series which the Law Society previously hosted. To commemorate the country's sesquicentennial, the focus for this special program will be on constitutional law issues and its impact in several practice areas. The Symposium will culminate in the publication of a hard-bound volume of materials authored by its speakers.

We continue to work on refinements to the new eCommerce platform, the "LSUC Store" which was launched in mid-May. This new system allows members to log on using their Law Society portal credentials instead of requiring an additional set of user names and passwords as in the previous e-commerce site. This functionality makes ordering easier and more convenient for our members, and improves security by funneling members' sensitive information, such as credit card information, through a dedicated eCommerce platform.

The CPD department, in accordance with the Law Society's strategic priorities, has transformed program planning to ensure that all programs are developed with reference to a draft set of learning competencies at stages of basic, intermediate and advanced levels of learning. This focus assists to better articulate the educational and experiential objectives to be achieved in each practice area throughout a member's professional practice life. The framework will be further refined and finalized in 2017 through a series of consultations with the professions to discuss and validate the listings, and more formally identify the competencies to be covered in CPD programming on a yearly (and multi-year) basis in major practice areas.

Certified Specialist Program

The Law Society's Certified Specialist Program is adding a new area of specialization in Indigenous Legal Issues. This will be the 16th practice area now available through this competence-based credentialing process, which promotes high standards of knowledge, skill, experience and professional conduct to support access to quality legal representation by the public. Development of the new area began in early 2014 and has involved subject matter area experts and senior practitioners from a broad array of practice contexts, client groups and geographical locations to assist with the drafting, review and validation of the standards. Input on the standards was sought from client and professional stakeholder groups. The new specialization in Indigenous Legal Issues is expected to be available to the profession in the fall of 2016.

Practice Supports and Resources

The Department's work has been focused on launching the new Coach and Advisor Network ("CAN"), while maintaining and enhancing the quality of service provided by the Practice Management and the CPD Accreditation teams.

CAN is now online and accepting applications for volunteer Coaches and Advisors. Orientation materials and templates for Coaches and Advisors have been posted on CAN's Resources page and additional training materials and supports will soon be available at no cost through the LSUC store. In November, lawyers and paralegals will be able to submit Requests for Time with a CAN Coach or Advisor and resources to support preparation by those Participants will be available.

CAN has developed "The Introduction to the CAN Coaching Model" program and will offer this skills training in a number of locations throughout the province in the coming year. In addition, CAN is developing e-learning options to ensure that all CAN Coaches will have ready access to quality training.

CAN has initiated contact with the leadership of mentorship programs provided by law associations and legal professional organizations in Ontario. CAN plans to host an information sharing and mentoring best practices event with interested representatives of those organizations before year-end.

The Practice Management Helpline (PMH) has answered more than 7,300 inquiries since the beginning of the year, and anticipates more than 8,000 inquiries by year end, representing a notable increase year to year. Between 2007 and 2015, PMH inquiries steadily increased from 4,337 to 7,423 per year. This is an overall increase of 71%. From January to October 2016, PMH handled 6,951 inquiries, which is a further increase of 9.8% over the same period in 2015. New resources have been developed and existing resources updated to reflect the recent amendments to the Rules of Professional Conduct and paralegal Rules of Conduct. A number of new Practice Tips on emerging technology issues have also been created and are now available online in MP3 and transcribed formats.

CPD Accreditation has developed a comprehensive audit process for Accredited Providers of Professionalism Content to ensure alignment of their programming with the Accreditation Criteria. CPD Accreditation has begun to implement this audit process with 10 of its Accredited Providers.

LICENSING UPDATE

Lawyer Licensing Process

There are approximately 2350 newly registered lawyer licensing candidates in the 2015-16 process which is now well under way, with most candidates having been called to the bar recently. The new group of licensing candidates for 2016-17 have started their process and licensing examinations were held this past June.

The second year of the Pathways Pilot Project is also now completed. The Law Practice Program alternative pathway was selected by 231 candidates for the 2015-16 licensing year – 220 completing the English program with Ryerson University and 11 completing the French program with the University of Ottawa. In the 2016-17 licensing year, there are currently 234 candidates in the English program and 23 candidates in the French program.

In the June 2016 call to the bar ceremonies, the Law Society called 1600 candidates to the Bar of Ontario. In addition to the ceremonial calls held in January and September, and administrative calls throughout the year, it is anticipated that the Law Society will call over 2200 lawyer licensing candidates to the Bar in 2016.

Paralegal Licensing Process

Following the introduction of new accreditation protocols for Paralegal College Programs, which took effect in the 2015-16 academic year for the colleges, 11 intakes of paralegal college programming were not entitled to proceed. This was predominantly due to lack of sufficient enrollment in those intakes. At this time, there are 29 approved paralegal programs, at 45 college campuses, with 64 class intakes on a cohort to cohort basis. Since the inception of the paralegal college program audits for accreditation and ongoing quality assurance, the Law society has conducted 51 rigorous audits and continues to do so.

LEGAL INFORMATION AND LIBRARY SERVICES

The Great Library is moving toward providing additional space for use by members, in response to needs expressed by members themselves. They have finished transitioning the Riddell print collection of historic books donated by Justice Riddell to new high-density shelving. This compact, rolling shelving has freed up significant storage space in the basement of Osgoode Hall, which the library will now fill with older parts of the print collection shifted from the Main and first floors of the library. These shifts will eventually culminate in increased research space on the main floor of the library.

Corporate Records and Archives continues to work on SharePoint related projects related to document retention and tracking protocols. In particular, they have been working closely with Information Technology staff for the past year and are close to a working prototype that will enable document tagging within SharePoint by Law Society staff. Once in place, this will provide a foundation for a SharePoint-based records centre in 2018.

POLICY, EQUITY AND PUBLIC AFFAIRS (PEPA)

Advertising and Fee Arrangements Issues

As referred to above, the Advertising and Fee Arrangements Issues Working Group is considering the issues raised in the Working Group's paper of June 2016 and the submissions received following a call for feedback. The Working Group is examining issues of advertising and marketing that may be false or misleading and fees that are not transparent and may have an impact on the way in which legal services are provided. The Working Group is expected to continue its work into early 2017.

Disclosure Working Group

In September 2016 Convocation adopted a report from the Disclosure Working Group recommending the approval of a disclosure policy framework regarding the disclosure of information about complaints and investigations. Statutory amendments may be required to fully implement the framework.

Governance Task Force

The Governance Task Force was established in September 2016 following a commitment by Convocation to review the Law Society's governance structure in the Strategic Plan. The Task Force has commenced meeting and is discussing the principles to govern its work, as directed by the Strategic Plan and the Task Force's terms of reference. The Task Force is considering a broad range of governance initiatives and will be reporting to Convocation on an on-going basis.

The Real Estate Issues Working Group

The Real Estate Issues Working Group continues to deal with issues and developments related to real estate practice in Ontario. The Working Group is currently considering the implications of third party electronic funds transfer products for the public and for lawyers, including the extent to which the use of such products is consistent with lawyers' professional obligations.

Mental Health Strategy Task Force

A Mental Health Strategy Implementation Task Force has been established to monitor implementation of the Mental Health Strategy Convocation approved this year. Building on the efforts the Law Society is already undertaking in this area, the Strategy includes a Vision and Commitment to underpin the Law Society's work, two Strategic Directions with a focus on preventive/management strategies and regulatory strategies and a number of Key Elements and Initiatives that will advance those Directions. As implementation progresses, we expect that policy issues related to the strategy will be referred to the appropriate committees for consideration.

Access to Justice and the Action Group (TAG)

TAG coordinated Ontario's first Access to Justice Week with a wide range of partners from October 17 to 21. The week resulted in engagement with the public as well as representatives from technology, business, social sectors in addition to our justice system partners. Together, these participants explored different elements of the access to justice crisis such as public opinion, child welfare and importance of innovative collaborations in the development of meaningful solutions.

The events received coverage from 25 media outlets as well as letters of support from The Honourable Beverley McLachlin, as well as Federal Justice Minister Jody Wilson Raybould. As well the Attorney General of Ontario, Yasir Naqvi made a ministerial statement commending Access to Justice week.

Equity Initiatives

The Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group is reporting to Convocation this month with 13 recommendations aimed at addressing these challenges. This is the culmination of a lengthy study, including a comprehensive consultative phase, and I look forward to the results of Convocation's consideration of the report.

Our Equity and Aboriginal Affairs Committee and its Indigenous Advisory Group (IAG) continue their joint development of an Indigenous Strategy/Framework that will formulate approaches to priorities set out in Treasurer's Memorandum to the Committee. This includes developing programs to enhance cultural competence on the part of the professions and Law Society in dealings with Indigenous peoples, improving access to the complaints process for Indigenous communities and supporting and implementing the work of reconciliation, in collaboration with IAG, by responding to and implementing the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada's Final Report (TRC Final Report) Calls to Action related to the Law Society's mandate.

We have also begun consideration of the process for review of the Discrimination and Harassment Council program as set out in the Treasurer's Memorandum.

Federation of Law Societies of Canada

The Law Society's contribution in both human and financial resources to the Federation continues to be significant. The report on the Federation's October 2016 meetings to Convocation this month shows the extensive contribution from the Law Society benchers and staff. In particular, several senior staff are involved in a number of initiatives. These include Diana Miles, Executive Director, Organizational Strategy /Professional Development & Competence, who participates as a member of the National Requirement Review Committee and serves on the CanLII Board Nominating Committee, Karen Manarin who serves on the Standing Committee on National Discipline Standards, Jim Varro who serves on the Anti-Money Laundering and Terrorist Financing Working Group and Naomi Bussin, Senior Counsel, Professional Regulation who is a member of the Standing Committee on the Model Code of Professional Conduct. I serve as a member of the Finance and Audit Committee.

Special mention should be made of Policy Counsel Juda Strawczynski who did an extraordinary amount of work in preparing submissions in concert with the Federation on a number of government-initiated consultations this past summer.

Government Relations

Public Affairs liaises with all levels of government to ensure ongoing and enhanced networks and relationships. In addition, Government initiatives that affect the Law Society's mandate currently being monitored and addressed include:

- The expansion of Unified Family Courts in Ontario
- Legal Aid (both as a supporter seeking enhanced funding to address eligibility levels, and as a partner in recommending appointments to the board)
- Paralegal Exemptions
- Real Estate issues
- Monitoring search and seizure provisions in provincial regulatory statutes, to protect privilege
- Working with the government on new initiatives on issues such as prevention of sexual violence and managing auto insurance costs
- Managing the Law Society's legislative agenda
- Public policy participation thru various think tanks and forums

Treasurer's Appointments Advisory Group (TAAG)

In September 2016, the Treasurer established a group of benchers to co-ordinate the process for the various external appointments made by the Law Society and to provide advice to the Treasurer on these appointments. Public Affairs is assisting with outreach to stakeholders and the recruitment of diverse candidates. TAAG is currently reviewing a recruitment process policy, which will include a policy statement and appropriate criteria that will guide the appointment of well-qualified persons to the various boards, councils and committees of external bodies and has already provided names to both the Federal and Provincial governments for appointments.

Legal Aid Working Group

In October 2016, the Treasurer established the Legal Aid Working Group (LAWG) to identify opportunities for engagement and enhancement of the Law Society's relationship with Legal Aid Ontario (LAO), Alliance for Sustainable Legal Aid (ASLA), government and other justice system and community services partners in accordance with and further to the Law Society's functions and duties respecting competence, access to justice, the rule of law and the public interest. Public Affairs has played a significant role in developing and organizing the committee and will continue to play a supporting role. The Law Society is also a member organization of the ASLA and provides bencher support for the Alliance. Its mandate is to communicate to the provincial and federal government the importance of the provision of properly funded and consistently high quality legal aid services in a cost-effective and efficient manner to low-income Ontarians throughout the province.

Real Estate Liaison Group (RELG)

The Real Estate Liaison Group, created by the Treasurer together with the Ontario Bar Association, FOLA and LawPRO engages in dialogue on real estate issues of common interest and planning in response to expressed concern about the future and current state of real estate practice in Ontario. The group continues to meet to discuss current issues, including ABS, regulatory policy issues touching on real estate practice and legislative developments.

MEDIA RELATIONS AND ISSUES MANAGEMENT (MRIM)

The Media Relations and Issues Management (MRIM) team works to ensure that the Law Society, its mandate, initiatives and operations are positively and accurately represented in the public sphere.

These activities include managing a high volume of media enquiries and pursuing positive earned media coverage. MRIM also supports external communications activities for the Treasurer, Convocation and the work of their committees.

Over the last year, MRIM has taken a proactive approach to media relations and to communicating Law Society initiatives which have resulted in expanded editorial reach and increased coverage, most of it positive or neutral in tone. For example in the third quarter alone, total editorial reach was over seventy three million with 790 stories related to the Law Society.

MRIM this year has also strived to have a significant spokesperson quote in media stories that invokes one of our strategic priorities and/or the Law Society's public protection mandate. In the last quarter, 55% of coverage included a spokesperson quote.

MRIM continues to distribute weekly to media all of the Law Society Tribunal proceedings and notices which have contributed to a continual increase in media coverage for the Law Society.

In addition, MRIM has received and responded to 320 different media inquiries to date. Overall, discipline matters garner the most interest and coverage.

Other topics of interest include TWU, Challenges faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group, the LPP, new Treasurer election, Calls to the Bar, Personal Injury Advertising and Compensation Fund increase. TAG's first Access to Justice Week last October also garnered significant coverage in 25 different media outlets across the province.

As well, over the past year, the Treasurer, working group chairs and other Law Society representatives conducted a number of interviews, both with legal trade and mainstream publications or networks MRIM also initiates a broad range of internal and external communications materials. To date this year, the department prepared over 70 speeches or speaker notes in addition to news releases, positioning statements, media plans and Convocation News that support Law Society priorities and the Treasurer's outreach initiatives. MRIM also developed and maintains a targeted community partner and justice sector distribution process for legal information guides available in Cree, Oji-Cree and Northwestern Ojibway, as well as English and French.

COMMUNICATIONS AND MARKETING (C&M)

Over the course of the year, the focus for Communications and Marketing continues to be the strategic evolution of digital initiatives and communications as directed by the Law Society's strategic priorities for 2015-2019.

Social Media

In March 2016, the Law Society revised its approach to strategic content marketing through Facebook, Twitter and LinkedIn with the intent of growing social media audiences, increasing engagement and enhancing the Law Society's reputation and brand.

For other channels such as YouTube, we implemented a plan this quarter to better utilize the platform by reorganizing video inventory and increasing new, well-branded and timely content. This included the launch of the Treasurer's video blog, which was developed to provide opportunities to increase engagement. The Treasurer's Twitter account incorporates an integrated communications approach with the Law Society Twitter account. Communications and Marketing has also tested Instagram as a new platform to focus on Law Society news. .

The Law Society's social media audience continues to grow: our Facebook page now has 3,785 likes; 8,108 follow us on LinkedIn; and we've reached the 10,000 mark for Twitter followers. Overall, the results indicate that targeted messaging on timely topics has increased engagement.

Websites

Communications and Marketing together with Information Technology, is leading a corporate website redesign project to engage the public, professions and stakeholders and to build a strategic communications tool that effectively supports the organization's core work. The new Law Society website will offer target audiences a cohesive online experience where relevant information, services and resources can be easily accessed in an understandable way.

An extensive content inventory and audit of the current website was completed, along with interviews with key stakeholders and departments. The content strategy and design phase of the project will begin in late November and will continue into the first quarter of 2017.

The Gazette, the Law Society's online magazine, has had a 15% increase in 2016, most notably from referral traffic from social channels and the corporate website. Mobile traffic, an important and growing source, has increased 81% in 2016. The top performing Gazette article was our Mental Health Week promotion, which had the most views this year.

TECHNOLOGY

SharePoint

Our largest SharePoint related project in 2016 has been the design and rollout of the Tribunal Information Management (TIM) System, a SharePoint-based case management system for use by Law Society Tribunals staff. The development is complete, with implementation scheduled for December and go-live for January 2017. We are also in discussions to plan the next phase of this project, which involves the redevelopment of the portions of the process which are currently hosted on the AS/400. This year we also successfully completed the Discipline History SharePoint Scanning Integration project, which involved transferring approximately 23,000 discipline history files from a network drive to SharePoint to make them easier to access and search.

Relationship Management System Project (RMS)

The Relationship Management System is the name of the project to modernize the Lawyer & Paralegal Database, or as many people call it, the AS/400 (after the name of the IBM server it runs on). In this age of "big data," and with the demand for more automation and self-service, the current system severely limits us from being as effective, proactive, and service-oriented as we can and should be. In addition to addressing technical risks, one of the major business goals of the RMS is to increase the efficiency of our existing staff to prepare us for taking on new, data-intensive initiatives. Other goals, requested by users, include redesigning the class/status code system, and working towards a more comprehensive, “one-stop-shop” approach to data access to improve staff efficiency and service quality.

As part of our extensive work plan this year, we have:

- Developed initial estimates of the cost, duration, and platform options for the project
- Created a representative Steering Committee, led by Terry Knott, for strategic guidance and business decisions
- Engaged a professional consulting firm to provide advice and assistance in planning
- Developed detailed business requirements and data model for use in purchasing.

As the project funding has been approved, the Steering Committee plans to initiate the detailed design and implementation of the Relationship Management System in 2017. The Request for Proposal will be released in the first quarter of 2017; followed by the beginning of the Discovery Phase with the selected vendor late in the second quarter. Design and Development will begin in the fourth quarter, provided a fixed price contract is negotiated after the Discovery Phase.

LSUC Portal

The Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report will look different for the 2016 filing year, as they will be fully integrated into the LSUC Portal. The Annual Report section of the Portal will look more like the other portlets and will provide more flexibility for development in the future.

The Law Society Referral Service application and renewal process moved into the LSUC Portal in the middle of November. This allows licensees to manage their own LSRS profile, including areas of law and dates they are not available to accept referrals.

Digital Information Risk Management Program

Having designated Information Security as a major theme of this year, we have taken serious action on a number of fronts to increase our security against the growing tide of hacker attacks, data breaches, and increasingly destructive malware. This summer, for example, we encrypted the hard drives of over 300 laptops, so that the data they contain remains secure even if they should be lost or stolen. We also connected 66 iPads to our mobile device management server, which allows us to lock them down and to remotely wipe them should they be lost or stolen—and which allowed us to provide secure access to SharePoint on them. On the server side, we are adding some additional layers of protection against the new wave of malware attacks that come in via email and USB drives; by our latest measurement, almost 2% of incoming email contains a virus (and is blocked by our servers).

Other Projects

Other business-focused projects we have completed this year include the replacement the Law Society's old eCommerce system with a newer high-capacity system, the update of the Articling Registry application to improve its security and usability, and the implementation of changes in iLaws to support Experiential Training.

OUR PEOPLE

Diversity Census and Inclusion Survey initiative

In March, the Law Society launched its first Diversity Census and Inclusion Survey - to help us better understand the demographic characteristics that make up our team. There was a 72% participation rate, with high rates of feelings of inclusion overall. We communicated the final analysis and action plans from the survey results to employees during the Town Hall meeting in September, and plan to discuss them with the Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee early in the New Year.

Employee Engagement and Enablement Survey

In June 2016 the Law Society conducted an Employee Engagement and Enablement Survey to help improve the effectiveness of our organization and enhance communications between management and employees at all levels. The results were as follows:

- 77% employee response rate – 427 participants
- 73% employee engagement – (commitment & discretionary effort)
- 71% employee enablement – (optimized roles & supportive environment)

These scores are very high, positioning the Law Society above the average for public/not-for-profit organizations, and for organizations in Canada generally.

SERVICES FOR MEMBERS AND THE PUBLIC

LAW SOCIETY REFERRAL SERVICE

From January 1, 2016 to October 31, 2016, the Law Society Referral Service provided 36,745 referrals. Of those, 26,087 were provided through the online service; 9,734 referrals were provided through the crisis line; and 924 referrals were provided by email.

From January 1 to October 31, 2016, LSRS also provided the names of 11,106 LSRS members to people who did not qualify for a referral. A member of the public would not qualify for a referral if they do not live in Ontario, if their legal matter is urgent and they cannot wait up to three business days for the licensee to arrange a consultation, or if they have already received a referral for the same legal issue within the calendar year.

MEMBER ASSISTANCE PLAN (MAP)

Usage

For the period of January 1 to September 30, 2016 there were 1,115 MAP cases. As a result, Homewood Health, the Law Society's Member Assistance Program provider, has a projected an annual utilization rate for 2016 to be 5.13%.

The awareness source of the MAP continues to arrive predominantly from a previous client (36.1%), which again allows us to infer that the program is being shared through word of mouth from prior recipients of the program.

There was good distribution of age groups accessing MAP, with the largest cohorts in the age ranges of 21-30 (25.6%) and 31-40 (36.9%).

The top MAP counselling categories for this time period in 2016 was psychological counselling (49.7%); work counselling (18.7%) and marital/relationship counselling (16.2%). Of the psychological cases, stress had the highest number of cases at 14.3%, followed by anxiety at 14.2% and depression at 10.4%.

The method of distribution for counselling was 77.4% face-to-face; 16.8% over the phone; and 5.8% over the web.

Looking at overall utilization, the top area of Plan Smart cases were: career counselling at 38.9%, 12 weeks to wellness at 21.6% and nutritional counselling at 10.8%.

Peer Conclave

Friday, October 28th, marked the second annual Peer Conclave. The objective of this event is to bring together volunteers from across the membership with a shared mission towards supporting professionals in the legal profession in managing some of their most challenging mental, physical and social health issues. Peers come from all corners of the profession - lawyers, judges, paralegals and students.

In this year's program, the Peers were joined by Mr. Michael Bryant, former Attorney General. Mr. Bryant, a recovering alcoholic, openly shared his story, more specifically, his struggle with addiction, and its impact on his personal and professional life. Mr. Bryant's willingness to share his story of recovery had a tremendous and positive impact on the Peer group.

A long term commitment has been made to ensure that Peers continue to receive this type of inspiration, along with the education, training and support provided by MAP Program.

CONCLUSION

It is when my staff assembles the information for this report that I perhaps most often marvel at the depth and breadth of the operations of the Law society of Upper Canada and the dedication of our staff to delivering on our strategic priorities that are informed by our statutory mandates. As always, I want to acknowledge my appreciation for that dedication. As we look back on the year, 2016 has been a time of significant and exciting changes in some important parts of our operation. These aren't easy. They challenge staff and management to think and work differently. I have been deeply impressed and grateful for the willingness of staff and our management teams to embrace change, and their patience in working through it. I am also most grateful for the support of our new Treasurer, Paul Schabas, and Members of Convocation. The change management process is made easier and more interesting by their commitment to it.

Motion

That Convocation approve the following thirteen recommendations outlined in the Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions report:

Recommendation 1 – Reinforcing Professional Obligations

The Law Society will review and amend, where appropriate, the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, and Commentaries to reinforce the professional obligations of all licensees to recognize, acknowledge and promote principles of equality, diversity and inclusion consistent with the requirements under human rights legislation and the special responsibilities of licensees in the legal and paralegal professions.

Recommendation 2 – Diversity and Inclusion Project

The Law Society will work with stakeholders, such as interested legal workplaces, legal associations, law schools and paralegal colleges to develop model policies and resources to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees.

Recommendation 3 – The Adoption of Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Principles and Practices

The Law Society will:

- 1) require every licensee to adopt and to abide by a statement of principles acknowledging their obligation to promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally, and in their behaviour towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public;
- 2) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy for their legal workplace addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement, which will be available to members of the professions and the public upon request;
- 3) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to complete, every two years, an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment for their legal workplace, to be provided to the Law Society; and
- 4) encourage legal workplaces to conduct inclusion surveys by providing them with sample templates.

Recommendation 4 – Measuring Progress through Quantitative Analysis

Each year, the Law Society will measure progress quantitatively by providing legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees in Ontario with the quantitative self-identification data of their licensees compiled from the Lawyers Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report so they can compare their data with the aggregate demographic data gathered from the profession as a whole through the annual reports.

Recommendation 5 – Measuring Progress through Qualitative Analysis

The Law Society will measure progress by:

- 1) asking licensees to voluntarily answer inclusion questions, provided by the Law Society, about their legal workplace, every four years; and
- 2) compiling the results of the inclusion questions for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees in Ontario and providing the legal workplace with a summary of the information gathered

Recommendation 6 – Inclusion Index

Every four years, the Law Society will develop and publish an inclusion index that reflects the following information, including, for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees: the legal workplace's self-assessment information (Recommendation 3(3)), demographic data obtained from the Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report (Recommendation 4) and information gathered from the inclusion questions provided by the Law Society (Recommendation 5).

Recommendation 7 – Repeat Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project Inclusion Survey

The Law Society will conduct inclusion surveys with questions similar to those asked in Appendix F of the Stratcom Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Final Report (March 11, 2014) (available online at <http://www.stratcom.ca/wp-content/uploads/manual/Racialized-Licensees-Full-Report.pdf>). The first inclusion survey will be conducted within one year of the adoption of these recommendations, and thereafter every four years, subject to any recommendation by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee to Convocation.

Recommendation 8 – Progressive Compliance Measures

The Law Society will consider and enact, as appropriate, progressive compliance measures for legal workplaces that do not comply with the requirements proposed in Recommendation 3 and/or legal workplaces that are identified as having systemic barriers to diversity and inclusion.

Recommendation 9 – Continuing Professional Development (CPD) Programs on Topics of Equality and Inclusion in the Professions

The Law Society will:

- 1) launch a three hour accredited program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions;
- 2) develop resources to assist legal workplaces in designing and delivering their own three hour program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions, to be accredited by the Law Society; and
- 3) require each licensee to complete three hours of an accredited program focused on equality and inclusion within the first three years following the adoption of these recommendations and one hour per year every year thereafter, which will count towards the licensee's professionalism hours for that year.

Recommendation 10 – The Licensing Process

The Law Society will include the topics of cultural competency, equality and inclusion in the professions as competencies to be acquired in the Licensing Process.

Recommendation 11 – Building Communities of Support

The Law Society, in collaboration with legal associations where appropriate, will provide support to racialized licensees in need of direction and assistance through mentoring and networking initiatives.

Recommendation 12 – Addressing Complaints of Systemic Discrimination

The Law Society, in light of the findings of this project and emerging issues in the professions, will:

- 1) review the function, processes and structure of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC), including considering effective ways for the DHC to address issues of systemic discrimination;
- 2) revise the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, where appropriate, so that systemic discrimination and reprisal for complaints of discrimination and harassment are clearly identified as breaches of professional conduct requirements;
- 3) create effective ways for the Professional Regulation Division to address complaints of systemic discrimination; and
- 4) create a specialized and trained team to address complaints of discrimination.

Recommendation 13 – Leading by Example

- 1) The Law Society will continue to monitor and assess internal policies, practices and programs, to promote diversity, inclusion and equality within the workplace and in the provision of services by:
  - a) as required, adopting, implementing and maintaining a human rights/diversity policy addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement;
  - b) measuring quantitative progress through a census of the workforce or other method;
  - c) measuring qualitative progress by conducting inclusion surveys;
  - d) conducting regular equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessments; and
  - e) based on the results from b), c) and d), identifying gaps and barriers and adopting measures to address the gaps and barriers;
  - f) publishing relevant findings from b), c), d) and e); and
  - g) providing equality and inclusion education programs for staff at the Law Society on a regular basis.
- 2) The Law Society will:
  - a) conduct an internal diversity assessment of the bench composition and publicize the results;
  - b) provide equality and inclusion education programs for Convocation on a regular basis

Overview of Submissions

The Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group (“the Working Group”) provided its final report, Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions on September 22, 2016 for information. The report is to be before Convocation for decision on December 2, 2016.

Members of the legal professions and the public were invited to provide comments on the recommendations outlined in the report until November 14, 2015. The Law Society received 46 submissions – 23 from individuals and 23 from organizations (see TAB 3.1.1). The Working Group has determined that only submissions from organizations are to be public. Many of the individual submissions speak to personal experiences and the Working Group believes that should those individuals wish to make their views public, they should have the option to do so on their own. What follows is a summary of both individual and organization submissions divided by the five interrelated categories outlined in the report: accelerating culture shift; measuring progress; educating for change; implementing supports; and operations of the Law Society.

The Working Group received positive comments from the professions and the public, with many individuals and organizations commending the Law Society for taking steps to address issues of systemic racism in the legal professions. The Working Group is encouraged by the submissions it received.

Many of the comments spoke to the implementation of the recommendations in the report. These comments are not outlined in this document – however, should the recommendations be approved by Convocation, the comments will be considered during the implementation phase.

General comments

All of the submissions from organizations representing licensees from equality-seeking organizations expressed support for the 13 recommendations put forward by the Working Group, with suggestions provided on how to strengthen the recommendations. Generally, no organizations were opposed to the recommendations.

Specifically, the submissions from the Canadian Association of Black Lawyers, the Roundtable of Diversity Associations, the Metro Toronto Chinese & Southeast Asian Legal Clinic, the South Asian Bar Association, the Equity Advisory Group, the Canadian Hispanic Bar Association, and the Federation of Asian Canadian Lawyers stressed that Convocation should vote on the thirteen recommendations as a package and not individually.

In addition, many of the submissions from organizations suggested that the recommendations outlined in the Working Group’s report should apply to all equality-seeking groups and not solely to racialized licensees. Some submissions also noted that the report and the recommendations should recognize how intersections of gender, race, sexual orientation, disability and other aspects of identity shape the experiences of licensees.

Accelerating culture shift

The Working Group received submissions supporting the need to accelerate cultural change in the legal professions.

The Working Group received a comment about the importance of taking an approach that recognizes the unique barriers faced by Indigenous licensees and the challenges that both racialized and Indigenous licensees face. Additionally, the comment asked that the Working Group make specific mention of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's final report and the need to address reconciliation between Indigenous and non-Indigenous peoples.

The Working Group is thankful for this comment and has included text that reflects this suggestions in the "Guiding Principles" section of the report.

One comment received by the Working Group advised that the Law Society should require law schools to remove obstacles against racialized licensees. The Working Group notes that the Law Society does not have authority over law schools; however, law schools are encouraged to participate in the Diversity and Inclusion Project outlined in Recommendation 2.

Some submissions suggested that the Law Society, under Recommendation 3, should require all legal workplaces, not just workplaces of at least 10 licensees, to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy and complete an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment. In determining the size of workplace for this requirement, the Working Group considered balancing burden and benefit. Although the requirement applies to workplaces of at least 10 licensees, workplaces of less than 10 licensees are strongly encouraged to develop policies and complete self-assessments. This encouragement is reflected in the text that accompanies the recommendation.

One submission suggested that legal workplaces' diversity policies should be made publicly available on the workplace website. In considering this suggestion, the Working Group determined that not all legal workplace websites are used as a recruitment tool - some are intended as advocacy tools, for example. The Working Group, however, noted that policies should be available to the public. Consequently, the Working Group has modified Recommendation 3(2) to note that the policies should be available to members of the professions and the public upon request.

An additional submission proposed that an exemption be provided for legal workplaces that have existing human rights/diversity policies provided they satisfy the Law Society's requirements. The text that accompanies Recommendation 3 recognizes that licensees' employers may already have workplace policies that satisfy the requirement under Recommendation 3(2)

Measuring Progress

The Working Group received positive responses to the recommendations regarding data collection.

One submission suggested that the quantitative self-identification data collected by the Law Society should be published in an aggregate manner. The Working Group notes that the Law Society currently provides race-based self-identification data by size of firm in its annual statistical snapshots, which are available at: https://www.lsuc.on.ca/uploadedFiles/Equity\_and\_Diversity/Members2/TAB%207.3.1.%20-%20Snapshot-Lawyers16\_apr13.pdf (lawyers) and https://www.lsuc.on.ca/uploadedFiles/Equity\_and\_Diversity/Members2/TAB%207.3.2-%20Paralegal-Snapshot16\_apr13.pdf (paralegals).

One comment proposed that equity-seeking legal associations should have access to the data collected by the Law Society and that data should be made public at the law school level. The Working Group is of the view that the data should be disseminated to the public through the annual statistical snapshots and that the inclusion index will provide equity-seeking associations and law schools with insights into diversity and inclusion in various workplaces.

Another submission recommended that legal workplaces should be required to engage in internal collection of data in their workplaces. The Working Group is conscious of the fact that many firms may not have the resources to properly collect data from licensees and that there may be privacy concerns if legal workplaces are collecting data from licensees directly. The Working Group asserts that privacy and confidentiality are essential principles to uphold in collecting quantitative demographic data and qualitative inclusion data from licensees.

One comment suggested that the inclusion index include information for all legal workplaces regardless of their size, not just workplaces of at least 25 licensees. Legal workplaces of less than 25 licensees are encouraged to participate in the inclusion index; however, in balancing benefit with burden, the Working Group has determined that 25 licensees and above is an appropriate number.

In terms of conducting inclusion surveys that are similar to the Stratcom survey, the Working Group received a comment that an interval of four years would not capture the issues the Working Group seeks to identify given the rate at which lawyers leave law firms. The Working Group carefully considered this time interval and notes that four years was seen as an appropriate amount of time for changes to take hold.

The Working Group received questions about the nature of the progressive compliance measures outlined in Recommendation 8. The Working Group notes that the nature of the compliance measures will be carefully considered by the Law Society in due course. The intent of the Working Group is to foster cooperation to the extent possible and engage in reactive measures only when necessary.

Educating for Change

The Working Group is pleased that, from the comments received, the professions and the public are in agreement with the requirement for licensees to complete equality and inclusion Continuing Professional Development hours.

The Working Group received a number of comments that suggested that licensees be required to complete a one hour equality and inclusion program per year instead of three hours once every three years. One submission suggested that the Law Society require licensees to participate in an equality and inclusion program once every year following an initial three hour training program. The Working Group believes that this is an excellent suggestion as the three hour training program will allow for licensees to develop a foundation in equality and inclusion principles. The annual one hour requirement, following the initial three hour program, will ensure that equality and inclusion principles are top of mind for licensees.

Building Communities of Support

Comments on the final report reiterated the importance of mentoring and networking. Suggestions made included the creation of a mentoring initiative specifically for junior racialized licensees, free mentoring services to all new lawyers of any background and mentoring for law students. One submission also proposed that the Law Society monitor the success of all mentoring and networking initiatives and identify any improvements. The Working Group notes that the Law Society recently launched the Coach and Advisor Network, which will, in addition to providing advisor and coaching services, act “a centralized source of information to the professions on mentorship programs in Ontario.”<sup>1</sup>

The Working Group received a submission that noted the importance of employing an approach that addresses the unique experiences of Indigenous licensees and the similar barriers faced by Indigenous and racialized licensees – in addition to a suggestion that mentioned be made of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission’s final report. The Working Group has incorporated this suggestion in the “Guiding Principles” section of the report.

The Working Group notes that in November 2016, Convocation determined that the Law Society will engage in an analysis of the licensing process. The Working Group expects that the principles of equality and inclusion will be considered during this process.

The Law Society received submissions regarding the review of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel (“DHC”) program outlined in Recommendation 12 – particularly related to the need to maintain the confidentiality and independence of the DHC program. The Working Group notes that the Law Society’s Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee (“EAIC”) commenced a review of the DHC program in Fall 2016. EAIC is alive to the importance of the DHC’s duty of confidentiality and the arms-length position of the DHC.

Leading by Example

Comments regarding leading by example spoke largely to the bench election process. The Working Group notes that in September 2016, the Law Society established a Governance Task Force to make recommendations in regard to the Law Society’s governance structure.

A suggestion was made that Recommendation 13(1)(a) should include the words “discipline, discharge and revocation”, however, the Working Group points out that the requirement for the Law Society to adopt, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy speaks to the need for the policy to address at the very least recruitment, retention and advancement. The wording of this recommendation is broad in order to allow for the Law Society to examine various aspects of its operations.

Other comments

The Working Group received submissions that outlined the importance of addressing the challenges faced by racialized licensees in law school and upon entry into the profession. The Diversity and Inclusion Project, contemplated in Recommendation 2, is intended to allow for a forum to address these issues. Other submissions suggested that the Working Group should address the pathways to licensing for lawyers. The Working Group notes, again, that Convocation has already approved a review of the licensing process.

One submission noted that the report has been silent on the unique needs of racialized internationally trained lawyers without Canadian education or experience. It is the Working Group's intention that the implementation of the recommendations will consider all racialized licensees and the intersections of their experiences, including the experiences of internationally trained racialized licensees.

Some submissions suggested that the Law Society should consider the economic barriers for racialized licensees and other licensees from equity-seeking groups. The Working Group notes that in the implementation of the recommendations, economic barriers will be considered.

One submission noted that the report had failed to direct the Law Society to develop mental health strategies specific to racialized licensees. The Working Group notes that in April 2016, the Law Society approved a long-term mental health strategy, which "builds on the Law Society's existing mental health initiatives and lays the groundwork to explore additional supports or programs that fall within the organization's mandate."<sup>2</sup>

One submission suggested that the Report should call upon the Law Society to work with the Roundtable of Diversity Associations (RODA) and other associations serving racialized lawyers across Ontario using a similar approach to The Action Group on Access to Justice. It is contemplated that the Diversity and Inclusion Project under Recommendation 2 will be a forum for the Law Society to work with associations serving racialized licensees.

Executive Summary

“Inclusion is not about bringing people into what already exists; it is making a new space, a better space for everyone.”<sup>3</sup>

This is the unanimous final report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group. The fifteen Benchers on the Working Group have reviewed the written submissions and other input of Benchers and many external stakeholders since the initial presentation of the report to Convocation on September 22, 2016. After discussion and some revisions, the Working Group now presents this Report, unanimous in its 13 recommendations and the rationale supporting them, for approval by Convocation on December 2, 2016.

This Report represents the final stage of a lengthy consultative and study exercise which has led to the conclusion that racialized licensees<sup>4</sup> face widespread barriers within the professions at all stages of their careers. As the title “Working Together for Change” bears out, the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group is confident that there is a unique opportunity for change, based on collaborative, concrete steps to implement solutions. That said, the challenges faced by racialized licensees are both longstanding and significant. In our view, the Law Society must take a leadership role in giving legal workplaces reasonable deadlines to implement steps that are important to bringing about lasting culture change. The Working Group has concluded that prescribing minimum standards of equality, diversity and inclusion are consistent with the human rights responsibilities of the profession — obligations already required by the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct and, more generally, the Human Rights Code.

Reform in addressing barriers faced by racialized licensees is an essential component of ensuring a healthy and successful legal profession, and to advancement of the public interest — goals that we all share and must achieve.

Background

1. The Law Society of Upper Canada (The Law Society) has a duty to maintain and advance the cause of justice and the rule of law, to facilitate access to justice for the people of Ontario and to protect the public interest. Furthermore, the Law Society is committed to adhering to its obligations under the Human Rights Code. In fulfilling its mandate, the Law Society integrates equality and diversity values and principles into all of its policies, practices and programs. The

<sup>4</sup> The Ontario Human Rights Commission notes that using the terminology “racialized person” or “racialized group” is more accurate than “racial minority”, “visible minority”, “person of colour” or “non-White”. Race is the socially constructed differences among people based on characteristics such as accent or manner of speech, name, clothing, diet, beliefs and practices, leisure preferences, places of origin and so forth. Racialization is the “process by which societies construct races as real, different and unequal in ways that matter to economic, political and social life”. See Ontario Human Rights Commission, Racial discrimination, race and racism, online: Ontario Human Rights Commission <http://www.ohrc.on.ca/en/racial-discrimination-race-andracism>

Law Society works to ensure that the law and the practice of law are reflective of all the people of Ontario, including Indigenous peoples, Francophones and equality-seeking communities. The Law Society also seeks to ensure that its workplace and the legal professions are free of harassment and discrimination.

In 2012, the Law Society created the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group (“the Working Group”) to:

- a. identify challenges faced by racialized licensees in different practice environments, including entry into practice and advancement;
- b. identify factors and practice-challenges faced by racialized licensees that could increase the risk of regulatory complaints and discipline;
- c. consider best practices for preventative, remedial and/or support strategies;
- d. if appropriate, design and develop preventative, remedial, enforcement, regulatory and/or support strategies, for consideration by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee (“EAIC”) and other committees, to address these challenges.

The Working Group’s Approach

Since 2012, the Working Group has been actively engaged in gathering information about the challenges faced by racialized licensees and developing recommendations to address these challenges.

In order to fulfil its mandate, the Working Group gathered information about the challenges faced by racialized licensees using consultant and community engagement processes.<sup>5</sup> Further information about this part of the Working Group’s activities can be found at: <http://www.lsuc.on.ca/racialized-licensees/>.

The Working Group reviewed all of the information gathered through the engagement process and drafted a consultation paper titled Developing Strategies for Change: Addressing Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees.<sup>6</sup>

Convocation approved the consultation paper in November 2014, and the Working Group consulted with over 1,000 racialized and non-racialized lawyers, paralegals, law students, articling students and members of the public throughout the province of Ontario between January and March 2015. The Working Group met with organizational stakeholders and members of the Law Firms Diversity and Inclusion Network. The Working Group also received feedback from 45 individuals and organizations in the form of written submissions.<sup>7</sup>

Engagement Process Results

The qualitative and quantitative data the Working Group obtained from the engagement process identified widespread barriers experienced by racialized licensees within the legal professions at all stages of their careers. Examples of challenges faced in the legal professions include discrimination and stereotyping, negotiating concepts of “culture” and “fit”, and lack of mentors, networks and role models. Participants also noted that race-based barriers are often complicated by additional intersecting experiences of discrimination based on gender identity, gender expression, disability, sexual orientation, class and creed.

Some participants in the engagement process believed that racialized licensees were more likely to go into sole practice as a result of barriers faced in other practice environments. They also noted that internationally trained lawyers and paralegals face additional barriers in the professions. Generally, participants noted the vulnerability of racialized licensees in the legal professions in the context of professional regulation and discipline.

Consultation Process Results

The information gathered from the consultation process is summarized as follows:

- Consultation participants expressed significant support for the creation of diversity programs for the recruitment, retention and advancement of racialized licensees in legal workplaces.
- The Working Group heard a broad range of views on the issue of demographic data collection. However, most participants agreed that the collection of data would be, as one participant noted, “a humble but important first step”.
- The Working Group heard that the Law Society could play a facilitative role by encouraging corporate procurement policies that consider suppliers that promote equality and diversity.
- The majority of participants in the consultation process emphasized the importance of mentoring for racialized licensees. Generally, the Working Group heard that there is no “one size fits all” model for mentoring.
- Many participants stated that associations of racialized lawyers and paralegals are beneficial for fostering collaboration and creating a sense of belonging.
- A large number of participants were in favour of the Law Society requiring licensees to participate in mandatory Continuing Professional Development (CPD) training on cultural competence, unconscious bias, and anti-racism.

- Participants suggested updating the Rules of Professional Conduct<sup>8</sup> and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct<sup>9</sup> to specifically address systemic discrimination and subtle forms of discrimination.

Objectives

The Working Group has distilled the themes in the consultation into the following three objectives:

1. Inclusive legal workplaces in Ontario;<sup>10</sup>
2. Reduction of barriers created by racism, unconscious bias and discrimination; and
3. Better representation of racialized licensees, in proportion to the representation in the Ontario population, in the professions, in all legal workplaces and at all levels of seniority.

The Working Group makes 13 recommendations in order to meet these objectives. They fall within four interrelated categories: accelerating culture shift, measuring progress, educating for change and implementing supports. The final recommendation speaks to the operations of the Law Society.

Recommendations

Recommendation 1 – Reinforcing Professional Obligations

The Law Society will review and amend, where appropriate, the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, and Commentaries to reinforce the professional obligations of all licensees to recognize, acknowledge and promote principles of equality, diversity and inclusion consistent with the requirements under human rights legislation and the special responsibilities of licensees in the legal and paralegal professions.

Recommendation 2 – Diversity and Inclusion Project

The Law Society will work with stakeholders, such as interested legal workplaces, legal associations, law schools and paralegal colleges to develop model policies and resources to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees.

Recommendation 3 – The Adoption of Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Principles and Practices

The Law Society will:

- 5) require every licensee to adopt and to abide by a statement of principles acknowledging their obligation to promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally, and in their behaviour towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public;

<sup>8</sup> Rules of Professional Conduct, The Law Society of Upper Canada available online at <http://www.lsuc.on.ca/WorkArea/DownloadAsset.aspx?id=2147486159>

<sup>9</sup> Paralegal Rules of Conduct The Law Society of Upper Canada available on-line at <http://www.lsuc.on.ca/paralegal-conduct-rules/>

- 6) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy for their legal workplace addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement, which will be available to members of the professions and the public upon request;
- 7) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to complete, every two years, an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment for their legal workplace, to be provided to the Law Society; and
- 8) encourage legal workplaces to conduct inclusion surveys by providing them with sample templates.

Recommendation 4 – Measuring Progress through Quantitative Analysis

Each year, the Law Society will measure progress quantitatively by providing legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees in Ontario with the quantitative self-identification data of their licensees compiled from the Lawyers Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report so they can compare their data with the aggregate demographic data gathered from the profession as a whole through the annual reports.

Recommendation 5 – Measuring Progress through Qualitative Analysis

The Law Society will measure progress by:

- 3) asking licensees to voluntarily answer inclusion questions, provided by the Law Society, about their legal workplace, every four years; and
- 4) compiling the results of the inclusion questions for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees in Ontario and providing the legal workplace with a summary of the information gathered

Recommendation 6 – Inclusion Index

Every four years, the Law Society will develop and publish an inclusion index that reflects the following information, including, for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees: the legal workplace's self-assessment information (Recommendation 3(3)), demographic data obtained from the Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report (Recommendation 4) and information gathered from the inclusion questions provided by the Law Society (Recommendation 5).

Recommendation 7 – Repeat Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project Inclusion Survey

The Law Society will conduct inclusion surveys with questions similar to those asked in Appendix F of the Stratcom Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Final Report (March 11, 2014) (available online at <http://www.stratcom.ca/wp-content/uploads/manual/Racialized-Licensees-Full-Report.pdf>). The first inclusion survey will be conducted within one year of the adoption of these recommendations, and thereafter every four years, subject to any recommendation by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee to Convocation.

Recommendation 8 – Progressive Compliance Measures

The Law Society will consider and enact, as appropriate, progressive compliance measures for legal workplaces that do not comply with the requirements proposed in Recommendation 3 and/or legal workplaces that are identified as having systemic barriers to diversity and inclusion.

Recommendation 9 – Continuing Professional Development (CPD) Programs on Topics of Equality and Inclusion in the Professions

The Law Society will:

- 4) launch a three hour accredited program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions;
- 5) develop resources to assist legal workplaces in designing and delivering their own three hour program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions, to be accredited by the Law Society; and
- 6) require each licensee to complete three hours of an accredited program focused on equality and inclusion within the first three years following the adoption of these recommendations and one hour per year every year thereafter, which will count towards the licensee's professionalism hours for that year.

Recommendation 10 – The Licensing Process

The Law Society will include the topics of cultural competency, equality and inclusion in the professions as competencies to be acquired in the Licensing Process.

Recommendation 11 – Building Communities of Support

The Law Society, in collaboration with legal associations where appropriate, will provide support to racialized licensees in need of direction and assistance through mentoring and networking initiatives.

Recommendation 12 – Addressing Complaints of Systemic Discrimination

The Law Society, in light of the findings of this project and emerging issues in the professions, will:

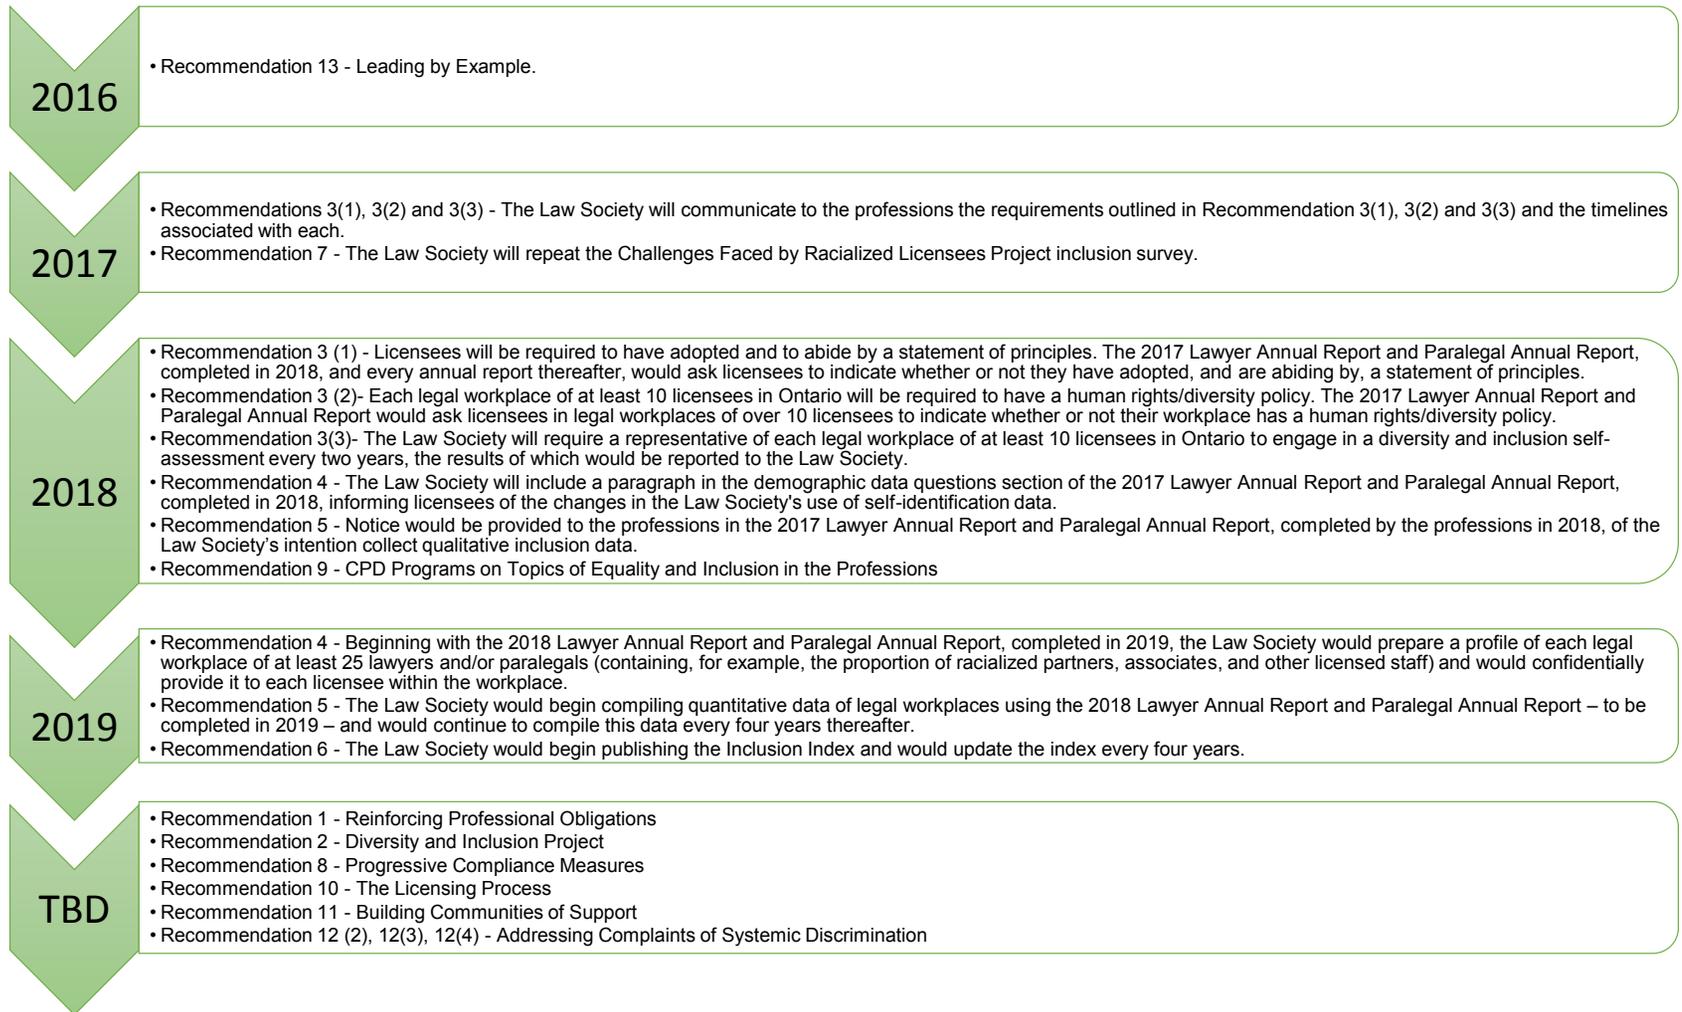

- 5) review the function, processes and structure of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC), including considering effective ways for the DHC to address issues of systemic discrimination;

- 6) revise the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, where appropriate, so that systemic discrimination and reprisal for complaints of discrimination and harassment are clearly identified as breaches of professional conduct requirements;
- 7) create effective ways for the Professional Regulation Division to address complaints of systemic discrimination; and
- 8) create a specialized and trained team to address complaints of discrimination.

Recommendation 13 – Leading by Example

- 3) The Law Society will continue to monitor and assess internal policies, practices and programs, to promote diversity, inclusion and equality within the workplace and in the provision of services by:
  - a) as required, adopting, implementing and maintaining a human rights/diversity policy addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement;
  - b) measuring quantitative progress through a census of the workforce or other method;
  - c) measuring qualitative progress by conducting inclusion surveys;
  - d) conducting regular equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessments; and
  - e) based on the results from b), c) and d), identifying gaps and barriers and adopting measures to address the gaps and barriers;
  - f) publishing relevant findings from b), c), d) and e); and
  - g) providing equality and inclusion education programs for staff at the Law Society on a regular basis.
- 4) The Law Society will:
  - a) conduct an internal diversity assessment of the bench composition and publicize the results;
  - b) provide equality and inclusion education programs for Convocation on a regular basis.

Timeline for Implementation of Recommendations

Introduction

“What we need to do is learn to respect and embrace our differences until our differences don’t make a difference in how we are treated.”

— Yolanda King<sup>11</sup>

Background

1. The Law Society of Upper Canada (“The Law Society”) is the governing body for more than 50,000 lawyers and 8,000 paralegals in Ontario. The Law Society is committed to advancing equality, diversity and inclusion in the legal professions — a commitment which includes addressing any barriers faced by lawyers and paralegals to full and active participation in the professions. The Law Society’s Rules of Professional Conduct and Paralegal Rules of Conduct specifically prohibit discrimination and harassment and speak to lawyers’ and paralegals’ responsibility to adhere to human rights laws in Ontario.
2. Since 2001, the proportion of racialized<sup>12</sup> lawyers in the Ontario legal profession has doubled, rising from 9% of the profession in 2001 to 18% in 2014.<sup>13</sup> This is compared to 23% of the Ontario population who indicated in the 2006 Canada Census that they are racialized and 26% of the Ontario population who indicated in the 2011 National Household Survey that they are racialized.<sup>14</sup> The Law Society’s Statistical Snapshot of Paralegals from the Paralegal Annual Report 2014 also show a high proportion of racialized paralegals at 34% of the paralegal profession.<sup>15</sup> The Law Society’s Statistical Snapshots of Paralegals also indicate that 34% of licensed paralegals in Ontario are racialized.
3. A review of statistical data, research findings and anecdotal evidence suggested that, notwithstanding their increase in representation, racialized lawyers face challenges in the practice of law. The Law Society also noted a lack of information about the challenges faced, if any, by racialized paralegals.
4. In 2012, the Law Society created the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group (“the Working Group”) to:

5. Since 2012, the Working Group has been actively engaged in gathering information about the challenges faced by racialized licensees and developing recommendations to address these challenges.

The Process: Listening and Learning

6. The members of the Working Group began their work by conducting a review of the data and literature available on the challenges faced by racialized licensees. The Working Group then gathered information about the challenges using an engagement process, followed by an extensive consultation process.<sup>17</sup>

7. The qualitative and quantitative data obtained from the engagement processes identified widespread barriers experienced by racialized licensees within the professions at all stages of their careers.
8. Through the consultation process, the Working Group received rich feedback on questions organized under the following themes:

<sup>16</sup> The Working Group considered available information regarding the experience of racialized licensees in the regulatory process and determined that there is more work to be done. The preliminary work thus far will be continued.

Recommendations: Framework to Address the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees

On Racism and Initiatives for Change

“Effective responses to racial discrimination and racial profiling start with acknowledging that racism exists.”<sup>18</sup>

— Ontario Human Rights Commission

10. The Working Group acknowledges that the legal professions operate in a broader social context in which racism continues to negatively impact the lives of racialized people. During the consultation phase, a participant noted that society could currently be at an inflection point – a point at which there is a significant possibility for change in the way in which the professions engage with equality and diversity principles and practices.
11. Recently, the Ontario government announced the establishment of an Anti-Racism Directorate tasked with “increas[ing] public education and awareness of racism to create a more inclusive province” and “apply[ing] an anti-racism lens in developing, implementing and evaluating government policies, programs and services.”<sup>19</sup> Similarly, in November 2015, the Ontario Public Service (OPS) launched an Anti-Racism Action Plan. This plan focuses on “preventing race-based discrimination and harassment; further diversifying the public service at every level, including senior management; and increasing OPS employees’ awareness of racism and its impacts.”<sup>20</sup>
12. In the academic sphere, in February 2016, University of Toronto committed to collecting race-based data from its students in an effort to “tackle a lack of representation in the lecture hall among some groups and lend hard numbers to the push for equity in the public realm.”<sup>21</sup> In the area of child welfare, in June 2016, children’s aid societies agreed to collect race-based data to address concerns that there are a high number of black and Indigenous children in care.
13. On the popular culture front, in early 2016, media attention turned to #OscarsSoWhite<sup>22</sup> — Hollywood actors and filmmakers who were speaking up against the lack of diversity in the nominations for the Academy Awards. Those who work in Hollywood note that the lack of diversity and inclusion goes beyond the Academy Awards, with one director noting, “I was meeting with potential investors, and right away everybody’s like, “It’s an Asian-American cast. It’ll never sell.””<sup>23</sup>

14. Race and racism are also at the forefront of issues in the justice system — from the overrepresentation of black and Indigenous peoples in federal prisons<sup>24</sup> to police violence to calls for judicial diversity and beyond. In spring 2016, Black Lives Matter Toronto, “a coalition of black Torontonians working in solidarity with communities/individuals seeking justice from state-sanctioned violence”<sup>25</sup> occupied the space in front of Toronto Police Headquarters for two weeks to protest police violence against the black community. Acknowledging that racialized communities are “over-represented and subject to different treatment in the justice system as a whole”,<sup>26</sup> Legal Aid Ontario is currently developing a strategy to “identify the legal needs and to protect the legal rights of racialized communities in the justice system”.
15. Additionally, the Ontario Human Rights Commission is currently working on a new policy on racial profiling that will “provide guidance on combatting racial profiling in a range of institutional and community settings” and “seek to support and enable Ontario organizations, legal decision-makers and affected community members to better identify, address and prevent racial profiling as a prohibited form of discrimination under the Ontario Human Rights Code.”<sup>27</sup>
16. The information outlined is only a snapshot of the efforts in Ontario and beyond to address racial discrimination. The Working Group is encouraged by these initiatives and is hopeful that implementation of the recommendations listed in this report will lead to systemic change.

Guiding Principle

“Nothing about Us, Without Us”<sup>28</sup>

17. The Working Group’s recommendations stem from an intention to create long lasting systemic change within the professions. The recommendations are put forward in an effort to support the Law Society’s ongoing commitment to ensure that both the law and the practice of law are reflective of all peoples in Ontario and that the professions are free of discrimination and harassment. The Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct speak to the special responsibility of lawyers and paralegals to adhere to the requirements of human rights laws in Ontario, including the obligation not to discriminate.
18. Although the Working Group’s report does not speak to the experiences of Indigenous licensees, the Working Group recognizes that Indigenous peoples face barriers that are unique to Indigenous licensees and barriers that are shared by both racialized and Indigenous licensees. The Working Group notes the importance of addressing the ongoing colonial violence experienced by Indigenous communities and of working towards reconciliation between Indigenous and non-Indigenous peoples. As expressed in the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's final report, "Reconciliation is not an Aboriginal problem; it is a Canadian one. Virtually all aspects of Canadian society need to be reconsidered."<sup>29</sup> The Law Society is currently working on a framework of reconciliation, with the guidance of the Indigenous Advisory Group, comprised of First Nation, Inuit and Métis community representatives, to address unique issues faced by Indigenous peoples in Ontario. The framework of reconciliation is also intended to promote responses to and implementation of the Calls to Action from the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada's final report and the First Nations Representation on Ontario Juries report by The Honourable Frank Iacobucci.

19. In working towards achieving the Working Group's overriding objective, establishing partnerships is important. How we do this is integral to what we do, and 'we' are all lawyers and paralegals, not just the Law Society. The Law Society's consultation was successful in part because the Working Group used a spirit of open inquiry. The consultation was also well attended. There was general acceptance that there is a problem and that it is time to address it.
20. The Working Group heard offers to assist with mentoring, that changes are beginning to happen within firms, that the Law Society should support work that is already being done, and that legal workplaces are willing to share best practices and collaborate to create effective models for progressive change in all parts of the professions. Representatives of the Working Group spoke with firms that provide unconscious bias training to all members, firms that have affinity groups in their workplace and firms that are actively participating in the Law Firm Diversity and Inclusion Network. There were requests that the Law Society not impose mandatory hiring targets and timetables, but accelerate a culture change that has already begun as a result of business imperatives, changing demographics and the interests expressed by clients, students, lawyers, paralegals and indeed the public.
21. At the same time, the Working Group heard concerns that the identified challenges were longstanding, and that change would occur very slowly without strong leadership from the Law Society. The Working Group heard generally that the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project has raised the profile and understanding of these issues, but the Working Group was also urged to use the Law Society's authority to effect change.
22. To satisfy these goals, the Working Group concluded that the Law Society should use a combination of voluntary and mandatory measures, fulfilling its multiple roles in the public interest as change agent, facilitator, resource and regulator. The Law Society's authority to adopt mandatory measures must be interpreted and understood in light of its rights and obligations under the Human Rights Code to protect the public interest balanced with the current explicit authority under the Law Society Act<sup>30</sup> and By-Laws<sup>31</sup> and recent jurisprudence. Within this overarching goal, partnerships with legal workplaces and associations are essential to the success of the proposed measures and projects detailed below.

Objectives

23. The Working Group has identified the following three objectives:
1. Inclusive legal workplaces in Ontario;<sup>32</sup>
  2. Reduction of barriers created by racism, unconscious bias and discrimination; and
  3. Better representation of racialized licensees, in proportion to the representation in the Ontario population, in the professions, in all legal workplaces and at all levels of seniority.
24. The Working Group puts forward the following recommendations in order to meet these objectives. It is anticipated that in order to implement a number of the mandatory recommendations, the Law Society will need to consider appropriate by-law amendments. Additionally, the Law Society will need to invest in information technology that will allow it to effectively record and analyze progress across workplaces. The Working Group has contemplated budgetary considerations in developing these recommendations and it is anticipated that a senior staff implementation working group will be involved in implementing the recommendations.
25. The recommendations fall within four interrelated categories: accelerating culture shift, measuring progress, educating for change and implementing supports. The final recommendation speaks to the operations of the Law Society.

Recommendations

Accelerating Culture Shift

Recommendation 1 – Reinforcing Professional Obligations

The Law Society will review and amend, where appropriate, the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, and Commentaries to reinforce the professional obligations of all licensees to recognize, acknowledge and promote principles of equality, diversity and inclusion consistent with the requirements under human rights legislation and the special responsibilities of licensees in the legal and paralegal professions.

26. The Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct outline the professional and ethical obligations of lawyers and paralegals. The Working Group recommends that in order to ensure that licensees infuse the principles of equality, diversity and inclusion into their everyday practice, the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct and/or the Commentaries be reviewed to determine how this objective can be advanced.

Recommendation 2 – Diversity and Inclusion Project

The Law Society will work with stakeholders, such as interested legal workplaces, legal associations, law schools and paralegal colleges to develop model policies and resources to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees.

27. The Working Group recommends that the Law Society engage in a collaboration between, for example, legal associations, government legal departments, the Law Firms Diversity and Inclusion Network (“LFDIN”), Legal Leaders for Diversity and Inclusion (“LLD”), sole practitioners, licensees in private practice, and law schools to develop and support diversity and inclusion policies, programs and practices intended to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees. The project would focus on the following areas:
  - Developing resources on competency hiring, unconscious bias training, barriers to inclusion in the workplace, affinity group development, contract compliance and best practices within firms and workplaces;
  - Considering the assignment of work and career development, particularly understanding the impact of cultural homophily on career development;<sup>33</sup> and
  - Working with law schools to create or provide better sources of information on what is needed to apply, interview and succeed in a larger legal workplace. This could include enhancing or using the On Campus Interview (“OCI”) process for the dissemination of information. This would also include outreach to the National Committee on Accreditation (“NCA”) candidates.
28. The proposed project would build upon the Law Society’s experience with its Justicia Project, created in 2008 with the goal of retaining and advancing women in private practice. The project saw more than 55 law firms voluntarily sign agreements with the Law Society to develop practical resources for law firms and women lawyers. The Justicia resources addressed topics such as: leadership, career advancement, business development, flexible work arrangements and parental leave.
29. A number of participants in the engagement and consultation processes supported the creation of a diversity project similar to the Justicia Project.
30. During the consultation process, the Working Group received feedback from a number of legal workplaces that were actively engaging in work related to enhancing diversity and inclusion in their workplaces. The Working Group also heard from legal workplaces that would benefit from support in developing diversity and inclusion policies and practices.
31. The Working Group concluded that a Justicia-type project would benefit the professions by creating a space where legal workplaces can openly discuss challenges in addressing the barriers faced by racialized licensees in the professions and by creating a forum to document and share best practices. Furthermore, legal workplaces could develop, in advance and with the support of the Law Society, policies that they will be required to have in place under Recommendation 3.

<sup>33</sup> The notion of ‘like’ reaching out to ‘like’ or the tendency of individuals to associate and bond with similar others.

32. Currently, a number of large firms are engaged in a collaborative diversity initiative through the LFDIN and in-house counsel through LLD. Unlike the Justicia Project, which was focused on private practice, the proposed project would bring together legal workplaces from various practice environments and practice areas, in addition to associations and law schools to discuss overlapping concerns and to work on collaborative solutions.
33. In 2009, the Law Society of England and Wales (“LSEW”) created the Diversity and Inclusion Charter (the “Charter”). The LSEW describes the Charter as follows:

The purpose of the Charter is to help practices turn their commitment to diversity and inclusion into positive, practical action for their businesses, staff and clients. This is achieved by helping practices to record and measure their procedures against a set of diversity and inclusion standards and by providing them with opportunities to share best practice advice and guidance with colleagues from across the profession. To date over 300 practices have signed up to the Charter, representing more than a third of all solicitors in private practice.

The Diversity and Inclusion Charter is a public commitment by legal practices to promote the values of diversity, equality and inclusion throughout their business. Whether it's through recruitment, retention, career progression or training and development, all our signatories are committed to improving opportunities for people in the legal profession, regardless of their background or circumstances.<sup>34</sup>

34. Practices that commit to the Charter are required to report biennially and show how well they are meeting their Charter commitments, and where more work needs to be done. Practices complete an online self-assessment report about their progress and performance. The results are published in aggregate by the LSEW and used to identify trends, successes and areas for improvement.
35. The Charter is accompanied by a set of protocols to help practices fulfil their commitments in key areas, such as reporting and monitoring, flexible working and procuring legal services. In addition, checklists, best practice guidance, case studies and toolkits are available.
36. The LSEW has also developed diversity and inclusion standards to help the signatories complete their annual self-assessment form. The standards help to show how well a legal practice is complying with equality legislation, regulation and equality and diversity standards. The Diversity and Inclusion Standards are accompanied by best practice guidance that provide examples of positive diversity and inclusion practices, as well as advice on where to get more help or information.
37. The Barreau du Québec, following a consultation regarding the challenges faced by racialized licensees practising in Québec, developed a three-year action plan, which includes creating Justicia-type project to increase the recruitment, retention and advancement of racialized licensees.<sup>35</sup> In June 2016, the Barreau launched Projet Panorama, a project aimed at recruiting, retaining and advancing lawyers from ethnocultural groups within law firms and legal departments in Québec.<sup>36</sup> Participants have committed to compiling demographic statistics, sharing and implementing best practices, measuring progress in terms of hiring, retention and advancement, implementing measures to enhance diversity and inclusion, and publishing annual reports of work accomplished.<sup>37</sup>

Recommendation 3 – The Adoption of Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Principles and Practices

The Law Society will:

- 1) require every licensee to adopt and to abide by a statement of principles acknowledging their obligation to promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally, and in their behaviour towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public;
- 2) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy for their legal workplace addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement, which will be available to members of the professions and the public upon request;
- 3) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to complete, every two years, an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment for their legal workplace, to be provided to the Law Society; and
- 4) encourage legal workplaces to conduct inclusion surveys by providing them with sample templates.

38. Some licensees are employed by non-licensees, including, for example, in-house counsel. Both employers and employees in legal workplaces have obligations under the Human Rights Code. Licensees have professional obligations with respect to human rights established by the Rules of Professional Conduct or the Paralegal Rules of Conduct. For licensees employed by non-licensees, the human rights/diversity policy contemplated by this recommendation is a policy in respect of their individual obligations addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement, which may of course be addressed by the employer's policy.

39. To ensure the consistent implementation of this recommendation, the Law Society will guide licensees in the development of statements of principles, and legal workplaces in the development of policies and self-assessment tools. In consultation with legal workplaces, it will develop resources, such as templates, guides and model policies.

40. Recognizing that sole practitioners and small legal workplaces may have limited resources, the Working Group has determined that the requirements under Recommendation 3 (2) and Recommendation 3(3) should apply to legal workplaces of at least 10 licensees; however, legal workplaces comprised of less than 10 licensees are strongly encouraged to develop human rights/diversity policies and complete equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessments.

41. It is anticipated that the nature of the policies and self-assessment tools will vary based on the size and type of legal workplace. As a result, we propose that the Law Society, through the diversity and inclusion project described in Recommendation 2, develop the templates for the statements of principles, policies and self-assessment tools in collaboration with legal workplaces that wish to participate in the project. We believe that this approach would increase the awareness of legal workplaces, begin the cultural shift, create greater buy-in and allow for the development of resources that take into account the realities of legal workplaces.
42. The Working Group believes that the Law Society should minimize unnecessary burdens, and recognize that many licensees and workplaces have already moved forward proactively with equality measures on their own. Licensees and workplaces will be free to adopt templates and model policies where appropriate to their needs, or to create their own statements of principles and policies that include the elements covered by the Law Society's sample documents, but tailor them to their specific contexts.
43. The stages for the implementation of this recommendation would be as follows:
- Stage 1: In 2017, the Law Society would communicate to the professions the requirements outlined in Stages 1-3.
  - Stage 2: By January 1, 2018, licensees would be required to have adopted and to abide by a statement of principles, and each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario would be required to have a human rights/diversity policy as described above.
  - Stage 3: The 2017 Lawyer Annual Report ("LAR") and Paralegal Annual Report ("PAR"), which would be completed by licensees in early 2018, and every annual report thereafter, would ask licensees to indicate whether or not they have adopted, and are abiding by, a statement of principles. The 2017 LAR and PAR would also ask licensees in designated legal workplaces to indicate whether or not their legal workplace has a human rights/diversity policy.
  - Stage 4: By the end of 2018, and every two years thereafter, the Law Society would require a representative of each designated legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to engage in a diversity and inclusion self-assessment. Legal workplaces would then report to the Law Society on whether they had completed the self-assessment and, if not, explain their reasons for not having done so.
44. The Working Group believes that requiring licensees to make a clear commitment to equality, diversity and inclusion will encourage licensees to consider their individual roles in creating lasting change.
45. Section 4.1 of the commentary under section 2.1-1 of the Rules of Professional Conduct reads as follows:

A lawyer has special responsibilities by virtue of the privileges afforded the legal profession and the important role it plays in a free and democratic society and in the administration of justice, including a special responsibility to recognize the diversity of the Ontario community, to protect the dignity of individuals, and to respect human rights laws in force in Ontario.<sup>38</sup>

46. Similarly, section 2.03 of the Paralegal Rules of Conduct state “the principles of the Ontario Human Rights Code and related case law apply to the interpretation of this rule [the rule on Harassment and Discrimination].”<sup>39</sup>
47. A number of consultation participants supported the Law Society’s role in setting guidelines for equality, diversity and inclusion in the professions and requiring legal workplaces to report on their progress in this area. As one group of consultation participants noted, “This would increase the accountability and transparency of legal workplaces in their treatment of racialized licensees, while encouraging a culture of compliance across the province.”<sup>40</sup>
48. The Working Group considered requesting that legal workplaces voluntarily adopt policies. The research and the consultation process, however, made clear that the challenges faced by racialized licensees are both longstanding and significant. In our view, the Law Society must take a leadership role in giving legal workplaces reasonable, but fixed, deadlines to implement steps that are important to achieve lasting change. Indeed, many of these steps have been taken, or will be taken by legal workplaces voluntarily, because of their acknowledged importance.
49. The Working Group concluded that required minimum standards of equality, diversity and inclusion will reinforce the human rights responsibilities of licensees — obligations already required by the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct and, more generally, the Human Rights Code. Furthermore, as the Ontario Human Rights Commission (“OHRC”) notes:

In addition to addressing obligations under the Human Rights Code, the adoption and implementation of an effective anti-racism vision statement and policy has the potential of limiting harm and reducing liability. It also promotes the equality and diversity goals of organizations and institutions and makes good business sense.<sup>41</sup>
50. It is the Working Group’s intention that legal workplaces will take this opportunity to implement comprehensive equality, diversity and inclusion policies, and will consider whether progress is being achieved by engaging in periodic self-assessment.
51. Some organizations have adopted a similar approach by creating a “comply or explain” approach. For example, the Ontario Securities Commission (“OSC”) requires companies regulated by the OSC to disclose the following gender-related information: the number of women on the board and in executive positions; policies regarding the representation of women on the board; the board or nominating committee’s consideration of the representation of women in the director identification and selection process; and director term limits and other mechanisms of renewal on their board.<sup>42</sup> The OSC requires companies to either report their implementation or consideration of the items listed above, or to explain their reasons for not doing so.

<sup>41</sup> “Policy and guidelines on racism and racial discrimination”, online: Ontario Human Rights Commission <http://www.ohrc.on.ca/en/policy-and-guidelines-racism-and-racial-discrimination>

52. The Working Group's recommendation that legal workplaces of at least 10 licensees in Ontario complete a self-assessment about diversity performance, and report the results to the Law Society stems from an intention to have legal workplaces engage in dialogue and reflection on the current state of diversity and inclusion within their workplace, and an intention to encourage legal workplaces to work proactively to advance diversity and inclusion efforts.
53. The Working Group has reviewed the Canadian Bar Association's ("CBA") guide Assessing Ethical Infrastructure in Your Law Firm: A Practical Guide for Law Firms.<sup>43</sup> The document was drafted to "assist lawyers and firms by providing practical guidance on law firm structures, policies and procedures to ensure that ethical duties to clients, third parties and the public are fulfilled".
54. The document contains a detailed self-evaluation tool for firms, the CBA Ethical Practices Self-Evaluation Tool, which outlines 10 key areas of ethical infrastructure and provides questions related to firm policies and procedures under each identified area.<sup>44</sup>
55. The self-evaluation tool is modelled on the approach used in New South Wales for regulation of incorporated legal practices. Rather than being required to follow specific rules, the firms are required to self-assess whether their practices and policies are effective in ensuring professional conduct and to establish practices and policies that are effective in their specific context. The result has been a two-third reduction in client complaints for firms regulated in this way.<sup>45</sup>
56. A similar approach has been used for the assessment of diversity performance. The U.S.-based Minority Corporate Counsel Association has developed the Diversity Self-Assessment Tool for Law Firms, in an effort to "stimulate thought and open a dialogue within a firm regarding how to advance its diversity efforts."<sup>46</sup> Firms are asked to assess diversity performance in the following areas: leadership and commitment, professional development, recruitment and retention, representation/demographics, workplace culture and diversity, and external face of the firm.
57. The Law Society of England and Wales ("LSEW") also asks firms that have signed on to its Diversity and Inclusion Charter to complete a self-assessment (discussed previously in Recommendation 2).

58. In addition to the information gathered through the self-assessment, legal workplaces would be encouraged to conduct their own comprehensive inclusion surveys to establish benchmarks and identify and address concerns related to workplace culture. The Law Society has developed a number of model policies and guides to assist law firms in their efforts to ensure that their policies and practices are in keeping with equality and diversity principles. Again, the Law Society would develop sample inclusion survey templates, which would be shared with the profession.

Measuring Progress

59. The Working Group proposes, based on the consultation findings and our review of the literature and best practices on measuring systemic change that both the Law Society and legal workplaces should partner in collecting and analyzing qualitative and quantitative information about diversity. The Law Society would collect demographic data through the annual LAR and PAR, and qualitative information through a periodic questionnaire and a quadrennial province wide cultural inclusion survey similar to the one conducted by Stratcom on behalf of the Law Society in 2013. Legal workplaces of a sufficient size would obtain both quantitative and qualitative information about their workplaces in order to analyze the results, and ultimately an inclusion index would be published by the Law Society.
60. The 2012 CBA guide, Measuring Diversity in Law Firms: A Critical Tool for Achieving Diversity Performance, identifies two types of data for measuring a law firm's diversity performance — self-identification data and diversity climate data. Self-identification data is collected “to assess the representativeness of [a] firm's workforce”<sup>47</sup>, whereas diversity climate data is “focus[ed] on the perceptions and attitudes about diversity held about the members of the firm.”<sup>48</sup>
61. The collection of both self-identification data and diversity climate or inclusion data provides a more complete picture of diversity and inclusion in the professions. In Data & Diversity in the Canadian Legal Community, Dean Lorne Sossin and Sabrina Lyon, basing their conclusion on extensive interviews, a review of ongoing policy initiatives and a comprehensive analysis, state “generating rigorous and meaningful data, both quantitative and qualitative, would advance a culture of inclusion and accountability in the Canadian justice community.”<sup>49</sup>

Recommendation 4 – Measuring Progress through Quantitative Analysis

Each year, the Law Society will measure progress quantitatively by providing legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees in Ontario with the quantitative self-identification data of their licensees compiled from the Lawyer Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report so they can compare

— Canadian Institute of Diversity and Inclusion

62. Since 2009, the Law Society has collected demographic data based on race, Indigenous identity, gender, Francophone identity, disability, and lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer (“LGBTQ”) identity through the Lawyer Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report. Self-identification questions were included in the annual reports to inform the Law Society of the extent to which the professions are reflective of the broader community they serve, to help meet the needs of the public, and to develop programs to enhance the diversity of the professions. These demographic data are analyzed and published in aggregated form under the following categories: age, year of call, type of employment, size of firm (for those in private practice), and region.<sup>51</sup>
63. In the consultation paper, the Working Group highlighted the importance of gathering and maintaining demographic data, providing the following reasons for engaging in this practice:
  - a. Firms can demonstrate that they value equality, diversity and inclusion in their firm’s culture;
  - b. Maintaining demographic data allows firms to monitor diversity in recruitment and advancement and to adjust policies and practices accordingly;
  - c. Diversity, and data on diversity, assist firms in attracting a strong talent base at all levels. The pool of law students is increasingly diverse, and so is the pool of legal talent. Graduating law students are often interested in the diversity characteristics of the legal workplaces to which they can apply;
  - d. Such data can be a tool to increase a firm’s competitiveness. Numerous large clients in the U.S., and now in Canada, issue requests for proposals (“RFPs”) to select their legal counsel, requiring firms to produce demographic data of their workforce. For example, the Bank of Montreal’s Legal, Corporate & Compliance Group (“LCCG”) requires disclosure of a firm’s diversity statistics as part of its RFP process for legal suppliers;<sup>52</sup>
  - e. Demographic data assist firms to enhance their client services and professional reputation, and to become role models by ensuring representation at all levels;
  - f. Demographic data provide background and incentives for firms to develop programs that enhance inclusion; and
  - g. The information may assist in developing initiatives to enhance access to justice.

64. Dean Lorne Sossin and Sabrina Lyon, in their article Data & Diversity in the Canadian Legal Community, also underline the importance of data collection, noting that while “collecting and publishing data on diversity will not in and of themselves make the justice community more inclusive, it is difficult if not impossible to see how the justice community could become more inclusive without meaningful data.”<sup>53</sup>
65. The options outlined in the Consultation Paper regarding data collection largely focused on the collection of demographic data, including:
- collecting demographic data of licensees through the LAR and PAR, publicly reporting the demographic data based on firm size and disclosing to firms their own demographic data;
  - working with firms to develop consistent templates for demographic data collection and encouraging firms to collect such data on a regular basis;
  - setting parameters for the voluntary collection of demographic data by firms and requiring firms to report either that they are collecting this information or the rationale for not collecting such data; and
  - setting parameters for mandatory collection of demographic data by firm.
66. Throughout the consultant and community engagements and the consultation process, the Working Group heard concerns from some participants that the information obtained from the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project would be shelved and the project would not result in meaningful change. By engaging in periodic litmus tests of equality and inclusion in the professions, the Law Society will ensure that its efforts to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees are ongoing and will evolve based on the issues identified by the inclusion surveys. As the OHRC notes, “When data is gathered, tracked and analyzed in a credible way over time, it becomes possible to measure progress and success (or lack of it). Budgets, policies, practices, processes, programming, services and interventions can then be evaluated, modified and improved.”<sup>54</sup>
67. The Legal Services Board (“LSB”), the independent body responsible for overseeing the regulation of lawyers in England and Wales, has taken a proactive approach to gathering demographic data. In 2011, the LSB published statutory guidance outlining its expectation of approved regulators to measure levels of diversity and mobility in the legal workforce. Approved regulators, including the Solicitors Regulation Authority,<sup>55</sup> now require all practices they regulate to collect, report and publish data annually on the diversity of their workforce. The LSB has cited transparency as the rationale for requiring the publication of diversity data.<sup>56</sup>
68. Information about the demographic composition of legal workplaces would be compiled through the Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report data, which would comprise of the statistical snapshots of the professions as a whole and the data compiled for each firm. This data would be provided to each legal workplace on an annual basis. In considering privacy concerns of individual licensees and the Law Society’s ability to ensure confidentiality, the

Working Group has suggested that this recommendation be applicable only to legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees in Ontario.

69. The Working Group has considered the input received from the engagements and the consultation process and proposes the following stages for the collection of self-identification data by firm:
- Stage 1: The Law Society would continue to measure the representation of racialized licensees using the information in the 2016 Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report, completed by the professions in 2017, by providing the demographic data in aggregate form to the public as general snapshots of the professions in 2018.
  - Stage 2: The introductory paragraph of the self-identification demographic questions of the 2017 Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report, completed by the professions in 2018, would be adapted to inform licensees of the change in the Law Society's use of the self-identification data.
  - Stage 3: Beginning with the 2018 LAR and PAR, completed by licensees in 2019, the Law Society would prepare a profile (containing, for example, the proportion of racialized partners, associates and other licensed staff) of each legal workplace of at least 25 lawyers and/or paralegals, and would confidentially provide it to each licensee within the workplace.

Recommendation 5 – Measuring Progress through Qualitative Analysis

The Law Society will measure progress qualitatively by:

- 1) asking licensees to voluntarily answer inclusion questions, provided by the Law Society, about their legal workplace, every four years; and
  - 2) compiling the results of the inclusion questions for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees in Ontario and providing the legal workplace with a summary of the information gathered.
70. In implementing this recommendation, the Law Society would take into account issues of privacy and confidentiality. The qualitative information about legal workplaces would be gathered by asking licensees voluntary inclusion questions about their legal workplace using a tool that would allow for the information to be compiled and provided to each legal workplace. This information would be collected by the Law Society with the purpose of tracking trends over time and refining and developing programs and initiatives to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees and other equality-seeking groups.
71. Licensees would be asked about their experiences in their workplaces, including subjects such as career advancement opportunities, feelings of belonging, and experiences of discrimination. The questions would be drafted with the assistance of stakeholders and experts in the diversity and inclusion field. Much like the current demographic questions in the Lawyer Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report, answers would be voluntary. The information would be shared in aggregate form, with legal workplaces of at least 25 lawyers and/or paralegals.
72. The Working Group proposes the following stages for the collection of qualitative data:

- Stage 1: Notice would be provided to the professions in the 2017 Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report, completed by the professions in 2018, of the Law Society's intention collect qualitative inclusion data.
- Stage 2: The Law Society would begin compiling quantitative data of legal workplaces using the 2018 Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report – to be completed in 2019 – and would continue to compile this data every four years thereafter.

Recommendation 6 – Inclusion Index

Every four years, the Law Society will develop and publish an inclusion index that reflects the following information, including, for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees: the legal workplace's self-assessment information (Recommendation 3(3)), demographic data obtained from the Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report (Recommendation 4) and information gathered from the inclusion questions provided by the Law Society (Recommendation 5).

73. The Working Group has considered a number of options for data collection and has arrived at the recommendations to measure progress outlined in Recommendations 3(3) (self-assessment), 4 and 5. The Working Group also believes that accountability and transparency are key to increasing equality and diversity in the professions. Members of the Working Group have considered a number of methods to ensure that these principles are reflected in the recommendations. The Working Group has decided that in addition to gathering qualitative and quantitative data about legal workplaces, the creation and publication of an inclusion index – an index that would include legal workplaces' assessments of their diversity and inclusion-related achievements and that would allow legal workplaces to demonstrate their performance and progress – would advance the goals of equality, diversity and inclusion. The Law Society would create this index and would determine the categories of information to be included in the index, as well as the weight provided to each category.
74. The Working Group is of the view that a public inclusion index would serve the many objectives cited earlier in relation to the benefits of collecting demographic data. The index would be a valuable tool for legal workplaces and the Law Society to determine whether there is progress in the professions. Legal workplaces could also use the index to attract prospective clients and to recruit talent.
75. A number of consultation participants as well as courts and commentators<sup>57</sup> have stated that to truly understand the equality and inclusion climate in a workplace, it is necessary to look at both quantitative and qualitative data. Sossin and Lyon exemplify this perspective, noting that “a blended ‘index’ of quantitative and qualitative factors best responds to the need for outcomes to matter (how many diverse lawyers a legal workplace is able to recruit relative to the available pool of candidates) and the need for inputs to matter (a legal workplace's policies, participation in proactive recruitment, establishing an inclusive firm culture, etc.).”<sup>58</sup>

76. As Sossin and Lyon note, “the process of collecting and disseminating qualitative and quantitative data is not just an end in itself (to promote transparency, accountability, profile, etc.) but a means to developing responsive and effective policies [...] a range of innovations are already in place to build on – from mentorship programs, to career orientation and outreach, to equity and inclusion officers within legal workplaces, to media and public information campaigns.”<sup>59</sup>
77. The LSEW publishes an annual diversity and inclusion report, which includes the results of self-assessments completed by the signatories to the Diversity and Inclusion Charter. According to the LSEW, “all signatories are required to self-assess against a set of standards and report on diversity data across their organisation, with smaller practices responding to a set of questions tailored to the needs of smaller firms”.<sup>60</sup> Although the data is collected by firm, it is published in aggregate form. In 2015, 341 firms submitted their self-assessment information to the LSEW.
78. For the last 10 years, the Black Solicitors Network (“BSN”), also based in the UK, has published The BSN Diversity League Table, a comprehensive report on diversity and inclusion in the legal profession, on an annual basis. The LSEW is the main sponsor of this initiative. According to the LSEW:
- The Diversity League Table has become an invaluable resource for the legal profession. Each year, the performance of participating law firms and chambers is measured across a range of demographic profiles. This provides an opportunity for firms to compare their performance against peers across key areas. The Diversity League Table also offers an opportunity to monitor the sector as a whole, facilitating a more diverse and transparent profession.<sup>61</sup>
79. The LSEW further notes that the LSEW Diversity and Inclusion Charter and the BSN Diversity League Table are complementary initiatives, as they both “provide comprehensive data sets [and] promote collaboration in equality and diversity matters and best practice across a range of key business areas”.<sup>62</sup>
80. The Diversity League Table includes aggregate demographic data based on gender, ethnicity, LGBTQ and disability status, published by firm. Firms also provide information about policies & practices, specifically addressing the following categories: Monitoring; Leadership and Policy; External Face; Staff Development and Support; and Recruitment, Promotion and Retention. Firms are then given a score and a rank, based on the quantitative and qualitative data obtained. In 2015, 56 firms and chambers participated in the Diversity League Table.<sup>63</sup>
81. A number of organizations have developed similar inclusion indices, detailing aggregate inclusion information about legal workplaces and workplaces in other industries.<sup>64</sup>

82. The Law Society believes that stakeholder participation in the development of the inclusion index is important, such as the participation of the LFDIN, LLD and associations with mandates to represent racialized licensees.
83. The Working Group suggests that the Law Society create a similar inclusion index to those described above, which would reflect the demographic information about the composition of each legal workplace and would include scores and rankings based on the presence or lack thereof of equality-related policies and practices. The Law Society would report this information by legal workplace for all legal workplaces with over 25 licensees. The Law Society would begin publishing the inclusion index in 2019 and would update the index every four years.

Recommendation 7 – Repeat Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project Inclusion Survey

The Law Society will conduct inclusion surveys with questions similar to those asked in Appendix F of the Stratcom Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Final Report (March 11, 2014) (available online at <http://www.stratcom.ca/wp-content/uploads/manual/Racialized-Licensees-Full-Report.pdf>) The first inclusion survey will be conducted within one year of the adoption of these recommendations, and thereafter every four years, subject to any recommendation by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee to Convocation.

84. The Stratcom survey was sent to all licensees, both racialized and non-racialized, in 2013. The anonymous 35-question survey included questions on topics such as: career opportunities and professional growth; disrespect and disadvantage; career setbacks; barriers to entry and advancement; and stereotyping.
85. In order to evaluate the success of the proposed initiatives and to identify any potential areas where barriers to inclusion may remain, the Working Group proposes repeating the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project inclusion questions within the abovementioned timeline. The proposed timeline is based on the Working Group's understanding and acknowledgement that systemic change will take time to occur. Four years was seen as an appropriate timespan for changes to take hold.

Recommendation 8 — Progressive Compliance Measures

The Law Society will consider and enact, as appropriate, progressive compliance measures for legal workplaces that do not comply with the requirements proposed in Recommendation 3 and/or legal workplaces that are identified as having systemic barriers to diversity and inclusion.

86. The Working Group, having outlined some mandatory initiatives in the aforementioned recommendations, recognizes that there must be mechanisms in place to deal with non-compliance. The Working Group recommends that the Law Society take a progressive compliance approach with legal workplaces that do not meet the requirements outlined in the recommendations. The Working Group envisions a gradation of responses, beginning with remedial approaches, such as meeting with representatives of legal workplaces to discuss concerns with their policies and/or practices, to disciplinary approaches if there is deliberate non-compliance with requirements, despite multiple warnings, or no efforts are made to address systemic barriers.

Educating for Change

Recommendation 9 – Continuing Professional Development (CPD) Programs on Topics of Equality and Inclusion in the Professions

The Law Society will:

- 1) launch a three hour accredited program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions;
  - 2) develop resources to assist legal workplaces in designing and delivering their own three hour program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions, to be accredited by the Law Society; and
  - 3) require each licensee to complete three hours of an accredited program focused on equality and inclusion within the first three years following the adoption of these recommendations and one hour per year every year thereafter, which will count towards the licensee's professionalism hours for that year.
87. The Working Group recommends that the Law Society launch an innovative accredited program focused on topics such as equality and inclusion in the professions to assist licensees with promoting these principles. The Law Society would also support legal workplaces in developing their own programs that could be accredited by the Law Society. This would allow legal workplaces and legal associations to build their capacity in this area while addressing the needs of their membership base. The Law Society would work with associations to develop criteria for accreditation and to assist legal workplaces and legal associations in developing their own accredited courses. Programs could be delivered in any format already approved under the eligible education activities criteria available on the Law Society website.
88. In order to create awareness and engagement of the professions, the Law Society would require each licensee to complete three hours of an accredited program focused on equality and inclusion within the first three years following the adoption of these recommendations and one hour per year every year thereafter. . These programs count towards professionalism CPD requirements for the year in which the hours were taken. The monitoring of these activities to confirm completion of hours would be the same as any monitoring conducted to confirm completion of professionalism hours. No additional oversight would be required.
89. Training sessions could cover topics such as unconscious bias, the impact of daily verbal, behavioural and environmental indignities, the value of diversity and inclusion, understanding power and privilege and addressing discrimination and harassment.

90. The Working Group also suggests that the Law Society, as part of its commitment to providing accessible education, offer an online program on topics related to equality and inclusion in the professions. Such program could contain a video presentation with best practices and links to resources, for licensees who wish to complete their professionalism requirements in an online environment. If delivered online, the program could consist of integrated learning modules with integrated polling or test questions, as already done in various contexts including the Accessibility for Ontarians with Disabilities Act training and existing Law Society CPD programs.
91. The Working Group considered the option that the Law Society provide voluntary accredited CPD programs on topics such as equality and inclusion in the professions. However, the Working Group has determined that participation in equality and inclusion-related education is essential to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees. The OHRC notes, in its Policy and Guidelines on Racism and Racial Discrimination, that “mandatory education, training and development initiatives” may be required for an anti-racism policy and program to be effective.<sup>65</sup>
92. The Working Group initially considered training that would focus on “cultural competence”. Ritu Bhasin, a lawyer consultant in this area, defines cultural competence as “how we connect with people who are different than us” or “The ability to relate to others comfortably, respectfully and productively.”<sup>66</sup> A significant number of consultation participants agreed that mandatory CPD would assist in addressing the challenges faced by racialized licensees. A number of consultation participants emphasized the need for training to be delivered through an anti-discrimination or anti-oppression lens. The same participants noted discomfort with the term “cultural competence” due to the focus on understanding difference or “the other” as opposed to encouraging reflection on power and privilege. Consequently, the Working Group has chosen to focus the training on the principles of equality and inclusion, incorporating concepts of unconscious bias and cultural homophily.
93. The Rules of Professional Conduct speak to the responsibility of lawyers to recognize the diversity of the Ontario community. Both the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct require that licensees protect the dignity of individuals and respect human rights laws in force in Ontario. Equality and inclusion training will assist licensees in understanding their obligations under the rules.

Recommendation 10 – The Licensing Process

The Law Society will include the topics of cultural competency, equality and inclusion in the professions as competencies to be acquired in the Licensing Process.

94. The Working Group wishes to integrate the topics of cultural competency, equality and inclusion into the Licensing Process, as appropriate, including within the reference materials for licensing, and in any program or course work that is completed during the Licensing Process.

95. A number of consultation participants emphasized the importance of incorporating teachings of equality and inclusion into the Licensing Process. For example, one participant noted that integrating cultural competence training in the Licensing Process would be “well-suited to ensuring that a strong foundation of diversity awareness and cultural consciousness is in place from the beginning of an individual’s legal career.”<sup>67</sup>
96. The Entry-Level Solicitor Competencies and the Entry-Level Barrister Competencies both include the following section under Ethical and Professional Responsibilities:
19. respects human rights (e.g. does not engage in sexual harassment, discrimination or other human rights violations) (Rules 6.3-0 and 6.3.1. (Part of 24)
97. Additionally, under Client Communications, both sets of competencies include the following:
192. recognizes and is sensitive to clients’ circumstances, special needs and intellectual capacity (e.g. diversity, language, literacy, socioeconomic status, disability, health).
98. Similarly, the Paralegal Competencies, under Ethical and Professional Responsibilities, read:
3. Maintains appropriate professional relationships with clients, other licensees, employees and others (e.g. does not engage in sexual harassment, discrimination and human rights violations, respects multi-cultural issues).
99. Under section 27(2) of the Law Society Act and section 8(1) of By-Law 4, Licensing, a recipient of a lawyer or paralegal licence is also required to be of good character. The Law Society has indicated that adherence to human rights and equality principles should be considered in a determination of good character. The November 2013 Submission on The Federation of Law Societies of Canada’s National Suitability to Practise Standard Consultation Report<sup>68</sup> identifies that “specific reference to respect for and adherence to human rights and equality principles sends an important message to those entering the professions.”
100. The Working Group believes that the integration of equality and inclusion information, presented through an anti-discrimination or anti-oppression lens, will assist in preparing candidates to be competent members of the professions.

Implementing Supports

Recommendation 11 – Building Communities of Support

The Law Society, in collaboration with legal associations where appropriate, will provide support to racialized licensees in need of direction and assistance through mentoring and networking initiatives.

101. In considering this recommendation, the Working Group noted that in November 2013, the Law Society created a Mentoring and Advisory Services Proposal Task Force to consider mentoring

<sup>68</sup> “Federation of Law Societies of Canada – Suitability to Practise Standard” – Report to Convocation, November 21, 2014 – Professional Regulation Committee, online: The Law Society of Upper Canada http://www.lsuc.on.ca/uploadedFiles/For the Public/About the Law Society/Convocation Decisions/2013/convov2013\_PRC.pdf

and advisory services models. The Working Group provided input to the Task Force on the development of models to best address the needs and facilitate the success of racialized licensees. The Task Force provided its final report to Convocation in January 2016. Convocation approved the creation of a law practice and advisory services initiative, which, at the outset of its implementation, "...will focus on providing supports for already identified communities of need, namely, sole practice and small firm licensees, new licensees, racialized licensees, those seeking succession planning supports and those within certain defined practice areas."<sup>69</sup>

102. Data gathered through the LAR and PAR show that 24% of racialized lawyers are in sole practice and 33% of racialized lawyers practice in legal workplaces of two to five. Similarly, 25% of racialized paralegals are in sole practice. Engagement and consultation process participants highlighted the vulnerability of racialized sole practitioners in the professions — emphasizing the need for sole practitioners and licensees in small firms to have strong mentors and networks. The Working Group also recognizes that it is essential to be responsive to the needs and challenges of racialized licensees in a broad range of practice/work settings and practice areas, which will require approaches that are not "one size fits all".
103. The Law Society currently offers mentorship initiatives that will be enhanced by the new Law Practice Coach and Advisor Initiative.<sup>70</sup> Additionally, the Law Society, in partnership with legal associations and community groups, offers educational programs to promote discussion among members of the professions and the public on the challenges and opportunities for Francophone, Indigenous and equality-seeking communities in the legal professions. These Equity Legal Education events are often followed by networking receptions for members of the professions.
104. The Working Group heard that there is a need for increased, and in some cases, revamped, mentoring and networking initiatives to combat the isolation faced by racialized sole practitioners and racialized licensees practising in small firms. In considering potential mentoring and networking initiatives to support racialized licensees, the Working Group has identified the following objectives:
  1. Encourage the development of communities of support in the professions, including facilitating the search for multiple points for direction and assistance (e.g. peers, subject-matter experts, ethics sounding boards);
  2. Increase the capacity of legal associations to reach more licensees for trusted, nonjudgmental advice; and
  3. Foster connections for licensees who feel isolated, recognizing that feeling professionally isolated is not limited to those in small firms and sole practitioners or those in certain practice areas.

<sup>70</sup> Ibid.

105. The Working Group highlighted the importance of working with legal associations in meeting the abovementioned objectives. The Working Group is also mindful of different types of mentoring, including both advisory services and coaching.<sup>71</sup>
106. As a first step, the Working Group proposes the following:
- Enhanced use of technology to facilitate the development of communities of trust;
  - Enhanced networking opportunities.

Enhanced Use of Technology to Facilitate the Development of Communities of Trust

107. The Working Group believes that any successful mentorship initiative should reach racialized licensees across the province. This proposal would involve the robust use of technology to increase the ability of racialized licensees to access information and support, with the goal of enhancing learning, competence and success. For example, the Law Society could work with associations of racialized licensees, where appropriate, to create an online resource centre for racialized lawyers and paralegals. This resource centre could act as a hub to bring together the various mentorship initiatives available around the province. The resource centre could include materials geared toward the needs, concerns and unique situations of licensees in sole practice, associations of sole practitioners and small partnerships. Resources could cover topics such as finding a mentor, action plans for mentor-mentee relationships, networking, and the benefits of joining associations. The resource centre could also include a forum for racialized licensees to discuss topics relevant to their practice environments and a podcast series on a range of topics related to race and racism in the professions and supports for racialized licensees.
108. The Working Group has also considered an initiative that would involve working with stakeholders, existing mentoring groups and others to develop the technology that would allow any licensee (racialized or otherwise) to have access to a diverse group of mentors. It may be helpful to ask licensees to indicate whether they are interested in participating in such a program when they fill out their LAR or PAR or through other methods, such as the Law Society Portal. Alternatively, mentors and mentees could be matched using a mobile application (app) with programmed algorithms to increase the potential of having successful relationships. Similar mobile apps have been created to assist with the search for a mentor or mentee in other industries.<sup>72</sup> For example, Menteer, a free, open source online platform,<sup>73</sup> works to match job seekers and mentors. Potential mentors and mentees are asked to answer a series of questions about their skills, interests and backgrounds to assist with finding suitable matches to meet their needs. Mentees are provided with a number of mentor profiles, which the algorithm has determined would be a good fit. Mentors wait for mentees to communicate with them to ask if they would like to establish a mentor-mentee relationship.<sup>74</sup>

Enhanced Networking Opportunities

109. This project involves reviewing current practices around Law Society events and events co-hosted with equality-seeking legal associations to ensure that networking events are affordable, inclusive and relevant to licensees.

Recommendation 12 – Addressing Complaints of Systemic Discrimination

The Law Society, in light of the findings of this project and emerging issues in the professions, will:

- 1) review the function, processes and structure of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC), including considering effective ways for the DHC to address issues of systemic discrimination;
- 2) revise the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, where appropriate, so that systemic discrimination and reprisal for complaints of discrimination and harassment are clearly identified as breaches of professional conduct requirements;
- 3) create effective ways for the Professional Regulation Division to address complaints of systemic discrimination; and
- 4) create a specialized and trained team to address complaints of discrimination.

Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC)

110. The Working Group recommends that the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC) undergo a review of its function, processes and structure. Although the DHC Program does not maintain self-identification information about complainants, it is noteworthy that for the 10-year-period of 2003 to 2012, only 16% of complaints of discrimination were based on race, 3% on ethnic origin, a nominal number on ancestry and place of origin, while 26% and 50% of complaints were based on the grounds of disability and sex, respectively. This is in contrast with the applications received at the Human Rights Tribunal where 22% of applications are based on race, 16% on colour, 17% on ethnic origin, 15% on place of origin and 13% on ancestry with 54% of applications based on disability and 25% based on sex, pregnancy and gender identity.<sup>75</sup> The lower proportion of race-based complaints to the DHC Program warrants a review of the DHC Program to identify possible barriers to accessing that program, more particularly by members of the racialized, Indigenous and disability communities.
111. In Fall 2016, the Law Society's Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee commenced a review of the DHC Program. The objective of this review is to identify how this role can be better used to address discrimination and harassment in the professions, including systemic discrimination, while keeping in mind the independent arms-length position of the DHC and the duty of the DHC to maintain the confidentiality of any individuals who use the Program.

Rules of Professional Conduct and Paralegal Rules of Conduct

112. The Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct outline the responsibility of licensees to respect human rights laws — more specifically, not to engage in discrimination or harassment. The Law Society may investigate complaints of systemic discrimination; however, this is not widely known. The Working Group recommends explicitly stating in the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct that systemic discrimination is considered a violation of the rules. The Working Group also recommends that the rules make clear that reprisal for complaints of discrimination and harassment is prohibited.

Specialized Professional Regulation Team

113. The Working Group recognizes that racism is complex and can manifest itself in subtle ways. The Working Group recommends that the Law Society create a specialized team of Professional Regulation staff members to address complaints of racial discrimination. The members of this team would undergo extensive training on issues of race and racism in order to prepare them to effectively handle these types of complaints.

Review Professional Regulation Processes to Effectively Address Systemic Discrimination

114. Along with the creation of a specialized team of Professional Regulation staff members to address complaints of discrimination, including racial discrimination, it is suggested that the Law Society review its complaints process to consider ways to collect data from different sources and identify instances of systemic discrimination. It is recommended that the Law Society consider specific processes to effectively address systemic discrimination.
115. Racialized consultation participants described discriminatory experiences that had serious impacts on their careers, including career opportunities and earnings. Some described experiences of overt discrimination, such as situations of being on the receiving end of racist jokes, comments or assumptions.
116. In addition to the barriers identified through the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project, in its 2009 Aboriginal Bar Consultation<sup>76</sup>, the Law Society found that 26% of Indigenous lawyers felt that their Indigenous status was a negative factor in their experiences in the professions and the majority stated that they attributed their feeling to the racism and discrimination that they faced in their work experiences.
117. It is clear from the Working Group's engagement and consultation processes that discrimination based on race is a daily reality for many racialized licensees; however, many participants stated that they would not file a discrimination complaint with the Law Society for various reasons, including fear of losing their job, fear of being labeled as a troublemaker, and other reprisal-related concerns. Participants also noted that although racism can be experienced on an individual basis, racial discrimination can also be institutional or systemic in nature. Participants did not believe that an effective process was available at the Law Society to address systemic complaints. The Working Group heard from a number of participants who stated that a system of anonymous complaints would assist in alleviating some of the concerns about reporting cases of racial discrimination.

118. The Task Force on Misogyny, Sexism and Homophobia in Dalhousie University Faculty of Dentistry, which was mandated to inquire into a significant number of sexist, misogynist, and homophobic remarks and images posted on Facebook by fourth year male dentistry students at Dalhousie University, noted the pressing need for anonymous reporting mechanisms so that victims can protest such conduct without putting themselves at risk. This proposal was raised as a result of many who spoke to the Task Force about the need to be able to make anonymous complaints, especially in cases of sexual harassment and sexual assault. The Task Force notes "The biggest concern about anonymous complaints is that there is no way to effectively assess the merits of a particular complaint. However, a group of anonymous complaints all reflecting the same concern provides a signal that there may be a problem that requires some attention. Soliciting anonymous complaints for this purpose could be very useful."<sup>77</sup>
119. Princeton University allows for anonymous complaints of discrimination, harassment and other violations of policies and regulations through an independent provider of hotline services. Complainants can submit a report online or by calling a free hotline to speak with a trained specialist.<sup>78</sup> Similarly, the City of Copenhagen in Denmark has developed an anonymous app for people to report incidents of discrimination. The purpose of the app is "to understand how widespread discrimination is and where and which groups are most likely to be targeted."<sup>79</sup>
120. In 2010, the Nova Scotia Barristers' Society ("NSBS") launched a successful postcard campaign. The purpose of this campaign was "to raise awareness and generate feedback about gender harassment and discrimination in the legal profession." Licensees were encouraged to share their experiences of gender harassment and discrimination by submitting accounts of their experiences via anonymous postcards.<sup>80</sup> In 2012, the NSBS noted that over 50 postcards had been received, outlining the experiences and viewpoints of lawyers across Nova Scotia.<sup>81</sup>
121. The Working Group envisions a system through which anonymous discrimination complaints can be made to the DHC. If a certain threshold of complaints about a legal workplace is reached, the DHC can speak with the management of the legal workplace regarding the culture of the workplace and systemic issues. The purpose of these discussions would be remedial, rather than punitive. Proposed solutions could include implementing or adjusting policies and procedures or delivery of educational programs.

122. A review of the functions, process and structure of the DHC should take into consideration the concerns raised through the engagement and consultation processes and the anonymous complaint models outlined above.
123. In addition to feedback about the DHC Program, the Working Group heard concerns from consultation participants that systemic discrimination and reprisal for filing complaints are not explicitly cited as conduct violations in the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct. Although the Law Society may investigate complaints of systemic discrimination and reprisal, the Working Group believes that it is important to state this plainly in the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct so that all licensees and members of the public are aware.
124. The Working Group has also heard that a certain level of expertise is essential in dealing with complaints to the Law Society of racial discrimination, particularly systemic discrimination. A trained team of Professional Regulation staff, equipped to deal with racial discrimination complaints, would assist in understanding and addressing the subtleties that often exist in racial discrimination cases.
125. In addition, racial discrimination often has systemic roots. It is suggested that the Law Society review its processes and consider ways to make them more effective in addressing systemic discrimination.
126. The Working Group believes that in order to create a safe space in which licensees can feel comfortable in making complaints of racial discrimination, including complaints related to systemic discrimination, the Law Society should engage in the abovementioned initiatives.

The operations of the Law Society of Upper Canada

Recommendation 13 – Leading by Example

- 1) The Law Society will continue to monitor and assess internal policies, practices and programs, to promote diversity, inclusion and equality within the workplace and in the provision of services by:
  - a) as required, adopting, implementing and maintaining a human rights/diversity policy addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement;
  - b) measuring quantitative progress through a census of the workforce or other method;
  - c) measuring qualitative progress by conducting inclusion surveys;
  - d) conducting regular equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessments;
  - e) based on the results from b), c) and d), identifying gaps and barriers and adopting measures to address the gaps and barriers;

- f) publishing relevant findings from b), c), d) and e); and
- g) providing equality and inclusion education programs for staff at the Law Society on a regular basis.

2) The Law Society will:

- a) conduct an internal diversity assessment of the bench composition and publicize the results;
- b) provide equality and inclusion education programs for Convocation on a regular basis.

127. The rationale for the adoption of human rights/diversity policies to address fair recruitment, retention and advancement; for measuring quantitatively and qualitatively progress; and for conducting self-assessments is well articulated in this report. The strength of having diversity at the board level is also well documented. The Maytree Foundation, for example, notes that,

Governance is the top tier of leadership, where ultimate oversight, strategic direction and policy are determined. But equally important is the representational role that boards uphold. A lack of diversity at this level has sweeping implications for how underrepresented groups see themselves, their relevance and their place at the decision-making table.<sup>82</sup>

128. During the engagement and consultation processes, participants indicated support for an internal equality audit of the Law Society workforce and the development of a more diverse public face/image for the Law Society, including at the governance level. The Working Group is of the view that the Law Society must take a leadership role and model the change it is seeking to create in the professions, which would include increasing diversity at both the governance and the staff levels, and engaging in the same initiatives and measures proposed to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees in the professions.

129. The Law Society has committed to a number of initiatives to increase diversity and inclusion in the organization:

- Operational Equity Audit: In 2015, with the assistance of Canadian Centre for Diversity and Inclusion (CCDI), the Law Society undertook an Operational Equity and Diversity Audit to assess the services provided to licensees and the public and to determine whether there are barriers that are contributing to inequality or perceived inequality in the provision of those services – in particular, involving members of racialized and Aboriginal communities. The Law Society is currently working through the results of this audit to determine where improvements can be made in its operations.
- Employee Diversity Census and Inclusion Survey: Earlier this year, the Law Society, also with the assistance of CCDI, launched an employee diversity census and inclusion survey. The purpose was to collect data to help the Law Society better understand the make-up of its organization and how to best serve Law Society staff's needs. There was a 72% response rate, which was excellent, and the results will assist with the Law Society's efforts to promote a diverse and inclusive culture that is supportive to all employees.
- Employee Engagement and Enablement Survey: This year the Law Society has also conducted an Employee Engagement and Enablement Survey, assisted by the Hay Group, in order to improve the effectiveness of its organization and enhance communications between management and employees at all levels.

- Bencher Diversity Survey: Convocation has identified conducting a diversity survey of the bencher composition as a priority for this term. We are currently working on finalizing this survey.

130. As mentioned above, both the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct provide that licensees have special responsibility to uphold human rights principles, protect the dignity of individuals and recognize diversity and inclusion. The Law Society is committed to identifying barriers and gaps in its workforce and governance and implementing comprehensive equality, diversity and inclusion initiatives to improve equality, diversity and inclusion.

Appendix A

Results

Summary of Community and Consultant Engagement Process Results

“You work harder to prove yourself. You cannot necessarily do things that your white colleagues can do as there is a different connotation. Generally I have always been told that I have to work harder than my white counterparts. Which in some respects is sadly still true at this day and age.”

— Community Liaison Meeting

The qualitative and quantitative data obtained from the engagement processes identified widespread barriers experienced by racialized licensees within the professions at all stages of their careers.

Key informants, focus group participants and survey respondents identified racialization as a significant factor that shapes the experiences and career outcomes of racialized licensees. The consultant engagement results indicated that racialized licensees have a lower success rate in securing job placements, finding first jobs and securing suitable practice environments. Moreover, racialized licensees felt that they were disadvantaged in law school and that they had not advanced in their careers at the same rate as their non-racialized colleagues.

Racial and ethnic barriers were ranked highly among the barriers to entry and advancement. Forty percent (40%) of racialized licensees identified their ethnic/racial identity as a barrier to entry to practice, while only 3% of non-racialized licensees identified ethnic/racial identity as a barrier. Racialized licensees frequently identified physical appearance, socioeconomic status, place of birth and upbringing, age, manner of speaking English/French and gender identity as barriers — more so than non-racialized licensees. Racialized licensees were also more likely to have struggled to find an articling position or training placement.

Similarly, 43% of racialized licensees identified ethnic/racial identity as a barrier/challenge to advancement, while only 3% of non-racialized licensees identified ethnic/racial identity as a barrier. Racialized licensees were more likely than non-racialized licensees to believe they had not advanced as rapidly as colleagues with similar qualifications.

Racialized participants identified a number of specific challenges faced in the professions. Community liaison process participants, key informants and focus group participants provided numerous examples of discrimination and stereotyping faced in the everyday professional experiences of racialized licensees. Some experiences were overt, while others were more subtle. Participants spoke of assumptions by members of the professions and clients that racialized lawyers are unskilled employees, interpreters, social workers, students or clients. Participants also identified situations where racialized licensees were excluded from files and client meetings based on personal characteristics. Some participants stated that in some cases, licensees from certain parts of the world were associated with terrorism. The Working Group heard a number of participants say, “you can’t just be good, you have to be better.”

Racialized participants spoke about challenges linked to cultural differences and fit. Many racialized licensees stated that they felt alienated from the dominant culture of firms. They provided examples of firm-related social events, which involved playing hockey, playing golf and drinking alcohol. Some racialized licensees indicated that they did not participate in these activities and therefore they did not “fit”, noting that “fit” was important for entry and advancement. Some participants also stated that they were not offered career opportunities because of their “foreign sounding” names.

Participants spoke in detail about the lack of access for racialized licensees to mentors, networks and role models. Racialized participants indicated that they were not aware of programs or resources available to them. They also noted that they did not have the same professional connections and networks as their non-racialized colleagues and lacked role models in their field within their ethnic communities.

Participants noted that race-based barriers are often complicated by the additional experiences of discrimination based on sex, gender identity, gender expression, disability, sexual orientation, class and creed.

Some participants believed that racialized licensees were more likely to go into sole practice as a result of barriers faced in other practice environments. They also noted that internationally trained lawyers and paralegals face additional barriers in the professions.

Generally, participants noted that the challenges faced by racialized licensees impact the reputation of the legal system in Ontario, affect access to justice for Ontarians and affect the quality of legal services for the public.

Summary of Consultation Process

The Working Group received thoughtful oral and written submissions from the professions regarding strategies to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees.

A. Enhancing the internal capacity of organizations

The Working Group posed the following questions related to this theme in the consultation paper:

- How should the Law Society act as a catalyst for the establishment of diversity programs within firms and why?
- What is the preferred model for the collection of firm demographic data and why?
- How could the Law Society work with in-house legal departments to develop model contract compliance programs for in-house legal departments that retain firms?

Diversity Programs

“We need to encourage firms to be champions of diversity.”
— Participant

Consultation participants showed significant support for the creation of diversity programs for the recruitment, retention and advancement of racialized licensees in legal workplaces. Participants reminded the Working Group that a “one size fits all” approach should be avoided — firm size, industry and geographical location should be considered if the Law Society is to develop diversity programs.

A number of participants supported the idea of creating a diversity project modelled on the Law Society of Upper Canada’s Justicia Project. Such a project would include the development and adoption of resources for the fair recruitment, retention and advancement of racialized licensees.<sup>83</sup> Participants were divided, however, on whether diversity programs should be mandatory or voluntary. Some participants noted that voluntary programs create buy-in and a willingness to create change. A number of participants stated that it is important to have “diversity champions” who will lead change from the top-down. Participants outside of the Greater Toronto Area (GTA) that work in small firms saw the value of voluntary programs as small firms may lack the resources to implement mandatory programs. Some participants noted that mandatory programs could create backlash.

Participants in favour of mandatory programs argued that mandatory programs create stronger awareness of equality and diversity issues. One participant, who had experience with employment equality programs, said that it is necessary to have an enforcement mechanism in place. Other participants believed that, at the very least, the Law Society should require legal workplaces to have equality and diversity policies in place. Some participants suggested that the Law Society ask licensees to answer questions related to their firm’s policies in the annual report in order to prompt change. Although it was suggested by some that requirements could include mandatory targets for the number of racialized licensees that must be interviewed or hired by legal workplaces; the majority of participants were strongly opposed to the creation of mandatory hiring targets and timelines.

Some participants supported the proposal that firms complete a self-assessment about their diversity performance, which would include more than an analysis of demographic data. One participant stated:

Beyond numbers, look at the ways in which interactions are made, the ways in which people are hired, anti-nepotism policies, mentoring programs. All of these things are bigger pieces of the diversity pie.

The majority of participants interested in this idea indicated that the self-assessment should be voluntary; however, the Law Society could provide incentives for firms to engage in this process. There were some participants who were in support of mandatory self-assessments that would be conducted by employees instead of firm management to garner more valuable results. Additionally, participants stated that the Law Society should provide legal workplaces with self-assessment templates and tools.

Collecting Demographic Data

“Data collection is a humble but important first step.”
— Participant

The Working Group heard a broad range of views on the issue of demographic data collection; however, most participants agreed that the collection of data would be, as one participant noted, “a humble but important first step”. Some participants believed that mandatory data collection is crucial to advancing diversity and inclusion, while others believed that mandatory collection could halt the progress that is already being made by legal workplaces in the area of equality and diversity.

Participants on the side of mandatory collection had a number of suggestions related to the methods of collection and reporting. The majority of participants, including those in small firms and outside of <sup>83</sup> The Justicia Project was launched in 2008 to create a collaboration between medium and large sized firms and the Law Society. The participants signed agreements and committed to develop policies, resources, practices and programs that would address barriers women face in the legal profession in relation to retention and career advancement. The Justicia Project prompted law firms to review policies and practices and to participate in the creation of resources on subjects such as leadership, business development, career advancement, parental leave and flexible work engagements, in order to increase the retention and advancement of women lawyers.

Toronto, were in favour of the Law Society collecting demographic data. Some participants suggested that the Law Society could use the data collected in the annual report to provide legal workplaces with their individual legal workplace demographic data and aggregate demographic data of legal workplaces of similar size and location to provide a benchmark. Participants also noted that it would be useful to capture information about inclusion and advancement in addition to numbers. Some participants in favour of mandatory reporting stated that, in order to encourage change, the demographic information for each firm should be publicly available.

Participants in favour of voluntary data collection noted that a number of large firms are already engaging in demographic data collection and inclusion surveys, and are committed to this work. Should the Law Society mandate data collection, it could have a negative effect on the work already being done. Participants from small firms indicated that they are unsure how mandatory data collection would be enforced. Some participants believed that demographic data should be reported, but on a voluntary basis. A number of participants suggested setting data collection as a criterion of a voluntary diversity program. The Law Society could then incentivize data collection by providing ratings or awards for meeting certain levels of diversity and inclusion.

Contract Compliance

“The case for diversity and inclusion has a business foundation”

— Participant

The Working Group heard that the Law Society could play a facilitative role by encouraging corporate procurement policies that consider suppliers that promote equality and diversity. A number of participants highlighted the Bank of Montreal’s contract compliance program and the work of the Legal Leaders for Diversity (“LLD”) as best practices in this area. Some participants suggested that the Law Society work with LLD, other in-house counsel associations and firms to develop model diversity-related procurement and contract compliance policies.

Some participants noted that they would discourage mandatory contract compliance as often people respond better to incentives rather than punitive consequences. Some participants from small firms pointed out that strict mandatory contract compliance related to diversity could be difficult for small firms and lead to them being unable to compete for work.

B. Mentoring, advisory services and networking

The Working Group posed the following questions related to this theme in the consultation paper:

- What are the preferred mentoring and/or advisory services models for racialized licensees?
- What are the preferred networking models for racialized licensees?

Mentoring and Advisory Services

“Mentoring is not one size fits all.”

— Participant

The majority of participants in the consultation process emphasized the importance of mentoring for racialized licensees; however, one group of participants noted that, some cases, mentoring “...serves to reproduce institutional inequality and assist white licensees in securing inclusion within social institutions and the professions”.

In November 2013, Convocation created the Mentoring and Advisory Services Proposal Task Force (“Mentoring Task Force”) to consider mentoring, advisor and other support services for lawyers and paralegals. The Working Group worked with the Task Force and shared with the Task Force members the information obtained on mentoring and advisory services from the consultation process. In January 2016, Convocation approved a new law practice coaching and advisory initiative, which “...will assist in the development of competent legal professionals by supporting the growing need in the professions for short-term advisor supports addressing file-specific and substantive/procedural matters, and longer term coaching supports to foster best practices.”<sup>84</sup>

Types of Mentoring and Advisory Services

Generally, the Working Group heard that there is no “one-size-fits-all” model for mentoring. Different types of mentoring may be required at different stages of a person’s career for different purposes. For example, mentoring could be offered to provide assistance on specific cases or it could be related to how to navigate the professions as a racialized licensee.

A number of participants highlighted the importance of providing mentoring for sole practitioners and internationally trained lawyers. Paralegal participants told the Working Group that there is a shortage of mentoring programs in the paralegal community and thus a significant need. Other participants noted that racialized licensees in large firms do not have role models within their firms so would benefit from some assistance to find mentors from outside their firms.

A significant number of participants emphasized that sponsorship<sup>85</sup> is also essential to the career advancement of racialized licensees, noting that it would be helpful to have sponsors or champions advocating for individual licensees at decision-making tables.

Structure of Mentoring and Advisory Services

Some participants stated that it would be useful to have a panel of mentors who could address different facets of a licensee’s career, including providing advice on navigating barriers, substantive legal issues or career advancement. Participants also noted that mentoring should be provided to students before law school, to address pipeline issues, and in law school.

A number of legal workplaces described their mentoring programs and expressed interest in working collaboratively with the Law Society to help licensees in need of mentoring. One way in which this could take place is using enhanced website services and creating a highly functional and welcoming online mentoring community with links to partner legal workplaces. As many legal workplaces have their own websites, the Law Society could function as a connector to these kinds of services. Participants also suggested that the Law Society develop, in collaboration with legal workplaces, best practices toolkits and/or guidelines on mentoring.

<sup>85</sup> Sponsorship is distinct from mentoring. While a mentor can offer advice and insights to help the protégé achieve her career goals, a sponsor uses his or her clout to give the protégé access to opportunities for advancement. See Justicia Guide to Women Leadership in Law Firms (Toronto: The Law Society of Upper Canada, 2013) at 25.

Participants proposed various mentoring models including one-on-one mentoring with various mentors for different purposes, study groups with licensees who have similar challenges and group mentoring to assist with practice management and career advancement. Some participants suggested that junior licensees could also mentor other junior licensees from the same racialized community. In a similar vein, some participants stated that junior racialized licensees could act as effective mentors to senior non-racialized licensees.

Participants noted that it is often difficult to find willing and experienced mentors. One participant for example noted difficulties finding racialized mentors because, “we are not grooming racialized lawyers to become leaders.” Some participants suggested that the Law Society could ask licensees to indicate in the annual report or using another methodology such as the Law Society Portal, their willingness to act as mentors. The Law Society could then create a mentor roster. Similarly, other participants suggested having a web-based registry for mentors, which could include the mentors’ area of law and their time availability. Incentives for mentors could include the receipt of professionalism hours for mentoring services or discounted CPD programming. Some participants believed that the Law Society should compensate mentors, while others believed this would negatively impact the mentor-mentee relationship. Participants suggested that mentors should be culturally competent.

Participants outside of the GTA highlighted specific issues related to mentoring in their regions. A number of participants noted that the majority of professional associations that represent equality-seeking groups do not operate outside of the GTA, which limits access to association-based mentoring programs. One participant stated that if mentoring was to be offered in-person, it should be geographically accessible for licensees in areas across the province.

Networking

“Have more inclusive events.”

— Participant

Many participants stated that associations of racialized lawyers and paralegals are beneficial for fostering collaboration and creating a sense of belonging. Some participants suggested that it would be useful for the Law Society to facilitate collaboration between the various associations and/or to promote already-existing networking opportunities provided by the associations.

Some participants told the Working Group that legal associations are often too costly to join. One group of participants suggested that the Law Society provide subsidies to racialized licensees to assist them to join associations.

Some of the associations also described concern with the cost of holding events for their sectors of the bar at the Law Society and expressed interest in having “in-kind” support and partnership from the Law Society to make those events accessible to diverse communities of lawyers.

Some participants proposed that the Law Society hold regional networking events for licensees. Others noted that CPD programs can be good networking opportunities. However, some participants stated that the cost of CPD programs can be prohibitive and suggested that the Law Society provide low-cost or sliding scale CPD programs. One participant suggested that the Law Society “host planned and structured networking events that are, in location and content, culturally relevant to different groups of racialized licensees.” Some participants noted that hosting alcohol-free events would increase inclusivity.

Participants highlighted the fact that internationally trained lawyers and sole practitioners feel particularly isolated, so networking opportunities should also be targeted to these groups.

C. Enhancing cultural competence in the professions

The Working Group posed the following question related to this theme in the consultation paper:

- How could the Law Society enhance the professions' cultural competence through its CPD programs?

CPD Programs

"We need to be educated about diversity."

— Participant

A large number of participants were in favour of the Law Society requiring licensees to participate in mandatory CPD training on cultural competency, unconscious bias, and anti-racism. Some participants suggested that refresher sessions should be mandated "at intervals over the course of licensees' careers."

Others suggested that this CPD training be provided on a voluntary basis. There was concern expressed that requiring this form of training to be taken by all could be counter-productive. In either case however, participants agreed that professionalism credits should be provided CPD training on these topics.

In terms of content, participants suggested that cultural competency training should go "beyond learning about cultural practices of 'other' cultures and towards an examination of bias, inequality and discrimination". Similarly, one participant noted that the Law Society should "utilize an anti-discrimination, anti-racism and anti-oppression framework focused on deconstructing power structures and privilege — not on cultural competency." Participants also suggested that the Law Society work with associations of racialized licensees and/or with knowledgeable experts to develop content for the training sessions.

Some participants highlighted the importance of requiring licensees involved in recruitment, hiring and promotion decisions to participate in CPDs related to cultural competency and unconscious bias, specifically addressing topics such as bias-free interviews. One participant stated, "If attitudes don't change, the numbers are not going to change." Participants suggested that this CPD programming could be offered via webcast during summer student and articling interview periods. It was also proposed that the Law Society deliver these programs and other cultural competence and anti-discrimination and harassment programs at firms.

A number of participants noted the need to ensure that education on cultural competency, unconscious bias, anti-racism and anti-oppression start at law school and in the Licensing Process. A participant suggested that the Law Society use its seat on the Federation of Law Societies to encourage the inclusion of cultural competency and diversity awareness as part of the core law school curriculum. One group of participants suggested adding a cultural competency course to the college curriculum for paralegal programs. Some participants proposed including cultural competency, diversity and inclusion in the Professional Responsibility and Practice Course that articling students must complete.

It was proposed that all benchers attend cultural competency training in order to enhance awareness at the governance level and ensure that equality, diversity and inclusion are taken into account throughout the policy development process.

Generally, participants stated that CPD programs should be widely available via webcast and recorded. Additionally, some participants suggested that the cost of CPD be reduced, perhaps by working with regional associations.

D. Discrimination and the role of the complaints process

The Working Group posed the following question related to this theme in the consultation paper:

- How should the Law Society best ensure that complaints of discrimination are brought to its attention and effectively addressed?

Complaints of Discrimination

“People have to feel comfortable in accessing policies.”

— Participant

The Working Group heard a range of suggestions on encouraging licensees to bring forward complaints of discrimination.

Participants suggested updating the Rules of Professional Conduct<sup>86</sup> and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct<sup>87</sup> to specifically address systemic discrimination and subtle forms of discrimination. Some participants recommended advertising that complaints of discrimination can be made through the complaints process and devoting more resources to promoting the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program.

Participants noted that licensees will often refrain from reporting experiences of discrimination because they fear the negative impact a complaint might have on their careers and reputations. One participant stated, “We don’t want to rock the boat or be considered a troublemaker”.

Some participants were in favour of the Law Society creating an anonymous system of receiving complaints. However, licensees in small firms said this would not be helpful for them as their firms are too small for them to remain anonymous. Some participants that supported an anonymous complaints process recommended that the Law Society investigate firms that have been the subject of a number of anonymous complaints. Participants also suggested amending the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct to include a provision that states that reprisals for complaints of discrimination and harassment are prohibited.

Participants believed that bringing a complaint through an association may not alleviate the issues raised. Some participants suggested that the Law Society ask licensees, using the annual report, whether they have ever experienced discrimination. This information could then be compiled by legal workplace and provided to legal workplace management. Other participants proposed that the Law Society audit firms to ensure that they have policies related to equality, diversity, discrimination and harassment.

<sup>87</sup> Paralegal Rules of Conduct The Law Society of Upper Canada available online at <http://www.lsuc.on.ca/paralegal-conduct-rules/>

Regardless of the method taken to receive complaints, participants noted that it is important for the Law Society to advise complainants of what action was taken.

Some participants noted it would be helpful to have a group of diverse expert Professional Regulation staff who are trained in cultural competency and have an understanding of racial discrimination.

E. The operations of the Law Society of Upper Canada

“The best thing the Law Society can do is start to mirror the behaviour they want to see.”

— Participant

The Law Society received support from participants for its proposals to enhance its current equality compliance program, conduct an internal equality audit, collect further data on the regulatory process and develop a more diverse public face/image for the Law Society. A number of participants have emphasized that the Law Society must model the change it is seeking to create in the professions, which would include increasing diversity at both the governance and the staff levels, and engaging in the same initiatives and measures proposed to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees in the professions.

On a few occasions, participants at the meetings and open houses noted the lack of diversity of Working Group presenters. Working Group members attended and presented at open houses and meetings when their schedules permitted, and at some meetings, the group of presenters did not reflect the diversity of racialized licensees at those meetings. That became a point of discussion with participants expressing concern about the overall diversity of Convocation, but also expressing satisfaction that there are non-racialized benchers who are interested in being part of change and in hearing from licensees on these subjects. It is important to note that a bencher election was conducted during the consultation process and the composition of Convocation appears to be more racially diverse than ever and representative of the professions.

White Privilege

Consultation participants spoke of “white privilege”<sup>88</sup>, and expressed the need for all to acknowledge its existence in order to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees. A number of participants noted that it is important for licensees to understand how power operates to produce advantages for some and deny advantages to others.

Daily Verbal, Behavioural and Environmental Indignities

Consultation participants provided descriptions of their experiences of commonplace daily verbal, behavioural, and environmental indignities, whether intentional or unintentional, that communicate

<sup>88</sup> The Ontario Human Rights Commission defines “privilege” generally as ‘unearned power, benefits, advantages, access and/or opportunities that exist for members of the dominant group(s) in society. It can also refer to the relative privilege of one group compared to another. “Policy and guidelines on racism and racial discrimination”, online: Ontario Human Rights Commission <http://www.ohrc.on.ca/en/book/export/html/2475>

hostile, derogatory or negative racial slights.<sup>89</sup> Examples ranged from assumptions that they are not licensees but in fact interpreters or accused, to inappropriate questions regarding their perceived “otherness.” Participants noted that it is important for licensees to understand the impact of such behaviour and for the Law Society to find ways to address these subtle forms of discrimination.

Indigenous Licensees and Racialized Licensees: Historical and Geographical Differences

Open house learning and consultation programs in Northern Ontario yielded interesting information about the similarities and differences between the experiences of Indigenous licensees and licensees that self-identify as racialized. Participants in Thunder Bay noted that, in terms of race and racism, the population in northern areas of the province is often divided into Indigenous and non-Indigenous peoples. Participants identified several examples where they had witnessed racism directed at Indigenous people and where they had observed that racialized people were treated differently from non-racialized people. It was noted that because of the distinctive histories of Indigenous peoples, strategies to respond to racism faced by Indigenous peoples and to racism faced by racialized peoples may need to differ. The Law Society’s policy work reflects this uniqueness, including the work of the EAIC and other initiatives that are outside the scope of this project. The Law Society is also currently developing a framework of reconciliation in consultation with the Indigenous Advisory Group, established in 2016 with the Law Society to guide the Law Society and the legal community towards a better understanding of how to address unique issues faced by Indigenous peoples in Ontario and promote responses to and implementation of the Calls to Action from the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada’s final report and the First Nations Representation on Ontario Juries report by The Honourable Frank Iacobucci.

---

<sup>89</sup> Such behaviour is sometimes referred to as microaggression. Sue et al. define microaggressions as “the brief and commonplace daily verbal, behavioural, and environmental indignities, whether intentional or unintentional, that communicate hostile, derogatory or negative racial, gender, sexual orientation and religious slights to the target person or group.” Sue et al. note that “Perpetrators of microaggressions are often unaware that they engage in such communications when they interact with racial/ethnic minorities.” Please see http://www.cpedv.org/sites/main/files/file-attachments/how\_to\_be\_an\_effective\_ally-lessons\_learned\_microaggressions.pdf

Submissions to the Law Society of Upper Canada on the Experiences of Racialized Licensees

Background on the Barbra Schlifer Commemorative Clinic

The Barbra Schlifer Commemorative Clinic is the only Clinic of its kind in Canada. It has been providing legal representation, counselling, and interpretation in over 100 languages to women who have experienced all forms of violence, since 1985. The Clinic was established in the memory of Barbra Schlifer, an idealistic young lawyer whose life was cut short by violence on the night of her call to the bar of Ontario on April 11, 1980. The Clinic is not part of the LAO suite of community and specialized clinics. Rather, it is a separately incorporated not-for-profit that supplements the lack of legal services for survivors of violence.

We assist about 4,000 women every year. We also engage in various educational initiatives, including public legal education, professional development for legal and non-legal professionals, and clinical education for law students. We work on law reform activities both within Canada and internationally, and consult broadly with all levels of government on policy or legislative initiatives that impact women survivors of violence. The Clinic serves women from ethno-racially and socio-economically diverse backgrounds, frequently from highly marginalized communities. Our clients often experience multiple social inequalities, including poverty, homelessness, racism, and discrimination on the basis of religion, country of origin, newcomer status, mental health, and disability.

On the basis of the experiences of our staff, (among whom are a high number of racialized licensees) we recommend that the Law Society of Upper Canada ("LSUC") allocate resources and provide a platform for racialized licensees to combat systemic racism and ensure a lasting culture of change in the legal profession. In this way, LSUC could move its commitment toward systematically supporting the implementation of concrete initiatives. Racialized licensees in the profession should lead the discussion and planning that will create lasting change. This change is imperative to the ongoing success of the profession, which numerous reports have called for in response to barriers and an ossified professional culture.<sup>1</sup>

Professional Obligations and Practices

Relevant Recommendations: 1, 2, 3, 9, 10

The LSUC must ensure its commitment to reinforcing the professional obligations of its members to recognize and promote principles of equality, diversity and inclusion consistent with the requirements under human rights legislation. This includes, specifically and annually, addressing the lack of focus on diversity and systemic racism in law school curricula. Continuing professional development ("CPD") for lawyers and legal practitioners must also emphasize this priority. To operationalize diversity and equality training, the LSUC should develop clear guidelines for delivering relevant, timely, and meaningful educational and CPD programs which address the historic inequalities in Canada for racialized communities and the lack of diversity and plurality that is a persistent problem in the legal profession. These programs should also focus on the experiences of licensees who may experience multiple and intersecting forms of marginalization, including racialized women, religious minorities, sexual and gender expression minorities, or licensees from low-income backgrounds.

Building Communities of Support and Addressing Systemic Discrimination

Relevant Recommendations: 11, 12

The LSUC must actively seek to build sustainable communities of support to recognize the unique experiences of racialized licensees. There is a profound lack of meaningful and ongoing mentorship for racialized licensees in the profession, and very little systematic fostering of natural connections and capacity building between senior and junior counsel. Building communities of support requires recognition of the social location of licensees and their lived experiences as minorities in a very hierarchical profession. Often, the narrative of “firsts” replaces the hard work of substantive and sustainable change, and creates an impression of “progress.”<sup>2</sup>

The LSUC and employers should also examine practices which reinforce so-called “token diversity,” which can result in the hiring of a few racialized licensees to meet the mandate of diversity and equality, without addressing ongoing oppressive workplace culture and the historical disadvantage faced by minority licensees. Ultimately, the concept of the plurality is useful here, as a commitment to diversity is empty without providing racialized and minority licensees access to meaningful positions of power within the legal profession.

Racialized licensees also experience gaps in employment equity, particularly if they are women. “Men are more likely to be in sole practice and law firm partners, while there is a higher proportion of women in all the other stations, especially in house, in clinics, in government and education.”<sup>3</sup> As with gender wage gaps in other fields, women lawyers are at a definite economic disadvantage vis-à-vis their male colleagues.<sup>4</sup>

Additionally, the gendered wage gap reveals and communicates to society more generally the relative valuing of the genders. Undervaluing women, exemplifying and maintaining women’s subordinate positions in such a material way, contributes to an overall vulnerability to violence and disrespect, including the daily experiences of racialized licensees who are women. The LSUC should commit to employment equity for all its licensees and create meaningful mechanisms to allow licensees to excel in their legal careers while living balanced lives. This commitment includes both an eradication of the gender and racial wage gap, as well as a commitment to providing equitable parental leave for families having children, and not penalizing women for taking time away from their legal practice.

Sexual violence and its impacts in the employment context highlight yet another dimension of the unique experiences of racialized licensees, particularly in a hierarchical profession such as law. In situations that exacerbate unequal power dynamics, such as employment contexts, women, particularly visible minorities, continue to be deterred from reporting sexual assault and adequate state protection mechanisms are often not available, especially when negative repercussions on one’s reputation or employment are at stake.<sup>5</sup>

The power dynamics inherent in the practice of law also exacerbate daily microaggressions experienced by racialized licensees in the workplace, such as when interacting with court staff, or with the judiciary. Our students report ongoing struggles with sexualized work environments throughout the profession. These power dynamics are also inherent in the employment opportunities, and the experiences of racialized licensees during interview processes, both at the entry-level during the law school On-Campus Interview (“OCI”) processes, as well as during individual interviews at law firms, clinics, and the government. Comments about a candidate’s ethnic background or chosen hairstyle may seem minimal, yet they underscore their minority status in a profession still mostly populated by white, male, Anglo-Saxon legal practitioners, particularly in positions of power such as partners, CEOs, or judges.

If the goal of the LSUC is to foster an inclusive profession responsive to the increasing diversity of the Canadian population, there must be a sustained commitment to address the root causes of discrimination and racism still inherent in the legal profession. This commitment must include law school initiatives as well as CPD initiatives for all members of the profession, including students, in a climate of careful monitoring and compliance within the profession to professional obligations of equity. It must also include profession-wide community building and meaningful solutions to the ongoing systemic inequality of racialized licensees, such as combating pay inequity, sexual violence in the workplace, and the inherent power imbalances. These goals are especially pertinent in a profession committed to providing justice and protecting the public interest.

Dear Ms. Quansah,

Re: Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions

The Black Law Students' Association of Canada ("BLSA Canada") is a national organization that represents Black law students across Canada in both official languages. Our purpose is to promote increased representation of Black students in law schools and to support and enhance academic and professional opportunities for Black law students. BLSA Canada and its chapters at law schools nationwide are concerned with the challenges faced by racialized licensees in the legal profession and the barriers these challenges represent with regard to entering the profession.

In its September 22, 2016 Report to Convocation, the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee of the Law Society of Upper Canada ("LSUC") released the final report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group ("The report"), containing 13 recommendations in 5 broad categories for addressing barriers faced by racialized licensees in the legal profession. In furtherance of our organizational purpose, BLSA Canada offers the following comments on the recommendations outlined in the report.

In providing these comments, it is not BLSA Canada's aim to critique each of the proposed recommendations set out in the report. Instead, BLSA Canada's comments are structured more broadly to point out overarching areas of concern and to highlight ways in which some of LSUC's recommendations might be better supplemented. In providing these comments, BLSA Canada believes it can offer some insight on the perspectives of racialized students who are not yet licensees but soon will be.

The need for the LSUC's leadership

BLSA Canada would first like to applaud the law society for undertaking this initiative and for creating space in which the concerns of racialized licensees can be heard. Racial inequality and discrimination have long been concerns for racialized licensees and any proposed solutions must address the systemic roots of the challenges which racialized licensees face. In taking this long overdue and much needed step, the LSUC is showing leadership in taking measures to eliminate the barriers which contribute to the underrepresentation, marginalization and isolation of racialized licensees in the legal profession. As the regulator of the legal profession, any success that is to be had in addressing these barriers requires that the LSUC shows strong leadership.

There must be a focus from the LSUC on challenges that arise before entry into practice

Challenges faced by racialized licensees do not all of a sudden arise at the point of entry into the profession. Racialized law students and licensing candidates experience many of the challenges that are identified in the report (i.e. discrimination and stereotyping, lack of mentors and role models) long before they are seeking articling placements, completing the licensing process or being called to the Bar.

It is our opinion, that if the LSUC is committed to addressing the systemic challenges faced by racialized licensees, it should look for ways to work with law schools to address these hurdles long before their entry into the legal profession. We believe that collecting this data would allow for the assessment and identification of existing issues from the moment future licensees enter law school.

Another way in which the LSUC could work more closely with law schools is during the LSUC-regulated recruitment processes (i.e. the summer recruitment of 1L and 2L students as well as articling recruitment). As the report considers developing guidelines and collecting information on hiring practices, recruitment and retention, this presents an opportunity for the LSUC to facilitate better assessment of hiring practices in the profession. As the LSUC already puts rules in place that firms are to abide by during the structured recruitment processes, it would require very little of the LSUC to have some sort of follow-up measures to ensure that these recruitment processes are sensitive to issues of discrimination and stereotyping.

In the report, Recommendation 2 contemplates enhancing the On-Campus Interview (“OCI”) process for the dissemination of information. We suggest that it would also be beneficial to consider how OCIs and other such recruitment processes could be enhanced to better collect information.

Exit surveys as a follow-up to recruitment processes

It has become a common practice at a number of law schools to conduct anonymous surveys once the OCI process is completed as a means for law faculties to provide useful information to their respective student populations about how the process unfolds (i.e. this has been done in recent years by way of student newspapers like Ultra Vires at the University of Toronto Faculty of Law and Obiter Dicta at Osgoode Hall Law School). Such anonymous surveys provide opportunities to collect qualitative and quantitative data about the OCI process. The information that is compiled has often been relied upon by other students as a source of candid information about a process that is largely driven by the pursuit of the elusively-defined and extremely subjective quality of firm culture “fit”.

In working with the law schools to gather information in this manner, the LSUC could potentially obtain much more relevant and reliable information than that which can be obtained through self-assessed and self-reported data about firm hiring practices. We suggest that such information be included as a helpful supplement to the proposed inclusion index recommended in the report.

Concerns about what information is shared publicly and what is only released to firms

The collection of quantitative self-identification data is beneficial and will in fact assist in measuring progress. However, information is only as valuable as it is accessible. Many legal employers already have diversity policies in place and even more state their commitment to fostering diverse workplaces, yet the manifestations of these policies and commitments are seldom disclosed. As a result, we are concerned that the data made available to the public will be insufficient.

Racialized candidates have an interest in knowing about the diversity and inclusion efforts and results of their prospective employers and not just those who are the top ranked diversity employers. Indeed, the accessibility of this information would be of great benefit in assisting students to make informed decisions about where they seek employment. And while we recognize that some are weary of adopting a “name and shame” approach to compliance, this legitimate concern of racialized students should be considered when determining what sort of information should be made publicly available.

While BLSA Canada recognizes that naming and shaming may not be the most useful approach, the accepted alternative should not be to deprive licensees of this valuable data. We encourage the law society to explore means to make the information publically available while mitigating the repercussions associated with so-called “name and shame” approaches.

Recognizing how the LPP oversight affects racialized licensees

By the LSUC’s own account, racialized candidates are overrepresented in the Law Practice Program (“LPP”). The overrepresentation of racialized candidates in this program is of concern to BLSA Canada. Further though, we also have concerns as to how participation in the LPP impacts their legal careers. Given the overrepresentation of racialized candidates in the LPP, we strongly advocate that these concerns must be considered by the LSUC if it is to successfully address the issue of systemic racism in the legal profession.

By virtue of the fact that the consultation process for the report began prior to the creation of the LPP, the implications the program has for racialized candidates seeking entry into the legal profession has thus been overlooked. It is our opinion that the LSUC must assess how the LPP impacts racialized licensees.

Though we are glad that the LSUC has backtracked on its recent proposal to discontinue the LPP, it is extremely concerning that this proposal was put forth in light of the LSUC’s knowledge that racialized candidates disproportionately rely on this program to satisfy their licensing requirements. Such a proposal to discontinue a program that is still very much needed at this time (especially by racialized candidates), without proposing any alternative to replace it contradicts the LSUC’s stated commitments to ensuring that the practice of law is reflective of all peoples in Ontario.

On a related note, the LSUC must recognize the impact its recent increase in licensing fees has on racialized licensees who have only recently entered or are trying to enter the profession. The increased cost places an extra burden on the shoulders of racialized licensees. While the LSUC endeavours to eliminate the systemic barriers that have long kept certain communities out of the profession, it should not introduce new ones.

BLACK LAW STUDENTS ASSOCIATION OF CANADA

L'ASSOCIATION DES ÉTUDIANTS NOIRS
EN DROIT DU CANADA

Mentorship for new entry racialized licensees needs to be a priority

The working group's final report aptly recognizes that racialized licensees require access to professional mentors and networking avenues. However, the LSUC must recognize that while mentoring is critical at all stages of a lawyer's career, it is perhaps most critical at the outset of their career. The demands and stresses placed on new entries are becoming increasingly burdensome and increasingly harder to overcome.

The continuous decrease in new articling positions and a lessened demand for first-year hires means that many new licensees are increasingly incapable of coping with their high debt burdens. The relative precariousness of their situation (as compared with those who have been called to the Bar for several years and have secured employment) coupled with the systemic challenges they face justifies the formation of an LSUC supported mentoring initiative specifically for new entry racialized licensees. While professional mentoring is undoubtedly significant, racialized new entries would benefit from additional support from their mentors that goes beyond simply developing their practice. This sort of mentoring—mentoring that extends beyond life in the office—is often difficult to find.

Final Remarks

BLSA Canada welcomes the final report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group as a first step taken by the LSUC towards reducing systemic racism and discrimination in the legal profession. The LSUC has identified many of the barriers impeding the development and progression of racialized lawyers. BLSA Canada applauds many of the working group's proposed recommendations. However, we believe that to reduce the systemic barriers that racialized licensees face requires that the LSUC considers the unique perspectives and experience of racialized students who ultimately represent the future of the legal profession.

The cyclical nature of the systemic challenges faced by racialized law students and licensing candidates needs to be properly addressed. Hence, if the Law Society of Upper Canada is committed to eliminating the longstanding barriers faced by racialized licensees and to ensuring that the practice of law is better reflective of Ontario's diverse peoples and communities, it must take an approach that considers the barriers that racialized licensees face before they even enter the profession.

Ultimately, the LSUC needs to have a holistic understanding and approach to the challenges faced by racialized law students, licensing candidates and racialized licensees.

Yours truly,

RE: BLSA Feedback – LSUC Report on Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees

To Whom It May Concern,

The Black Law Students' Association – Windsor Chapter is pleased to provide feedback regarding the Law Society of Upper Canada's report Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions. We have given careful thought to the report and its proposed recommendations and hope that our input will be strongly considered.

We would like to emphasize that the concerns raised by racialized licensees in Ontario are multi-faceted and occur at various stages in the lawyer's career. In providing feedback, we have focused our attention on racialized law school applicants, law students and those undertaking the licensing process. We believe that the Law Society cannot effectively address barriers experienced by racialized licensees without first actively working to eliminate the challenges that arise at these foundational stages.

Recommendations

Gather information: Law schools, the Ontario Universities' Application Centre, and the Law Society should keep track of the number of racialized (1) law school applicants, (2) admitted students, (3) participants in the OCI process, (4) participants who successfully attained positions through OCIs, and (5) licensing candidates who attained traditional articling positions (national, mid-size and small firms) and those entering the Law Practice Program. It would also be worthy to gather statistics regarding the number of racialized individuals that remain at a law firm after completing articles and the average length of time that these individuals remain at the firm.

The experiences will vary, but collecting and publishing statistics on these areas will assist the Law Society in determining how to help the upcoming generations of racialized licensees. In addition, this information may help to assess systemic factors that result in racialized individuals remaining overly represented in some categories and significantly underrepresented in others.

Understand the barriers that exist: Racialized licensees often come from cultural and socioeconomic backgrounds which place a strong emphasis on values that may be overlooked or minimized within the legal profession. Racialized law school applicants, in many cases, have had less exposure to mentors in the legal profession and face barriers through lack of resources, information or financial means. These factors create obstacles for racialized individuals with regards to developing effective law school applications and achieving academic success while in law school.

The Law Society must work to mitigate these early barriers faced by racialized applicants and law students as these initial challenges often lay the groundwork for further obstacles to be faced once these individuals become licensees. The Law Society should collaborate with law schools to reduce barriers that exist in the application and law school admissions processes and should consider developing guidelines to inform the admissions process, with a view to eliminating such obstacles.

Black Law Students Association, Windsor Chapter
 401 Sunset, Windsor ON N9B 3P4
 blsawin@gmail.com

Start early: The Law Society must invest in initiatives that focus on providing racialized law school applicants and law students with resources, support, mentorship and information. These tools are necessary to developing effective applications and succeeding academically. We recommend that the Law Society work collaboratively with law schools, dedicate funding and resources, and develop mentorship initiatives with an express focus on these early and crucial development stages for future licensees.

While we welcome recommendation 11 in the report which speaks to “building communities of support” through “mentoring and networking initiatives”, we again would like to emphasize that these measures should be extended to include racialized law school applicants and law students. Recommendation 2 aims to work with law schools, “to create or provide better sources of information on what is needed to apply, interview and succeed in a larger legal workplace.” The Law Society must be conscious of limited resources available within law schools and is strongly urged to dedicate adequate financial support to aid law schools in achieving this goal.

The Law Society should also examine initiatives that can cultivate safe spaces where racialized licensees and law students can express their concerns and receive practical advice on how to address the particular challenges they face. For instance, the Law Society provides a resource for licensees to obtain advice on matters concerning professional conduct. A similar resource made available to assist racialized licensees, and a separate initiative dedicated to law students, could be developed to ensure guidance is readily available. This resource is an important tool as the challenges faced by racialized licensees and law students can involve issues that are highly sensitive or controversial, and confidentiality may be a strong concern for individuals seeking advice.

Think critically about hiring and lack of opportunity in the profession: A significant number of law firms hire based on the ‘fit’. It must be acknowledged that many racialized candidates, by virtue of their diverse cultural and socioeconomic backgrounds, are disadvantaged by ‘fit-based hiring’. The Law Society must do more to encourage law firms to adopt hiring practices that strive to eliminate bias. In order for racialized licensees to move beyond sole practitioner and small firm practice, and gain access to a greater number of opportunities, inherently biased hiring practices must be critically examined and more strongly discouraged by the Law Society.

Meeting service needs: The report recommends developing a resource centre with materials for “licensees in sole practice, associations of sole practitioners and small partnerships” to help overcome the fact that “24% of racialized lawyers are in sole practice and 33% ...in legal workplaces of two to five.” Such resources should be extended to law schools to better prepare racialized students for the range of options available within the legal profession.

Sharing the responsibility for change: Recommendations 9 and 10 consider initiatives that seek to promote cultural competency, equity and inclusion within the profession. In order to be effective, these initiatives must assist in uncovering unconscious prejudices. Furthermore, it must be made clear that the responsibility of ensuring inclusion does not fall solely on the hands of racialized licensees. Eliminating the challenges faced by racialized licensees must be a shared responsibility that is also carried by non-racialized licensees and the Law Society must work to encourage this notion within the profession.

Thank you for the opportunity to provide feedback. We look forward to continuing this discussion with you should you require further information.

Best Regards,
 Black Law Students’ Association – Windsor Chapter

Prepared by Students at Windsor Law

Prepared for Professor Tanovich's Legal Profession class Winter 2016

R6.3.1-4 – Transparency and Cultural Competence in the Hiring Process

Employers shall ensure transparency and abide by principles of cultural competence in their hiring processes. Employers have an obligation to disclose clear and definitive job descriptions, as well as all phases of any recruitment process, to all applicants.

Commentary

Preamble

[1] Although the legal profession is committed to diversifying its workforce, discriminatory hiring practices continue. This is demonstrated by reports of:

- a. Racialized applicants “whitening” their resumes and downplaying their ethnic experiences and / or feeling like they must to be more attractive to firms to secure employment
- b. Racialized licensees are severely underrepresented in big firms<sup>1</sup>
- c. Large numbers of women leaving firms as a result of lack of accommodation for maternity and parenting accommodations and for lack of promotion to partner<sup>2</sup>
- d. LGBTQ++ licensees are significantly underrepresented in big firms
- e. Licensees with disabilities are discriminated against in hiring processes as stereotypes and common misperceptions are relied on and a lack of accommodations are provided

[2] Ranking candidates based on how well they fit a firm’s image is a problem. This practice is ambiguous and could be coded language for discriminatory hiring practices. It presents barriers for persons who appear to be different than the workplace norm, and particularly for peoples protected under the Ontario Human Rights Code. Increased transparency and integrating cultural competence into the hiring processes will strengthen equity and diversity initiatives with the aim of reducing these barriers.

Cultural competency in hiring processes

[3] Principles of cultural competence can be useful outside of the lawyer-client relationship. Fundamentally, cultural competence training is an exercise in training lawyers to understand 1; that they are cultural beings and 2; that we cannot escape the influence culture has on our decisions. Susan Bryant, Associate Professor at CUNY School of Law, had this to say about culture's "invisible lens";

We are constantly attaching culturally-based meaning to what we see and hear, often without being aware that we are doing so. Through our invisible cultural lens, we judge people to be truthful, rude, intelligent or superstitious based on the attributions we make about the meaning of their behavior.

[4] Cultural competence training seeks to cultivate a legal profession wherein lawyers are capable of rendering their own personal "invisible cultural lenses" visible. Culturally competent lawyers acknowledge "racism, power, privilege, and stereotyped thinking as influencing [their] interactions [...] and [work] to lessen the effect of these pernicious influences." Infusing principles of cultural competence into the hiring process will serve to stifle conscious and unconscious bias and reliance on stereotypes.

Transparency/Disclosure

[5] Applicants must be given clear and consistent information about job requirements. A written job description should be available. A clear and definitive job description will include an outline of the actual work performed, necessary skills, and qualities expected of successful applications. Job requirements should be rationally connected to performing the job, adopted in good faith, and reasonably necessary to accomplish the work-related purpose.

[6] Information about the recruitment process, including the hiring committee membership and the use of any secondary interviews or receptions, must be disclosed to all applicants. Recruitment processes must be rationally connected to the job requirements and adopted in good faith.

[7] These principles are also applicable to student recruitment practices.

Reporting

[8] All law firms must disclose to the Law Society biennially their hiring criteria, processes, and demographics for further review. The report must be submitted to the Law Society Equity Director for inclusion in the Law Society's Model Policies, Publications and Reports. The records must include detailed information including gender and age of those hired by the firm, as well as information regarding Aboriginal and minority demographics.

[9] Law firms must keep up to date records of all employment practices, as the Law Society Equity Director may, at any time, conduct a random check of policies in order to ensure transparency. These records must include information on all lawyers, students and paralegals hired within the two-year period.

[10] Those firms that do not disclose their hiring practices or do not keep current records may be subject to fines and other disciplinary action that the Board deems fit.

Examples of contravening behavior

[11] Ambiguous terms such as 'Cultural Fit' must not be used as hiring criteria. All criteria must be clearly defined and in compliance with the Ontario Human Rights Code.

[12] Ambiguous language and terms used during the hiring process can have an adverse and discriminatory effect. These unintended consequences depart from the standards of employment prescribed in Rule 6.3.1-1.

[13] "Cultural Fit" is demonstrative of a term used in hiring practices that appears neutral, but has adverse effects. For example, "Cultural Fit" may present barriers for persons who are, or appear to be, different than the dominant group in a workplace. These barriers can manifest at all stages of the hiring process. When such ambiguous terms are offered as an explanation for unsuccessful applicants seeking feedback, they have the potential to conceal discriminatory practice, hamper diversity and equity initiatives and entrench the status quo.

Hiring Process Best Practices

[14] Legal recruitment practices should acknowledge that discrimination occurs in hiring processes and take steps to avoid perpetuating it. Employers should aim for fair processes that focus on each candidate's ability to perform essential job duties. For example, best practices within the legal profession can include;

- a. Having a multi-person panel conduct formal interviews;
- b. Establishing objective assessment criteria and marking schemes determined before answers are graded
- c. Ensuring consistency in interview questions, based on the job's essential duties and bona fide requirements.
- d. Documentation of any judgments based on appearances or other subjective features in order to eliminate unconscious bias.

[15] While not directly regulated by the Law Society, it is recommended that law schools engage in career preparation programming that does not perpetuate discriminatory practices. For example, guest speakers focusing on professional attire for women should not go into detail about length of skirts, cut of blouses, or colour of lipstick.

[16] In addition to ensuring substantial transparency within the hiring processes, rule 6.3.1, requires transparency in the retention process. As an example, although there has been a large number of women entering private practice, they have also been leaving in large numbers. This is a symptom of the fact that women retained by firms are not being promoted to partnership and other decision-making positions. To increase transparency, there must be ongoing research regarding the retention of individuals within gendered, racialized, lgbtq++, and disability communities in firms, government and private practice. The profession must recognize the challenges that these individuals face and make substantial efforts to accommodate their needs and reduce these barriers.

Racialized Licensee Response

Re: Recommendations for a Windsor Law / Canadian Council of Law Deans Response to the 2016 LSUC Report on Challenges faced by Racialized Licensees

You requested feedback from the EDC regarding this report. The EDC has consulted with the students via an email request for feedback, and has otherwise reviewed the report. We would make the following recommendations:

1. The Committee strongly supports Recommendation 1 “Reinforcing Professional Obligations.” This recommendation is important for ensuring that individual members of the Law Society are held accountable by the LSUC for their conduct. It also opens up new channels for those who interact with LSUC members to utilize the existing complaints mechanisms to resolve matters pertaining to equality, diversity and equity.
2. The Committee supports Recommendation 2 and notes that Law Schools could benefit from, and contribute to, the development and implementation of model policies and resources.
3. The Committee supports Recommendations 3, 4, 5 and 6 and notes the following:
  - a) Law Schools could adopt item 1) with respect to their own student populations. “The Law Society will require every licensee to adopt and to abide by a statement of principles acknowledging their obligation to promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally, and in their behaviour towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public”;
  - b) Are Law Schools considered “legal workplaces of at least 10 (or 25) licensees in Ontario” who would be subject to the data collection requirements?

We recommend that the LSUC define the term "legal workplaces". Law schools should be consulted when both the quantitative and qualitative surveys are being prepared. Law school student and applicant surveys could closely mirror the survey used by the LSUC so that the data can be used for comparative purposes.

- c) Qualitative data taken from inclusion surveys may also be useful to receive from law students, so as to ensure that the full picture of the challenges faced by racialized licensees can be demonstrated. This will ensure that broad context is provided in the Inclusion Index;

- d) The data collection requirements of law schools and other legal workplaces should be clearly stated from the outset when implementing this report, as it is an important aspect of the Inclusion Index. The Inclusion Index should not be built without taking this data into consideration. The power of statistical reporting is in being able to compare against historical data. If the Inclusion Index is not built properly from the outset, amending the formulas within it will be difficult later on, and will compromise the integrity of the data over time.

If the Law Society does not consider it to be within the scope of this report to require law schools to provide data about student populations, then we would recommend the Law Society raise the matter at the Federation of Law Societies of Canada.

4. Understanding the complex nature of systemic barriers to diversity and inclusion, the Committee strongly supports Recommendation 8 “Progressive Compliance Measures”, as another important measure for ensuring organizational accountability.
5. The Committee supports Recommendation 10 “The Licensing Process” but requests clarification from the LSUC about whether it is envisioned that law schools should also adopt cultural competency as a core competency. Again, if the LSUC does not envision that law schools should be included under this recommendation, then this recommendation should be forwarded to the Federation for implementation with respect to law schools.

The committee notes that “racialized licensee” is not defined in the report. The report would benefit from clarifying this point. For example, reference could be made to Statistics Canada “Visible Minority and Population Group Reference Guide, National Household Survey, 2011” Cat No 99-010-XWE2011009, online: <https://www12.statcan.gc.ca/nhs-enm/2011/ref/guides/99-010-x/99-010-x2011009-eng.cfm> to ensure a standard approach.

6. The Committee strongly supports Recommendation 12 as an important tool in ensuring that Recommendation 8 has effective enforcement measures. It will also ensure that the LSUC is appropriately prepared to deal with such complaints in the future. Without having these foundations in place, the LSUC itself will perpetuate discrimination by having inadequate processes in place, and inadequately trained personnel, to handle these complex and sensitive complaints. In particular, protecting persons from reprisal for making complaints is significant.
7. The committee strongly supports Recommendation 13 “Leading by Example”, as being tremendously important for creating strong foundations for the entire profession.

The Committee should be encouraged to share an anonymized version of the comments that were made by licensees during the consultation process. If these could be categorized so that, for example, law schools and other workplaces could have access to relevant feedback, this may be helpful.

Generally, we would commend the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee on the broad consultations that were undertaken to prepare this report, and for their responsiveness to the feedback that they received.

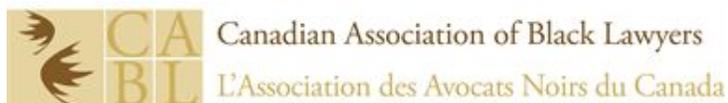

Please note that we have also received a written submission from the Black Law Students' Association, Windsor Chapter. That report is attached.

Respectfully submitted,

On behalf of the Faculty of Law Equity and Diversity Committee:

Dear Treasurer Schabas, Co-Chairs Leiper and Anand:

Re: Final Report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees (CFRL) Working Group

The Canadian Association of Black Lawyers (CABL) would like to comment on the final report submitted by the CFRL Working Group. We make these comments in light of our letter submitted to the Law Society of Upper Canada (LSUC) on May 14, 2015. In this letter we recommended a number of measures to the Working Group<sup>1</sup>.

CABL is a national network of law professionals with an overall mandate to promote the advancement of black lawyers within the profession. From the advent of the creation of the CFRL Working Group in 2012, CABL has been involved in supporting, informing and contributing to the process specifically in regards to research, analysis and discussions of the report.

CABL is a member of the Equity Advisory Group (EAG) of the LSUC and had a representative sitting on the EAG working group for the CFRL report. Our members participated in focus groups, town hall meetings, surveys and direct meetings with the CFRL Working Group.

CABL notes that the process of recalling, reliving and publicly discussing systemic and sometimes overt racism is gruelling and uncomfortable. Our members shared intimate details of their experiences in order to draw attention to the challenges faced by black and other minority lawyers in Ontario. We hope that our efforts will eventually lead to more than an initial step to change.

CABL acknowledges that the final report released by the CFRL Working Group highlights some of the challenges faced by racialized licensees and is an initial step towards addressing these challenges. The summary and expressions of hope set the tone for the 13 recommendations the report is making to Convocation.

CABL is fully in support of the LSUC addressing the challenges our members and other minority groups face in the practice of law. The members of the Bar have failed in their obligation not to “discriminate on the grounds of race, ancestry, pledge of origin, colour, ethnic origin, citizenship, creed, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity, gender expression, age, record of offences, marital status, family status or disability with respect to professional employment of other lawyers, articulated students, or any other person or in professional dealings with other licensees or any other person (as defined in the Ontario Human Rights Code)”<sup>2</sup> It is for this very reason that we believe the report places too much faith in the ability of the Bar to self-monitor and correct the systemic issues recognized in the report. There must be direct regulation from the LSUC. We believe that the recommendations should be strengthened to reflect LSUC regulation rather than suggestion.

In the short time available for submissions and commentary, CABL would like to highlight a few things that we suggested in May 2015 that we believe should have been adopted in the final report.

Data Collection:

We note that there is no mandatory internal collection of demographic data by legal organizations as we suggested. The LSUC will, through its licensee annual reporting mechanism, collect the data and present this to legal organizations. CABL notes that mandatory internal collection of data on an annual basis forces legal organization to “look at themselves in the mirror” and recognise the trends that so far they have not addressed. How will the LSUC ensure that legal organizations will review the numbers provided by the LSUC on a yearly basis? Our letter of May 14, 2015, noted that just as trust accounts and other features of legal organizations are regulated, data collection by legal organizations can be enforced and regulated.

Self-Assessment:

CABL is sceptical of the LSUC recommending to “encourage” legal workplaces to conduct inclusion surveys by providing them with sample templates. Despite the tenor of the report, the Working Group had concerns about unnecessary burdens placed on many groups that have already moved forward proactively with equality measures of their own. Legal Organizations that are ahead of the curve will not be burdened by less. On the other hand, the many that have nothing in place will have a standard to live up to. CABL would like the adoption of equality, diversity and inclusion principles to be more than voluntary and subject to periodic review for compliance. CABL notes that unconscious bias can be made conscious through self-assessment. However, we accept that the CFRL Working Group were weighing competing interests in deciding to adopt a less onerous approach. We hope that the global effect of the recommendations will lead to a future that includes compliance review.

Progressive Compliance Measures

CABL believes the LSUC must now commit to, not merely consider, developing and implementing progressive compliance measures for legal workplaces that do not comply with the requirements proposed in Recommendation 3 and/or legal workplaces that are identified as having systemic barriers to diversity and inclusion. The recommendations are not onerous. In light of the Working Group's findings, they reflect a basic standard required of any legal workplaces serious about diversity and inclusions.

In general the report falls short of adequately identifying enforcement mechanisms. What happens if legal organizations are not encouraged and/or do not adopt policies? Or even worse create policies and ignore them? The report does not address this.

CPD Training:

CPD programs limited to once in three years places the issue of systemic racism on the shelf only to be uncomfortably addressed after long periods. The issue can be addressed and kept alive by requiring an annual one hour program. The report is also vague on the implementation of the training. Who are the experts the LSUC will approach to help with developing this curriculum? CABL hopes that our organization will be consulted before the curriculum and process are discussed and implemented.

Complaints of Systemic Discrimination:

The Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program was created under a different principle and ideology. CABL would prefer to "create a specialized and trained team to address complaints of discrimination"<sup>3</sup> that reports to the LSUC disciplinary committee.

Conclusion:

Moving forward, CABL expects the LSUC to continue to involve us as well as the Roundtable of Diversity Associations (RODA), EAG and other equity seeking legal organizations in the implementation of the recommendations and the planning of new policies.

CABL's submission is a comment on some aspects of the report that we believe could be strengthened. However, there is no policy in place at this time and, as noted earlier, the adopting of this report would be a positive first step towards change. CABL fully supports Convocation adopting the CFRL Working Group Final Report in its entirety.

---

CABL does not support a vote of the CFRL Working Group Final Report on a recommendation by recommendation basis. We reiterate that our hope is that the global influence of the recommendations will effect change. A vote on recommendation by recommendation will most likely change the overall influence of the report.

CABL is aware that Convocation will also be considering a motion that the recommendations from the CFRL Working Group Report form the benchmark for approaching issues with other equity seeking groups. CABL supports this motion.

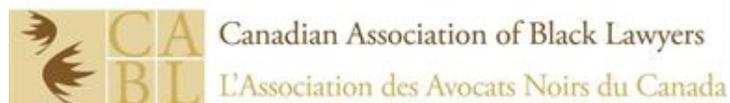

CABL will rely on the hope that the recommendations will become the root of a living tree that will grow, flourish and become stronger by the day. First let's plant the tree.

Yours truly,

Dear Ms. Bouchard:

Re: Developing Strategies for Change: Addressing Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Consultation Paper

The Canadian Association of Black Lawyers (“CABL”) takes this opportunity to offer the following submissions in respect to the above-noted Consultation Paper authored by The Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group (the “Working Group”). We note that CABL Board members and other CABL members have participated in the in-person consultation process following the publication of the Consultation Paper. These submissions are not meant to modify or abrogate from those individual submissions in any respect.

CABL is a national network of law professionals with an overall mandate to promote the advancement of black lawyers within the profession by providing support systems, promoting academic and professional excellence and advancing issues of equity and diversity among the bar and judiciary. CABL is both a member of The Law Society of Upper Canada (the “Law Society”)’s Treasurer’s Liaison Group and a member of the Law Society’s Equity Advisory Group (“EAG”). CABL is also a member of the Ontario Bar Association (“OBA”)’s Diversity Program and a member of the Toronto Lawyers Association (“TLA”)’s Roundtable of Diversity Associations (“RODA”). CABL has participated in numerous consultations with the Law Society, the Canadian Bar Association (“CBA”) and the OBA on issues of access, diversity and equity affecting the legal profession and the legal system within Canada and Ontario.

We wish to commend the Law Society and the Working Group on the comprehensive and detailed scope of the Consultation Paper. As you are aware, CABL has long been advocating for a comprehensive investigation by the Law Society into the experiences of Racialized Lawyers, and in particular Black Lawyers, based upon concerns raised by CABL members and others relating to their experiences within the profession; from the articling stage and subsequent. We note that a summary of those experiences have been materially captured throughout the Consultation Paper. In that regard, these submissions shall focus more particularly on responding to the Questions for the Profession section of the Consultation Paper and our additional submissions in relation thereto.

I. ENHANCING THE INTERNAL CAPACITY OF ORGANIZATIONS

The mandate, and reasons for the mandate of the Law Society in this area, is readily apparent: as a regulator, the Law Society's interest should be to ensure that members of the profession are being treated with fairness and dignity by other Licensees and in a manner which enhances the diversity of the profession and provides equal opportunities to all members thereof.

The Law Society has a crucial role to play to establish "best practices" by way of policies, standards and resources devoted to the recruitment, retention and career progression of Racialized Licensees within law firms and other legal organizations, such as legal clinics, in house legal departments, etc. (collectively "Legal Organizations").

Similar to the Justicia Project in respect to addressing gender imbalance and discrimination within the profession, the Law Society should be addressing the lack of opportunities for Racialized Licensees within the legal profession. While as a minimum, the Law Society should be expanding the scope of the Justicia Project to include Racialized Licensees, CABL maintains that more significant strategies are necessary to address the issues raised in the Consultation Paper.

A. Establishing Diversity Programs Within Firms

While the Law Society has identified three proposed models in this area, CABL does not see them as mutually exclusive. Rather, they are interrelated and complementary to each other.

As the Consultation Paper notes, the Law Society already has a template for approaching these issues by way of the Justicia Project materials distributed to law firms. However, CABL advocates that unlike the Justicia Project, the Law Society should be requiring Legal Organizations to commit, by way of a written agreement, to adopt diversity "best practices" within their respective Legal Organizations as per the Law Society guidelines and as more particularly discussed below.

B. Self-Assessment

There is little point to Legal Organizations developing and adopting "best practices" without a form of self-assessment tool to measure their progress in respect to both implementation and results. The self-assessment aspect is critical.

C. Requiring Standards

CABL recognizes that this could be a controversial issue. However, we query what concrete steps will be taken by Legal Organizations if there is no element of requirement, as there is with other forms of human rights related policies, so as to promote equality and protect the vulnerable from discriminatory practices. Granted, there are a number of firms who will "opt in" voluntarily, as with the Justicia Project. However, we can see that of the Firms of more than 25 lawyers within the province, only approximately 55 Firms have signed commitment agreements with the Law Society in respect to the current Justicia Project.

The issues identified in the Consultation Paper are also systemic in nature and arguably more difficult than gender discrimination for Legal Organizations to grapple with and address in any effective and systemic way.

Requiring Legal Organizations to adopt recruitment, retention and career advancement standards and resources to provide opportunities for Racialized Licensees would:

- (i) make the efforts of the Law Society in this area more far reaching by ensuring that every legal environment has considered these important issues and has put in place the necessary “best practices” to encourage racial diversity;
- (ii) remove the choice of “opting out” as a clear signal from the Law Society that equity is not a choice but a directive; and
- (iii) allow the Law Society to act as a vehicle for change; by requiring an infrastructure for inclusiveness and accountability within all Legal Organizations.

To be clear, while CABL believes that the Law Society should provide Legal Organizations with proposed best practices template standard policies for recruitment, retention and career advancement of Racialized Licensees, and require that every Legal Organization have such policies in place, the actual content of these policies, as long as they contain the essential elements of the best practices standards templates, would be for each Legal Organization to design for itself keeping in mind the nature of the particular Organization.

D. Collecting Demographic Data

CABL wholly endorses the mandatory internal collection of demographic data by Legal Organizations in respect of their Racialized Licensees. The internal mandatory collection of data is the only way in which Legal Organizations can monitor, in a transparent fashion, and be accountable for their progress in respect to the policy implementation and their corresponding recruitment, retention and advancement strategies, as well as the resources devoted to such strategies, so as to adjust and modify the strategies for efficacy.

In respect to what use should be made of the internal data collection, the Legal Organizations should be required to report, on a mandatory basis, certain aggregate demographic data to the Law Society. Such mandatory data would be in the nature of:

- (i) the size and geographic location of the firm;
- (ii) the racial demographics of the summer/articling/LPP students, associates, partners and paralegals within the Legal Organization;
- (iii) the number of racialized summer/articling students/LLP students who were hired and the number hired back to the Legal Organization and their areas of practice;

- (iv) the number of racialized associates who are employed, the length of employment and their areas of practice;
- (v) the number of racialized partners who are employed, their tenure, their areas of practice, how many were advanced to the partnership from associate status and after how many years;
- (vi) the number of racialized paralegals and their length of employment; and
- (vii) similar information in respect to the Legal Organization's non-racialized licensees for comparison purposes.

The Law Society must provide Legal Organizations with a standard data collection template with the required demographic data to be collected such that there is consistency and reliability among data collection and reporting in order to allow for meaningful analysis of trends and progress.

It has been suggested by some groups, such as the Federation of Asian Canadian Lawyers ("FACL"), that other types of equity demographic data (such as sexual orientation, abilities, socio-economic disadvantage) should also be collected so as to take an intersectionality approach to the analysis. CABL does not have the expertise to assess the proportionate value of such information for the purpose of addressing the issues raised in the Consultation Paper other than to acknowledge the well documented sociological evidence of the intersectionality of race and other factors, such as gender. Accordingly, it may be worthwhile for the Law Society to consult with equity experts as to what indicators would be worthwhile to track.

The mandatory data collected by the Legal Organizations and submitted to the Law Society should be summarized, on an aggregate basis, and reported by the Law Society to the profession annually. This information, together with the Law Society's collection of demographic data through the Licensees Members' Annual Reports (which reporting should also be made mandatory on the part of individual Licensees), will provide a clearer understanding of the existing profile of the legal profession within Ontario and can be used to track demographic trends on a short term and long term basis.

The above submissions are in no way meant to be a suggestion or recommendation for the implementation of diversity targets or "quotas". CABL does not believe that diversity targets or quotas are necessary if mandatory strategies are put in place, as endorsed above, to encourage and promote systemic organizational change.

CABL is of the view that a requirement of mandatory data reporting in respect to certain aggregate information does not require a regulation of Legal Organizations or firms in the same way that such regulation is not required for the Law Society to impose mandatory reporting requirements in respect to the handling of trust funds and other professional requirements. Also, many of the large firms are already required, through the process of diversity and contract compliance procedures, to report similar demographic information as is being proposed above.

Further, the Law Society must engage in a wide spread proactive strategy of education within the profession as to the purpose and goal of mandatory data collection and reporting and emphasize that the purpose is not punitive, but to obtain useful information in order to assist the profession as a whole with useful strategies to promote racial diversity and opportunities within Legal Organizations.

E. Diversity and Contract Compliance

The Law Society's role with in-house legal departments should be similar to that advocated above. In that regard, our recommendations in respect of the Law Society providing templates for mandatory "best practices" policies, standards, mandatory internal data collection and mandatory reporting of certain aggregate data to the Law Society would apply.

With respect to the data collection and reporting of data in relation to the procurement of legal services, CABL recommends that the Law Society works directly with the Legal Leaders for Diversity ("LLD"), Law Firm Diversity and Inclusion Network ("LFDIN"), Call to Action and other organizations, to discuss purchasing practices and to voluntarily develop model procurement and contract compliance policies as they relate to diversity in order to promote and/or expand the opportunities for Racialized Licensees on significant/important files. CABL also fully endorses that the Law Society encourage such organizations, on a voluntary basis, to provide demographic statistics during the RFP and in respect to the file progress.

II. MENTORING, ADVISORY SERVICES AND NETWORKING

A. Mentoring and Advisory Services

CABL is of the view that mentoring, both within the Racialized bar and outside the Racialized bar, is a necessary and crucial part of providing professional opportunities for Racialized Licensees. To that end, CABL approves of and endorses the following mentoring and advisory services:

- (i) that the Law Society develop technology based performance oriented and career and personal advice oriented mentoring and advisory services, based upon best practices, and widely promote their availability; with an emphasis on establishing short and long term mentoring relationships for Racialized Licensees;
- (ii) that the Law Society audit the formal (performance based) and informal (career and personal advice based) mentoring and advisory services available within Legal Organizations, with an emphasis on investigating what specific mentoring and advisory services have been established to address the concerns of Racialized Licensees;
- (iii) that the Law Society make available to Racialized Licensees advisors/coaches who have received diversity training and are available to provide one on one professional career counselling to Racialized

Licensees, from a pool of compensated coaches/advisors, at a cost fully borne by the Law Society;

- (iv) that the Law Society make available to Racialized Licensees performance mentors to provide practice based assistance to Racialized Licensees who do not have access to other practice based information/assistance, from a pool of compensated mentors, at a cost fully borne by the Law Society;
- (v) that the Law Society, in conjunction with Racialized legal and other associations, organize, promote and endorse informal mentorship events (i.e. CABL's Annual Speed Mentoring event). As the Racialized legal associations are not for profit organizations with limited funds, the Law Society should provide financial assistance at least by way of subsidizing the full cost of facilities, security and refreshments etc. to encourage such events; and
- (vi) that Racialized legal associations provide one on one volunteer professional career mentoring and advisory services to their members through a mentoring program organized and implemented by the associations.

B. Networking

As with mentoring, networking is a crucial tool for the creation of opportunities for Racialized Licensees, who, as noted in the Consultation Paper, are often more isolated and lacking support networks. Many of these Racialized Lawyers are in sole practice or small firms of one or two lawyers.

CABL believes that it is crucial to involve Racialized Licensees in both Racialized and non-Racialized network opportunities. Racialized networks are essential for validation, comradery and shared experiences. However, networking opportunities must also extend to the legal "mainstream" in order to create broader professional opportunities.

Resources are a significant impediment to formal networking structures, such as professional development. Racialized legal associations are therefore an excellent source of networking opportunities. To the extent that resources are an impediment for Racialized Licensees to become members of such associations, the Law Society could offer subsidies to assist Racialized Licensees to join such organizations for a fixed period of time (i.e. one or two year membership years). This would allow the Racialized Licensees to avail themselves of the networking (and mentorship) benefits of such associations at a reduced cost for a period of time and thereafter they would be persuaded to continue membership at regular cost on the basis of the beneficial networking and mentorship experiences/services such associations provide.

More difficult is how to achieve networking opportunities among the mainstream Legal Organizations. One way is for the Law Society to encourage mainstream Legal Organizations to offer regular “networking invitations” to Racialized Legal Associations to promote dialogue and interaction.

We note that the Internationally Trained Lawyers have the same access to Racialized Legal Associations as do other Racialized lawyers.

III. ENHANCING CULTURAL COMPETENCE IN THE PROFESSION

CABL believes that all of the three proposals contained in the Consultation Paper are advisable. There should certainly be more availability of accredited CPD Programs on cultural competence and equity principles of diversity inclusion and systemic bias. Further, the Professional Responsibility and Practice (“PRP”) Course should include cultural competency, diversity and inclusion as mandatory topics for accreditation.

In the same vein, accredited lawyers should be required to evidence their continued cultural competence by engaging in at least one hour of CPD annually, as part of the current 3 hours of mandatory professionalism hours, on cultural competence, equity and diversity as these issues impact upon the practice of law and the experiences of Racialized Licensees and their career development opportunities. Both the widespread availability of such programs and the one hour requirement go hand in hand. These CPD programs should be taught by individuals with equity and diversity expertise and they themselves should be demographically diverse.

IV. DISCRIMINATION AND THE ROLE OF THE COMPLAINTS PROCESS

The Law Society has a critical role to play in ensuring that Racialized Licensees’ legal right to be free from discrimination is enforced. While updating the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct is a first step, much more needs to be done to address what is essentially a systemic problem within the profession. Specific CPD programs and mandatory one hour CPD on cultural sensitivity/systemic bias has been mentioned above. Communication to the profession is another important element as are the recommended strategies outlined above in respect of establishing diversity programs within firms.

The Law Society should also take steps to publicize the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel to ensure that Racialized Licensees are fully aware of their right to make a complaint of incidents of harassment and discrimination engaged in by other Licensees to an independent “ombudsman”.

The Law Society should also be allocating resources to the training of specialized Professional Regulation staff to accept and process complaints of racial discrimination and bias as a breach of the Rules of Professional Conduct and Paralegal Rules of Conduct and to have available proper supports to assist complainants with the process. The Law Society should also provide coaches/advisors to discuss and address with complainants the personal and professional issues arising from discriminatory conduct.

The Law Society must be mindful that the confidential reporting of incidents of racial discrimination is extremely difficult for Racialized Licensees. By virtue of the paucity of Racialized Licensees within Legal Organizations, the fact of a complaint being made to the Law Society about a particular Legal Organization will, by its nature, most likely reveal the identity of the complainant.

Therefore, the Law Society must derive an effective investigation and enforcement mechanism which does not place the Racialized Licensee in harm or subject them to reprisals. Part of the investigation process might involve a general audit of the “respondent” Legal Organization for compliance in respect of the creation and implementation of the “best practices” policies/procedures and a general audit of all Racialized Licensees within the “respondent” as to their experiences so as to not single out the complainant. Again, the primary focus should be to protect the complainant, who is in an extremely vulnerable situation, from reprisal and to remediate the situation rather than to penalize. However, it should be made clear in the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct that reprisals, as well as the discriminatory conduct itself, is a breach subject to prosecution and penalties.

The Law Society should be engaging in direct dialogue with Racialized legal associations as well as the OBA/CBA and county and district law associations, to discuss specific suggestions in order to derive an effective, yet protective, investigation/enforcement process, and as to the mentoring/advisory capabilities of such organizations to assist the Law Society in supporting members engaged in initiating a complaint.

The tracking of such complaints is also necessary so as to create/modify existing strategies and policies based upon efficacy.

CABL is of the view that no regulatory changes would be required to implement the proposals outlined in the Consultation Paper or detailed above. The Law Society has, as part of its current mandate, the regulation of each Licensee and their conduct in respect to the practice of law. The implementation and enforcement of the proposals hereinbefore described are an integral part of such mandate, whether implemented on an individual Licensee or aggregate Firm basis.

V. THE OPERATIONS OF THE LAW SOCIETY OF UPPER CANADA

CABL is in favour of the Law Society’s adoption of Initiatives 1 through 4 of the Consultation Paper. It is important that the Law Society itself engage in, and be seen to be engaging in, the same initiatives as are being proposed for the profession as a whole; including, without limitation, the implementation of “best practices” policies and standards; mandatory internal data collection; mandatory reporting of certain aggregate data and the other proposals discussed herein.

An equity audit of the services provided by the Equity Initiatives Department and publication of such services to the profession would also enhance the importance of the work of the Department and the supports offered.

The “face” of the Law Society needs to undergo significant change. It is not reflective, from Benchers to staff, of the demographics of our profession or the population at large. The Law Society needs to “look at its own house” in respect to its recruitment and hiring practices as well as retention and career advancement of Racialized individuals (as well as individuals from the other equity seeking groups) to achieve a greater representation of equity seeking individuals in all areas of its operations.

As well, as a priority mandate, the Law Society should embark on equity sensitivity training for Benchers and staff. It is crucial that an equity “lens” be brought to all operations of the Law Society, including Finance and other operations, rather than to approach equity as a “silo” to be addressed only by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee and Equity Initiatives Department. Only by taking such a holistic approach will the Law Society truly achieve equity infused governance, for itself and for the profession as a whole.

We hope that the above submissions are of assistance to the Working Group. CABL remains committed to the work of the Law Society and the Working Group and is fully prepared to participate in the consultation process going forward with a view to finalizing and implementing the proposals under consideration in a fulsome and expeditious manner.

Yours truly,

Arleen Huggins

Objet : Rapport final du groupe de travail sur les difficultés auxquelles les titulaires de permis racialisés font face, intitulé Collaborer au changement : stratégies de lutte contre le racisme systémique dans les professions juridiques

Chère Madame,

Je vous écris au nom de l'Association canadienne des avocats du mouvement syndical/Canadian Association of Labour Lawyers (ACAMS-CALL), laquelle représente les syndicats et les travailleurs dans l'ensemble du Canada.

Les membres de notre association, en tant qu'avocats de droit du travail et de la personne, souhaitent exprimer leur appui pour le travail accompli par votre groupe sur les difficultés auxquelles les titulaires de permis racialisés font face et pour votre rapport final intitulé Collaborer au changement : stratégies de lutte contre le racisme systémique dans les professions juridiques.

Nous apprécions le leadership du Barreau du Haut-Canada sur ces enjeux importants.

Veillez recevoir, chère Madame, nos salutations le plus distinguées.

I write today in response to the Law Society of Upper Canada's ("The Law Society") public consultation related to challenges faced by racialized licensees and the 13 recommendations contained in the Racialized Licensees Working Group's (the "Working Group") final report, titled Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions.

We applaud the Working Group for their outstanding effort and the thoughtful and detailed presentation of their findings. From the outset, allow me to make it clear that we agree with the assertion that "racialized licensees face widespread barriers within the (legal) profession at all stages of their careers." Through our own research on the legal profession, we have come to a similar conclusion, however it is important to note that there are mitigating factors that have a significant impact on those barriers.

The Canadian Centre for Diversity and Inclusion ("CCDI") has a mission to generate the awareness, dialogue and action for Canadians to recognize diversity as an asset and not an obstacle. Through the research, reports and toolkits we develop and our workshops, events and workplace consultations, we're helping Canadian employers understand their diversity, plan for it and create inclusion.

CCDI's leadership has a proven model that's cultivated trust as an impartial third party. Our expertise is focused on the topics of inclusion that are relevant in Canada now and the regional differences that shape diversity.

A charitable organization that thinks like a business, we have created a niche with our innovative research technology and data analysis that brings a deeper understanding of Canadian diversity demographics and mindsets at any given moment.

In 2014 we developed and launched a project entitled Diversity by the Numbers: The Legal Profession ("DBTN"). This project is an exciting initiative that seeks to better understand the demographic makeup of the Legal Profession in Canada. To date, over thirty law firms across Canada have participated and over 8000 respondents have completed the census.

Overall Commentary

What should be measured?

Benchmarks, goals, and accountabilities.

A primary mandate of The Working Group report is to better understand systemic barriers within the legal profession through collecting Diversity and Inclusion data. In an article that critically assesses the implications of the report<sup>1</sup>, Joanne St. Lewis argues that the methods of addressing these barriers proposed in the report are ineffective because they are applied through codes of professional conduct rather than through “entity regulation.” That is to say, they do not measure and make accountable the workplaces in which these barriers play out.

We agree that effective movement on Diversity and Inclusion issues necessitates accountabilities specific to each firm. However, the question then becomes, what should be measured to expose the barriers firms will be accountable for? The report provides a clear objective to enhance representation of racialized licensees “in proportion to representation of the Ontario population, in the professions, in all legal workplaces and at all levels of seniority.” Irrespective of where accountabilities are placed, The Working Group's approach of analysis at each of these levels will help isolate instances of systemic discrimination. This is because each of these comparisons makes data accountable to the group they are being benchmarked against. However, efforts to counter systemic discrimination become regulated, these levels of data comparison will allow the setting of representation goals.

Focusing on ways to put Diversity and Inclusion into practice in law firms, the report proposes that a fairer culture will be fostered in firms if they are required to have a diversity policy. St. Lewis suggests that, to propel action, their needs to be outside scrutiny. To achieve this, she proposes that all law firms have a diversity strategy that is available to the public. Building on these points, we would further suggest processes surrounding how a diversity policy and strategy are actualized within firms. Initial questions that should be ask to enhance the effectiveness of any diversity strategy include:

- » Has the strategy been linked to a formal business case?
- » Are senior leaders being held accountable, and if so, how?
- » Does the strategy consider diversity in senior leadership appointments?
- » Is the strategy communicated, to and understood by all firm members?

These questions and the actions they stimulate will cast diversity as a genuine priority within an organization's culture rather than a well-intentioned, inactive edict.

Linking demographic and inclusion data.

The Working Group recognizes that analysis of diversity must be complemented by analysis of inclusion, stating that a law firm's diversity performance will be measured through "self-identification data" and "climate data." Throughout the report, specifically in relation to a proposed Inclusion Index, there are references to the measurement of both. However, the report does not specifically state that inclusion survey results will be presented and analyzed through demographic categories, which is vital to isolating specific groups that are feeling excluded.

What is the difference between demographic and inclusion data that is linked and unlinked? To explain the impact linking has on data insights, consider the demographic gender and the inclusion question "everybody at the firm has equal opportunity to advance." Unlinked data can only show the percentage of female, male, and trans-identified respondents and the overall percentage of respondents that agree, are neutral, or disagree with the statement. Linked data will allow you to isolate and compare the rates of agreement or disagreement between females, males, and trans-identified respondents. Understanding the insights you want to draw from the data is necessary before implementing a survey. Any gaps in data collection will limit the potential of the information that is gathered.

Reasons for a focus on Diversity and Inclusion.

The report proposes that Diversity and Inclusion will attract an ever-diversifying talent pool and give firms a competitive advantage in securing clients that request information on their demographic makeup. These statements are true, but do not comment on individual experiences in the workplace and the link these experiences have to business outcomes.

To the report's arguments for why Diversity and Inclusion should be fostered we would add findings from the growing research in this field. The research shows that nurturing diversity as well as inclusion (rather than one or the other) is necessary, and it can substantially increase the engagement of employees.

Research by Deloitte Australia found that strong focus on both can double employee engagement and increase the chances that "an employee is likely to stay with their employer, advocate for their employer and go the extra mile" at work<sup>[2]</sup>. An organization that does not prioritize Diversity and Inclusion is missing out on a truly talented and dedicated workforce. For the more bottom-line-minded audience, the research also shows that a focus on Diversity and Inclusion can increase organizational performance through increased sales, greater market share, and larger relative profits<sup>[3]</sup>.

How should Diversity and Inclusion data be analyzed?

Measuring the association between demographics.

When analyzing categorical demographic data, a methodology we use and recommend is cross-tabulations. Cross-tabulation is the measurement of the association between two variables, and it investigates how much the distribution of one variable differs according to the various levels of another variable. Further, when the goal is uncovering racialized barriers to things like advancement, you can construct cross-tabulations in a way that shows the representation of racialized and non-racialized respondents at different levels of an organization's hierarchy.

Using an example relevant to the legal profession, we can construct a cross-tabulation that measures racial representation by the roles in the Partner track hierarchy (Error! Reference source not found.). A comparison of these role-specific representations to the overall representation of race within a firm provides the contextual evidence needed to uncover barriers to advancement. This benchmarking technique exposes concentrations or omissions of racialized groups along the hierarchy, which can then guide hiring or advancement goals that can be measured over time.

	Racialized	Non-Racialized
OVERALL	127 33.87%	248 66.13%
Equity Partner	12 12.24%	86 87.76%
Income Partner	15 26.32%	42 73.68%
Associate	85 43.15%	112 56.85%
Articling or Summer Student	15 65.22%	8 34.78%

Are the differences significant or is it a product of chance?

To ensure that you are properly assessing an over- or under-representation, statistical techniques like the chi square test of association can be applied. Explained plainly, this test uses cross-tabulated data to see if any concentrations or omissions of groups are outside of the realm of mere chance. These tests of association can answer Diversity and Inclusion questions such as, “do non-racialized respondents have a statistically significant larger representation in Equity Partner roles?” or “do racialized respondents disagree at a statistically significant higher rate with an inclusion question asking if they feel there is equal opportunity to advance?”

Measuring outcomes based on overlapping demographic characteristics.

Up to now we have only suggested ways to analyze representation of one demographic at a time, which is a necessary start to measuring trends in any data set. However, to look only at single demographics is a disservice to the reality that experiences and outcomes vary based on overlapping demographic characteristics. This gap in The Working Group's recommendations was noted by St. Lewis, and she encouraged collecting data on all equality-seeking groups.

We support her in this recommendation - data needs to be collected and analyzed using an intersectional lens. We add to her recommendation methodologies that support an investigation of how multiple identities create unique experiences of discrimination.

Introduce a third demographic to analysis.

We previously mentioned a two-way cross-tabulation and tests of association between variables. If you are taking an intersectional approach, another demographic can be added to the data table to further segment the results to a more diverse subgroup: when race is added as the third variable, a data comparison of female versus male becomes a comparison of racialized female versus non-racialized female and racialized male versus non-racialized male. This analysis can be applied to representation as well as opinion data, as it can be performed on both demographic and inclusion results.

		Senior Level
		Yes	No
Female	Racialized	2 8.70%	21 91.30%
	Non-Racialized	23 40.35%	34 59.65%
Male	Racialized	65 66.33%	33 33.67%
	Non-Racialized	92 66.19%	47 33.81%

A possible application with representation data would be an analysis of the interaction of race and gender on the likelihood of being at the senior level of a firm (Error! Reference source not found.). To do this, we test the association between race and seniority for females, and then males. A potential result would be that there is an association for females but not for males, meaning that the impact of race on career advancement is evident only for females.

The same process can be applied to perception-based data by substituting the senior level variable with agreement versus disagreement to an inclusion survey question. As an example, we will again use the inclusion survey question about equal opportunity to advance in the firm. If you found an association between race and agreement in equal opportunity to advance, you can add the third variable gender to see if the association holds for males and females. The results could show that racialized males showed significantly lower agreement than non-racialized males, suggesting a unique racialized experience for males in their perception of discrimination.

Compare odds of a specific outcome between subgroups.

Odds can be used to understand whether or not there is an association between two personal demographics (race and gender, Indigenous and disability status, sexual orientation and gender) and the likelihood of an outcome. Another method of exploring intersectionality would be comparing the odds

	Senior Level		Odds of being Senior Level
	Yes	No
Non-Racialized Male	92 66.19%	47 33.81%	2:1
Racialized Male	65 66.33%	33 33.67%	2:1
Non-Racialized Female	23 40.35%	34 59.65%	2:3
Racialized Female	2 8.70%	21 91.30%	1:9

of a specific firm-based outcome like being senior level between groups. Once you filter the data to subgroups you could then calculate each of their odds of being senior level versus non-senior level and compare across these subgroups. The potential with this would be ranking the odds from highest to lowest to see a how these demographic combinations are positioned within the hierarchy of the firm.

We appreciate the opportunity to respond to this consultation and hope that this information is valuable. Should you have any questions regarding our submission, please do not hesitate to contact us.

TO: The Law Society of Upper Canada Convocation
FROM: The Canadian Hispanic Bar Association
DATE: November 14, 2016
RE: Submissions on the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Final Report

BACKGROUND

1. The Canadian Hispanic Bar Association (the "CHBA") is a national, non-profit organization representing Hispanic/Latin American lawyers, law students, Articling/LPP students and NCA students.
2. The CHBA was founded in 2005 and was formerly known as the Hispanic Ontario Lawyers Association (HOLA). The CHBA has member representatives in the Roundtable of Diversity Associations (RODA), the Equity Advisory Group (EAG), JusticeNet Ontario and the US National Hispanic Bar Association.
3. The CHBA works to promote diversity within the profession, to increase the number of Hispanic lawyers across Canada and to provide support to its members.
4. In March of 2015, the CHBA responded to the Working Group on the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees interim report by providing submissions to this group as well as participating in the submissions of the Equity Advisory Group.
5. Presently, the CHBA has also participated in EAG's Working Group on the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees in addition to providing its own submissions.

The Law Society Should Vote on the Recommendations as an Omnibus Motion

6. The CHBA submits that all thirteen (13) recommendations contained in the final report should be adopted in their entirety. The CHBA believes that the efficacy of the recommendations will increase if they are implemented together. As such, we do not support the motion to vote on the recommendations on an individual basis. We strongly urge Convocation to accept the recommendations as an omnibus package.
6. The CHBA submits that the recommendations contained in the final report are minimum requirements to create a regulatory framework and culture that is responsive to the varied and systemic needs of racialized licensees.
6. The CHBA also submits that the recommendations represent proposals that are fundamental and basic in nature, and that if needed, can be further expanded or refined in the future, after their implementation has been approved.

Comments on the Recommendations

9. The CHBA adopts and endorses the submissions of the EAG regarding the recommendations contained in the final report.
9. The CHBA agrees that anti-discrimination matters should be aligned with each licensee's professional obligations. It also agrees with the various manners outlined to measure progress, and believes that the collection of data will be a key driver to addressing issues of systemic discrimination while promoting inclusion.
9. For clarity, the CHBA is supportive of the recommended CPD requirement of three (3) hours every two (2) or three (3) years. The CHBA believes that such a requirement is not onerous, and will have a net benefit on the profession.

9. The CHBA strongly supports the further development of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program, as well as the development of alternative streams in which to address complaints.

9. The CHBA recognizes the Law Society as a strong driver in the organizational behaviour and culture of licensees and prospective licensees. As such, it agrees with the proposed changes to the Law Society's own processes and appreciates the Law Society's leadership in this respect.

Implementation Considerations

14. The CHBA strongly supports the motion brought forth by Bencher Joanne St. Lewis and Barbara Murchie to extend, as appropriate, the resulting policies, procedures, measures and initiatives to all equity-seeking groups. In this respect, we further submit that the Law Society should consider all motions from an equity-sensitive perspective as applicable.

15. The CHBA also submits that the Law Society should consult and work with various stakeholders, including the CHBA and other equity seeking legal associations on the implementation of the recommendations.

16. We thank the Working Group for the opportunity to make these submissions and we look forward to working with the Law Society to address the issues raised within the report.

Sincerely,

The CHBA Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group:

Attention: Ekua Quansah, Policy Secretariat

Dear Ms. Quansah,

Re: CCLA comments on the proposed LSUC Motion to approve Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group – Final Report

On behalf of the County of Carleton Law Association (CCLA), the CCLA Diversity Committee thanks you for this opportunity to contribute to the discussion on the Final Report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group, Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions (“the Report”).

The CCLA is Ottawa and Eastern Ontario’s leading association for the professional legal community. It has over 1,598 licensed members from all range of legal practice areas, including paralegals. Close to half of our members practice in firms of 9 licensees or less. While we acknowledge that our legal population is less racialized than the GTA, the racialized licensees in our region often face the same identified challenges but in a more isolated context.<sup>1</sup>

The CCLA Diversity Committee was created to assist the Membership Committee in identifying and determining the overall approach / philosophy that the CCLA should adopt to ensure it is inclusive of the entire legal community that the CCLA serves. Its purpose is to foster a culture of diversity and inclusion in the CCLA by enabling the values and principles of equality and equity in its organizational structure, policies, programs, and services.

We commend the Working Group on the work that has been completed to date. The Report makes thirteen recommendations that, in general, we support. However, the Report is noticeably silent on three key issues and two particular recommendations require a different approach. Before this is brought before Convocation for approval, these topics must be addressed.

We provide comments on the following five areas:

1. Racialized sole practitioners and small firms;
2. Economic vulnerability of racialized licensees;
3. Education and training;
4. Using the DHC as a way to address systemic racism; and
5. Monitoring and accountability.

Several of our suggestions should be accommodated at this time and could be undertaken with reasonable effort; other suggestions are intended to guide the LSUC on its next steps in taking action on the issues of systemic racism and bias within the profession.

COMMENTARY

1. Silence surrounding racialized sole practitioners and small firms

In short, the Report does not comment on this group. Many racialized licensees find themselves practicing in small firms or as sole practitioners; this is largely as a result of their lack of ties within the legal community and systemic racism. The Report addresses remedies for firms with over 25 licensees, but fails to address the sole practitioner and small firms who are already a marginalized group.

According to the LSUC's Statistical Snapshot of Lawyers in Ontario from the Lawyer Annual Report (2014)<sup>2</sup>:

- 24% of racialized lawyers practice as sole practitioners;
- 14% of racialized lawyers are in house counsel; and
- 14% of racialized lawyers are in government.

We further note that 33% of racialized lawyers work in firms of fewer than 5 people; 16% of racialized lawyers are in firms of 5-9 people.<sup>3</sup> Given that 49% of racialized lawyers work in practices of less than 9 people, this group has to be acknowledged in the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees. The Law Society of Upper Canada has this data readily available, therefore, it should be relied upon for the purposes of this Report. The Report fails to address the racism this particular group encounters and ways in which to eliminate the challenges faced by this racialized group.

If the report is approved as it is, we will be essentially failing to address almost half of the racialized lawyers who are encountering various forms of racism within their immediate work environments, the professional organizations they may or may not be a part of, and, within the legal community at large.

2. Economic vulnerability of racialized licensees

The Report does not address the issue of economic barriers for racialized licensees and licensees representing other equity-seeking groups. These begin as economic barriers to the profession and continue on through the licensee's career.

Racialized, first-generation law students, with little or no connections to the profession, often have limited familial financial support to help pay for their legal education. They may already be carrying significant student debt coming into law school. These students rely on government student loans and professional student lines of credit to finance their professional degree. This means that economically-disadvantaged students are graduating with extraordinary debt loads.

This economic stratification is amplified in the licensing process and an ultra-competitive articling system, in which law students vie for a limited number of well-paying articling positions. In order to become licenced, economically-disadvantaged law students may have to choose a low-paying or unpaid articling position with a sole practitioner or small firm or to enroll in the LPP. These low-paid / unpaid articling students and LPP students continue to accumulate debt during the licensing process. Further, licensing fees are the same for all licensing candidates, regardless of articling employer and articling remuneration, or unpaid experiential training through the LPP. These fees become disproportionately onerous when low-paid / unpaid articling students have to pay their licensing fees themselves, while large firms pay for their articling students' licensing fees as standard practice.

These economic barriers continue on after licensing. Whereas articling students at large firms have the opportunity to be hired back, those who articulated with sole practitioners or came through the LPP are more likely to become sole practitioners themselves or stay on at the small firm where they articulated.<sup>4</sup> These new practitioners may continue to rely on bank loans and lines of credit to finance the significant costs of opening a sole practice or contributing to the small practice. As sole practitioners, they must bear alone the regular costs of the profession, including law society fees and insurance premiums, law association membership fees, CPD courses and conference fees, etc.

These licensees juggle: the financial burdens of a sole practice, while attempting to build a client base and business; finding a way to support themselves, while paying off their student debt within a reasonable time; and making the pronounced effort to network and seek out mentorship in order to ameliorate the isolation of sole practice. These factors impede their progression in the profession, and hinder their ability to obtain leadership roles within the legal community or to devote time to volunteer positions or appointments on committees.

The Report must recognize that economic barriers disproportionately affect racialized licensees and that this may represent one of the most significant challenges facing racialized licensees.

3. Education and training

We believe that mandatory education and training are foundational to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees. However, the Report is not clear about what CPD programs would meet the criteria for accreditation and does not explain why three hours every three years is an appropriate benchmark. Developing an understanding of diversity does not flow from an intense one-off kind of event; it comes from an internalization of the issues and challenges by way of regular, ongoing and progressive dialogue that is relevant to our day-to-day ways of thinking and acting. The Report needs to require annual CPD/training as well as other means to demonstrate competence and currency in this area. Perhaps this could be part of a no charge professionalism credit.

---

<sup>4</sup>This is reflected in the 2014 Lawyer Annual Report that showed that 24 percent of racialized respondents were sole practitioners, whereas 19 percent of non-racialized respondents were sole practitioners.

4. Problematic use of the DHC as a way to address systemic racism

While a review of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (“DHCP”) is laudable, the LSUC should avoid tampering with the complete confidentiality and privacy that complainants currently enjoy. The small numbers of racialized licensees in particular locations make it difficult to remain anonymous should a complaint be acted upon or become public. If the sharing of a discriminatory experience automatically led to a formal investigation or complaint (and how would a particular licensee know they would be hitting a “threshold”), then this would undermine the confidence and trust that has been the key to the DHCP’s current ability to support racialized licensees.

5. Monitoring and Accountability

The Report should address monitoring and accountability. As we have seen from the limited progress made on similar past recommendations on this topic<sup>5</sup>, if there is no ongoing monitoring and reporting on progress, then action is simply not taken. With the evidence before us, we know that the identified challenges are longstanding, ongoing and increasing. There needs to be accountability processes built into the Recommendations right from the start.

One way that this could be done is through having the LSUC produce an annual report card on what progress has been made on each of the Recommendations. This report card should be reviewed by a committee of benchers but also include other stakeholders.

INTERSECTIONAL ISSUES

Amongst other issues that require further attention, we note that at page 4 of the Report, the Engagement Process Results identified the issue of additional intersecting experiences of discrimination, however the Report does not address this topic. The next phase should encompass an in-depth analysis and clear recommendations on intersectional issues.

CONCLUSION

Although this Report has been long anticipated and many in the profession are ready to act, it behooves us to step forward with the best foot we can. We are not advocating a complete rewrite of the Report, but believe that the Report should and could be modified within a reasonable timeframe.

On behalf of the CCLA, we urge you to consider expanding the scope, making some modifications and, ultimately, capitalizing on the impact of the Recommendations.

We thank you for your time and consideration of this submission.

Yours very truly,

Dear Members of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group:

Re: Submission by the Federation of Asian Canadian Lawyers on *Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions

The Federation of Asian Canadian Lawyers (“FACL”) is pleased to comment on the recommendations outlined in the Law Society of Upper Canada’s (“Law Society”) Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees’ (“CFRL”) Working Group Final Report – Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions (“Final Report”).

As you are aware, FACL is a diverse coalition of Asian Canadian legal professionals working to promote equity, justice, and opportunity for Asian Canadian legal professionals and the wider community, and to foster advocacy, community involvement, legal scholarship, and professional development. FACL is a key stakeholder in this initiative and has long supported and contributed to the crucial work of this group. FACL applauds the efforts of the CFRL Working Group, the Final Report, and its recommendations.

FACL is of the view that the recommendations represent a critical step in the right direction towards addressing the challenges faced by racialized licensees. As such,

FACL urges the immediate adoption of these recommendations as an omnibus package by Convocation on December 2, 2016. The time to act is now.

FACL supports the Final Report's recommendations individually and categorically. A change in culture and attitudes in our profession is overdue and the recommended educational, policy, and regulatory measures will assist in accelerating this culture shift. FACL looks forward to working with the Law Society and other stakeholders in developing appropriate policies, practices, and resources aimed at addressing the many gaps and barriers encountered by racialized licensees.

FACL especially supports the regulated collection, analysis, and publication of demographic data as a means of measuring progress. This will enhance transparency and accountability in the legal profession's efforts to improve access to and public confidence in Ontario's legal profession, which is a necessary part of ensuring that all licensees have an equal chance of success in this profession.

FACL is encouraged by the consideration of progressive compliance measures but standards are only meaningful if they are enforceable and only effective if they are enforced. There must be real consequences for non-compliance and FACL looks forward to seeing the form and substance of such compliance measures as they evolve from this process.

FACL is pleased that the Law Society is taking a leadership role by internally promoting diversity, inclusion, and equality. FACL also strongly supports the recommendation to strengthen and better equip the Law Society's Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program to address complaints of systemic discrimination.

As FACL has previously commented, the challenges faced by women, Indigenous, LGBTQ, and disabled licensees intersect with those faced by racialized lawyers and paralegals. These issues should not be compartmentalized or separated. Thus, FACL is hopeful that the implementation process of the recommendations will situate race in an appropriate context and not in isolation from the intersecting challenges faced by all equity-seeking groups.

Accordingly, FACL supports the motion by Bencher Murchie to ensure that the recommendations herein are appropriately extended to all equality-seeking group and urges Convocation to pass this motion.

Historically, the voices of racialized communities in Ontario have been appropriated by having others speak for us. To maintain legitimacy, racialized licensees need a voice in the implementation of these recommendations. FACL believes that the dialogue initiated by this process must be continued by having all stakeholders meaningfully and regularly engaged throughout the process of implementing the recommendations.

Thank you for considering our comments. Should you have any questions about this matter, we would be happy to discuss this with you further.

Sincerely,

"The Voice of the Practising Lawyer in Ontario"

Dear Working Group Members,

The Federation of Ontario Law Associations ("FOLA") commends the Law Society of Upper Canada in attempting to develop a concrete framework to recognize and address the challenges that are faced by racialized licensees throughout Ontario. The pragmatic approach and timeline suggested within the report illustrate an understanding by the Working Group of the time necessary to effect meaningful change moving forward.

FOLA notes, however, that while the Working Group's mandate (established in 2012) focused only on racialized licensees, this restricted mandate, in and of itself, creates unnecessary barriers and limitations. Since 2012, a greater societal understanding of other disadvantaged groups including gender identity, gender expression, disability, sexual orientation, class and creed creates a need to ensure that these other groups are not left behind as we move forward with the Working Group's recommendations. This proposed expansion would acknowledge the broad range of human rights issues which exist while not precluding the possibility of variations or focussed initiatives for certain groups where appropriate. It would also take into account the intersectionality issues associated with discrimination. FOLA therefore would propose that, as any recommendations move forward through development and implementation, the mandate of the Working Group expand beyond racialized licensees to include all areas of potential discrimination.

The expansion of mandate set out above would only require a slight adjustment to the three objectives stated by the Working Group. The objectives would become:

- a) Inclusive legal workplaces in Ontario
- b) Reduction of barriers created by unconscious bias and discrimination; and
- c) Better representation of all minority groups in proportion to the representation in the Ontario population, in the professions, in all legal workplaces and at all levels of seniority..

The public needs to trust the legal profession. A profession that does not reflect the diversity of the public creates both real and perceived barriers and there is no reason to break down these barriers one group at a time.

FOLA is also very mindful of the parallel mandates of the Law Society to promote access to justice and to protect the public interest. In that context, FOLA is very aware of the economic costs to the practice of law in Ontario and of the struggle that some practising lawyers – particularly those in marginalized communities – engage in every day to remain economically viable. Whether they are marginalized by geography or the economic situation of the clients they choose to represent, there are many lawyers in Ontario for whom it is a daily struggle to maintain an economically viable legal business.

Since FOLA's mandate is primarily as an advocate for the interests of the practising lawyer – the majority of whom are in sole and small practice in Ontario – a good deal of our commentary is coming from this perspective. These comments are not, however, only concerned with the "cost" of implementing these recommendations. They are also mindful of the fact that many of the racialized or otherwise marginalized licensees entering the practice are working in solo or small practice and, in turn, serve minority populations that can often be economically disadvantaged in communities across Ontario. These economic pressures are, in our view, some of the greatest barriers to full equity. A key component to realizing the goal of equity in our profession is to make the practice of law and access to law more affordable to more people.

With that in mind, we contend that one of the most important ways the Law Society of Upper Canada can promote equity and access is to be ever mindful of the costs it imposes or has an influence on. Every regulatory mandate and licensing procedure has a cost and this cost should be kept as low as possible. CPD programming must be kept affordable and the operations of the Law Society, in general, must be constantly evaluated with a view to keeping costs down. Likewise, the Law Society should join others in the profession to maintain or increase pressure on law schools across the country to make law school more affordable and access to financial assistance less burdensome on practitioners in their early years of practice..

FOLA's position on the Recommendations made by the Working Group

FOLA agrees with Recommendations 1, 3, 8, 10, 12 and 13 without the need for further comment.

Recommendation 2 and 11

FOLA would appreciate the opportunity to work with the Law Society to develop policies to address the challenges licensees face through bias and discrimination. Our Executive Board has taken note that within the leadership of our member law associations, there is an apparent underrepresentation of lawyers who come from minority populations. While we cannot dictate the complement of our members' leadership structure, FOLA is committed to assisting the Law Society in effecting change at the ground level with the hope that this will create future change in the leadership of the profession. To that end, our Executive Board is more mindful of the need to recruit from minority populations to stand for Executive Board positions and we have implemented the practice of having at least one speaker from an equity-seeking bar association join our bi-annual Plenary meetings. These are small steps to be sure, but we think they are important and we are encouraging more of our members to do the same.

We also view the local associations and their Practice Resource Centres as a terrific conduit for the development of policies, the dissemination of information and the promotion of equity. A very large, but often overlooked, part of the mandate of our local associations is the promotion of collegiality and mentorship among the profession. This collegiality and relationship building cannot be underestimated in its ability to break down barriers and promote cross-cultural understanding. The primary user of the courthouse library is often a sole or small firm practitioner – the most likely current firm structure of minority licensees. Law Associations and the Practice Resource Centre staff are in the unique position of knowing these licensees, knowing potential mentors and providing a forum for mentorship, networking and collaboration. Further, the Law Association lounges in county courthouses across Ontario are places where all licensees should feel welcome and should find a colleague who is willing to help, consult or simply "shoot the breeze" fostering ongoing relationships. Likewise, it is critical that our local associations reach out to racialized and other minority populations for candid internal conversations to implement policies that removes all possible barriers. As such, in considering resources available to address the challenges faced by these licensees, FOLA considers our courthouse Practice Resource Centres (known in the past as libraries) to be a key component to this effort. In fact, we would argue that further investments in Practice Resource Centres will further assist racialized and other minority licensees to build sustainable legal practices.

Recommendation 4, 5, 6, and 7

It is FOLA's belief that in providing these recommendations, the Working Group has acknowledged the need for evidence based decision making. We believe this is a key precondition to any analysis by the Law Society when considering imposing further regulation on the profession.

Recommendation 9

FOLA does not disagree with the suggestion that there is value in CPD programs on equality and inclusion. We would however caution that any requirement for specific CPD courses recognize limitations for practitioners in the North or other parts of rural Ontario who cannot always access streamed CPD. In this regard, and to reiterate the point made above, the Practice Resource Centre network across Ontario can be an important, and inexpensive, conduit for the dissemination of this information and training. We suggest that these materials be made available through the Practice Resource Centres, and that the program be available for distribution in other formats for those practicing in remote locations.

Thank you for the opportunity to provide these submissions. We look forward to further dialogue and to standing with the Law Society and all of our colleagues across the legal profession in moving toward a goal of equity and inclusion.

RE: Submission by the Indigenous Advisory Group in response to Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions

---

The Indigenous Advisory Group was provided with a copy of the Final Report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group delivered to the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee. While Indigenous lawyers and paralegals were not included in the consultant or community engagement processes, we understand the findings of widespread barriers experienced by racialized licensees within the profession at all stages of their careers. The report provided, in summary form, some examples of the experiences faced in the legal profession including discrimination, negotiating concepts of "culture" and "fit", lack of mentors, networks and role models; we believe many of these same experiences are shared by Indigenous lawyers and paralegals.

As the report so aptly states, "the Law Society of Upper Canada has a duty to maintain and advance the cause of justice and the rule of law, to facilitate access to justice for the people of Ontario and to protect the public interest. The Law Society is committed to adhering to its obligations under the Human Rights Code".

All licensees should be committed to eliminating harassment and discrimination in the profession; however, the current experiences relayed by respondents during this consultation may run at odds to the very standard we are held to protect.

The Indigenous Advisory Group supports the implementation of the Report's recommendations by the Law Society staff as overseen by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee and is prepared to assist wherever necessary. To this end, we will be working with EAIC to articulate how the 7 Sacred Teachings of wisdom; love; respect; bravery; honesty; humility and truth must be practiced together to restore balance.

In our view, these teachings provide a framework through which all actions of the Law Society must be viewed and applied.

Respectfully,

Kathleen Lickers on behalf of
The Indigenous Advisory Group

Re: Response to the Working Group Final Report, *Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions

---

The Indigenous Bar Associations (IBA) would like to take this opportunity to thank the Law Society of Upper Canada's Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee for their initiative and dedication in completing this essential Final Report. The IBA appreciates the time expended by the Committee in addition to their comments and suggestions to continue to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees. In support of the Working Group Final Report the IBA provides the following comments.

Recommendation 1 – Reinforcing Professional Obligations

The IBA supports the recommendation of the Law Society to amend the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, and Commentaries to reinforce the professional obligations of all licensees to recognize, acknowledge and promote principles of equality, diversity and inclusion consistent with the requirements under human rights legislation and the special responsibilities of licensees in the legal and paralegal professions.

Due to the history and intergenerational impacts of colonialism, legislated assimilationist policies and Indian Residential Schools, Indigenous licensees face many complicated challenges due to the historic disadvantages that tend to be perpetuated by the status quo inherent in the legal system. In addressing these challenges LSUC is encouraged to employ an approach that addresses both the unique and collective challenges as well as the individual challenges facing Indigenous licensees. The IBA requests that the Law Society make specific mention of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's Final Report and the requirement to address “reconciliation” between Indigenous and non-Indigenous Peoples.

Recommendations 4 to 7 (Collection of Data and Qualitative, Quantitative Analysis)

The collection of demographic data to identify racialized licensees is essential to addressing the issue of systemic discrimination. It is difficult to address the issue without the data to support the numbers and analytical trends. The IBA requests that this essential data be posted as it becomes available.

Recommendation 9 – Continuing Professional Development (CPD) Programs on Topics of Equality and Inclusion in the Professions

The IBA recommends that in developing continuing professional development programs on Equality and Inclusion special consideration be given to the unique challenges faced by Indigenous licensees, including remote access, and financial considerations for mandatory fees and materials.

Recommendation 10 – The Licensing Process

Please see the above noted comments with respect to Recommendation 1 – Reinforcing Professional Obligations in considering to include the topics of cultural competency, equality and inclusion in the profession as competencies as part of the Licensing Process.

Recommendation 11 – Building Communities of Support

The Law Society recommendation to provide support to racialized licensees through mentoring and networking initiatives was highlighted by the IBA as a key priority in its consultation submissions. It is important for the success of Indigenous licensees to connect and associate with other Indigenous law students and licensees. To the extent that its resources permit the IBA encourages the Law Society to seek its assistance in providing opportunities for Indigenous licensees to network with Indigenous law students, licensees, academics and judges and other members of the IBA.

The IBA also requests the Law Society undertake efforts towards monitoring the success of all mentoring and networking initiatives for racialized licensees and identify any improvements.

EQUITY INITIATIVES DEPARTMENT

TO: Members of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group

FROM: Members of the Equity Advisory Group Working Group

DATE: November 14, 2016

RE: Submission by the Equity Advisory Group Working Group in response to Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions

---

Members of the Equity Advisory Group (“EAG”) Working Group have carefully considered the thirteen recommendations presented in the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group Final Report (“final report”), Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions. The following document offers general comments on the final report as well as comments specific to some recommendations.

Background

1. EAG represents the diverse interests of lawyers and paralegals who identify as a member of one or more equity-seeking groups. EAG, through its organizational and individual members, is actively involved in the advancement of equity and inclusion within the legal professions with respect to gender, sexual orientation, gender identity, language, ability, religion, and most relevant to these submissions, race.

2. EAG's mandate includes commenting on Law Society reports and studies relating to equity issues and access to justice within the profession. EAG is of the view that the Report dated September 22 ought to be considered from an equity and diversity lens, access to justice, and the Law Society's mandate to protect the public interest.
3. EAG supports an approach that advances access to justice and protection of the public interest for equity seeking clients, while ensuring the regulatory balance struck does not disproportionately impact licensees from equity seeking groups, where it is unnecessary to protect the public interest.
4. The commitment of the EAG Working Group to the Challenged Faced by Racialized Licensees report has spanned two terms of Law Society Benchers as well as EAG members. The Working Group is currently comprised of the following individual and organizational members:
  - a. Tahlee Afzal, individual member;
  - b. Ranjan Agarwal, on behalf of the South Asian Bar Association;
  - c. Sharan Basran, individual member;
  - d. Maureen Bennett Henry, on behalf of the Canadian Association of Black Lawyers;
  - e. Gerald Chan, on behalf of the Federation of Asian Canadian Lawyers;
  - f. Gordon Cudjoe, on behalf of the Canadian Association of Black Lawyers;
  - g. Imtenan El-Razik, on behalf of the Canadian Association of Muslim Women in Law;
  - h. Lai-King Hum, on behalf of the Roundtable of Diversity Associations;
  - i. Leonard Kim, individual member;

- j. Ayesha Laldin, on behalf of the Women's Law Association of Ontario;
  - k. Sandra Lozano, on behalf of the Canadian Hispanic Bar Association;
  - l. Jennifer Quito, on behalf of the Canadian Hispanic Bar Association;
  - m. Paul Saguil, individual member;
  - n. Jason Tam, individual member; and
  - o. Joyce Tam, on behalf of the Federation of Asian Canadian Lawyers.
5. The EAG Working Group agreed to provide written submissions to the CFRL Working Group in response to the final report. The EAG Working Group provides submissions that focus on what the Law Society of Upper Canada proposes to do to remove barriers faced by racialized licensees in the legal profession.
6. The EAG Working Group submits its written feedback to the CFRL Working Group for its consideration, in preparation for the decision before Convocation on December 2, 2016.

Unequivocal Consensus among all EAG Working Group Members

7. There is unequivocal consensus among all EAG Working Group members that the thirteen recommendations should be approved in their entirety. The EAG Working Group urges the Law Society to vote on and approve the thirteen recommendations in the final report as an omnibus package at Convocation. The EAG Working Group is not supportive of the motion brought forward by Benchers Sidney Troister and Jeffrey Lem to vote on each recommendation on an individual basis. The challenges faced by racialized licensees must be addressed in a multi-faceted way that will be best achieved through the approval of all thirteen recommendations as an omnibus package.

8. The EAG Working Group is unanimous in its recommendation that the Executive Summary in the final report should include a reference to section 15(1) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.<sup>1</sup> An example of the included reference is below:

“The Working Group has concluded that prescribing minimum standards of equality, diversity and inclusion are consistent with the human rights responsibilities of the profession — obligations constitutionally enshrined in the *Charter of Canadian Rights and Freedoms, and already required by the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct and, more generally, the Human Rights Code.”

...

“In fulfilling its mandate, the Law Society integrates equality and diversity values and principles into all of its policies, practices and programs while upholding the spirit and letter of the law of equality rights outlined in the *Charter.”

Approving all Recommendations is a Necessary First Step

9. There is consensus among all EAG Working Group members that the approval of all recommendations is a basic, minimum first step that is required to begin to address and improve accessibility to and advancement within the legal professions for racialized licensees.
10. These thirteen recommendations work together to address the systemic issues faced by racialized licensees. Their interplay and resultant effects lay the foundation for initiatives that can begin to ameliorate systemic issues of race within the profession. Voting on each recommendation, one by one, will diminish their full impact and restrict how they can and must work together to create practical change.

11. The approval of all thirteen recommendations is urgent. This is not only fundamental to creating a more inclusive profession, but it is an action that is long overdue.
12. Considering the range of stakeholders that are represented by and actively involved in EAG, the EAG Working Group's inclusion in the future implementation of these recommendations is important and necessary, if the final report is approved at Convocation on December 2, 2016. The EAG Working Group is supportive of the motion brought forward by Benchers Barbara Murchie and Joanne St. Lewis to extend, as appropriate, the resulting policies, procedures, measures and initiatives to all equity-seeking groups, with the caveat that the Law Society must consider whether further consultation is required for the application in a manner that is responsive to the specific needs of a particular community.

Recommendation-Specific Comments by Theme

Accelerating Culture Shift: Recommendations 1 to 3

13. Although these recommendations are basic requirements, the EAG Working Group believes there is a need to identify these issues to address equality and anti-discrimination in alignment with each licensee's duty to fulfill their professional obligations. Aligning these principles with one's professional responsibilities requires each licensee to develop a sensitivity and an awareness of these issues. Each licensee will then have the capacity and responsibility to act according to these basic principles.
14. These are a minimum requirement that are important and necessary to deal with issues in a proactive manner.

Measuring Progress: Recommendations 4 to 8

15. EAG Working Group members suggest that the active gathering of this data will highlight to the profession that issues of diversity and inclusion remain a top priority for the Law Society.
16. EAG Working Group members identify the need for statistical information regarding the demographic composition of legal workplaces. EAG Working Group members agree that the Law Society mandate demographic data reporting and agree that this information should be publicly available.
17. The members of the EAG Working Group note that the Law Society already collects demographic information from licensees through the Lawyer Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report. The Law Society also has information regarding where licensees are employed. The Law Society could produce this information if legal workplaces are not willing to do so.
18. EAG Working Group members believe that legal workplaces should also track the progression of students and licensees within their workplaces, from the articling student level to the partner/managerial level. Demographic data should also include information that would indicate the number of members of different equity-seeking groups in various positions in legal workplaces – i.e. students, associates, and partners. This may help legal workplaces identify any issues that may exist with retention and may provide some insight as to why there may be a lack of representation of racialized groups. In the same vein, it is suggested that when licensees change their status with the Law Society, the form they are required to fill out should include a question as to why the licensee changed their status. This would assist in tracking retention and progression.

19. The EAG Working Group suggests that the Law Society continue to collect demographic data from licensees through the Lawyers Annual Report (LAR) and the Paralegal Annual Report (PAR). The Law Society should provide a clear explanation as to why licensees are being asked to provide demographic data and how the collected data will be used.
20. The Law Society could publicly report aggregate demographic data based on legal workplace size and region. The Law Society could then provide legal workplaces with their own demographic data and the Law Society could require legal workplaces to comment on their diversity statistics in light of the standards and resources they have adopted.

Educating for Change: Recommendations 9 to 10

21. The EAG Working Group agrees that cultural competency, equality and inclusion as competencies are basic job traits in today's legal profession. These are required qualities and measurement of professionalism for new lawyers that hope to effectively serve a diverse population in Ontario.
22. The EAG Working Group supports the CPD requirement of three hours every 2-3 years. This recommendation amounts to a net amount of 1 hour of CPD programs per year.

Implementing Supports: Recommendations 11 to 12

23. The EAG Working Group suggests that, despite much success, there is much work to do to develop the complaints process. The re-assessment of the function, processes and structure of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC) would be prudent considering the dynamic nature of this ongoing challenge in the legal profession. Furthermore, amending where necessary, the Rules of Professional Conduct and Paralegal Rules of Conduct is an important part of the review process in order to enable the Law Society to have the necessary tools to follow through.

24. Creative ways to address complaints and the formation of specialized teams to address complaints of discrimination (and systemic discrimination) may promote a mature and measured response to situations of discrimination or harassment that have the potential to be effectively addressed.

The Operations of the Law Society of Upper Canada: Recommendation 13

25. The EAG Working Group suggests that, by following through with this recommendation, the Law Society will add credibility to the process and to the profession. The Law Society will be in a position to gain a firsthand understanding of the advantages and limitations in fulfilling the full recommendations.

Conclusion

26. The EAG Working Group is united and absolute in its support for the approval of all thirteen recommendations in the report, Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions. The approval of these recommendations lay the foundation to initiate vital and long overdue policies and programs that advance the profession in the direction of equity, diversity and inclusion.
27. The EAG Working Group views the approval of these recommendations as a moment that could have a positive and profound impact on other equity-seeking groups. If these thirteen recommendations are approved at Convocation, the EAG Working Group urges the Law Society to extend, as appropriate, the resulting policies, procedures, measures and initiatives to all equity-seeking groups, with the caveat that the Law Society must consider whether further consultation is required for the application in a manner that appropriately addresses the specific needs of a particular community.

28. To summarize, EAG's unanimous position is outlined in the three following points:
- (i) The thirteen recommendations outlined in the final report should be voted on and approved as an omnibus package at Convocation on December 2, 2016;
  - (ii) The EAG Working Group is not supportive of the motion brought forward by Benchers Sidney Troister and Jeffrey Lem to vote on each recommendation on an individual basis; and,
  - (iii) The EAG Working Group is supportive of the motion brought forward by Benchers Barbara Murchie and Joanne St. Lewis to extend, as appropriate, the resulting policies, procedures, measures and initiatives to all equity-seeking groups, provided that the Law Society must consider whether further consultation is required to make these extensions in a manner that is responsive to the specific needs of equity-seeking communities on a case-by-case basis.

Re: Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions

Legal Aid Ontario congratulates the Law Society and the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee on its report "Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions". We support the goals of the report and the general framework established to support greater diversity and inclusion of racialized licensees within the legal profession. We would welcome an opportunity to meet with the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee and staff of the Law Society to discuss the report. As one of the largest employer of licensees, many of whom we are proud to say are from racialized communities, we would also like to extend an offer to work with the Law Society and the Committee to consider how Legal Aid Ontario can effectively implement the actions recommended in the report.

We wish you success on the consideration of the report by Convocation on December 2nd and look forward to hearing from you.

Yours truly,

Legal Leaders for Diversity and Inclusion (LLD) is an organization of General Counsel from across Canada which supports a more inclusive legal profession in Canada. In just over 5 years, our organization has grown to over 100 General Counsel from across Canada and across many business sectors. Thank you for providing us with the opportunity to respond to the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group Final Report titled “Working together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Profession” (“Final Report”).

We want to express our support for measures which create a more inclusive legal profession. Though it is difficult to comment on the right approach to be taken for law firms, we thought it might be helpful to the Law Society of Upper Canada to have the benefit of our insights on what LLD members are doing with respect to this issue in order to remove barriers faced by racialized lawyers in Ontario.

We believe that true and effective change within the legal profession will only come about through collaboration and cooperation. The LLD has created and supported a number of inclusive initiatives. Many of these are aligned with the recommendations found in the Final Report. These initiatives include:

- Building a relationship with LFDIN: One of LLD’s early successes was a collective ask to our external counsel community that they consider how the external bar could promote and support diversity and inclusiveness initiatives. The law firms answered with the Law Firm Diversity and Inclusiveness Network (“LFDIN”), which currently has 35 law firm members that have agreed to work together to promote diversity and encourage a culture of inclusion within their firms and within the broader legal profession.
- Mentorship Programs: LLD and the LFDIN established a formal Mentoring Program to match LFDIN member firm associate lawyers, who self-identify as being from groups that have been traditionally under-represented in the legal profession, with lawyers from LLD member organizations who have 10 or more years’ experience. At its core, is our belief that mentoring can help create an ‘equal playing field’ for lawyers who are from diverse backgrounds.
- Legal Programs: LLD members are also involved in programs such as Law in Action within Schools (LAWS) (sponsored by the University of Toronto Law School), the Internationally Trained Lawyers Program (ITLP) for foreign qualified lawyers, and other diversity focused organizations. All of these organizations provide access, exposure and opportunity for students and lawyers of diverse backgrounds. LLD members participate.

- Scholarship Support: LLD (supported by the LFDIN) established the Legal Leaders for Diversity Trust Fund to annually provide scholarships for law students with disabilities who are studying at Canadian law schools. In addition to this, an LLD scholarship was established for an in house lawyer with disabilities to attend the Canadian Corporate Counsel Association/Rotmans In House Counsel certification program.
- Indigenous Peoples, Laws, Reconciliation & Practice introductory CLE program: LLD is the driving force behind the First Nations Initiative which will be a CLE accredited program that will be used not only by General Counsel, but by many others as a core educational tool on Indigenous law.
- Affinity Relationships: The success of LLD also lies in the group's spirit of cooperation and sharing, and the power of collaborating with other organizations and speaking and participating on diversity related issues. By working together in this manner, we can best support each other and grow and learn together.

LLD supports initiatives which develop and advance our common objective of achieving a diverse and inclusive legal profession. The profession is being challenged within Canada and globally and law schools and law societies must take steps to make our profession globally competitive and reflective of the population in our communities. We believe that creating a more diverse legal profession in Canada will play a role in creating that competitive advantage.

We applaud the focus of the Law Society of Upper Canada on this important issue.

A Statement of Support for Diversity and Inclusion by General Counsel in Canada

We commit to promoting a diverse and inclusive workplace. We value the range of perspectives, ideas and experiences that diversity provides, whether grounded in gender, race, the spectrum of sexual orientation and gender identity, disability, cultural background, religion, economic position or age.

We believe diversity and inclusion create a broader, richer environment that enhances creative thinking, innovation and problem solving. Inclusive organizations attract and retain top talent.

We will therefore encourage greater diversity and inclusion in our own law departments, businesses and co-operate to foster these same values throughout the legal profession and the larger Canadian business community.

We undertake to practice and advance diversity and inclusion by:

- Promoting diversity within our own departments;
- Considering diversity in our hiring and purchasing practices;
- Working with Canadian law firms, law schools and others to advance these values;
- Promoting diversity initiatives at all levels in the legal and business community;
- Measuring the effectiveness of our efforts.

We, as advocates for diversity and inclusion, will demonstrate our commitment through specific actions including one or more of the "Be an Advocate" initiatives.

Comments on the Working Together for Change Report: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Profession

Submitted by Metro Toronto Chinese & Southeast Asian Legal Clinic

INTRODUCTION

The Metro Toronto Chinese & Southeast Asian Legal Clinic (MTCSALC) is a community based legal clinic which provides free legal services to low income Chinese, Vietnamese, Cambodian, and Laotian communities in the Greater Toronto Area. Established in 1987, MTCSALC has served thousands of immigrants and racialized members of the aforementioned communities.

The following are our comments and recommendations on the Law Society of Upper Canada's Working Together for Change Report ("Report").

COMMENTS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Addressing Systemic Racism Through a Holistic Approach

We fully endorse all 13 recommendations proposed by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee ("Committee") to achieve the stated objectives of inclusive legal workplaces, reduction of barriers created by racism, and better representation of racialized licensees in all legal workplaces and at all levels of seniority.

We stress the importance of adopting a holistic approach in achieving these overarching objectives. Systemic racism is a complex and multifaceted issue which takes on many forms. There is no singular manifestation of systemic racism in legal workplaces and consequently no single solution. The varied nature of systemic racism necessitates a holistic response. As such, we submit that all 13 recommendations should be adopted together as they complement and reinforce the overall scheme to reduce racial barriers and achieve equity in legal workplaces. From our perspective, the 13 recommendations collectively tackle the issue of systemic racism from different fronts:

- Recommendations 1 (reinforcing professional obligations), 9 (continuing professional development), and 10 (licensing process) engrain and reinforce the principles of equality and inclusion for current and future licensees.
- Recommendations 2 (diversity and inclusion project), 3 (adoption of diversity and inclusion practices), and 11 (building communities of support) create and maintain practices for eliminating barriers to racialized licensees.
- Recommendations 4 and 5 (measuring progress through quantitative and qualitative analysis), 6 (inclusion index), and 7 (racialized licensees project inclusion survey) create a process for gathering data to measure the effectiveness of the recommended substantive practices and publicizing the results.

- Recommendations 8 (progressive compliance measures) and 12 (addressing complaints of systemic discrimination) create and strengthen compliance measures to address non-conformity with the recommendations.
- Recommendation 13 reaffirms the leading role and responsibility that the Law Society of Upper Canada has in implementing the aforementioned recommendations.

We submit that each set of recommendations complement each other and form an intertwined web of diversity and inclusion strategies. The removal of any strand from the web through partial or non-adoption of any of the 13 recommendations would seriously undermine the effectiveness of all recommendations and the viability of the overarching objectives.

Publication of Inclusion Index, Progressive Compliance, and Complaints of Systematic Discrimination

As noted by the Committee, the publication of an inclusion index would allow legal workplaces to demonstrate their performance and progress by providing a transparent measure to prospective clients and licensees. We believe that this transparency is crucial in achieving the goals of the Report and to further encourage and reinforce diversity and inclusion practices within larger legal workplaces.

Compliance measures and investigation of complaints is a core responsibility of regulatory bodies and an integral part of ensuring adherence to prescribed rules and practices. We are supportive of progressive compliance measures and submit that immediate consultation should commence on the structure of specific measures once the Committee's recommendations are adopted.

Furthermore, we are in favor of an individual complaint process through a specialized professional regulation team as it would provide nuanced redress on an individual level from staff members of the Law Society of Upper Canada with expertise in discrimination complaints in the legal workplace context.

CONCLUSION

We ask the Law Society's Board of Directors to fully adopt all 13 recommendations in the Report as a cohesive whole and consider and incorporate these perspectives in the Convocation Decision.

The Law Society of Upper Canada
c/o Ekua Quansah, Policy Counsel
Osgoode Hall, 130 Queen Street West
Toronto, Ontario
M5H 2N6

Dear Ekua Quansah,

The Ministry of the Attorney General (MAG) is pleased with the opportunity to provide comments on the Law Society of Upper Canada (LSUC)'s final report on Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions. The Working Group's final report reflects a comprehensive approach, broad consultation and thoughtful analysis on the experiences of Racialized licensees and on how to identify and remove barriers to their inclusion and equal participation at all career stages. I commend the licensees and organizations who have shared their experiences and the LSUC's Working Group for this important report.

As you may know, the ministry made oral remarks to the Working Group in May 2015, and a written submission in November 2015. We highlighted diversity and inclusion initiatives of the ministry and the Ontario Public Service (OPS) including the policies and procedures in place, the compilation of an Inclusion Index through the OPS' Employee Engagement Survey, and the release of the OPS Anti-Racism Action Plan. In addition, as noted on page 13 of your final report, the OPS has created the Anti-Racism Directorate which will provide guidance to the OPS on addressing racism.

Since that time, the OPS has continued to implement further measures including:

- A review of both the OPS policy and program on workplace discrimination and harassment resulting in a new updated policy, the Respectful Workplace Policy that was effective September 1, 2016
- Collection of diversity data on senior executives through the Leadership Profile Data Collection pilot project
- Collection of data on interns through the Ontario Internship Program Applicant Survey.

In addition to the corporate initiatives identified above, the ministry is continuing to explore a variety of new initiatives including:

- A pilot of a roster of managers and subject matter experts to support diverse hiring panels
- A community outreach event to familiarize legal professionals from under-represented groups with the types of legal positions available in the Ontario Public Service
- A review of barriers in ministry hiring processes and practices.

As a ministry, we continue to focus our efforts on identifying and removing barriers in our workplace and on promoting greater diversity and cultivating an even more inclusive organization.

We recognize that the OPS is only one of a very diverse range of organizations that employ licensees, each of which are at various points on the inclusion continuum. Many of the recommendations in the final report will ensure the LSUC provides essential support to both licensees and organizations through CPD programs, clarifying professional obligations, collecting aggregate demographic data on the profession, and supporting mentoring and networking programs.

As part of our comments, we note the following points for consideration by the LSUC:

- Some recommendations, as drafted, appear to include requirements that may impact on governments and private organizations as employers of licensees (this potential impact is noted in footnote 7 of the report). At present it is difficult to determine whether the LSUC would have jurisdiction to regulate government and in-house legal departments as “legal workplaces” because the specific requirements of the Report’s proposed mandatory human rights policy/diversity policy have not yet been determined. In any event, given the fact that MAG shares the same goals as the LSUC on this matter, we do not find it necessary to express a view on this aspect of the Report.
- There may also be a need to consider the complexity of implementation of specific requirements. For example, all employees of an organization, including licensees, are usually subject to the same employer policies and initiatives.
- Some organizations may already have similar obligations as those proposed in the final report under the Federal Employment Equity Act and the Legislated Employment Equity Program, or under the Federal Contractors Program; programs which promote equitable representation for women, Aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities and members of visible minorities. Other organizations, as noted in the final report, have voluntarily implemented policies, training, and initiatives on diversity, inclusion or anti-racism that would potentially be duplicated by the proposed LSUC requirements.
- Given the diversity of organizations that employ licensees, there may not be a “one size fits all” approach but rather a need for a flexible approach that focuses on progress for each organization.

The Ontario Public Service and the Ministry of the Attorney General are committed to continuing efforts to identify, remove and prevent barriers to Racialized licensees in the Ontario Public Service. As a ministry, we look forward to working with the LSUC and other organizations where licensees work, to identify how we can each do our part to address the lived experience of Racialized licensees in the context of our own workplaces; for the benefit of the legal profession and society at large.

Thank you again for your strong effort and focus on this issue and for the opportunity for our ministry to provide comments.

Yours truly,

Patrick Monahan
Deputy Attorney General

Introduction

The Ontario Bar Association (“OBA”) appreciates the opportunity to comment on issues raised in the Law Society of Upper Canada (“Law Society”) Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group (“Working Group”) Final Report “Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions” (the “Final Report”).

The OBA

Established in 1907, the OBA is the largest voluntary legal association in Ontario and represents 16,000 lawyers, judges, law professors and law students. OBA members are on the frontlines of our justice system in no fewer than 40 different sectors and in every region of the province. In addition to providing legal education for its members, the OBA is pleased to assist government, the Law Society, and other decision-makers with dozens of policy initiatives each year – in the interests of the public, the profession, and the administration of justice.

In preparing this submission, the OBA has sought input from our governing council of members representing a critical cross-section of the bar, including senior and junior lawyers from managing partners to new calls, who practice across Ontario as solicitors and barristers in solo, small, medium and large firms from all eight judicial regions of the province. The submission has also sought input from members of the OBA’s Equality Committee, Young Lawyers Divisions, Women Lawyers Forum, the Sole, Small Firm and General Practice section, the Canadian Corporate Counsel Association – Ontario Chapter, and our new Student Section.

Response to the Final Report

General Comments

The Working Group was formed in 2012 to identify the challenges faced by racialized lawyers and paralegals and consider strategies for enhanced inclusion at all career stages. The Working Group conducted a process to collect information on those challenges, and subsequently released a consultation paper in 2014 to collect feedback from the profession and public on questions intended to engage the profession in a consideration of strategies to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees.<sup>1</sup>

Building on that work, the Final Report concludes that the challenges faced by racialized licensees are both longstanding and significant, that the Law Society must take a leadership role in bringing about a lasting culture change, and that prescribing minimum standards of equality, diversity and inclusion are consistent with human rights responsibilities of the profession that are already in place. The Final Report makes thirteen recommendations under five categories: accelerating culture shift, measuring progress, educating for change, implementing supports, and Law Society operations.

As we stated in our response to the Consultation Paper, the OBA is committed to enhancing and promoting equality and diversity within our association and the legal profession, including assisting the efforts of law firms to promote equity and diversity.<sup>2</sup> As set out in a recent CBA resolution, “ending discrimination in the legal profession benefits the profession by enabling it to represent itself with integrity as an advocate for justice.”<sup>3</sup> We therefore support the Working Group’s “intention to create long lasting systemic change within the professions,” and its recommendation that the Law Society use a combination of voluntary and mandatory measures.<sup>4</sup> The Working Group recognizes that lawyers are already bound by the Rules of Professional Conduct, and all recommendations proposed in the report should be interpreted consistently with those requirements.

Further, we agree that close collaboration between the Law Society, legal workplaces and associations will be “essential to the success of the proposed measures and projects” proposed by the Working Group.<sup>5</sup> As we set out in the OBA Initial Report, the OBA has a history of providing programming, mentoring and diversity initiatives for members, in addition to the tools and resources developed by the Canadian Bar Association (the “CBA”) to support diversity initiatives.<sup>6</sup> We believe that the Law Society should promote and support legal workplaces and associations to develop new, and deliver existing programming, initiatives and materials to support the Working Group’s recommendations.

<sup>6</sup> OBA Initial Report at p. 3-8. The CBA is the OBA’s national organization, which presently represents some 37,000 lawyers, judges, notaries, law teachers, and law students from across Canada. Approximately two-thirds of all practising lawyers in Canada belong to the CBA. See also the “The CBA Equity and Diversity Guide and Resource Manual for Successful Law Firms and Legal Organizations” and the “Measuring Diversity in Law Firms: A Critical Tool for Achieving High Performance”

Before moving on to provide specific comments relating to the five areas covered by the Final Report, we would like to provide some general comments on the recommendations contained in the Final Report.

First, we note that the Working Group has not provided recommended timelines for several of its recommendations.<sup>7</sup> The OBA supports the prompt implementation of the Final Report's recommendations. We request that the Law Society and/or the Working Group continue work with stakeholders to develop appropriate timelines for their implementation, along with appropriate plans to measure and report on their effectiveness, in order to allow for adjustment and renewal as necessary, and to ensure the approach adopted meets the intended goals.

Second, we recognize that the challenges faced by racialized licensees occur at all stages throughout their careers, starting with the Licensing Process. We note that the Law Society Professional Development and Competence Committee's recently released Final Report to Convocation dealing with the Pathways Pilot Project, which includes the Law Practice Program and other lawyer licensing elements, reported "interest from a range of perspectives for a broader analysis to be undertaken of the licensing process."<sup>8</sup> As part of this initiative, we support the recommendation that the Law Society consider the impact that the licensing process has on racialized licensees, including but not limited to systemic bias and economic barriers.

We also recognize that the challenges faced by racialized licensees occur whether they are members of large or small firms. Lawyers have a range of reasons to practice in solo and small firms and they comprise an important segment of the bar, however, we note that a disproportionate number of racialized licensees are counted in this group. We recommend that the Law Society continue to explore opportunities to ensure that the profession is inclusive of those individuals, regardless of firm size.

Finally, if approved, we recommend that the Law Society consider how the proposals might be extended to benefit other equity-seeking groups through a process of consultation and information sharing with the profession and legal associations.

Accelerating Culture Shift

As part of this category, the Working Group recommends several steps including amendments to the Rules of Professional Conduct to ensure licensees infuse the principles of equality, diversity and inclusion into their everyday practice; developing model policies and resources to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees using the Justicia Project as a model; and, requiring the adoption of equality, diversity and inclusion principles and practices by every licensee, with particular requirements for workplaces with 10 or more licensees. All licensees will be required to adopt a “statement of principles”, while workplaces with 10 or more licensees must implement a diversity policy, and complete diversity self-assessments.

The OBA has adopted a series of measures intended to support diversity in our association. Through a consultation led by the OBA’s Equality Committee, the OBA has adopted an organization-wide diversity statement, committed to maintain and report on self-identification membership data, and committed to maintain and report on diversity leadership targets.<sup>9</sup> In this context, several measures recommended by the Working Group are similar in their objective to measures already in place at the OBA. Accordingly, as stated in our Initial Report the OBA strongly supports assisting law firms to establish diversity programs that set out a firm’s commitment and plan for meeting its goals and collecting demographic data and assessing the diversity climate to analyze the successes and areas for improvement.<sup>10</sup>

Measuring Progress

As part of this category, the Working Group recommends for workplaces with more than 25 licensees a) quantitative self-identification data collected annually and provided in aggregate to the legal workplace, b) qualitative self-identification data collected every four years and provided to the legal workplace in summary form, and c) a workplace “Inclusion Index” developed and published every four years; repeating the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Inclusion Survey; and, developing and implementing progressive compliance measures for workplaces that do not comply with the required adoption of equality, diversity and inclusion principles and practices.

As noted above, the OBA has committed to measure diversity and inclusion data within its own organization. As noted in the Initial Report, in 2012 the Equality Committee of the CBA issued “Measuring Diversity in Law Firms: A Critical Tool for Achieving High Performance” (the “Measuring Diversity Guide”). The OBA Initial Report discussed the Measuring Diversity Guide in detail, providing recommendations with respect to the appropriate development, assessment, and continuous improvement of measurement tools for law firms.<sup>11</sup> We continue to encourage the Law Society to work with the profession to ensure that the proposed tools deliver meaningful and actionable results for the profession, while respecting the need to maintain the privacy and confidentiality of respondents.

While we support the Working Group’s recommendations to initiate the quantitative and qualitative data collection with larger firms, our members have also suggested that the Law Society allow for voluntary provision of diversity data from smaller firms that would not otherwise be subject to that requirement. That would allow for participation from the broadest possible segment of the profession.

In addition, the Law Society should commit to continually monitor and assess the effectiveness of any measures implemented and to share that information with the profession on an ongoing basis.

Educating for Change

The Final Report recommends requiring licensees to complete mandatory continuing professional development programs on topics of equality and inclusion, and including these topics as competencies to be acquired within the Licensing Process.

While we support the principle that training in equality and inclusion will benefit the profession, engendering understanding of diversity in the profession will require an ongoing commitment from the profession, of which training programs can form but one part. As part of our recommendation that the Law Society continually evaluate the effectiveness of the measures implemented, we note the need to assess whether the requirement adopted is proving effective. We look forward to further engagement with the Law Society to develop appropriate criteria for accreditation, and appropriate guides for these programs to ensure that the training received is both relevant and actionable.

As stated above, the OBA has a history of providing programming to support diversity initiatives. The Law Society Scan of Best Practices notes that legal associations are uniquely positioned to impact diversity within the legal profession.<sup>12</sup> In this regard, although the text of Recommendation #9 does not explicitly recognize the role of legal associations in delivering diversity programming, it is clear from the analysis that the Working Group provided in the Final Report that legal associations can continue to demonstrate leadership in the design and delivery of accredited programming focused on advancing equality and inclusion.<sup>13</sup>

We have also noted that the means by which topics of cultural competency, equality and inclusion will be included in the Licensing Process have not been particularized. Recent licensing candidates have noted that effectively implementing this recommendation will require careful consideration, in order to ensure that the Licensing Process achieves the desired learning outcomes. We would be pleased to provide input on developing appropriate materials if the Law Society implements this recommendation.

Implementing Supports

The Final Report provides several recommendations related to addressing complaints of systemic discrimination, and recommends providing support to racialized licensees through mentoring and networking initiatives. With respect to addressing complaints of systemic discrimination, the OBA supports the recommendations presented in the Final Report to review the function, processes and structure of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHCP), and the other related recommendations. We note that confidentiality is an important factor for the success of the current DHCP, and that appropriate confidentiality must be maintained if the program is to be modified to address complaints of systemic discrimination.

As stated in our Initial Report, an effective review of this area will require issues of human resources management within the Law Society structure. It is important for all individuals involved in the complaints process at the Law Society to be sensitive to unique issues that may arise with complaints of discrimination. This helps ensure that complaints are effectively addressed and instills confidence in the process for those wishing to bring a complaint.<sup>14</sup>

With respect to providing support to racialized licensees through mentoring and networking initiatives, the OBA provides a host of unique opportunities for racialized lawyers to network with colleagues through our governing bodies, 40 practice sections, Women Lawyers Forum ("WLF"), Sexual Orientation and Gender Identity Conference ("SOGIC") and the Equality Committee.<sup>15</sup> The OBA also offers high quality professional development programs, developed by our volunteer members and program planning lawyers that respond to current issues of diversity and inclusion.

The Law Society could play a helpful role by promoting awareness and encouraging participation in the mentoring, professional development, and networking opportunities already offered by legal associations. Increasing participation in core legal association offerings with a track record for success helps overcome the barriers of exclusion and isolation identified by racialized lawyers and promotes a more inclusive profession.<sup>16</sup>

Law Society Operations

We agree that the Law Society should lead efforts to promote diversity and inclusion by example. As we stated in our Initial Report, the Law Society should also continue and enhance its recruitment and hiring efforts to ensure diversity within and throughout the organization. This includes encouraging racialized lawyers to participate in the election of Convocation. The Law Society could examine making available and communicating more information about the election process and the importance of the work of benchers.<sup>17</sup>

<sup>15</sup> The Equality Committee was established in September 1992 and is, in part, responsible for identifying and recommending methods of eliminating the incidence of inequality of opportunity in the legal profession in Ontario based on race, ancestry, place of origin, colour, ethnic origin, citizenship, creed, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity, gender expression, age, marital status, family status or disability.

Conclusion

The OBA appreciates the opportunity to comment on the important initiatives presented in the Working Group's Final Report.

The Working Group has been considering challenges faced by racialized licensees since 2012. The Final Report concludes that prescribing minimum standards of equality, diversity and inclusion are consistent with the human rights responsibilities of the profession — obligations already required by the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct and, more generally, the Human Rights Code.

The OBA has long recognized the importance of diversity and inclusion to the profession. While the Working Group could no doubt deliberate further on the best approaches to undertake, our members broadly support the recommendations articulated in the Final Report as a reasonable way of moving forward to address the concerns identified.

That said, while moving forward is important, the Law Society should do so with the commitment to continually monitor and assess the effectiveness of measures implemented and to share that information with the profession. Such an ongoing collaborative process would assist the Law Society in understanding the complexities of the issues and developing options that enjoy the confidence of racialized licensees and the profession as a whole. The OBA looks forward to the opportunity to participate in that process as it goes forward.

The Law Society of Upper Canada
c/o Ekua Quansah, Policy Counsel
Osgoode Hall, 130 Queen Street West
Toronto, ON M5H 2N6

Dear Ms. Quansah,

Re: Request for Comments on Final Report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group

The Ontario Crown Attorneys' Association (OCCA) welcomes the opportunity to provide comments about the recommendations contained in the final report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group entitled: Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Profession. We also wish to commend the members of the Working Group for the significant time and effort dedicated to the development of a comprehensive report that examines systemic racism in the legal profession and which provides strategies that encourage all stakeholders to work together in an effort to eliminate the systemic barriers that adversely impact fellow licensees in the profession.

The OCAA represents over 850 Assistant Crown Attorneys and Crown Counsel employed by the Ministry of the Attorney General (MAG). We are a labour organization that represents licensees employed within MAG's Criminal Law Division, and are distinct from the Association of Law Officers of the Crown (ALOC), whose members are employed in non-criminal legal service branches across government. Our members play an integral role in the administration of criminal justice in Ontario and are responsible for the administration of hundreds of thousands of criminal cases that flow through the courts every year in all regions across the province. As an association, the OCAA actively promotes the professional interests of its members, and frequently acts in a supportive role by providing continuing education and training in collaboration with MAG.

The OCAA supports the recommendations set out in the Working Group's final report. The recommendations provide important and concrete steps designed to reduce the disproportionate and adverse impact that systemic barriers have on racialized licensees in the profession. The recommendations promote increased awareness and inclusive practices that can help achieve better representation of racialized licensees in all practice settings in Ontario, including government legal departments and Crown Attorney offices. Implementation of the report's recommendations is good for the legal profession and for public confidence in the legal profession and the administration of the justice system as a whole. It is important that the demographics of our legal profession reflect the diversity of the public we serve.

With respect to the differing opinions on the definition of "legal workplace" at footnote 7 (and repeated at footnote 27) of the final report, we note that our members serve the public and are not subject to client decisions. We agree that, at a minimum, government and in-house legal departments should be encouraged to engage in the mandatory activities outlined in the report. We believe that the legal profession should constantly strive to develop, monitor and maintain better inclusive practices from student outreach and articling recruitment, through to hiring, promotion and retention. We also believe in the importance of leading by example.

As a strong leader in the development and dissemination of continuing legal education for our members, the OCAA welcomes opportunities to work with the Law Society in developing programs that are focused on enhancing inclusion and diversity in the profession.

We look forward to continuing our engagement with the Law Society and further opportunities to provide our input on the important work involved in addressing systemic racism in the legal profession.

Sincerely,

Kate Matthews

Dear Treasurer Schabas and Co-Chairs Anand and Leiper:

Re: Final Report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group,
*Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions

As Chair of the Roundtable of Diversity Associations (RODA)<sup>1</sup>, I convey RODA's written comments on the thirteen recommendations ("Recommendations") made in the Final Report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group, Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions ("Final Report").

---

<sup>1</sup> On November 29, 2016, RODA celebrates its 5th Diversity Soiree and its 2nd Diversity Conference. RODA's current member associations include the following: Arab Canadian Lawyers Association; Association of Chinese Canadian Lawyers of Ontario; Canadian Association of Black Lawyers; Canadian Association of South Asian Lawyers; Canadian Hispanic Bar Association; Canadian Italian Advocates Organization; Canadian Muslim Lawyers Association, Federation of Asian Canadian Lawyers; Hellenic Canadian Lawyers Association; Iranian Canadian Legal Professionals; Korean Canadian Lawyers Association; Macedonian Canadian Lawyers; OBA Equality Committee; Sexual Orientation & Gender Identity Caucus; South Asian Bar Association of Toronto; Toronto Lawyers Association; Women's Law Association of Ontario.

RODA brings together a diverse group of legal associations with the goal of fostering dialogue and creating initiatives relating to the advancement of diversity, equality and inclusion in the legal profession and within the community.

Of particular importance to RODA and its member associations is the issue of diversity in the legal profession, and the desire to hold law firms accountable to increasing diversity and breaking the privilege that non-racialized licensees have held, disproportionate to an increasingly diverse population.

A. BACKGROUND

RODA believes it is important not to be short-sighted and to remember the backdrop against which the Final Report is released. Many of our member associations have made significant contributions along the long path leading to the Final Report. Association representatives have changed over the years, but our member associations have been consistent in advocating for equity, diversity and inclusion over at least the last two decades, without seeing any concrete results. We should not lose sight of the battles that were previously fought.

The backdrop of decades laid the groundwork for the Final Report, which is the culmination of recent focused effort. In September 2011, Convocation of the Law Society of Upper Canada ("LSUC") first identified the enhancement of diversity within law firms as a priority. Under the aegis of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group ("CFRL Working Group"), and managed by the equity initiatives department at the LSUC, the LSUC hired an external consultant to:

- Identify challenges faced by racialized licensees in different practice environments, including entry into practice and advancement;
- Identify factors and practice challenges that could increase the risk of regulatory complaints and discipline against racialized licensees; and
- Identify perceptions of best practises for preventive, remedial, and support strategies.

Following the creation of the CFRL Working Group, RODA and representatives of our member associations:

- Engaged in the initial community engagement process;
- Reviewed the results of the Consultant Engagement Process (contained in the external consultant's Stratcom Report released in March 2014), and provided further input and insight into the challenges faced by racialized licensees;
- These comments were then integrated into the Consultation Paper, Developing Strategies for Change: Addressing Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees, released in October 2014;
- Between January and March 2015, provided comments to the Consultation Paper (this consultation process is said to include twelve (12) open house learning and consultation programs, and meetings with representatives from law firms, legal clinics, banks, government and legal associations, throughout the province);
- Reviewed an interim report released in April 23, 2015, Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group – Interim Report to Convocation, April 2015. This interim report stated that participants spoke of "white privilege" and the need for all of us to acknowledge its existence in order to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees, and the importance for licensees to understand how power operates to produce advantages for some and deny advantages to others. It is noted that the Ontario Human Rights Commission defines "privilege" generally as 'unearned power, benefits, advantages, access and/or opportunities that exist for members of the dominant group(s) in society. It can also refer to the relative privilege of one group compared to another.

- By late 2015, demanded that the CFRL Working Group account for its delays in framing the recommendation for concrete action items to address the conclusions in the Consultation Paper.
- Finally in September 2016, five years after the need was first formally identified by the LSUC, the Final Report was released with its thirteen recommendations.

Based on my observations, the initial reaction of equity seeking legal associations was understandingly sceptical. RODA and its members have met to discuss the Final Report. We have also had discussions and consultations with our colleagues, allies and other stakeholders. We have listened to members of the CFRL Working Group speak to the underlying rationale for the 13 recommendations.

B. RODA RECOMMENDATION

After a period of studying the Final Report, consultation and reflection, RODA is of the view that the Recommendations are an encouraging initial step that should be adopted, on an omnibus basis, by Convocation.

RODA also recommends that the LSUC be required to hold regular quarterly consultation meetings with RODA, the LSUC's Equity Advisory Group, and other racialized equity seeking legal associations, to monitor and ensure accountability over the implementation of the Recommendations. The results of these consultations should be put to Benchers at Convocation.

The Recommendations fall into 5 broad categories of action: measuring progress, accelerating culture shift, educating for change, implementing supports, and operations of the Law Society. These 5 categories are inter-related, and support each other. They provide basic specific action items that serve to address the various challenges faced by racialized licensees, and includes both mandatory and voluntary steps that law firms, licensees and the LSUC will take to tackle the long-standing issues of unconscious bias and systemic racism that have plagued racialized licensees.

RODA recognizes that the Final Report is the result of consensus amongst the Benchers in the CFRL Working Group. As will happen when consensus building is involved, the Final Report has not met all expectations of racialized equity seeking legal associations. However, RODA is encouraged, and its member associations have voted in favour of recommending that Convocation adopt the Recommendations on an omnibus basis.

We are aware that there is a Notice of Motion brought by Benchers, Sidney Troister and Jeffrey W. Lem. RODA is discouraged by this Motion that requests that each of the Recommendations be discussed and voted on separately. RODA fears that if passed, it could end up breaking down the cohesive nature of the Recommendations and lead to an impasse that will kibosh two decades of hard work that finally began to crystallize with the CFRL Working Group and its resulting Final Report and Recommendations. RODA strongly opposes this motion, and asks that Convocation vote against it.

However, if this motion is passed, RODA strongly recommends that Convocation pass each and every one of the Recommendations.

C. INTERSECTION WITH RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT

RODA understands that some have questioned the LSUC's jurisdiction to implement at least some of the Recommendations.

RODA submits that the Law Society Act, the Rules of Professional Conduct (see Schedule "A": Excerpt from the Rules of Professional Conduct), and Ontario's Human Rights Code provide a sufficient basis for the LSUC to implement all of the Recommendations. This position would be supplemented if the LSUC is able to adopt Compliance-Based Entity Regulation.

D. INTERSECTION WITH ENTITY REGULATION

RODA also encourages the CFRL Working Group to coordinate the implementation of action items arising from the Recommendations with the anticipated recommendations of the Task Force on Compliance-Based Entity Regulation ("Task Force"), should the Task Force's anticipated recommendations also be passed by Convocation. Given that the LSUC is self-funded by its licensees, coordination of the work of the CFRL Working Group and the Task Force is a more efficient use of limited resources. Actual implementation of the Recommendations is expected to start in 2018, after the year 2017 is devoted to educating the Ontario bar. This timeline aligns with the expected delivery in 2017 of the recommendations of the Task Force on Compliance-Based Entity, which recommendations could presumably be implemented in 2018<sup>2</sup>.

---

<sup>2</sup> RODA notes that on November 9, 2016, Convocation voted on and passed the LSUC's Professional Development and Competence Committee's recommendation to extend the LPP for an additional two years to enable the gathering of more data on the LPP and articling, and the larger analysis of licensing. Its work would also align with the work of the CFRL Working Group and the Task Force. All three initiatives have significant links to challenges faced by racialized licensees, and their work should be coordinated. For example, just as Compliance-Based Entity Regulation will require diversity and inclusion as a practice management principle, so the Final Report includes a recommendation to add cultural competency, diversity and inclusion, and education components into the licensing process.

RODA has expressed its support for compliance-based entity regulation, and in particular noted:

According to the Developing Strategies for Change: Addressing Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Consultation Paper, presented to Convocation in October 2014, Black, South Asian and West Asian lawyers are disproportionately represented in sole practice and are much less likely to practise in medium and large firms. In line with the “equity, diversity and inclusion” principle excepted above, and with a view to increasing equity and diversity in medium to large sized firms, RODA submits that:

1. RODA is encouraged by the inclusion of “equity, diversity and inclusion” in the list of practice management principles for compliance-based entity regulation, but asks that the Task Force consider some form of reporting requirement in order to ensure that “equity, diversity and inclusion” principles are not merely declarations of commitment but actually implemented throughout an entity’s hiring, promotion, and elevation to partnership practises. As such, RODA member associations are in favour of mandatory data collection for medium to large-sized firms; and

2. Diversity and cultural competency training should be part of required training within medium to large-sized firms.

The inclusion of a principle of equity, diversity and inclusion in compliance-based entity regulation provides the Law Society with a basis to better identify and address systemic discrimination within an entity. A means of monitoring the actual implementation of equity, diversity and inclusion within law firms would also provide the Law Society with the data and tools to investigate and discipline entities that have received multiple complaints of discrimination.<sup>3</sup>

RODA submits that the LSUC has sufficient authority to implement all the Recommendations without adopting Compliance-Based Entity Regulation. The adoption of Compliance Based-Entity Regulation will provide stronger enforcement mechanisms and make the implementation of the Recommendations more effective. As such, RODA recommends that the CFRL Working Group coordinate its efforts with the Task Force.

E. EXTENSION OF RECOMMENDATIONS TO ALL EQUALITY-SEEKING GROUPS

RODA is aware of a motion that will be brought by Benchers, Barbara Murchie and Joanne St. Lewis, to Convocation on December 2, 2016. The Notice of Motion asks that:

As it moves forward with implementation of the recommendations for racialized licensees, the Law Society will ensure that the policies, procedures, measures and initiatives are extended as appropriate to all equality-seeking groups while continuing to ensure that the needs of racialized licensees are fully acknowledged and addressed.

Consistent with its mandate to promote the advancement of diversity, equality and inclusion in the legal profession and within the community, RODA supports this motion, and asks that Convocation vote in its favour.

CONCLUSION

RODA has not provided comments on a recommendation by recommendation basis. Rather, RODA takes the position that the Final Report, and its Recommendations, are a cohesive whole and should be voted on an omnibus basis. The Recommendations are an encouraging starting point to address unconscious bias, systemic racism and the long-standing challenges faced by racialized licensees. The Final Report may not be a clarion call, but RODA believes that it and its member associations, and allies and stakeholders, can work with the Final Report's basic call to action.

RODA will continue to be engaged during the implementation process and provide input to flesh out the implementation and eventual enforcement mechanisms.

The Final Report will be before Convocation for decision on December 2, 2016. In light of the above, RODA strongly encourages all Benchers to vote in favour of adopting all the Recommendations.

Sincerely,

Lai-King Hum

Schedule "A"

Excerpt from the Rules of Professional Conduct

6.3.1-1 A lawyer has a special responsibility to respect the requirements of human rights laws in force in Ontario and, specifically, to honour the obligation not to discriminate on the grounds of race, ancestry, place of origin, colour, ethnic origin, citizenship, creed, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity, gender expression, age, record of offences (as defined in the Ontario Human Rights Code), marital status, family status, or disability with respect to professional employment of other lawyers, articulated students, or any other person or in professional dealings with other licensees or any other person.

Commentary

[1] The Law Society acknowledges the diversity of the community of Ontario in which lawyers serve and expects them to respect the dignity and worth of all persons and to treat all persons equally without discrimination.

[2] This rule sets out the special role of the profession to recognize and protect the dignity of individuals and the diversity of the community in Ontario.

[3] Rule 6.3.1-1 will be interpreted according to the provisions of the Human Rights Code (Ontario) and related case law.

[12] Human rights law in Ontario includes as discrimination, conduct which, though not intended to discriminate, has an adverse impact on individuals or groups on the basis of the prohibited grounds. The Human Rights Code (Ontario) requires that the affected individuals or groups must be accommodated unless to do so would cause undue hardship.

[13] A lawyer should take reasonable steps to prevent or stop discrimination by any staff or agent who is subject to the lawyer's direction or control.

To the Task Force on Compliance-Based Entity Regulation:

Re: Entity Regulation - Submission

On behalf of the Roundtable of Diversity Associations (RODA), I write to provide input on the Consultation Paper: Promoting better legal practices (the "Consultation Paper"), prepared by the Law Society's Task Force on Compliance-Based Entity Regulation.

---

*RODA's current member associations include the following: Arab Canadian Lawyers Association; Association of Chinese Canadian Lawyers of Ontario; Canadian Association of Black Lawyers; Canadian Association of South Asian Lawyers; Canadian Hispanic Bar Association; Canadian Italian Advocates Organization; Canadian Muslim Lawyers Association, Federation of Asian Canadian Lawyers; Hellenic Canadian Lawyers Association; Iranian Canadian Legal Professionals; Korean Canadian Lawyers Association; Macedonian Canadian Lawyers; OBA Equality Committee; Sexual Orientation & Gender Identity Caucus; South Asian Bar Association of Toronto; Toronto Lawyers Association; Women's Law Association of Ontario.

The Task Force was established by Convocation in June 2015 to study and make recommendations on options for professional regulation that focus on objectives for the entities, or organizations, through which lawyers and paralegals provide legal services.

RODA brings together a diverse group of legal associations with the goal of fostering a dialogue and initiatives relating to the advancement of diversity, equality and inclusion in the legal profession and the judiciary. RODA has a seat at the Equity Advisory Group at the Law Society of Upper Canada ("LSUC"). It is from this perspective that our input is provided.

In light of RODA's mandate, we are providing the Task Force with input on one of the key components, or principles, for compliance and entity regulation proposed in the Consultation Paper.

Specifically, the Task Force proposed that the following, described as principle 6 in the Consultation Paper, might be included as one of the key principles for compliance and entity regulation.

Equity, Diversity and Inclusion, which refers to the entity's policies regarding matters such as

- a respectful workplace environment that appropriately accommodates equity, diversity, inclusion, and disabilities;
- equality of opportunity and respect for diversity and inclusion in recruitment and hiring;
- equality of opportunity and respect for diversity and inclusion in decision-making regarding advancement; and
- cultural competency in the delivery of legal services.*

*The Challenges Faced By Racialized Licensees Working Group has been considering equity, diversity and inclusion issues for Racialized Licensees in the legal professions. It is expected that the Working Group will report to Convocation in 2016. In the event that Convocation adopts recommendations in these areas, there may be additional guidance respecting the implementation of this proposed framework.

The Consultation Paper was distributed to RODA member associations, and comments solicited. RODA wholeheartedly supports entity regulation in Ontario addressing equity and diversity considerations in an explicit and expansive manner, and supports its inclusion as a practice management principle.

According to the Developing Strategies for Change: Addressing Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Consultation Paper, presented to Convocation in October 2014, Black, South Asian and West Asian lawyers are disproportionately represented in sole practice and are much less likely to practise in medium and large firms. In line with the “equity, diversity and inclusion” principle excepted above, and with a view to increasing equity and diversity in medium to large sized firms, RODA submits that:

1. RODA is encouraged by the inclusion of “equity, diversity and inclusion” in the list of practice management principles for compliance-based entity regulation, but asks that the Task Force consider some form of reporting requirement in order to ensure that “equity, diversity and inclusion” principles are not merely declarations of commitment but actually implemented throughout an entity’s hiring, promotion, and elevation to partnership practises. As such, RODA member associations are in favour of mandatory data collection for medium to large-sized firms; and
2. Diversity and cultural competency training should be part of required training within medium to large-sized firms.

The inclusion of a principle of equity, diversity and inclusion in compliance-based entity regulation provides the Law Society with a basis to better identify and address systemic discrimination within an entity. A means of monitoring the actual implementation of equity, diversity and inclusion within law firms would also provide the Law Society with the data and tools to investigate and discipline entities that have received multiple complaints of discrimination.

We thank the Task Force for its work and we are encouraged by its proposed addition of equity, diversity and inclusion as a principle of Practice Management. for the opportunity to make submissions. We look forward to receiving its report.

Yours very truly,

Lai-King Hum

Dear Ms. Quansah:

Re: Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions

The South Asian Bar Association of Toronto (SABA Toronto) makes these written comments on the Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions report (the Report).

SABA Toronto is a voluntary bar organization and the local Toronto chapter of SABA North America. SABA Toronto provides professional growth and advancement for South Asian lawyers in the Greater Toronto Area and seeks to protect the rights and liberties of the South Asian community across Ontario.

SABA Toronto's position is Convocation should pass these recommendations as they are and as an omnibus motion. To the extent the Law Society is directed to apply these recommendations, where applicable, to other equality-seeking groups, SABA Toronto supports such a motion.

The Report is a long-time coming. For almost four years, racialized lawyers have waited for the Law Society to acknowledge what they have known all along: the profession, despite its facial commitment to inclusion, presents unique, profound and, in some cases, troubling challenges to racialized licensees. A quick perusal of the websites of Toronto's largest 30 firms, as an example, will quickly disclose that the profession remains largely white, especially at the equity partner and management level. Where, for example, South Asians are represented, it is rare to see, for example, an orthodox Sikh or Muslim, suggesting to us that where South Asians have overcome challenges, such success is still localized to certain members of our bar that look and act like their majoritarian colleagues.

This is not a "law firm" problem. This is not even a "lawyers" problem. This is an access to justice problem. If Ontarians do not believe that the justice system is fair because it is not representative, we do violence to the administration of that system. As officers of the court, we should be the first to demand that the public's confidence in the justice system is not undermined because our courtrooms look nothing like our communities, workplaces and public spaces.

Regarding the specific recommendations, our view is that they are a minimum baseline for any organization in Ontario, never mind a legal workplace that should have a commitment to diversity and inclusion. In our view, the most important recommendations are those around qualitative and quantitative analysis: SABA Toronto has long advocated for the profession to keep better statistics about racialized (and other equality-seeking) licensees. The profession should not fear the publication of an inclusion index. It is hard for us to believe that any legal workplace in Ontario would not be striving to be more inclusive and diverse, and therefore, more representative by 2020.

After four long years, the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group has reached a consensus. They have sent their best work to Convocation. Pass it.

Sincerely,

SOUTH ASIAN BAR ASSOCIATION OF TORONTO

Dear Ms Quansah:

RE: Response to the Final Report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group entitled *Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions

The Advocates' Society, founded in 1963, is a not-for-profit association of over 5,500 lawyers throughout Ontario and the rest of Canada. The mandate of The Advocates' Society includes, amongst other things, making submissions to governments and other entities on matters that affect access to justice, the administration of justice and the practice of law by advocates.

The Advocates' Society has reviewed with interest the Final Report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group entitled Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions ("Law Society Report"), presented to Convocation on September 22, 2016. As stated in our letter of February 27, 2015 to Josée Bouchard, past Director, Equity Initiatives Department, The Advocates' Society is committed to the principles of substantive equality and access to justice, and supports redressing the challenges faced by racialized licensees. The Advocates' Society makes the following comments on the Recommendations as outlined in the Report, speaking to the perspective of lawyers (based on the membership of The Advocates' Society) and not paralegals.

General Comment

In respect of many of these recommendations, The Advocates' Society believes that it is important that the Law Society deal with diversity as a whole (including disability, gender and sexual orientation) rather than focusing only on measuring progress and inclusion with respect to racialized licensees. Many of The Advocates' Society's members' firms have diversity committees and diversity policies which address the whole spectrum of diversity issues. Our view is that the Law Society ought to be addressing the entire spectrum of issues here; if the administrative infrastructure is being put into place to implement these recommendations with respect to racialized licensees, it would be most efficient to address all diversity issues, both in self-reporting and the proposed inclusion questions, subject to any additional privacy issues that this might raise.

Accelerating Culture Shift (Recommendations 1-3)

Recommendation 1: Reinforcing Professional Obligations

Summary of the Working Group's Recommendation:

- The Law Society would amend the Rules of Professional Conduct to recognize, acknowledge and promote principles of equality, diversity and inclusion.

Comments:

- The Advocates' Society agrees with Recommendation 1 and would welcome the opportunity to provide input into proposed changes to the Rules of Professional Conduct and their Commentaries.

Recommendation 2: Diversity and Inclusion Project

Summary of the Working Group's Recommendation:

- The Law Society would develop model policies and resources to encourage best practices in legal workplaces.

Comments:

- The Advocates' Society agrees with Recommendation 2 and recognizes the central importance of diversity to the profession. It would welcome the opportunity to comment on model policies and resources to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees.
- The Advocates' Society would bring the perspective and experience of lawyers who practise as advocates to issues such as competency hiring, assignment of work and career development. The Advocates' Society also has expertise in the mentoring of young advocates and could offer its experience in the development of mentoring programs.

Recommendation 3: The Adoption of Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Principles and Practices

Summary of the Working Group's Recommendation:

- The Law Society would require every licensee to adopt and abide by a statement of principles to promote equality, diversity and inclusion.
- The Law Society would require every legal workplace of at least 10 licensees to develop a diversity policy to cover recruitment, retention and advancement, and to file a compliance self-assessment every two years with the Law Society.

Comments:

- The Advocates' Society agrees with Recommendation 3 and supports the nuanced approach to implementation proposed by the Law Society which recognizes that the nature of policies and self-assessment tools will vary based on the size and type of legal workplace.
- The Advocates' Society supports the Law Society's proposal that templates for the statements of principles, policies and self-assessment tools be developed collaboratively with legal workplaces and organizations that wish to participate. The development of resources that take into account the realities of legal workplaces is important to the success of the initiative.

Measuring Progress (Recommendations 4-8)Recommendation 4: Measuring Progress through Quantitative AnalysisSummary of the Working Group's Recommendation:

- The Law Society would collect the self-identification data from licensees in the Lawyer Annual Report and provide reports to legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees, to compare to provincial statistics (and to use in requests for proposal, student recruitment, etc.).

Comments:

- The Advocates' Society believes that the proposal to analyze the self-identification data provided by licensees in their Annual Reports and to pass that information along to firms may provide useful information about their progress relative to the profession as a whole.
- However, The Advocates' Society believes that limiting this initiative to "legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees" would overlook a large group of lawyers in solo and smaller workplaces, practising in a wide range of practice areas and geographical areas.<sup>1</sup> Data from smaller workplaces could be aggregated and reported on an anonymous basis, by size of workplace and geographic region, for example.
- The Advocates' Society would also appreciate clarification from the Law Society as to whether it suggests that the diversity makeup in all legal workplaces should mirror the aggregate data, which may be an unreasonable expectation for certain workplaces.
- The Advocates' Society would also appreciate clarity as to whether organizations like banks or insurance companies that have more than 25 licensees qualify as "legal workplaces".

Recommendation 5: Measuring Progress through Qualitative AnalysisSummary of the Working Group's Recommendation:*

- The Law Society would ask licensees, every four years, for their assessment of inclusion at their workplace, and then provide reports to the legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees.

Comments:

- The Advocates' Society believes that this recommendation raises privacy concerns; even workplaces with 25 or more licensees may have a small (and thus identifiable) number of racialized lawyers.
- The Advocates' Society is concerned that providing law firms, particularly smaller law firms closer to the 25-member end of the spectrum, with the results of inclusion questions and a summary of the information gathered will be problematic because the respondents will know that the data will be reported back to their place of employment, even if the information is in "summarized" or "compiled" form. The prospect of this disclosure may discourage candid responses.
- The Law Society should give consideration to collecting responses on an anonymous basis and advising individuals who provide responses that their views will be kept confidential by the Law Society and not provided to their places of employment. An anonymous and confidential elicitation of comments is more likely to capture representative information. The Law Society could then use this anonymous data for its own analysis and reporting on an aggregate basis to the profession.
- Consideration might also be given to advising or reminding all licensees of the existing avenues available to them (or perhaps new avenues) to make an anonymous whistleblower comment or complaint with the Law Society if the individual wishes the Law Society to do something about a particular incident or workplace.
- To the extent the Law Society decides to collect this information for its own purposes, but not report or publish the information, with attributions, to law firms or the public, it should consider whether to collect this information from smaller law firms as well (given that privacy would no longer be an issue). Proceeding with anonymous or confidential comments would allow the Law Society to canvass a broader cross-section of licensees than simply licensees at workplaces with 25 or more licensees. A large part of the practice would be excluded numerically, geographically and by practice area in focusing on licensees in these larger workplace environments – thereby not providing a truly accurate measurement of progress, insight or accountability across the profession.

Recommendation 6: Inclusion IndexSummary of the Working Group's Recommendation:*

- The Law Society will publish the data about workplaces of at least 25 licensees – meaning the self-assessment; the quantitative data; and the qualitative data – as a means of transparency and accountability.

Comments:

- The Advocates' Society is concerned about the publication of the qualitative information recorded in the proposed "inclusion index" on an individual firm basis without any consideration of the merits or context of the comments.
- Further, there are more robust means of reviewing a workplace's commitment to racialized persons and diversity than simply looking at quantitative numbers, which may under-represent the initiatives of employers. For example, a more comprehensive matrix of indices of commitment to diversity can be developed (e.g. TSX board matrix) that not only looks at the number of racialized licensees, but also elements such as programs and training implemented, outreach program participation, articling positions offered to racialized licensees (whether or not accepted), and participation in workplace leadership positions.

Recommendation 7: Repeat Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project Inclusion SurveySummary of the Working Group's Recommendation:*

- In 2013, the Law Society had all licensees complete an anonymous survey as to career barriers, stereotypes, and disadvantages. A similar survey would be conducted every four years to evaluate systemic change.

Comments:

- The Advocates' Society believes that an interval of four years for measuring and reporting data on diversity and inclusion will not capture the full story, given the rate at which lawyers, particularly young lawyers and lawyers from diverse backgrounds, leave law firms. The administrative burden posed by a shorter interval must be balanced with the quality and impact of the data collection.

Recommendation 8: Progressive Compliance MeasuresSummary of the Working Group's Recommendation:*

- The Law Society would use graduated responses to address non-compliance by legal workplaces, from meetings and warnings, to discipline.

Comments:

- The Advocates' Society believes the profession would benefit from further detail on progressive compliance. It is unclear how the Law Society proposes to deal with compliance on an entity-based level and it is unclear how enforcement will define or address issues of systemic discrimination.

Educating for Change (Recommendations 9-10)

Recommendation 9: Continuing Professional Development (CPD) Programs on Topics of Equality and Inclusion in the Professions

Summary of the Working Group's Recommendation:

- The Law Society will offer a three-hour accredited program for equality and inclusion, and will assist workplaces to offer their own programs.
- Licensees will be required to complete a three hour CPD program every three years.

Comments:

- The Advocates' Society supports the recommendation of a three-hour accredited program. Program developers should consult not only legal resources, but also equity-seeking groups and leading thinkers in the areas of psychology, neuroscience and organizational behavior, with materials tailored to the legal context. Other groups (e.g. Human Resources Professionals Association) may be well ahead in the development of appropriate programming, and, in any event, can offer a diverse perspective.
- The Advocates' Society recommends that the Law Society actively work with groups in other jurisdictions experienced in the development of diversity and inclusion practices to ensure that we are meeting or exceeding the international standards in development.
- Given the importance of early and frequent exposure to effect change, the Law Society should consult with law faculties to express the Law Society's commitment to issues of diversity, equality and inclusion, to allow it to benefit from programs deployed in law schools, and to coordinate the development of programs to ensure educational continuity.
- The Advocates' Society also supports the recommendation of having licensees complete accredited programming focused on equality and inclusion, but would suggest one hour every year, rather than three hours every three years, as a minimum requirement, following an initial, three-hour training program.

Recommendation 10: The Licensing Process

Summary of the Working Group's Recommendation:

- The Law Society would include equality and inclusion principles in licensing materials.

Comments:

- The Advocates' Society supports this recommendation, subject to its comments above.

Supporting Racialized Licensees (Recommendations 11-12)

Recommendation 11: Building Communities of Support

Summary of the Working Group's Recommendation:

- The Law Society would increase mentoring and advisory services to address in particular the isolation of racialized lawyers in sole or small firms.
- The Law Society would assist legal associations and support networking events.

Comments:

- The Advocates' Society commends the Law Society for its commitment to improving access to mentoring and networking opportunities for racialized licensees. Improving access to mentoring improves access to the profession, and improves the opportunities for racialized licensees to excel in the profession. The Advocates' Society supports the specific proposals put forward by the Law Society, and thanks the Law Society for having considered and adopted many of the recommendations put forward by The Advocates' Society in our letter of February 25, 2015.
- The Advocates' Society would be pleased to share information with the Law Society about the mentoring and programming initiatives which are offered by The Advocates' Society.
- As noted in our letter for February 25, 2015, The Advocates' Society offers a variety of mentoring programs and initiatives that our young advocate members (advocates who have been called to the bar for 10 years or less) have found to be beneficial in their professional development. For example, The Advocates' Society offers a variety of Group Mentoring programs. While Group Mentoring events have their own limitations and are not meant to be a substitute for one-on-one mentoring relationships that should ideally be developed within a licensee's own practice setting, Group Mentoring has several benefits. Group Mentoring events offer mentees the opportunity to pose questions to mentors in a safe environment outside the mentees' own firm settings, where they may be reluctant to ask certain questions or otherwise do not have good (or any) internal mentoring networks. Mentees also benefit from hearing the questions posed by their peers, which lets them know they are not alone in their questions or concerns. The social setting demonstrates that a variety of approaches and styles can be used to address challenges and achieve success in the profession.
- The Advocates' Society would welcome the development by the Law Society of cultural/diversity content that organizations such as The Advocates' Society can incorporate into their mentoring, education and other programs.
- In addition to the networking opportunities available at our mentoring programs, The Advocates' Society also offers a variety of affordable networking opportunities, including: family-friendly programs; Brown Bag and Court House continuing legal education series; Young Advocates' Pub Nights; and Practice Group programs and events.
- For all of our mentoring and networking programs, The Advocates' Society will continue to advertise these events in the normal course, but they could also be promoted through the Law Society and through groups representing racialized licensees to increase diversity of attendance and communication/collaboration among associations.

Recommendation 12: Addressing Complaints of Systemic Discrimination

Summary of the Working Group's Recommendation:

- The Law Society is concerned that incidents of systemic discrimination are not being reported. It plans to review its own processes, and the Rules of Professional Conduct, and re-train its disciplinary staff, including creating a specialized team, all to raise awareness and effectiveness in responding.
- The Law Society is considering soliciting anonymous complaints, in order to approach identified workplaces for remedial, not punitive, discussions.

Comments:

- The Advocates' Society commends the Law Society for its commitment to addressing issues of systemic discrimination in the legal profession.
- The Report proposes, among other things, to amend the Rules of Professional Conduct (the "Rules") so that systemic discrimination is clearly identified as a breach of professional conduct. Given that the Rules presently focus on individual accountability, whereas systemic discrimination operates on a systems-wide and institutional level, this endeavour will undoubtedly involve challenging practical and legal questions. We look forward to working with the Law Society and other stakeholders in exploring these questions further.
- Recognizing the limits of enforcement in combating the root causes of systemic discrimination, The Advocates' Society emphasizes the importance of education, training and remediation in identifying and eliminating systemic discrimination. Where possible, professional regulation should focus on securing voluntary compliance with best practices rather than enforcement through the disciplinary process.

Thank you for providing The Advocates' Society with the opportunity to make these submissions. I would be pleased to discuss these submissions with you at your convenience.

Yours very truly,

Bradley E. Berg
President

Dear Mesdames/Sirs,

RE: Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions dated September 22, 2016

The Toronto Lawyers' Association (TLA) is the voice of its 3,200 members who practise law in all disciplines across the Greater Toronto Area. The TLA is pleased to provide its comments to the Law Society of Upper Canada (LSUC) on the final report dated September 22, 2016 of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group (the Working Group) entitled Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions (the Report).

It is indeed unfortunate that despite the progress that has been made by many lawyers and law firms in the elimination of racism and other discrimination within their firms, racism still exists in our profession to the extent that the LSUC is required to mandate policies for lawyers and firms. As a lawyer, I have had the privilege of being a student, associate and now partner at a firm without such barriers. Upon reading the Report, I realize that I may have taken my good fortune for granted, as I believed that my experience was the norm for many firms and lawyers. It is the only firm at which I have worked since articling in 1999. Before and since, my firm has hired students and lawyers with the primary consideration being merit. In the process, without intention or design, we have created a firm of female and male lawyers, students and staff of different backgrounds, races, cultures, religions and sexual orientation, which reflects the wonderful mosaic found in Canada, and specifically Toronto.

As President of the TLA, I can attest to the TLA's dedication to eliminating racism and ensuring that our profession is more inclusive. The TLA, which itself has a diverse board of directors, is also a member of the Roundtable of Diversity Associations (RODA).

Apparently, given the Report and the recommendations contained therein, our profession is not moving forward quickly enough on its own and requires a helping hand from the LSUC. However, I am indeed optimistic that with our generation of lawyers, and each successive one that follows, systemic racism and the barriers for racialized lawyers will continue to erode until they no longer exist. The LSUC report contains a similarly optimistic quote from Yolanda King, daughter of Martin Luther King, Jr.:

What we need to do is learn to respect and embrace our differences until our differences don't make a difference in how we are treated.

— Yolanda King

The TLA commends the Working Group for its efforts and, subject to our comments below, recommends that the Report be adopted by Convocation. The TLA recognizes and supports the importance of this initiative and the need to dismantle barriers within the legal profession faced by racialized licensees.

Timeline for Implementation of Recommendations

Page 10 of the Report contains a timeline for implementation of the recommendations in the Report. We note that the implementation dates for recommendations 1, 2, 8, 10, 11, 12(2), 12(3) and 12(4) have yet to be determined. To enhance accountability and ensure that these important recommendations are implemented in a timely way, we encourage the LSUC to adopt at the outset clear dates for the implementation of all of these recommendations.

Recommendation 3 – The Adoption of Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Principles and Practices

The Law Society will:

- 1) require every licensee to adopt and to abide by a statement of principles acknowledging their obligation to promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally, and in their behavior towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public;
- 2) require a representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy for their legal workplace addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement;
- 3) require a representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to complete, every two years, an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment for their legal workplace, to be provided to the Law Society; and
- 4) encourage legal workplaces to conduct inclusion surveys by providing them with sample templates.

We are concerned that item 1) of Recommendation 3 is overly broad and has the potential to conflict with certain practice areas. For example, could a professional who advocates on behalf of a client find himself or herself offside this item because the client's interests do not "promote equality, diversity and inclusion"? Moreover, we question whether the requirement to adopt and to abide by such a statement of principles is necessary in light of Recommendation 1.

We also have concerns that the requirement in item 2) that each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario develop a human rights/diversity policy for their legal workplace by January 1, 2018 could be burdensome to smaller legal workplaces and may result in a lack of uniformity in such policies. We acknowledge the LSUC's stated intention to guide legal workplaces in the development of policies and to "develop resources, such as templates, guides and model policies." It is the TLA's view that the templates, guides and model policies need to be developed well in advance of the effective date of the requirement.

Similarly, we recommend that the LSUC create a template for the "equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment" referred to in item 3) of Recommendation 3 to encourage consistency of assessments and avoid placing undue burden on legal workplaces.

Recommendation 8 – Progressive Compliance Measures

The Law Society will consider developing and implementing progressive compliance measures for legal workplaces that do not comply with the requirements proposed in Recommendation 3 and/or legal workplaces that are identified as having systemic barriers to diversity and inclusion.

Recommendation 8 does not provide us sufficient information to provide constructive feedback. We request the opportunity to comment on the development of compliance measures by the LSUC in connection with this recommendation.

Recommendation 12 – Addressing Complaints of Systemic Discrimination

The Law Society, in light of the findings of this project and emerging issues in the professions, will:

- 1) review the function, processes and structure of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC), including considering effective ways for the DHC to address complaints of systemic discrimination;
- 2) revise the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, where appropriate, so that systemic discrimination and reprisal for complaints of discrimination and harassment are clearly identified as breaches of professional conduct requirements;
- 3) create effective ways for the Professional Regulation Division to address complaints of systemic discrimination; and
- 4) create a specialized and trained team to address complaints of discrimination.

Items 3) and 4) of Recommendation 12 also do not provide us sufficient information to provide constructive feedback. We request an opportunity to comment on the development of effective ways to address complaints of systemic discrimination and on the creation of a specialized team to address complaints of discrimination.

Furthermore, the TLA supports the motion to be made at Convocation to extend the implementation of recommendations for racialized licensees to all equality-seeking groups while continuing to ensure that the needs of racialized licensees are fully acknowledged and addressed.

The TLA appreciates the opportunity to comment on the Report and looks forward to a continuing dialogue with the LSUC as it continues to address systemic racism in the legal professions.

Yours very truly,

Dear Ms. Spears:

RE: Opinion on Working Group's Recommendations re Challenges Facing Racialized Licensees

The Law Society of Upper Canada ("Law Society") has asked us to provide a legal opinion on the following question in respect of its Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group Final Report, ("Final Report"):

Are any of the following recommendations – 3 (1), (2) and (3) – inconsistent with the rights and obligations of The Law Society of Upper Canada and its licensees under the Law Society Act, the Ontario Human Rights Code and/or the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

The recommendations constitute three subsections of Recommendation 3 in the Final Report dealing with:

The Adoption of Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Principles and Practices

The Law Society will:

- 1) require every licensee to adopt and to abide by a statement of principles acknowledging their obligation to promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally, and in their behaviour towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public;

- 2) require a representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy for their legal workplace addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement; and
- 3) require a representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to complete, every two years, an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment for their legal workplace, to be provided to the Law Society.

(Hereinafter the “Recommendations”)

Our opinion is organized as follows:

1. Executive Summary

The Law Society has identified a significant problem in the lawyer and paralegal professions: widespread barriers experienced by racialized licensees at all stages of their careers. In its Final Report, the Working Group noted, at page 4:

The qualitative and quantitative data the Working Group obtained from the engagement process identified widespread barriers experienced by racialized licensees within the legal professions at all stages of their careers.

The Working Group has proposed several recommendations, in particular, Recommendation 3, dealing with the Adoption of Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Principles and Practices. The Law Society has asked us to determine whether the three specific recommendations under Recommendation 3 are inconsistent with the Law Society Act (“LSA”), the Ontario Human Rights Code (“Code”), and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms (“Charter”). We have concluded as follows:

- Recommendation 3(1) is consistent with the rights and obligations of the Law Society and its licensees under the LSA, the Code, and the Charter. The Law Society has an obligation to promote human rights in the legal profession and licensees are already bound by human rights equality, diversity and inclusion principles under their respective professional rules of conduct and the Code.

The implementation challenge that we envisage is that, for in-house licensees or licensees working in government, their employer may already have a human rights policy in place so there may be inconsistencies between the employer’s policy and the licensee’s statement of principles. While we describe this as a “challenge,” the challenge may be more apparent than real.

- Recommendation 3(2) is consistent with the rights and obligations of the Law Society and its licensees under the LSA, the Code, and the Charter assuming that the “representative” referred to in the Recommendation is a licensee of the Law Society and assuming that the intended benefit of such a human rights/diversity policy is limited in its application to licensees only. We recommend that the Working Group amend this Recommendation to clarify the above limits and application of the Recommendation.

While we acknowledge that Recommendation 3(2) may face some implementation challenges, we do not see them as insurmountable. We note that Recommendation 3(2) uses the word “maintain,” which we interpret as meaning “maintenance of” or “providing support to.” However, “maintain” does not necessarily mean making decisions under the policy. We suggest that the measure of whether the representative is implementing and maintaining the human rights/diversity policy be based on effort and not purely on outcome.

- Recommendation 3(3) is consistent with the rights and obligations of the Law Society and its licensees under the LSA, the Code, and the Charter assuming that the “representative” referred to in the recommendation is a licensee of the Law Society and assuming that the intended benefit of the self-assessment is limited in its application to licensees only. We recommend that the Working Group amend this Recommendation to clarify the above limits and scope of application to the Recommendation.

We acknowledge that nothing in Recommendation 3(3) can compel an employer (who is not a licensee) to complete and submit a self-assessment for its workforce. Rather, this Recommendation simply requires a representative licensee in a given legal workplace of 10 licensees or more to conduct a self-assessment amongst licensees and report their findings to the Law Society. This is more akin to a licensee completing their annual report for the Law Society, but in a collaborative way with all other licensees in their workplace.

We determined that, under the LSA, the Law Society and its licensees have the following relevant rights and obligations:

- The Law Society has a duty to advance the cause of justice and the rule of law.
- The Law Society has a duty to facilitate access to justice for the people of Ontario.
- The Law Society has a duty to protect the public interest.
- The Law Society has a duty to act in a timely, open and efficient manner.
- Regulation should be proportionate to the regulatory objectives intended.
- Licensees have a duty to discharge all their professional responsibilities including to other members of the profession honourably and with integrity.
- Licensees have a special responsibility to recognize the diversity of the Ontario community and to respect human rights.
- Licensees have a duty to advance the goals of the legal profession.

- Lawyers should not hesitate to speak out against an injustice.
- Licensees have a special responsibility to respect the requirements of human rights including with respect to the professional employment of others in the profession and with respect to licensees' employment practices.
- The Law Society has historically acted to remove obstacles to the profession and to provide previously excluded groups the opportunity to become members of the profession.

The Law Society's regulatory authority under the LSA extends to regulating licensees. The Law Society does not have authority to regulate non-licensees or other types of enterprises. However, there is nothing in the LSA that prohibits the Law Society from regulating licensees that are employed "in-house" or in government legal departments.

Human rights law in Ontario is governed by the Code. The Code applies to every person in Ontario, including public and private institutions and businesses. The Code regulates conduct in certain social areas and in respect of certain prohibited grounds. It does not regulate thought, belief, or conscience. Individuals are free to think and believe what they want including disagreeing with the precepts of equality and non-discrimination in the Code; however, it is at the point of conduct that their freedom is constrained.

The Code has primacy over any other statute in Ontario (generally, in cases of conflict, other legislation must conform to the Code); and is viewed by the courts as being quasi-constitutional in nature because of its unique and fundamental importance.

The rights and obligations deriving from the Code that are applicable to the Law Society and its licensees are as follows:

- Licensees have the right to be free from discrimination on the basis of race (and any other enumerated ground of discrimination) in their employment (which includes hiring and promotion), in contracts (which might include partnership agreements), and in vocational associations (including membership in the Law Society). This right of a licensee to be free from discrimination in employment entails the corollary, namely, that employers of licensees have a duty under the Code to ensure a discrimination-free environment for its licensees.

- Licensees also have obligations not to discriminate against members of the public who seek out or retain their legal services, or with regard to one another in their employment.
- Licensees also have a right not to be forced to disclose a human rights ground, such as their sexual orientation, age or disability, since such disclosure would have a disproportionate impact on certain Code-protected groups and has, historically, led to discrimination.
- The Law Society has an obligation not to discriminate against its members. Under the Code, promoting equality, diversity and inclusion is not inconsistent with this obligation.

The Charter is part of the Constitution of Canada. It is the supreme law of the land and all federal and provincial/territorial laws, and government action under those laws, must comply with the Charter. Law societies may be subject to the Charter where they are exercising statutory authority. In Doré v Barreau du Québec (“Doré”), the Supreme Court directed that law societies must take Charter values into account in their discretionary regulatory decisions.

The Charter applies to the Law Society’s Recommendations and how they will impact licensees. Per Doré, a court or tribunal would examine whether the Law Society has sufficiently balanced its statutory objectives against licensees’ Charter rights and freedoms.

The Charter values that appear to be implicated are: freedom of conscience; freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression; freedom of association; right to liberty; and the right to equality. It is conceivable that a licensee may assert that some or all of the above constitutional rights and freedoms are compromised by the implementation of the Recommendations. However, the Recommendations sufficiently represent a balancing of the Law Society’s statutory objectives (which include ameliorating discrimination) and protecting licensees’ constitutional rights. If the Recommendations are challenged from the perspective that they constitute discrimination against non-equity seeking groups, the Law Society would likely be able to characterize its equity, diversity and inclusion initiatives as an ameliorative program, defensible under section 15(2) of the Charter.

Perfection can be the enemy of the good. The Law Society should be careful not to see only problems in the implementation of the Recommendations where, in fact, opportunities to make progress through the Recommendations exist.

2. Our Approach

We consider it helpful to indicate what our opinion entails. We are being asked about whether the Recommendations are inconsistent with the rights and obligations of the Law Society and its licensees under the three statutes. While the question does not ask us to opine directly on whether the Recommendations are workable in practice, our opinion ultimately entails an examination of the Law Society's regulatory reach, particularly beyond licensee firms and into corporations and governments where licensees work, yet where the Law Society has no control.

The Law Society is interested in knowing whether the Recommendations can be implemented given that the Law Society does not regulate non-licensees, yet the Recommendations appear on their face to require licensees to promote certain principles, develop / implement / maintain a policy, and report to the Law Society in respect of their "legal workplaces." We are asked whether the implementation of the Recommendations can be reconciled with the principle that the Law Society has no power to regulate non-licensees, corporations or governments.

Recommendations 3(2) and 3(3) refer specifically to "legal workplaces" which is a term that is not defined, including in any of the three statutes we were tasked with reviewing. In its Final Report, the Working Group noted an internal disagreement about the meaning of "legal workplace" and whether the Recommendations should apply in the same way to all types of legal workplaces:

Working Group members' opinions differ as to the definition of "legal workplace". The majority of Working Group members believe that all law firms, in-house legal departments, government legal departments, clinics and other practise settings in Ontario should be subject to the requirements outlined in the recommendations. Other members of the Working Group, however, believe that at this time, government legal departments and in-house legal departments should not be required to comply with the mandatory recommendations as government and in-house licensees are employees whose hiring, promotion and retention are client decisions. Government and in-house legal departments should, however, be encouraged to engage in the mandatory activities outlined in this report. The definition of "legal workplaces" used in the report is that of the majority perspective.<sup>1</sup>

In our legal review and analysis below, we bear in mind the above noted concern about the definition of “legal workplace” raised within the Working Group, and whether and how the Recommendations may apply to in-house counsel and licensees who work in government. It is vital to note that limiting and applying the Recommendations only to licensee firms misses the opportunity to effect change throughout the professions who work in diverse organizational settings. This was emphasized by the Working Group’s guiding principle:

The Working Group’s recommendations stem from an intention to create long lasting systemic change within the professions. The recommendations are put forward in an effort to support the Law Society’s ongoing commitment to ensure that both the law and the practice of law are reflective of all peoples in Ontario and that the professions are free of discrimination and harassment. The Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct speak to the special responsibility of lawyers and paralegals to adhere to the requirements of human rights laws in Ontario, including the obligation not to discriminate.<sup>2</sup>

We propose to look at the relevant rights and obligations under the three statutes first, and then apply those rights and obligations to the Recommendations we have been asked to review.

Unless otherwise noted, underlined passages indicate our own emphasis, as opposed to emphasis in the original.

3. The Law Society Act

A. Functions, Duties and Powers of the Law Society

The Law Society is a not-for-profit corporation that derives its authority from its enabling statute the Law Society Act.<sup>3</sup> The LSA creates a framework of authority for the Law Society to regulate lawyers and paralegals in Ontario by way of legislated functions, duties and powers, including the power to make by-laws.

Section 4.1 of the LSA sets out the Law Society’s functions:

4.1 It is a function of the Law Society to ensure that,

(a) all persons who practise law in Ontario or provide legal services in Ontario meet standards of learning, professional competence and professional conduct that are appropriate for the legal services they provide; and

(b) the standards of learning, professional competence and professional conduct for the provision of a particular legal service in a particular area of law apply equally to persons who practise law in Ontario and persons who provide legal services in Ontario.

Section 4.2 of the LSA sets out the principles to be applied by the Law Society:

4.2 In carrying out its functions, duties and powers under this Act, the Law Society shall have regard to the following principles:

1. The Law Society has a duty to maintain and advance the cause of justice and the rule of law.
2. The Law Society has a duty to act so as to facilitate access to justice for the people of Ontario.
3. The Law Society has a duty to protect the public interest.
4. The Law Society has a duty to act in a timely, open and efficient manner.
5. Standards of learning, professional competence and professional conduct for licensees and restrictions on who may provide particular legal services should be proportionate to the significance of the regulatory objectives sought to be realized.

We consider the Recommendations to fall within the Law Society's regulation of "professional conduct," although some may consider that the Recommendations relate as well to professional competence or standards of learning that are necessary for licensees in a pluralistic society.

We note that, with respect to section 4.2 of the LSA, the Law Society's duty is not just to maintain but also advance the cause of justice and the rule of law; and that it must do so in a timely, open and efficient manner. It appears that acting in an untimely manner, or simply maintaining the status quo which perpetuates injustice would be contrary to the principles that govern the Law Society in the conduct of its functions. Finally, on this point, we note that the Law Society should regulate in a manner proportionate to the significance of the regulatory objectives sought to be realized.

The recommendations we are asked to look at refer to a “licensee,” which is defined in the LSA as:

- (a) a person licensed to practise law in Ontario as a barrister and solicitor, or
- (b) a person licensed to provide legal services in Ontario.<sup>4</sup>

B. Rules of Conduct for Licensees

The Law Society’s Rules of Professional Conduct and Paralegal Rules of Conduct (collectively, the “Rules of Conduct”) set out the standards of professional conduct for lawyers and paralegals, respectively.<sup>5</sup>

The Rules of Conduct and their Commentaries indicate strong support for the principle that licensees have special duties and responsibilities in terms of recognizing diversity and respecting human rights. For example, the Rules of Professional Conduct state:

Rule 2.1-1 A lawyer has a duty to carry on the practice of law and discharge all responsibilities to clients, tribunals, the public and other members of the profession honourably and with integrity

Commentary

[4.1] A lawyer has special responsibilities by virtue of the privileges afforded the legal profession and the important role it plays in a free and democratic society and in the administration of justice, including a special responsibility to recognize the diversity of the Ontario community, to protect the dignity of individuals, and to respect human rights laws in force in Ontario.

The duty of a lawyer also extends to advancing the goals of the legal profession and improving the administration of justice.

<sup>5</sup> Under section 62(0.1) -10 of the LSA, Convocation may make by-laws regarding a Code of Professional Conduct and Ethics. Under section 120(b) of By-Law 3 (Bencher, Convocation and Committees), the Professional Regulations Committee has a mandate to provide policy options for Convocation’s approval in relation to the Rules of Professional Conduct. Under section 130-4 of By-Law 3, the Paralegal Standing Committee has the mandate to provide the equivalent for paralegals.

Rule 2.1-2 A lawyer has a duty to uphold the standards and reputation of the legal profession and to assist in the advancement of its goals, organizations and institutions.

Based on the concept that lawyers have greater responsibilities than private citizens and lawyers' special role in the community, lawyers' obligations to encourage public respect for, and to try to improve the administration of justice, extends beyond their professional activities.

Rule 5.6-1 A lawyer shall encourage public respect for and try to improve the administration of justice.

Commentary

[1] The obligation set out in the rule is not restricted to the lawyer's professional activities but is a general responsibility resulting from the lawyer's position in the community. A lawyer's responsibilities are greater than those of a private citizen. A lawyer should take care not to weaken or destroy public confidence in legal institutions or authorities by irresponsible allegations. The lawyer in public life should be particularly careful in this regard because the mere fact of being a lawyer will lend weight and credibility to public statements. Yet for the same reason, a lawyer should not hesitate to speak out against an injustice.

Non-Discrimination Rule: Rule 6.3.1 deals specifically with lawyers' special responsibility not to discriminate including with respect to the professional employment of licensees:

6.3.1-1 A lawyer has a special responsibility to respect the requirements of human rights laws in force in Ontario and, specifically, to honour the obligation not to discriminate on [grounds prohibited in the Code] with respect to professional employment of other lawyers, articulated students, or any other person or in professional dealings with other licensees or any other person.

Moreover, Rule 6.3.1 contains a comprehensive Commentary section, fleshing out a lawyer's human rights duties and responsibilities. Key points from the commentary are:

Commentary

[1] The Law Society acknowledges the diversity of the community of Ontario in which lawyers serve and expects them to respect the dignity and worth of all persons and to treat all persons equally without discrimination.

[2] This rule sets out the special role of the profession to recognize and protect the dignity of individuals and the diversity of the community in Ontario.

And, further, Rule 6.3.1 states:

Rule 6.3.1-2 A lawyer shall ensure that no one is denied services or receives inferior service on the basis of the grounds set out in this rule.

Rule 6.3.1-3 A lawyer shall ensure that their employment practices do not offend rule 6.3.1-1 and 6.3.1-2.

Section 2.03 of the Paralegal Rules of Conduct contains a similar requirement to acknowledge and abide by human rights laws in Ontario with respect to both the provision of services to the public and employment practices.

C. Judicial Commentary on the *Law Society Act

In Trinity Western University v The Law Society of Upper Canada,<sup>6</sup> the Divisional Court held that a complete reading of the LSA shows that the Law Society is empowered to carry out more functions than just the one set out in s. 4.1 and that:

[58] For all of these reasons, therefore, we conclude that the principles that are set out in s. 4.2, and that are to govern the respondent's exercise of its functions, duties and powers under the Law Society Act, are not restricted simply to standards of competence. Rather, they engage the respondent in a much broader spectrum of considerations with respect to the public interest when they are exercising their functions, duties and powers, including whether or not to accredit a law school.

[96] In addition to those realities, we are satisfied that, in carrying out its mandate under its enabling statute, the respondent, throughout its long history, has acted to remove obstacles based on considerations, other than ones based on merit, such as religious affiliation, race, and gender, so as to provide previously excluded groups the opportunity to obtain a legal education and thus become members of the legal profession in Ontario.

[97] In keeping with that tradition, throughout those many years, the respondent has acted to remove all barriers to entry to the legal profession save one – merit. It is the respondent's position that it is in the public interest to ensure that the legal profession is open to everyone. It views that approach as being fundamental to its functions. In adopting that position, the respondent says that it achieves two companion objectives. One is to ensure diversity in the legal profession. The other is that, if the legal profession is open to everyone then, perforce, it is open to "the best and the brightest".

On appeal of that decision, the Ontario Court of Appeal grappled with section 4.1 and 4.2 of the LSA, finding that:

[108] I agree with Ms. Kristjanson's analysis and the Divisional Court's conclusion. There is no wall between ss. 4.1 and 4.2 of the LSA. The LSUC has an obligation to govern the legal profession in the public interest: see Groia v. Law Society of Upper Canada, 2016 ONCA 471 (CanLII), at para. 89. In setting and maintaining standards of learning, professional competence and professional conduct under s. 4.1 of the LSA, the LSUC is entitled to do so against the backdrop of the composition of the legal profession, including the desirable goal of promoting a diverse profession.

[110] That the LSUC is also subject to the Charter and the HRC means that Charter and human rights values must inform how the LSUC pursues its stated objective of ensuring equal access to the profession.<sup>7</sup>

The Court of Appeal also noted a key component of the Divisional Court's reasons that:

...in assessing the "public interest", the LSUC is entitled to consider that the impact of TWU's Community Covenant on members of the LGBTQ community is contrary to the equality rights protections in the Charter and the HRC;<sup>8</sup>

Similarly, we might say that in its duty to advance the cause of justice, the Law Society is entitled to consider that the impact of systemic barriers on racialized licensees in the legal professions is contrary to their equality rights protections in the Charter and the Code.

<sup>7</sup> Trinity Western University v The Law Society of Upper Canada, 2016 ONCA 518 ["TWU"].

D. Summary of the Law Society Act

Our review of the LSA, the Rules of Conduct and relevant judicial commentary indicates that:

- The Law Society has a duty to advance the cause of justice and the rule of law.
- The Law Society has a duty to facilitate access to justice for the people of Ontario.
- The Law Society has a duty to protect the public interest.
- The Law Society has a duty to act in a timely, open and efficient manner.
- Regulation should be proportionate to the regulatory objectives intended.
- Licensees have a duty to discharge all their professional responsibilities including to other members of the profession honourably and with integrity.
- The Law Society's exercise of its functions, duties and powers are not restricted simply to standards of competence and engage a much broader spectrum of considerations with respect to the public interest.
- Licensees have a special responsibility to recognize the diversity of the Ontario community and to respect human rights.
- Licensees have a duty to advance the goals of the legal profession.
- Lawyers should not hesitate to speak out against an injustice.
- Licensees have a special responsibility to respect the requirements of human rights including with respect to professional employment of others in the profession and with respect to licensees' employment practices.
- With the desirable and legitimate goal of ensuring diversity in the profession, the Law Society has historically acted to remove obstacles to the profession and to provide previously excluded groups the opportunity to become members of the profession.

4. The Ontario Human Rights Code

Human rights law in Ontario is governed by the Human Rights Code.<sup>9</sup> The Code applies to every person in Ontario, including both public and private institutions and businesses. "Person" is broadly defined and includes an individual as well as a corporation.<sup>10</sup>

The Preamble to the Code states that it is public policy in Ontario to recognize the dignity and worth of every person and to provide for equal rights and opportunities without discrimination.

The Code aims to create a climate of understanding and mutual respect for the dignity and worth of each person.

The Code provides protection from discrimination in the following five “social areas”:

- employment
- goods, services and facilities
- accommodation (housing)
- membership in a vocational association (including a self-governing profession)
- contracts

There are 17 “prohibited grounds” of discrimination under the Code:

- race, ancestry, place of origin, colour, ethnic origin
- citizenship
- creed
- sex
- sexual orientation
- gender identity
- gender expression
- disability
- age
- marital status
- family status
- receipt of public assistance (in accommodation only)
- record of offences (in employment only)

The Code regulates conduct in the above social areas and in respect of the prohibited grounds. It does not regulate thought, belief, or conscience. This point cannot be overstated. Individuals are free to think and believe what they want including disagreeing with the precepts of equality and non-discrimination in the Code; however, it is at the point of conduct that their freedom is constrained. The Supreme Court of Canada explained this succinctly: “The freedom to hold beliefs is broader than the freedom to act on them.”<sup>11</sup> In other words, people are entitled to hold prejudicial views; but they are not entitled to act upon them (i.e. discriminate) in the social areas identified in the Code.

The Code has primacy over any other statute in Ontario (generally, in cases of conflict, other legislation must conform to the Code); and is viewed by the courts as being quasi-constitutional in nature because of its unique and fundamental importance.<sup>12</sup>

The Code prohibits both direct and indirect discrimination. Section 9 of the Code provides that: “No person shall infringe or do, directly or indirectly, anything that infringes a right under this Part.”

The sections of the Ontario Code that are germane to this opinion are:

- Section 1 (equal treatment without discrimination in services);
- Section 5 (equal treatment without discrimination in employment);
- Section 6 (equal treatment without discrimination in the area of vocational associations, which includes membership in a self-governing profession);
- Section 14 (special programs)

The Code makes specific provision for the implementation of a special program designed to ameliorate discrimination and disadvantage. Section 14 of the Code states:

14. (1) A right under Part I is not infringed by the implementation of a special program designed to relieve hardship or economic disadvantage or to assist disadvantaged persons or groups to achieve or attempt to achieve equal opportunity or that is likely to contribute to the elimination of the infringement of rights under Part I.

In Carter v Elementary Teachers Federation of Ontario, the Human Rights Tribunal of Ontario held:

[24] Section 14 of the Code is a complete defence to an allegation of discrimination when the challenge to the program comes from someone whose needs do not fall within the purpose or underlying rationale of the program (Ball v. Ontario (Community and

<sup>12</sup> Code, s. 47(2). See also: Tranchemontagne v Ontario (Directors, Disability Support Program), 2006 SCC 14 at para 33 [“Tranchemontagne”]. The Court cites Battlefords and District Co-operative Ltd v Gibbs, [1996] 3 SCR 566 at para 18 and Insurance Corp of British Columbia v Heerspink, [1982] 2 SCR 145 at 158.

Social Services), 2010 HRTO 360 (CanLII) (at para. 123). In Ontario (Human Rights Commission) v. Ontario (1994), 1994 CanLII 1590 (ON CA), 19 O.R. (3d) 387 (C.A.) (“Roberts”), at page 401, the court stated that the exemption of section 14 is invoked when the challenge to the program comes from a member of a historically privileged group. A special program can only be challenged by a member of a disadvantaged group that the special program is designed to assist, but who is otherwise excluded from that program (on the basis of age, for example).<sup>13</sup> (Emphasis in original)

The rights and obligations deriving from the Code that are applicable to the Law Society and its licensees are as follows:

- Licensees have the right to be free from discrimination on the basis of race (and any other enumerated ground of discrimination) in their employment (which includes hiring and promotion), in contracts (which might include partnership agreements), and in vocational associations (including membership in the Law Society). This right of a licensee to be free from discrimination in employment entails the corollary, namely, that employers of licensees have a duty under the Code to ensure a discrimination-free environment for its licensees.<sup>14</sup>
- Licensees also have obligations not to discriminate against members of the public who seek out or retain their legal services, or with regard to one another in their employment.
- Licensees also have a right not to be forced to disclose a human rights ground, such as their sexual orientation, age or disability, since such disclosure would have a disproportionate impact on certain Code-protected groups and has, historically, led to discrimination. In the section below dealing with Recommendation 3(3) (self-assessment survey) we deal with the question of whether asking individuals to self-disclose is inconsistent with the Code.
- The Law Society has an obligation not to discriminate against its members. In the section below dealing with Recommendation 3(1) (adopt and abide by a set of principles) we deal with the question of whether this obligation extends to “promoting equality, diversity and inclusion” in the professions.

5. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms

The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms<sup>15</sup> is part of the Constitution of Canada. It is the supreme law of the land and all federal and provincial/territorial laws, and government action under those laws, must comply with the Charter. The Charter does not directly regulate private activity or activity where there is no state involvement. Law societies and quasi-governmental institutions like universities may be subject to the Charter where they are found to be implementing a specific governmental policy or program, or exercising statutory authority.<sup>16</sup>

In Mahmud Jamal’s legal opinion on the Charter,<sup>17</sup> provided to Convocation in the context of TWU’s request for accreditation, he explained how the Law Society may be subject to the Charter:

The Charter may apply to an organization such as the Society as part of the apparatus of government or as a delegate of statutory authority. Even though the Society is insufficiently linked to or controlled by government to be considered part of its apparatus (given the independence of the bar), the Charter applies to the Society when it exercises its statutory discretion to set the requirement for licensing under the LSA. The Society must in these instances reach a decision that is consistent with the Charter.

Mr. Jamal’s opinion went on to describe the impact of the Supreme Court’s decision in Doré v Barreau du Québec:<sup>18</sup>

In Doré, the Court had to decide whether the Disciplinary Council of the Barreau du Québec had failed to respect a lawyer’s freedom of expression under s. 2(b) of the Charter when it decided to reprimand him for writing an inflammatory letter to a judge

after a court hearing. In addressing this issue, the Court took the opportunity to clarify “how to protect Charter guarantees and the values they reflect in the context of adjudicated administrative decisions.”

The Court held that administrative decision-makers must consider the Charter when they exercise discretion granted under statutory authority. The Court stated that “administrative decision-makers must act consistently with the values underlying the grant of discretion, including Charter values.” The Court embraced what it called a “richer conception of administrative law, under which discretion is exercised ‘in light of constitutional guarantees and the values they reflect’”, such that “administrative decisions are always required to consider fundamental values.” The Court stated that “administrative bodies are empowered, and indeed required, to consider Charter values within their scope of expertise.”

Doré also provides guidance on how the Charter applies when a decision-maker exercises discretion granted under statutory authority. The Court stated that, fundamentally, a statutory decision-maker must “balance the Charter values with the statutory objectives.” This involves a two-step process:

At the first stage, “the decision-maker should first consider the statutory objectives.”

At the second stage, “the decision-maker should ask how the Charter value at issue will best be protected in view of the statutory objectives.” This “requires the decision-maker to balance the severity of the interference of the Charter protection with the statutory objectives.”

The Court explained that this decision-making process is fundamentally about ensuring “balance and proportionality.” That is, the decision-maker must strike “an appropriate balance between rights and objectives” to ensure that the “rights at issue are not unreasonably limited.” Put differently, the decision-maker must ensure that any decision “interferes with the relevant Charter guarantee no more than is necessary given the statutory objectives.”

In Doré and TWU, the Barreau du Québec and the Law Society respectively were making specific discretionary decisions that would directly impact a licensee (or potential licensee). Here, the Law Society is engaged in a similar kind of exercise, the imposition of conditions on licensees in relation to their acknowledgment and promotion of equality, diversity and inclusion principles, and certain reporting requirements. Accordingly, we believe that Doré applies.

The first stage of the analysis, considering the statutory objectives, has already been done (see the above section on Summary of the LSA). The Law Society is pursuing a statutory mandate to advance justice in the public interest to eradicate barriers for racialized licensees, and others, in the legal professions.

The second stage involves identifying the Charter values at issue and determining if the Law Society has struck the appropriate balance to ensure Charter rights are not unreasonably limited. In Doré, the Supreme Court clarified that, to determine whether administrative decision-makers have exercised their statutory discretion in accordance with Charter protections, the review should be in accordance with an administrative law approach (set out in Doré), not a s. 1 Oakes analysis. The standard of review is reasonableness.

The Charter values (and corresponding Charter sections) that appear to be implicated are:

- Freedom of conscience (s. 2a)
- Freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression (s. 2b)
- Freedom of association (s. 2d)
- Right to liberty (s. 7); and
- Right to Equality (s.15).

It is conceivable that a licensee may assert that some or all of the above constitutional rights and freedoms are compromised by the implementation of the Recommendations. The licensee could assert that, pursuant to the Recommendations, they must abide by a statement of principles that they may not believe in; hire, promote and associate with licensees they may otherwise avoid; and complete certain reporting activities that they would rather not. Further, the licensee may take the position that the Recommendations favour racialized and/or other equity seeking groups and, in that sense, discriminate against other licensees contrary to the equality provisions of the Charter.

On the last point, we are confident that the Law Society would avoid liability and be able to characterize its Recommendations as an ameliorative program, defensible under section 15(2) of the Charter. In R v Kapp, the Supreme Court held that:

[3] ...where a program makes a distinction on one of the grounds enumerated under s. 15 or an analogous ground but has as its object the amelioration of the conditions of a disadvantaged group, s. 15's guarantee of substantive equality is furthered, and the claim of discrimination must fail. ...<sup>19</sup>

With respect to the other Charter rights and freedoms, the question is whether the Recommendations strike the appropriate balance between removing barriers for entry and progression in the professions and licensees' constitutional freedoms. We think they do. The Divisional Court in Ontario, albeit in the TWU context, has already spoken favourably about the Law Society attempting to eradicate discrimination in its ranks:

[116] In exercising its mandate to advance the cause of justice, to maintain the rule of law, and to act in the public interest, the respondent was entitled to balance the applicants' rights to freedom of religion with the equality rights of its future members, who include members from two historically disadvantaged minorities (LGBTQ persons and women). It was entitled to consider the impact on those equality rights of accrediting TWU's law school, and thereby appear to give recognition and approval to institutional discrimination against those same minorities. Condoning discrimination can be ever much as harmful as the act of discrimination itself.

We provide further reasons for why the Recommendations likely satisfy the Doré requirement to balance statutory objective with Charter values in our discussion of the specific Recommendations below.

In summary, the Charter applies to the Recommendations and how they will impact licensees. Per Doré, a court or tribunal would examine whether the Law Society has sufficiently balanced its statutory objectives against licensees' Charter rights and freedoms. If the Recommendations are challenged from the perspective that they constitute discrimination against non-equity seeking groups, the Law Society would likely be able to characterize its equity, diversity and inclusion initiatives as an ameliorative program, defensible under section 15(2).

6. Analysis

Are any of the following recommendations – 3 (1), (2) and (3) – inconsistent with the rights and obligations of The Law Society of Upper Canada and its licensees under the Law Society Act, the Ontario Human Rights Code and/or the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

In this section we apply the rights and obligations of the Law Society and its licensees in the LSA, Code, and Charter to determine whether or not the Recommendations are inconsistent with these rights and obligations. We also identify any implementation challenges.

A. Recommendation 3(1)

The Law Society will... require every licensee to adopt and to abide by a statement of principles acknowledging their obligation to promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally, and in their behaviour towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public.

In our view, there is nothing inconsistent with Recommendation 3(1) having regard to the rights and obligations of the Law Society and its licensees under the LSA, Code, or Charter. The reality is that licensees are already bound by human rights equality, diversity and inclusion principles under the LSA, lawyer and paralegal Rules, and the Code. What Recommendation 3(1) would do, is:

- i. Require licensees to adopt a statement of principles regarding their own behaviour;
- ii. Require licensees to abide by and acknowledge their own statement of principles;
- iii. Require that the statement of principles acknowledges the obligation is to promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally; and
- iv. Specifically in their behaviour towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public.

We deal with each of these aspects in turn to determine if the proposal is inconsistent with the three statutes or raises implementation challenges.

i) Require licensees to adopt a statement of principles regarding their own behaviour

The Law Society is within its authority to require the adoption of a statement of principles since section 62 of the LSA provides Convocation with the power to make By-Laws including with respect to “prescribing oaths and affirmations for applicants for a license” and “authorizing and providing for the preparation, publication and distribution of a code of professional conduct and ethics.” By-Law 4 sets out the general requirements for issuing a license, which includes an applicant taking an oath.<sup>20</sup>

Furthermore, By-Law 3 of the Law Society creates and empowers the Professional Regulation Committee and Paralegal Committee to recommend, for Convocation’s approval, policy options in relation to the regulation of licensees, and creates and empowers the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee to develop policy options for the promotion of equity and diversity related to the practice of law and provision of legal services in Ontario.<sup>21</sup> In our view, the Law Society does not need to create a new By-Law specifically for a “Human Rights Statement of Principles.”

Conceptually, requiring licensees to adopt a human rights statement of principles is likely to make tangible, more personal and more readily accessible what is currently a generic human rights obligation towards the professions that already exists in the LSA, lawyer and paralegal Rules, and the Code.

ii) Require licensees to abide by and acknowledge their own statement of principles

Under this Recommendation, not only must licensees adopt a human rights statement of principles, but they must also abide by it. This represents licensees having to “walk the walk” in respect of their human rights obligations towards the professions. Once again, we do not see this as inconsistent, in any way, with licensees’ current obligations as outlined above, except the obligations would be specified in an “in-house” statement of principles document, not located in some regulatory document maintained by the Law Society.

iii) Require that the statement of principles acknowledges the obligation to promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally

The Final Report has identified a significant problem of system discrimination in the lawyer and paralegal professions:

---

<sup>20</sup> The Law Society of Upper Canada, By-Law 4, s. 8(1).

The qualitative and quantitative data the Working Group obtained from the engagement process identified widespread barriers experienced by racialized licensees within the legal professions at all stages of their careers.<sup>22</sup>

Recommendation 3(1) represents the Law Society taking action on this problem by requiring that every licensee effectively promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally. At first glance, this particular aspect of the Recommendation gave us pause. We wondered whether the obligation on licensees to “promote” equality, diversity and inclusion is something wholly different than a mere obligation to not discriminate; and further, we were uncertain what promoting equality, diversity and inclusion “generally” meant (discussed below).

We concluded that promoting means “to encourage” and encouraging equality, diversity and inclusion is indeed something more than not discriminating. It connotes taking an active, not passive, role. However, given statutory mandates to “advance the cause of justice,” “act in a timely manner,” and act “in the public interest” nothing in this Recommendation was inconsistent with the three statutes. We also do not think that the language of “promoting equality, diversity and inclusion” is so vague as to set an impossible standard of professional regulation. The Rules of Professional Conduct, for instance, contain other terms such as acting “honourably and with integrity,” which similarly have a broad meaning.

Recall that the Commentary to the non-discrimination Rule 6.3.1 speaks of “the special role of the profession to recognize and protect the dignity of individuals and the diversity of the community in Ontario,” and that Rule 6.3.1-2 requires that lawyers ensure that their employment practices do not offend the non-discrimination Rule. Also recall the Ontario Court of Appeal’s language in TWU that “the LSUC is entitled [in setting and maintaining standards of professional conduct] to do so against the back drop of the composition of the legal profession, including the desirable goal of promoting a diverse profession.”<sup>23</sup> Furthermore, since the Law Society has identified systemic barriers facing licensees as a significant problem, and eradicating those barriers as a goal, lawyers have a duty to advance that goal (Rule 2.1-2). Mandating promotion of equality, diversity and inclusion is within the scope of permissible regulation, not something outside of it.

iv) Promoting equality, diversity and inclusion “generally” versus “in their behaviour towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public”

We had difficulties interpreting the word “generally” in the Recommendation. Does the Recommendation mean that licensees have a general responsibility to promote equality, diversity and inclusion beyond their professional activities? This would be akin to a lawyer’s obligation, resulting from the lawyer’s position in the community, to encourage public respect for and to try to improve the administration of justice.<sup>24</sup>

Conversely, does the Recommendation mean that licensees must promote equality, diversity and inclusion in their professional practices only? Or does the word “generally” refer to the breadth and variety of the groups that are to be assisted under promotion of equality, diversity and inclusion? For instance, even though the focus of the Final Report is on racialized licensees, perhaps the Law Society is encouraging licensees to think of equality, diversity and inclusion in all its facets (gender, regional, income, etc.). Or alternatively, is the juxtaposition of “generally” and what follows meant to suggest that licensees have an obligation to promote equality, diversity and inclusion in their behaviour and other people’s behaviour towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public?

We recommend that the Law Society clear up this ambiguity but, without necessarily knowing the Law Society’s exact intention here, we feel that the present language is not inconsistent with the LSA or the Code.

With respect to the Charter, Recommendation 3(1) appears to balance the Law Society’s statutory objectives sufficiently with licensees’ constitutional rights and freedoms. The words “acknowledging their obligation to promote” suggest that freedom of conscience, and freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression are all constrained. However given that:

- equality and non-discrimination (s.15) is a Charter value itself;
- s.15(2) of the Charter permits an ameliorative program to combat discrimination;
- the LSA already incorporates a balancing requirement whereby professional regulation for licensees must “be proportionate to the significance of the regulatory objectives sought to be realized”;

---

- the statutory mandate of the Law Society includes non-discrimination as per the Code, which is quasi-constitutional legislation; and
- the special responsibility of licensees to respect human rights including with respect to professional employment of others in the profession, it appears that the Recommendation is not a disproportionate response to a serious problem.

The Law Society is not ordering licensees, as a condition of their license, to hire and promote racialized lawyers and paralegals. Rather, the Law Society is requiring licensees to adopt and abide by a set of principles which will inform how they approach recruitment, retention and promotion decisions. Systemically, Recommendation 3(1) is designed to create a new framework where licensees adopt a set of principles that is more likely to reduce or remove barriers for racialized licensees and other equity seeking groups in the legal professions, but it does not direct a particular hiring or promotion outcome in any given case.

The implementation challenge that we envisage is that, for in-house licensees or licensees working in government, their employer may already have a human rights policy in place so there may be inconsistencies between the employer's policy and the licensees' statement of principles. While we describe this as a "challenge," the challenge may be more apparent than real.

First, we assume that any human rights policy will promote ("encourage") equality. We cannot imagine a so-called human rights policy that promotes "inequality." Second, while many institutional human rights policies may not necessarily promote diversity and inclusion, it would be surprising if the licensees' new Law Society obligation to promote diversity and inclusion contradicts the corporation's or government's human rights policy. Finally, federal, provincial and municipal governments all now have diversity and inclusion principles so, upon closer examination, we do not believe that the implementation of this Recommendation places the licensee, or for that matter their employer, in conflict.<sup>25</sup>

We repeat, however, that in implementing this Recommendation the Law Society is not regulating the employer of the licensee. Instead, the Law Society is imposing upon licensees a new obligation, as per Recommendation 3(1), that is based on a duty that already exists arising from, inter alia, the Non-Discrimination Rule (Rule 6.3.1): a special responsibility to respect the requirements of human rights including with respect to the professional employment of others in the profession and with respect to licensees' employment practices.

B. Recommendation 3(2)

The Law Society will... require a representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy for their legal workplace addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement.

In our opinion, Recommendation 3(2) is consistent with the LSA, Code, and Charter assuming that the "representative" referred to in the recommendation is a licensee of the Law Society and assuming that the intended benefit of such a human rights/diversity policy is limited in its application to licensees only. We recommend that the Working Group amend this Recommendation to clarify the above limits and application of the Recommendation.

There are a variety of examples in the law where an employer is required to develop and implement a workplace policy. The Occupational Health and safety Act, for example, requires that an employer prepare policies addressing workplace violence and harassment, including workplace sexual harassment.<sup>26</sup> The Accessibility for Ontarians with Disabilities Act, 2005, requires certain organizations to develop, implement and maintain accessibility standards for persons with disabilities.<sup>27</sup> We note that there will be a subset of licensees in Ontario who work for federally regulated entities or the federal government that are already subject to the federal Employment Equity Act. The Employment Equity Act seeks to achieve employment equity in private sector employers as well as portions of the federal public administration in part through instituting "positive policies and practices... as will ensure that persons in designated groups achieve a degree of representation in each occupational group in the employer's workforce...."<sup>28</sup>

The Ontario Code has no such requirement to develop and implement a human rights or diversity policy. Notwithstanding this lack of statutory obligation, in our opinion it is not inconsistent with the Code for the Law Society to be proactive and require certain legal workplaces to do so.

First, the Ontario Human Rights Commission (the “Commission”) strongly encourages organizations to have an internal human rights policy for their workplace and the Commission has prepared two documents to assist organizations with developing human rights policies and procedures.<sup>29</sup>

Second, in the Human Rights Tribunal of Ontario’s (“Tribunal”) Form 2 (Response to an Application under Section 34 of the Human Rights Code), the Tribunal explicitly asks organizational respondents whether or not they have internal human rights policies related to the alleged discrimination.

Third, section 45.2 of the Code vests the Tribunal with a remedial power to make an order in the public interest and aimed at future compliance with the Code. In practice, this often translates into an order requiring an employer that is found to have violated a right under the Code to develop and implement a human rights policy if it does not already have one.

Thus, we can take from the above that the creation of a human rights and diversity policy under Recommendation 3(2) is consistent with the Code.

We also believe that Recommendation 3(2) represents a reasonable balancing between the Law Society’s statutory objectives, including with respect to advancing human rights, and licensees’ Charter rights. We do not take a position on what number of licensees should be present in each legal workplace before the obligation to maintain a human rights/diversity policy is engaged. However, for reasons similar to those explained in regards to Recommendation 3(1), we believe that Recommendation 3(2) is not inconsistent with the Charter. Requiring a group of licensees in a legal workplace to develop, implement and maintain a policy, while constraining their Charter liberty rights, among others, does not seem to attack the core of an individual’s liberty interests. Put another way, if a licensee were to define his or her liberty interest as “the right to do whatever I want to in my legal workplace,” even in the face of non-discrimination laws, that liberty interest is not the kind that has enjoyed much protection at law.

To the extent that someone may object to this requirement, the Law Society may look to avail itself of the Special Program exemption under the Code or the protection of section 15(2) under the Charter.

In summary, nothing in this Recommendation is inconsistent with the LSA, the Code, or the Charter so long as the representative in question is a licensee.

Notwithstanding our view that this Recommendation is consistent with the three statutes, we wish to comment on the issue of the Recommendation applying to a “representative of each legal workplace... to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy for their legal workplace....”

First, the Law Society has regulatory authority over licensees only. To the extent that this Recommendation purports to regulate a non-licensee “representative” it goes beyond the Law Society’s scope of authority. Thus, we recommend that the Working Group amend the wording of this recommendation to clarify that a “representative” must be a licensee.

Second, as noted above and in the Final Report, the term “legal workplace” is not defined in the LSA and remains a contentious term within the Working Group. We note that Recommendations 3(2) and 3(3) use the terminology “their legal workplace.” This suggests that the target of the Recommendations 3(2) and 3(3) is, or ought to be, the licensees in a licensee firm, corporation or government. With respect to Recommendation 3(2), once there are more than 10 licensees in an Ontario workplace (howsoever defined), the Recommendation would require that a licensee representative (i) develop; (ii) implement; and (iii) maintain a human rights/diversity policy for the benefit of the licensees in that workplace; (iv) with the specification that a minimum standard for the content of the human rights/diversity policy is that it address fair recruitment, retention and advancement.

We see the implementation of Recommendation 3(2) occurring along a spectrum: the further one moves away from law firms / paralegal firms, and the more employers object to the “licensees only” human right/diversity policy, the greater the challenge.

Let's start with the easy end of the spectrum: Recommendation 3(2) applying to a firm of lawyers and/or paralegals. The Law Society clearly regulates licensees so when the representative licensee is developing, implementing and maintaining the human rights/diversity policy, as required by the Law Society, the representative's actions can speak to and for the entire organization made up of licensees.

Moving further along the spectrum we next envisage the example of licensees employed by the Government of Ontario, which has its own human rights, diversity and inclusion principles and policies. There, the Law Society is not purporting to regulate the government, however, under Recommendation 3(2) a representative of those licensees (or multiple representatives if there are multiple workplaces) would be charged with developing, implementing and maintaining a human rights/diversity policy for those licensees which may or may not "bump up" against the government's human rights policy. While this scenario is clearly different than the law firm scenario, the implementation challenges may not be all that difficult if, in practice, it means that the representative can adopt or "tweak and adopt" the government's human rights/diversity policy assuming that the government's policy addresses "fair recruitment, retention and advancement" practices.

Moving even further along the spectrum, let's use the example of a large private corporation with 15 licensees with no human rights/diversity policy. In the extreme scenario, the corporate employer may reject outright and prohibit a licensee from developing, implementing and maintaining a human rights/diversity policy for licensees at its workplace. However, the employer would still be legally bound by the Code to ensure its employment practices are non-discriminatory, which, in effect, would require substantive compliance by the employer with the "unwritten" policy. We would envisage that the resolution of this issue may be left to discussions amongst the representative, the licensees, the Law Society and the corporation. We see outright non-cooperation with the Law Society's Recommendation 3(2) and the failure of a resolution a rather farfetched scenario.

In a less extreme scenario, while we do not think that the representative "developing" a policy just for the 15 licensees presents much of an issue, the employer may raise an issue around who controls the implementation of the policy; that is, the representative's vision of what that the policy means for the corporation's employment practices may diverge from the corporation's vision. We note that Recommendation 3(2) uses the word "maintain," which we interpret as meaning "maintenance of" or "providing support to." However, "maintain" does not necessarily mean making decisions under the policy. But even if we were to assume that "maintain"

included a decision-making role, we think the representative's role would be advisory and not necessarily determinative. For instance, with respect to the promotion of a racialized lawyer to a General Counsel position, the representative may, on balance, believe that the racialized lawyer is deserving of the position including based on an interpretation of the representative's human rights/diversity policy, whereas the corporation may see things differently. Does this mean that if the corporation places another candidate in the General Counsel position that the representative has failed to "implement and maintain" the licensees' human rights/diversity policy? We think not.

In both corporate employer scenarios described above, we believe that the concept of best efforts or, in the alternative, reasonable efforts, as opposed to outcome should be the correct measure of whether the representative has, in fact, complied with their regulatory obligation.

So, while we acknowledge that Recommendation 3(2) may face some implementation challenges, we do not see them as insurmountable so long as:

- (a) The representative is a licensee;
- (b) The target or beneficiaries of the human rights/diversity policy are only licensees; and
- (c) The measure of whether the representative is implementing and maintaining the human rights/diversity policy is based on effort and not purely on outcome.

We think that the Law Society should be candid about the impact and cultural change that it seeks to achieve by the implementation of Recommendation 3(2): requiring all entities that employ licensees, including corporations and governments, to use the proposed human rights/diversity policy and thereby be more self-conscious about the impact of their recruitment, retention and advancement decisions on racialized licensees. However, while this is the goal, it does not mean that the Law Society is now regulating these entities. The effects of the Recommendation should be distinguished from the Recommendation itself, which is limited in scope to licensees.

C. Recommendation 3(3)

The Law Society will... require a representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to complete, every two years, an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment for their legal workplace, to be provided to the Law Society.

In our opinion, Recommendation 3(3) is consistent with the LSA, Code, and Charter assuming that the “representative” referred to in the recommendation is a licensee of the Law Society and assuming that the intended benefit of the self-assessment is limited in its application to licensees only. We recommend that the Working Group amend this recommendation to clarify the above limits and scope of application to the Recommendation.

The Recommendation raises a few questions, including whether the intention is for a representative to complete a self-assessment of only licensees for their legal workplace, or of all employees at a legal workplace; would this create a mandatory requirement on licensees to answer the self-assessment or can a licensee opt not to answer, in similar fashion to the voluntary self-assessment contained in a licensee’s annual report?

In its Final Report, the Working Group provided further insight into the motivation behind and intention of this Recommendation:

- Legal workplaces would report to the Law Society on whether they had completed the self-assessment and, if not, explain their reasons for not having done so
- Recommendation 3(3) stems from an intention to have legal workplaces engage in dialogue and reflection on the current state of diversity and inclusion within their workplace, and an intention to encourage legal workplaces to work proactively to advance diversity and inclusion efforts<sup>30</sup>

To the extent that this recommendation would make it mandatory for every licensee (in a legal workplace of 10 or more licensees) to disclose personal information, it may run afoul of the Code unless they can opt out.

The Law Society already has a self-assessment demographic survey for licensees, but it qualifies the survey with it being voluntary, confidential and anonymous.<sup>31</sup> The survey asks about a licensee’s Francophone status, Indigenous status, ethnic identity, religion or creed, disability status, and sexual orientation. For each question there is an option to select “I do not wish to answer.” This type of survey is not inconsistent with either the Code or the Charter. And, if this type of survey qualifies as “completing” a self-assessment for a legal workplace, then there should be no concern.

<sup>31</sup> The Demographic Survey is part of the Law Society’s Lawyer Annual Report and the Law Society’s Equity Initiatives Department, made pursuant to section 62 of the LSA and By-law 8. Convocation approved the inclusion of the voluntary question in these reports at its May 2009 meeting.

It is also the view of the Ontario Human Rights Commission that seeking such demographic information is not a violation of the Code. The Commission makes recommendations for how to undertake such data collection to ensure it is compliant with the Code.<sup>32</sup> The Commission makes the following recommendations to collecting data in a Code-consistent way:

- Clearly set out a purpose that is consistent with the Code such as an intention to assist disadvantaged licensees in the profession;
- Advise why such information is being gathered and its potential uses;
- Inform how the data will be collected, steps that will be taken to protect privacy and confidentiality, benefits of collecting data, and progress reached in achieving stated goals and objectives;
- Consult with affected communities about the need for data collection and appropriate methodology;
- Use the least intrusive means that most respects the dignity and privacy of individuals: one means is self-identification, another is observation through a trained employee or external expert;
- Assure anonymity;
- Distinguish between collection, use and disclosure; and
- Comply with freedom of information and privacy protection legislation.

With respect to the Charter, Recommendation 3(3) appears to be very reasonable when it requires, only once every two years, the completion of an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment. It seems a stretch for a licensee to assert that their Charter liberty interest or freedom of conscience is constrained in a disproportionate manner.

We acknowledge that nothing in Recommendation 3(3) can compel an employer (who is not a licensee) to complete and submit a self-assessment for its workforce. Rather, this Recommendation simply requires a representative licensee in a given legal workplace of 10 licensees or more to conduct a self-assessment amongst licensees and report their findings to the Law Society. There is nothing inconsistent in this Recommendation with respect to the Law

<sup>32</sup> Ontario Human Rights Commission, Count me in! Collecting Human Rights-Based Data (Toronto: Ontario Human Rights Commission, 2010).

Society or its licensees' rights and obligations under the three statutes. We do not see the concern that requiring licensees in non-law firm settings somehow overreaches on the Law Society's regulatory authority; or that this Recommendation in any way places an obligation on non-licensees or their employer. Rather, this is more akin to a licensee completing their annual report for the Law Society, but in a collaborative way with all other licensees in their workplace.

7. Conclusion

The process of determining whether the Recommendations are inconsistent with the LSA, the Code and the Charter should begin by acknowledging the reality of the situation. That reality, according to the Final Report, is “widespread barriers experienced by racialized licensees within the legal professions at all stages of their careers”<sup>33</sup> As the Divisional Court noted in TWU, “condoning discrimination can be ever much as harmful as the act of discrimination itself.”<sup>34</sup>

It is unlikely that most licensees intend to discriminate. Yet, it is the impact of conduct on protected groups and not intention that counts. The Final Report concluded that systemic barriers for racialized licensees continue to persist. The Recommendations represent the Working Group's proposal to do something about the problem consistent with the Law Society's obligation to advance the cause of justice and the rule of law in the public interest. Whereas constraints and implementation challenges do exist, in terms of how far the Law Society can go, our review of the Recommendations suggests that they do not cross the line into impermissible professional regulation. They are not inconsistent with the LSA, the Code or the Charter. Some of the implementation challenges are more apparent than real and, in the most challenging scenario where employers and representatives disagree on the outcome of employment decisions, it does not mean that the representative has necessarily failed to abide by their professional obligation.

Perfection can be the enemy of the good. The Law Society should be careful not to see only problems in the implementation of the Recommendations where, in fact, opportunities to make progress through the Recommendations exist.

Pursuant to a notice of motion provided November 9, 2016, it was moved by Ms. Murchie, seconded by Ms. St. Lewis, that as it moves forward with implementation of the recommendations for racialized licensees, the Law Society will ensure that the policies, procedures, measures and initiatives are extended as appropriate to all equality-seeking groups while continuing to ensure that the needs of racialized licensees are fully acknowledged and addressed.

Carried

The Treasurer thanked members of the Working Group and staff for their hard work on this initiative.

THE LAW SOCIETY OF UPPER CANADA

Notice of Motion made pursuant to Section 93 of By-Law 3 [Benchers, Convocation and Committees]

Notice is hereby given of the following motion to be made at Convocation on December 2, 2016

Whereas the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group (the "Working Group") and racialized communities have taken a leadership role in developing recommendations for Convocation to address direct and systemic discrimination against racialized licensees;

Whereas the recommendations seek to create a framework for equality initiatives that are also valuable and should be extended to licensees from other equality-seeking communities who are not racialized;

Whereas extending the recommendations facilitates an intersectional approach that recognizes that racialized and other equality-seeking licensees are vulnerable to compounded inequalities as members of more than one equality-seeking community;

And whereas extension of the recommendations to acknowledge the intersectionality of disadvantage and discrimination ensures that data is sufficiently comprehensive to support the goals of the Working Group's Report;

Whereas the recommendations of the Working Group's Report as adopted by Convocation will be implemented by the Law Society through staff as overseen by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee and other committees as may be appropriate with input from the Equity Advisory Group and the Indigenous Advisory Group in the normal course;

I MOVE THAT:

As it moves forward with implementation of the recommendations for racialized licensees, the Law Society will ensure that the policies, procedures, measures and initiatives are extended as appropriate to all equality-seeking groups while continuing to ensure that the needs of racialized licensees are fully acknowledged and addressed.

FOR INFORMATION

LAW SOCIETY OF UPPER CANADA FINANCIAL STATEMENTS FOR THE NINE MONTHS ENDED SEPTEMBER 30, 2016

6. Convocation is requested to receive the third quarter financial statements for the Law Society for information.

Rationale

7. This is part of the quarterly financial reporting schedule to Convocation. These interim statements convey the performance of the Law Society before the end of the year. Unlike annual statements, interim statements are not audited.
8. The quarterly financial statements for the subsidiary, LibraryCo is included in this Committee material. The quarterly financial statements for the subsidiary, LAWPRO, will be presented to the Committee and Convocation after approval by LAWPRO's board.

Law Society of Upper Canada
Financial Statements
For the nine months ended September 30, 2016

Financial Statement Highlights

9. The Lawyer General Fund incurred a surplus of $4.8 million at the end of the third quarter of 2016, compared to a surplus of $2.6 million in 2015.
10. The Paralegal General Fund generated a surplus of $1.3 million at the end of the third quarter of 2016 compared to $945,000 at the end of the third quarter of 2015. For the year, the 2016 budget uses $340,000 of the General Fund accumulated surplus as a source of funding to mitigate a fee increase for paralegals.
11. As noted on the Schedule of Revenues and Expenses for the Lawyer and Paralegal General Fund the total surplus for the nine months is $6.1 million compared to a nominal deficit for the prorated budget for the period. In comparing revenues to budget, there are some large positive variances, specifically in the licensing process and other revenues such as late fees. In comparing expenses to budget, variances in the major income statement categories are all positive. While some variances from budget are attributable to timing differences, a surplus for the year is projected, although as set out on the Projection for the Year Ended December 31, the total lawyer and paralegal General Fund surplus is forecast to be closer to $4 million because of the weighting of some expenses towards the end of the year.
12. The Law Society's restricted funds report a deficit of $2.1 million (2015: deficit of $8.7 million). The deficit in 2015 was primarily in the Lawyer Compensation Fund and in the current year the deficit primarily comprises:
  - $927,000 in the Lawyer Compensation Fund as the claims from two major defalcations continue to be processed. The 2016 budget included a provision of $700,000 to replenish the lawyer Compensation Fund balance.
  - $2.2 million in the Invested in Capital Assets Fund, representing amortization.These deficits are slightly offset by a surplus of $895,000 in the Errors & Omissions Insurance Fund from investment income.

Potential Negative Variances

13. At the end of June, the Ontario Court of Appeal dismissed Trinity Western University's (TWU) appeal of the Divisional Court's decision, upholding the Law Society's denial of accreditation of TWU's proposed law school. TWU has requested the Supreme Court of Canada to hear an appeal. The timing and extent of costs for this process is uncertain.

14. There is at least a reasonable possibility that one or more cost awards from the Law Society's regulatory proceedings may be awarded against the Law Society but the amount of any losses cannot be reliably estimated at this time. The Society has determined that the ultimate settlement for these costs awards could range from nil to approximately $5 million, of which only $500,000 has been included in accrued liabilities.

Background

15. The Financial Statements are prepared under Generally Accepted Accounting Principles for Canadian not-for-profit organizations using the restricted fund method of accounting.
16. The Financial Statements for the nine months ended September 30, 2016 comprise the following statements:
  - Balance Sheet
  - Statement of Revenues and Expenses and Change in Fund Balances, detailing results of operations for lawyers and paralegals
  - Schedule of Restricted Funds
  - Supplemental schedules include Schedules of Revenues and Expenses for the Combined General Fund, Lawyer and Paralegal General Funds, the Compensation Fund, the Errors and Omissions Insurance Fund and a Combined General Fund Projection for the Year Ended December 31, 2016.

Statement of Revenues and Expenses and Change in Fund Balances

17. The Lawyer General Fund has a surplus of $4.8 million at the end of the third quarter of 2016, compared with a surplus of $2.6 million in the first nine months of 2015. As noted in the highlights, the reasons for this positive financial performance are spread across most revenue and expense categories. The 2016 budget incorporated $1.2 million in funding from surplus investment income in the E&O Fund which has not been used because of the General Fund surplus.
18. The Paralegal General Fund had a surplus of $1.3 million versus a surplus of $945,000 last year. The 2016 budget allocated $340,000 from the General Fund accumulated surplus to mitigate fee increase for paralegals. Actual use of these funds is contingent on results for the year.
19. The Law Society's restricted funds report a deficit of $2.1 million (2015: deficit of $8.7 million). The deficit in 2015 was primarily in the Lawyer Compensation Fund and in the current year the deficit primarily comprises:
  - $927,000 in the Lawyer Compensation Fund as the claims from two major defalcations continue to be processed. The 2016 budget included a provision of $700,000 to replenish the lawyer Compensation Fund balance.
  - $2.2 million in the Invested in Capital Assets Fund, representing amortization.

In the Errors & Omissions Insurance Fund, the current annual premium revenue typically matches current annual premium expenses. In 2016, revenue is higher than expenses for the first nine months due to investment income of $0.9 million and there has been no premium contribution under the insurance contract with LAWPRO to mitigate insurance premiums for lawyers.

The Capital Allocation Fund had $1.6 million in revenues and $1.5 million in expenses. The Law Society is in the third year of a three year, $8 million Information Technology capital plan.

20. Annual fee revenue is recognized on a monthly basis. One of the goals of having a three-year rolling budget is to stabilize fees and the 2016 budget maintained the annual fee for lawyers ($1,866) and paralegals ($996) at 2014 and 2015 levels although there were fluctuations in the individual fee components. Total annual fees recognized in the first nine months of the year of $58.1 million have increased slightly compared to 2015 because the number of lawyers and paralegals billed increased. Based on the number of new lawyers and paralegals to date, the increase in the number of licensees will exceed budget in 2016.
21. Revenue from insurance premiums and levies is recognized on a monthly basis. LAWPRO's base annual premium of $3,350 has not changed in recent years, with the increase in number of insureds leading to a slight increase in premium and levy revenue to $80 million.
22. Professional development and competence revenue comprises licensing process and continuing professional development revenue:
  - Lawyer licensing process revenue has increased by $500,000 to $9.3 million. This revenue also significantly exceeds the prorated budget for the year and the 2017 budget has been increased as a result of this experience. The total lawyer Licensing Process fee for 2015-2016, including the fees for the initial application, the Barrister and Solicitor Licensing Examinations and the Call to the Bar is $4,710, the same as last year. There is a higher number of licensing process candidates contributing to both the lawyer and paralegal licensing revenues. In addition, there is an increase in the number of candidates writing the exams multiple times. As noted in the expense section, the higher numbers have increased the expenses to administer exams.
  - At $1.6 million, paralegal licensing process revenue is nominally higher than last year and is more than the prorated budget for the year.
  - Through September 2016, CPD revenue of $5.2 million exceeds both the prior year comparative and the prorated budget by $500,000. Traditionally, the Fall is CPD's busiest period.
23. At $1.4 million, investment income continues the decreasing trend from previous years reflecting market conditions of low fixed income returns. The positive change in the fair value of investments ($1.4 million) compared to the loss in the comparative period also reflects market conditions.

24. Other income primarily comprises late fees, catering, monitoring & enforcement revenues, Ontario Reports and the LibraryCo administration fee.
25. Total regulatory expenses of $20.3 million are effectively the same as last year and are under budget with spending constrained throughout the division, in particular some unfilled staff positions. The additional resources approved by Convocation in February are being phased in. The projection for complaints received in the division during this year follows the trend of slight decreases over recent years although the 2016 budget noted other factors such as increasing case complexity. Outside counsel fees are a significant variable expense and are at lower levels than the prorated budget.
26. Total professional development and competence expenses have increased from $18.8 million to $19.5 million. As approved in the 2016 budget, CPD staffing increased with more resources devoted to program development and webcast services. As this increase phases in, total CPD expenses of $2.6 million are well under budget but slightly more than last year. In the Licensing Process, the higher candidate numbers have increased the expenses to administer exams. Also, there has been an increase in the number of candidates requiring special services, for instance rooms, chairs, proctors, software. At $7.7 million, Licensing Process expenses are slightly more than budget and last year. Ultimately, the licensing process anticipates a net favourable position compared to budget at the end of the year.
27. Corporate services expenses include Finance & the CEO, Facilities, the Client Service Centre, Information Technology, Office of the General Counsel (OGC) and Human Resources and have decreased from $17 million to $16.7 million.
28. Convocation, Policy and Outreach Expenses include Policy, Equity, Public Affairs, Bencher expenses and Communications and at $6 million are effectively the same as last year at this time. These expenses are under budget with bencher expenses being the biggest contributor to this variance although the timing of bencher remuneration and expenses is not regular and depends on submissions from benchers. The Society has received a $400,000 grant from the Law Foundation of Ontario funding the development and delivery of Access to Justice initiatives.
29. Service to members and the public expenses primarily comprise the Law Society Referral Service, Catering, CANLII and the Member Assistance Plan and total $3 million, slightly more than the first three quarters of 2015 and in line with the budget for the first three quarters of 2016.

Schedule of Restricted Funds

30. The Errors & Omissions Insurance (E&O) Fund accounts for the mandatory professional liability insurance program of the Law Society which is administered by LAWPRO. The insurance premium expense, as well as related levies and income from their investment are tracked within this fund. The Law Society is insured for lawyers' professional liability and recovers annual premium costs from lawyers through a combination of annual base levies and additional levies that are charged based on a lawyer's claims history, status, and real estate and litigation levies. The fund is reporting a surplus of $895,000 (2015 - $1.9 million deficit) due to investment income and the lack of any contribution in the current year to mitigate the base insurance levy for lawyers. Revenue from insurance premiums and levies is recognized on a monthly basis. LAWPRO's base premium of $3,350 has not changed from 2014, with the increase in number of insured's leading to a slight increase in premium and levy revenue to $80 million. Expenses in the Errors and Omissions Insurance Fund are consistent at $80 million.
31. The lawyer Compensation Fund annual fee income increased from $6.4 million in 2015 to $7.4 million in line with the increase in the levy from $225 to $254 per lawyer. The paralegal levy also increased. The Compensation Fund's total investment results have swung from a small loss to income of $1.3 million in 2016 due market conditions. Other income representing recoveries also substantially increased to $547,000. Recoveries do not follow a pattern.
32. The Compensation Fund continues to experience a high claims experience with provision for unpaid grant expenses increasing from $3.7 million in 2015 to $4.3 million in 2016. The Compensation Fund balance management policy was amended by Convocation in September.
33. County Libraries Fund revenues and expenses are relatively static at $5.7 million.
34. Use of the Parental Leave Assistance Plan, included in Other Restricted Funds, continues to decline with expenses of $120,000 in the first nine months of 2016 compared to $156,000 in 2015.

Balance Sheet

35. Cash and short-term investments have increased by $7 million to $61 million over the last twelve months after operating surpluses, capital transfers from portfolio investments and the investment manager adopting a conservative approach with an increased short-term orientation.
36. Most of the prepaid expense balance relates to annual E&O insurance premiums paid or payable for the year, which are expensed over the full year.

37. The Investment in LAWPRO totaling $36 million is made up of two parts. The investment represents the share capital of $5 million purchased in 1991 when LAWPRO was established, plus contributed capital of $31 million accumulated between 1995 and 1997 from a special capitalization levy by the Law Society.
38. Portfolio investments are shown at fair value of $67 million, compared to $70 million in 2015. The short-term components of these investments are re-categorized to the “cash and short-term investments” line on the balance sheet which have increased reflecting the investment manager’s asset mix. Approximately 20% of the portfolio is held in equity investments.
39. Deferred revenue ($47 million) is made up of annual fees, licensing process revenues and insurance premiums which are recognized over the full year with the increased balance at the end of September reflecting the increased underlying revenues in 2016.
40. Due to LAWPRO ($25 million) will decline by year-end as insurance premiums and levies collected are paid to LAWPRO.
41. The provision for unpaid grants of $21 million (2015 - $22 million) represents the estimate for unpaid claims and inquiries against the Compensation Fund, supplemented by the costs for processing these claims. The Fund continues to process some large alleged defalcations on the part of certain licensees. The Compensation Fund describes a major defalcation as being over 35 claims arising from the conduct of one licensee in a single year and the Fund currently has two of these major defalcations. In September, Convocation approved an increase in the individual grant limit from $150,000 to $500,000.
42. The paralegal Compensation Fund provision for unpaid grants comprises $178,000 of the total Compensation Fund provision for unpaid grants.
43. The Law Society Act permits a member who has dormant trust funds, to apply for permission to pay the money to the Society. Money paid to the Society is held in trust in perpetuity for the purpose of satisfying the claims of the persons who are entitled to the capital amount. At the end of September, unclaimed money held in trust amounts to nearly $5 million, compared to $4 million in the prior year.

Other Schedules

44. Supplementary budget to actual income and expense schedules for the Lawyer General Fund and the Paralegal General Fund are included. Significant variances have been analyzed above.
45. A supplementary income and expense schedule for the Compensation Fund is included with variances analyzed above.

46. A supplementary income and expense schedule for the E&O Fund is also shown with variances analyzed above.
47. A combined General Fund Projection for the Year Ended December 31, 2016 is also provided.

Conclusion

48. Overall, the first three quarters of the year have resulted in greater than projected revenues and less than projected expenses. The Law Society is on track to exceed its 2016 budget expectations, its financial position remains strong although claims against the Compensation Fund continue to reduce the fund balance.

TAB 10.2

FOR INFORMATION
LIBRARYCO INC. FINANCIAL STATEMENTS FOR THE NINE MONTHS ENDED
SEPTEMBER 30, 2016

49. Convocation is requested to receive the third quarter financial statements for LibraryCo Inc. for information.

Rationale

50. The quarterly financial statements have been presented to the LibraryCo Board.

LIBRARYCO INC.
FINANCIAL REPORT
For the nine months ended September 30, 2016

KEY POINT SUMMARY

Overall Results

51. Results for the third quarter identify a deficit of $5,968 compared to a budgeted deficit of $102,988 for the 9 months. The 2016 budget envisages a $143,000 deficit for the year through the use of the General Fund balance.
52. The positive variance from budget of $97,020 is spread across most expense categories particularly consulting fees, publications, the group benefit plan and the bursaries, capital and special needs expenses.

Revenues

53. The Law Society grant (line 1) includes amounts for central administration and quarterly transfers to the 48 libraries. The actual grant from the Law Society was $5.7 million and matched budgeted amounts for the period.
54. Interest Income (line 2) is earned on LibraryCo's cash and short term investments.

Expenses

55. Total expenses (line 16) were $5,725,491 compared to a budgeted total for the period of $5,849,489.
56. The administration expense (line 4) of $228,750 represents the fee paid to the Law Society and equals budget. The fee was reduced from 2015.
57. Professional fees (line 5) include audit expenses and consulting fees. The consulting fee budget remains unspent which has resulted in a positive variance of $13,095. Unspent amounts will be used to augment the budget for transition expenses.
58. Transition expenses (line 6) of $85,852 represents three of the four payments for a user needs survey. Expenses associated with the transition initiative are projected to exceed the total transition expense budget of $84,836 by approximately $40,000. The currently unused budget of $17,000 for consulting and positive variances in other expense accounts can be used to fund the full amount.
59. Other head-office expenses (line 7) include the production of the Annual Report, head office courier/postage costs, Directors and Officers insurance, bank charges, website maintenance costs, the cost of providing most libraries with a toll free telephone number and governance meeting expenses.

60. Totalling $13,449, other head-office expenses are lower than budget for the period by approximately $24,454 primarily as a result of underspending for the production of the Annual Report, board of directors' meetings, web initiatives, toll free telephone charges, and miscellaneous expenses.
61. Electronic product expenses of $254,250 (line 9) are in line with the agreement with LexisNexis and budget.
62. Group benefits and insurance (line 10) of $234,334 consist of the Group Benefits for enrolled library staff and library D&O and property insurance.
63. Group benefits and insurance are lower than budget by $21,818 as group benefits premiums are negotiated after the budget and these are budgeted conservatively. Based on the program's claims experience, a return of premium is unlikely in the current year.
64. Given that both the D&O and property insurance policies expired at the end of April, a conservative increase in insurance for the remainder of 2016 was also taken into consideration when budgeting for 2016.
65. Other centralized expenses (line 11) of $46,773 include continuing education bursaries for library staff, library courier costs for inter-library loans of materials, publications provided by the Law Society to each of the 48 law libraries, and the Federation of Ontario Law Associations' (FOLA) meeting expenses for their Library Committee.
66. Other centralized expenses are lower than budget by $22,352 due to underspending in continuing education bursaries, publications and courier costs.
67. County and District law libraries grants (line 13) are in line with budget at $4,857,573 and increased from 2015.
68. Bursaries, capital and special needs grants (line 14) of $25,766 consist of computer refreshment grants, special needs grants and conference bursaries for library staff. Computer purchases by the libraries during the year do not follow a pattern.

Balance Sheet

69. Short-term investments (line 2) of $402,159 consist of a one year GIC and accrued interest.
70. Accounts receivable (line 3) are long term disability benefits premiums paid by LibraryCo on the libraries' behalf for the past quarter. These receivables are usually repaid early in the next quarter.
71. Prepaid expenses (line 4) primarily represent the property and D&O insurance policies for LibraryCo and the libraries which were renewed at the end of April.

72. Accounts payable and accrued liabilities (line 6) are $16,675 higher than 2015 due to the accrual for Phase 5's third invoice.
73. The General Fund has increased to $247,113. The 2016 budget forecasted a decrease of $143,000 during the year however, based on information available at September 30, 2016, estimates for year-end show a decrease in the General Fund of approximately $70,000, meaning a projected General Fund balance at 2016 year-end of $183,000. LibraryCo's budget for 2017 envisages using $158,000 of this fund balance to finance operations next year.
74. The Reserve Fund has a balance at the end of September of $500,000 comprising a general component of $200,000, a capital and special needs component of $150,000, and a staffing and severance component of $150,000 in accordance with Board policy.

TAB 5.1

FOR DECISION

INDIGENOUS FRAMEWORK*Motion

4. That Convocation approve the Indigenous Framework for the Law Society, set out at Tab 5.1.1.

Introduction and Purpose

5. As stated in the Treasurer's September 22, 2017 Memorandum (Treasurer's Memorandum) to the Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee (EIAC), the promotion of equity and diversity must prioritize reconciliation with Indigenous peoples. The Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada's Final Report reminded us of the reality that Indigenous peoples have a "deep and abiding distrust of Canada's...legal systems". The Law Society can play a part in working towards reconciliation.

6. At the Treasurer's direction, the EIAC, in partnership with the Indigenous Advisory Group (IAG), has developed an Indigenous Framework. The Framework is before Convocation for approval as a document to guide the Law Society's work within its mandate on Indigenous issues and the relationship with the Indigenous community.
7. The Indigenous Framework represents the Law Society's work towards fulfilment of the Law Society's mandate, particularly in relation to access to justice, and the equity and other principles by which it regulates, in relation to legal and regulatory issues affecting Indigenous peoples.
8. It also represents progress towards reconciliation with First Nations, Métis and Inuit communities, whose members are licensees, clients, individuals who interact with the justice and legal systems, and Ontarians to whom the Law Society, in accordance with s. 4.2(2) of the Law Society Act, owes a duty to act so as to facilitate access to justice.

Background to Development of the FrameworkThe Indigenous Advisory Group (IAG)

9. Following the release of the 94 Calls to Action from the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada's Final Report (TRC Report), the Law Society expressed its desire to formally re-establish and strengthen its relationship with Indigenous people on justice issues.

10. Reaching out to the Indigenous Bar Association for support, an interim IAG was formed to begin addressing issues related to reconciliation and Indigenous issues as well as the development of a permanent IAG. In April 2016, this interim Indigenous Advisory Group provided Terms of Reference to EIAC and was introduced to EIAC members.
11. On June 23, 2016, this IAG was publicly announced at the Celebration of Indigenous Peoples event at the Law Society.
12. The IAG was established as an independent body to:
  - a. advise the Law Society on the unique issues faced by Indigenous practitioners, paralegals and Indigenous peoples in Ontario and to
  - b. promote the development of the relationships between Indigenous peoples and Canadian legal structures and institutions in a manner that respects Indigenous values, beliefs and legal systems.
13. The Terms of Reference of the Indigenous Advisory Group are attached at TAB 5.1.2.
14. To fulfill the Terms of Reference and mandate of the IAG, diverse representation amongst IAG members is key factor to facilitating discussion and decision on policies to address the wide ranging and unique realities that First Nations, Metis and Inuit communities and individuals across Ontario face in relation to the regulation of legal profession and access to justice. Thus, the IAG is inclusive of representatives from First Nations, Métis, Inuit communities that are located across the province, including southern and northern Ontario. Moreover, members are representative of the legal professions (lawyers and paralegals) and also include non-licensees. A range of experience is also key to maintaining balance within the group with experienced lawyers and early career representatives.
15. The IAG is also comprised of an Elders Council. Elders play central roles First Nations, Métis and Inuit communities. Among the many roles that Elders play, they hold significant wisdom in areas of traditional knowledge, are recognized as having that wisdom by their communities and Nations and have the capacity to transmit this knowledge to others. The role of the Elders Council is to establish a foundation of knowledge and wisdom to ground the IAG's efforts. The Elders Council also played a significant role in the formation of the IAG, having provided recommendations in relation to potential members.
16. As a key partner with the Law Society, the IAG, through the diverse voices of its membership and Elders Council, is helping to identify and assist the Law Society in making critical changes to the practices and policies of the Law Society that are reflective of the critical justice and regulatory issues that affect First Nation, Métis and Indigenous communities and peoples in Ontario.

The EIAC and IAG: Collaborative Development of The Indigenous Framework

17. In September 2016, the IAG and the EIAC embarked on a collaboration in the development of the Law Society's Indigenous Framework. It was also decided in late 2016 that the IAG, as a partner with EIAC, the Chair and members of the Elders Council would attend EIAC meetings to provide updates on the work of the IAG and to provide Indigenous teachings to the EIAC members. This informs the work of the EIAC and enhances the knowledge of EIAC members.
18. The EIAC and the IAG met in November 2016 to discuss the development of the Indigenous Framework and began the development of a Draft Indigenous Framework. In collaboration with staff, the EIAC and the IAG made progress on the Indigenous Framework throughout 2017. In early June, the IAG completed its work on the Framework, which was reviewed at the June meeting of the EIAC.

Key Features of the Indigenous Framework

19. The Treasurer's Memorandum indicates that one of the initiatives that is to be undertaken by the EIAC in collaboration with the IAG is the development of an "Indigenous lens to all we do at the Law Society". The Indigenous Framework is responsive to this direction as it outlines a series of principles that form the scope of this lens. As stated in the Indigenous Framework:

The IAG define the Indigenous lens as inclusive of the Anishinabe Seven Sacred Laws; the teachings of the Haudenosaunee of peace, respect, friendship and a good mind; Cree principles compliment the Seven Sacred Laws, are supported by the Métis and the 8 Inuit Qaujimajatuqangit guiding principles.

20. The Indigenous lens sets the Indigenous Framework on four foundational pillars, which provide perspective and guidance for the Law Society in its interaction with Indigenous peoples. These four pillars, which were distilled from priorities outlined in documents that informed the development of the Indigenous Framework (e.g. Treasurer's Mandate), include:

- Creating and Enhancing Cultural Competency
- Achieving and Improving Access to Justice
- Promoting and Supporting Knowledge of Indigenous Legal Systems

- Taking Action on Reconciliation

21. A number of things, described below, have informed the development of a foundation, now realized in the Framework, to guide the actions of the Law Society in relation to Indigenous issues.
22. They include the Law Society's 2009 *Final Report of the Indigenous Bar Consultation*, particularly around mentorship initiatives for Indigenous law students and licensees and the 94 Calls to Action outlined in the TRC Final Report, particularly those that provide direction to institutions and individuals on how to take action towards the achievement of reconciliation. It should be noted that a detailed response to the TRC Final Report is proposed within the priorities identified under the pillar of Taking Action on Reconciliation. This response is not to be limited to Calls to Action 27<sup>1</sup> and 28<sup>2</sup>, but is to include all matters identified in the report that intersect with the mandate of the Law Society. This includes but is not limited to issues such as cultural competency and equity for Indigenous people in the justice system.
23. The discussions within the Law Society between the EIAC, IAG and Law Society staff and information from events such as the 2016 Indigenous Bar Association Conference, where a review of Law Society functions in the context of reconciliation was led by the IAG Chair and members, have also been helpful in contributing to the content of the Indigenous Framework.
24. Critical provincial and national issues have also influenced the development of the Indigenous Framework, particularly those that intersect with justice issues, including but not limited to
  - a. the crisis of missing and murdered Indigenous women, girls and LGBTQ2S people and the current National Inquiry into Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls;
  - b. the Crisis of Indigenous Children and Youth in Care;

<sup>1</sup> We call upon the Federation of Law Societies of Canada to ensure that lawyers receive appropriate cultural competency training, which includes the history and legacy of residential schools, the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, Treaties and Aboriginal rights, Indigenous law, and Aboriginal– Crown relations. This will require skills-based training in intercultural competency, conflict resolution, human rights, and anti-racism.

<sup>2</sup> We call upon law schools in Canada to require all law students to take a course in Aboriginal people and the law, which includes the history and legacy of residential schools, the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, Treaties and Aboriginal rights, Indigenous law, and Aboriginal–Crown relations. This will require skills-based training in intercultural competency, conflict resolution, human rights, and antiracism.

- c. barriers to access to justice that disproportionately affect First Nations, Métis and Inuit peoples and the resulting and urgent need to accommodate the unique historical and cultural circumstances of Indigenous peoples and Indigenous approaches to conflict resolution in the justice system;
  - d. the overrepresentation of Indigenous people in legal proceedings, care and incarceration;
  - e. as identified in the TRC Final Report, “the need for lawyers to develop a greater understanding of Aboriginal history and culture as well as the multi-faceted legacy of residential schools”<sup>3</sup>; and
  - f. the historical suppression of and resonant need to support and promote Indigenous legal traditions, laws and their applications across Canada.
25. The EIAC and the IAG have also considered key policy and justice reports and documents that have been produced by provincial, national and international bodies, which are identified in Appendix A of TAB 5.1.1, in developing the Indigenous Framework.
26. Not unlike the TRC Final Report, many of these reports include recommendations that support improved relations between Indigenous and non-Indigenous peoples. These reports are provided in the Appendix to the Framework as they are critical in understanding the legacy of marginalization from contemporary discourse and action in relation to Indigenous peoples locally, nationally and globally, and the need to move forward to achieve equality and inclusion:
- Report of the Royal Commission on Aboriginal Peoples (also known as RCAP)
  - The Ipperwash Inquiry - Final Report
  - the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples
  - The Iacobucci Report – First Nations Representation on Ontario Juries

Next Steps

27. The Indigenous Framework provides the Law Society with a foundation to take action on reconciliation within the ambit of its mandate, which as the TRC states “is about establishing and maintaining a mutually respectful relationship between Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal peoples in this country".<sup>4</sup>

28. In moving forward with the Framework, the Law Society will collaborate with the IAG beginning in the summer on the development of a work plan to be derived from the Framework which will set the groundwork for the implementation of the Framework. The EIAC will report to Convocation on the progress of this work in the fall of 2017.

BACKGROUND

1. The Law Society of Upper Canada (Law Society), as a regulator of all lawyers and licensed paralegals in the province of Ontario, pursuant to its legislative mandate under the Law Society Act R.S.O. 1990, Chapter L.8 (the Act) must have regard to the following duties:
  - To maintain and advance the cause of justice and the rule of law;
  - To act so as to facilitate access to justice for the people of Ontario;
  - To protect the public interest;
  - To act in a timely, open and efficient manner; and
  - Standards of learning, professional competence and professional conduct for licensees and restrictions on who may provide particular legal services should be proportionate to the significance of the regulatory objectives sought to be realized
2. In 2000, consistent with the duties encoded in the Act, the Law Society established a standing committee of Convocation called the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee (now the Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee or EIAC)<sup>2</sup>, to develop policies, programs and initiatives to best serve and promote an inclusive profession. Subject to Convocation's approval, the EIAC's mandate is to develop policy options for the promotion of equity and diversity having to do in any way with the practice of law in Ontario or provision of legal services in Ontario and for addressing all matters related to Indigenous peoples and French-speaking peoples. As a best practice, the EIAC consults with Indigenous peoples, Francophone citizens and other communities in the development of such policy options.
3. As part of the Law Society's efforts over the years to consult with Indigenous peoples, a number of working groups and strategies have been established including Rotiio>taties<sup>3</sup> in 1998.
4. Rotiio>taties was an independent board of Elders, Indigenous lawyers<sup>4</sup>, community representatives and law students who advised various bodies, including the Law Society, on Indigenous issues arising in law and the legal profession. The membership of Rotiio>taties changed over the years until its eventual transition to an Aboriginal Working Group.

<sup>2</sup> By motion of February 9, 2017, EAIC amended its name to the Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee.

<sup>4</sup> At the time Rotiio>taties was created, paralegals were not yet licensees within the profession.

5. In 2009 Convocation approved the Final Report of the Indigenous Bar Consultation which identified a number of recommended actions the Law Society could undertake. These recommendations included:
  - Expanding the Members' Annual Report Practice Categories to include Aboriginal Law (to determine how many lawyers in Ontario self-identify as practicing Aboriginal law)
  - Mentoring and Networking Program
  - Continuing Legal Education Course in Aboriginal Law and Issues
  - Certified Specialist Program in Aboriginal Law<sup>5</sup>
6. In 2014, Convocation affirmed its commitment to place emphasis, through the EIAC, on Indigenous issues. In June 2016, the Indigenous Advisory Group<sup>6</sup> (IAG) was established as an independent body to advise the Law Society on the unique issues faced by Indigenous practitioners, paralegals and Indigenous peoples in Ontario and to promote the development of the relationships between Indigenous peoples and Canadian legal structures and institutions in a manner that respects Indigenous values, beliefs and legal systems.
7. In September 2016, the EIAC and the IAG committed to work collaboratively in the development of the Law Society's Indigenous Framework and on November 5, 2016, the EIAC and the IAG held a joint meeting to begin the development of this Indigenous Framework.

INTRODUCTION

8. The Indigenous Framework has been developed in accord with the priorities identified in three key Law Society documents:
  - Convocation's 2015-2019 Strategic Plan, as relevant to the EIAC's mandate;
  - Treasurer's Memorandum to the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee (September 22, 2016); and
  - Approaches for the Law Society of Upper Canada's Responses to the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada (TRC) Final Report (Sept. 2, 2016).<sup>7</sup>

9. The priorities identified in the above documents often intersect and coalesce, helping to shape this Framework into the following Four Pillars:
- Creating and Enhancing Cultural Competency
  - Achieving and Improving Access to Justice
  - Promoting and Supporting Knowledge of Indigenous Legal Systems
  - Taking Action on Reconciliation
10. The development of every initiative by the Law Society within any one of these Four Framework Pillars must be guided through an “Indigenous lens” in order to fully meet the objective of this Framework. The Treasurer, through his Memorandum to the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee, directed the EIAC to develop policies that will ensure an Indigenous lens to all the Law Society does.
11. The IAG define the Indigenous lens as inclusive of the Anishinabe Seven Sacred Laws ; the teachings of the Haudenosaunee of peace, respect, friendship and a good mind; Cree principles compliment the Seven Sacred Laws, are supported by the Métis and the 8 Inuit Qaujimajatuqangit guiding principles.<sup>8</sup> Such principles are :
- Love: To know love is to know peace.
  - Respect: To honour all Creation is to have respect
  - Courage: To face life with courage is to know bravery
  - Honesty: To walk through life with integrity is to know honesty
  - Humility: To accept yourself as a sacred part of Creation is to know humility
  - Wisdom: To cherish knowledge is to know wisdom
  - Truth: To know of these things is to know truth

THE FOUR FRAMEWORK PILLARS

CREATING AND ENHANCING CULTURAL COMPETENCY<sup>9</sup>

12. The Law Society will work in partnership with the IAG to create and enhance cultural competency recognizing the continued need for licensees to be equipped with the cultural, historical and legal knowledge that will enable the provision of legal services in a manner that supports Indigenous peoples in addressing their unique interests, issues and challenges.
13. The Law Society prioritizes life-long competence for lawyers and paralegals. The Treasurer's Memorandum to the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee further contextualizes this priority, and directs the EIAC to develop programs that will enhance cultural competence internally to the Law Society (staff, Benchers) and the profession (licensees) in dealings with Indigenous peoples.<sup>10</sup>
14. Specific proposed approaches towards supporting cultural competency are detailed in the Approaches for the Law Society of Upper Canada's Responses to the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada Final Report and include knowledge enhancements, working with the Federation of Law Societies of Canada and developing skills-based training and other supports.

I. Creating and Enhancing Knowledge

- a. Ensure Law Society staff and Benchers have the opportunity to access cultural competency training within the Law Society that includes unconscious bias, the history and legacy of residential schools, the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, Treaties and Aboriginal rights, Indigenous laws, Aboriginal-Crown relations and basic cultural protocols.
- b. Ensure licensees have the opportunity to access cultural competency training that includes the history and legacy of residential schools, the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, Treaties and Aboriginal rights, Indigenous laws, and Aboriginal-Crown relations and basic cultural protocols.
- c. Ensure licensees that are required by their employment to engage directly with the Indigenous people of Ontario, undertake cultural competency training

<sup>9</sup> To be clear, the language of inter-cultural "competency" comes from the Truth and Reconciliation Calls to Action. In applying the term within this Framework, the IAG is not asking everyone to adopt the cultural practices that are unique to the Indigenous peoples of Ontario, rather, to gain knowledge of and respect for each Indigenous person's right to maintain justice in their own way. The IAG will further develop what is the intended meaning within this Framework and include examination of systemic barriers and anti-racism measures.

<sup>10</sup> Convocation's 2015-2019 Strategic Plan prioritizes life-long competence for lawyers and paralegals. Priorities include enhancing licensing standards, improving and increasing practice supports and considering education beyond traditional Continuing Professional Development formats (e.g. possible multiple-day courses including practical application of knowledge and skills), and working with the professions to develop initiatives that institutionalize mentoring, advisory services and other types of support.

which includes the history of residential schools, the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, Treaties and Aboriginal rights, Indigenous laws, and Aboriginal-Crown relations and basic cultural protocols.

- d. Work with Deans, law faculty and students of Ontario Law Schools and colleges (paralegal education) to enhance their knowledge of a range of subjects, including but not limited to the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, Treaties and Aboriginal rights, Indigenous laws and Aboriginal-Crown relations.
- e. Develop and offer Continuing Professional Development (CPD) programs and legal education sessions independently and in collaboration with partners to illustrate the relevance of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples in Ontario and its relevance to various practice areas.

II. Working with Partners

- a. Participate with other Law Societies in Canada and the Federation of Law Societies in examining whether changes can be made to the National Standards and other licensing requirements to enhance knowledge of a range of subjects, including but not limited to the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, Treaties and Aboriginal rights, Indigenous laws and Aboriginal-Crown relations.
- b. In partnership with the Indigenous Bar Association, examine the codes of professional conduct and the commentaries as well as the Federation Model Code to explore changes, where necessary, to promote reconciliation and culturally competent provision of legal services.
- c. Engage with other legal associations, advocates and professional entities in Ontario to further educate, consult and inform.

III. Developing Skills-Based Training and Other Supports

- a. Support, develop and offer independently and/or in partnership with other providers, skills-based training and practice supports in inter-cultural competency, conflict resolution, human rights and anti-racism.
- b. Support Deans, law faculty and students of Law Schools and Colleges in Ontario regarding how skills-based training in inter-cultural competency, conflict resolution, human rights, and anti-racism can be introduced into experiential learning in Law Schools and Colleges.
- c. Support the Law Society's Equity Legal Education programs—developed, as appropriate, in partnership with Deans, faculty and students of Law Schools as well as Indigenous knowledge keepers, practitioners, organizations and others—to address the legacy of the Indian Residential School experience and Canada's colonialist law and policy, Treaty and Aboriginal Rights, the meaning of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples and current initiatives of First Nations, Métis and Inuit peoples.

ACHIEVING AND IMPROVING ACCESS TO JUSTICE

15. The Law Society will work with the IAG recognizing that achieving and enhancing Access to Justice across Ontario is a key priority of the Law Society. It identifies strategic goals towards increasing collaboration with access to justice partners and other stakeholders as well as developing and implementing a more concrete access to justice action plan.
16. Additional priorities in the Strategic Plan, including engaging stakeholders and the public with responsive communications and increasing organizational effectiveness, will also support enhancing access to justice.
17. An important element of achieving and improving access to justice will be the review and improvement of the Mentoring and Networking Program to ensure it continues to deliver the objectives called for in 2009 by the Final Report of the Indigenous Bar Consultation.
18. The Treasurer's Memo provides further direction on specific priorities in relation to improving access to justice for Indigenous peoples, including improving access to the complaints process for Indigenous communities.
19. Improve the Law Society's hearing and regulatory process, including the Tribunal, in every interaction with Indigenous people.
20. Engage with the Law Society's Legal Aid Working Group to examine and improve the delivery of legal aid to Indigenous people community and address the financial barriers that prohibit meaningful access to justice.
21. Provide support for the National Inquiry into Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls (MMIWG), including:
  - a. Further support for Inquiry processes
  - b. Develop communication materials to promote awareness and access to justice, published in English, French and Indigenous languages.
  - c. Commit to address Inquiry recommendations.
22. Contribute to the elimination of the overrepresentation of Indigenous people in legal proceedings, care and incarceration through a number of channels:
  - a. Supporting the implementation of the recommendations of the Debwewin Implementation Committee's Final Report and Feathers of Hope.
  - b. Considering the results of TAG's cluster on "the Seventh Generation – the Crisis of Aboriginal Children and Youth in Care".

- c. Considering, as a justice system stakeholder, actions the Law Society can take and what collaborative opportunities exist with other stakeholders to promote alternatives to community sanctions, mandatory minimum sentences, bail procedurals and supporting culturally appropriate services to reduce domestic violence, dispute resolution mechanisms, Aboriginal healing lodges and halfway homes.
- d. Undertaking a study on barriers to access to justice in Northern Ontario, including the efficacy and standardization of the preparation of Gladue Reports (across all of Ontario).
- e. Expanding the Guidelines for Lawyers Representing Residential School Claimants to other areas within the Law Society's regulatory scope.

PROMOTING AND SUPPORTING KNOWLEDGE OF INDIGENOUS LEGAL SYSTEMS

23. The Law Society will work with the IAG recognizing that knowledge of Indigenous legal systems is an essential as part of the Law Society's commitment to prioritizing life-long competence and enhancing access to justice for Indigenous peoples. The promotion and support of knowledge of Indigenous legal systems can include:
- a. In response to Call to Action 50, support "the establishment of Indigenous Law institutes for the development, use and understanding of Indigenous laws and access to justice in accordance with the unique characteristics of Aboriginal peoples in Canada."
  - b. Develop and offer Continuing Professional Development (CPD) programs and legal education sessions independently and with partners to support understanding, respect for and application of Indigenous legal systems in Ontario.
  - c. Develop and enhance services available to licensees, including practice supports and learning resources that could provide guidance on Indigenous justice issues, including but not limited to the application of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, Treaties and Aboriginal Rights, and the MMIWG.
  - d. Enhance the Law Society's Lawyer Referral Program and Mentorship to provide support and guidance on Indigenous justice issues.
  - e. Enhance the Member Assistance Program to provide for the well-being of Indigenous licensees in ways that promote and support Indigenous, traditional healing methods.
  - f. Enhance supports for small and solo firm practices within the Indigenous community (i.e. mentoring).

TAKING ACTION ON RECONCILIATION

24. The Law Society recognizes that it will work in partnership with the IAG and be guided by Indigenous knowledge keepers, leaders and citizens, Indigenous practitioners and others, in the development of the Law Society's responses to the Final Report of the Truth and Reconciliation's Calls to Action.
25. The Law Society's priority to engage with stakeholders and the public with responsive communications will support strengthened relationships with Indigenous and non-Indigenous licensees and members of the public, as well as build greater awareness of the Law Society's role in the reconciliation process.
26. Specific proposed actions related to reconciliation are outlined in the TRC Responses document and include:
  - a. A statement of support for the adoption and implementation of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples as a framework for reconciliation.
  - b. A commitment to actively consider opportunities to collaborate with partners, including legal and professional entities in Ontario to extend the impact of the responses the Law Society undertakes and explore how the Law Society can support the work of partners in advancing reconciliation.
  - c. Examine, in partnership with the Indigenous Bar Association, the codes of professional conduct and the commentaries as well as the Federation Model Code to consider changes to promote reconciliation and culturally competent service delivery.

Indigenous Advisory Group

Draft

Terms of Reference

Purpose:

Adopting the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous<sup>1</sup> Peoples as its framework, the Indigenous Advisory Group will advance and encourage the reconciliation of Indigenous peoples and Indigenous legal systems with the Canadian legal system (its Constitution, laws and legal framework) and promote the development of the relationships between Indigenous peoples and Canadian legal structures and institutions in a manner that respects Indigenous values, beliefs and legal systems.

Principles:

The conduct of each member and the work of the Indigenous Advisory Group will be guided by the following core principles:

- Mutual Respect and Understanding: Each member will afford respect to and strive to understand one another, the diversity of Indigenous cultures, legal systems, clients' needs and experiences, and the issues to be addressed.
- Consensus Building: Each member and as a group will work to find consensus in the discussion of issues. Disagreements will be acknowledged and the members commit to compromise to find solutions wherever possible and practical.
- Cooperation: Each member and as a group will work together toward realizing our shared purpose.
- Words and Action Match: Each member and as a group will work to demonstrate integrity in carrying out our work. Efforts will be put forth towards prompt follow up on actions identified by the Advisory Group.
- Confidentiality: Each member commits to maintaining the confidences of the membership and the discussions that occur and to refrain from disclosing any material deemed confidential that may come into the possession of the group.

---

April 5th, 2016 Draft

Mandate:

To provide a forum:

- To promote the implementation of recommendations and calls to action from reports generated regarding Indigenous peoples and Canada's legal system, including the Truth & Reconciliation Commission of Canada's Final Report and Calls to Action (2015) and the First Nations Representation on Ontario Juries Report by Justice Frank Iacobucci (2013).
- To encourage partnerships and relationships between Indigenous peoples, the Indigenous Bar Association in Canada and the Law Society.
- To directly interact and partner with the Law Society, its Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee, Benchers committees and affiliated working groups; Executive Director, Policy, Equity & Public Affairs; Director – Equity, Indigenous Initiatives Counsel and other staff at the Law Society on all issues affecting Indigenous peoples in relation to the Law Society;
- To identify priorities and make recommendations on the provision of legal services by and for Indigenous peoples in Ontario;
- To initiate, inform, promote and advance reform of policies, procedures, rules and regulations for the benefit of Indigenous peoples;
- To promote public awareness and educate members of the Law Society on issues related to and affecting Indigenous peoples;
- To review, comment and make recommendations on reports affecting Indigenous peoples with respect to the legal profession;
- To assess the progress and effectiveness of initiatives undertaken by the Law Society that address or relate to legal issues affecting Indigenous Peoples.

April 5th, 2016 Draft

Membership:

The membership of the Indigenous Advisory Group will comprise of diverse representation by up to nine individuals from the Indigenous community, including lawyers and paralegals from various geographic regions of Ontario, Indigenous law professors, community members and youth.

Members of the Indigenous Advisory Group will be recommended for appointment by an "Elders Council" and confirmed by consensus by the existing membership.

Members of the "Elders Council" will be comprised of at least three individuals and will be selected by the membership of the Indigenous Advisory Group as needed. The Elders Council will forever be standing members of the Indigenous Advisory Group.

A "Proto Group" was established to create these Terms of Reference. Members of the "Proto Group" will become the initial members of the Indigenous Advisory Group and will serve as members over a period of six months to one year until such time as new membership of the Indigenous Advisory Group is determined.

Co-Chairs:

There shall, whenever possible, be two co-Chairs that represent a gender balance. Co-chairs are appointed through consensus of the membership and will sit for a term of two years.

In the interests of continuity, relationship building and effectiveness, where possible these terms will be staggered to ensure an overlap and avoid situations where both co-Chairs begin their terms simultaneously.

Responsibilities of the Co-Chairs are shared, and include:

- chairing the meetings (on a rotating basis) of the Indigenous Advisory Group
- taking direction from the Indigenous Advisory Group;
- overseeing the work of the ad hoc / working committees;
- representing the Indigenous Advisory Group at Committees of the Law Society;

April 5th, 2016 Draft

- working with the Law Society's Executive Director, Policy, Equity & Public Affairs Department and Indigenous Initiatives Counsel in supporting the work of the Advisory Group.

Committees:

Ad hoc / working committees will be struck as required and will be subject to time designated existence.

The work of the ad hoc/working committees will be shared with the Advisory Group for discussion and action, as necessary.

Quorum and Meetings:

There must be quorum to constitute a meeting, which shall consist of at least 50% plus one of the membership participating in person or by telephone, at least one of whom must be a co-Chair.

The Indigenous Advisory Group will meet bi-monthly, or as deemed necessary by the Co-Chairs at a location agreed upon by the Indigenous Advisory Group.

Members will seek reimbursement from the Law Society for reasonable out of pocket expenses incurred for travel, where travel is determined necessary by the co-Chairs for the workings of the Advisory Group. The Law Society's Executive Director, Policy, Equity & Public Affairs will determine whether the Law Society will reimburse such expenses.

All decisions will be reached by consensus. Consensus means that all members participating in a meeting have an opportunity to openly and freely discuss issues raised with an earnest and sincere attempt to arrive at agreement and acceptance of a decision. Consensus does not require that all members must be present, nor does it necessitate that all members voice an opinion or agree.

All decisions will be recorded and a summary of each meeting will be prepared by an agreed upon member at the start of each meeting.

The Law Society will provide:

April 5th, 2016 Draft

- advice and resources as appropriate;
- support to facilitate meeting location, reports and minutes on a regular basis;
- prepare proposals, submissions etc as approved and directed by the Indigenous Advisory Group

Review of the Mandate:

This mandate may be subject to review as determined necessary by a consensus of the membership.

DRAFT

TAB 5.2

FOR DECISION

HUMAN RIGHTS MONITORING GROUP REQUEST FOR INTERVENTION

29. That Convocation approve the letters and public statements in the following cases:

Background

37. Sushila Karki is the first female Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Nepal. She is known for her zero-tolerance stance on corruption in the judiciary and has been instrumental in a number of high-profile and politically sensitive decisions. Recent rulings by the Supreme Court, with Sushila Karki as its Chief Justice, have been critical in advancing human rights in Nepal, assisting victims seeking justice for the crimes and serious human rights violations committed against them.
38. On April 30, 2017, the two main parties in the ruling coalition government brought an impeachment motion against Chief Justice Sushila Karki, resulting in her automatic suspension. The motion, which came on the heels of the Supreme Court's decision to overturn the Nepalese government's choice for Chief of Police,<sup>7</sup> accuses the Chief Justice of delivering biased verdicts,<sup>8</sup> interfering in the executive's jurisdiction, breaching the principle of separation of powers, influencing her fellow justices, and failing to fulfill her judicial duties.
39. On May 5, 2017, the Supreme Court issued an interim order directing Parliament to halt impeachment proceedings against Chief Justice Sushila Karki and to allow her to return to her duties. In making the order, the Supreme Court opined that the allegations against the Chief Justice were baseless and that the commencement of impeachment proceedings against her would be at odds with the spirit of Nepal's Constitution. Relatedly, the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights has stated that "the attempt to remove [Chief Justice Sushila Karki] gives rise to serious concerns about the Government [of Nepal]'s commitment to transitional justice and the rule of law".

<sup>7</sup> The court ruled that the government had violated existing processes and regulations in appointing Jaya Bahadur Chand as police chief instead of Navaraj Silwal, the highest-ranking officer.

<sup>8</sup> "We have decided to impeach Chief Justice Sushila Karki... after she visibly started taking sides in cases," Min Biswakarma, a member of the ruling coalition who proposed the motion. (See NDTV, ibid.)

40. Nepal has a history of political interference in key civil appointments such as the Chief of Police. Since the end of the civil war in 2006, the country has had nine governments, each of which sought to fill key positions with their respective loyalists. According to her supporters, Chief Justice Sushila Karki is a staunch opponent of such corruption and that her tough stance on this issue “annoyed the politicians”.

TAJIKISTAN – TRAVEL BAN AGAINST LAWYER FAYZINISSO VOHIDOVA

Sources of Information

41. The background information for this report was retrieved from the following sources:
- a. Amnesty International; and<sup>9</sup>
  - b. Human Rights Watch.<sup>10</sup>

Background

42. Fayzinisso Vohidova is a Khujand-based lawyer known for her human rights and criminal defence work in politically sensitive cases. As a result of her professional activities, she has long been the target of government harassment. Since July 2015, she has endured surveillance and intimidation. In early 2016, she received credible information that law enforcement officials had initiated a criminal investigation against her.
43. Most recently, on May 14, 2017, border guards with the State Committee on State Security prevented Fayzinisso Vohidova from traveling to Kyrgyzstan. They detained her for eight hours, stating that there was a “defect” in her passport and that she “had no right to leave Tajikistan”. Eventually, the border guards conceded that Fayzinisso Vohidova had been placed on a list of individuals banned from leaving the country. Travel bans cannot be appealed. It should be noted that in the weeks that preceded this incident, Fayzinisso Vohidova had been interrogated several times by Tajik security services.
44. Human rights organizations believe that these latest acts of harassment against Fayzinisso Vohidova are related to the critical remarks she made about the imprisonment of two Tajik human rights lawyers, Buzurgmehr Yorov and Nuriddin Makhkamov. In April 2017, she had publicly appealed to President Emomali Rahmon through social media, criticizing the government’s imprisonment of Yorov and Makhkamov, both of whom were convicted and sentenced in October 2016 following a prosecution and trial that appeared to be politically

Broader Issues Regarding Lawyers in Tajikistan

45. Over the last three years, defence lawyers in Tajikistan who have taken up politically sensitive cases or cases related to national security and counter-terrorism have faced increasing harassment, intimidation and pressure as a result of their legitimate professional activities. In some cases, lawyers have been subjected to punitive arrest, criminal prosecution on national security-related or politically-motivated charges, and sentenced to long prison terms following unfair trials. Some lawyers have fled the country to avoid such persecution. Meanwhile, their families have also been targeted, harassed and threatened with reprisals by security forces and local authorities.
46. Arbitrary arrests of human rights lawyers, their prosecutions on politically-motivated charges, harsh prison sentences and the harassment of their families have served as deterrents for anyone daring to defend the fundamental rights of those willing or perceived to challenge the authority of the president and the government. Most notably, defending arrested lawyers has become increasingly risky for other lawyers. Few have been prepared to take up this role because of the associated risks, and some of those who have have faced harassment and threats as a result.
47. Amendments to legislation which concerns the regulation of the legal profession in Tajikistan (Law on Advokatura) have been instrumental in reducing the number of licensed lawyers by more than half and further restricting the already limited access to justice for Tajikistani citizens. Prominent lawyers and domestic and international experts and NGOs have expressed concern that some of the amending provisions (introduced in November 2015) threaten the independence of the legal profession and jeopardize access to legal services by: 1) bringing control over the licensing of lawyers firmly back into the hands of the executive branch of government, specifically the Ministry of Justice; 2) mandating that the deciding vote on who qualifies as a lawyer be held by a Deputy Minister of Justice; and 3) forcing all lawyers to pass the new qualification exams by the end of March 2016 or lose their licence to practice. As of May 2017, only about half of the previously licensed lawyers had successfully requalified under the new regulatory regime. Tajikistan now has approximately 600 lawyers (a significant decrease from over 1200 in 2015) for a population of over eight million, a ratio of approximately one lawyer per 13,000 inhabitants.

Background

49. In October 2015 and again in September 2016, human rights lawyer Muazzamakhon Kadirova agreed, at great risk to herself and her family, to act as defence counsel for fellow lawyers Buzurgmehr Yorov and Nuriddin Makhkamov. The Law Society intervened on behalf of Buzurgmehr Yorov in February 2016 and January 2017, and on behalf of Nuriddin Makhkamov in January 2017.
50. Due to the fact that the trials of Buzurgmehr Yorov and Nuriddin Makhkamov were conducted behind closed doors, Muazzamakhon Kadirova was effectively the only link between them, their families and the wider public. She told journalists and other activists that the prosecution had not been able to present any compelling evidence against her clients and that the trials were clearly politically motivated.
51. As the trials progressed, Muazzamakhon Kadirova became increasingly aware of the risks associated with representing Buzurgmehr Yorov and Nuriddin Makhkamov; by November 2016, she was concerned about her safety and possible reprisals from Tajikistani authorities. On December 27, 2016, Muazzamakhon Kadirova was summoned to the Prosecutor General's Office and questioned about her professional activities for several hours. In the days that followed her questioning, she noticed that she was under surveillance.
52. In January 2017, Muazzamakhon Kadirova learned from a confidential source that a criminal case was being prepared against her. Fearing for her safety and concerned that she could be arrested at any time, Muazzamakhon Kadirova fled Tajikistan and sought protection abroad. In March 2017, she told journalists that Tajikistani authorities had threatened to launch a criminal case against her, accusing her of leaking confidential information about Buzurgmehr Yorov's case to foreign media. As of March 29, 2017, she is seeking refuge in Germany and has applied for political asylum there.

Background

55. The Law Society previously intervened on behalf of Buzurgmehr Yorov in February 2016<sup>17</sup> and January 2017.<sup>18</sup>
56. Several developments have taken place since the Law Society's last intervention. In February 2017, the Supreme Court of Tajikistan rejected Buzurgmehr Yorov's appeal, upholding his conviction and the accompanying 23-year prison term. That same month, additional charges of fraud were brought against Buzurgmehr Yorov. Alleged to be based on new complaints made against him by members of the public, these charges carry a sentence of up to 12 years in prison.
57. On March 16, 2017, the Supreme Court of Tajikistan found Buzurgmehr Yorov guilty of contempt and "insulting government officials", and added an additional two years to his sentence (for a total of 25 years). The hearing into these charges opened on December 12, 2016 after authorities accused him of disrespecting the court and insulting government officials by quoting a celebrated 11th century poet in his closing statement to the Dushanbe City Court during his original trial.
58. As of May 2017, yet another criminal case is pending against Buzurgmehr Yorov. This new charge of "insulting the leader of the Nation" apparently stems from statements he made in court in response to the aforementioned fraud charges. According to his wife Zarina

Nabieva, Buzurgmehr Yorov had told the court that, as a lawyer, he had always operated within the country's legal framework. Given that this legal framework had been approved by the president of Tajikistan, he argued that if he was guilty of fraud, then so was everyone else in the country, including the president. The subsequent publication of this statement on the independent news website Payom.net apparently served as the grounds upon which the criminal charge was advanced.

59. Buzurgmehr Yorov's family has been unable to find an independent lawyer willing to represent him in court. Consequently, his wife Zarina Nabieva has taken on his legal defence.

Background

62. Michel Togué is a human rights lawyer who defends clients charged with homosexuality in Cameroon, where consensual same-sex conduct is criminalized and subject to a maximum prison sentence of five years. In March 2017, he was awarded the Dutch Geuzenpenning Award for his work and advocacy on behalf of the LGBT community in his country.
63. In early 2017, Michel Togué received multiple death threats as a result of his legal work on behalf of individuals who identify as LGBT. Reports indicate that when he subsequently approached Cameroon's Lawyer's Association for assistance, its president advised Michel Togué: "Stop defending the LGBT community and you won't have problems anymore." Similarly, his request for protection was denied by Cameroonian police.

64. Michel Togué, along with his wife and children, first began receiving death threats in the form of emails and text messages in October 2012. As the death threats against him and his family escalated, his wife and children sought asylum in the United States. Michel Togué, however, chose to remain in Cameroon to continue his work with the LGBT community.

FOR INFORMATION

HUMAN RIGHTS MONITORING GROUP RESPONSES TO INTERVENTIONS

65. The Human Rights Monitoring Group (“the Monitoring Group”) monitors cases of members of the legal profession and the judiciary who are facing persecution as a result of the discharge of their legitimate professional duties. When appropriate, the Monitoring Group prepares intervention letters and public statements related to these cases for Convocation’s approval. Intervention letters are sent to heads of state and are copied, for information, to relevant bar associations, human rights organizations and, when contact information is available, to the lawyers and/or judges who are the subjects of the interventions.

66. In June 2017, the Monitoring Group received two responses to the Law Society’s recent intervention letters:
  - a. The Monitoring Group received a response from the High Commissioner of Cameroon, regarding the Law Society’s intervention in the case related to the arrest and detention of Justice Paul Ayah Abime (Cameroon);
  - b. The Monitoring Group received a response from Front Line Defenders, thanking the Law Society for its efforts regarding the Law Society’s intervention in the case of Emil Kurbedinov (Crimea).

HUMAN RIGHTS MONITORING GROUP ANNUAL UPDATE

67. The Human Rights Monitoring Group (“the Monitoring Group”) monitors cases of members of the legal profession and the judiciary who are facing persecution as a result of the discharge of their legitimate professional duties. When appropriate, the Monitoring Group prepares intervention letters and public statements related to these cases for Convocation’s approval. Intervention letters are sent to heads of state and are copied, for information, to relevant bar associations, human rights organizations and, when contact information is available, to the lawyers and/or judges who are the subjects of the interventions.
68. There are seven bench member members of the Monitoring Group: Teresa Donnelly (Chair), Robert Evans, Julian Falconer, Avvy Go, Judith Potter, Heather Ross and Joanne St. Lewis.

Orientation Materials

69. Members of the Monitoring Group, including new members, receive orientation materials that include:
- The mandate of the HRMG
  - Information about interventions and the interventions to date
  - Criteria for intervention
  - The Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers and on the Independence of the Judiciary
  - The Facilitating International Access to Justice Through Intervention – Report to Convocation October 2014.
  - Information about the Human Rights Award
  - Information about Human Rights Monitoring Group events

Interventions

70. An extensive Access to Justice document was prepared in October 2014 and presented to Convocation entitled Facilitating International Access to Justice Through Intervention. An updated report was provided to Convocation in January 2017. It will now be kept as a living document that is continually updated each time the Law Society intervenes.
71. The Monitoring Group has also prepared two different lists which will be updated when the Law Society intervenes in a case. The lists are organized by country and by the name of the person on whose behalf the Law Society has intervened. The intent of these lists is to ensure that the Monitoring Group can easily and quickly determine if the Law Society has previously intervened in the country or on behalf of the individual or group.

72. In an effort to standardize the language for interventions, the Monitoring Group has prepared a document that contains suggested wording for its interventions to ensure that it is consistent across its interventions.
73. The Monitoring Group continues to bring forward interventions in cases of lawyers and judges who face human rights violations as result of their legal work.

Outreach to National and International Partners

74. To ensure that the Monitoring Group understands the work of our national and international partners, it has invited guests to attend its meetings. This process has been very rewarding, informative and validating for the work of the Monitoring Group. It is in the process of collating its notes of these meetings into one document so that going forward, starting in September 2017, it will have substantive discussion about how to expand its role within the mandate and also collaborate with its partners.
75. Speakers to date have been:
  - November 10, 2016 - Andrew Guaglio, Board Member, Lawyers' Rights Watch Canada
  - January 12, 2017 - Marina Brilman, International Human Rights Policy Adviser, International Department The Law Society of England and Wales
  - February 9, 2017 - Alex Neve, Secretary General, Amnesty International
  - April 6, 2017 - Judith Lichtenberg, Board Member, Lawyers for Lawyers
  - June 8, 2017 – Farida Deif, Canada Director, Human Rights Watch

Human Rights Award

76. The Law Society presented the second Human Rights Award to Dr. Cindy Blackstock and Waleed Abu al-Khair. The Awards lunch was very moving and the ceremony was very powerful. The Award reinforces the Law Society's commitment to protecting human rights.

Looking forward to 2017-2018

77. For 2017-2018, the Monitoring Group intends to focus on the following:
  - Finalizing the standardized intervention document
  - Reviewing how to expand its role within the mandate
  - Increasing collaboration with national and international partners
  - Continuing to intervene in cases
  - Continuing to promote human rights through education and outreach.

Your Excellency:

Re: Impeachment proceedings against Chief Justice Sushila Karki

I write on behalf of the Law Society of Upper Canada* to voice our grave concern over the impeachment proceedings against Chief Justice Sushila Karki. When serious issues of apparent injustice to lawyers and the judiciary come to our attention, we speak out.

Sushila Karki is the first female Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Nepal. She is known for her zero-tolerance stance on corruption in the judiciary and has been instrumental in a number of high-profile and politically sensitive decisions. Recent rulings by the Supreme Court, with Sushila Karki as its Chief Justice, have been critical in advancing human rights in Nepal, assisting victims seeking justice for the crimes and serious human rights violations committed against them.

It has come to the Law Society's attention that on April 30, 2017, the two main parties in the ruling coalition government brought an impeachment motion against Chief Justice Sushila Karki, resulting in her automatic suspension. The motion, which came on the heels of the Supreme Court's decision to overturn the Nepalese government's choice for Chief of Police, accuses the Chief Justice of delivering biased verdicts, interfering in the executive's jurisdiction, breaching the principle of separation of powers, influencing her fellow justices, and failing to fulfill her judicial duties.

On May 5, 2017, the Supreme Court issued an interim order directing Parliament to halt impeachment proceedings against Chief Justice Sushila Karki and to allow her to return to her duties. In making the order, the Supreme Court opined that the allegations against the Chief Justice were baseless and that the commencement of impeachment proceedings against her would be at odds with the spirit of Nepal's Constitution. Relatedly, the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights has stated that "the attempt to remove [Chief Justice Sushila Karki] gives rise to serious concerns about the Government [of Nepal]'s commitment to transitional justice and the rule of law”.

Nepal has a history of political interference in key civil appointments such as the Chief of Police. Since the end of the civil war in 2006, the country has had nine governments, each of which sought to fill key positions with their respective loyalists. According to her supporters, Chief Justice Sushila Karki is a staunch opponent of such corruption and that her tough stance on this issue “annoyed the politicians”.

In light of these circumstances, the Law Society urges Your Excellency to comply with Nepal's obligations under international human rights laws, including the United Nations' Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary.

Articles 1 to 6 of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary state:

1. The independence of the judiciary shall be guaranteed by the State and enshrined in the Constitution or the law of the country. It is the duty of all governmental and other institutions to respect and observe the independence of the judiciary.
2. The judiciary shall decide matters before them impartially, on the basis of facts and in accordance with the law, without any restrictions, improper influences, inducements, pressures, threats or interferences, direct or indirect, from any quarter or for any reason.
3. The judiciary shall have jurisdiction over all issues of a judicial nature and shall have exclusive authority to decide whether an issue submitted for its decision is within its competence as defined by law.
4. There shall not be any inappropriate or unwarranted interference with the judicial process, nor shall judicial decisions by the courts be subject to revision. This principle is without prejudice to judicial review or to mitigation or commutation by competent authorities of sentences imposed by the judiciary, in accordance with the law.
5. Everyone shall have the right to be tried by ordinary courts or tribunals using established legal procedures. Tribunals that do not use the duly established procedures of the legal process shall not be created to displace the jurisdiction belonging to the ordinary courts or judicial tribunals.
6. The principle of the independence of the judiciary entitles and requires the judiciary to ensure that judicial proceedings are conducted fairly and that the rights of the parties are respected.

The Law Society urges the Government of Nepal to:

- a. immediately and unconditionally discontinue the impeachment proceedings against Chief Justice Sushila Karki, if this has not already occurred;
- b. immediately and unconditionally lift the interim suspension imposed on Chief Justice Sushila Karki so that she may return to her judicial duties and activities, if this has not already occurred;
- c. put an end to all acts of harassment against Chief Justice Sushila Karki and all other judges in Nepal;
- d. guarantee in all circumstances the physical and psychological integrity of Chief Justice Sushila Karki;
- e. ensure that all judges in Nepal can carry out their judicial duties and activities without fear of reprisals, physical violence or other human rights violations; and
- f. ensure in all circumstances respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in accordance with international human rights standards and international instruments.

Yours truly,

Dear [Name],

Re: Impeachment proceedings against Chief Justice Sushila Karki in Nepal

I write to inform you that on the advice of the Human Rights Monitoring Group*, the Law Society of Upper Canada sent the attached letter to Prime Minister Pushpa Kamal Dahal, the Prime Minister of the Federal Democratic Republic of Nepal, expressing our deep concern over reports of the impeachment proceedings against Chief Justice Sushila Karki.

We would be very interested in hearing from you in regard to the situation noted in the attached letter, whether your organization has intervened in this matter and whether we have misapprehended any of the facts in this case. Any further information you may have about the case would also be welcome.

Please forward any further correspondence to the attention of Ekua Quansah, Policy Counsel, The Law Society of Upper Canada, 130 Queen St. West, Toronto, Ontario, Canada, M5H 2N6 or to equansah@lsuc.on.ca.

I thank you for your time and consideration.

Sincerely,

Teresa Donnelly
Chair, Human Rights Monitoring Group

PROPOSED PUBLIC STATEMENT

The Law Society of Upper Canada expresses grave concern about the impeachment proceedings against Chief Justice Sushila Karki in Nepal

Toronto, ON — The Law Society of Upper Canada expresses grave concern about the impeachment proceedings against Chief Justice Sushila Karki in Nepal.

Sushila Karki is the first female Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Nepal. She is known for her zero-tolerance stance on corruption in the judiciary and has been instrumental in a number of high-profile and politically sensitive decisions. Recent rulings by the Supreme Court, with Sushila Karki as its Chief Justice, have been critical in advancing human rights in Nepal, assisting victims seeking justice for the crimes and serious human rights violations committed against them.

It has come to the Law Society's attention that on April 30, 2017, the two main parties in the ruling coalition government brought an impeachment motion against Chief Justice Sushila Karki, resulting in her automatic suspension. The motion, which came on the heels of the Supreme Court's decision to overturn the Nepalese government's choice for Chief of Police, accuses the Chief Justice of delivering biased verdicts, interfering in the executive's jurisdiction, breaching the principle of separation of powers, influencing her fellow justices, and failing to fulfill her judicial duties.

On May 5, 2017, the Supreme Court issued an interim order directing Parliament to halt impeachment proceedings against Chief Justice Sushila Karki and to allow her to return to her duties. In making the order, the Supreme Court opined that the allegations against the Chief Justice were baseless and that the commencement of impeachment proceedings against her would be at odds with the spirit of Nepal's Constitution. Relatedly, the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights has stated that "the attempt to remove [Chief Justice Sushila Karki] gives rise to serious concerns about the Government [of Nepal]'s commitment to transitional justice and the rule of law".

Nepal has a history of political interference in key civil appointments such as the Chief of Police. Since the end of the civil war in 2006, the country has had nine governments, each of which sought to fill key positions with their respective loyalists. According to her supporters, Chief Justice Sushila Karki is a staunch opponent of such corruption and that her tough stance on this issue "annoyed the politicians".

In light of these circumstances, the Law Society urges the Government of Nepal to comply with Nepal's obligations under international human rights laws, including the United Nations' Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary.

Articles 1 to 6 of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary state:

1. The independence of the judiciary shall be guaranteed by the State and enshrined in the Constitution or the law of the country. It is the duty of all governmental and other institutions to respect and observe the independence of the judiciary.
2. The judiciary shall decide matters before them impartially, on the basis of facts and in accordance with the law, without any restrictions, improper influences, inducements, pressures, threats or interferences, direct or indirect, from any quarter or for any reason.
3. The judiciary shall have jurisdiction over all issues of a judicial nature and shall have exclusive authority to decide whether an issue submitted for its decision is within its competence as defined by law.
4. There shall not be any inappropriate or unwarranted interference with the judicial process, nor shall judicial decisions by the courts be subject to revision. This principle is without prejudice to judicial review or to mitigation or commutation by competent authorities of sentences imposed by the judiciary, in accordance with the law.
5. Everyone shall have the right to be tried by ordinary courts or tribunals using established legal procedures. Tribunals that do not use the duly established procedures of the legal process shall not be created to displace the jurisdiction belonging to the ordinary courts or judicial tribunals.
6. The principle of the independence of the judiciary entitles and requires the judiciary to ensure that judicial proceedings are conducted fairly and that the rights of the parties are respected.

The Law Society urges the Government of Nepal to:

- a. immediately and unconditionally discontinue the impeachment proceedings against Chief Justice Sushila Karki, if this has not already occurred;
- b. immediately and unconditionally lift the interim suspension imposed on Chief Justice Sushila Karki so that she may return to her judicial duties and activities, if this has not already occurred;
- c. put an end to all acts of harassment against Chief Justice Sushila Karki and all other judges in Nepal;
- d. guarantee in all circumstances the physical and psychological integrity of Chief Justice Sushila Karki;

- e. ensure that all judges in Nepal can carry out their judicial duties and activities without fear of reprisals, physical violence or other human rights violations; and
- f. ensure in all circumstances respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in accordance with international human rights standards and international instruments.

PROPOSED LETTERS OF INTERVENTION AND PUBLIC STATEMENT*FAYZINISSO VOHIDOVA

H.E. Emomali Rahmon
President of the Republic of Tajikistan
Rudaki Avenue, 80
Dushanbe 734023
Republic of Tajikistan

Your Excellency:

Re: Travel ban against lawyer Fayzinisso Vohidova

I write on behalf of the Law Society of Upper Canada* to voice our grave concern over the travel ban against lawyer Fayzinisso Vohidova. When serious issues of apparent injustice to lawyers and the judiciary come to our attention, we speak out.

Fayzinisso Vohidova is a Khujand-based lawyer known for her human rights and criminal defence work in politically sensitive cases. As a result of her professional activities, she has long been the target of government harassment. Since July 2015, she has endured surveillance and intimidation. In early 2016, she received credible information that law enforcement officials had initiated a criminal investigation against her.

It has come to the Law Society's attention that on May 14, 2017, border guards with the State Committee on State Security prevented Fayzinisso Vohidova from traveling to Kyrgyzstan. They detained her for eight hours, stating that there was a "defect" in her passport and that she "had no right to leave Tajikistan". Eventually, the border guards conceded that Fayzinisso Vohidova had been placed on a list of individuals banned from leaving the country. Arbitrary bans on travel violate article 12(2) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR), which guarantees every individual the right to leave any country, including his or her own. Tajikistan became a party to the ICCPR in 1999.

According to information received by the Law Society, in the weeks that preceded the above-mentioned incident, Fayzinisso Vohidova had been interrogated multiple times by Tajik security services. Human rights organizations believe that these latest acts of harassment against Fayzinisso Vohidova are related to the critical remarks she made about the imprisonment of two Tajik human rights lawyers, Buzurgmehr Yorov and Nuriddin Makhkamov. In April 2017, she had publicly appealed to Your Excellency through social media, criticizing the government's imprisonment of Yorov and Makhkamov, both of whom were convicted and sentenced in October 2016 following a prosecution and trial that appeared to be politically motivated. The Law Society intervened on behalf of Buzurgmehr Yorov in February 2016 and January 2017, and on behalf of Nuriddin Makhkamov in January 2017.

The Law Society of Upper Canada is deeply troubled by Fayzinisso Vohidova's situation, particularly in light of reports that repressive tactics are commonly used by Your Excellency's government to intimidate and silence lawyers in Tajikistan, effectively precluding their legitimate professional activities. Arbitrary arrests of human rights lawyers, their prosecutions on politically-motivated charges, harsh prison sentences and the harassment of their families have served as deterrents for anyone daring to defend the fundamental rights of those willing or perceived to challenge the authority of Your Excellency's government. Most notably, defending arrested lawyers has become increasingly risky for other lawyers. This and other government actions (for example, legislative amendments regarding the licensing of lawyers which were introduced in November 2015) have led to a dramatic decrease in the number of licensed lawyers in Tajikistan over the last two years (from more than 1200 in 2015 to just 600 today).

In light of the foregoing, the Law Society urges Your Excellency to comply with Tajikistan's obligations under international human rights laws, including the United Nations' Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers.

Article 16 of the Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers states:

Governments shall ensure that lawyers (a) are able to perform all of their professional functions without intimidation, hindrance, harassment or improper interference; (b) are able to travel and to consult with their clients freely both within their own country and abroad; and (c) shall not suffer, or be threatened with, prosecution or administrative, economics or other sanctions for any action taken in accordance with recognized professional duties, standards and ethics.

Article 17 states:

Where the security of lawyers is threatened as a result of discharging their functions, they shall be adequately safeguarded by the authorities.

Article 18 states:

Lawyers shall not be identified with their clients or their clients' causes as a result of discharging their functions.

Furthermore, Article 23 provides:

Lawyers like other citizens are entitled to freedom of expression, belief, association and assembly. In particular, they shall have the right to take part in public discussion of matters concerning the law, the administration of justice and the promotion and protection of human rights and to join or form local, national or international organizations and attend their meetings, without suffering professional restrictions by reason of their lawful action or their membership in a lawful organization.

The Law Society urges the Government of Tajikistan to:

- a. immediately and unconditionally lift all restrictions on Fayzinisso Vohidova's freedom of movement;
- b. put an end to all acts of harassment against Fayzinisso Vohidova and all other lawyers in Tajikistan;
- c. guarantee in all circumstances the physical and psychological integrity of Fayzinisso Vohidova;
- d. ensure that all lawyers in Tajikistan can carry out their professional duties and activities without fear of reprisals, physical violence or other human rights violations; and
- e. ensure in all circumstances respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in accordance with international human rights standards and international instruments.

Your Excellency:

Re: Harassment of lawyer Muazzamakhon Kadirova (Muazzama Qodirova)

I write on behalf of the Law Society of Upper Canada* to voice our grave concern over the harassment of lawyer Muazzamakhon Kadirova (Muazzama Qodirova). When serious issues of apparent injustice to lawyers and the judiciary come to our attention, we speak out.

It has come to the Law Society's attention that in October 2015 and again in September 2016, human rights lawyer Muazzamakhon Kadirova agreed, at great risk to herself and her family, to act as defence counsel for fellow lawyers Buzurgmehr Yorov and Nuriddin Makhkamov. The Law Society intervened on behalf of Buzurgmehr Yorov in February 2016 and January 2017, and on behalf of Nuriddin Makhkamov in January 2017.

Due to the fact that the trials of Buzurgmehr Yorov and Nuriddin Makhkamov were conducted behind closed doors, Muazzamakhon Kadirova was effectively the only link between them, their families and the wider public. She told journalists and other activists that the prosecution had not been able to present any compelling evidence against her clients and that the trials were clearly politically motivated.

As the trials progressed, Muazzamakhon Kadirova became increasingly aware of the risks associated with representing Buzurgmehr Yorov and Nuriddin Makhkamov; by November 2016, she was concerned about her safety and possible reprisals from Tajikistani authorities. On December 27, 2016, Muazzamakhon Kadirova was summoned to the Prosecutor General's Office and questioned about her professional activities for several hours. In the days that followed her questioning, she noticed that she was under surveillance.

In January 2017, Muazzamakhon Kadirova learned from a confidential source that a criminal case was being prepared against her. Fearing for her safety and concerned that she could be arrested at any time, Muazzamakhon Kadirova fled Tajikistan and sought protection abroad. In March 2017, she told journalists that Tajikistani authorities had threatened to launch a criminal case against her, accusing her of leaking confidential information about Buzurgmehr Yorov's case to foreign media. As of March 29, 2017, she is seeking refuge in Germany and has applied for political asylum there.

The Law Society of Upper Canada is deeply troubled by Muazzamakhon Kadirova's situation, particularly in light of reports that repressive tactics are commonly used by Your Excellency's government to intimidate and silence lawyers in Tajikistan, effectively precluding their legitimate professional activities. Your Excellency:

Re: Conviction and pending charges against lawyer Buzurgmehr Yorov

I write on behalf of the Law Society of Upper Canada* to voice our grave concern over the conviction and pending charges against lawyer Buzurgmehr Yorov. When serious issues of apparent injustice to lawyers and the judiciary come to our attention, we speak out.

The Law Society first intervened on behalf of Buzurgmehr Yorov in February 2016 and again in January 2017. It has come to the Law Society's attention that several developments have taken place since its last intervention. In February 2017, the Supreme Court of Tajikistan rejected Buzurgmehr Yorov's appeal, upholding his conviction and the accompanying 23-year prison term. That same month, additional charges of fraud were brought against Buzurgmehr Yorov. Alleged to be based on new complaints made against him by members of the public, these charges carry a sentence of up to 12 years in prison.

On March 16, 2017, the Supreme Court of Tajikistan found Buzurgmehr Yorov guilty of contempt and "insulting government officials", and added an additional two years to his sentence (for a total of 25 years). The hearing into these charges opened on December 12, 2016 after authorities accused him of disrespecting the court and insulting government officials by quoting a celebrated 11th century poet in his closing statement to the Dushanbe City Court during his original trial.

As of May 2017, yet another criminal case is pending against Buzurgmehr Yorov. This new charge of "insulting the leader of the Nation" apparently stems from statements he made in court in response to the aforementioned fraud charges. According to his wife Zarina Nabieva, Buzurgmehr Yorov had told the court that, as a lawyer, he had always operated within the country's legal framework. Given that this legal framework had been approved by the president of Tajikistan, he argued that if he was guilty of fraud, then so was everyone else in the country, including the president. The subsequent publication of this statement on the independent news website Payom.net apparently served as the grounds upon which the criminal charge was advanced.

Further compounding Buzurgmehr Yorov's situation is the fact that his family has been unable to find an independent lawyer willing to represent him in court. Consequently, his wife Zarina Nabieva has taken on his legal defence.

The Law Society of Upper Canada is deeply troubled by Buzurgmehr Yorov's situation, particularly in light of reports that repressive tactics are commonly used by Your Excellency's government to intimidate and silence lawyers in Tajikistan, effectively precluding their legitimate professional activities. Arbitrary arrests of human rights lawyers, their prosecutions on politically-motivated charges, harsh prison sentences and the harassment of their families have served as deterrents for anyone daring to defend the fundamental rights of those willing or perceived to challenge the authority of Your Excellency's government. Most notably, defending arrested lawyers has become increasingly risky for other lawyers. This and other government actions (for example, legislative amendments regarding the licensing of lawyers which were introduced in November 2015) have led to a dramatic decrease in the number of licensed lawyers in Tajikistan over the last two years (from more than 1200 in 2015 to just 600 today).

In light of the foregoing, the Law Society urges Your Excellency to comply with Tajikistan's obligations under international human rights laws, including the United Nations' Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers.

Article 16 of the Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers states:

Governments shall ensure that lawyers (a) are able to perform all of their professional functions without intimidation, hindrance, harassment or improper interference; (b) are able to travel and to consult with their clients freely both within their own country and abroad; and (c) shall not suffer, or be threatened with, prosecution or administrative, economic or other sanctions for any action taken in accordance with recognized professional duties, standards and ethics.

Article 17 states:

Where the security of lawyers is threatened as a result of discharging their functions, they shall be adequately safeguarded by the authorities.

Article 18 states:

Lawyers shall not be identified with their clients or their clients' causes as a result of discharging their functions.

Furthermore, Article 23 provides:

Lawyers like other citizens are entitled to freedom of expression, belief, association and assembly. In particular, they shall have the right to take part in public discussion of matters concerning the law, the administration of justice and the promotion and protection of human rights and to join or form local, national or international organizations and attend their meetings, without suffering professional restrictions by reason of their lawful action or their membership in a lawful organization.

The Law Society urges the Government of Tajikistan to:

- a. immediately and unconditionally release Buzurgmehr Yorov;
- b. pending his release, ensure that Buzurgmehr Yorov is detained in an official place of detention; is not subjected to torture or other ill-treatment; and has regular, unrestricted access to his family, lawyer(s) of his choice, and medical care on request or as necessary;
- c. immediately and unconditionally vacate the convictions rendered against Buzurgmehr Yorov;
- d. immediately and unconditionally withdraw all charges against Buzurgmehr Yorov;
- e. guarantee all of the procedural rights that should be accorded to Buzurgmehr Yorov in accordance with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, including equality before the law, the presumption of innocence, the right to a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal, and all the guarantees necessary for the defence of everyone charged with a penal offence;
- f. ensure that Buzurgmehr Yorov is able to secure the services of and is able to communicate and consult in confidence with independent legal counsel;
- g. put an end to all acts of harassment against Buzurgmehr Yorov and all other lawyers in Tajikistan;
- h. guarantee in all circumstances the physical and psychological integrity of Buzurgmehr Yorov;
- i. ensure that all lawyers in Tajikistan can carry out their professional duties and activities without fear of reprisals, physical violence or other human rights violations; and
- j. ensure in all circumstances respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in accordance with international human rights standards and international instruments.

Yours truly,

Your Excellency:

Re: Harassment and intimidation of lawyer Michel Togué

I write on behalf of the Law Society of Upper Canada* to voice our grave concern over the harassment and intimidation of lawyer Michel Togué. When serious issues of apparent injustice to lawyers and the judiciary come to our attention, we speak out.

Michel Togué is a human rights lawyer who defends clients charged with homosexuality in Cameroon, where consensual same-sex conduct is criminalized and subject to a maximum prison sentence of five years. In March 2017, he was awarded the Dutch Geuzenpenning Award for his work and advocacy on behalf of the LGBT community in his country.

It has come to the Law Society's attention that in early 2017, Michel Togué received multiple death threats as a result of his legal work on behalf of individuals who identify as LGBT. Reports indicate that when he subsequently approached Cameroon's Lawyer's Association for assistance, its president advised Michel Togué: "Stop defending the LGBT community and you won't have problems anymore." Similarly, his request for protection was denied by Cameroonian police.

Michel Togué, along with his wife and children, first began receiving death threats in the form of emails and text messages in October 2012. As the death threats against him and his family escalated, his wife and children sought asylum in the United States. Michel Togué, however, chose to remain in Cameroon to continue his work with the LGBT community.

In light of these circumstances, the Law Society urges Your Excellency to comply with Cameroon's obligations under international human rights laws, including the United Nations' Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers.

Article 16 of the Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers states:

Governments shall ensure that lawyers (a) are able to perform all of their professional functions without intimidation, hindrance, harassment or improper interference; (b) are able to travel and to consult with their clients freely both within their own country and abroad; and (c) shall not suffer, or be threatened with, prosecution or administrative, economics or other sanctions for any action taken in accordance with recognized professional duties, standards and ethics.

The Law Society urges the Government of Cameroon to:

- a. immediately conduct a fair, impartial and independent investigation into the harassment and intimidation of Michel Togué in order to identify all those responsible, bring them to trial and apply to them civil, penal and/or administrative sanctions provided by law;
- b. put an end to all acts of harassment against Michel Togué and all other lawyers in Cameroon;
- c. guarantee in all circumstances the physical and psychological integrity of Michel Togué;
- d. ensure that all lawyers in Cameroon can carry out their professional duties and activities without fear of reprisals, physical violence or other human rights violations; and

TAB 5.3

IN CAMERA
FOR DECISION

APPOINTMENT OF ALTERNATE DISCRIMINATION AND HARASSMENT COUNSEL

Motion

78. That Convocation appoint three Alternate Discrimination and Harassment Counsel (DHCs) as set out in this report for a term of one year, in accordance with the provisions of By-law 11 – Regulation of Conduct, Capacity and Professional Competence.

Background

DHC Program Review and Impact on the Alternate DHCs

79. On February 9, 2017 the Committee approved the review of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program in accordance with the Challenges Final Report, Recommendation 12 (1).
80. At its February 9, 2017 meeting, EIAC reviewed the contracts of the Alternate DHCs, David Bennett and Lynn Bevan.
81. The review was prompted by:
- a. EIAC's engagement in the Program review; and
  - b. The fact that the contracts for the Alternate DHCs were set to expire on May 28, 2017.
82. EIAC determined that in keeping with the full review planned to commence in the spring of 2017, and considerations for the review as they related to the Alternate DHCs, described below, the contracts of the DHC alternates would not be renewed.
83. EIAC decided to engage in a full recruitment process for the DHC Alternates. At its April 6, 2017 meeting, EIAC adopted the Recruitment Process for the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Alternates in accordance with By-law 11 s.17.<sup>1</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> 17. (1) Convocation shall not appoint a person as Alternate Counsel unless the appointment is recommended by the standing Committee:

Vacancy in office

- (2) If the Committee wishes Convocation to appoint another person as Alternate Counsel, the Committee shall give Convocation, from the most recent list of persons the Committee recommended to Convocation for appointment as Counsel, a ranked list of at least two persons the Committee recommends for appointment as Alternate Counsel, with brief supporting reasons.

84. EIAC considered that the review of the DHC Program was an opportunity to consider expanding the role of the Alternate DHC to give them more exposure than they would typically be afforded <sup>2</sup> and to provide complainants with options as to who they wish to consult.
85. In its preliminary assessment, EIAC determined that the DHC program should still be operationalized through a central number/email that is answered by the DHC. In the initial contact with the complainant the DHC would determine whether this was a matter within the scope of the DHC as established in By-law 11. Complainants with matters within the scope of the DHC would then be given the option of continuing to speak with the DHC to discuss their complaint or provided with the profile(s) of the alternate(s) and the opportunity to work with the Alternate DHC.
86. In circumstances where a conflict arises and the chosen DHC is unable to act, one of the other DHCs would be assigned. Other circumstances may also preclude a specific DHC from being available to complainants.

Same

- (3) If the Committee is not able to give Convocation, from the most recent list of persons the Committee recommended to Convocation for appointment as Counsel, a ranked list of at least two persons the Committee recommends for appointment as Alternate Counsel, the Committee shall,
- (a) conduct a search for candidates for appointment as Alternate Counsel in accordance with procedures and criteria established by the Committee; and
  - (b) at the conclusion of the search, the Committee shall give Convocation a ranked list of at least two persons the Committee recommends for appointment as Alternate Counsel, with brief supporting reasons.

Additional candidates

- (4) If the Committee gives Convocation a list of persons it recommends for appointment, Convocation may require the Committee to give Convocation a list of additional persons who are recommended by the Committee for appointment.

Recommendations considered in absence of public

- (5) Convocation shall consider the Committee's recommendations in the absence of the public.

<sup>2</sup> For the past 12 years the role of the Alternate DHC has been to act in the place of the DHC. Typically the Alternate has taken over the role of DHC in the following circumstances:

- a. Scheduled vacation
- b. Work commitments (particularly those that take the DHC out of town for an extended period)
- c. Conflict of interest
- d. Extended sick leaves
- e. Extended absences (leave of absence)

Early on in her appointment as DHC Cynthia Petersen was advised that should she be "unable to perform the function" she was first to contact David Bennett and only if he was "unable to perform the function" would Lynda Bevan be contacted. This has resulted in an uneven distribution of work between the Alternates with more work being directed to David Bennett over Lynda Bevan. All advertising efforts, as well as promotional and educational events, have highlighted the role of Cynthia Petersen as DHC and have typically not mentioned (or highlighted) the role of the Alternates. Other than in exceptional circumstances the Alternates do not participate in delivering educational or information sessions.

87. In EIAC's view, the opportunity that this arrangement offers is that complainants are given a choice of a person from whom they seek counsel, which gives a higher profile and larger role to Alternate DHC. The EIAC also thought that this may lead to increased usage of the DHC Program.
88. These considerations established the basis for the recruitment of the alternate DHCs, and the recruitment process in which the EIAC engaged, through its recruitment committee.

Recruitment Process

89. A job posting, in French and English, was placed in the Ontario Reports. The position posting was also advertised on the Law Society website and circulated widely, to over 100 individuals and associations, with a purposeful outreach to diverse and equality seeking groups/associations and individuals.
90. The Recruitment Committee, in keeping with the process approved by EIAC, consisted of the following members:
- Sandra Nishikawa, Co-Chair of EIAC
  - Tanya Walker, Licensee Bencher
  - Gisele Chretien, Appointed Bencher
  - Michael Doi, Member of EAG
  - Constance Simmonds, Member of IAG
  - Marian MacGregor, Equity Advisor, support to the Committee
  - Suzanne Douglas, Senior Resource Manager, support to the Committee
91. In response to the posting, the Law Society received 32 applications, each of whom were mapped onto a matrix which identified the experiences and skills vis-à-vis the DHC criteria.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> DHC Criteria

- a. Knowledge of, and experience in, human rights legislation including jurisprudence and best practices.
- b. Knowledge of the Law Society's complaint procedure and discipline process.
- c. Knowledge of the Law Society's Rules of Professional Conduct and Paralegal Rules of Conduct.
- d. Knowledge of alternate dispute resolution techniques including: mediation, complaints investigations and legal actions through courts.
- e. Proven ability and experience in applying alternate dispute resolution techniques.
- f. Knowledge of resources and options available to assist complainants who allege harassment or discrimination.
- g. The ability to assist complainants to take action to resolve complaints.

92. The Recruitment Committee eventually narrowed the group of proposed candidates to eight applicants who received telephone interviews.
93. Following this assessment and discussion, the Recruitment Committee decided to conduct four in-person interviews before the Committee. In selecting Applicants for an interview, special attention was paid to Applicants who identified as bilingual (French and English) and have experience with or knowledge of Indigenous communities.
94. At the close of the discussion the Recruitment Committee prepared a recommendation for EIAC's consideration.
95. After discussions held on June 8, 2017, EIAC unanimously recommends the appointment of three candidates, whose qualifications are summarized below.

The Candidates

96. As By-Law 11 requires a ranked list of the candidates, the candidates who are recommended are ranked in the order show below. However, the recommendation of EIAC is that all three candidates be appointed Alternate DHCs.

- 1 Fay Faraday
- 2 Lai-King Hum
- 3 Natasha Persaud

Fay Faraday

97. Knowledge of, and experience in, human rights legislation including jurisprudence and best practices.

Ms. Faraday was Called to the Bar in 1996 and has focused her practice exclusively in the areas of human rights and labour law. Her work on behalf of equality-seeking groups has addressed a broad range of systemic human rights issues including racial discrimination, gender and work, rights of persons with disabilities, pay equity, employment equity, poverty, income security, LGBTQ rights and rights of Indigenous

- h. Experience in providing services on a one-on-one basis.
  - i. Ability to identify systemic issues of discrimination and the ability to make recommendations about policies, programs and services to promote non-discrimination.
  - j. Knowledge of diversity issues particularly as they impact equality seeking communities.
  - k. Cultural competency in working with diverse communities.
  - l. Knowledge of Indigenous ways of thinking and of the Indigenous community.
  - m. Ability to converse in English and French is an asset.

communities. Ms. Faraday has appeared before administrative Tribunals and all levels of court including the Supreme Court of Canada.

98. Knowledge of the Law Society's complaint procedure and discipline process. Knowledge of the Law Society's Rules of Professional Conduct and Paralegal Rules of Conduct.

In addition to her human rights practice, Ms. Faraday is currently appointed as the Course Director for Osgoode Hall Law School's first year mandatory course "Ethical Lawyering in a Global Community" and holds the Packer Visiting Chair in Social Justice at York University. As Course Director her priority is to ensure that there is a focus on lawyers' equity and anti-discrimination obligations, cultural competence and access to justice for marginalized communities. She utilizes materials from the Law Society including the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel reports to assist in illustrating these points and the obligations of all professionals.

99. Knowledge of alternate dispute resolution techniques including: mediation, complaints investigations and legal actions through courts. Proven ability and experience in applying alternate dispute resolution techniques.

Ms. Faraday has an extensive practice background appearing at all levels of court including appearing before the Supreme Court of Canada. She understood and has put into practice alternate dispute resolution techniques and provided practical examples that illustrate her expertise in this area.

100. Knowledge of resources and options available to assist complainants who allege harassment or discrimination. The ability to assist complainants to take action to resolve complaints. Experience in providing services on a one-on-one basis.

Ms. Faraday has extensive experience in her 20-year legal career in human rights and is well equipped to outline and explain the various options to assist complainants. Ms. Faraday understands the power imbalances embedded in the situations and relationships being discussed. Ms. Faraday notes that she is often sought out by racialized lawyers and law students to act as a mentor in working through issues of systemic discrimination that they have encountered within the legal profession.

101. Ability to identify systemic issues of discrimination and the ability to make recommendations about policies, programs and services to promote non-discrimination. Knowledge of diversity issues particularly as they impact equality seeking communities.

In addition to the above noted skills and experience, Ms. Faraday also works with community-based organizations to develop strategic law reform strategies so as to address systemic discrimination issues. Ms. Faraday has an extensive publication record in peer reviewed academic journals, book chapters and books on the broad themes of equity and human rights issues. Her publication record also extends to law reform reports and legislative briefs. Ms. Faraday drew upon her own experiences as a racialized lawyer to give a deeper understanding of the power dynamics embedded in law and her approach to advocacy in dealing with discrimination and harassment.

102. Cultural competency in working with diverse communities. Knowledge of Indigenous ways of thinking and of the Indigenous community.

Ms. Faraday had a thorough and deep understanding of the unique barriers facing Indigenous complainants accessing the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel and the legal system more generally. She had a thoughtful and comprehensive understanding of the impact colonialism has on Indigenous communities and used examples from her own litigation practice in which she represented Elders in a dispute regarding Treaty Lands to illustrate her points.

Lai-King Hum

103. Knowledge of, and experience in, human rights legislation including jurisprudence and best practices.

Ms. Hum was Called to the Bar in Quebec in 1997 and Ontario in 1999 and is fluent in English and French. Ms. Hum's practice is focused in the areas of employment and labour law, human rights and administrative law and most often represents employers. She has a special focus on workplace investigations and mediations particularly as they relate to human rights. More recently, Ms. Hum was appointed Deputy Judge in the Small Claims Court in early 2017.

104. Knowledge of the Law Society's complaint procedure and discipline process. Knowledge of the Law Society's Rules of Professional Conduct and Paralegal Rules of Conduct.

As a former Bilingual Complaints Resolution Counsel at the Law Society from 2004-2007 Ms. Hum has solid experience and knowledge with the Law Society's complaints procedure.

105. Knowledge of alternate dispute resolution techniques including: mediation, complaints investigations and legal actions through courts. Proven ability and experience in applying alternate dispute resolution techniques.

Ms. Hum displayed a thorough understanding of alternative dispute resolution theory and processes and was able to relate and apply this to case specific experiences. She also brings perspectives to mediation; as a judge, an investigator/mediator and as a lawyer. She has a strong litigation background and has appeared in administrative Tribunals and courts throughout her career.

106. Knowledge of resources and options available to assist complainants who allege harassment or discrimination. The ability to assist complainants to take action to resolve complaints. Experience in providing services on a one-on-one basis.

Ms. Hum's practice has a focus on workplace investigations as they relate to harassment and discrimination. She demonstrates a complete understanding of the resources and options available to complainants from informal resolutions that involve just the complainant and licensee (where she notes the DHC can play a supporting role in the background) to more formal resolutions that involve mediation (with a possible role for the DHC) and/or litigation options for the complainant. Ms. Hum has experience providing one-on-one services in her practice and throughout her career. Her law firm also runs a bi-weekly pro-bono legal clinic at the Scadding Court Community Centre. Ms. Hum recently became an Advisor in the Law Society's Coach and Advisor Network (CAN

107. Ability to identify systemic issues of discrimination and the ability to make recommendations about policies, programs and services to promote non-discrimination. Knowledge of diversity issues particularly as they impact equality seeking communities.

In addition to the skills and experiences noted above Ms. Hum demonstrated a thoughtful and deep understanding of the issues facing racialized complainants. She noted the important work begun by Convocation in unanimously passing the 13 Recommendations and the review of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel as being one important step. She noted the potential to expand the outreach and educational role of the DHC as an opportunity to address systemic discrimination issues.

108. Cultural competency in working with diverse communities. Knowledge of Indigenous ways of thinking and of the Indigenous community.

Ms. Hum demonstrated knowledge of the barriers facing Indigenous complainants and emphasized the role that colonialism plays in creating power imbalances. Ms. Hum also noted that lack of knowledge of the DHC role and proximity were additional barriers. Lastly, Ms. Hum noted that the DHC will need to be particularly sensitive to this communities needs and to find opportunities to do appropriate outreach.

Natasha Persaud

109. Knowledge of, and experience in, human rights legislation including jurisprudence and best practices.

Ms. Persaud was Called to the Bar in 2008 and has spent her practice immersed in human rights issues. In her former role as Staff Lawyer at the Human Rights Legal Support Centre and now in her own private practice Ms. Persaud provides advice and representation to those experiencing human rights violations. She is knowledgeable in the most recent jurisprudence and appears before the Human Rights Tribunal and civil courts regularly.

110. Knowledge of the Law Society's complaint procedure and discipline process. Knowledge of the Law Society's Rules of Professional Conduct and Paralegal Rules of Conduct.

Ms. Persaud displayed a thorough understanding of the Law Society's rules and procedures. In the context of her role as Review Counsel at CLASP Ms. Persaud has the opportunity to impress the importance of ethical practises to the law students working in the clinic.

111. Knowledge of alternate dispute resolution techniques including: mediation, complaints investigations and legal actions through courts. Proven ability and experience in applying alternate dispute resolution techniques.

Ms. Persaud fully understands the role of alternate dispute resolution techniques and engages in mediation frequently in the resolution of her cases. She provided practical examples of how she utilized mediation to create long term solutions for her clients that was consistent with their goals and desired outcomes. She is clear, compassionate and empathetic to clients with systemic discrimination issues and advises clients on the realistic outcomes vis-à-vis their goals.

112. Knowledge of resources and options available to assist complainants who allege harassment or discrimination. The ability to assist complainants to take action to resolve complaints. Experience in providing services on a one-on-one basis.

As a community based lawyer Ms. Persaud has a solid understanding of the resources available to complainants and brings a special knowledge of the issues facing complainants who are not in the legal profession and are from diverse backgrounds. Ms. Persaud works directly with clients in her private practice and as Review Counsel.

113. Ability to identify systemic issues of discrimination and the ability to make recommendations about policies, programs and services to promote non-discrimination. Knowledge of diversity issues particularly as they impact equality seeking communities.

In addition to the skills and experience noted above Ms. Persaud brings to the role her own personal experience with discrimination within the legal profession. As one of only a few law students and now lawyers who wear the hijab Ms. Persaud related to experiences of discrimination both explicit and implicit. Her ability to reflect on those experiences and use them as moments of education allowed her to reflect on the wider role that the DHC can play in terms of educating the legal profession. From her unique position at one of Ontario's largest law schools she plays the role of mentor to other students who identify as racialized and can see the opportunities for education and outreach within the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel role.

114. Cultural competency in working with diverse communities. Knowledge of Indigenous ways of thinking and of the Indigenous community.

Ms. Persaud demonstrated knowledge of the barriers facing Indigenous complainants and emphasized that colonialism is still impacting Indigenous communities. Ms. Persaud noted that the impacts of the Indian Residential School system has engendered systemic violence that has yet to be resolved. It will be necessary to engage in appropriate and specific outreach to the Indigenous community about the office of the DHC and its role.

UPDATE ON IMPLEMENTATION OF THE RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE CHALLENGES FACED BY RACIALIZED LICENSEES REPORT
("THE CHALLENGES REPORT")

Introduction

126. This report provides an update on the implementation of certain recommendations of the Challenges Report.
127. To manage the implementation of the Challenges Report, the Equity Initiatives department is tasked with management oversight from the operations perspective and works in tandem with the EIAC which is tasked with the oversight and facilitation of the implementation of the recommendations.
128. Close attention is being paid to recommendations that are to be implemented in 2017 and 2018 which is co-ordinated with the timeline set out in the Challenges Report (TAB 5.5.1). The EIAC is updated on the progress of implementation at its Committee meetings.
129. Recommendations that are to be implemented in 2017 and 2018 are the current focus. As discussed in the Challenges Report, the recommendations are part of a framework that is designed to permit implementation to be strategically undertaken to support continuing implementation of recommendations for 2019 and beyond.
130. The following is a recommendation by recommendation review of the steps taken towards implementation for 2017 and 2018.

Implementation Update

Recommendations 3(1) and 3(2)

Changes to the Lawyer and Paralegal Annual Reports (LAR and PAR)

131. With respect to implementation of Recommendations 3(1) and (2), the Law Society is required to make changes to the Lawyer Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report (LAR/PAR) in 2017 to enable reporting on certain requirements in early 2018. These changes are being implemented and are on track for completion in anticipation of the March 31, 2018 reporting deadline. The requirements include a declaration with respect to abiding by a statement of principles to promote equality, diversity and inclusion and a requirement to create and implement a human rights/diversity policy for legal workplaces of 10 or more licensees.

Communications Initiatives

132. Communications are currently being prepared, which will provide information and guidance to the professions on the requirements outlined in the Challenges Report. The first of these will appear in the Ontario Reports in the upcoming weeks. Particular attention is paid to Recommendations 3(1) and 3(2) and the timelines associated with these requirements. Beginning in June 2017, information will be made available and distributed to the legal professions to create awareness around the requirements and obligations of recommendations 3(1) and 3(2).
133. Resources to assist members in meeting the obligations of this recommendation are being developed. Part of the communications approach is to maintain a dedicated webpage for members to access resources as needed. This will include a series of FAQs and similar resources to address questions and concerns that may arise when licensees take steps to meet the requirements.

Recommendations 4 and 5

134. Work has begun at the staff level to prepare language that will be included in the LAR/PAR for 2017 advising of the anticipated change in the use of inclusion and diversity data currently captured through the LAR and PAR in the self-identification demographic questions. Once prepared, this will serve as notice to profession regarding the changing use of data in the coming year (2018 LAR/PAR).

Recommendation 7

135. Work has also begun to conceptualize the inclusion survey required of this recommendation, which the report suggests will be similar to that conducted by Stratcom in 2016. This recommendation is to be implemented by the end of 2017.

Recommendation 12 (2)

136. As required by Recommendation 12(2), the Committee received a report from the Executive Director, Professional Regulation Division advising that the Division has created multi-functional enforcement teams with a range of types of Investigators and Discipline Counsel/Paralegals who are working together to be sensitive to, recognize and deal with issues of systemic discrimination. Training of the teams is planned.

Recommendation 13(1)(g) – Leading by Example

137. The Law Society has established a Diversity and Inclusion Committee with a mandate to organize educational events for Law Society staff to promote an equality and inclusive workplace. With the Committee membership, which is comprised of Law Society staff, now established, they have had the opportunity to meet and are developing a plan for diversity and inclusion events for 2017 and 2018.

FOR INFORMATION

UPDATE ON REVIEW OF THE DISCRIMINATION AND HARASSMENT COUNSEL PROGRAM*Introduction

138. As a companion report to this month's update on implementation of the recommendations in the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Report ("the Challenges Report"), this update provides information on the status of the review of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel (DHC) Program.

Background

139. Recommendation 12(1) of the Report directs the Law Society to "review the function, processes and structure of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC)<sup>1</sup>, including considering effective ways for the DHC to address issues of systemic discrimination."
140. The concept for the review of the Program predated the Report's approval at December 2016 Convocation, as the EIAC in June 2015 directed that a review be undertaken. This was based on a number of factors, which coincide with those reflected in the Report, and include the following:
- a. The Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group (RWG), relying on the results of an extensive consultation with the profession, identified the reluctance of racialized licensees to bring forward matters of systemic discrimination;
  - b. In discussing the renewal of the Indigenous Framework, the EIAC noted that the DHC Program does not have a counsel in the North or a counsel that is versed in Indigenous ways of knowing and being; and
  - c. The DHC Program has been reviewed on two previous occasions—in 2001 and 2005. In 2005, Convocation approved a recommendation that the Law Society undertake a review of the DHC Program every three years to determine how to improve the Program's effectiveness.
141. The Treasurer's mandate letter to EAIC (September 2016) also indicated that the Committee should undertake: A review and assessment of the Office of Discrimination and Harassment Counsel with specific reference to its effectiveness in addressing various forms of discrimination.

---

142. Following the June and other developments described above, the review of the DHC Program was placed on hold given the work that was progressing on the Report and which eventually led to adoption of the recommendations, including Recommendation 12(1), in December 2016.
143. In February 2017, the EIAC approved a process for the review and staff began work on the review shortly thereafter.

Update on Recruitment of Alternate Discrimination and Harassment Counsel

144. On a matter related to the operation of the DHC, pursuant to the Law Society's by-laws, the EIAC may recommend to Convocation the appointment of one or more Alternate DHCs.
145. As reported to Convocation in April 2017, the Law Society has recently engaged in a recruitment process for the appointment of Alternate DHCs, which included a job posting, in French and English, in the Ontario Reports and advertising the position on the Law Society's website. The recruitment committee, struck by EIAC as part of the process in accordance with the authority in the by-laws, was composed of:
- Sandra Nishikawa, Co-Chair of EIAC
  - Tanya Walker, Licensee Bencher
  - Gisele Chretien, Appointed Bencher
  - Michael Doi, Member of the Equity Advisory Group
  - Constance Simmonds, Member of the Indigenous Advisory Group
146. The EIAC will report to Convocation on the results of the recruitment process and its recommendations at the appropriate time and, in accordance with the by-law provisions, in the absence of the public.

Scope of the DHC Program Review

147. According to the Challenges Report, "The objective of [the review identified under Recommendation 12(1)] would be to identify how the DHC role can be better used to address discrimination and harassment in the professions, including systemic discrimination, while keeping in mind the independent arms-length position of the DHC and the duty of the DHC to maintain the confidentiality of any individuals who use the Program".
148. The review is intended to determine how effective the DHC Program is in addressing issues of discrimination and harassment, including individual and systemic racism. The review is designed to be comprehensive and will take into account the current circumstances surrounding the DHC, seek information from relevant sources about the Program and determine how the issues identified can be addressed.

149. The EIAC Executive has been designated as the steering group for the review which is being managed by Equity Initiatives staff.

Status of the DHC Program Review

150. The first part of the review, a Phase I Literature Review, has been completed.
151. Staff engaged in a review of key resource material at the Law Society and elsewhere to identify key originating documents, policy directions and previous Program reviews. The reviewers also looked at best practices for similar ombuds programs in Ontario and in other jurisdictions. The staff is also assessing the DHC budget.
152. Phase II will commence within the next few months. This phase will gather qualitative data about the Program. The methodology will include interviews with the current DHC and the alternate DHCs to gather their input on the key questions and issues related to the Program. The reviewers will also interview key staff within the Law Society whose roles intersect with those seeking access to the Program such as Client Services Department, Professional Regulation Division and Equity Department. The plan also involves hosting a number of focus group interviews utilizing existing advisory groups, such as L'Association des juristes d'expression française de l'Ontario (AJEFO), the Indigenous Advisory Group, Equity Advisory Group, Treasurer's Liaison Group and others as appropriate.
153. Phase III will commence following the completion and assessment of the results of information from Phase II. Phase III, utilizing the qualitative data from Phase II, will involve a survey of the legal professions and licensing process students to explore such things as awareness of the Program, consideration of use of the Program, views on the purpose and value of the Program and options for improvements or enhancements to the Program. The survey would be conducted by a third party and the results reported and assessed.
154. As work progresses on the review, further reports will be provided to keep Convocation apprised of this important work.

TAB 5.6.1

DISCRIMINATION AND HARASSMENT COUNSEL PROGRAM DESCRIPTION

Background

1. Funded by the Law Society of Upper Canada, the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel \(DHC\) Program operates at arm's length, and is available free-of-charge to the Ontario public, lawyers, paralegals and students. The DHC derives its mandate and authority from By-law 11- Regulation of Conduct, Capacity and Professional Competence Part II.
2. In May 1997, the Law Society adopted the Bicentennial Report and Recommendations on Equity Issues in the Legal Profession (Bicentennial Report) which has since guided the Law Society's efforts to advance equity and diversity in the legal profession. Recommendation 11 of the report stated that, "The Law Society should ensure that it is effectively meeting its responsibilities as a regulator to eliminate discriminatory practices within the legal profession." The description of the recommendation speaks to the creation of a "safe counsel" program for "victims of discrimination and harassment" that would operate independent of the Law Society.
3. In fall 1998, Convocation approved the creation of a Discrimination and Harassment Ombudsperson role. In June 1999, Convocation adopted a submission from the Treasurer's Equity Advisory Group setting out the parameters for the position. On September 1, 1999, the DHC began operating as a pilot project. In June 2001, after a review of the program, which included consideration of the relationship of the DHC with the professional regulation functions and the equity initiatives function of the Law Society, the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel was established as a permanent initiative.
4. While operating at arms-length,<sup>1</sup> the DHC forms an integral part of the Law Society's equity initiatives and regulatory functions. The DHC's role is primarily directed to support complainants and the resources of the DHC have been focused in this area.
5. The DHC assists anyone who may have experienced discrimination or harassment based on human rights grounds by a lawyer, paralegal or student member of the Law Society. Since its creation, the person who has held the position of DHC has been bilingual (French and English).

---

<sup>1</sup> The DHC is not an in-house employee of the Law Society. As outlined in By-law 11 Part II Discrimination and Harassment Counsel, information received by the DHC is kept confidential. The only information provided to the Law Society is anonymous statistical data showing the number and type of complaints and anonymous demographic data about complainants.

6. The DHC's role is to:
  - Listen to concerns;
  - Clarify issues;
  - Provide information and advice;
  - Review options and avenues of recourse (e.g. filing a complaint with the Law Society, filing an application with the Human Rights Tribunal of Ontario);
  - Explain the advantages and disadvantages of each option; and
  - Provide referrals to other resources that may be of assistance.
7. Upon request, the DHC may attempt to resolve issues through intervening informally as a neutral facilitator or by conducting formal mediation, where appropriate. Mediation is a voluntary process and requires the consent of all parties. The DHC facilitates the discussion and assists the parties in crafting their own resolution.
8. The DHC does not have investigative powers and does not operate a formal complaints process that involves fact-finding. The DHC also does not provide legal advice or legal representation and cannot make referrals to lawyers or paralegals.
9. All information obtained by the DHC is kept in strict confidence. By-law 11 formally exempts the DHC from reporting requirements under the Rules of Professional Conduct. As the program was created to provide counsel to those who do not wish to approach the Law Society through its complaints process, there a separation of the DHC and professional regulation. The DHC's duty of confidentiality overrides any requirement to report misconduct of another lawyer or paralegal under the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct.
10. The current DHC was appointed on November 21, 2002, replacing the first DHC, and has been in the position since that date. She was reappointed on September 25, 2003, following a search for candidates pursuant to what was then By-Law 36 – Discrimination and Harassment Counsel. She was then reappointed in 2006, 2009, 2012 and 2015.
11. In May 2016, Convocation approved the reappointment of the current DHC, effective, September 28, 2016, for a term of one year. The Committee recommended the reappointment for one year in order to allow it to conduct a review of the DHC Program and, if required, implement changes in a timely fashion.
12. In November 2003, Convocation approved the creation an Alternate DHC position to provide backup when the permanent DHC is unable to fulfill their duties. Following a recruitment process, the Alternate DHC position was filled. The Alternate DHC assume the functions of the DHC when she is unavailable. There are currently two Alternative DHC.

Memorandum

To: Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee
 From: Ada Maxwell-Alleyne
 Date: November 17, 2021
 Re.: Challenges Report Implementation Update

Purpose

This memo provides the Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee (“Committee”) with:

1. an update on the implementation of the Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions Report (“Challenges Report”); and
2. an outline of the peer review undertaken to evaluate the implementation of the Challenges Report, with decisions on the use of the results of the Inclusion Index to be made following that review.

Timeline

The following outlines the significant steps in the development and implementation of the Challenges Report:

2012: Challenges Working Group begins an engagement process to gather information about barriers faced by racialized licensees. The firm Strategic Communications Inc. (Stratcom) manages this data gathering process employing a multi-model research approach and presents its final report.

2014: The Working Group reviews the data from the engagement process and drafts a consultation paper titled Developing Strategies for Change: Addressing Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees. Convocation approves this consultation paper.

2014-2015: The Working Group consults broadly with licensees, law students, articling students and the public. The Law Firms Diversity and Inclusion Network and legal organizations are also consulted.

2015-2016: The Working Group develops its final report with 13 recommendations.

2016: Convocation approves the final report and recommendations in December.

2017 forward: Implementation of recommendations.

Status of the Challenges Report

The Challenges Report outlines five strategies and 13 recommendations to address systemic barriers faced by racialized licensees. Most of the recommendations have been implemented and others are in process. The recommendations and the status of each can be found at TAB 5.1.

To date, the Law Society has not evaluated the project, its recommendations or its implementation to assess the effectiveness in achieving the Law Society's goal to reduce barriers faced by racialized and Indigenous licensees, thereby helping to ensure healthy and successful legal professions and advancing the public interest. Project reviews are generally seen as standard best practice when an institution undertakes a major initiative. Moreover, before moving forward with outstanding recommendations developed in 2016, the Law Society should obtain expert advice on the relevance of those recommendations in the 2021 environment.

The Inclusion Index

One of the outstanding recommendations of the Challenges Report is Recommendation 6 which provides that:

Every four years, the Law Society will develop and publish an Inclusion Index that reflects the following information, including, for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees: the legal workplace's self-assessment information (Recommendation 3(3)), demographic data obtained from the Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report (Recommendation 4) and information gathered from the inclusion questions provided by the Law Society (Recommendation 5).<sup>1</sup>

The data underlying the Index comes from the 2018 Annual Report and was collected in the first quarter of 2019. In April 2019, the Law Society engaged the firm Diversio to develop the Index. Diversio delivered a draft of the Index in the fall of 2019. By that time, Law Society counsel who were originally involved in the development of the Index had left the organization. New Policy counsel engaged with Diversio to further develop the Index and understand the methodology underlying the results before planning its release.

In March 2020, the Law Society shifted its focus to addressing the challenges and disruptions caused by the pandemic. EIAC resumed its regular work in late 2020. Before a decision is made on how to move forward with the information collected for the Index, a number of questions should be considered:

1. Were the demographic, inclusion and self-assessment questions in the lawyer and paralegal annual reports the right questions to meet the purpose?
2. Given the three-year period between the collection of the data and the current date, is it scientifically sound to release the data?
3. The data on which the Index is based is now three years old. Is the Inclusion Index based on that data relevant today?

<sup>1</sup> Recommendations 3, 4, 5 and 6 of the Challenges Report speak to the creation of an Inclusion Index for legal workplaces with 25 or more licensees. The Index was to include data from three sources in the 2018 Members' Annual Report: the legal workplace mandatory self-assessment responses; individual licensee voluntary responses to self-identification; and inclusion questions. The Index was to be published every four years.

4. In anticipation of the release of the Inclusion Index, some workplaces proactively adopted strategies to promote equity, diversity and inclusion within their workplaces. The progress of these workplaces is not reflected in the current Index. Would the release of the Index at this point support the Law Society's goal of reducing barriers faced by racialized and Indigenous licensees?
5. If the answer to any of the above questions is "no", would the Law Society's reputation be negatively impacted by the release of the Index?

Peer Review of Challenges Report

Given this context, a peer review of the Challenges Report has been undertaken. A decision on how to move forward with the Inclusion Index data will be made once the review is completed. The review will explore whether the implementation of the Challenges Report provides effective requirements, incentives and information that assist in reducing barriers faced by racialized and Indigenous licensees. The review will assess:

- a. the impact of fully implemented recommendations of the Challenges Report (e.g. Recommendation 9, regarding mandatory EDI CPD and related products);
- b. the impediments to implementing certain recommendations (e.g. Recommendation 12, regarding addressing systemic discrimination); and
- c. the reliability of the data collection and analysis used in 2019;
- d. the extent to which the above data and analysis is relevant for 2021.

The review will also provide recommendations for the further enhancement of EDI within the legal community.

Structure of the Peer Review

The peer review is being conducted by a panel of experts and will be completed in April 2022. The three experts who have been retained possess significant knowledge in survey methodology, research, and equity, diversity and inclusion. Care was taken to compile a list of experts who can provide a neutral and objective commentary. A summary of the review will be presented to the Committee and Convocation in May or June 2022.

An evaluation rubric will be provided to the reviewers. Some of the questions to be addressed through this review include:

With respect to the Challenges Report

- Was the data collection process valid?
- Were response rates sufficient?
- Were the questions posed as part of the membership survey appropriate?
- Is the process of using key informants effective/reliable?

With respect to the Inclusion Index

- Were the demographic, inclusion and self-assessment questions in the lawyer and paralegal annual reports the right questions to meet the purpose?
- Was the scope appropriate?

- Would the Index, as produced, achieve the desired result vis-à-vis legal workplaces?
- Is the data still reliable?
- Should the next version include any changes?

With respect to future equity work at the Law Society

- Is there a more effective way to collect equity data than the Law Society's current approach?
- Is the format of the collected data appropriate? (for example, are the Law Society's demographic categories generally accepted?)
- Are there other probative questions that can assist in the equity agenda? (i.e. income related to demographics)

The Committee will receive the Inclusion Index and the supporting materials for the peer review when the peer review is completed.

Challenges Report Recommendations: Status Update as of November 2021

Recommendation	Status/Date Completed
Recommendation 1 – Reinforcing Professional Obligations The Law Society will review and amend, where appropriate, the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, and Commentaries to reinforce the professional obligations of all licensees to recognize, acknowledge and promote principles of equality, diversity and inclusion consistent with the requirements under human rights legislation and the special responsibilities of licensees in the legal and paralegal professions.	Amended Rule 6.3 in 2018 to address results of articling survey In 2019, Convocation approved a motion requiring licensees to acknowledge in their Annual Report Filing, in accordance with the professional conduct rules, their special responsibility to respect the requirements of human rights laws in Ontario and to honour the obligation not to discriminate. The Law Society is actively participating in the Federation of Law Societies’ TRC Calls to Action Advisory Committee. One of the Committee’s priorities is implementing recommendations related to cultural competency training.
Recommendation 2 – Diversity and Inclusion Project The Law Society will work with stakeholders, such as interested legal workplaces, legal associations, law schools and paralegal colleges to develop model policies and resources to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees.	The Law Society maintains an EDI resources webpage, that includes model workplace policies. The model policies were completely updated and shared with the equity partners before being posted to the Law Society website. The Law Society will enhance resources available to assist and support women in law. This will be done in collaboration with the Treasurer’s Women in Law Advisory Group that was appointed in 2021. In terms of other resources, the Law Society continues to host an annual Equity Legal Series in partnership with our equity stakeholder groups. These events are extremely well-attended, and attendance has been steadily increasing since early 2020. The Law Society is reviewing the decision and approval process for new Equity Legal Series offerings to ensure they are diverse, topical and offer useful EDI content for licensees and students.
Recommendation 3 – The Adoption of Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Principles and Practices The Law Society will:	Completed

Challenges Report Recommendations: Status Update as of November 2021

1) require every licensee to adopt and to abide by a statement of principles acknowledging their obligation to promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally, and in their behaviour towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public; 2) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy for their legal workplace addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement, which will be available to members of the professions and the public upon request; 3) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to complete, every two years, an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment for their legal workplace, to be provided to the Law Society; and 4) encourage legal workplaces to conduct inclusion surveys by providing them with sample templates.
Recommendation 4 – Measuring Progress through Quantitative Analysis Each year, the Law Society will measure progress quantitatively by providing legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees in Ontario with the quantitative self-identification data of their licensees compiled from the Lawyers Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report in a manner consistent with the best practices established to protect licensees vulnerable to harm that may flow from this disclosure, so they can compare their data with the aggregate demographic data gathered from the profession as a whole through the annual reports.	Self-identification data is part of the Inclusion Index package. Diversio offers a dashboard to legal workplaces based on their individual inclusion scores. Discussions are under way to determine next steps regarding the dashboards and their efficacy as they are based on 2018 data. Outside of collecting data on legal workplaces, the Law Society develops annual demographic “snapshots” of the legal professions that indicate the breakdown of the professions in terms of race, language, Indigeneity, gender and sexual orientation.
Recommendation 5 – Measuring Progress through Qualitative Analysis The Law Society will measure progress by: 1) asking licensees to voluntarily answer inclusion questions, provided by the Law Society, about their legal workplace, every four years; and	1) Completed 2) Forms part of the Inclusion Index; information has been collected but not distributed. Further steps are on hold pending a review of the Inclusion Index.

Challenges Report Recommendations: Status Update as of November 2021

2) compiling the results of the inclusion questions for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees in Ontario and providing the legal workplace with a summary of the information gathered
Recommendation 6 – Inclusion Index Every four years, the Law Society will develop and publish an inclusion index that reflects the following information, including, for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees: the legal workplace's self-assessment information (Recommendation 3(3)), demographic data obtained from the Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report (Recommendation 4) and information gathered from the inclusion questions provided by the Law Society (Recommendation 5).	Inclusion Index has been compiled but not published or distributed. See attached memorandum to EIAC outlining proposed review of Challenges Report and Index.
Recommendation 7 – Repeat Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project Inclusion Survey The Law Society will conduct inclusion surveys with questions similar to those asked in Appendix F of the Stratcom Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Final Report (March 11, 2014) (available online at http://www.stratcom.ca/wp-content/uploads/manual/RacializedLicensees_Full-Report.pdf ). The first inclusion survey will be conducted within one year of the adoption of these recommendations, and thereafter every four years, subject to any recommendation by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee to Convocation.	Survey completed in 2017; recommendation is to complete a peer review of the Challenges Report and Inclusion Index before launching further surveys.
Recommendation 8 – Progressive Compliance Measures The Law Society will consider and enact, as appropriate, progressive compliance measures for legal workplaces that do not comply with the requirements proposed in Recommendation 3 and/or legal workplaces that are identified as having systemic barriers to diversity and inclusion.	SME has considered this matter and concluded that progressive compliance measures are not appropriate at this time. As part of the review of the Challenges Report, the Law Society should receive information regarding the efficacy of progressive compliance measures in furthering the goals of EDI.
Recommendation 9 – Continuing Professional Development (CPD) Programs on Topics of Equality and Inclusion in the Professions The Law Society will: 1) launch a three hour accredited program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions; 2) develop resources to assist legal workplaces in	All elements are completed.

Memorandum

To: Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee
 From: Ada Maxwell-Alleyne
 Date/Time: October 4, 2019

Re.: Introduction and Overview of the Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee

Background

In 1997 the Law Society adopted the Bicentennial Report and Recommendations on Equity Issues in the Legal Profession (the Bicentennial Report). The Bicentennial Report reviewed the initiatives the Law Society had taken to address barriers facing racialized, Indigenous, LGBTQ, and Francophone individuals as well as people with disabilities. The Report made sixteen recommendations that have since guided the Law Society in advancing equity and diversity within the legal profession. In the mid-1990's, the Law Society created a standing committee of Convocation, the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee (now the Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee), with the following mandate set out in By-law 3, s. 122 of the Law Society:

- a. Develop for Convocation's approval, policy options for the promotion of equity and diversity having to do in any way with the practice of law or provision of legal services in Ontario and for addressing matters related to Aboriginal peoples and Francophones; and
- b. To consult with Aboriginal, Francophone and other equality-seeking communities in the development of such policy options.

EIAC's Consultation Process for Equity, Diversity and Inclusion (EDI) Initiatives

The Law Society relies on input from and dialogue with the Indigenous Advisory Group (IAG), the Equity Advisory Group (EAG) and L'Association des juristes d'expression française de l'Ontario (AJEFO) in setting the committee's strategic priorities and planning. In addition, EIAC frequently consults equity-seeking stakeholder groups including:

- Roundtable of Diversity Associations (RODA)
- South Asian Bar Association (SABA)
- Canadian Black Lawyer's Association (CABL)
- Canadian Hispanic Bar Association (CHBA)
- Federation of Asian Canadian Lawyers (FACL).

We frequently consult with Legal Leaders in Diversity and Inclusion (a group of Canadian General Counsel who support diversity and inclusion), law firm EDI departments, academic institutions and social justice organizations.

Current Landscape

EIAC initiatives that have been undertaken in pursuit of its mandate have been deployed with consideration of the current legal and cultural/ethnic/racial landscape of Ontario, some of which is outlined below:

- 2016 Canada Census – 29.3% of the Ontario population indicated that they are a “visible minority”.
- Since 2001, the Ontario legal profession has seen a steady increase of racialized lawyers: In 2001, 9.2% of the legal profession was racialized. In 2006, 11.5% of the profession was racialized and the current numbers are below:

LAWYER AND PARALEGAL ENROLMENT IN LICENSING PROCESS BY EQUITY SEEKING GROUPS IN 2018 (DATA OBTAINED FROM LICENSING PROCESS APPLICATIONS)
RACIALIZED COMMUNITY	587	22.94%
FRANCOPHONE	147	5.74%
INDIGENOUS	40	1.56%

- The Law Society’s Statistical Snapshot of Paralegals from the Paralegal Annual Report 2014 shows racialized paralegals at 34% of the profession.

Over the last several years, in developing its major reports on equity and diversity, the Law Society has commissioned studies and surveys as part of community consultations. In particular, the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group gathered a great deal of statistical information about licensee experiences. Below are some of the findings from the Challenges Report consultations that will provide the Committee with context for EIAC’s ongoing work:

Impacts of Racialization on Career Development:

- Racialized licensees find it more difficult to secure articling positions and are less likely to be hired back to the firm where they articulated. Racialized licensees also have more challenges in finding employment generally, as well as in their practice area.
- Racialized licensees are twice as likely as their non-racialized counterparts (with similar qualifications) to experience slow career advancement.
- 40% of racialized licensees rank ethnic/racial identity as the most serious barrier to entry to practice.
- 43% of racialized licensees rank ethnic/racial identity as the most serious barrier to career advancement.
- 50% of licensees name racial prejudice as a top factor that has disadvantaged them at any stage in their career.
- 42% of racialized licensees identify expectations to perform to a higher standard than others based on racial stereotypes as a source of career disadvantage.
- 26% of racialized lawyers report experiencing disrespectful remarks by judges and other lawyers occasionally, routinely or frequently.

Racialization, Complaints and Discipline:

Sole Practitioners in percentages

- The higher representation of racialized lawyers in sole practice is significant as 78% of racialized licensees note a lack of mentors and professional networks to assist with practice challenges.
- 71% perceive racial stereotyping by clients as a risk factor for discipline.
- 70% note lower quality articling positions and inadequate training as putting them at greater risk for complaints and discipline.

Law Firms Interviewing and Hiring Processes

- Racialized licensees express general concerns that they do not fit in at law firms.
- Equity-seeking groups are less likely to article for large private law firms in Toronto and students who article at small firms are less likely to be hired back because the firm is less likely to be able to take on another lawyer.
- Compared to white lawyers, indigenous lawyers are more likely to be in sole practice or practice in a legal clinic, education or government and are much less likely to be law firm partners and somewhat less likely to be in-house lawyers and associates.

- 20% of law firm associates are racialized, compared to about 18% of white lawyers which portends growth in the percentage of racialized law firm partners.
- Racialized lawyers are more likely than non-racialized lawyers to report that they have been assigned tasks that were beneath their skill level.
- 10% of racialized lawyers report that they have been denied an opportunity for a case or file, frequently or a few times, because clients had objected, compared to 4% of non-racialized lawyers.

Earnings

- Evidence suggests that racialized lawyers earn less, on average, than non-racialized lawyers. The difference in the median earnings of racialized and white lawyers is $4,000 per year for lawyers between 25 and 29 but grows to more than $40,000 by ages 40 to 44.<sup>1</sup>
- According to the 2016 Census, racialized women earn 58 cents, and racialized men earn 76 cents, for every dollar a white man earns in Ontario in 2015 (across all industries).
- There is a 45% income gap between Indigenous women and non-Indigenous men, while the average income gap between all Indigenous and non-Indigenous people is 33%.
- A 2018 Law Society survey concluded that 21% of respondents face harassment and discrimination while articling. 1 in 5 respondents face comments or conduct based on their gender, race, sexual orientation, citizenship, disability or other personal characteristics during articling.
- These experiences are not unique to Ontario - a 2019 survey conducted by the Law Societies of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba reveal that nearly 1 in 3 articling students and new lawyer respondents experience discrimination and harassment during recruitment or articling.

Outside organizations have called upon the Law Society to fulfill its responsibility in addressing systemic racism. The Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada (TRC) has called on Canadian law societies to ensure that lawyers receive appropriate cultural competency training, including skills-based training in intercultural competency, conflict resolution, human rights, and anti-racism. The National Inquiry into Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls called upon legal institutions and law professionals to enhance cultural competency standards. The Law Society has publicly reaffirmed its commitment to addressing systemic inequality in responding to the TRC and the National Inquiry recommendations.

EIAC has approached this responsibility by not only looking at the macro effects of racism and discrimination but also by examining barriers that are entrenched in the legal community and in legal institutions that exclude or disadvantage racialized lawyers and clients.

Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group Report

In 2012, the Law Society created the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group (“the Working Group”) to:

- a. identify challenges faced by racialized licensees in different practice environments, including entry into practice and advancement;
- b. identify factors and practice challenges faced by racialized licensees that could increase the risk of regulatory complaints and discipline;

- c. consider best practices for preventative, remedial and/or support strategies;
- d. if appropriate, design and develop preventative, remedial, enforcement, regulatory and/or support strategies, for consideration by the Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee and other committees, to address these challenges.

The Working Group's Approach

In order to fulfil its mandate, the Working Group gathered information about the challenges faced by racialized licensees using an extensive community engagement process. Statistical data, research results and anecdotal evidence reviewed prior to the start of the project suggested that despite the increase in representation of racialized lawyers, they still face challenges in the practice of law. This information was corroborated by the results of stakeholder consultations.

The Challenges Working Group provided its final report, Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions in the fall of 2016. The report and its 13 recommendations (TAB 1.1) were approved by Convocation on December 2, 2016. The report's recommendations fall into five broad Equity, Diversity and Inclusion strategies are:

1. Accelerating Culture Shift
2. Measuring Progress
3. Educating for Change
4. Building Communities of Support
5. Leading by Example

Several of the recommendations have led to other consultations. For example, Recommendation 12(1) of the Working Together Report directs the Law Society to review the function, processes and structure of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC), including ways for the DHC to address complaints of systemic racism. This review was completed in April 2019 in conjunction with the public relations firm Navigator. Navigator undertook a research process that included a broad consultation with stakeholders and resulted in a number of considerations for ways in which the DHC may be able to facilitate education on issues of systemic racism in the legal profession.

Indigenous Framework

In June 2016, the Indigenous Advisory Group (IAG) was established as an independent body to advise the Law Society on the unique issues faced by Indigenous practitioners, paralegals and Indigenous peoples in Ontario and to promote the development of the relationships between Indigenous peoples and Canadian legal structures in a manner that respects Indigenous values, beliefs and legal systems.

In September 2016, the EIAC and the IAG committed to work collaboratively in the development of the Law Society's Indigenous Framework and in 2017 the Law Society adopted the Indigenous Framework to ensure that Indigenous communities see their identity, culture and laws reflected in the Law Society and its processes.

The Framework is based on the following Four Pillars:

- Creating and Enhancing Cultural Competency
- Achieving and Improving Access to Justice
- Promoting and Supporting Knowledge of Indigenous Legal Systems
- Taking Action on Reconciliation

The development of every Law Society initiative within any one of these Framework Pillars must be guided through an “Indigenous lens” in order to fully meet the objective of the Framework. The Indigenous lens is an analytical tool that includes guiding principles and laws from First Nations, Inuit and Métis peoples. The Indigenous Framework can be found at TAB 1.2.

Review Panel on Regulatory and Hearing Processes Affecting Indigenous Peoples

In June 2017, the Treasurer appointed a Review Panel to identify issues and make recommendations on opportunities for the inclusion of Indigenous perspectives in Law Society regulatory and hearing processes. The review was prompted by the Law Society’s experience in Law Society of Upper Canada v. Keshen which raised questions about the Law Society’s regulatory and hearing process in relation to Indigenous persons, complaints, and issues.

The Review Panel reviewed key resources, conducted interviews and consulted with a range of individuals, including experts from the Indigenous community, the chair and vice chair of the Law Society Tribunal and a number of Law Society Professional Regulation Division staff. The Law Society work was carried out alongside an Independent Reviewer, First Nations National Chief Ovide Mercredi. The Law Society engaged with indigenous stakeholders including First Nations in the north, Elders and residential school survivors in developing the recommendations. The outcome of the Review Panel, including the Independent Reviewer, was a series of recommendations to legal organizations to become culturally competent and support broader change in the interests of Indigenous communities and to support healing strategies for survivors. The full report and recommendations can be found at TAB 1.3.

Motion

That Convocation approve the following thirteen recommendations outlined in the Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions report:

Recommendation 1 – Reinforcing Professional Obligations

The Law Society will review and amend, where appropriate, the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, and Commentaries to reinforce the professional obligations of all licensees to recognize, acknowledge and promote principles of equality, diversity and inclusion consistent with the requirements under human rights legislation and the special responsibilities of licensees in the legal and paralegal professions.

Recommendation 2 – Diversity and Inclusion Project

The Law Society will work with stakeholders, such as interested legal workplaces, legal associations, law schools and paralegal colleges to develop model policies and resources to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees.

Recommendation 3 – The Adoption of Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Principles and Practices

The Law Society will:

- 1) ~~require every licensee to adopt and to abide by a statement of principles acknowledging their obligation to promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally, and in their behaviour towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public;~~ See note at page 4a
- 2) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy for their legal workplace addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement, which will be available to members of the professions and the public upon request;
- 3) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to complete, every two years, an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment for their legal workplace, to be provided to the Law Society; and
- 4) encourage legal workplaces to conduct inclusion surveys by providing them with sample templates.

Recommendation 4 – Measuring Progress through Quantitative Analysis

Each year, the Law Society will measure progress quantitatively by providing legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees in Ontario with the quantitative self-identification data of their licensees compiled from the Lawyers Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report in a manner consistent with the best practices established to protect licensees vulnerable to harm that may flow from this disclosure, so they can compare their data with the aggregate demographic data gathered from the profession as a whole through the annual reports.

Note: Convocation amended Recommendation 4 by adding the above, underlined content. References to Recommendation 4 have been updated throughout the report.

Recommendation 5 – Measuring Progress through Qualitative Analysis

The Law Society will measure progress by:

- 1) asking licensees to voluntarily answer inclusion questions, provided by the Law Society, about their legal workplace, every four years; and
- 2) compiling the results of the inclusion questions for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees in Ontario and providing the legal workplace with a summary of the information gathered

Recommendation 6 – Inclusion Index

Every four years, the Law Society will develop and publish an inclusion index that reflects the following information, including, for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees: the legal workplace's self-assessment information (Recommendation 3(3)), demographic data obtained from the Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report (Recommendation 4) and information gathered from the inclusion questions provided by the Law Society (Recommendation 5).

Recommendation 7 – Repeat Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project Inclusion Survey

The Law Society will conduct inclusion surveys with questions similar to those asked in Appendix F of the Stratcom Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Final Report (March 11, 2014) (available online at http://www.stratcom.ca/wp-content/uploads/manual/Racialized-Licensees\_Full-Report.pdf). The first inclusion survey will be conducted within one year of the adoption of these recommendations, and thereafter every four years, subject to any recommendation by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee to Convocation.

Recommendation 8 – Progressive Compliance Measures

The Law Society will consider and enact, as appropriate, progressive compliance measures for legal workplaces that do not comply with the requirements proposed in Recommendation 3 and/or legal workplaces that are identified as having systemic barriers to diversity and inclusion.

Recommendation 9 – Continuing Professional Development (CPD) Programs on Topics of Equality and Inclusion in the Professions

The Law Society will:

- 1) launch a three hour accredited program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions;
- 2) develop resources to assist legal workplaces in designing and delivering their own three hour program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions, to be accredited by the Law Society; and
- 3) require each licensee to complete three hours of an accredited program focused on equality and inclusion within the first three years following the adoption of these recommendations and one hour per year every year thereafter, which will count towards the licensee's professionalism hours for that year.

Recommendation 10 – The Licensing Process

The Law Society will include the topics of cultural competency, equality and inclusion in the professions as competencies to be acquired in the Licensing Process.

Recommendation 11 – Building Communities of Support

The Law Society, in collaboration with legal associations where appropriate, will provide support to racialized licensees in need of direction and assistance through mentoring and networking initiatives.

Recommendation 12 – Addressing Complaints of Systemic Discrimination

The Law Society, in light of the findings of this project and emerging issues in the professions, will:

- 1) review the function, processes and structure of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC), including considering effective ways for the DHC to address issues of systemic discrimination;
- 2) revise the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, where appropriate, so that systemic discrimination and reprisal for complaints of discrimination and harassment are clearly identified as breaches of professional conduct requirements;
- 3) create effective ways for the Professional Regulation Division to address complaints of systemic discrimination; and
- 4) create a specialized and trained team to address complaints of discrimination.

Recommendation 13 – Leading by Example

- 1) The Law Society will continue to monitor and assess internal policies, practices and programs, to promote diversity, inclusion and equality within the workplace and in the provision of services by:
  - a) as required, adopting, implementing and maintaining a human rights/diversity policy addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement;
  - b) measuring quantitative progress through a census of the workforce or other method;
  - c) measuring qualitative progress by conducting inclusion surveys;
  - d) conducting regular equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessments; and
  - e) based on the results from b), c) and d), identifying gaps and barriers and adopting measures to address the gaps and barriers;
  - f) publishing relevant findings from b), c), d) and e); and
  - g) providing equality and inclusion education programs for staff at the Law Society on a regular basis.
- 2) The Law Society will:
  - a) conduct an internal diversity assessment of the bench composition and publicize the results;
  - b) provide equality and inclusion education programs for Convocation on a regular basis

Note:

Recommendation 3.1 of this report regarding the Statement of Principles was repealed by Convocation on September 11, 2019. At that time, Law Society benchers approved a motion to require licensees to acknowledge in their annual reports, in accordance with the professional conduct rules, their special responsibility as a lawyer or paralegal to respect the requirements of human rights laws in Ontario and to honour the obligation not to discriminate.

Overview of Submissions

The Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group (“the Working Group”) provided its final report, Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions on September 22, 2016 for information. The report is to be before Convocation for decision on December 2, 2016.

Members of the legal professions and the public were invited to provide comments on the recommendations outlined in the report until November 14, 2015. The Law Society received 46 submissions – 23 from individuals and 23 from organizations (see TAB 3.1.1). The Working Group has determined that only submissions from organizations are to be public. Many of the individual submissions speak to personal experiences and the Working Group believes that should those individuals wish to make their views public, they should have the option to do so on their own. What follows is a summary of both individual and organization submissions divided by the five interrelated categories outlined in the report: accelerating culture shift; measuring progress; educating for change; implementing supports; and operations of the Law Society.

The Working Group received positive comments from the professions and the public, with many individuals and organizations commending the Law Society for taking steps to address issues of systemic racism in the legal professions. The Working Group is encouraged by the submissions it received.

Many of the comments spoke to the implementation of the recommendations in the report. These comments are not outlined in this document – however, should the recommendations be approved by Convocation, the comments will be considered during the implementation phase.

General comments

All of the submissions from organizations representing licensees from equality-seeking organizations expressed support for the 13 recommendations put forward by the Working Group, with suggestions provided on how to strengthen the recommendations. Generally, no organizations were opposed to the recommendations.

Specifically, the submissions from the Canadian Association of Black Lawyers, the Roundtable of Diversity Associations, the Metro Toronto Chinese & Southeast Asian Legal Clinic, the South Asian Bar Association, the Equity Advisory Group, the Canadian Hispanic Bar Association, and the Federation of Asian Canadian Lawyers stressed that Convocation should vote on the thirteen recommendations as a package and not individually.

In addition, many of the submissions from organizations suggested that the recommendations outlined in the Working Group’s report should apply to all equality-seeking groups and not solely to racialized licensees. Some submissions also noted that the report and the recommendations should recognize how intersections of gender, race, sexual orientation, disability and other aspects of identity shape the experiences of licensees.

Accelerating culture shift

The Working Group received submissions supporting the need to accelerate cultural change in the legal professions.

The Working Group received a comment about the importance of taking an approach that recognizes the unique barriers faced by Indigenous licensees and the challenges that both racialized and Indigenous licensees face. Additionally, the comment asked that the Working Group make specific mention of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's final report and the need to address reconciliation between Indigenous and non-Indigenous peoples.

The Working Group is thankful for this comment and has included text that reflects this suggestions in the "Guiding Principles" section of the report.

One comment received by the Working Group advised that the Law Society should require law schools to remove obstacles against racialized licensees. The Working Group notes that the Law Society does not have authority over law schools; however, law schools are encouraged to participate in the Diversity and Inclusion Project outlined in Recommendation 2.

Some submissions suggested that the Law Society, under Recommendation 3, should require all legal workplaces, not just workplaces of at least 10 licensees, to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy and complete an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment. In determining the size of workplace for this requirement, the Working Group considered balancing burden and benefit. Although the requirement applies to workplaces of at least 10 licensees, workplaces of less than 10 licensees are strongly encouraged to develop policies and complete self-assessments. This encouragement is reflected in the text that accompanies the recommendation.

One submission suggested that legal workplaces' diversity policies should be made publicly available on the workplace website. In considering this suggestion, the Working Group determined that not all legal workplace websites are used as a recruitment tool - some are intended as advocacy tools, for example. The Working Group, however, noted that policies should be available to the public. Consequently, the Working Group has modified Recommendation 3(2) to note that the policies should be available to members of the professions and the public upon request.

An additional submission proposed that an exemption be provided for legal workplaces that have existing human rights/diversity policies provided they satisfy the Law Society's requirements. The text that accompanies Recommendation 3 recognizes that licensees' employers may already have workplace policies that satisfy the requirement under Recommendation 3(2)

Measuring Progress

The Working Group received positive responses to the recommendations regarding data collection.

One submission suggested that the quantitative self-identification data collected by the Law Society should be published in an aggregate manner. The Working Group notes that the Law Society currently provides race-based self-identification data by size of firm in its annual statistical snapshots, which are available at: https://www.lsuc.on.ca/uploadedFiles/Equity\_and\_Diversity/Members2/TAB%207.3.1%20-%20Snapshot-Lawyers16\_apr13.pdf (lawyers) and https://www.lsuc.on.ca/uploadedFiles/Equity\_and\_Diversity/Members2/TAB%207.3.2-%20Paralegal-Snapshot16\_apr13.pdf (paralegals).

One comment proposed that equity-seeking legal associations should have access to the data collected by the Law Society and that data should be made public at the law school level. The Working Group is of the view that the data should be disseminated to the public through the annual statistical snapshots and that the inclusion index will provide equity-seeking associations and law schools with insights into diversity and inclusion in various workplaces.

Another submission recommended that legal workplaces should be required to engage in internal collection of data in their workplaces. The Working Group is conscious of the fact that many firms may not have the resources to properly collect data from licensees and that there may be privacy concerns if legal workplaces are collecting data from licensees directly. The Working Group asserts that privacy and confidentiality are essential principles to uphold in collecting quantitative demographic data and qualitative inclusion data from licensees.

One comment suggested that the inclusion index include information for all legal workplaces regardless of their size, not just workplaces of at least 25 licensees. Legal workplaces of less than 25 licensees are encouraged to participate in the inclusion index; however, in balancing benefit with burden, the Working Group has determined that 25 licensees and above is an appropriate number.

In terms of conducting inclusion surveys that are similar to the Stratcom survey, the Working Group received a comment that an interval of four years would not capture the issues the Working Group seeks to identify given the rate at which lawyers leave law firms. The Working Group carefully considered this time interval and notes that four years was seen as an appropriate amount of time for changes to take hold.
