The Working Group received questions about the nature of the progressive compliance measures outlined in Recommendation 8. The Working Group notes that the nature of the compliance measures will be carefully considered by the Law Society in due course. The intent of the Working Group is to foster cooperation to the extent possible and engage in reactive measures only when necessary.

Educating for Change

The Working Group is pleased that, from the comments received, the professions and the public are in agreement with the requirement for licensees to complete equality and inclusion Continuing Professional Development hours.

The Working Group received a number of comments that suggested that licensees be required to complete a one hour equality and inclusion program per year instead of three hours once every three years. One submission suggested that the Law Society require licensees to participate in an equality and inclusion program once every year following an initial three hour training program. The Working Group believes that this is an excellent suggestion as the three hour training program will allow for licensees to develop a foundation in equality and inclusion principles. The annual one hour requirement, following the initial three hour program, will ensure that equality and inclusion principles are top of mind for licensees.

Building Communities of Support

Comments on the final report reiterated the importance of mentoring and networking. Suggestions made included the creation of a mentoring initiative specifically for junior racialized licensees, free mentoring services to all new lawyers of any background and mentoring for law students. One submission also proposed that the Law Society monitor the success of all mentoring and networking initiatives and identify any improvements. The Working Group notes that the Law Society recently launched the Coach and Advisor Network, which will, in addition to providing advisor and coaching services, act “a centralized source of information to the professions on mentorship programs in Ontario.”<sup>1</sup>

The Working Group received a submission that noted the importance of employing an approach that addresses the unique experiences of Indigenous licensees and the similar barriers faced by Indigenous and racialized licensees – in addition to a suggestion that mentioned be made of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission’s final report. The Working Group has incorporated this suggestion in the “Guiding Principles” section of the report.

The Working Group notes that in November 2016, Convocation determined that the Law Society will engage in an analysis of the licensing process. The Working Group expects that the principles of equality and inclusion will be considered during this process.

The Law Society received submissions regarding the review of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel (“DHC”) program outlined in Recommendation 12 – particularly related to the need to maintain the confidentiality and independence of the DHC program. The Working Group notes that the Law Society’s Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee (“EAIC”) commenced a review of the DHC program in Fall 2016. EAIC is alive to the importance of the DHC’s duty of confidentiality and the arms-length position of the DHC.

Leading by Example

Comments regarding leading by example spoke largely to the bench election process. The Working Group notes that in September 2016, the Law Society established a Governance Task Force to make recommendations in regard to the Law Society’s governance structure.

A suggestion was made that Recommendation 13(1)(a) should include the words “discipline, discharge and revocation”, however, the Working Group points out that the requirement for the Law Society to adopt, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy speaks to the need for the policy to address at the very least recruitment, retention and advancement. The wording of this recommendation is broad in order to allow for the Law Society to examine various aspects of its operations.

Other comments

The Working Group received submissions that outlined the importance of addressing the challenges faced by racialized licensees in law school and upon entry into the profession. The Diversity and Inclusion Project, contemplated in Recommendation 2, is intended to allow for a forum to address these issues. Other submissions suggested that the Working Group should address the pathways to licensing for lawyers. The Working Group notes, again, that Convocation has already approved a review of the licensing process.

One submission noted that the report has been silent on the unique needs of racialized internationally trained lawyers without Canadian education or experience. It is the Working Group's intention that the implementation of the recommendations will consider all racialized licensees and the intersections of their experiences, including the experiences of internationally trained racialized licensees.

Some submissions suggested that the Law Society should consider the economic barriers for racialized licensees and other licensees from equity-seeking groups. The Working Group notes that in the implementation of the recommendations, economic barriers will be considered.

One submission noted that the report had failed to direct the Law Society to develop mental health strategies specific to racialized licensees. The Working Group notes that in April 2016, the Law Society approved a long-term mental health strategy, which "builds on the Law Society's existing mental health initiatives and lays the groundwork to explore additional supports or programs that fall within the organization's mandate."<sup>2</sup>

One submission suggested that the Report should call upon the Law Society to work with the Roundtable of Diversity Associations (RODA) and other associations serving racialized lawyers across Ontario using a similar approach to The Action Group on Access to Justice. It is contemplated that the Diversity and Inclusion Project under Recommendation 2 will be a forum for the Law Society to work with associations serving racialized licensees.

Executive Summary

“Inclusion is not about bringing people into what already exists; it is making a new space, a better space for everyone.”<sup>3</sup>

This is the unanimous final report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group. The fifteen Benchers on the Working Group have reviewed the written submissions and other input of Benchers and many external stakeholders since the initial presentation of the report to Convocation on September 22, 2016. After discussion and some revisions, the Working Group now presents this Report, unanimous in its 13 recommendations and the rationale supporting them, for approval by Convocation on December 2, 2016.

This Report represents the final stage of a lengthy consultative and study exercise which has led to the conclusion that racialized licensees<sup>4</sup> face widespread barriers within the professions at all stages of their careers. As the title “Working Together for Change” bears out, the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group is confident that there is a unique opportunity for change, based on collaborative, concrete steps to implement solutions. That said, the challenges faced by racialized licensees are both longstanding and significant. In our view, the Law Society must take a leadership role in giving legal workplaces reasonable deadlines to implement steps that are important to bringing about lasting culture change. The Working Group has concluded that prescribing minimum standards of equality, diversity and inclusion are consistent with the human rights responsibilities of the profession — obligations already required by the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct and, more generally, the Human Rights Code.

Reform in addressing barriers faced by racialized licensees is an essential component of ensuring a healthy and successful legal profession, and to advancement of the public interest — goals that we all share and must achieve.

Background

1. The Law Society of Upper Canada (The Law Society) has a duty to maintain and advance the cause of justice and the rule of law, to facilitate access to justice for the people of Ontario and to protect the public interest. Furthermore, the Law Society is committed to adhering to its obligations under the Human Rights Code. In fulfilling its mandate, the Law Society integrates equality and diversity values and principles into all of its policies, practices and programs. The

<sup>4</sup> The Ontario Human Rights Commission notes that using the terminology “racialized person” or “racialized group” is more accurate than “racial minority”, “visible minority”, “person of colour” or “non-White”. Race is the socially constructed differences among people based on characteristics such as accent or manner of speech, name, clothing, diet, beliefs and practices, leisure preferences, places of origin and so forth. Racialization is the “process by which societies construct races as real, different and unequal in ways that matter to economic, political and social life”. See Ontario Human Rights Commission, Racial discrimination, race and racism, online: Ontario Human Rights Commission <http://www.ohrc.on.ca/en/racial-discrimination-race-andracism>

Law Society works to ensure that the law and the practice of law are reflective of all the people of Ontario, including Indigenous peoples, Francophones and equality-seeking communities. The Law Society also seeks to ensure that its workplace and the legal professions are free of harassment and discrimination.

In 2012, the Law Society created the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group (“the Working Group”) to:

- a. identify challenges faced by racialized licensees in different practice environments, including entry into practice and advancement;
- b. identify factors and practice-challenges faced by racialized licensees that could increase the risk of regulatory complaints and discipline;
- c. consider best practices for preventative, remedial and/or support strategies;
- d. if appropriate, design and develop preventative, remedial, enforcement, regulatory and/or support strategies, for consideration by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee (“EAIC”) and other committees, to address these challenges.

The Working Group’s Approach

Since 2012, the Working Group has been actively engaged in gathering information about the challenges faced by racialized licensees and developing recommendations to address these challenges.

In order to fulfil its mandate, the Working Group gathered information about the challenges faced by racialized licensees using consultant and community engagement processes.<sup>5</sup> Further information about this part of the Working Group’s activities can be found at: <http://www.lsuc.on.ca/racialized-licensees/>.

The Working Group reviewed all of the information gathered through the engagement process and drafted a consultation paper titled Developing Strategies for Change: Addressing Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees.<sup>6</sup>

Convocation approved the consultation paper in November 2014, and the Working Group consulted with over 1,000 racialized and non-racialized lawyers, paralegals, law students, articling students and members of the public throughout the province of Ontario between January and March 2015. The Working Group met with organizational stakeholders and members of the Law Firms Diversity and Inclusion Network. The Working Group also received feedback from 45 individuals and organizations in the form of written submissions.<sup>7</sup>

Engagement Process Results

The qualitative and quantitative data the Working Group obtained from the engagement process identified widespread barriers experienced by racialized licensees within the legal professions at all stages of their careers. Examples of challenges faced in the legal professions include discrimination and stereotyping, negotiating concepts of “culture” and “fit”, and lack of mentors, networks and role models. Participants also noted that race-based barriers are often complicated by additional intersecting experiences of discrimination based on gender identity, gender expression, disability, sexual orientation, class and creed.

Some participants in the engagement process believed that racialized licensees were more likely to go into sole practice as a result of barriers faced in other practice environments. They also noted that internationally trained lawyers and paralegals face additional barriers in the professions. Generally, participants noted the vulnerability of racialized licensees in the legal professions in the context of professional regulation and discipline.

Consultation Process Results

The information gathered from the consultation process is summarized as follows:

- Consultation participants expressed significant support for the creation of diversity programs for the recruitment, retention and advancement of racialized licensees in legal workplaces.
- The Working Group heard a broad range of views on the issue of demographic data collection. However, most participants agreed that the collection of data would be, as one participant noted, “a humble but important first step”.
- The Working Group heard that the Law Society could play a facilitative role by encouraging corporate procurement policies that consider suppliers that promote equality and diversity.
- The majority of participants in the consultation process emphasized the importance of mentoring for racialized licensees. Generally, the Working Group heard that there is no “one size fits all” model for mentoring.
- Many participants stated that associations of racialized lawyers and paralegals are beneficial for fostering collaboration and creating a sense of belonging.
- A large number of participants were in favour of the Law Society requiring licensees to participate in mandatory Continuing Professional Development (CPD) training on cultural competence, unconscious bias, and anti-racism.

- Participants suggested updating the Rules of Professional Conduct<sup>8</sup> and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct<sup>9</sup> to specifically address systemic discrimination and subtle forms of discrimination.

Objectives

The Working Group has distilled the themes in the consultation into the following three objectives:

1. Inclusive legal workplaces in Ontario;<sup>10</sup>
2. Reduction of barriers created by racism, unconscious bias and discrimination; and
3. Better representation of racialized licensees, in proportion to the representation in the Ontario population, in the professions, in all legal workplaces and at all levels of seniority.

The Working Group makes 13 recommendations in order to meet these objectives. They fall within four interrelated categories: accelerating culture shift, measuring progress, educating for change and implementing supports. The final recommendation speaks to the operations of the Law Society.

Recommendations

Recommendation 1 – Reinforcing Professional Obligations

The Law Society will review and amend, where appropriate, the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, and Commentaries to reinforce the professional obligations of all licensees to recognize, acknowledge and promote principles of equality, diversity and inclusion consistent with the requirements under human rights legislation and the special responsibilities of licensees in the legal and paralegal professions.

Recommendation 2 – Diversity and Inclusion Project

The Law Society will work with stakeholders, such as interested legal workplaces, legal associations, law schools and paralegal colleges to develop model policies and resources to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees.

Recommendation 3 – The Adoption of Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Principles and Practices

The Law Society will:

- 5) ~~require every licensee to adopt and to abide by a statement of principles acknowledging their obligation to promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally, and in their behaviour towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public;~~ See note at page 4a

<sup>8</sup> Rules of Professional Conduct, The Law Society of Upper Canada available online at <http://www.lsuc.on.ca/WorkArea/DownloadAsset.aspx?id=2147486159>

<sup>9</sup> Paralegal Rules of Conduct The Law Society of Upper Canada available on-line at <http://www.lsuc.on.ca/paralegal-conduct-rules/>

- 6) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy for their legal workplace addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement, which will be available to members of the professions and the public upon request;
- 7) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to complete, every two years, an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment for their legal workplace, to be provided to the Law Society; and
- 8) encourage legal workplaces to conduct inclusion surveys by providing them with sample templates.

Recommendation 4 – Measuring Progress through Quantitative Analysis

Each year, the Law Society will measure progress quantitatively by providing legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees in Ontario with the quantitative self-identification data of their licensees compiled from the Lawyers Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report in a manner consistent with the best practices established to protect licensees vulnerable to harm that may flow from this disclosure, so they can compare their data with the aggregate demographic data gathered from the profession as a whole through the annual reports.

Recommendation 5 – Measuring Progress through Qualitative Analysis

The Law Society will measure progress by:

- 3) asking licensees to voluntarily answer inclusion questions, provided by the Law Society, about their legal workplace, every four years; and
- 4) compiling the results of the inclusion questions for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees in Ontario and providing the legal workplace with a summary of the information gathered

Recommendation 6 – Inclusion Index

Every four years, the Law Society will develop and publish an inclusion index that reflects the following information, including, for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees: the legal workplace's self-assessment information (Recommendation 3(3)), demographic data obtained from the Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report (Recommendation 4) and information gathered from the inclusion questions provided by the Law Society (Recommendation 5).

Recommendation 7 – Repeat Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project Inclusion Survey

The Law Society will conduct inclusion surveys with questions similar to those asked in Appendix F of the Stratcom Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Final Report (March 11, 2014) (available online at http://www.stratcom.ca/wp-content/uploads/manual/Racialized-Licensees\_Full-Report.pdf). The first inclusion survey will be conducted within one year of the adoption of these recommendations, and thereafter every four years, subject to any recommendation by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee to Convocation.

Recommendation 8 – Progressive Compliance Measures

The Law Society will consider and enact, as appropriate, progressive compliance measures for legal workplaces that do not comply with the requirements proposed in Recommendation 3 and/or legal workplaces that are identified as having systemic barriers to diversity and inclusion.

Recommendation 9 – Continuing Professional Development (CPD) Programs on Topics of Equality and Inclusion in the Professions

The Law Society will:

- 4) launch a three hour accredited program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions;
- 5) develop resources to assist legal workplaces in designing and delivering their own three hour program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions, to be accredited by the Law Society; and
- 6) require each licensee to complete three hours of an accredited program focused on equality and inclusion within the first three years following the adoption of these recommendations and one hour per year every year thereafter, which will count towards the licensee's professionalism hours for that year.

Recommendation 10 – The Licensing Process

The Law Society will include the topics of cultural competency, equality and inclusion in the professions as competencies to be acquired in the Licensing Process.

Recommendation 11 – Building Communities of Support

The Law Society, in collaboration with legal associations where appropriate, will provide support to racialized licensees in need of direction and assistance through mentoring and networking initiatives.

Recommendation 12 – Addressing Complaints of Systemic Discrimination

The Law Society, in light of the findings of this project and emerging issues in the professions, will:

- 5) review the function, processes and structure of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC), including considering effective ways for the DHC to address issues of systemic discrimination;

- 6) revise the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, where appropriate, so that systemic discrimination and reprisal for complaints of discrimination and harassment are clearly identified as breaches of professional conduct requirements;
- 7) create effective ways for the Professional Regulation Division to address complaints of systemic discrimination; and
- 8) create a specialized and trained team to address complaints of discrimination.

Recommendation 13 – Leading by Example

- 3) The Law Society will continue to monitor and assess internal policies, practices and programs, to promote diversity, inclusion and equality within the workplace and in the provision of services by:
  - a) as required, adopting, implementing and maintaining a human rights/diversity policy addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement;
  - b) measuring quantitative progress through a census of the workforce or other method;
  - c) measuring qualitative progress by conducting inclusion surveys;
  - d) conducting regular equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessments; and
  - e) based on the results from b), c) and d), identifying gaps and barriers and adopting measures to address the gaps and barriers;
  - f) publishing relevant findings from b), c), d) and e); and
  - g) providing equality and inclusion education programs for staff at the Law Society on a regular basis.
- 4) The Law Society will:
  - a) conduct an internal diversity assessment of the bench composition and publicize the results;
  - b) provide equality and inclusion education programs for Convocation on a regular basis.

Timeline for Implementation of Recommendations

Introduction

“What we need to do is learn to respect and embrace our differences until our differences don’t make a difference in how we are treated.”

— Yolanda King<sup>11</sup>

Background

1. The Law Society of Upper Canada (“The Law Society”) is the governing body for more than 50,000 lawyers and 8,000 paralegals in Ontario. The Law Society is committed to advancing equality, diversity and inclusion in the legal professions — a commitment which includes addressing any barriers faced by lawyers and paralegals to full and active participation in the professions. The Law Society’s Rules of Professional Conduct and Paralegal Rules of Conduct specifically prohibit discrimination and harassment and speak to lawyers’ and paralegals’ responsibility to adhere to human rights laws in Ontario.
2. Since 2001, the proportion of racialized<sup>12</sup> lawyers in the Ontario legal profession has doubled, rising from 9% of the profession in 2001 to 18% in 2014.<sup>13</sup> This is compared to 23% of the Ontario population who indicated in the 2006 Canada Census that they are racialized and 26% of the Ontario population who indicated in the 2011 National Household Survey that they are racialized.<sup>14</sup> The Law Society’s Statistical Snapshot of Paralegals from the Paralegal Annual Report 2014 also show a high proportion of racialized paralegals at 34% of the paralegal profession.<sup>15</sup> The Law Society’s Statistical Snapshots of Paralegals also indicate that 34% of licensed paralegals in Ontario are racialized.
3. A review of statistical data, research findings and anecdotal evidence suggested that, notwithstanding their increase in representation, racialized lawyers face challenges in the practice of law. The Law Society also noted a lack of information about the challenges faced, if any, by racialized paralegals.
4. In 2012, the Law Society created the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group (“the Working Group”) to:

5. Since 2012, the Working Group has been actively engaged in gathering information about the challenges faced by racialized licensees and developing recommendations to address these challenges.

The Process: Listening and Learning

6. The members of the Working Group began their work by conducting a review of the data and literature available on the challenges faced by racialized licensees. The Working Group then gathered information about the challenges using an engagement process, followed by an extensive consultation process.<sup>17</sup>

7. The qualitative and quantitative data obtained from the engagement processes identified widespread barriers experienced by racialized licensees within the professions at all stages of their careers.
8. Through the consultation process, the Working Group received rich feedback on questions organized under the following themes:

<sup>16</sup> The Working Group considered available information regarding the experience of racialized licensees in the regulatory process and determined that there is more work to be done. The preliminary work thus far will be continued.

Recommendations: Framework to Address the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees

On Racism and Initiatives for Change

— Ontario Human Rights Commission

10. The Working Group acknowledges that the legal professions operate in a broader social context in which racism continues to negatively impact the lives of racialized people. During the consultation phase, a participant noted that society could currently be at an inflection point – a point at which there is a significant possibility for change in the way in which the professions engage with equality and diversity principles and practices.
11. Recently, the Ontario government announced the establishment of an Anti-Racism Directorate tasked with “increas[ing] public education and awareness of racism to create a more inclusive province” and “apply[ing] an anti-racism lens in developing, implementing and evaluating government policies, programs and services.”<sup>19</sup> Similarly, in November 2015, the Ontario Public Service (OPS) launched an Anti-Racism Action Plan. This plan focuses on “preventing race-based discrimination and harassment; further diversifying the public service at every level, including senior management; and increasing OPS employees’ awareness of racism and its impacts.”<sup>20</sup>
12. In the academic sphere, in February 2016, University of Toronto committed to collecting race-based data from its students in an effort to “tackle a lack of representation in the lecture hall among some groups and lend hard numbers to the push for equity in the public realm.”<sup>21</sup> In the area of child welfare, in June 2016, children’s aid societies agreed to collect race-based data to address concerns that there are a high number of black and Indigenous children in care.
13. On the popular culture front, in early 2016, media attention turned to #OscarsSoWhite<sup>22</sup> — Hollywood actors and filmmakers who were speaking up against the lack of diversity in the nominations for the Academy Awards. Those who work in Hollywood note that the lack of diversity and inclusion goes beyond the Academy Awards, with one director noting, “I was meeting with potential investors, and right away everybody’s like, “It’s an Asian-American cast. It’ll never sell.””<sup>23</sup>

14. Race and racism are also at the forefront of issues in the justice system — from the overrepresentation of black and Indigenous peoples in federal prisons<sup>24</sup> to police violence to calls for judicial diversity and beyond. In spring 2016, Black Lives Matter Toronto, “a coalition of black Torontonians working in solidarity with communities/individuals seeking justice from state-sanctioned violence”<sup>25</sup> occupied the space in front of Toronto Police Headquarters for two weeks to protest police violence against the black community. Acknowledging that racialized communities are “over-represented and subject to different treatment in the justice system as a whole”,<sup>26</sup> Legal Aid Ontario is currently developing a strategy to “identify the legal needs and to protect the legal rights of racialized communities in the justice system”.
15. Additionally, the Ontario Human Rights Commission is currently working on a new policy on racial profiling that will “provide guidance on combatting racial profiling in a range of institutional and community settings” and “seek to support and enable Ontario organizations, legal decision-makers and affected community members to better identify, address and prevent racial profiling as a prohibited form of discrimination under the Ontario Human Rights Code.”<sup>27</sup>
16. The information outlined is only a snapshot of the efforts in Ontario and beyond to address racial discrimination. The Working Group is encouraged by these initiatives and is hopeful that implementation of the recommendations listed in this report will lead to systemic change.

Guiding Principle

17. The Working Group’s recommendations stem from an intention to create long lasting systemic change within the professions. The recommendations are put forward in an effort to support the Law Society’s ongoing commitment to ensure that both the law and the practice of law are reflective of all peoples in Ontario and that the professions are free of discrimination and harassment. The Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct speak to the special responsibility of lawyers and paralegals to adhere to the requirements of human rights laws in Ontario, including the obligation not to discriminate.
18. Although the Working Group’s report does not speak to the experiences of Indigenous licensees, the Working Group recognizes that Indigenous peoples face barriers that are unique to Indigenous licensees and barriers that are shared by both racialized and Indigenous licensees. The Working Group notes the importance of addressing the ongoing colonial violence experienced by Indigenous communities and of working towards reconciliation between Indigenous and non-Indigenous peoples. As expressed in the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's final report, "Reconciliation is not an Aboriginal problem; it is a Canadian one. Virtually all aspects of Canadian society need to be reconsidered."<sup>29</sup> The Law Society is currently working on a framework of reconciliation, with the guidance of the Indigenous Advisory Group, comprised of First Nation, Inuit and Métis community representatives, to address unique issues faced by Indigenous peoples in Ontario. The framework of reconciliation is also intended to promote responses to and implementation of the Calls to Action from the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada's final report and the First Nations Representation on Ontario Juries report by The Honourable Frank Iacobucci.

20. The Working Group heard offers to assist with mentoring, that changes are beginning to happen within firms, that the Law Society should support work that is already being done, and that legal workplaces are willing to share best practices and collaborate to create effective models for progressive change in all parts of the professions. Representatives of the Working Group spoke with firms that provide unconscious bias training to all members, firms that have affinity groups in their workplace and firms that are actively participating in the Law Firm Diversity and Inclusion Network. There were requests that the Law Society not impose mandatory hiring targets and timetables, but accelerate a culture change that has already begun as a result of business imperatives, changing demographics and the interests expressed by clients, students, lawyers, paralegals and indeed the public.
21. At the same time, the Working Group heard concerns that the identified challenges were longstanding, and that change would occur very slowly without strong leadership from the Law Society. The Working Group heard generally that the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project has raised the profile and understanding of these issues, but the Working Group was also urged to use the Law Society's authority to effect change.
22. To satisfy these goals, the Working Group concluded that the Law Society should use a combination of voluntary and mandatory measures, fulfilling its multiple roles in the public interest as change agent, facilitator, resource and regulator. The Law Society's authority to adopt mandatory measures must be interpreted and understood in light of its rights and obligations under the Human Rights Code to protect the public interest balanced with the current explicit authority under the Law Society Act<sup>30</sup> and By-Laws<sup>31</sup> and recent jurisprudence. Within this overarching goal, partnerships with legal workplaces and associations are essential to the success of the proposed measures and projects detailed below.

Objectives

23. The Working Group has identified the following three objectives:
1. Inclusive legal workplaces in Ontario;<sup>32</sup>
  2. Reduction of barriers created by racism, unconscious bias and discrimination; and
  3. Better representation of racialized licensees, in proportion to the representation in the Ontario population, in the professions, in all legal workplaces and at all levels of seniority.
24. The Working Group puts forward the following recommendations in order to meet these objectives. It is anticipated that in order to implement a number of the mandatory recommendations, the Law Society will need to consider appropriate by-law amendments. Additionally, the Law Society will need to invest in information technology that will allow it to effectively record and analyze progress across workplaces. The Working Group has contemplated budgetary considerations in developing these recommendations and it is anticipated that a senior staff implementation working group will be involved in implementing the recommendations.
25. The recommendations fall within four interrelated categories: accelerating culture shift, measuring progress, educating for change and implementing supports. The final recommendation speaks to the operations of the Law Society.

Recommendations

Accelerating Culture Shift

Recommendation 1 – Reinforcing Professional Obligations

The Law Society will review and amend, where appropriate, the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, and Commentaries to reinforce the professional obligations of all licensees to recognize, acknowledge and promote principles of equality, diversity and inclusion consistent with the requirements under human rights legislation and the special responsibilities of licensees in the legal and paralegal professions.

26. The Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct outline the professional and ethical obligations of lawyers and paralegals. The Working Group recommends that in order to ensure that licensees infuse the principles of equality, diversity and inclusion into their everyday practice, the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct and/or the Commentaries be reviewed to determine how this objective can be advanced.

Recommendation 2 – Diversity and Inclusion Project

The Law Society will work with stakeholders, such as interested legal workplaces, legal associations, law schools and paralegal colleges to develop model policies and resources to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees.

27. The Working Group recommends that the Law Society engage in a collaboration between, for example, legal associations, government legal departments, the Law Firms Diversity and Inclusion Network (“LFDIN”), Legal Leaders for Diversity and Inclusion (“LLD”), sole practitioners, licensees in private practice, and law schools to develop and support diversity and inclusion policies, programs and practices intended to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees. The project would focus on the following areas:
  - Developing resources on competency hiring, unconscious bias training, barriers to inclusion in the workplace, affinity group development, contract compliance and best practices within firms and workplaces;
  - Considering the assignment of work and career development, particularly understanding the impact of cultural homophily on career development;<sup>33</sup> and
  - Working with law schools to create or provide better sources of information on what is needed to apply, interview and succeed in a larger legal workplace. This could include enhancing or using the On Campus Interview (“OCI”) process for the dissemination of information. This would also include outreach to the National Committee on Accreditation (“NCA”) candidates.
28. The proposed project would build upon the Law Society’s experience with its Justicia Project, created in 2008 with the goal of retaining and advancing women in private practice. The project saw more than 55 law firms voluntarily sign agreements with the Law Society to develop practical resources for law firms and women lawyers. The Justicia resources addressed topics such as: leadership, career advancement, business development, flexible work arrangements and parental leave.
29. A number of participants in the engagement and consultation processes supported the creation of a diversity project similar to the Justicia Project.
30. During the consultation process, the Working Group received feedback from a number of legal workplaces that were actively engaging in work related to enhancing diversity and inclusion in their workplaces. The Working Group also heard from legal workplaces that would benefit from support in developing diversity and inclusion policies and practices.
31. The Working Group concluded that a Justicia-type project would benefit the professions by creating a space where legal workplaces can openly discuss challenges in addressing the barriers faced by racialized licensees in the professions and by creating a forum to document and share best practices. Furthermore, legal workplaces could develop, in advance and with the support of the Law Society, policies that they will be required to have in place under Recommendation 3.

32. Currently, a number of large firms are engaged in a collaborative diversity initiative through the LFDIN and in-house counsel through LLD. Unlike the Justicia Project, which was focused on private practice, the proposed project would bring together legal workplaces from various practice environments and practice areas, in addition to associations and law schools to discuss overlapping concerns and to work on collaborative solutions.
33. In 2009, the Law Society of England and Wales (“LSEW”) created the Diversity and Inclusion Charter (the “Charter”). The LSEW describes the Charter as follows:
- The purpose of the Charter is to help practices turn their commitment to diversity and inclusion into positive, practical action for their businesses, staff and clients. This is achieved by helping practices to record and measure their procedures against a set of diversity and inclusion standards and by providing them with opportunities to share best practice advice and guidance with colleagues from across the profession. To date over 300 practices have signed up to the Charter, representing more than a third of all solicitors in private practice.
- The Diversity and Inclusion Charter is a public commitment by legal practices to promote the values of diversity, equality and inclusion throughout their business. Whether it's through recruitment, retention, career progression or training and development, all our signatories are committed to improving opportunities for people in the legal profession, regardless of their background or circumstances.<sup>34</sup>
34. Practices that commit to the Charter are required to report biennially and show how well they are meeting their Charter commitments, and where more work needs to be done. Practices complete an online self-assessment report about their progress and performance. The results are published in aggregate by the LSEW and used to identify trends, successes and areas for improvement.
35. The Charter is accompanied by a set of protocols to help practices fulfil their commitments in key areas, such as reporting and monitoring, flexible working and procuring legal services. In addition, checklists, best practice guidance, case studies and toolkits are available.
36. The LSEW has also developed diversity and inclusion standards to help the signatories complete their annual self-assessment form. The standards help to show how well a legal practice is complying with equality legislation, regulation and equality and diversity standards. The Diversity and Inclusion Standards are accompanied by best practice guidance that provide examples of positive diversity and inclusion practices, as well as advice on where to get more help or information.
37. The Barreau du Québec, following a consultation regarding the challenges faced by racialized licensees practising in Québec, developed a three-year action plan, which includes creating Justicia-type project to increase the recruitment, retention and advancement of racialized licensees.<sup>35</sup> In June 2016, the Barreau launched Projet Panorama, a project aimed at recruiting, retaining and advancing lawyers from ethnocultural groups within law firms and legal

Recommendation 3 – The Adoption of Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Principles and Practices

The Law Society will:

- 1) ~~require every licensee to adopt and to abide by a statement of principles acknowledging their obligation to promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally, and in their behaviour towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public; see note at page 4 a~~
- 2) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy for their legal workplace addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement, which will be available to members of the professions and the public upon request;
- 3) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to complete, every two years, an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment for their legal workplace, to be provided to the Law Society; and
- 4) encourage legal workplaces to conduct inclusion surveys by providing them with sample templates.

38. Some licensees are employed by non-licensees, including, for example, in-house counsel. Both employers and employees in legal workplaces have obligations under the Human Rights Code. Licensees have professional obligations with respect to human rights established by the Rules of Professional Conduct or the Paralegal Rules of Conduct. For licensees employed by non-licensees, the human rights/diversity policy contemplated by this recommendation is a policy in respect of their individual obligations addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement, which may of course be addressed by the employer's policy.

39. To ensure the consistent implementation of this recommendation, the Law Society will guide licensees in the development of statements of principles, and legal workplaces in the development of policies and self-assessment tools. In consultation with legal workplaces, it will develop resources, such as templates, guides and model policies.

40. Recognizing that sole practitioners and small legal workplaces may have limited resources, the Working Group has determined that the requirements under Recommendation 3 (2) and Recommendation 3(3) should apply to legal workplaces of at least 10 licensees; however, legal workplaces comprised of less than 10 licensees are strongly encouraged to develop human rights/diversity policies and complete equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessments.

41. It is anticipated that the nature of the policies and self-assessment tools will vary based on the size and type of legal workplace. As a result, we propose that the Law Society, through the diversity and inclusion project described in Recommendation 2, develop the templates for the statements of principles, policies and self-assessment tools in collaboration with legal workplaces that wish to participate in the project. We believe that this approach would increase the awareness of legal workplaces, begin the cultural shift, create greater buy-in and allow for the development of resources that take into account the realities of legal workplaces.
42. The Working Group believes that the Law Society should minimize unnecessary burdens, and recognize that many licensees and workplaces have already moved forward proactively with equality measures on their own. Licensees and workplaces will be free to adopt templates and model policies where appropriate to their needs, or to create their own statements of principles and policies that include the elements covered by the Law Society's sample documents, but tailor them to their specific contexts.
43. The stages for the implementation of this recommendation would be as follows:
- Stage 1: In 2017, the Law Society would communicate to the professions the requirements outlined in Stages 1-3.
  - Stage 2: By January 1, 2018, licensees would be required to have adopted and to abide by a statement of principles, and each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario would be required to have a human rights/diversity policy as described above.
  - Stage 3: The 2017 Lawyer Annual Report ("LAR") and Paralegal Annual Report ("PAR"), which would be completed by licensees in early 2018, and every annual report thereafter, would ask licensees to indicate whether or not they have adopted, and are abiding by, a statement of principles. The 2017 LAR and PAR would also ask licensees in designated legal workplaces to indicate whether or not their legal workplace has a human rights/diversity policy.
  - Stage 4: By the end of 2018, and every two years thereafter, the Law Society would require a representative of each designated legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to engage in a diversity and inclusion self-assessment. Legal workplaces would then report to the Law Society on whether they had completed the self-assessment and, if not, explain their reasons for not having done so.
44. The Working Group believes that requiring licensees to make a clear commitment to equality, diversity and inclusion will encourage licensees to consider their individual roles in creating lasting change.
45. Section 4.1 of the commentary under section 2.1-1 of the Rules of Professional Conduct reads as follows:

A lawyer has special responsibilities by virtue of the privileges afforded the legal profession and the important role it plays in a free and democratic society and in the administration of justice, including a special responsibility to recognize the diversity of the Ontario community, to protect the dignity of individuals, and to respect human rights laws in force in Ontario.<sup>38</sup>

46. Similarly, section 2.03 of the Paralegal Rules of Conduct state “the principles of the Ontario Human Rights Code and related case law apply to the interpretation of this rule [the rule on Harassment and Discrimination].”<sup>39</sup>
47. A number of consultation participants supported the Law Society’s role in setting guidelines for equality, diversity and inclusion in the professions and requiring legal workplaces to report on their progress in this area. As one group of consultation participants noted, “This would increase the accountability and transparency of legal workplaces in their treatment of racialized licensees, while encouraging a culture of compliance across the province.”<sup>40</sup>
48. The Working Group considered requesting that legal workplaces voluntarily adopt policies. The research and the consultation process, however, made clear that the challenges faced by racialized licensees are both longstanding and significant. In our view, the Law Society must take a leadership role in giving legal workplaces reasonable, but fixed, deadlines to implement steps that are important to achieve lasting change. Indeed, many of these steps have been taken, or will be taken by legal workplaces voluntarily, because of their acknowledged importance.
49. The Working Group concluded that required minimum standards of equality, diversity and inclusion will reinforce the human rights responsibilities of licensees — obligations already required by the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct and, more generally, the Human Rights Code. Furthermore, as the Ontario Human Rights Commission (“OHRC”) notes:

In addition to addressing obligations under the Human Rights Code, the adoption and implementation of an effective anti-racism vision statement and policy has the potential of limiting harm and reducing liability. It also promotes the equality and diversity goals of organizations and institutions and makes good business sense.<sup>41</sup>
50. It is the Working Group’s intention that legal workplaces will take this opportunity to implement comprehensive equality, diversity and inclusion policies, and will consider whether progress is being achieved by engaging in periodic self-assessment.
51. Some organizations have adopted a similar approach by creating a “comply or explain” approach. For example, the Ontario Securities Commission (“OSC”) requires companies regulated by the OSC to disclose the following gender-related information: the number of women on the board and in executive positions; policies regarding the representation of women on the board; the board or nominating committee’s consideration of the representation of women in the director identification and selection process; and director term limits and other mechanisms of renewal on their board.<sup>42</sup> The OSC requires companies to either report their implementation or consideration of the items listed above, or to explain their reasons for not doing so.

52. The Working Group's recommendation that legal workplaces of at least 10 licensees in Ontario complete a self-assessment about diversity performance, and report the results to the Law Society stems from an intention to have legal workplaces engage in dialogue and reflection on the current state of diversity and inclusion within their workplace, and an intention to encourage legal workplaces to work proactively to advance diversity and inclusion efforts.
53. The Working Group has reviewed the Canadian Bar Association's ("CBA") guide Assessing Ethical Infrastructure in Your Law Firm: A Practical Guide for Law Firms.<sup>43</sup> The document was drafted to "assist lawyers and firms by providing practical guidance on law firm structures, policies and procedures to ensure that ethical duties to clients, third parties and the public are fulfilled".
54. The document contains a detailed self-evaluation tool for firms, the CBA Ethical Practices Self-Evaluation Tool, which outlines 10 key areas of ethical infrastructure and provides questions related to firm policies and procedures under each identified area.<sup>44</sup>
55. The self-evaluation tool is modelled on the approach used in New South Wales for regulation of incorporated legal practices. Rather than being required to follow specific rules, the firms are required to self-assess whether their practices and policies are effective in ensuring professional conduct and to establish practices and policies that are effective in their specific context. The result has been a two-third reduction in client complaints for firms regulated in this way.<sup>45</sup>
56. A similar approach has been used for the assessment of diversity performance. The U.S.-based Minority Corporate Counsel Association has developed the Diversity Self-Assessment Tool for Law Firms, in an effort to "stimulate thought and open a dialogue within a firm regarding how to advance its diversity efforts."<sup>46</sup> Firms are asked to assess diversity performance in the following areas: leadership and commitment, professional development, recruitment and retention, representation/demographics, workplace culture and diversity, and external face of the firm.
57. The Law Society of England and Wales ("LSEW") also asks firms that have signed on to its Diversity and Inclusion Charter to complete a self-assessment (discussed previously in Recommendation 2).

58. In addition to the information gathered through the self-assessment, legal workplaces would be encouraged to conduct their own comprehensive inclusion surveys to establish benchmarks and identify and address concerns related to workplace culture. The Law Society has developed a number of model policies and guides to assist law firms in their efforts to ensure that their policies and practices are in keeping with equality and diversity principles. Again, the Law Society would develop sample inclusion survey templates, which would be shared with the profession.

Measuring Progress

59. The Working Group proposes, based on the consultation findings and our review of the literature and best practices on measuring systemic change that both the Law Society and legal workplaces should partner in collecting and analyzing qualitative and quantitative information about diversity. The Law Society would collect demographic data through the annual LAR and PAR, and qualitative information through a periodic questionnaire and a quadrennial province wide cultural inclusion survey similar to the one conducted by Stratcom on behalf of the Law Society in 2013. Legal workplaces of a sufficient size would obtain both quantitative and qualitative information about their workplaces in order to analyze the results, and ultimately an inclusion index would be published by the Law Society.
60. The 2012 CBA guide, Measuring Diversity in Law Firms: A Critical Tool for Achieving Diversity Performance, identifies two types of data for measuring a law firm's diversity performance — self-identification data and diversity climate data. Self-identification data is collected “to assess the representativeness of [a] firm's workforce”<sup>47</sup>, whereas diversity climate data is “focus[ed] on the perceptions and attitudes about diversity held about the members of the firm.”<sup>48</sup>
61. The collection of both self-identification data and diversity climate or inclusion data provides a more complete picture of diversity and inclusion in the professions. In Data & Diversity in the Canadian Legal Community, Dean Lorne Sossin and Sabrina Lyon, basing their conclusion on extensive interviews, a review of ongoing policy initiatives and a comprehensive analysis, state “generating rigorous and meaningful data, both quantitative and qualitative, would advance a culture of inclusion and accountability in the Canadian justice community.”<sup>49</sup>

Recommendation 4 – Measuring Progress through Quantitative Analysis

62. Since 2009, the Law Society has collected demographic data based on race, Indigenous identity, gender, Francophone identity, disability, and lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer (“LGBTQ”) identity through the Lawyer Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report. Self-identification questions were included in the annual reports to inform the Law Society of the extent to which the professions are reflective of the broader community they serve, to help meet the needs of the public, and to develop programs to enhance the diversity of the professions. These demographic data are analyzed and published in aggregated form under the following categories: age, year of call, type of employment, size of firm (for those in private practice), and region.<sup>51</sup>
63. In the consultation paper, the Working Group highlighted the importance of gathering and maintaining demographic data, providing the following reasons for engaging in this practice:
  - a. Firms can demonstrate that they value equality, diversity and inclusion in their firm’s culture;
  - b. Maintaining demographic data allows firms to monitor diversity in recruitment and advancement and to adjust policies and practices accordingly;
  - c. Diversity, and data on diversity, assist firms in attracting a strong talent base at all levels. The pool of law students is increasingly diverse, and so is the pool of legal talent. Graduating law students are often interested in the diversity characteristics of the legal workplaces to which they can apply;
  - d. Such data can be a tool to increase a firm’s competitiveness. Numerous large clients in the U.S., and now in Canada, issue requests for proposals (“RFPs”) to select their legal counsel, requiring firms to produce demographic data of their workforce. For example, the Bank of Montreal’s Legal, Corporate & Compliance Group (“LCCG”) requires disclosure of a firm’s diversity statistics as part of its RFP process for legal suppliers;<sup>52</sup>
  - e. Demographic data assist firms to enhance their client services and professional reputation, and to become role models by ensuring representation at all levels;
  - f. Demographic data provide background and incentives for firms to develop programs that enhance inclusion; and
  - g. The information may assist in developing initiatives to enhance access to justice.

64. Dean Lorne Sossin and Sabrina Lyon, in their article Data & Diversity in the Canadian Legal Community, also underline the importance of data collection, noting that while “collecting and publishing data on diversity will not in and of themselves make the justice community more inclusive, it is difficult if not impossible to see how the justice community could become more inclusive without meaningful data.”<sup>53</sup>
65. The options outlined in the Consultation Paper regarding data collection largely focused on the collection of demographic data, including:
- collecting demographic data of licensees through the LAR and PAR, publicly reporting the demographic data based on firm size and disclosing to firms their own demographic data;
  - working with firms to develop consistent templates for demographic data collection and encouraging firms to collect such data on a regular basis;
  - setting parameters for the voluntary collection of demographic data by firms and requiring firms to report either that they are collecting this information or the rationale for not collecting such data; and
  - setting parameters for mandatory collection of demographic data by firm.
66. Throughout the consultant and community engagements and the consultation process, the Working Group heard concerns from some participants that the information obtained from the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project would be shelved and the project would not result in meaningful change. By engaging in periodic litmus tests of equality and inclusion in the professions, the Law Society will ensure that its efforts to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees are ongoing and will evolve based on the issues identified by the inclusion surveys. As the OHRC notes, “When data is gathered, tracked and analyzed in a credible way over time, it becomes possible to measure progress and success (or lack of it). Budgets, policies, practices, processes, programming, services and interventions can then be evaluated, modified and improved.”<sup>54</sup>
67. The Legal Services Board (“LSB”), the independent body responsible for overseeing the regulation of lawyers in England and Wales, has taken a proactive approach to gathering demographic data. In 2011, the LSB published statutory guidance outlining its expectation of approved regulators to measure levels of diversity and mobility in the legal workforce. Approved regulators, including the Solicitors Regulation Authority,<sup>55</sup> now require all practices they regulate to collect, report and publish data annually on the diversity of their workforce. The LSB has cited transparency as the rationale for requiring the publication of diversity data.<sup>56</sup>
68. Information about the demographic composition of legal workplaces would be compiled through the Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report data, which would comprise of the statistical snapshots of the professions as a whole and the data compiled for each firm. This data would be provided to each legal workplace on an annual basis. In considering privacy concerns of individual licensees and the Law Society’s ability to ensure confidentiality, the

Working Group has suggested that this recommendation be applicable only to legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees in Ontario.

69. The Working Group has considered the input received from the engagements and the consultation process and proposes the following stages for the collection of self-identification data by firm:
- Stage 1: The Law Society would continue to measure the representation of racialized licensees using the information in the 2016 Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report, completed by the professions in 2017, by providing the demographic data in aggregate form to the public as general snapshots of the professions in 2018.
  - Stage 2: The introductory paragraph of the self-identification demographic questions of the 2017 Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report, completed by the professions in 2018, would be adapted to inform licensees of the change in the Law Society's use of the self-identification data.
  - Stage 3: Beginning with the 2018 LAR and PAR, completed by licensees in 2019, the Law Society would prepare a profile (containing, for example, the proportion of racialized partners, associates and other licensed staff) of each legal workplace of at least 25 lawyers and/or paralegals, and would confidentially provide it to each licensee within the workplace.

Recommendation 5 – Measuring Progress through Qualitative Analysis

The Law Society will measure progress qualitatively by:

- 1) asking licensees to voluntarily answer inclusion questions, provided by the Law Society, about their legal workplace, every four years; and
  - 2) compiling the results of the inclusion questions for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees in Ontario and providing the legal workplace with a summary of the information gathered.
70. In implementing this recommendation, the Law Society would take into account issues of privacy and confidentiality. The qualitative information about legal workplaces would be gathered by asking licensees voluntary inclusion questions about their legal workplace using a tool that would allow for the information to be compiled and provided to each legal workplace. This information would be collected by the Law Society with the purpose of tracking trends over time and refining and developing programs and initiatives to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees and other equality-seeking groups.
71. Licensees would be asked about their experiences in their workplaces, including subjects such as career advancement opportunities, feelings of belonging, and experiences of discrimination. The questions would be drafted with the assistance of stakeholders and experts in the diversity and inclusion field. Much like the current demographic questions in the Lawyer Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report, answers would be voluntary. The information would be shared in aggregate form, with legal workplaces of at least 25 lawyers and/or paralegals.
72. The Working Group proposes the following stages for the collection of qualitative data:

- Stage 1: Notice would be provided to the professions in the 2017 Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report, completed by the professions in 2018, of the Law Society's intention collect qualitative inclusion data.
- Stage 2: The Law Society would begin compiling quantitative data of legal workplaces using the 2018 Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report – to be completed in 2019 – and would continue to compile this data every four years thereafter.

Recommendation 6 – Inclusion Index

Every four years, the Law Society will develop and publish an inclusion index that reflects the following information, including, for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees: the legal workplace's self-assessment information (Recommendation 3(3)), demographic data obtained from the Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report (Recommendation 4) and information gathered from the inclusion questions provided by the Law Society (Recommendation 5).

73. The Working Group has considered a number of options for data collection and has arrived at the recommendations to measure progress outlined in Recommendations 3(3) (self-assessment), 4 and 5. The Working Group also believes that accountability and transparency are key to increasing equality and diversity in the professions. Members of the Working Group have considered a number of methods to ensure that these principles are reflected in the recommendations. The Working Group has decided that in addition to gathering qualitative and quantitative data about legal workplaces, the creation and publication of an inclusion index – an index that would include legal workplaces' assessments of their diversity and inclusion-related achievements and that would allow legal workplaces to demonstrate their performance and progress – would advance the goals of equality, diversity and inclusion. The Law Society would create this index and would determine the categories of information to be included in the index, as well as the weight provided to each category.
74. The Working Group is of the view that a public inclusion index would serve the many objectives cited earlier in relation to the benefits of collecting demographic data. The index would be a valuable tool for legal workplaces and the Law Society to determine whether there is progress in the professions. Legal workplaces could also use the index to attract prospective clients and to recruit talent.
75. A number of consultation participants as well as courts and commentators<sup>57</sup> have stated that to truly understand the equality and inclusion climate in a workplace, it is necessary to look at both quantitative and qualitative data. Sossin and Lyon exemplify this perspective, noting that “a blended ‘index’ of quantitative and qualitative factors best responds to the need for outcomes to matter (how many diverse lawyers a legal workplace is able to recruit relative to the available pool of candidates) and the need for inputs to matter (a legal workplace's policies, participation in proactive recruitment, establishing an inclusive firm culture, etc.).”<sup>58</sup>

77. The LSEW publishes an annual diversity and inclusion report, which includes the results of self-assessments completed by the signatories to the Diversity and Inclusion Charter. According to the LSEW, “all signatories are required to self-assess against a set of standards and report on diversity data across their organisation, with smaller practices responding to a set of questions tailored to the needs of smaller firms”.<sup>60</sup> Although the data is collected by firm, it is published in aggregate form. In 2015, 341 firms submitted their self-assessment information to the LSEW.
78. For the last 10 years, the Black Solicitors Network (“BSN”), also based in the UK, has published The BSN Diversity League Table, a comprehensive report on diversity and inclusion in the legal profession, on an annual basis. The LSEW is the main sponsor of this initiative. According to the LSEW:
- The Diversity League Table has become an invaluable resource for the legal profession. Each year, the performance of participating law firms and chambers is measured across a range of demographic profiles. This provides an opportunity for firms to compare their performance against peers across key areas. The Diversity League Table also offers an opportunity to monitor the sector as a whole, facilitating a more diverse and transparent profession.<sup>61</sup>
79. The LSEW further notes that the LSEW Diversity and Inclusion Charter and the BSN Diversity League Table are complementary initiatives, as they both “provide comprehensive data sets [and] promote collaboration in equality and diversity matters and best practice across a range of key business areas”.<sup>62</sup>
80. The Diversity League Table includes aggregate demographic data based on gender, ethnicity, LGBTQ and disability status, published by firm. Firms also provide information about policies & practices, specifically addressing the following categories: Monitoring; Leadership and Policy; External Face; Staff Development and Support; and Recruitment, Promotion and Retention. Firms are then given a score and a rank, based on the quantitative and qualitative data obtained. In 2015, 56 firms and chambers participated in the Diversity League Table.<sup>63</sup>
81. A number of organizations have developed similar inclusion indices, detailing aggregate inclusion information about legal workplaces and workplaces in other industries.<sup>64</sup>

82. The Law Society believes that stakeholder participation in the development of the inclusion index is important, such as the participation of the LFDIN, LLD and associations with mandates to represent racialized licensees.
83. The Working Group suggests that the Law Society create a similar inclusion index to those described above, which would reflect the demographic information about the composition of each legal workplace and would include scores and rankings based on the presence or lack thereof of equality-related policies and practices. The Law Society would report this information by legal workplace for all legal workplaces with over 25 licensees. The Law Society would begin publishing the inclusion index in 2019 and would update the index every four years.

Recommendation 7 – Repeat Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project Inclusion Survey

The Law Society will conduct inclusion surveys with questions similar to those asked in Appendix F of the Stratcom Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Final Report (March 11, 2014) (available online at <http://www.stratcom.ca/wp-content/uploads/manual/Racialized-Licensees-Full-Report.pdf>) The first inclusion survey will be conducted within one year of the adoption of these recommendations, and thereafter every four years, subject to any recommendation by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee to Convocation.

84. The Stratcom survey was sent to all licensees, both racialized and non-racialized, in 2013. The anonymous 35-question survey included questions on topics such as: career opportunities and professional growth; disrespect and disadvantage; career setbacks; barriers to entry and advancement; and stereotyping.
85. In order to evaluate the success of the proposed initiatives and to identify any potential areas where barriers to inclusion may remain, the Working Group proposes repeating the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project inclusion questions within the abovementioned timeline. The proposed timeline is based on the Working Group's understanding and acknowledgement that systemic change will take time to occur. Four years was seen as an appropriate timespan for changes to take hold.

Recommendation 8 — Progressive Compliance Measures

The Law Society will consider and enact, as appropriate, progressive compliance measures for legal workplaces that do not comply with the requirements proposed in Recommendation 3 and/or legal workplaces that are identified as having systemic barriers to diversity and inclusion.

86. The Working Group, having outlined some mandatory initiatives in the aforementioned recommendations, recognizes that there must be mechanisms in place to deal with non-compliance. The Working Group recommends that the Law Society take a progressive compliance approach with legal workplaces that do not meet the requirements outlined in the recommendations. The Working Group envisions a gradation of responses, beginning with remedial approaches, such as meeting with representatives of legal workplaces to discuss concerns with their policies and/or practices, to disciplinary approaches if there is deliberate non-compliance with requirements, despite multiple warnings, or no efforts are made to address systemic barriers.

Educating for Change

Recommendation 9 – Continuing Professional Development (CPD) Programs on Topics of Equality and Inclusion in the Professions

The Law Society will:

- 1) launch a three hour accredited program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions;
  - 2) develop resources to assist legal workplaces in designing and delivering their own three hour program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions, to be accredited by the Law Society; and
  - 3) require each licensee to complete three hours of an accredited program focused on equality and inclusion within the first three years following the adoption of these recommendations and one hour per year every year thereafter, which will count towards the licensee's professionalism hours for that year.
87. The Working Group recommends that the Law Society launch an innovative accredited program focused on topics such as equality and inclusion in the professions to assist licensees with promoting these principles. The Law Society would also support legal workplaces in developing their own programs that could be accredited by the Law Society. This would allow legal workplaces and legal associations to build their capacity in this area while addressing the needs of their membership base. The Law Society would work with associations to develop criteria for accreditation and to assist legal workplaces and legal associations in developing their own accredited courses. Programs could be delivered in any format already approved under the eligible education activities criteria available on the Law Society website.
88. In order to create awareness and engagement of the professions, the Law Society would require each licensee to complete three hours of an accredited program focused on equality and inclusion within the first three years following the adoption of these recommendations and one hour per year every year thereafter. . These programs count towards professionalism CPD requirements for the year in which the hours were taken. The monitoring of these activities to confirm completion of hours would be the same as any monitoring conducted to confirm completion of professionalism hours. No additional oversight would be required.
89. Training sessions could cover topics such as unconscious bias, the impact of daily verbal, behavioural and environmental indignities, the value of diversity and inclusion, understanding power and privilege and addressing discrimination and harassment.

90. The Working Group also suggests that the Law Society, as part of its commitment to providing accessible education, offer an online program on topics related to equality and inclusion in the professions. Such program could contain a video presentation with best practices and links to resources, for licensees who wish to complete their professionalism requirements in an online environment. If delivered online, the program could consist of integrated learning modules with integrated polling or test questions, as already done in various contexts including the Accessibility for Ontarians with Disabilities Act training and existing Law Society CPD programs.
91. The Working Group considered the option that the Law Society provide voluntary accredited CPD programs on topics such as equality and inclusion in the professions. However, the Working Group has determined that participation in equality and inclusion-related education is essential to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees. The OHRC notes, in its Policy and Guidelines on Racism and Racial Discrimination, that “mandatory education, training and development initiatives” may be required for an anti-racism policy and program to be effective.<sup>65</sup>
92. The Working Group initially considered training that would focus on “cultural competence”. Ritu Bhasin, a lawyer consultant in this area, defines cultural competence as “how we connect with people who are different than us” or “The ability to relate to others comfortably, respectfully and productively.”<sup>66</sup> A significant number of consultation participants agreed that mandatory CPD would assist in addressing the challenges faced by racialized licensees. A number of consultation participants emphasized the need for training to be delivered through an anti-discrimination or anti-oppression lens. The same participants noted discomfort with the term “cultural competence” due to the focus on understanding difference or “the other” as opposed to encouraging reflection on power and privilege. Consequently, the Working Group has chosen to focus the training on the principles of equality and inclusion, incorporating concepts of unconscious bias and cultural homophily.
93. The Rules of Professional Conduct speak to the responsibility of lawyers to recognize the diversity of the Ontario community. Both the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct require that licensees protect the dignity of individuals and respect human rights laws in force in Ontario. Equality and inclusion training will assist licensees in understanding their obligations under the rules.

Recommendation 10 – The Licensing Process

The Law Society will include the topics of cultural competency, equality and inclusion in the professions as competencies to be acquired in the Licensing Process.

94. The Working Group wishes to integrate the topics of cultural competency, equality and inclusion into the Licensing Process, as appropriate, including within the reference materials for licensing, and in any program or course work that is completed during the Licensing Process.

95. A number of consultation participants emphasized the importance of incorporating teachings of equality and inclusion into the Licensing Process. For example, one participant noted that integrating cultural competence training in the Licensing Process would be “well-suited to ensuring that a strong foundation of diversity awareness and cultural consciousness is in place from the beginning of an individual’s legal career.”<sup>67</sup>
96. The Entry-Level Solicitor Competencies and the Entry-Level Barrister Competencies both include the following section under Ethical and Professional Responsibilities:
19. respects human rights (e.g. does not engage in sexual harassment, discrimination or other human rights violations) (Rules 6.3-0 and 6.3.1. (Part of 24)
97. Additionally, under Client Communications, both sets of competencies include the following:
192. recognizes and is sensitive to clients’ circumstances, special needs and intellectual capacity (e.g. diversity, language, literacy, socioeconomic status, disability, health).
98. Similarly, the Paralegal Competencies, under Ethical and Professional Responsibilities, read:
3. Maintains appropriate professional relationships with clients, other licensees, employees and others (e.g. does not engage in sexual harassment, discrimination and human rights violations, respects multi-cultural issues).
99. Under section 27(2) of the Law Society Act and section 8(1) of By-Law 4, Licensing, a recipient of a lawyer or paralegal licence is also required to be of good character. The Law Society has indicated that adherence to human rights and equality principles should be considered in a determination of good character. The November 2013 Submission on The Federation of Law Societies of Canada’s National Suitability to Practise Standard Consultation Report<sup>68</sup> identifies that “specific reference to respect for and adherence to human rights and equality principles sends an important message to those entering the professions.”
100. The Working Group believes that the integration of equality and inclusion information, presented through an anti-discrimination or anti-oppression lens, will assist in preparing candidates to be competent members of the professions.

Implementing Supports

Recommendation 11 – Building Communities of Support

The Law Society, in collaboration with legal associations where appropriate, will provide support to racialized licensees in need of direction and assistance through mentoring and networking initiatives.

101. In considering this recommendation, the Working Group noted that in November 2013, the Law Society created a Mentoring and Advisory Services Proposal Task Force to consider mentoring

and advisory services models. The Working Group provided input to the Task Force on the development of models to best address the needs and facilitate the success of racialized licensees. The Task Force provided its final report to Convocation in January 2016. Convocation approved the creation of a law practice and advisory services initiative, which, at the outset of its implementation, "...will focus on providing supports for already identified communities of need, namely, sole practice and small firm licensees, new licensees, racialized licensees, those seeking succession planning supports and those within certain defined practice areas."<sup>69</sup>

102. Data gathered through the LAR and PAR show that 24% of racialized lawyers are in sole practice and 33% of racialized lawyers practice in legal workplaces of two to five. Similarly, 25% of racialized paralegals are in sole practice. Engagement and consultation process participants highlighted the vulnerability of racialized sole practitioners in the professions — emphasizing the need for sole practitioners and licensees in small firms to have strong mentors and networks. The Working Group also recognizes that it is essential to be responsive to the needs and challenges of racialized licensees in a broad range of practice/work settings and practice areas, which will require approaches that are not "one size fits all".
103. The Law Society currently offers mentorship initiatives that will be enhanced by the new Law Practice Coach and Advisor Initiative.<sup>70</sup> Additionally, the Law Society, in partnership with legal associations and community groups, offers educational programs to promote discussion among members of the professions and the public on the challenges and opportunities for Francophone, Indigenous and equality-seeking communities in the legal professions. These Equity Legal Education events are often followed by networking receptions for members of the professions.
104. The Working Group heard that there is a need for increased, and in some cases, revamped, mentoring and networking initiatives to combat the isolation faced by racialized sole practitioners and racialized licensees practising in small firms. In considering potential mentoring and networking initiatives to support racialized licensees, the Working Group has identified the following objectives:
  1. Encourage the development of communities of support in the professions, including facilitating the search for multiple points for direction and assistance (e.g. peers, subject-matter experts, ethics sounding boards);
  2. Increase the capacity of legal associations to reach more licensees for trusted, nonjudgmental advice; and
  3. Foster connections for licensees who feel isolated, recognizing that feeling professionally isolated is not limited to those in small firms and sole practitioners or those in certain practice areas.

105. The Working Group highlighted the importance of working with legal associations in meeting the abovementioned objectives. The Working Group is also mindful of different types of mentoring, including both advisory services and coaching.<sup>71</sup>
106. As a first step, the Working Group proposes the following:
- Enhanced use of technology to facilitate the development of communities of trust;
  - Enhanced networking opportunities.

107. The Working Group believes that any successful mentorship initiative should reach racialized licensees across the province. This proposal would involve the robust use of technology to increase the ability of racialized licensees to access information and support, with the goal of enhancing learning, competence and success. For example, the Law Society could work with associations of racialized licensees, where appropriate, to create an online resource centre for racialized lawyers and paralegals. This resource centre could act as a hub to bring together the various mentorship initiatives available around the province. The resource centre could include materials geared toward the needs, concerns and unique situations of licensees in sole practice, associations of sole practitioners and small partnerships. Resources could cover topics such as finding a mentor, action plans for mentor-mentee relationships, networking, and the benefits of joining associations. The resource centre could also include a forum for racialized licensees to discuss topics relevant to their practice environments and a podcast series on a range of topics related to race and racism in the professions and supports for racialized licensees.
108. The Working Group has also considered an initiative that would involve working with stakeholders, existing mentoring groups and others to develop the technology that would allow any licensee (racialized or otherwise) to have access to a diverse group of mentors. It may be helpful to ask licensees to indicate whether they are interested in participating in such a program when they fill out their LAR or PAR or through other methods, such as the Law Society Portal. Alternatively, mentors and mentees could be matched using a mobile application (app) with programmed algorithms to increase the potential of having successful relationships. Similar mobile apps have been created to assist with the search for a mentor or mentee in other industries.<sup>72</sup> For example, Menteer, a free, open source online platform,<sup>73</sup> works to match job seekers and mentors. Potential mentors and mentees are asked to answer a series of questions about their skills, interests and backgrounds to assist with finding suitable matches to meet their needs. Mentees are provided with a number of mentor profiles, which the algorithm has determined would be a good fit. Mentors wait for mentees to communicate with them to ask if they would like to establish a mentor-mentee relationship.<sup>74</sup>

Enhanced Networking Opportunities

109. This project involves reviewing current practices around Law Society events and events co-hosted with equality-seeking legal associations to ensure that networking events are affordable, inclusive and relevant to licensees.

Recommendation 12 – Addressing Complaints of Systemic Discrimination

The Law Society, in light of the findings of this project and emerging issues in the professions, will:

- 1) review the function, processes and structure of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC), including considering effective ways for the DHC to address issues of systemic discrimination;
- 2) revise the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, where appropriate, so that systemic discrimination and reprisal for complaints of discrimination and harassment are clearly identified as breaches of professional conduct requirements;
- 3) create effective ways for the Professional Regulation Division to address complaints of systemic discrimination; and
- 4) create a specialized and trained team to address complaints of discrimination.

Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC)

110. The Working Group recommends that the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC) undergo a review of its function, processes and structure. Although the DHC Program does not maintain self-identification information about complainants, it is noteworthy that for the 10-year-period of 2003 to 2012, only 16% of complaints of discrimination were based on race, 3% on ethnic origin, a nominal number on ancestry and place of origin, while 26% and 50% of complaints were based on the grounds of disability and sex, respectively. This is in contrast with the applications received at the Human Rights Tribunal where 22% of applications are based on race, 16% on colour, 17% on ethnic origin, 15% on place of origin and 13% on ancestry with 54% of applications based on disability and 25% based on sex, pregnancy and gender identity.<sup>75</sup> The lower proportion of race-based complaints to the DHC Program warrants a review of the DHC Program to identify possible barriers to accessing that program, more particularly by members of the racialized, Indigenous and disability communities.
111. In Fall 2016, the Law Society's Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee commenced a review of the DHC Program. The objective of this review is to identify how this role can be better used to address discrimination and harassment in the professions, including systemic discrimination, while keeping in mind the independent arms-length position of the DHC and the duty of the DHC to maintain the confidentiality of any individuals who use the Program.

Rules of Professional Conduct and Paralegal Rules of Conduct

112. The Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct outline the responsibility of licensees to respect human rights laws — more specifically, not to engage in discrimination or harassment. The Law Society may investigate complaints of systemic discrimination; however, this is not widely known. The Working Group recommends explicitly stating in the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct that systemic discrimination is considered a violation of the rules. The Working Group also recommends that the rules make clear that reprisal for complaints of discrimination and harassment is prohibited.

Specialized Professional Regulation Team

113. The Working Group recognizes that racism is complex and can manifest itself in subtle ways. The Working Group recommends that the Law Society create a specialized team of Professional Regulation staff members to address complaints of racial discrimination. The members of this team would undergo extensive training on issues of race and racism in order to prepare them to effectively handle these types of complaints.

Review Professional Regulation Processes to Effectively Address Systemic Discrimination

114. Along with the creation of a specialized team of Professional Regulation staff members to address complaints of discrimination, including racial discrimination, it is suggested that the Law Society review its complaints process to consider ways to collect data from different sources and identify instances of systemic discrimination. It is recommended that the Law Society consider specific processes to effectively address systemic discrimination.
115. Racialized consultation participants described discriminatory experiences that had serious impacts on their careers, including career opportunities and earnings. Some described experiences of overt discrimination, such as situations of being on the receiving end of racist jokes, comments or assumptions.
116. In addition to the barriers identified through the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project, in its 2009 Aboriginal Bar Consultation<sup>76</sup>, the Law Society found that 26% of Indigenous lawyers felt that their Indigenous status was a negative factor in their experiences in the professions and the majority stated that they attributed their feeling to the racism and discrimination that they faced in their work experiences.
117. It is clear from the Working Group's engagement and consultation processes that discrimination based on race is a daily reality for many racialized licensees; however, many participants stated that they would not file a discrimination complaint with the Law Society for various reasons, including fear of losing their job, fear of being labeled as a troublemaker, and other reprisal-related concerns. Participants also noted that although racism can be experienced on an individual basis, racial discrimination can also be institutional or systemic in nature. Participants did not believe that an effective process was available at the Law Society to address systemic complaints. The Working Group heard from a number of participants who stated that a system of anonymous complaints would assist in alleviating some of the concerns about reporting cases of racial discrimination.

118. The Task Force on Misogyny, Sexism and Homophobia in Dalhousie University Faculty of Dentistry, which was mandated to inquire into a significant number of sexist, misogynist, and homophobic remarks and images posted on Facebook by fourth year male dentistry students at Dalhousie University, noted the pressing need for anonymous reporting mechanisms so that victims can protest such conduct without putting themselves at risk. This proposal was raised as a result of many who spoke to the Task Force about the need to be able to make anonymous complaints, especially in cases of sexual harassment and sexual assault. The Task Force notes “The biggest concern about anonymous complaints is that there is no way to effectively assess the merits of a particular complaint. However, a group of anonymous complaints all reflecting the same concern provides a signal that there may be a problem that requires some attention. Soliciting anonymous complaints for this purpose could be very useful.”<sup>77</sup>
119. Princeton University allows for anonymous complaints of discrimination, harassment and other violations of policies and regulations through an independent provider of hotline services. Complainants can submit a report online or by calling a free hotline to speak with a trained specialist.<sup>78</sup> Similarly, the City of Copenhagen in Denmark has developed an anonymous app for people to report incidents of discrimination. The purpose of the app is “to understand how widespread discrimination is and where and which groups are most likely to be targeted.”<sup>79</sup>
120. In 2010, the Nova Scotia Barristers’ Society (“NSBS”) launched a successful postcard campaign. The purpose of this campaign was “to raise awareness and generate feedback about gender harassment and discrimination in the legal profession.” Licensees were encouraged to share their experiences of gender harassment and discrimination by submitting accounts of their experiences via anonymous postcards.<sup>80</sup> In 2012, the NSBS noted that over 50 postcards had been received, outlining the experiences and viewpoints of lawyers across Nova Scotia.<sup>81</sup>
121. The Working Group envisions a system through which anonymous discrimination complaints can be made to the DHC. If a certain threshold of complaints about a legal workplace is reached, the DHC can speak with the management of the legal workplace regarding the culture of the workplace and systemic issues. The purpose of these discussions would be remedial, rather than punitive. Proposed solutions could include implementing or adjusting policies and procedures or delivery of educational programs.

122. A review of the functions, process and structure of the DHC should take into consideration the concerns raised through the engagement and consultation processes and the anonymous complaint models outlined above.
123. In addition to feedback about the DHC Program, the Working Group heard concerns from consultation participants that systemic discrimination and reprisal for filing complaints are not explicitly cited as conduct violations in the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct. Although the Law Society may investigate complaints of systemic discrimination and reprisal, the Working Group believes that it is important to state this plainly in the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct so that all licensees and members of the public are aware.
124. The Working Group has also heard that a certain level of expertise is essential in dealing with complaints to the Law Society of racial discrimination, particularly systemic discrimination. A trained team of Professional Regulation staff, equipped to deal with racial discrimination complaints, would assist in understanding and addressing the subtleties that often exist in racial discrimination cases.
125. In addition, racial discrimination often has systemic roots. It is suggested that the Law Society review its processes and consider ways to make them more effective in addressing systemic discrimination.
126. The Working Group believes that in order to create a safe space in which licensees can feel comfortable in making complaints of racial discrimination, including complaints related to systemic discrimination, the Law Society should engage in the abovementioned initiatives.

The operations of the Law Society of Upper Canada

Recommendation 13 – Leading by Example

- 1) The Law Society will continue to monitor and assess internal policies, practices and programs, to promote diversity, inclusion and equality within the workplace and in the provision of services by:
  - a) as required, adopting, implementing and maintaining a human rights/diversity policy addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement;
  - b) measuring quantitative progress through a census of the workforce or other method;
  - c) measuring qualitative progress by conducting inclusion surveys;
  - d) conducting regular equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessments;
  - e) based on the results from b), c) and d), identifying gaps and barriers and adopting measures to address the gaps and barriers;

- f) publishing relevant findings from b), c), d) and e); and
- g) providing equality and inclusion education programs for staff at the Law Society on a regular basis.

2) The Law Society will:

- a) conduct an internal diversity assessment of the bench composition and publicize the results;
- b) provide equality and inclusion education programs for Convocation on a regular basis.

127. The rationale for the adoption of human rights/diversity policies to address fair recruitment, retention and advancement; for measuring quantitatively and qualitatively progress; and for conducting self-assessments is well articulated in this report. The strength of having diversity at the board level is also well documented. The Maytree Foundation, for example, notes that,

Governance is the top tier of leadership, where ultimate oversight, strategic direction and policy are determined. But equally important is the representational role that boards uphold. A lack of diversity at this level has sweeping implications for how underrepresented groups see themselves, their relevance and their place at the decision-making table.<sup>82</sup>

128. During the engagement and consultation processes, participants indicated support for an internal equality audit of the Law Society workforce and the development of a more diverse public face/image for the Law Society, including at the governance level. The Working Group is of the view that the Law Society must take a leadership role and model the change it is seeking to create in the professions, which would include increasing diversity at both the governance and the staff levels, and engaging in the same initiatives and measures proposed to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees in the professions.

129. The Law Society has committed to a number of initiatives to increase diversity and inclusion in the organization:

- Operational Equity Audit: In 2015, with the assistance of Canadian Centre for Diversity and Inclusion (CCDI), the Law Society undertook an Operational Equity and Diversity Audit to assess the services provided to licensees and the public and to determine whether there are barriers that are contributing to inequality or perceived inequality in the provision of those services – in particular, involving members of racialized and Aboriginal communities. The Law Society is currently working through the results of this audit to determine where improvements can be made in its operations.
- Employee Diversity Census and Inclusion Survey: Earlier this year, the Law Society, also with the assistance of CCDI, launched an employee diversity census and inclusion survey. The purpose was to collect data to help the Law Society better understand the make-up of its organization and how to best serve Law Society staff's needs. There was a 72% response rate, which was excellent, and the results will assist with the Law Society's efforts to promote a diverse and inclusive culture that is supportive to all employees.
- Employee Engagement and Enablement Survey: This year the Law Society has also conducted an Employee Engagement and Enablement Survey, assisted by the Hay Group, in order to improve the effectiveness of its organization and enhance communications between management and employees at all levels.

- Bencher Diversity Survey: Convocation has identified conducting a diversity survey of the bencher composition as a priority for this term. We are currently working on finalizing this survey.

130. As mentioned above, both the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct provide that licensees have special responsibility to uphold human rights principles, protect the dignity of individuals and recognize diversity and inclusion. The Law Society is committed to identifying barriers and gaps in its workforce and governance and implementing comprehensive equality, diversity and inclusion initiatives to improve equality, diversity and inclusion.

Appendix A

Results

Summary of Community and Consultant Engagement Process Results

“You work harder to prove yourself. You cannot necessarily do things that your white colleagues can do as there is a different connotation. Generally I have always been told that I have to work harder than my white counterparts. Which in some respects is sadly still true at this day and age.”

— Community Liaison Meeting

The qualitative and quantitative data obtained from the engagement processes identified widespread barriers experienced by racialized licensees within the professions at all stages of their careers.

Key informants, focus group participants and survey respondents identified racialization as a significant factor that shapes the experiences and career outcomes of racialized licensees. The consultant engagement results indicated that racialized licensees have a lower success rate in securing job placements, finding first jobs and securing suitable practice environments. Moreover, racialized licensees felt that they were disadvantaged in law school and that they had not advanced in their careers at the same rate as their non-racialized colleagues.

Racial and ethnic barriers were ranked highly among the barriers to entry and advancement. Forty percent (40%) of racialized licensees identified their ethnic/racial identity as a barrier to entry to practice, while only 3% of non-racialized licensees identified ethnic/racial identity as a barrier. Racialized licensees frequently identified physical appearance, socioeconomic status, place of birth and upbringing, age, manner of speaking English/French and gender identity as barriers — more so than non-racialized licensees. Racialized licensees were also more likely to have struggled to find an articling position or training placement.

Similarly, 43% of racialized licensees identified ethnic/racial identity as a barrier/challenge to advancement, while only 3% of non-racialized licensees identified ethnic/racial identity as a barrier. Racialized licensees were more likely than non-racialized licensees to believe they had not advanced as rapidly as colleagues with similar qualifications.

Racialized participants identified a number of specific challenges faced in the professions. Community liaison process participants, key informants and focus group participants provided numerous examples of discrimination and stereotyping faced in the everyday professional experiences of racialized licensees. Some experiences were overt, while others were more subtle. Participants spoke of assumptions by members of the professions and clients that racialized lawyers are unskilled employees, interpreters, social workers, students or clients. Participants also identified situations where racialized licensees were excluded from files and client meetings based on personal characteristics. Some participants stated that in some cases, licensees from certain parts of the world were associated with terrorism. The Working Group heard a number of participants say, “you can’t just be good, you have to be better.”

Racialized participants spoke about challenges linked to cultural differences and fit. Many racialized licensees stated that they felt alienated from the dominant culture of firms. They provided examples of firm-related social events, which involved playing hockey, playing golf and drinking alcohol. Some racialized licensees indicated that they did not participate in these activities and therefore they did not “fit”, noting that “fit” was important for entry and advancement. Some participants also stated that they were not offered career opportunities because of their “foreign sounding” names.

Participants spoke in detail about the lack of access for racialized licensees to mentors, networks and role models. Racialized participants indicated that they were not aware of programs or resources available to them. They also noted that they did not have the same professional connections and networks as their non-racialized colleagues and lacked role models in their field within their ethnic communities.

Participants noted that race-based barriers are often complicated by the additional experiences of discrimination based on sex, gender identity, gender expression, disability, sexual orientation, class and creed.

Some participants believed that racialized licensees were more likely to go into sole practice as a result of barriers faced in other practice environments. They also noted that internationally trained lawyers and paralegals face additional barriers in the professions.

Generally, participants noted that the challenges faced by racialized licensees impact the reputation of the legal system in Ontario, affect access to justice for Ontarians and affect the quality of legal services for the public.

Summary of Consultation Process

The Working Group received thoughtful oral and written submissions from the professions regarding strategies to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees.

A. Enhancing the internal capacity of organizations

The Working Group posed the following questions related to this theme in the consultation paper:

- How should the Law Society act as a catalyst for the establishment of diversity programs within firms and why?
- What is the preferred model for the collection of firm demographic data and why?
- How could the Law Society work with in-house legal departments to develop model contract compliance programs for in-house legal departments that retain firms?

Diversity Programs

“We need to encourage firms to be champions of diversity.”
— Participant

Consultation participants showed significant support for the creation of diversity programs for the recruitment, retention and advancement of racialized licensees in legal workplaces. Participants reminded the Working Group that a “one size fits all” approach should be avoided — firm size, industry and geographical location should be considered if the Law Society is to develop diversity programs.

A number of participants supported the idea of creating a diversity project modelled on the Law Society of Upper Canada’s Justicia Project. Such a project would include the development and adoption of resources for the fair recruitment, retention and advancement of racialized licensees.<sup>83</sup> Participants were divided, however, on whether diversity programs should be mandatory or voluntary. Some participants noted that voluntary programs create buy-in and a willingness to create change. A number of participants stated that it is important to have “diversity champions” who will lead change from the top-down. Participants outside of the Greater Toronto Area (GTA) that work in small firms saw the value of voluntary programs as small firms may lack the resources to implement mandatory programs. Some participants noted that mandatory programs could create backlash.

Participants in favour of mandatory programs argued that mandatory programs create stronger awareness of equality and diversity issues. One participant, who had experience with employment equality programs, said that it is necessary to have an enforcement mechanism in place. Other participants believed that, at the very least, the Law Society should require legal workplaces to have equality and diversity policies in place. Some participants suggested that the Law Society ask licensees to answer questions related to their firm’s policies in the annual report in order to prompt change. Although it was suggested by some that requirements could include mandatory targets for the number of racialized licensees that must be interviewed or hired by legal workplaces; the majority of participants were strongly opposed to the creation of mandatory hiring targets and timelines.

Some participants supported the proposal that firms complete a self-assessment about their diversity performance, which would include more than an analysis of demographic data. One participant stated:

Beyond numbers, look at the ways in which interactions are made, the ways in which people are hired, anti-nepotism policies, mentoring programs. All of these things are bigger pieces of the diversity pie.

The majority of participants interested in this idea indicated that the self-assessment should be voluntary; however, the Law Society could provide incentives for firms to engage in this process. There were some participants who were in support of mandatory self-assessments that would be conducted by employees instead of firm management to garner more valuable results. Additionally, participants stated that the Law Society should provide legal workplaces with self-assessment templates and tools.

Collecting Demographic Data

— Participant

The Working Group heard a broad range of views on the issue of demographic data collection; however, most participants agreed that the collection of data would be, as one participant noted, “a humble but important first step”. Some participants believed that mandatory data collection is crucial to advancing diversity and inclusion, while others believed that mandatory collection could halt the progress that is already being made by legal workplaces in the area of equality and diversity.

Participants on the side of mandatory collection had a number of suggestions related to the methods of collection and reporting. The majority of participants, including those in small firms and outside of

Toronto, were in favour of the Law Society collecting demographic data. Some participants suggested that the Law Society could use the data collected in the annual report to provide legal workplaces with their individual legal workplace demographic data and aggregate demographic data of legal workplaces of similar size and location to provide a benchmark. Participants also noted that it would be useful to capture information about inclusion and advancement in addition to numbers. Some participants in favour of mandatory reporting stated that, in order to encourage change, the demographic information for each firm should be publicly available.

Participants in favour of voluntary data collection noted that a number of large firms are already engaging in demographic data collection and inclusion surveys, and are committed to this work. Should the Law Society mandate data collection, it could have a negative effect on the work already being done. Participants from small firms indicated that they are unsure how mandatory data collection would be enforced. Some participants believed that demographic data should be reported, but on a voluntary basis. A number of participants suggested setting data collection as a criterion of a voluntary diversity program. The Law Society could then incentivize data collection by providing ratings or awards for meeting certain levels of diversity and inclusion.

Contract Compliance

“The case for diversity and inclusion has a business foundation”

— Participant

The Working Group heard that the Law Society could play a facilitative role by encouraging corporate procurement policies that consider suppliers that promote equality and diversity. A number of participants highlighted the Bank of Montreal’s contract compliance program and the work of the Legal Leaders for Diversity (“LLD”) as best practices in this area. Some participants suggested that the Law Society work with LLD, other in-house counsel associations and firms to develop model diversity-related procurement and contract compliance policies.

Some participants noted that they would discourage mandatory contract compliance as often people respond better to incentives rather than punitive consequences. Some participants from small firms pointed out that strict mandatory contract compliance related to diversity could be difficult for small firms and lead to them being unable to compete for work.

B. Mentoring, advisory services and networking

The Working Group posed the following questions related to this theme in the consultation paper:

- What are the preferred mentoring and/or advisory services models for racialized licensees?
- What are the preferred networking models for racialized licensees?

Mentoring and Advisory Services

The majority of participants in the consultation process emphasized the importance of mentoring for racialized licensees; however, one group of participants noted that, some cases, mentoring “...serves to reproduce institutional inequality and assist white licensees in securing inclusion within social institutions and the professions”.

In November 2013, Convocation created the Mentoring and Advisory Services Proposal Task Force (“Mentoring Task Force”) to consider mentoring, advisor and other support services for lawyers and paralegals. The Working Group worked with the Task Force and shared with the Task Force members the information obtained on mentoring and advisory services from the consultation process. In January 2016, Convocation approved a new law practice coaching and advisory initiative, which “...will assist in the development of competent legal professionals by supporting the growing need in the professions for short-term advisor supports addressing file-specific and substantive/procedural matters, and longer term coaching supports to foster best practices.”<sup>84</sup>

Types of Mentoring and Advisory Services

Generally, the Working Group heard that there is no “one-size-fits-all” model for mentoring. Different types of mentoring may be required at different stages of a person’s career for different purposes. For example, mentoring could be offered to provide assistance on specific cases or it could be related to how to navigate the professions as a racialized licensee.

A number of participants highlighted the importance of providing mentoring for sole practitioners and internationally trained lawyers. Paralegal participants told the Working Group that there is a shortage of mentoring programs in the paralegal community and thus a significant need. Other participants noted that racialized licensees in large firms do not have role models within their firms so would benefit from some assistance to find mentors from outside their firms.

A significant number of participants emphasized that sponsorship<sup>85</sup> is also essential to the career advancement of racialized licensees, noting that it would be helpful to have sponsors or champions advocating for individual licensees at decision-making tables.

Structure of Mentoring and Advisory Services

Some participants stated that it would be useful to have a panel of mentors who could address different facets of a licensee’s career, including providing advice on navigating barriers, substantive legal issues or career advancement. Participants also noted that mentoring should be provided to students before law school, to address pipeline issues, and in law school.

A number of legal workplaces described their mentoring programs and expressed interest in working collaboratively with the Law Society to help licensees in need of mentoring. One way in which this could take place is using enhanced website services and creating a highly functional and welcoming online mentoring community with links to partner legal workplaces. As many legal workplaces have their own websites, the Law Society could function as a connector to these kinds of services. Participants also suggested that the Law Society develop, in collaboration with legal workplaces, best practices toolkits and/or guidelines on mentoring.

Participants proposed various mentoring models including one-on-one mentoring with various mentors for different purposes, study groups with licensees who have similar challenges and group mentoring to assist with practice management and career advancement. Some participants suggested that junior licensees could also mentor other junior licensees from the same racialized community. In a similar vein, some participants stated that junior racialized licensees could act as effective mentors to senior non-racialized licensees.

Participants noted that it is often difficult to find willing and experienced mentors. One participant for example noted difficulties finding racialized mentors because, “we are not grooming racialized lawyers to become leaders.” Some participants suggested that the Law Society could ask licensees to indicate in the annual report or using another methodology such as the Law Society Portal, their willingness to act as mentors. The Law Society could then create a mentor roster. Similarly, other participants suggested having a web-based registry for mentors, which could include the mentors’ area of law and their time availability. Incentives for mentors could include the receipt of professionalism hours for mentoring services or discounted CPD programming. Some participants believed that the Law Society should compensate mentors, while others believed this would negatively impact the mentor-mentee relationship. Participants suggested that mentors should be culturally competent.

Participants outside of the GTA highlighted specific issues related to mentoring in their regions. A number of participants noted that the majority of professional associations that represent equality-seeking groups do not operate outside of the GTA, which limits access to association-based mentoring programs. One participant stated that if mentoring was to be offered in-person, it should be geographically accessible for licensees in areas across the province.

Networking

“Have more inclusive events.”

— Participant

Many participants stated that associations of racialized lawyers and paralegals are beneficial for fostering collaboration and creating a sense of belonging. Some participants suggested that it would be useful for the Law Society to facilitate collaboration between the various associations and/or to promote already-existing networking opportunities provided by the associations.

Some participants told the Working Group that legal associations are often too costly to join. One group of participants suggested that the Law Society provide subsidies to racialized licensees to assist them to join associations.

Some of the associations also described concern with the cost of holding events for their sectors of the bar at the Law Society and expressed interest in having “in-kind” support and partnership from the Law Society to make those events accessible to diverse communities of lawyers.

Some participants proposed that the Law Society hold regional networking events for licensees. Others noted that CPD programs can be good networking opportunities. However, some participants stated that the cost of CPD programs can be prohibitive and suggested that the Law Society provide low-cost or sliding scale CPD programs. One participant suggested that the Law Society “host planned and structured networking events that are, in location and content, culturally relevant to different groups of racialized licensees.” Some participants noted that hosting alcohol-free events would increase inclusivity.

Participants highlighted the fact that internationally trained lawyers and sole practitioners feel particularly isolated, so networking opportunities should also be targeted to these groups.

C. Enhancing cultural competence in the professions

The Working Group posed the following question related to this theme in the consultation paper:

- How could the Law Society enhance the professions' cultural competence through its CPD programs?

CPD Programs

"We need to be educated about diversity."

A large number of participants were in favour of the Law Society requiring licensees to participate in mandatory CPD training on cultural competency, unconscious bias, and anti-racism. Some participants suggested that refresher sessions should be mandated "at intervals over the course of licensees' careers."

Others suggested that this CPD training be provided on a voluntary basis. There was concern expressed that requiring this form of training to be taken by all could be counter-productive. In either case however, participants agreed that professionalism credits should be provided CPD training on these topics.

In terms of content, participants suggested that cultural competency training should go "beyond learning about cultural practices of 'other' cultures and towards an examination of bias, inequality and discrimination". Similarly, one participant noted that the Law Society should "utilize an anti-discrimination, anti-racism and anti-oppression framework focused on deconstructing power structures and privilege — not on cultural competency." Participants also suggested that the Law Society work with associations of racialized licensees and/or with knowledgeable experts to develop content for the training sessions.

Some participants highlighted the importance of requiring licensees involved in recruitment, hiring and promotion decisions to participate in CPDs related to cultural competency and unconscious bias, specifically addressing topics such as bias-free interviews. One participant stated, "If attitudes don't change, the numbers are not going to change." Participants suggested that this CPD programming could be offered via webcast during summer student and articling interview periods. It was also proposed that the Law Society deliver these programs and other cultural competence and anti-discrimination and harassment programs at firms.

A number of participants noted the need to ensure that education on cultural competency, unconscious bias, anti-racism and anti-oppression start at law school and in the Licensing Process. A participant suggested that the Law Society use its seat on the Federation of Law Societies to encourage the inclusion of cultural competency and diversity awareness as part of the core law school curriculum. One group of participants suggested adding a cultural competency course to the college curriculum for paralegal programs. Some participants proposed including cultural competency, diversity and inclusion in the Professional Responsibility and Practice Course that articling students must complete.

It was proposed that all benchers attend cultural competency training in order to enhance awareness at the governance level and ensure that equality, diversity and inclusion are taken into account throughout the policy development process.

Generally, participants stated that CPD programs should be widely available via webcast and recorded. Additionally, some participants suggested that the cost of CPD be reduced, perhaps by working with regional associations.

D. Discrimination and the role of the complaints process

The Working Group posed the following question related to this theme in the consultation paper:

- How should the Law Society best ensure that complaints of discrimination are brought to its attention and effectively addressed?

Complaints of Discrimination

“People have to feel comfortable in accessing policies.”

— Participant

The Working Group heard a range of suggestions on encouraging licensees to bring forward complaints of discrimination.

Participants suggested updating the Rules of Professional Conduct<sup>86</sup> and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct<sup>87</sup> to specifically address systemic discrimination and subtle forms of discrimination. Some participants recommended advertising that complaints of discrimination can be made through the complaints process and devoting more resources to promoting the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program.

Participants noted that licensees will often refrain from reporting experiences of discrimination because they fear the negative impact a complaint might have on their careers and reputations. One participant stated, “We don’t want to rock the boat or be considered a troublemaker”.

Some participants were in favour of the Law Society creating an anonymous system of receiving complaints. However, licensees in small firms said this would not be helpful for them as their firms are too small for them to remain anonymous. Some participants that supported an anonymous complaints process recommended that the Law Society investigate firms that have been the subject of a number of anonymous complaints. Participants also suggested amending the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct to include a provision that states that reprisals for complaints of discrimination and harassment are prohibited.

Participants believed that bringing a complaint through an association may not alleviate the issues raised. Some participants suggested that the Law Society ask licensees, using the annual report, whether they have ever experienced discrimination. This information could then be compiled by legal workplace and provided to legal workplace management. Other participants proposed that the Law Society audit firms to ensure that they have policies related to equality, diversity, discrimination and harassment.

Regardless of the method taken to receive complaints, participants noted that it is important for the Law Society to advise complainants of what action was taken.

Some participants noted it would be helpful to have a group of diverse expert Professional Regulation staff who are trained in cultural competency and have an understanding of racial discrimination.

E. The operations of the Law Society of Upper Canada

— Participant

The Law Society received support from participants for its proposals to enhance its current equality compliance program, conduct an internal equality audit, collect further data on the regulatory process and develop a more diverse public face/image for the Law Society. A number of participants have emphasized that the Law Society must model the change it is seeking to create in the professions, which would include increasing diversity at both the governance and the staff levels, and engaging in the same initiatives and measures proposed to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees in the professions.

On a few occasions, participants at the meetings and open houses noted the lack of diversity of Working Group presenters. Working Group members attended and presented at open houses and meetings when their schedules permitted, and at some meetings, the group of presenters did not reflect the diversity of racialized licensees at those meetings. That became a point of discussion with participants expressing concern about the overall diversity of Convocation, but also expressing satisfaction that there are non-racialized benchers who are interested in being part of change and in hearing from licensees on these subjects. It is important to note that a bencher election was conducted during the consultation process and the composition of Convocation appears to be more racially diverse than ever and representative of the professions.

White Privilege

Consultation participants spoke of “white privilege”<sup>88</sup>, and expressed the need for all to acknowledge its existence in order to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees. A number of participants noted that it is important for licensees to understand how power operates to produce advantages for some and deny advantages to others.

Daily Verbal, Behavioural and Environmental Indignities

Consultation participants provided descriptions of their experiences of commonplace daily verbal, behavioural, and environmental indignities, whether intentional or unintentional, that communicate

hostile, derogatory or negative racial slights.<sup>89</sup> Examples ranged from assumptions that they are not licensees but in fact interpreters or accused, to inappropriate questions regarding their perceived “otherness.” Participants noted that it is important for licensees to understand the impact of such behaviour and for the Law Society to find ways to address these subtle forms of discrimination.

Indigenous Licensees and Racialized Licensees: Historical and Geographical Differences

Open house learning and consultation programs in Northern Ontario yielded interesting information about the similarities and differences between the experiences of Indigenous licensees and licensees that self-identify as racialized. Participants in Thunder Bay noted that, in terms of race and racism, the population in northern areas of the province is often divided into Indigenous and non-Indigenous peoples. Participants identified several examples where they had witnessed racism directed at Indigenous people and where they had observed that racialized people were treated differently from non-racialized people. It was noted that because of the distinctive histories of Indigenous peoples, strategies to respond to racism faced by Indigenous peoples and to racism faced by racialized peoples may need to differ. The Law Society’s policy work reflects this uniqueness, including the work of the EAIC and other initiatives that are outside the scope of this project. The Law Society is also currently developing a framework of reconciliation in consultation with the Indigenous Advisory Group, established in 2016 with the Law Society to guide the Law Society and the legal community towards a better understanding of how to address unique issues faced by Indigenous peoples in Ontario and promote responses to and implementation of the Calls to Action from the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada’s final report and the First Nations Representation on Ontario Juries report by The Honourable Frank Iacobucci.

INDIGENOUS FRAMEWORK

Motion

4. That Convocation approve the Indigenous Framework for the Law Society, set out at Tab 5.1.1.

Introduction and Purpose

5. As stated in the Treasurer's September 22, 2017 Memorandum (Treasurer's Memorandum) to the Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee (EIAC), the promotion of equity and diversity must prioritize reconciliation with Indigenous peoples. The Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada's Final Report reminded us of the reality that Indigenous peoples have a "deep and abiding distrust of Canada's...legal systems". The Law Society can play a part in working towards reconciliation.

6. At the Treasurer's direction, the EIAC, in partnership with the Indigenous Advisory Group (IAG), has developed an Indigenous Framework. The Framework is before Convocation for approval as a document to guide the Law Society's work within its mandate on Indigenous issues and the relationship with the Indigenous community.
7. The Indigenous Framework represents the Law Society's work towards fulfilment of the Law Society's mandate, particularly in relation to access to justice, and the equity and other principles by which it regulates, in relation to legal and regulatory issues affecting Indigenous peoples.
8. It also represents progress towards reconciliation with First Nations, Métis and Inuit communities, whose members are licensees, clients, individuals who interact with the justice and legal systems, and Ontarians to whom the Law Society, in accordance with s. 4.2(2) of the Law Society Act, owes a duty to act so as to facilitate access to justice.

Background to Development of the Framework

The Indigenous Advisory Group (IAG)

9. Following the release of the 94 Calls to Action from the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada's Final Report (TRC Report), the Law Society expressed its desire to formally re-establish and strengthen its relationship with Indigenous people on justice issues.

Convocation - Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee/Comité sur l'équité et les affaires autochtones Report

10. Reaching out to the Indigenous Bar Association for support, an interim IAG was formed to begin addressing issues related to reconciliation and Indigenous issues as well as the development of a permanent IAG. In April 2016, this interim Indigenous Advisory Group provided Terms of Reference to EIAC and was introduced to EIAC members.
11. On June 23, 2016, this IAG was publicly announced at the Celebration of Indigenous Peoples event at the Law Society.
12. The IAG was established as an independent body to:
  - a. advise the Law Society on the unique issues faced by Indigenous practitioners, paralegals and Indigenous peoples in Ontario and to
  - b. promote the development of the relationships between Indigenous peoples and Canadian legal structures and institutions in a manner that respects Indigenous values, beliefs and legal systems.
13. The Terms of Reference of the Indigenous Advisory Group are attached at TAB 5.1.2.
14. To fulfill the Terms of Reference and mandate of the IAG, diverse representation amongst IAG members is key factor to facilitating discussion and decision on policies to address the wide ranging and unique realities that First Nations, Métis and Inuit communities and individuals across Ontario face in relation to the regulation of legal profession and access to justice. Thus, the IAG is inclusive of representatives from First Nations, Métis, Inuit communities that are located across the province, including southern and northern Ontario. Moreover, members are representative of the legal professions (lawyers and paralegals) and also include non-licensees. A range of experience is also key to maintaining balance within the group with experienced lawyers and early career representatives.
15. The IAG is also comprised of an Elders Council. Elders play central roles First Nations, Métis and Inuit communities. Among the many roles that Elders play, they hold significant wisdom in areas of traditional knowledge, are recognized as having that wisdom by their communities and Nations and have the capacity to transmit this knowledge to others. The role of the Elders Council is to establish a foundation of knowledge and wisdom to ground the IAG's efforts. The Elders Council also played a significant role in the formation of the IAG, having provided recommendations in relation to potential members.
16. As a key partner with the Law Society, the IAG, through the diverse voices of its membership and Elders Council, is helping to identify and assist the Law Society in making critical changes to the practices and policies of the Law Society that are reflective of the critical justice and regulatory issues that affect First Nation, Métis and Indigenous communities and peoples in Ontario.

The EIAC and IAG: Collaborative Development of The Indigenous Framework

17. In September 2016, the IAG and the EIAC embarked on a collaboration in the development of the Law Society's Indigenous Framework. It was also decided in late 2016 that the IAG, as a partner with EIAC, the Chair and members of the Elders Council would attend EIAC meetings to provide updates on the work of the IAG and to provide Indigenous teachings to the EIAC members. This informs the work of the EIAC and enhances the knowledge of EIAC members.
18. The EIAC and the IAG met in November 2016 to discuss the development of the Indigenous Framework and began the development of a Draft Indigenous Framework. In collaboration with staff, the EIAC and the IAG made progress on the Indigenous Framework throughout 2017. In early June, the IAG completed its work on the Framework, which was reviewed at the June meeting of the EIAC.

Key Features of the Indigenous Framework

19. The Treasurer's Memorandum indicates that one of the initiatives that is to be undertaken by the EIAC in collaboration with the IAG is the development of an "Indigenous lens to all we do at the Law Society". The Indigenous Framework is responsive to this direction as it outlines a series of principles that form the scope of this lens. As stated in the Indigenous Framework:

The IAG define the Indigenous lens as inclusive of the Anishinabe Seven Sacred Laws; the teachings of the Haudenosaunee of peace, respect, friendship and a good mind; Cree principles compliment the Seven Sacred Laws, are supported by the Métis and the 8 Inuit Qaujimajatuqangit guiding principles.

20. The Indigenous lens sets the Indigenous Framework on four foundational pillars, which provide perspective and guidance for the Law Society in its interaction with Indigenous peoples. These four pillars, which were distilled from priorities outlined in documents that informed the development of the Indigenous Framework (e.g. Treasurer's Mandate), include:

- Creating and Enhancing Cultural Competency
- Achieving and Improving Access to Justice
- Promoting and Supporting Knowledge of Indigenous Legal Systems

Convocation - Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee/Comité sur l'équité et les affaires autochtones Report

- Taking Action on Reconciliation

21. A number of things, described below, have informed the development of a foundation, now realized in the Framework, to guide the actions of the Law Society in relation to Indigenous issues.
22. They include the Law Society's 2009 Final Report of the Indigenous Bar Consultation, particularly around mentorship initiatives for Indigenous law students and licensees and the 94 Calls to Action outlined in the TRC Final Report, particularly those that provide direction to institutions and individuals on how to take action towards the achievement of reconciliation. It should be noted that a detailed response to the TRC Final Report is proposed within the priorities identified under the pillar of Taking Action on Reconciliation. This response is not to be limited to Calls to Action 27<sup>1</sup> and 28<sup>2</sup>, but is to include all matters identified in the report that intersect with the mandate of the Law Society. This includes but is not limited to issues such as cultural competency and equity for Indigenous people in the justice system.
23. The discussions within the Law Society between the EIAC, IAG and Law Society staff and information from events such as the 2016 Indigenous Bar Association Conference, where a review of Law Society functions in the context of reconciliation was led by the IAG Chair and members, have also been helpful in contributing to the content of the Indigenous Framework.
24. Critical provincial and national issues have also influenced the development of the Indigenous Framework, particularly those that intersect with justice issues, including but not limited to
- a. the crisis of missing and murdered Indigenous women, girls and LGBTQ2S people and the current National Inquiry into Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls;
  - b. the Crisis of Indigenous Children and Youth in Care;

<sup>1</sup> We call upon the Federation of Law Societies of Canada to ensure that lawyers receive appropriate cultural competency training, which includes the history and legacy of residential schools, the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, Treaties and Aboriginal rights, Indigenous law, and Aboriginal– Crown relations. This will require skills-based training in intercultural competency, conflict resolution, human rights, and anti-racism.

<sup>2</sup> We call upon law schools in Canada to require all law students to take a course in Aboriginal people and the law, which includes the history and legacy of residential schools, the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, Treaties and Aboriginal rights, Indigenous law, and Aboriginal–Crown relations. This will require skills-based training in intercultural competency, conflict resolution, human rights, and antiracism.

Convocation - Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee/Comité sur l'équité et les affaires autochtones Report

- c. barriers to access to justice that disproportionately affect First Nations, Métis and Inuit peoples and the resulting and urgent need to accommodate the unique historical and cultural circumstances of Indigenous peoples and Indigenous approaches to conflict resolution in the justice system;
  - d. the overrepresentation of Indigenous people in legal proceedings, care and incarceration;
  - e. as identified in the TRC Final Report, “the need for lawyers to develop a greater understanding of Aboriginal history and culture as well as the multi-faceted legacy of residential schools”<sup>3</sup>; and
  - f. the historical suppression of and resonant need to support and promote Indigenous legal traditions, laws and their applications across Canada.
25. The EIAC and the IAG have also considered key policy and justice reports and documents that have been produced by provincial, national and international bodies, which are identified in Appendix A of TAB 5.1.1, in developing the Indigenous Framework.
26. Not unlike the TRC Final Report, many of these reports include recommendations that support improved relations between Indigenous and non-Indigenous peoples. These reports are provided in the Appendix to the Framework as they are critical in understanding the legacy of marginalization from contemporary discourse and action in relation to Indigenous peoples locally, nationally and globally, and the need to move forward to achieve equality and inclusion:

- Report of the Royal Commission on Aboriginal Peoples (also known as RCAP)
  - The Ipperwash Inquiry - Final Report
  - the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples
  - The Iacobucci Report – First Nations Representation on Ontario Juries

Next Steps

27. The Indigenous Framework provides the Law Society with a foundation to take action on reconciliation within the ambit of its mandate, which as the TRC states “is about establishing and maintaining a mutually respectful relationship between Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal peoples in this country".<sup>4</sup>

28. In moving forward with the Framework, the Law Society will collaborate with the IAG beginning in the summer on the development of a work plan to be derived from the Framework which will set the groundwork for the implementation of the Framework. The EIAC will report to Convocation on the progress of this work in the fall of 2017.

BACKGROUND

1. The Law Society of Upper Canada (Law Society), as a regulator of all lawyers and licensed paralegals in the province of Ontario, pursuant to its legislative mandate under the Law Society Act R.S.O. 1990, Chapter L.8 (the Act) must have regard to the following duties:
  - To maintain and advance the cause of justice and the rule of law;
  - To act so as to facilitate access to justice for the people of Ontario;
  - To protect the public interest;
  - To act in a timely, open and efficient manner; and
  - Standards of learning, professional competence and professional conduct for licensees and restrictions on who may provide particular legal services should be proportionate to the significance of the regulatory objectives sought to be realized
2. In 2000, consistent with the duties encoded in the Act, the Law Society established a standing committee of Convocation called the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee (now the Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee or EIAC)<sup>2</sup>, to develop policies, programs and initiatives to best serve and promote an inclusive profession. Subject to Convocation's approval, the EIAC's mandate is to develop policy options for the promotion of equity and diversity having to do in any way with the practice of law in Ontario or provision of legal services in Ontario and for addressing all matters related to Indigenous peoples and French-speaking peoples. As a best practice, the EIAC consults with Indigenous peoples, Francophone citizens and other communities in the development of such policy options.
3. As part of the Law Society's efforts over the years to consult with Indigenous peoples, a number of working groups and strategies have been established including Rotiio>taties<sup>3</sup> in 1998.
4. Rotiio>taties was an independent board of Elders, Indigenous lawyers<sup>4</sup>, community representatives and law students who advised various bodies, including the Law Society, on Indigenous issues arising in law and the legal profession. The membership of Rotiio>taties changed over the years until its eventual transition to an Aboriginal Working Group.

Convocation - Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee/Comité sur l'équité et les affaires autochtones Report

5. In 2009 Convocation approved the Final Report of the Indigenous Bar Consultation which identified a number of recommended actions the Law Society could undertake. These recommendations included:
  - Expanding the Members' Annual Report Practice Categories to include Aboriginal Law (to determine how many lawyers in Ontario self-identify as practicing Aboriginal law)
  - Mentoring and Networking Program
  - Continuing Legal Education Course in Aboriginal Law and Issues
  - Certified Specialist Program in Aboriginal Law<sup>5</sup>
6. In 2014, Convocation affirmed its commitment to place emphasis, through the EIAC, on Indigenous issues. In June 2016, the Indigenous Advisory Group<sup>6</sup> (IAG) was established as an independent body to advise the Law Society on the unique issues faced by Indigenous practitioners, paralegals and Indigenous peoples in Ontario and to promote the development of the relationships between Indigenous peoples and Canadian legal structures and institutions in a manner that respects Indigenous values, beliefs and legal systems.
7. In September 2016, the EIAC and the IAG committed to work collaboratively in the development of the Law Society's Indigenous Framework and on November 5, 2016, the EIAC and the IAG held a joint meeting to begin the development of this Indigenous Framework.

INTRODUCTION

8. The Indigenous Framework has been developed in accord with the priorities identified in three key Law Society documents:
  - Convocation's 2015-2019 Strategic Plan, as relevant to the EIAC's mandate;
  - Treasurer's Memorandum to the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee (September 22, 2016); and
  - Approaches for the Law Society of Upper Canada's Responses to the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada (TRC) Final Report (Sept. 2, 2016).<sup>7</sup>

Convocation - Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee/Comité sur l'équité et les affaires autochtones Report

9. The priorities identified in the above documents often intersect and coalesce, helping to shape this Framework into the following Four Pillars:
- Creating and Enhancing Cultural Competency
  - Achieving and Improving Access to Justice
  - Promoting and Supporting Knowledge of Indigenous Legal Systems
  - Taking Action on Reconciliation
10. The development of every initiative by the Law Society within any one of these Four Framework Pillars must be guided through an “Indigenous lens” in order to fully meet the objective of this Framework. The Treasurer, through his Memorandum to the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee, directed the EIAC to develop policies that will ensure an Indigenous lens to all the Law Society does.
11. The IAG define the Indigenous lens as inclusive of the Anishinabe Seven Sacred Laws ; the teachings of the Haudenosaunee of peace, respect, friendship and a good mind; Cree principles compliment the Seven Sacred Laws, are supported by the Métis and the 8 Inuit Qaujimajatuqangit guiding principles.<sup>8</sup> Such principles are :
- Love: To know love is to know peace.
  - Respect: To honour all Creation is to have respect
  - Courage: To face life with courage is to know bravery
  - Honesty: To walk through life with integrity is to know honesty
  - Humility: To accept yourself as a sacred part of Creation is to know humility
  - Wisdom: To cherish knowledge is to know wisdom
  - Truth: To know of these things is to know truth

THE FOUR FRAMEWORK PILLARS

CREATING AND ENHANCING CULTURAL COMPETENCY<sup>9</sup>

12. The Law Society will work in partnership with the IAG to create and enhance cultural competency recognizing the continued need for licensees to be equipped with the cultural, historical and legal knowledge that will enable the provision of legal services in a manner that supports Indigenous peoples in addressing their unique interests, issues and challenges.
13. The Law Society prioritizes life-long competence for lawyers and paralegals. The Treasurer's Memorandum to the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee further contextualizes this priority, and directs the EIAC to develop programs that will enhance cultural competence internally to the Law Society (staff, Benchers) and the profession (licensees) in dealings with Indigenous peoples.<sup>10</sup>
14. Specific proposed approaches towards supporting cultural competency are detailed in the Approaches for the Law Society of Upper Canada's Responses to the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada Final Report and include knowledge enhancements, working with the Federation of Law Societies of Canada and developing skills-based training and other supports.

I. Creating and Enhancing Knowledge

- a. Ensure Law Society staff and Benchers have the opportunity to access cultural competency training within the Law Society that includes unconscious bias, the history and legacy of residential schools, the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, Treaties and Aboriginal rights, Indigenous laws, Aboriginal-Crown relations and basic cultural protocols.
- b. Ensure licensees have the opportunity to access cultural competency training that includes the history and legacy of residential schools, the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, Treaties and Aboriginal rights, Indigenous laws, and Aboriginal-Crown relations and basic cultural protocols.
- c. Ensure licensees that are required by their employment to engage directly with the Indigenous people of Ontario, undertake cultural competency training

<sup>9</sup> To be clear, the language of inter-cultural "competency" comes from the Truth and Reconciliation Calls to Action. In applying the term within this Framework, the IAG is not asking everyone to adopt the cultural practices that are unique to the Indigenous peoples of Ontario, rather, to gain knowledge of and respect for each Indigenous person's right to maintain justice in their own way. The IAG will further develop what is the intended meaning within this Framework and include examination of systemic barriers and anti-racism measures.

<sup>10</sup> Convocation's 2015-2019 Strategic Plan prioritizes life-long competence for lawyers and paralegals. Priorities include enhancing licensing standards, improving and increasing practice supports and considering education beyond traditional Continuing Professional Development formats (e.g. possible multiple-day courses including practical application of knowledge and skills), and working with the professions to develop initiatives that institutionalize mentoring, advisory services and other types of support.

Convocation - Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee/Comité sur l'équité et les affaires autochtones Report

which includes the history of residential schools, the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, Treaties and Aboriginal rights, Indigenous laws, and Aboriginal-Crown relations and basic cultural protocols.

- d. Work with Deans, law faculty and students of Ontario Law Schools and colleges (paralegal education) to enhance their knowledge of a range of subjects, including but not limited to the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, Treaties and Aboriginal rights, Indigenous laws and Aboriginal-Crown relations.
- e. Develop and offer Continuing Professional Development (CPD) programs and legal education sessions independently and in collaboration with partners to illustrate the relevance of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples in Ontario and its relevance to various practice areas.

II. Working with Partners

- a. Participate with other Law Societies in Canada and the Federation of Law Societies in examining whether changes can be made to the National Standards and other licensing requirements to enhance knowledge of a range of subjects, including but not limited to the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, Treaties and Aboriginal rights, Indigenous laws and Aboriginal-Crown relations.
- b. In partnership with the Indigenous Bar Association, examine the codes of professional conduct and the commentaries as well as the Federation Model Code to explore changes, where necessary, to promote reconciliation and culturally competent provision of legal services.
- c. Engage with other legal associations, advocates and professional entities in Ontario to further educate, consult and inform.

III. Developing Skills-Based Training and Other Supports

- a. Support, develop and offer independently and/or in partnership with other providers, skills-based training and practice supports in inter-cultural competency, conflict resolution, human rights and anti-racism.
- b. Support Deans, law faculty and students of Law Schools and Colleges in Ontario regarding how skills-based training in inter-cultural competency, conflict resolution, human rights, and anti-racism can be introduced into experiential learning in Law Schools and Colleges.
- c. Support the Law Society's Equity Legal Education programs—developed, as appropriate, in partnership with Deans, faculty and students of Law Schools as well as Indigenous knowledge keepers, practitioners, organizations and others—to address the legacy of the Indian Residential School experience and Canada's colonialist law and policy, Treaty and Aboriginal Rights, the meaning of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples and current initiatives of First Nations, Métis and Inuit peoples.

ACHIEVING AND IMPROVING ACCESS TO JUSTICE

15. The Law Society will work with the IAG recognizing that achieving and enhancing Access to Justice across Ontario is a key priority of the Law Society. It identifies strategic goals towards increasing collaboration with access to justice partners and other stakeholders as well as developing and implementing a more concrete access to justice action plan.
16. Additional priorities in the Strategic Plan, including engaging stakeholders and the public with responsive communications and increasing organizational effectiveness, will also support enhancing access to justice.
17. An important element of achieving and improving access to justice will be the review and improvement of the Mentoring and Networking Program to ensure it continues to deliver the objectives called for in 2009 by the Final Report of the Indigenous Bar Consultation.
18. The Treasurer's Memo provides further direction on specific priorities in relation to improving access to justice for Indigenous peoples, including improving access to the complaints process for Indigenous communities.
19. Improve the Law Society's hearing and regulatory process, including the Tribunal, in every interaction with Indigenous people.
20. Engage with the Law Society's Legal Aid Working Group to examine and improve the delivery of legal aid to Indigenous people community and address the financial barriers that prohibit meaningful access to justice.
21. Provide support for the National Inquiry into Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls (MMIWG), including:
  - a. Further support for Inquiry processes
  - b. Develop communication materials to promote awareness and access to justice, published in English, French and Indigenous languages.
  - c. Commit to address Inquiry recommendations.
22. Contribute to the elimination of the overrepresentation of Indigenous people in legal proceedings, care and incarceration through a number of channels:
  - a. Supporting the implementation of the recommendations of the Debwewin Implementation Committee's Final Report and Feathers of Hope.
  - b. Considering the results of TAG's cluster on "the Seventh Generation – the Crisis of Aboriginal Children and Youth in Care".

Convocation - Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee/Comité sur l'équité et les affaires autochtones Report

- c. Considering, as a justice system stakeholder, actions the Law Society can take and what collaborative opportunities exist with other stakeholders to promote alternatives to community sanctions, mandatory minimum sentences, bail procedural and supporting culturally appropriate services to reduce domestic violence, dispute resolution mechanisms, Aboriginal healing lodges and halfway homes.
- d. Undertaking a study on barriers to access to justice in Northern Ontario, including the efficacy and standardization of the preparation of Gladue Reports (across all of Ontario).
- e. Expanding the Guidelines for Lawyers Representing Residential School Claimants to other areas within the Law Society's regulatory scope.

PROMOTING AND SUPPORTING KNOWLEDGE OF INDIGENOUS LEGAL SYSTEMS

23. The Law Society will work with the IAG recognizing that knowledge of Indigenous legal systems is an essential as part of the Law Society's commitment to prioritizing life-long competence and enhancing access to justice for Indigenous peoples. The promotion and support of knowledge of Indigenous legal systems can include:

- a. In response to Call to Action 50, support "the establishment of Indigenous Law institutes for the development, use and understanding of Indigenous laws and access to justice in accordance with the unique characteristics of Aboriginal peoples in Canada."
- b. Develop and offer Continuing Professional Development (CPD) programs and legal education sessions independently and with partners to support understanding, respect for and application of Indigenous legal systems in Ontario.
- c. Develop and enhance services available to licensees, including practice supports and learning resources that could provide guidance on Indigenous justice issues, including but not limited to the application of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, Treaties and Aboriginal Rights, and the MMIWG.
- d. Enhance the Law Society's Lawyer Referral Program and Mentorship to provide support and guidance on Indigenous justice issues.
- e. Enhance the Member Assistance Program to provide for the well-being of Indigenous licensees in ways that promote and support Indigenous, traditional healing methods.
- f. Enhance supports for small and solo firm practices within the Indigenous community (i.e. mentoring).

TAKING ACTION ON RECONCILIATION

24. The Law Society recognizes that it will work in partnership with the IAG and be guided by Indigenous knowledge keepers, leaders and citizens, Indigenous practitioners and others, in the development of the Law Society's responses to the Final Report of the Truth and Reconciliation's Calls to Action.
25. The Law Society's priority to engage with stakeholders and the public with responsive communications will support strengthened relationships with Indigenous and non-Indigenous licensees and members of the public, as well as build greater awareness of the Law Society's role in the reconciliation process.
26. Specific proposed actions related to reconciliation are outlined in the TRC Responses document and include:
  - a. A statement of support for the adoption and implementation of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples as a framework for reconciliation.
  - b. A commitment to actively consider opportunities to collaborate with partners, including legal and professional entities in Ontario to extend the impact of the responses the Law Society undertakes and explore how the Law Society can support the work of partners in advancing reconciliation.
  - c. Examine, in partnership with the Indigenous Bar Association, the codes of professional conduct and the commentaries as well as the Federation Model Code to consider changes to promote reconciliation and culturally competent service delivery.

Background

37. Sushila Karki is the first female Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Nepal. She is known for her zero-tolerance stance on corruption in the judiciary and has been instrumental in a number of high-profile and politically sensitive decisions. Recent rulings by the Supreme Court, with Sushila Karki as its Chief Justice, have been critical in advancing human rights in Nepal, assisting victims seeking justice for the crimes and serious human rights violations committed against them.
38. On April 30, 2017, the two main parties in the ruling coalition government brought an impeachment motion against Chief Justice Sushila Karki, resulting in her automatic suspension. The motion, which came on the heels of the Supreme Court's decision to overturn the Nepalese government's choice for Chief of Police,<sup>7</sup> accuses the Chief Justice of delivering biased verdicts,<sup>8</sup> interfering in the executive's jurisdiction, breaching the principle of separation of powers, influencing her fellow justices, and failing to fulfill her judicial duties.
39. On May 5, 2017, the Supreme Court issued an interim order directing Parliament to halt impeachment proceedings against Chief Justice Sushila Karki and to allow her to return to her duties. In making the order, the Supreme Court opined that the allegations against the Chief Justice were baseless and that the commencement of impeachment proceedings against her would be at odds with the spirit of Nepal's Constitution. Relatedly, the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights has stated that "the attempt to remove [Chief Justice Sushila Karki] gives rise to serious concerns about the Government [of Nepal]'s commitment to transitional justice and the rule of law".

Convocation - Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee/Comité sur l'équité et les affaires autochtones Report

40. Nepal has a history of political interference in key civil appointments such as the Chief of Police. Since the end of the civil war in 2006, the country has had nine governments, each of which sought to fill key positions with their respective loyalists. According to her supporters, Chief Justice Sushila Karki is a staunch opponent of such corruption and that her tough stance on this issue “annoyed the politicians”.

TAJIKISTAN – TRAVEL BAN AGAINST LAWYER FAYZINISSO VOHIDOVA

Sources of Information

41. The background information for this report was retrieved from the following sources:
- a. Amnesty International; and<sup>9</sup>
  - b. Human Rights Watch.<sup>10</sup>

Background

42. Fayzinisso Vohidova is a Khujand-based lawyer known for her human rights and criminal defence work in politically sensitive cases. As a result of her professional activities, she has long been the target of government harassment. Since July 2015, she has endured surveillance and intimidation. In early 2016, she received credible information that law enforcement officials had initiated a criminal investigation against her.
43. Most recently, on May 14, 2017, border guards with the State Committee on State Security prevented Fayzinisso Vohidova from traveling to Kyrgyzstan. They detained her for eight hours, stating that there was a “defect” in her passport and that she “had no right to leave Tajikistan”. Eventually, the border guards conceded that Fayzinisso Vohidova had been placed on a list of individuals banned from leaving the country. Travel bans cannot be appealed. It should be noted that in the weeks that preceded this incident, Fayzinisso Vohidova had been interrogated several times by Tajik security services.
44. Human rights organizations believe that these latest acts of harassment against Fayzinisso Vohidova are related to the critical remarks she made about the imprisonment of two Tajik human rights lawyers, Buzurgmehr Yorov and Nuriddin Makhkamov. In April 2017, she had publicly appealed to President Emomali Rahmon through social media, criticizing the government’s imprisonment of Yorov and Makhkamov, both of whom were convicted and sentenced in October 2016 following a prosecution and trial that appeared to be politically motivated. The Law Society intervened on behalf of Buzurgmehr Yorov in February 2016 and January 2017, and on behalf of Nuriddin Makhkamov in January 2017.

Broader Issues Regarding Lawyers in Tajikistan

45. Over the last three years, defence lawyers in Tajikistan who have taken up politically sensitive cases or cases related to national security and counter-terrorism have faced increasing harassment, intimidation and pressure as a result of their legitimate professional activities. In some cases, lawyers have been subjected to punitive arrest, criminal prosecution on national security-related or politically-motivated charges, and sentenced to long prison terms following unfair trials. Some lawyers have fled the country to avoid such persecution. Meanwhile, their families have also been targeted, harassed and threatened with reprisals by security forces and local authorities.
46. Arbitrary arrests of human rights lawyers, their prosecutions on politically-motivated charges, harsh prison sentences and the harassment of their families have served as deterrents for anyone daring to defend the fundamental rights of those willing or perceived to challenge the authority of the president and the government. Most notably, defending arrested lawyers has become increasingly risky for other lawyers. Few have been prepared to take up this role because of the associated risks, and some of those who have have faced harassment and threats as a result.
47. Amendments to legislation which concerns the regulation of the legal profession in Tajikistan (Law on Advokatura) have been instrumental in reducing the number of licensed lawyers by more than half and further restricting the already limited access to justice for Tajikistani citizens. Prominent lawyers and domestic and international experts and NGOs have expressed concern that some of the amending provisions (introduced in November 2015) threaten the independence of the legal profession and jeopardize access to legal services by: 1) bringing control over the licensing of lawyers firmly back into the hands of the executive branch of government, specifically the Ministry of Justice; 2) mandating that the deciding vote on who qualifies as a lawyer be held by a Deputy Minister of Justice; and 3) forcing all lawyers to pass the new qualification exams by the end of March 2016 or lose their licence to practice. As of May 2017, only about half of the previously licensed lawyers had successfully requalified under the new regulatory regime. Tajikistan now has approximately 600 lawyers (a significant decrease from over 1200 in 2015) for a population of over eight million, a ratio of approximately one lawyer per 13,000 inhabitants.

Convocation - Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee/Comité sur l'équité et les affaires autochtones Report

- a. Amnesty International; and<sup>11</sup>
- b. RadioFreeEurope / RadioLiberty.<sup>12</sup>

Background

49. In October 2015 and again in September 2016, human rights lawyer Muazzamakhon Kadirova agreed, at great risk to herself and her family, to act as defence counsel for fellow lawyers Buzurgmehr Yorov and Nuriddin Makhkamov. The Law Society intervened on behalf of Buzurgmehr Yorov in February 2016 and January 2017, and on behalf of Nuriddin Makhkamov in January 2017.
50. Due to the fact that the trials of Buzurgmehr Yorov and Nuriddin Makhkamov were conducted behind closed doors, Muazzamakhon Kadirova was effectively the only link between them, their families and the wider public. She told journalists and other activists that the prosecution had not been able to present any compelling evidence against her clients and that the trials were clearly politically motivated.
51. As the trials progressed, Muazzamakhon Kadirova became increasingly aware of the risks associated with representing Buzurgmehr Yorov and Nuriddin Makhkamov; by November 2016, she was concerned about her safety and possible reprisals from Tajikistani authorities. On December 27, 2016, Muazzamakhon Kadirova was summoned to the Prosecutor General's Office and questioned about her professional activities for several hours. In the days that followed her questioning, she noticed that she was under surveillance.
52. In January 2017, Muazzamakhon Kadirova learned from a confidential source that a criminal case was being prepared against her. Fearing for her safety and concerned that she could be arrested at any time, Muazzamakhon Kadirova fled Tajikistan and sought protection abroad. In March 2017, she told journalists that Tajikistani authorities had threatened to launch a criminal case against her, accusing her of leaking confidential information about Buzurgmehr Yorov's case to foreign media. As of March 29, 2017, she is seeking refuge in Germany and has applied for political asylum there.

Background

55. The Law Society previously intervened on behalf of Buzurgmehr Yorov in February 2016<sup>17</sup> and January 2017.<sup>18</sup>
56. Several developments have taken place since the Law Society's last intervention. In February 2017, the Supreme Court of Tajikistan rejected Buzurgmehr Yorov's appeal, upholding his conviction and the accompanying 23-year prison term. That same month, additional charges of fraud were brought against Buzurgmehr Yorov. Alleged to be based on new complaints made against him by members of the public, these charges carry a sentence of up to 12 years in prison.
57. On March 16, 2017, the Supreme Court of Tajikistan found Buzurgmehr Yorov guilty of contempt and "insulting government officials", and added an additional two years to his sentence (for a total of 25 years). The hearing into these charges opened on December 12, 2016 after authorities accused him of disrespecting the court and insulting government officials by quoting a celebrated 11th century poet in his closing statement to the Dushanbe City Court during his original trial.
58. As of May 2017, yet another criminal case is pending against Buzurgmehr Yorov. This new charge of "insulting the leader of the Nation" apparently stems from statements he made in court in response to the aforementioned fraud charges. According to his wife Zarina

Convocation - Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee/Comité sur l'équité et les affaires autochtones Report

Nabieva, Buzurgmehr Yorov had told the court that, as a lawyer, he had always operated within the country's legal framework. Given that this legal framework had been approved by the president of Tajikistan, he argued that if he was guilty of fraud, then so was everyone else in the country, including the president. The subsequent publication of this statement on the independent news website Payom.net apparently served as the grounds upon which the criminal charge was advanced.

59. Buzurgmehr Yorov's family has been unable to find an independent lawyer willing to represent him in court. Consequently, his wife Zarina Nabieva has taken on his legal defence.

62. Michel Togué is a human rights lawyer who defends clients charged with homosexuality in Cameroon, where consensual same-sex conduct is criminalized and subject to a maximum prison sentence of five years. In March 2017, he was awarded the Dutch Geuzenpenning Award for his work and advocacy on behalf of the LGBT community in his country.
63. In early 2017, Michel Togué received multiple death threats as a result of his legal work on behalf of individuals who identify as LGBT. Reports indicate that when he subsequently approached Cameroon's Lawyer's Association for assistance, its president advised Michel Togué: "Stop defending the LGBT community and you won't have problems anymore." Similarly, his request for protection was denied by Cameroonian police.

Interventions

70. An extensive Access to Justice document was prepared in October 2014 and presented to Convocation entitled Facilitating International Access to Justice Through Intervention. An updated report was provided to Convocation in January 2017. It will now be kept as a living document that is continually updated each time the Law Society intervenes.
71. The Monitoring Group has also prepared two different lists which will be updated when the Law Society intervenes in a case. The lists are organized by country and by the name of the person on whose behalf the Law Society has intervened. The intent of these lists is to ensure that the Monitoring Group can easily and quickly determine if the Law Society has previously intervened in the country or on behalf of the individual or group.

Convocation - Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee/Comité sur l'équité et les affaires autochtones Report

72. In an effort to standardize the language for interventions, the Monitoring Group has prepared a document that contains suggested wording for its interventions to ensure that it is consistent across its interventions.
73. The Monitoring Group continues to bring forward interventions in cases of lawyers and judges who face human rights violations as result of their legal work.

Outreach to National and International Partners

74. To ensure that the Monitoring Group understands the work of our national and international partners, it has invited guests to attend its meetings. This process has been very rewarding, informative and validating for the work of the Monitoring Group. It is in the process of collating its notes of these meetings into one document so that going forward, starting in September 2017, it will have substantive discussion about how to expand its role within the mandate and also collaborate with its partners.
75. Speakers to date have been:
- November 10, 2016 - Andrew Guaglio, Board Member, Lawyers' Rights Watch Canada
  - January 12, 2017 - Marina Brilman, International Human Rights Policy Adviser, International Department The Law Society of England and Wales
  - February 9, 2017 - Alex Neve, Secretary General, Amnesty International
  - April 6, 2017 - Judith Lichtenberg, Board Member, Lawyers for Lawyers
  - June 8, 2017 – Farida Deif, Canada Director, Human Rights Watch

Human Rights Award

76. The Law Society presented the second Human Rights Award to Dr. Cindy Blackstock and Waleed Abu al-Khair. The Awards lunch was very moving and the ceremony was very powerful. The Award reinforces the Law Society's commitment to protecting human rights.

Looking forward to 2017-2018

77. For 2017-2018, the Monitoring Group intends to focus on the following:
- Finalizing the standardized intervention document
  - Reviewing how to expand its role within the mandate
  - Increasing collaboration with national and international partners
  - Continuing to intervene in cases
  - Continuing to promote human rights through education and outreach.

Your Excellency:

Re: Impeachment proceedings against Chief Justice Sushila Karki

I write on behalf of the Law Society of Upper Canada* to voice our grave concern over the impeachment proceedings against Chief Justice Sushila Karki. When serious issues of apparent injustice to lawyers and the judiciary come to our attention, we speak out.

Sushila Karki is the first female Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Nepal. She is known for her zero-tolerance stance on corruption in the judiciary and has been instrumental in a number of high-profile and politically sensitive decisions. Recent rulings by the Supreme Court, with Sushila Karki as its Chief Justice, have been critical in advancing human rights in Nepal, assisting victims seeking justice for the crimes and serious human rights violations committed against them.

It has come to the Law Society's attention that on April 30, 2017, the two main parties in the ruling coalition government brought an impeachment motion against Chief Justice Sushila Karki, resulting in her automatic suspension. The motion, which came on the heels of the Supreme Court's decision to overturn the Nepalese government's choice for Chief of Police, accuses the Chief Justice of delivering biased verdicts, interfering in the executive's jurisdiction, breaching the principle of separation of powers, influencing her fellow justices, and failing to fulfill her judicial duties.

On May 5, 2017, the Supreme Court issued an interim order directing Parliament to halt impeachment proceedings against Chief Justice Sushila Karki and to allow her to return to her duties. In making the order, the Supreme Court opined that the allegations against the Chief Justice were baseless and that the commencement of impeachment proceedings against her would be at odds with the spirit of Nepal's Constitution. Relatedly, the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights has stated that "the attempt to remove [Chief Justice Sushila Karki] gives rise to serious concerns about the Government [of Nepal]'s commitment to transitional justice and the rule of law”.

Nepal has a history of political interference in key civil appointments such as the Chief of Police. Since the end of the civil war in 2006, the country has had nine governments, each of which sought to fill key positions with their respective loyalists. According to her supporters, Chief Justice Sushila Karki is a staunch opponent of such corruption and that her tough stance on this issue “annoyed the politicians”.

In light of these circumstances, the Law Society urges Your Excellency to comply with Nepal's obligations under international human rights laws, including the United Nations' Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary.

Articles 1 to 6 of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary state:

1. The independence of the judiciary shall be guaranteed by the State and enshrined in the Constitution or the law of the country. It is the duty of all governmental and other institutions to respect and observe the independence of the judiciary.
2. The judiciary shall decide matters before them impartially, on the basis of facts and in accordance with the law, without any restrictions, improper influences, inducements, pressures, threats or interferences, direct or indirect, from any quarter or for any reason.
3. The judiciary shall have jurisdiction over all issues of a judicial nature and shall have exclusive authority to decide whether an issue submitted for its decision is within its competence as defined by law.
4. There shall not be any inappropriate or unwarranted interference with the judicial process, nor shall judicial decisions by the courts be subject to revision. This principle is without prejudice to judicial review or to mitigation or commutation by competent authorities of sentences imposed by the judiciary, in accordance with the law.
5. Everyone shall have the right to be tried by ordinary courts or tribunals using established legal procedures. Tribunals that do not use the duly established procedures of the legal process shall not be created to displace the jurisdiction belonging to the ordinary courts or judicial tribunals.
6. The principle of the independence of the judiciary entitles and requires the judiciary to ensure that judicial proceedings are conducted fairly and that the rights of the parties are respected.

Convocation - Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee/Comité sur l'équité et les affaires autochtones Report

The Law Society urges the Government of Nepal to:

- a. immediately and unconditionally discontinue the impeachment proceedings against Chief Justice Sushila Karki, if this has not already occurred;
- b. immediately and unconditionally lift the interim suspension imposed on Chief Justice Sushila Karki so that she may return to her judicial duties and activities, if this has not already occurred;
- c. put an end to all acts of harassment against Chief Justice Sushila Karki and all other judges in Nepal;
- d. guarantee in all circumstances the physical and psychological integrity of Chief Justice Sushila Karki;
- e. ensure that all judges in Nepal can carry out their judicial duties and activities without fear of reprisals, physical violence or other human rights violations; and
- f. ensure in all circumstances respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in accordance with international human rights standards and international instruments.

H.E. Emomali Rahmon
President of the Republic of Tajikistan

Republic of Tajikistan

Your Excellency:

Re: Travel ban against lawyer Fayzinisso Vohidova

I write on behalf of the Law Society of Upper Canada* to voice our grave concern over the travel ban against lawyer Fayzinisso Vohidova. When serious issues of apparent injustice to lawyers and the judiciary come to our attention, we speak out.

Fayzinisso Vohidova is a Khujand-based lawyer known for her human rights and criminal defence work in politically sensitive cases. As a result of her professional activities, she has long been the target of government harassment. Since July 2015, she has endured surveillance and intimidation. In early 2016, she received credible information that law enforcement officials had initiated a criminal investigation against her.

It has come to the Law Society's attention that on May 14, 2017, border guards with the State Committee on State Security prevented Fayzinisso Vohidova from traveling to Kyrgyzstan. They detained her for eight hours, stating that there was a "defect" in her passport and that she "had no right to leave Tajikistan". Eventually, the border guards conceded that Fayzinisso Vohidova had been placed on a list of individuals banned from leaving the country. Arbitrary bans on travel violate article 12(2) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR), which guarantees every individual the right to leave any country, including his or her own. Tajikistan became a party to the ICCPR in 1999.

According to information received by the Law Society, in the weeks that preceded the above-mentioned incident, Fayzinisso Vohidova had been interrogated multiple times by Tajik security services. Human rights organizations believe that these latest acts of harassment against Fayzinisso Vohidova are related to the critical remarks she made about the imprisonment of two Tajik human rights lawyers, Buzurgmehr Yorov and Nuriddin Makhkamov. In April 2017, she had publicly appealed to Your Excellency through social media, criticizing the government's imprisonment of Yorov and Makhkamov, both of whom were convicted and sentenced in October 2016 following a prosecution and trial that appeared to be politically motivated. The

Law Society intervened on behalf of Buzurgmehr Yorov in February 2016 and January 2017, and on behalf of Nuriddin Makhkamov in January 2017.

The Law Society of Upper Canada is deeply troubled by Fayzinisso Vohidova's situation, particularly in light of reports that repressive tactics are commonly used by Your Excellency's government to intimidate and silence lawyers in Tajikistan, effectively precluding their legitimate professional activities. Arbitrary arrests of human rights lawyers, their prosecutions on politically-motivated charges, harsh prison sentences and the harassment of their families have served as deterrents for anyone daring to defend the fundamental rights of those willing or perceived to challenge the authority of Your Excellency's government. Most notably, defending arrested lawyers has become increasingly risky for other lawyers. This and other government actions (for example, legislative amendments regarding the licensing of lawyers which were introduced in November 2015) have led to a dramatic decrease in the number of licensed lawyers in Tajikistan over the last two years (from more than 1200 in 2015 to just 600 today).

In light of the foregoing, the Law Society urges Your Excellency to comply with Tajikistan's obligations under international human rights laws, including the United Nations' Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers.

Article 16 of the Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers states:

Governments shall ensure that lawyers (a) are able to perform all of their professional functions without intimidation, hindrance, harassment or improper interference; (b) are able to travel and to consult with their clients freely both within their own country and abroad; and (c) shall not suffer, or be threatened with, prosecution or administrative, economics or other sanctions for any action taken in accordance with recognized professional duties, standards and ethics.

Article 17 states:

Where the security of lawyers is threatened as a result of discharging their functions, they shall be adequately safeguarded by the authorities.

Article 18 states:

Lawyers shall not be identified with their clients or their clients' causes as a result of discharging their functions.

Furthermore, Article 23 provides:

Lawyers like other citizens are entitled to freedom of expression, belief, association and assembly. In particular, they shall have the right to take part in public discussion of matters concerning the law, the administration of justice and the promotion and protection of human rights and to join or form local, national or international organizations and attend their meetings, without suffering professional restrictions by reason of their lawful action or their membership in a lawful organization.

The Law Society urges the Government of Tajikistan to:

- a. immediately and unconditionally lift all restrictions on Fayzinisso Vohidova's freedom of movement;
- b. put an end to all acts of harassment against Fayzinisso Vohidova and all other lawyers in Tajikistan;
- c. guarantee in all circumstances the physical and psychological integrity of Fayzinisso Vohidova;
- d. ensure that all lawyers in Tajikistan can carry out their professional duties and activities without fear of reprisals, physical violence or other human rights violations; and
- e. ensure in all circumstances respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in accordance with international human rights standards and international instruments.

MUZZAMAKHON KADIROVA (MUZZAMA QODIROVA)

H.E. Emomali Rahmon
President of the Republic of Tajikistan
Rudaki Avenue, 80
Dushanbe 734023
Republic of Tajikistan

Your Excellency:

Re: Harassment of lawyer Muzzamakhon Kadirova (Muzzama Qodirova)

I write on behalf of the Law Society of Upper Canada* to voice our grave concern over the harassment of lawyer Muzzamakhon Kadirova (Muzzama Qodirova). When serious issues of apparent injustice to lawyers and the judiciary come to our attention, we speak out.

It has come to the Law Society's attention that in October 2015 and again in September 2016, human rights lawyer Muzzamakhon Kadirova agreed, at great risk to herself and her family, to act as defence counsel for fellow lawyers Buzurgmehr Yorov and Nuriddin Makhkamov. The Law Society intervened on behalf of Buzurgmehr Yorov in February 2016 and January 2017, and on behalf of Nuriddin Makhkamov in January 2017.

Due to the fact that the trials of Buzurgmehr Yorov and Nuriddin Makhkamov were conducted behind closed doors, Muzzamakhon Kadirova was effectively the only link between them, their families and the wider public. She told journalists and other activists that the prosecution had not been able to present any compelling evidence against her clients and that the trials were clearly politically motivated.

As the trials progressed, Muzzamakhon Kadirova became increasingly aware of the risks associated with representing Buzurgmehr Yorov and Nuriddin Makhkamov; by November 2016, she was concerned about her safety and possible reprisals from Tajikistani authorities. On December 27, 2016, Muzzamakhon Kadirova was summoned to the Prosecutor General's Office and questioned about her professional activities for several hours. In the days that followed her questioning, she noticed that she was under surveillance.

In January 2017, Muzzamakhon Kadirova learned from a confidential source that a criminal case was being prepared against her. Fearing for her safety and concerned that she could be arrested at any time, Muzzamakhon Kadirova fled Tajikistan and sought protection abroad. In March 2017, she told journalists that Tajikistani authorities had threatened to launch a criminal case against her, accusing her of leaking confidential information about Buzurgmehr Yorov's case to foreign media. As of March 29, 2017, she is seeking refuge in Germany and has applied for political asylum there.

The Law Society of Upper Canada is deeply troubled by Muazzamakhon Kadirova's situation, particularly in light of reports that repressive tactics are commonly used by Your Excellency's government to intimidate and silence lawyers in Tajikistan, effectively precluding their legitimate professional activities. Arbitrary arrests of human rights lawyers, their prosecutions on politically-motivated charges, harsh prison sentences and the harassment of their families have served as deterrents for anyone daring to defend the fundamental rights of those willing or perceived to challenge the authority of Your Excellency's government. Most notably, defending arrested lawyers has become increasingly risky for other lawyers. This and other government actions (for example, legislative amendments regarding the licensing of lawyers which were introduced in November 2015) have led to a dramatic decrease in the number of licensed lawyers in Tajikistan over the last two years (from more than 1200 in 2015 to just 600 today).

In light of the foregoing, the Law Society urges Your Excellency to comply with Tajikistan's obligations under international human rights laws, including the United Nations' Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers.

Article 16 of the Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers states:

Governments shall ensure that lawyers (a) are able to perform all of their professional functions without intimidation, hindrance, harassment or improper interference; (b) are able to travel and to consult with their clients freely both within their own country and abroad; and (c) shall not suffer, or be threatened with, prosecution or administrative, economics or other sanctions for any action taken in accordance with recognized professional duties, standards and ethics.

Article 17 states:

Where the security of lawyers is threatened as a result of discharging their functions, they shall be adequately safeguarded by the authorities.

Article 18 states:

Lawyers shall not be identified with their clients or their clients' causes as a result of discharging their functions.

Furthermore, Article 23 provides:

Lawyers like other citizens are entitled to freedom of expression, belief, association and assembly. In particular, they shall have the right to take part in public discussion of matters concerning the law, the administration of justice and the promotion and protection of human rights and to join or form local, national or international organizations and attend their meetings, without suffering professional restrictions by reason of their lawful action or their membership in a lawful organization.

The Law Society urges the Government of Tajikistan to:

- a. immediately and unconditionally cease the preparation of a criminal case against Muazzamakhon Kadirova;
- b. put an end to all acts of harassment against Muazzamakhon Kadirova and all other lawyers in Tajikistan;
- c. guarantee in all circumstances the physical and psychological integrity of Muazzamakhon Kadirova;
- d. ensure that all lawyers in Tajikistan can carry out their professional duties and activities without fear of reprisals, physical violence or other human rights violations; and
- e. ensure in all circumstances respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in accordance with international human rights standards and international instruments.

BUZURGMEHR YOROV

H.E. Emomali Rahmon
President of the Republic of Tajikistan
Rudaki Avenue, 80
Dushanbe 734023
Republic of Tajikistan

Your Excellency:

Re: Conviction and pending charges against lawyer Buzurgmehr Yorov

I write on behalf of the Law Society of Upper Canada* to voice our grave concern over the conviction and pending charges against lawyer Buzurgmehr Yorov. When serious issues of apparent injustice to lawyers and the judiciary come to our attention, we speak out.

The Law Society first intervened on behalf of Buzurgmehr Yorov in February 2016 and again in January 2017. It has come to the Law Society's attention that several developments have taken place since its last intervention. In February 2017, the Supreme Court of Tajikistan rejected Buzurgmehr Yorov's appeal, upholding his conviction and the accompanying 23-year prison term. That same month, additional charges of fraud were brought against Buzurgmehr Yorov. Alleged to be based on new complaints made against him by members of the public, these charges carry a sentence of up to 12 years in prison.

On March 16, 2017, the Supreme Court of Tajikistan found Buzurgmehr Yorov guilty of contempt and "insulting government officials", and added an additional two years to his sentence (for a total of 25 years). The hearing into these charges opened on December 12, 2016 after authorities accused him of disrespecting the court and insulting government officials by quoting a celebrated 11th century poet in his closing statement to the Dushanbe City Court during his original trial.

As of May 2017, yet another criminal case is pending against Buzurgmehr Yorov. This new charge of "insulting the leader of the Nation" apparently stems from statements he made in court in response to the aforementioned fraud charges. According to his wife Zarina Nabieva, Buzurgmehr Yorov had told the court that, as a lawyer, he had always operated within the country's legal framework. Given that this legal framework had been approved by the president of Tajikistan, he argued that if he was guilty of fraud, then so was everyone else in the country, including the president. The subsequent publication of this statement on the independent news website Payom.net apparently served as the grounds upon which the criminal charge was advanced.

Further compounding Buzurgmehr Yorov's situation is the fact that his family has been unable to find an independent lawyer willing to represent him in court. Consequently, his wife Zarina Nabieva has taken on his legal defence.

The Law Society of Upper Canada is deeply troubled by Buzurgmehr Yorov's situation, particularly in light of reports that repressive tactics are commonly used by Your Excellency's government to intimidate and silence lawyers in Tajikistan, effectively precluding their legitimate professional activities. Arbitrary arrests of human rights lawyers, their prosecutions on politically-motivated charges, harsh prison sentences and the harassment of their families have served as deterrents for anyone daring to defend the fundamental rights of those willing or perceived to challenge the authority of Your Excellency's government. Most notably, defending arrested lawyers has become increasingly risky for other lawyers. The Law Society urges the Government of Tajikistan to:

- a. immediately and unconditionally release Buzurgmehr Yorov;
- b. pending his release, ensure that Buzurgmehr Yorov is detained in an official place of detention; is not subjected to torture or other ill-treatment; and has regular, unrestricted access to his family, lawyer(s) of his choice, and medical care on request or as necessary;
- c. immediately and unconditionally vacate the convictions rendered against Buzurgmehr Yorov;

PROPOSED LETTERS OF INTERVENTION AND PUBLIC STATEMENT

MICHEL TOGUÉ

H.E. Paul Biya
President of the Republic of Cameroon
Presidency of the Republic
Civil Cabinet Communication Unit
E-mail: cellcom@prc.cm

Your Excellency:

Re: Harassment and intimidation of lawyer Michel Togué

I write on behalf of the Law Society of Upper Canada* to voice our grave concern over the harassment and intimidation of lawyer Michel Togué. When serious issues of apparent injustice to lawyers and the judiciary come to our attention, we speak out.

Michel Togué is a human rights lawyer who defends clients charged with homosexuality in Cameroon, where consensual same-sex conduct is criminalized and subject to a maximum prison sentence of five years. In March 2017, he was awarded the Dutch Geuzenpenning Award for his work and advocacy on behalf of the LGBT community in his country.

It has come to the Law Society's attention that in early 2017, Michel Togué received multiple death threats as a result of his legal work on behalf of individuals who identify as LGBT. Reports indicate that when he subsequently approached Cameroon's Lawyer's Association for assistance, its president advised Michel Togué: "Stop defending the LGBT community and you won't have problems anymore." Similarly, his request for protection was denied by Cameroonian police.

Michel Togué, along with his wife and children, first began receiving death threats in the form of emails and text messages in October 2012. As the death threats against him and his family escalated, his wife and children sought asylum in the United States. Michel Togué, however, chose to remain in Cameroon to continue his work with the LGBT community.

In light of these circumstances, the Law Society urges Your Excellency to comply with Cameroon's obligations under international human rights laws, including the United Nations' Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers.

Article 16 of the Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers states:

Convocation - Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee/Comité sur l'équité et les affaires autochtones Report

Governments shall ensure that lawyers (a) are able to perform all of their professional functions without intimidation, hindrance, harassment or improper interference; (b) are able to travel and to consult with their clients freely both within their own country and abroad; and (c) shall not suffer, or be threatened with, prosecution or administrative, economics or other sanctions for any action taken in accordance with recognized professional duties, standards and ethics.

Article 17 states:

Where the security of lawyers is threatened as a result of discharging their functions, they shall be adequately safeguarded by the authorities.

Article 18 states:

Lawyers shall not be identified with their clients or their clients' causes as a result of discharging their functions.

Furthermore, Article 23 provides:

Lawyers like other citizens are entitled to freedom of expression, belief, association and assembly. In particular, they shall have the right to take part in public discussion of matters concerning the law, the administration of justice and the promotion and protection of human rights and to join or form local, national or international organizations and attend their meetings, without suffering professional restrictions by reason of their lawful action or their membership in a lawful organization.

The Law Society urges the Government of Cameroon to:

- a. immediately conduct a fair, impartial and independent investigation into the harassment and intimidation of Michel Togué in order to identify all those responsible, bring them to trial and apply to them civil, penal and/or administrative sanctions provided by law;
- b. put an end to all acts of harassment against Michel Togué and all other lawyers in Cameroon;
- c. guarantee in all circumstances the physical and psychological integrity of Michel Togué;
- d. ensure that all lawyers in Cameroon can carry out their professional duties and activities without fear of reprisals, physical violence or other human rights violations; and

- e. ensure in all circumstances respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in accordance with international human rights standards and international instruments.

UPDATE ON IMPLEMENTATION OF THE RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE CHALLENGES FACED BY RACIALIZED LICENSEES REPORT
("THE CHALLENGES REPORT")*Introduction

126. This report provides an update on the implementation of certain recommendations of the Challenges Report.
127. To manage the implementation of the Challenges Report, the Equity Initiatives department is tasked with management oversight from the operations perspective and works in tandem with the EIAC which is tasked with the oversight and facilitation of the implementation of the recommendations.
128. Close attention is being paid to recommendations that are to be implemented in 2017 and 2018 which is co-ordinated with the timeline set out in the Challenges Report (TAB 5.5.1). The EIAC is updated on the progress of implementation at its Committee meetings.
129. Recommendations that are to be implemented in 2017 and 2018 are the current focus. As discussed in the Challenges Report, the recommendations are part of a framework that is designed to permit implementation to be strategically undertaken to support continuing implementation of recommendations for 2019 and beyond.
130. The following is a recommendation by recommendation review of the steps taken towards implementation for 2017 and 2018.

Implementation UpdateRecommendations 3(1) and 3(2)Changes to the Lawyer and Paralegal Annual Reports (LAR and PAR)

131. With respect to implementation of Recommendations 3(1) and (2), the Law Society is required to make changes to the Lawyer Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report (LAR/PAR) in 2017 to enable reporting on certain requirements in early 2018. These changes are being implemented and are on track for completion in anticipation of the March 31, 2018 reporting deadline. The requirements include a declaration with respect to abiding by a statement of principles to promote equality, diversity and inclusion and a requirement to create and implement a human rights/diversity policy for legal workplaces of 10 or more licensees.

Communications Initiatives

132. Communications are currently being prepared, which will provide information and guidance to the professions on the requirements outlined in the Challenges Report. The first of these will appear in the Ontario Reports in the upcoming weeks. Particular attention is paid to Recommendations 3(1) and 3(2) and the timelines associated with these requirements. Beginning in June 2017, information will be made available and distributed to the legal professions to create awareness around the requirements and obligations of recommendations 3(1) and 3(2).
133. Resources to assist members in meeting the obligations of this recommendation are being developed. Part of the communications approach is to maintain a dedicated webpage for members to access resources as needed. This will include a series of FAQs and similar resources to address questions and concerns that may arise when licensees take steps to meet the requirements.

Recommendations 4 and 5

134. Work has begun at the staff level to prepare language that will be included in the LAR/PAR for 2017 advising of the anticipated change in the use of inclusion and diversity data currently captured through the LAR and PAR in the self-identification demographic questions. Once prepared, this will serve as notice to profession regarding the changing use of data in the coming year (2018 LAR/PAR).

Recommendation 7

135. Work has also begun to conceptualize the inclusion survey required of this recommendation, which the report suggests will be similar to that conducted by Stratcom in 2016. This recommendation is to be implemented by the end of 2017.

Recommendation 12 (2)

136. As required by Recommendation 12(2), the Committee received a report from the Executive Director, Professional Regulation Division advising that the Division has created multi-functional enforcement teams with a range of types of Investigators and Discipline Counsel/Paralegals who are working together to be sensitive to, recognize and deal with issues of systemic discrimination. Training of the teams is planned.

Recommendation 13(1)(g) – Leading by Example

137. The Law Society has established a Diversity and Inclusion Committee with a mandate to organize educational events for Law Society staff to promote an equality and inclusive workplace. With the Committee membership, which is comprised of Law Society staff, now established, they have had the opportunity to meet and are developing a plan for diversity and inclusion events for 2017 and 2018.

FOR INFORMATION

UPDATE ON REVIEW OF THE DISCRIMINATION AND HARASSMENT COUNSEL PROGRAM*Introduction

138. As a companion report to this month's update on implementation of the recommendations in the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Report ("the Challenges Report"), this update provides information on the status of the review of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel (DHC) Program.

Background

139. Recommendation 12(1) of the Report directs the Law Society to "review the function, processes and structure of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC)<sup>1</sup>, including considering effective ways for the DHC to address issues of systemic discrimination."
140. The concept for the review of the Program predated the Report's approval at December 2016 Convocation, as the EIAC in June 2015 directed that a review be undertaken. This was based on a number of factors, which coincide with those reflected in the Report, and include the following:
- a. The Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group (RWG), relying on the results of an extensive consultation with the profession, identified the reluctance of racialized licensees to bring forward matters of systemic discrimination;
  - b. In discussing the renewal of the Indigenous Framework, the EIAC noted that the DHC Program does not have a counsel in the North or a counsel that is versed in Indigenous ways of knowing and being; and
  - c. The DHC Program has been reviewed on two previous occasions—in 2001 and 2005. In 2005, Convocation approved a recommendation that the Law Society undertake a review of the DHC Program every three years to determine how to improve the Program's effectiveness.
141. The Treasurer's mandate letter to EAIC (September 2016) also indicated that the Committee should undertake: A review and assessment of the Office of Discrimination and Harassment Counsel with specific reference to its effectiveness in addressing various forms of discrimination.

142. Following the June and other developments described above, the review of the DHC Program was placed on hold given the work that was progressing on the Report and which eventually led to adoption of the recommendations, including Recommendation 12(1), in December 2016.
143. In February 2017, the EIAC approved a process for the review and staff began work on the review shortly thereafter.

Update on Recruitment of Alternate Discrimination and Harassment Counsel

144. On a matter related to the operation of the DHC, pursuant to the Law Society's by-laws, the EIAC may recommend to Convocation the appointment of one or more Alternate DHCs.
145. As reported to Convocation in April 2017, the Law Society has recently engaged in a recruitment process for the appointment of Alternate DHCs, which included a job posting, in French and English, in the Ontario Reports and advertising the position on the Law Society's website. The recruitment committee, struck by EIAC as part of the process in accordance with the authority in the by-laws, was composed of:
  - Sandra Nishikawa, Co-Chair of EIAC
  - Tanya Walker, Licensee Bencher
  - Gisele Chretien, Appointed Bencher
  - Michael Doi, Member of the Equity Advisory Group
  - Constance Simmonds, Member of the Indigenous Advisory Group
146. The EIAC will report to Convocation on the results of the recruitment process and its recommendations at the appropriate time and, in accordance with the by-law provisions, in the absence of the public.

Scope of the DHC Program Review

147. According to the Challenges Report, "The objective of [the review identified under Recommendation 12(1)] would be to identify how the DHC role can be better used to address discrimination and harassment in the professions, including systemic discrimination, while keeping in mind the independent arms-length position of the DHC and the duty of the DHC to maintain the confidentiality of any individuals who use the Program".
148. The review is intended to determine how effective the DHC Program is in addressing issues of discrimination and harassment, including individual and systemic racism. The review is designed to be comprehensive and will take into account the current circumstances surrounding the DHC, seek information from relevant sources about the Program and determine how the issues identified can be addressed.

149. The EIAC Executive has been designated as the steering group for the review which is being managed by Equity Initiatives staff.

Status of the DHC Program Review

150. The first part of the review, a Phase I Literature Review, has been completed.
151. Staff engaged in a review of key resource material at the Law Society and elsewhere to identify key originating documents, policy directions and previous Program reviews. The reviewers also looked at best practices for similar ombuds programs in Ontario and in other jurisdictions. The staff is also assessing the DHC budget.
152. Phase II will commence within the next few months. This phase will gather qualitative data about the Program. The methodology will include interviews with the current DHC and the alternate DHCs to gather their input on the key questions and issues related to the Program. The reviewers will also interview key staff within the Law Society whose roles intersect with those seeking access to the Program such as Client Services Department, Professional Regulation Division and Equity Department. The plan also involves hosting a number of focus group interviews utilizing existing advisory groups, such as L'Association des juristes d'expression française de l'Ontario (AJEFO), the Indigenous Advisory Group, Equity Advisory Group, Treasurer's Liaison Group and others as appropriate.
153. Phase III will commence following the completion and assessment of the results of information from Phase II. Phase III, utilizing the qualitative data from Phase II, will involve a survey of the legal professions and licensing process students to explore such things as awareness of the Program, consideration of use of the Program, views on the purpose and value of the Program and options for improvements or enhancements to the Program. The survey would be conducted by a third party and the results reported and assessed.
154. As work progresses on the review, further reports will be provided to keep Convocation apprised of this important work.

TAB 5.6.1

DISCRIMINATION AND HARASSMENT COUNSEL PROGRAM DESCRIPTION

Background

1. Funded by the Law Society of Upper Canada, the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel \(DHC\) Program operates at arm's length, and is available free-of-charge to the Ontario public, lawyers, paralegals and students. The DHC derives its mandate and authority from By-law 11- Regulation of Conduct, Capacity and Professional Competence Part II.
2. In May 1997, the Law Society adopted the Bicentennial Report and Recommendations on Equity Issues in the Legal Profession (Bicentennial Report) which has since guided the Law Society's efforts to advance equity and diversity in the legal profession. Recommendation 11 of the report stated that, "The Law Society should ensure that it is effectively meeting its responsibilities as a regulator to eliminate discriminatory practices within the legal profession." The description of the recommendation speaks to the creation of a "safe counsel" program for "victims of discrimination and harassment" that would operate independent of the Law Society.
3. In fall 1998, Convocation approved the creation of a Discrimination and Harassment Ombudsperson role. In June 1999, Convocation adopted a submission from the Treasurer's Equity Advisory Group setting out the parameters for the position. On September 1, 1999, the DHC began operating as a pilot project. In June 2001, after a review of the program, which included consideration of the relationship of the DHC with the professional regulation functions and the equity initiatives function of the Law Society, the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel was established as a permanent initiative.
4. While operating at arms-length,<sup>1</sup> the DHC forms an integral part of the Law Society's equity initiatives and regulatory functions. The DHC's role is primarily directed to support complainants and the resources of the DHC have been focused in this area.
5. The DHC assists anyone who may have experienced discrimination or harassment based on human rights grounds by a lawyer, paralegal or student member of the Law Society. Since its creation, the person who has held the position of DHC has been bilingual (French and English).

<sup>1</sup> The DHC is not an in-house employee of the Law Society. As outlined in By-law 11 Part II Discrimination and Harassment Counsel, information received by the DHC is kept confidential. The only information provided to the Law Society is anonymous statistical data showing the number and type of complaints and anonymous demographic data about complainants.

6. The DHC's role is to:
  - Listen to concerns;
  - Clarify issues;
  - Provide information and advice;
  - Review options and avenues of recourse (e.g. filing a complaint with the Law Society, filing an application with the Human Rights Tribunal of Ontario);
  - Explain the advantages and disadvantages of each option; and
  - Provide referrals to other resources that may be of assistance.
7. Upon request, the DHC may attempt to resolve issues through intervening informally as a neutral facilitator or by conducting formal mediation, where appropriate. Mediation is a voluntary process and requires the consent of all parties. The DHC facilitates the discussion and assists the parties in crafting their own resolution.
8. The DHC does not have investigative powers and does not operate a formal complaints process that involves fact-finding. The DHC also does not provide legal advice or legal representation and cannot make referrals to lawyers or paralegals.
9. All information obtained by the DHC is kept in strict confidence. By-law 11 formally exempts the DHC from reporting requirements under the Rules of Professional Conduct. As the program was created to provide counsel to those who do not wish to approach the Law Society through its complaints process, there is a separation of the DHC and professional regulation. The DHC's duty of confidentiality overrides any requirement to report misconduct of another lawyer or paralegal under the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct.
10. The current DHC was appointed on November 21, 2002, replacing the first DHC, and has been in the position since that date. She was reappointed on September 25, 2003, following a search for candidates pursuant to what was then By-Law 36 – Discrimination and Harassment Counsel. She was then reappointed in 2006, 2009, 2012 and 2015.
11. In May 2016, Convocation approved the reappointment of the current DHC, effective, September 28, 2016, for a term of one year. The Committee recommended the reappointment for one year in order to allow it to conduct a review of the DHC Program and, if required, implement changes in a timely fashion.
12. In November 2003, Convocation approved the creation of an Alternate DHC position to provide backup when the permanent DHC is unable to fulfill their duties. Following a recruitment process, the Alternate DHC position was filled. The Alternate DHC assumes the functions of the DHC when she is unavailable. There are currently two Alternative DHC.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

REPORT OF THE REVIEW PANEL ON REGULATORY AND HEARING PROCESSES AFFECTING INDIGENOUS PEOPLES*Introduction

On June 28, 2017, Law Society Treasurer Paul Schabas announced the creation of the Review Panel to examine the way in which the Law Society and its Tribunal address regulatory matters involving Indigenous persons, complaints and issues. The review was prompted by the Law Society's experience in Law Society of Upper Canada v. Keshen (Keshen) which raised questions about the Law Society's regulatory and hearing process in relation to Indigenous persons, complaints, and issues. The Review Panel has completed its work under its Terms of Reference and has prepared a series of recommendations for Convocation's consideration and approval.

Overview of the Review Panel's Work

The Review Panel's process included an educational component, review of key resources and presentations by and interviews with several experts from the Indigenous community, the Chair and Vice Chair of the Law Society Tribunal and a number of Law Society Professional Regulation Division staff.

The work of the Review Panel was carried out alongside the mandate of the Independent Reviewer. Former Assembly of the First Nations National Chief Ovide Mercredi was appointed as the Independent Reviewer to engage with the First Nations community in Treaty 3 and Nishnawbe Aski Nation treaty territories in Northern Ontario. The experiences of First Nations in the north that Mr. Mercredi shared with the Review Panel and the valuable perspective and key insights he offered were crucial to forming the recommendations in this report.

In September 2017, the Treasurer, members of the Review Panel and staff attended a community meeting in Sioux Lookout. The Review Panel met the Leadership of a number of First Nations in the north, Elders and Residential School Survivors, listened to their views and their stories, and conveyed the message from the Law Society that it is committed to the work for which the Review Panel was established.

Summary of the Keshen Prosecution

Based on complaints received in 2013 and 2014 about Mr. Keshen in representing clients in connection with Independent Assessment Process ("IAP") applications to the Indian Residential Schools Adjudication Secretariat pursuant to the Indian Residential Schools Settlement Agreement, a new investigation team was formed under the direction of the Executive Director of the Law Society's Professional Regulation Division, called the First Nations, Métis and Inuit

Convocation - Law Society Review Panel on Regulatory and Hearing Processes Affecting Indigenous Peoples Report

(FNMI) Team. This team was assigned the Keshen complaints and over the course of the investigation, the Law Society dealt with 57 individual complaints through the work of 19 Law Society Professional Regulation Division staff and three outside prosecutors.

The investigation resulted in the authorization of two Notices of Application containing allegations connected with 34 complainants. The Notices alleged that Mr. Keshen, among other things, did not serve his clients properly, assigned tasks to staff that he should not have, took clients' money from his trust account to pay his fees without sending a bill, charged unfair legal fee and did not handle settlement monies correctly.

The conduct hearing began in Kenora on June 27, 2016 and continued over 25 hearing days until February, 2017, when the prosecution closed its case and filed two replacement Notices to significantly reduce the number and nature of the original allegations. A re-evaluation of the case by the Professional Regulation Division of the Law Society in March 2017 concluded that a settlement was appropriate in all the circumstances. The conduct hearing was converted to an Invitation to Attend pursuant to s. 36 of the Law Society Act, with Mr. Keshen agreeing to attend on both April 25, 2017 in the presence of the Elders and again on July 4, 2017 before the Hearing Panel.

Report of the Independent Reviewer

Mr. Mercredi explained his work as the Independent Reviewer as fulfilling a quiet non-judgemental role that required a compassionate and interested listener, engaging with the Leadership and Elders of First Nations communities, and talking to victims of process, including Residential School Survivors. While he was specifically required to focus on the Keshen matter and on the future of First Nations-Law Society of Ontario relationships, the range of issues brought to his attention went deep into the impact of the Residential Schools on personal lives (families and communities), the shortcomings of the Indian Residential Schools Settlement Agreement (processes and mechanisms) and the Law Society's regulatory and hearing processes.

In a series of recommendations, which the Review Panel report indicates by way of recommendation that the Law Society should accept, Mr. Mercredi urges the Law Society to focus on the need to become culturally competent, to support broader change in the interests of Indigenous communities and to support healing strategies for Survivors.

The Recommendations

GENERAL

Recommendation 1

The Law Society:

- 1. must make an organizational commitment to establish and maintain a culturally competent regulatory process; and

- 2. should consider establishing a new office to support the work that the Law Society undertakes pursuant to its mandate when that work involves Indigenous communities and to create a culturally safe environment.

To ensure Law Society services are provided to members of Indigenous communities specifically, and in a culturally sensitive manner, staff dealing directly with members of Indigenous communities should have a sufficient understanding of Indigenous culture, beliefs and values, which will engender appropriate communication and interaction. This requires knowledge of Indigenous ways of knowing, Indigenous Legal Orders, values and interests, and the sensitive history of Residential School abuses that has had a multi-generational impact on the physical, emotional, mental and spiritual condition of first Nation, Inuit and Métis communities and individuals. This responsibility to enhance competence also includes knowledge of the historical and contemporary impacts of colonization on Indigenous communities.

The Review Panel received valuable insights from Terry Swan, who is a Cree/Saulteaux/ Métis and currently the Team Lead, Family Information Liaison Unit within the Indigenous Justice Division of the Ontario Ministry of Attorney General. She spoke of the path to “cultural safety”, which begins with cultural awareness, where the differences between what the institution represents and the Indigenous community are respected, which leads to cultural knowledge, or learning, and cultural competence. The path eventually leads to cultural safety for both the institution and members of the Indigenous community - it is a framework that captures the relationship between legal services and Indigenous experiences of colonization, discrimination and marginalization, and is sensitive to the traumatic repercussions on multiple generations.

A commitment to developing cultural awareness must involve engagement with the necessary Indigenous experts. This engagement could be led by a new office within the Law Society, with the appointment of an Indigenous person with the right skills and talents to provide leadership in understanding and responding to Indigenous peoples’ experience with the Law Society.

COMMUNICATION AND ENGAGEMENT

Recommendation 2

Where complainants are members of Indigenous communities:

- 1. information about the Law Society, its regulatory process and the role of complainants must be available and communicated in an understandable and culturally appropriate way; and
- 2. depending upon the stage of the complaint matter at the Law Society, communications should include discussion of the issue of remedy from the complainant’s perspective (using the complainant vs prosecutorial lens), including the concept of restoration and how that intersects with the Law Society’s regulatory mandate.

Engagement with members of Indigenous communities should take into account the needs of the complainants and the likelihood that some may be vulnerable and marginalized in society. Some complainants will have difficulty trusting the system in which the Law Society operates as a legal institution and will have challenges interacting with it. It is also recognized that some complainants perceive or experience a power imbalance as a client in a solicitor-client relationship, which may be replicated in the Law Society's complaints and discipline process, where the complainant is not a party to the proceeding, has no formal role in the disposition of a case and remains unrepresented.

Law Society staff should ensure that they are accessible to complainants and that clear lines of communication exist with a person at all times identified as a contact for any inquiry or question. Complainants should be informed about and consulted as much as possible on the progress of the complaint. Communications should be respectful and must not result in further trauma to the complainant and should take into account special needs that may be presented.

Communication at all stages of the matter should be timely and effective. This also involves being clear with the complainant at all stages about what the Law Society can and cannot remedy and explaining the steps and important decisions points.

Recommendation 3

The Law Society must do more to engage with Indigenous people in their community to:

- 1. express the Law Society's commitment to create a trusting relationship, to enable the Law Society to meet its regulatory mandate in ways that respect the culture of the community;
- 2. explore opportunities to partner and build mutually respectful relationships with individuals, organizations and institutions to help the Law Society advance its commitment, and build trust in the community; and
- 3. explore ways to increase access to justice, including considering the need to develop a cultural liaison with the public.

To continue the important dialogue that began in September 2017, the Law Society must engage with Leadership, Elders and other Knowledge Keepers to learn and transform the Law Society's regulatory processes in matters involving Indigenous communities.

In considering ongoing issues, the Law Society should consider, where appropriate:

- a. retaining local counsel who is culturally competent from an Indigenous community for the purpose of assisting the Law Society in communicating information to complainants and to ensure over regular periods of time that the complainants' understanding remains accurate and current, and
- b. providing funding for independent counsel, perhaps by augmenting the scope of the services of existing legal clinics, to assist complainants in understanding the scope of the Law Society's jurisdiction and to offer advice and, if appropriate, legal assistance, in disputes.

The proposals above may be effective in addressing the obligation to assist in complainants' understanding of the Law Society.

SPECIFIC PROFESSIONAL REGULATION FUNCTIONS

Recommendation 4

The Professional Regulation Division should:

- 1. be appropriately resourced to ensure timely, efficient and effective operation of regulatory functions;
- 2. build its capacity to develop formal policies and procedures that flow from decisions of the Tribunal (following all levels of appeal) that raise important regulatory policy issues;
- 3. formulate a plan for the investigation of "major cases" to assist in the management of investigations;
- 4. support prosecutors in developing and refining the skills required to manage and prosecute major cases; and
- 5. ensure all staff have available the necessary mental and emotional supports when working with complainants that are survivors of trauma. This may include but not be limited to the Members Assistance Program.

The ability to develop policies and procedures as described in Recommendation 4 will enable consistent, informed application of relevant principles, including Indigenous Law principles. The Review Panel's view is that there is an opportunity to examine policy-making that will embrace Indigenous Law principles.

With respect to management of major cases, elements of such an approach might include the following:

- a. Defining a "major case", which would involve consideration of such factors as the complexity of the issues, the volume of complaints, the resources needed to properly manage the case and risk to the public;
- b. Considering how to improve the current model to facilitate early communication and consultation between investigators and prosecutors to promote the efficient use of investigative and prosecutorial resources; and
- c. Identifying the exceptional administrative and personnel needs associated with major cases, and the related resources, and recommendations as to how they should be managed to guide future investigations.

Aspects of a major case plan may include observing established processes and protocols, including those related to the responsibility of the team lead, decision-making and communication.

With respect to supports for prosecutors, these measures should include educational opportunities to prosecutors in the management and prosecution of major cases and encouraging prosecutors to increase their experience level with larger cases through exploring secondments to other prosecutorial offices.

Recommendation 5

The Law Society should:

1. take the necessary steps to ensure that anyone who investigates complaints at the Law Society involving Indigenous licensees or complainants, in addition to required investigatory experience and skills, is culturally competent to perform these investigations and has the necessary resources available to engage appropriately with members of the Indigenous communities in this process; and
2. explore ways to incorporate principles of Indigenous Legal Systems into
  - a. dispute resolution resources available to Law Society investigators, which may be applied in appropriate cases, and
  - b. prosecutorial and dispute resolution resources available to Law Society prosecutors, which may be applied in appropriate cases.

First steps should be to enrich the education of staff with initial training, and ensure appropriate resources are offered to the relevant staff. This may involve working with Indigenous community partners, like the Indigenous Advisory Group and others.

Terry Swan referred to becoming “trauma-informed” and approaching matters from this perspective. She advised that the recognition and understanding of trauma translates into responses to the individual that integrates knowledge about trauma in practices, procedures and settings.

The Honourable Leonard S. Mandamin, a judge of the Federal Court and an Anishnaabe member of the Wiikwemkoong Unceded Indian Reserve on Manitoulin Island, Ontario, who met with the Review Panel, spoke of his work that led to applying restorative justice principles. Justice Mandamin referenced the Law Reform Commission of Canada 1996 publication Bridging the Cultural Divide: a report on Aboriginal people and criminal justice in Canada / Royal Commission on Aboriginal Peoples, and its discussion of “creating conceptual space” for Indigenous systems of justice.

The Review Panel believes there are approaches and processes that may be options to the Law Society’s adversarial adjudicative model. They should be explored for matters involving Indigenous complainants or Indigenous licensees at the Law Society.

Delia Opekokew, a lawyer and a member of the Canoe Lake First Nation in Saskatchewan, met with the Review Panel and discussed her experiences as a Deputy Chief Adjudicator in the IAP process. Her advice was to ensure that the environment for questioning a Survivor is sensitive to their experience. She also stressed the need for appropriate supports for those staff directly involved with Survivors as complainants and witnesses.

Convocation - Law Society Review Panel on Regulatory and Hearing Processes Affecting Indigenous Peoples Report

Professor Jeffrey Hewitt, a Cree, spoke with the Review Panel about the Law Society's processes and Indigenous Law. In his view, trying to apply Indigenous law within the Law Society will not fix anything if the underlying architecture of the Law Society's structure does not change. In determining that change, an examination and the process of change is part of the longer term decolonization work for the Law Society and it is important to include, through both recognition and structure, Indigenous legal orders.

Recommendation 6

The Professional Regulation Division should create the required permanent internal structures and supports to appropriately manage investigations and prosecutions of licensees who are the subject of complaints from Indigenous people and of Indigenous licensees. These structures and supports should extend to other divisions at the Law Society to the extent that processes related to investigations and/or prosecutions intersect with them.

Despite all of the efforts taken and unique processes instituted by the Law Society to deal with the numerous complaints received from Survivors, there were gaps in approaches, coupled with several staff changes at key critical stages and an aggressive timeline for completion of the investigation, which added to an already complex file.

A required level of knowledge and expertise in Indigenous culture to deal with demanding investigations and the unique circumstances of Indigenous complainants is necessary. The Review Panel believes the Law Society should explore the following:

- a. Specialized teams that are appropriately trained;
- b. Comprehensive professional resources across departments covering a range of topics and subjects;
- c. Established advisory channels with the Indigenous community in ways that respect the principles of fairness and independence of the Law Society's regulatory process); and
- d. Personal resources for both the Law Society staff and Indigenous complainants or licensees for required support.

In cases involving vulnerable complainants where actual harm is capable of resulting from their appearance as witnesses, the Law Society should consider a specialized analysis that is aimed at determining whether the public interest requires that vulnerable complainants appear as witnesses, which would include consideration of a fully informed consent. Further, the Law Society should take into account the possibility that further counselling after the hearing may be required and recognize the potential cost of that assistance.

A fully informed consent may require retaining independent counsel for the witness who can provide neutral explanations and independent advice, both for the benefit of the witness and the protection of the Law Society.

Recommendation 7

The Law Society Tribunal and the Tribunal Committee should explore, with the assistance of Indigenous experts, how to incorporate Indigenous Law principles within its adjudicative and dispute resolution processes and apply them in the appropriate case.

The Review Panel believes the Tribunal should learn from the experience in the Keshen case and determine the most effective method of including Indigenous perspectives in the adjudicative process.

Law Society Tribunal Chair David Wright advised the Review Panel that, for example, the current Rules of Practice and Procedure adopted by Convocation provide that the civil rules of evidence apply to Tribunal proceedings. However, as a policy discussion, the application of the Statutory Power and Procedures Act (SPPA) specifically and the proceedings of other adjudicative tribunals might be an appropriate subject of further study.

Consideration should be given to developing practice directions on what is currently permissible within the Law Society Tribunal Hearing Division Rules of Practice and Procedure. This may include, for example,

- a. permitting a witness to testify with a support worker nearby;
- b. permitting a witness to testify outside the hearing room by closed circuit television or behind a screen;
- c. allowing a victim's statement (done currently by affidavit) in certain cases to be admitted as evidence for the truth of its content; and
- d. requiring the cessation of any part of an examination or cross-examination of a witness that is, in the opinion of the adjudicator, abusive, repetitive or otherwise inappropriate.

The Review Panel also suggests that the availability of independent counsel for complainants should be explored.

The Review Panel noted that the Federal Court Practice Guidelines for Aboriginal Law Proceedings provide that, for cross-examination of Elders, "The special context of the testimony of Elders suggests that alternative ways of questioning on cross-examination should be explored in appropriate cases." In referencing these Guidelines, Justice Mandamin described circumstances where the adjudicator, rather than the examining counsel, asks the questions of the Elder where circumstances may warrant such an approach.

The Tribunal should determine how to ensure the appointment to the Tribunal of otherwise qualified adjudicators who are Indigenous or who have experience with Indigenous legal issues and/or the Indigenous communities. The Tribunal should also consider the merits of a guideline for the composition of Tribunal hearing panels convened to hear conduct applications based on complaints from Indigenous people or where the licensee is Indigenous, together with the process considerations this may involve.

Recommendation 8

Law Society Tribunal adjudicators should receive ongoing training in the history of Indigenous Law in Canada, Indigenous methods of dispute resolution, Indigenous ceremony and protocols, the Independent Assessment Process and other relevant related topics.

The Tribunal should consider the merits of a competency matrix for trainers for adjudicators on Indigenous Law, dispute resolution processes and protocols and customs that may be relevant to the Tribunal process.

As the design and implementation of training for adjudicators is one of the responsibilities of the Tribunal Chair, the Law Society should refer this issue to David Wright for review and implementation.

OTHER LAW SOCIETY FUNCTIONS

Recommendation 9 – Practice Supports

The Law Society should ensure that guidance and education is available for lawyers and paralegals who serve Indigenous clients who have experienced trauma arising from the Indian Residential School experience, the Sixties Scoop or the Day Schools settlement to assist in their competent representation of these individuals.

The Review Panel believes there is merit to including additional commentary in the Rules of Professional Conduct and Paralegal Professional Conduct Guidelines in relation to the representation of vulnerable clients, such as Residential School Survivors, and recommends that the competence rules be reviewed for this purpose. The Law Society should review the Guidelines for Lawyers Acting in Aboriginal Residential School Cases and revise them accordingly as required to ensure they are current and cover the broad scope of representation of those from Indigenous communities who may seek legal assistance as a claimant.

The Law Society should also explore partnering with other organizations who have the knowledge and experience to help frame guidance, act as referrals for resources for lawyers or contribute to targeted continuing professional development programs to assist lawyers and paralegals who may serve these clients.

For Decision

REPORT OF THE REVIEW PANEL ON REGULATORY AND HEARING PROCESSES AFFECTING INDIGENOUS PEOPLES

Motion

1. That Convocation approve the recommendations set out in this report to incorporate Indigenous perspectives in the Law Society's regulatory and hearing processes, in keeping with the Law Society's commitment through the Indigenous Framework adopted by the Law Society to work within its mandate on Indigenous issues and the relationship with the Indigenous community.

Introduction

2. On June 28, 2017, Law Society Treasurer Paul Schabas announced the creation of a Review Panel to examine the way in which the Law Society and its Tribunal address regulatory matters involving Indigenous persons, complaints and issues. The Review Panel was charged with identifying issues and making recommendations on opportunities for inclusion of Indigenous perspectives in Law Society processes. The Terms of Reference for the Review Panel are set out at Tab 2.2.1.
3. The Review Panel's Terms of Reference note that the experience of the Law Society in Law Society of Upper Canada v. Keshen (Keshen) raised questions about the Law Society's regulatory and hearing process in relation to Indigenous persons, complaints, and issues. The Law Society recognized that it needed to learn from this experience and reform its processes to accommodate the unique historical and cultural circumstances of Indigenous Peoples and Indigenous approaches to conflict resolution.
4. This report summarizes the work the Review Panel has undertaken since June of 2017 and sets out its recommendations.
5. Upon approval of the recommendations in this report, the activities related to implementation of the recommendations will move to Law Society operations under the oversight of the Chief Executive Officer, who will ensure appropriate engagement with relevant Law Society committees and partner groups, including the Indigenous Advisory Group, and report to Convocation on outcomes as matters progress.

Overview of the Review Panel's Work

6. The Review Panel met on 20 occasions beginning in the summer of 2017 through to May 2018, and by the fall of 2017 had formulated a work plan, as requested by the Treasurer. The work plan established a robust and effectual review process that included an educational component, review of key resources and presentations by and interviews with a wide range of individuals, including several experts from the Indigenous community, the Chair and Vice Chair of the Law Society Tribunal and a number of Law Society Professional Regulation Division staff. A list of those interviewed by the Review Panel and with whom the Review Panel consulted is at Tab 2.2.2.

7. The Review Panel is grateful to these individuals who made time to speak with the Review Panel and share their information, thoughts and views with honesty and candour. Their contributions were vital to the Review Panel's work and assisted in framing a number of the recommendations.
8. The work of the Review Panel was carried out alongside the mandate of the Independent Reviewer, the mandate for whom is set out separately in the Review Panel Terms of Reference. Former Assembly of First Nations National Chief Ovide Mercredi was appointed as the Independent Reviewer to engage with the First Nations community in Treaty 3 and Nishnawbe Aski Nation treaty territories in Northern Ontario. A map of the First Nation treaty territories is at Tab 2.2.3.<sup>1</sup> Mr. Mercredi was able to listen and learn from the experiences of First Nations in the north and share this with the Law Society. He attended many of the Review Panel meetings, providing a valuable perspective and key insights that assisted the Review Panel. The information he obtained and relayed to the Review Panel was crucial to forming the recommendations in this report. The Review Panel is deeply indebted to Mr. Mercredi for his contribution to its work.
9. An important event in the work of the Review Panel occurred on September 20, 2017 when the Treasurer, members of the Review Panel and three Law Society senior staff attended a community meeting in Sioux Lookout. This meeting was arranged through the efforts of Mr. Mercredi. This was a first opportunity for the Review Panel to meet with the Leadership of a number of First Nations in the north, Elders and Residential School Survivors, listen to their views and their stories, and convey the message from the Law Society that it is committed to the work for which the Review Panel was established. It was an opportunity for the Law Society to learn about how, as a regulator, it needs to become more culturally competent on Indigenous histories, cultures and affairs, including the impacts of settlor/colonial systems on Indigenous Peoples, This learning will ensure that the Law Society can appropriately address regulatory matters that arise from these communities and the lawyers who serve them.
10. The Review Panel is grateful to Chief Clifford Bull of the Lac Seul First Nation for the gracious welcome extended to the Law Society attendees. The Review Panel also benefited greatly from the comments of Ogichidaa Francis Kavanaugh, Grand Council Treaty #3 and Derek Fox, Deputy Grand Chief, Nishnawbe Aski Nation, and all of the other participants who were generous with their time and spoke with candour and pain about their experiences with the Law Society, the Indian Residential Schools Agreement and Mr. Keshen.

11. The Review Panel recognized that the outcome of the Law Society's conduct application against Mr. Keshen was regrettable for the complainants. It exposed gaps and failings by the Law Society as it related to the Residential School Survivors and the Indigenous community as a whole. Many of the Law Society staff involved in the Keshen case, based on the interviews conducted by the Review Panel, expressed this sentiment, having invested significant time and effort in the investigation and prosecution, including engagement with the Survivors in the process.
12. As articulated by Review Panel member Kathleen Lickers, a lawyer and a Seneca from the Six Nations of the Grand River, "the Keshen matter illustrates a particular paradigm at the Law Society that calls for change."
13. The Review Panel believes the recommendations in this report for Convocation's approval will be the catalyst for that change.

Summary of the Keshen Prosecution

14. As stated, the experience of the Law Society in the Keshen case raised questions about the Law Society's regulatory and hearing process in relation to Indigenous persons, complaints and issues. To provide additional context, the following summarizes the Law Society's investigation and prosecution of Mr. Keshen.
15. In 2013 and 2014, the Law Society began to receive complaints from clients whom Mr. Keshen had represented in connection with Independent Assessment Process ("IAP") applications to the Indian Residential Schools Adjudication Secretariat pursuant to the Indian Residential Schools Settlement Agreement.
16. In November 2013, through the office of the Executive Director of the Law Society's Professional Regulation Division, a team was created in response to this specific development called the First Nations, Métis and Inuit (FNMI) Team. It was a multi-departmental group of staff that received specialized training and other supports for its work on the Indigenous complaints relating to Mr. Keshen, which were assigned to this team for investigation.
17. Complaints to the Law Society are instructed for investigation within the Professional Regulation Division when information is presented that suggests a licensee may have engaged in professional misconduct. Following investigation, where the complaints are of a sufficiently serious nature, information about the conduct issues is prepared for review by the Law Society's Proceedings Authorization Committee, which makes decisions on the appropriate regulatory action. Among the actions the Committee may authorize is a conduct application for a discipline hearing before the Law Society Tribunal.

18. The investigation eventually resulted in the authorization by the Proceedings Authorization Committee of two Notices of Application containing allegations connected with 34 complainants. They were issued on June 10, 2015 (LCN 64/15) and November 20, 2015 (LCN116/15) respectively. The allegations were that Mr. Keshen, among other things:
  - a. did not serve his clients properly;
  - b. assigned tasks to staff that he should not have;
  - c. took clients' money from his trust account to pay his fees without sending a bill;
  - d. charged unfair legal fees; and
  - e. did not handle settlement monies correctly.
19. The Law Society's conduct hearing began in Kenora on June 27, 2016 and continued over 25 hearing days until February, 2017. On February 16, 2017 (day 22), the prosecution closed its case, filing two replacement Notices to significantly reduce the number and nature of the original allegations. The remaining three hearing days were devoted to the commencement of the defence case, including evidence relevant to an abuse of process motion filed in late January 2017.
20. To summarize the Law Society's operational commitment over the course of the Keshen case, the Law Society dealt with 57 individual complaints through the work of 19 Law Society Professional Regulation Division staff and three outside prosecutors. The main investigative work spanned the period from late 2013 to the late summer of 2015 and transitioned between two investigation team leads and five different investigators, some of whom assisted the prosecutors in the lead up to and following the commencement of the conduct hearing in June 2016. Over the course of the hearing, the responsibility for the prosecution was with a team of two prosecutors, who then handed the file to a second team of two prosecutors in the fall of 2016 (one internal counsel and one external counsel). A change in external counsel on that team was the result of a judicial appointment. That team subsequently withdrew as prosecutors in March 2017. A third prosecutor (external counsel) acted for the remainder of the case.
21. A re-evaluation of the case by the Professional Regulation Division of the Law Society in March 2017 concluded that a settlement was appropriate in the circumstances and a resolution proposal was accepted by the Tribunal on April 25, 2017. The conduct hearing was converted to an Invitation to Attend pursuant to s. 36 of the Law Society Act, with Mr. Keshen agreeing to attend on both April 25, 2017 in the presence of the Elders and again on July 4, 2017 before the Hearing Panel. He also agreed to the following additional terms:
  - a. A formal undertaking to cooperate with a practice review and a spot audit;
  - b. A commitment to take additional CPD courses in the area of practice and records management;

- c. Participation in between one and three circles to be funded by the Law Society focusing on restorative justice to be organized and conducted by leaders and Elders in the communities in which he practised;
- d. A withdrawal of his motion alleging abuse of process by the Law Society; and
- e. An agreement not to request costs.

Report of the Independent Reviewer - Ovide William Mercredi

My work as the Independent Reviewer was essentially fulfilling a quiet non-judgemental role that required a compassionate and interested listener. My role was about gathering information, going to the Leadership and Elders of First Nations communities, and talking to victims of process, including Residential School Survivors. While I was specifically required to focus on the Keshen matter and on the future of First Nations-Law Society of Ontario relationships, the range of issues brought to my attention went deep into the impact of the Residential Schools on personal lives (families and communities), the shortcomings of the Indian Residential Schools Settlement Agreement (processes and mechanisms) and the Law Society's regulatory and hearing processes.

My work allowed for many Keshen complainants and other Residential School Survivors to tell their full stories in a safe, supportive and respectful manner. Their experiences in Residential Schools hurt them deeply and such wounds remain for many as regress, doubts and ongoing challenges. The nature and scope of the Indian Residential Schools Settlement Agreement and the applications to the Indian Residential Schools Adjudication process did little to satisfy the individual hopes for closure and settlement. The majority of the individual interviewed believe, and for good reasons, that the awards they received were very low and did not compensate them based on their stories.

The healing journey has been part of their story; a journey begun by many returning to their homelands, learning their languages, having families and trying to normalize their daily living. They wanted healing and closure! They wanted to share their LIFE STORIES without feeling like a loser or a criminal, feelings that brought to the forefront by foreign and often adversarial processes. Most Residential School Survivors felt that they were not heard and accepted. It was not easy for them to disclose deep wounds, especially the sexual assault and abuses they experienced in Residential Schools.

Unfortunately, for the Keshen complainants and other Residential School Survivors who were unhappy with their lawyers, the hurt and regrets have been compounded. Where are the reports from the lawyer explaining what was done for their client? Where are the letters explaining the award granted and the breakdown for legal fees and costs? They want to know the answers - answers no Independent Reviewer can provide. Can the Law Society of Ontario provide them with the answers? They are waiting. In speaking with the Survivors, I dealt with a lot of emotion. They felt betrayed by their lawyer. It also appeared that they did not understand the Law Society's process. Many of them think they went to court when attending before the Law Society Tribunal.

In terms of Law Society process, when a complaint is made, the Law Society needs to determine the competence of the lawyer conducting the investigation to do it. To discover all information, there needs to be engagement with the complainant in their own language and full knowledge of their culture. Investigations need to be done in a manner that allows the complainant to tell their story fully.

The Law Society needs to decide how to conduct interviews arising from complaints properly, understanding protocol, to make sure Indigenous perspectives are part of the process. The Law Society also needs to take into account Indigenous notions of conflict resolution (non-adversarial). The part of the problem for the Tribunal is the adversarial nature of the process and no representation for the complainant. Perhaps there is another way of settling complaints against lawyers. This is why there is a need to speak with the Leadership, Elders and others in the communities.

Ideas need to be developed to address the competence of the complainants themselves to understand what is going on and level of literacy in First Nations communities. There were very few supports and where there were supports, the Survivors used them very heavily. There is a need understand who the client is, their capacity and knowledge in relation to these processes.

While the hope remains that the Law Society of Ontario will radically alter its understanding of First Nations histories, cultures, societies, customs, traditions, world views and internal sovereignty, the time for reform is present and imminent. The days of the status quo or business as usual will not lead to reconciliation nor will the relationship with First Nations be provided the requisite priority and appropriate actions and responses.

The complainants against Keshen, Residential School Survivors in general, and the administration of justice as it impacts on First Nations in Ontario requires the immediate attention, action, cooperation, and support of the entire legal profession.

To do less than what justice demands be done will be seen as not just as a lost opportunity, but as another betrayal of the ideals of social justice in Canada. Going forward for the Law Society of Ontario, as a self-governing professional body, will mean recognizing First Nations as self-governing Nations who have a right and duty to protect their members and citizens from destructive colonialism and the vestiges of colonial powers still exercised by the Canadian State and other institutions within Canada.

The Law Society needs to determine how it can best support the Indigenous communities. The following are some proposals that can be pursued:

- Annual or semi-annual Law Society meetings with Indigenous communities in Ontario, to engage and discuss matters of mutual interest between the Law Society and the communities;
- Providing legal supports to Indigenous communities as outlined in Recommendation 3 of the Review Panel report, as part of engagement and in keeping with the access to justice focus of the Law Society; and
- Considering how the Law Society can support funding similar to that provided through the now dissolved Aboriginal Healing Foundation, to support Survivors and their families and, in partnership with Indigenous communities, pursuing healing initiatives.

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. Given the gap between the Settler Society and Indigenous Nations and people, the Law Society of Ontario needs to become more proactive in reconciliation work directed towards building capacity on Cultural Competency for lawyers in general and for lawyers practicing with Indigenous clients in particular.

Cultural Competency means knowing and understanding the historical relationships, the impact and legacy of colonialism, the results of Federalism, the Indian Act and Residential Schools, the vision of the Treaties and the lack of implementation of Treaty Rights, the evolution of Canadian law as it relates directly to Indigenous Peoples and with a greater focus on Indigenous laws, traditions, customs, ceremonies, worldviews, cultures and societies. Knowing your clients, to properly represent them, is always a pre-requisite to professional conduct and standard of care. For lawyers from mainstream society, as members of the majority, and as products of Canadian society, they more or less have Cultural Competency to represent non-Indigenous clients but the same cannot be said concerning Indigenous Nations and people.

2. Knowing and being supportive of Indigenous Nations' rights and freedoms, and their quest for belonging in their Homelands, including their aspirations for a better relationship with Canadians and Canada, the Law Society of Ontario, as a powerful and significant institution for law reform, the rule of law, and the administration of justice, has a major obligation, if not an inherent duty, to become a strong advocate for fundamental reforms that will perfect Canada and restore the rightful inheritance of Indigenous Nations to self-determination.
3. Belonging to a multi-cultural Country does not mean automatic harmony between distinct peoples and cultures within Canada; therefore, direct measures and actions are required to address racism, prejudice and discrimination in this country, a human condition that is not the natural consequence of being a human being but the result of ignorance, fear, hatred or crime. The Law Society of Ontario and the lawyers in this Province need to become more aware of the negative impacts of prejudice, discrimination and racism on Indigenous people, especially now given the ever increasing urban populations of Indigenous people. Lawyers and the Law Society need to become anti-racism advocates as part of their Cultural Competency in an increasingly pluralistic country.

4. Knowing that Canada has responded to the crimes of the Residential Schools, albeit under pressure and inadequately, the Law Society of Ontario needs to call upon the Federal Government to undertake an immediate review of the adequacy, strength and weakness of the Indian Residential Schools Settlement Agreement, with a particular attention to the cap on awards and the role of the Independent Assessment Process and the role of lawyers in that regard.
5. Residential School Survivors continue to advocate for their healing as individuals, families and communities. Their cry for help is worthy of immediate support and action from lawyers and the Law Society of Ontario. When I spoke to Treasurer Paul Schabas about the mandate of the Review Panel and my role, I made it clear that the affected people should have some sort of remedial measures available to them, and this is critical. Some of these people are the most vulnerable in society. We need to begin the process of how the Law Society and Indigenous communities are going to work together. The Aboriginal Healing Foundation closed on September 30, 2014, and thereby, by government neglect, was unable to continue to support important community-based healing initiatives aimed at resolving the individual and collective trauma of the abuses experienced at Residential Schools. The Law Society of Ontario needs to call upon the Federal Government to re-instate a properly funded Healing Foundation.
6. Canadians in general abhor poverty and inequality with regard to income or wealth distribution in their country. Unfortunately for Indigenous people, their poverty remains out of mind and out of sight for the most part. However, the lack of jobs, wealth generation or even a subsistence economy within most Indigenous communities renders Indigenous Nations dependent upon government funding to address social issues and problems like poor housing, poor health and emergencies like the diabetes epidemic and recurring youth suicides. While slow and sporadic gains are being made in addressing Indigenous poverty within Canada, help from other than government sources are needed to accelerate the rise from poverty. The Law Society can help by creating a funding opportunity and mechanism for its members to make charitable donations to support the healing call by Residential School Survivors, their families and communities.

The Recommendations

RECOMMENDATION WITH RESPECT TO THE INDEPENDENT REVIEWER'S REPORT

The Law Society should accept the Independent Reviewer's Recommendations, which include recommendations that align with others in this report (Recommendations 1 and 3), and commit to determining actions that should be taken with respect to Recommendations 2, 4, 5 and 6 of the Independent Reviewer.

GENERAL

Recommendation 1

The Law Society:

- 1. must make an organizational commitment to establish and maintain a culturally competent regulatory process; and
- 2. should consider establishing a new office to support the work that the Law Society undertakes pursuant to its mandate when that work involves Indigenous communities and to create a culturally safe environment.

COMMUNICATION AND ENGAGEMENT

Recommendation 2

Where complainants are members of Indigenous communities:

- 1. information about the Law Society, its regulatory process and the role of complainants must be available and communicated in an understandable and culturally appropriate way; and
- 2. depending upon the stage of the complaint matter at the Law Society, communications should include discussion of the issue of remedy from the complainant's perspective, (using the complainant vs prosecutorial lens), including the concept of restoration and how that intersects with the Law Society's regulatory mandate.

Recommendation 3

The Law Society must do more to engage with Indigenous people in their community to:

- 1. express the Law Society's commitment to create a trusting relationship, to enable the Law Society to meet its regulatory mandate in ways that respect the culture of the community;
- 2. explore opportunities to partner and build mutually respectful relationships with individuals, organizations and institutions to help the Law Society advance its commitment, and build trust in the community; and

3. explore ways to increase access to justice, including considering the need to develop a cultural liaison with the public.

SPECIFIC PROFESSIONAL REGULATION FUNCTIONS

Recommendation 4

The Professional Regulation Division should:

1. be appropriately resourced to ensure timely, efficient and effective operation of regulatory functions;
2. build its capacity to develop formal policies and procedures that flow from decisions of the Tribunal (following all levels of appeal) that raise important regulatory policy issues;
3. formulate a plan for the investigation of "major cases" to assist in the management of investigations;
4. support prosecutors in developing and refining the skills required to manage and prosecute major cases; and
5. ensure all staff have available the necessary mental and emotional supports when working with complainants who are survivors of trauma. This may include but not be limited to the Members Assistance Program.

Recommendation 5

The Law Society should:

1. take the necessary steps to ensure that anyone who investigates complaints at the Law Society involving Indigenous licensees or complainants, in addition to required investigatory experience and skills, is culturally competent to perform these investigations and has the necessary resources available to engage appropriately with members of the Indigenous communities in this process; and
2. explore ways to incorporate principles of Indigenous Legal Systems into
  - a. dispute resolution resources available to Law Society investigators, which may be applied in appropriate cases, and
  - b. prosecutorial and dispute resolution resources available to Law Society prosecutors, which may be applied in appropriate cases.

Recommendation 6

The Professional Regulation Division should create the required permanent internal structures and supports to appropriately manage investigations and prosecutions of licensees who are the subject of complaints from Indigenous people and of Indigenous licensees. These structures and supports should extend to other divisions at the Law Society to the extent that processes related to investigations and/or prosecutions intersect with them.

Recommendation 7

The Law Society Tribunal and the Tribunal Committee should explore how to incorporate Indigenous Law principles within its adjudicative and dispute resolution processes and apply them in the appropriate case.

Recommendation 8

Law Society Tribunal adjudicators should receive ongoing training in the history of Indigenous Law in Canada, Indigenous methods of dispute resolution, Indigenous ceremony and protocols, the Independent Assessment Process and other relevant related topics.

OTHER LAW SOCIETY FUNCTIONS

Recommendation 9 – Practice Supports

The Law Society should ensure that guidance and education is available for lawyers and paralegals who serve Indigenous clients who have experienced trauma arising from the Indian Residential School experience, the Sixties Scoop or the Day Schools settlement to assist in their competent representation of these individuals.

Discussion of the Recommendations

GENERAL

Recommendation 1

The Law Society:

- 1. must make an organizational commitment to establish and maintain a culturally competent regulatory process, and
  - 2. should consider establishing a new office to support the work that the Law Society undertakes pursuant to its mandate when that work involves Indigenous communities and to create a culturally safe environment.
22. As an organization, the Law Society needs to demonstrate competence in working effectively across cultures.
23. To ensure Law Society services are provided competently to members of Indigenous communities specifically, and in a culturally sensitive manner, staff dealing directly with members of Indigenous communities should have a sufficient understanding of Indigenous culture, beliefs and values, which will engender appropriate communication and interaction.

Convocation - Law Society Review Panel on Regulatory and Hearing Processes Affecting Indigenous Peoples Report

24. The loss of culture, language and mutually respectful relationships between Indigenous and non-Indigenous communities has led to social challenges for Indigenous people, which can impact interaction with an organization like the Law Society. The Law Society needs to gain a meaningful understanding of the issues affecting Residential School Survivors, other vulnerable Indigenous peoples and Indigenous peoples generally. This requires knowledge of Indigenous ways of knowing, Indigenous Legal Orders, values and interests, and the sensitive history of Residential School abuses that has had a multi-generational impact on the physical, emotional, mental and spiritual condition of first Nation, Inuit and Métis communities and individuals. This responsibility to enhance competence also includes knowledge of the historical and contemporary impacts of colonization on Indigenous communities.
25. Sensitivity to the emotional, spiritual and intellectual needs of complainants who are Residential School Survivors or other vulnerable Indigenous peoples is required. Many survivors have had control taken from their lives and were child victims of physical, psychological and sexual abuse. The Law Society must also recognize and respect that, for complainants, interaction with the organization and its complaints and hearing processes is quite unfamiliar to them and can be exceptionally stressful and difficult.
26. The Law Society has the opportunity to transform itself as an institution to become more relevant and more competent in its work on matters involving Indigenous communities. Beyond the matter of Residential Schools, the Law Society anticipates that other issues may arise (i.e. Day Schools, Day Scholars and the Sixties Scoop cases). Also, Indigenous communities suffer ongoing trauma from Residential Schools and colonization. The First Nations Child and Family Caring Society of Canada case before the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal, for example, illustrates how Residential Schools continue to have an ongoing impact on Indigenous peoples and intergenerational trauma.<sup>2</sup>
27. The Review Panel received valuable insights from many experts with whom the Review Panel consulted. Terry Swan, who is a Cree/Saulteaux/ Métis and currently the Team Lead, Family Information Liaison Unit within the Indigenous Justice Division of the Ontario Ministry of Attorney General, works to compliment the work of the National Inquiry into Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls. She advised that in recognizing that there are power differentials between the Law Society and Indigenous community members who may seek to complain about a lawyer or paralegal, the Law Society needs to understand the path to “cultural safety”.
28. The path begins with cultural awareness, where the differences between what the institution represents and the Indigenous community are respected, which leads to cultural knowledge, or learning, and cultural competence. The path eventually leads to cultural safety for both the institution and members of the Indigenous community who are interacting with the institution. The path to cultural safety is a framework that captures the relationship between legal services and Indigenous experiences of colonization, discrimination and marginalization, and is sensitive to the traumatic repercussions on multiple generations.

29. A commitment to developing cultural awareness and the ability to provide competent services for Indigenous peoples must involve engagement with the necessary Indigenous experts. This engagement could be led by a new office within the Law Society. The office may include the appointment of an appropriate Indigenous person with the right skills and talents to provide leadership in understanding and responding to Indigenous peoples' experience with the Law Society. The office could play a key role in advising on how Law Society programs and services can become inclusive and responsive to the needs of Indigenous communities and their members while similarly raising the competencies of the profession. This office could also be mandated with strengthening relationships between the Indigenous community and the Law Society. Indigenous community outreach in Ontario and the north would be an important part of this office.
30. The Law Society has begun work to create cultural awareness through the adoption of the Indigenous Framework in June 2017 as a critical first step. The Framework is at Tab 2.2.4. While much work needs to be done, the Review Panel was encouraged by the progress that has been made to date on implementing the various components of the Framework in partnership with the Law Society's Indigenous Advisory Group (IAG), the Indigenous Bar Association and other stakeholders such as The Advocates Society. Most importantly, some of these components relate directly to the recommendations in this report. In particular,
  - a. The Law Society is exploring multi-day cultural competence training for benchers and staff using Indigenous methodologies;
  - b. The Law Society has expressed interest in working with the IAG and other partners in developing CPD programs to meet the new CPD requirements on equality, diversity and inclusion required by 2020;
  - c. The Law Society through bencher Dianne Corbiere is participating in the Federation of Law Societies working group examining responses to the TRC Calls to Action as part of a commitment to reconciliation;
  - d. The Law Society will be updating its Practice Guidelines for Lawyers Acting in Cases Involving Claims of Aboriginal Residential School Abuse;
  - e. The Law Society's Senior Indigenous Counsel, Darcy Belisle, has engaged in Law Society Divisional training initiatives for Law Society staff on Indigenous cultural competence;
  - f. Several members of the Review Panel and members of senior staff attended a three-day Indigenous Law Camp in September 2017, led by Professor John Borrows, who is Anishinabe/Ojibway and a member of the Chippewa of the Nawash First Nation in Ontario and Canada Research Chair in Indigenous Law at the University of Victoria Law School; and

Convocation - Law Society Review Panel on Regulatory and Hearing Processes Affecting Indigenous Peoples Report

- g. In partnership with the Indigenous Bar Association and the Law Society, The Advocates' Society has developed the Guide for Lawyers Working with Indigenous Peoples as a resource for litigators working with Indigenous peoples. The Guide includes important historical and cultural elements that provide context for the professional relationships among Indigenous persons, their lawyers and other participants in the justice system
31. The Review Panel believes that for the Law Society, success will be achieved when the Indigenous communities see their identity, culture and laws - their "faces" – reflected and respected in the Law Society and its processes. This transformation, which should align with the commitment to reconciliation, is understood as a long term goal that begins with a vision for the Law Society towards change and is followed by a set of principles that will guide the organization.

COMMUNICATION AND ENGAGEMENT*Recommendation 2*Where complainants are members of Indigenous communities,

- 1. information about the Law Society, its regulatory process and the role of complainants must be available and communicated in an understandable and culturally appropriate way, and
  - 2. depending upon the stage of the complaint matter at the Law Society, communications should include discussion of the issue of remedy from the complainant's perspective (using the complainant vs prosecutorial lens), including the concept of restoration and how that intersects with the Law Society's regulatory mandate.
32. Engagement with members of Indigenous communities should take into account the needs of the complainants and the likelihood that some may be vulnerable and marginalized in society.
33. The hesitation to complain or difficulty in complaining to an authority like the Law Society for some Indigenous people may be a function of culture and an inability of the Law Society to make itself accessible. The fact that some complainants have been marginalized in society means they will have difficulty trusting the system in which the Law Society operates as a legal institution and will have challenges interacting with it. This distrust may arise from the historical experience of Indigenous people where such institutions and their real and perceived authority were used as a means to colonize Indigenous lands, resources and communities.
34. It is also recognized that some complainants perceive or experience a power imbalance as a client in a solicitor-client relationship, especially where the complainant is emotionally and/or physically vulnerable. In the Law Society's complaints and discipline process, without additional steps, the complainant is not a party to the proceeding, has no formal role in the disposition of a case and remains unrepresented. A complainant may also not have the means to hire counsel to help them engage with the process. This experience may in fact contribute to a further imbalance as a systemic issue.

35. Because of these and other factors, Law Society staff, which includes any external parties who may be retained or engaged, should ensure that they are accessible to complainants and that clear lines of communication exist with a person at all times identified as a contact for any inquiry or question. Complainants should be informed about and consulted as much as possible on the progress of the complaint. Law Society staff who work directly with complainants must appreciate the need for the utmost sensitivity in dealings with those complainants who are Residential School Survivors or other vulnerable Indigenous peoples. Communications should be respectful and must not result in further trauma to the complainant. Community support should always be an option for complainants to access throughout the process with the Law Society.
36. Special communication needs and challenges may be presented, such as language barriers, cultural barriers and limited access to telephone service. The services of interpreters may be necessary. In some cases, the integrity of the investigation process on a complaint matter may require that the complainant communicate with the Law Society in their own language, if the complainant so desires. This allows the complainant to tell their story in a way that respects their sharing of information and that will benefit the Law Society in obtaining the information it needs to effectively investigate the matter.
37. Written communications to Indigenous complainants should be provided in an understandable and accessible format and reasonable efforts should be made to follow up to ensure understanding. In this respect, the Law Society should explore creating a lexicon that includes culturally appropriate terms and phrases, and engage with the Leadership, Elders and others in the Indigenous community in this initiative.
38. Communication at all stages of the matter should be timely and effective. This also involves being clear with the complainant about what the Law Society can and cannot remedy and, depending on the circumstances, involving the complainant in the approach to gathering information relevant to the complaint, if appropriate, and explaining the steps and important decisions points. This is especially important at the Law Society Tribunal hearing level if the complainant is to be a witness.

Recommendation 3

The Law Society must do more to engage with Indigenous people in their community to:

1. express the Law Society's commitment to create a trusting relationship, to enable the Law Society to meet its regulatory mandate in ways that respect the culture of the community;

- 2. explore opportunities to partner and build mutually respectful relationships with individuals, organizations and institutions to help the Law Society advance its commitment, and build trust in the community; and
  - 3. explore ways to increase access to justice, including considering the need to develop a cultural liaison with the public.
39. As noted earlier in this report, at the suggestion of the Independent Reviewer and with the agreement of the Chiefs and Elders of Lac Seul First Nation, Review Panel members attended a meeting in Sioux Lookout near the beginning of the Review Panel's mandate, in September 2017. This was an important gathering for the community and an invaluable learning experience for the Review Panel.
40. The Law Society made a commitment at that gathering to work towards a better regulatory process for Indigenous complainants and better relationships with Indigenous communities. This is a long term commitment.
41. To continue the important dialogue that began in September 2017, the Law Society must engage with Leadership, Elders and other Knowledge Keepers to learn and transform the Law Society's regulatory processes in matters involving Indigenous communities. Meetings should take place at appropriate times in the community and at a minimum should involve the Treasurer and others at the Law Society who are in positions to commit to and lead change. In this engagement, the initial approach should be the Law Society's request to be informed, educated and gain understanding. It is hoped that this will set the stage for an open dialogue about the Law Society's obligation to the community as a public interest regulator.
42. In considering ongoing issues, the Review Panel sees a role for the Law Society within its duty to facilitate access to justice to ensure a clear understanding of the Law Society's process and to offer valuable assistance to Indigenous complainants apart from any engagement in individual complaints investigations or prosecutions. In this respect, the Law Society should consider, where appropriate:
- a. retaining local counsel, who is culturally competent, from an Indigenous community for the purpose of assisting the Law Society in communicating information to complainants and to ensure over regular periods of time that the complainants' understanding remains accurate and current, and
  - b. providing funding for independent counsel, perhaps by augmenting the scope of the services of existing legal clinics, to assist complainants in understanding the scope of the Law Society's jurisdiction and to offer advice and, if appropriate, legal assistance, in disputes.
43. These are two examples of potential enhancements to the Law Society's engagement with Indigenous complainants in ways that respect language and culture, with the assistance of those who immediately understand Indigenous culture, language and history.

- 44. The proposals above may help to address the circumstances that arose in the Keshen case. The Review Panel heard that the process of the Tribunal's hearing and cross-examination in particular was extremely difficult for the complainants who became witnesses in the proceedings. In many instances, the process aggravated the trauma they had previously experienced as residential school survivors. Their interactions with the Law Society at the intake, investigative and hearing stages led to their belief that the Law Society intended to help them. The gulf between their hope for assistance and the reality of the true nature of the proceedings left some of the complainants re-traumatized and with a deep resentment of the process and the Law Society.
- 45. At least three factors contribute to consideration of a different approach to complainants like those involved in the Keshen case:
  - a. the complainants were all members of northern First Nations communities, which created logistical challenges for the Law Society based in Toronto and more importantly for the complainants in remote communities;
  - b. the complainants were also Residential School Survivors, which required an approach that would ensure cultural safety; and
  - c. the Law Society had already expressed a commitment to improve the quality of justice for Indigenous peoples, as part of its Indigenous Framework initiative, in keeping with the TRC Calls to Action.
- 46. As such, the two proposals outlined above may be effective in addressing the obligation to assist in complainants' understanding of the Law Society and the Tribunal's process. The hope is that this becomes a practical implementation of the continuing policy objectives that support engagement with Indigenous communities, advanced by the Law Society through practical solutions tailored to the communities' legal needs. The office described in Recommendation 1 would assist in this regard.

SPECIFIC PROFESSIONAL REGULATION FUNCTIONS

Recommendation 4

The Professional Regulation Division should:

- 1. be appropriately resourced to ensure timely, efficient and effective operation of regulatory functions,
- 2. build its capacity to develop formal policies and procedures that flow from decisions of the Tribunal (following all levels of appeal) that raise important regulatory policy issues;
- 3. formulate a plan for the investigation of "major cases" to assist in the management of investigations,
- 4. support prosecutors in developing and refining the skills required to manage and prosecute major cases, and

- 5. ensure all staff have available the necessary mental and emotional supports when working with complainants that are survivors of trauma. This may include but not be limited to the Members Assistance Program.
47. The Professional Regulation Division (“PRD”) of the Law Society is a large department which performs a crucial function in the regulation of lawyers and paralegals. The PRD Executive Director’s responsibilities are extensive and significant in the context of the public interest obligations of the Law Society. The Executive Director’s professional judgment must be exercised in a way that meets the Law Society’s professional regulatory objectives and ensures the integrity of the process that accomplishes that goal.
48. Through this recommendation, the Review Panel acknowledges the efforts currently being made by the CEO to ensure that the Executive Director is given the required support, staff and financial resources to perform her functions to meet the standard required and expected of the Law Society in addressing complaints, including those that require disciplinary measures.
49. The ability to develop policies and procedures as described in Recommendation 4 will enable consistent, informed application of relevant principles, including Indigenous Law principles. For example, the Review Panel discussed the 2013 Law Society Tribunal case involving First Nations lawyer Terence Robinson<sup>3</sup>, in which the discussion of Gladue principles<sup>4</sup> as applicable to the case came at the request of the Hearing Panel. The matter was concluded at the Law Society Tribunal’s Appeal Panel which upheld the application of Gladue principles. In the Review Panel’s view, there is an opportunity to integrate the application of Gladue principles as part of regulatory policy. This approach aligns with the views of the Law Society Tribunal Chair, David Wright, discussed later in this report.
50. With respect to management of major cases, an important feature of planning as described is communication and consultation. It is understood that there needs to be early

<sup>3</sup> Mr. Robinson pled guilty to a criminal charge of aggravated assault. At his discipline hearing, he agreed that the facts underlying his conviction amounted to conduct unbecoming a lawyer. The Hearing Panel imposed a two-year suspension as a penalty. He appealed this penalty with the primary ground of appeal being the application of Gladue principles. The Appeal Panel granted the appeal and substituted a penalty of 12 months suspension which was already served at the time the appeal was heard. The case may be accessed at <https://www.canlii.org/en/on/onlst/doc/2013/2013onlsap18/2013onlsap18.html?autocompleteStr=robinson&autocompletePos=1> communication and consultation between investigators and prosecutors. The challenge is designing and supervising a process in which limited discipline resources are applied to the highest priority files, and doing so in a way that empowers investigation staff and complements their skill set. Creating the appropriate plan will avoid situations in which, for example, work is shifted from investigations to discipline, or where work is duplicated in a way that may undermine the efforts of Investigation managers.

51. Elements of such an approach might include the following:
  - a. Defining a “major case”, which would involve consideration of such factors as the complexity of the issues, the volume of complaints, the resources needed to properly manage the case, the time needed to complete the investigation and risk to the public;
  - b. Considering how to improve the current model to facilitate early communication and consultation between investigators and prosecutors to promote the efficient use of investigative and prosecutorial resources; and
  - c. Identifying the exceptional administrative and personnel needs associated with major cases, and the related resources, and recommendations as to how they should be managed to guide future investigations.

52. Based on information the Review Panel received, the following would be important aspects of a major case plan:
  - a. Planning the approach to the case, including appropriate timelines, assignments and required resources;
  - b. Establishing procedures, processes and protocols;
  - c. Observing established processes and protocols, including
    - i. the overall responsibility of the team lead,
    - ii. responsibility of the team lead for decision-making,
    - iii. when decision-making must be elevated, and
    - iv. reporting requirements, and varying from them only in exceptional circumstances and with full knowledge of the reasons for doing so;
  - d. Regular updates to all staff involved on the progress of the case, including updates on specific challenges; and
  - e. Regular communication and updates with the complainant(s).

53. With respect to supports for prosecutors, these measures should include the following:
  - a. Providing educational opportunities to prosecutors in the management and prosecution of major cases, such as exploring attendance at courses in this area conducted by the Ministry of the Attorney General of Ontario or by the Public Prosecution Service of Canada; and
  - b. Encouraging prosecutors to increase their experience level with larger cases through exploring secondments to other prosecutorial offices, such as the Crown Law Office – Criminal, or the office of the Crown Attorney in Toronto, perhaps with a corresponding exchange to maintain the number of prosecutors in both offices.

54. The Review Panel heard comment on information “silos”, which was language used by some of the Law Society staff interviewees to describe a source of difficulty they experienced in managing their responsibilities in the Keshen matter. Relevant information within the Professional Regulation Division (PRD) should be shared and processes instituted to do so in an effective and appropriate way to eliminate unhelpful “information silos”.
55. The Law Society should also consider a review of current policies restricting the dissemination of useful information among the PRD and other Divisions, including, for example, Practice Audits. There may be many legitimate reasons for not sharing certain types of information between departments. However, current policies should be reviewed to ensure that there continues to be a sound public interest rationale for a department to decline to provide or receive pertinent information from another department. This will contribute to a better understanding of the basis for any restriction.

Recommendation 5

The Law Society should:

1. take the necessary steps to ensure that anyone who investigates complaints at the Law Society involving Indigenous licensees or complainants, in addition to required investigatory experience and skills, is culturally competent to perform these investigations and has the necessary resources available to engage appropriately with members of the Indigenous communities in this process; and
  2. explore ways to incorporate principles of Indigenous Legal Systems into
    - a. dispute resolution resources available to Law Society investigators, which may be applied in appropriate cases, and
    - b. prosecutorial and dispute resolution resources available to Law Society prosecutors, which may be applied in appropriate cases.
56. First steps should be to enrich the education of staff with initial training, and ensure appropriate resources are offered to the relevant staff. This will involve engagement with the Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee and should involve working with Indigenous community partners, like the Indigenous Advisory Group and others. It is also recognized that competency of the Law Society staff to engage in this way is not accomplished at any one point in time. It is a continuum of learning - a “journey”.
57. Ms. Swan noted that empathy for the circumstances of Survivors drives cultural safety, described earlier in this report. Achieving cultural competency in this progression to cultural safety involves a number of important steps for those working with Survivors, including:
- a. understanding complex trauma;
  - b. understanding institutional trauma;
  - c. employing grounding techniques for the Survivors, where, for example, they are given the opportunity to have whomever they wish as support in the room; and

- d. making sure that appropriate breaks are taken when working closely with the Survivors and their issues.
58. Ms. Swan also referred to becoming “trauma-informed” and approaching matters from this perspective. She advised that the recognition and understanding of trauma translates into responses to the individual that integrates knowledge about trauma in practices, procedures and settings.
59. In terms of the integration of Indigenous Law principles into common law practices and procedures, resources are available to the Law Society, including the processes applied in the Independent Assessment Process (IAP)<sup>5</sup> and procedures in the Federal Court Practice Guidelines for Aboriginal Law Proceedings.<sup>6</sup> The Law Society should consider how to adapt and incorporate them in its own regulatory process to improve the manner in which these types of complaints are investigated and prosecuted.
60. The Review Panel was privileged to meet with The Honourable Leonard S. Mandamin, a judge of the Federal Court and an Anishinaabe member of the Wiikwemkoong Unceded Indian Reserve on Manitoulin Island, Ontario. Justice Mandamin was involved in the initiative that resulted in the Federal Court Guidelines. Prior to his appointment to the Federal Court, he was a Provincial Court judge in the Calgary Criminal Division of the Provincial Court of Alberta and presided in the Tsuu T’ina Court which involved a First Nation peacemaker justice initiative and in the Siksika Court at Siksika which also involved traditional First Nation mediation.
61. Justice Mandamin described the touchstones that guide his approach to his First Nations legal work. The first is continuity – ongoing involvement in the community to create relationships, understanding the community, working so that the members of the community understand each other and ensuring good communications within the community. The second is hearing and understanding – making sure people have an opportunity to be heard in the process but also ensuring that as part of being heard, they are being understood. The third is fairness – ensuring that whomever is mediating or deciding a dispute, fairness operates for both or all sides of the matter.
62. In relaying his work that led to applying restorative justice principles, Justice Mandamin referenced the Law Reform Commission of Canada 1996 publication Bridging the Cultural Divide: a report on Aboriginal people and criminal justice in Canada / Royal Commission on Aboriginal Peoples, and its discussion of “creating conceptual space” for Indigenous systems of justice. He also described in some detail the processes used in the Tsuu T’ina Court and in the Siksika Court.

<sup>5</sup> The Indian Residential Schools Adjudication Secretariat published “Expectations of Legal Practice in the IAP” which sets out detailed guidance, stated to supplement the specific rules and guidance in Law Society rules. The Expectations appear in a comprehensive Desk Guide for Legal Counsel Practising in the IAP at <http://www.iap-pei.ca/media/information/publication/pdf/pub/desk-guide-v6-eng.pdf>

63. The Review Panel believes these are examples of approaches and processes that may be options to the Law Society’s adversarial adjudicative model. They should be explored for matters involving Indigenous complainants or Indigenous licensees at the Law Society.
64. The Review Panel also received information on the importance of the right process. Delia Opekokew, a lawyer and a member of the Canoe Lake First Nation in Saskatchewan, met with the Review Panel and discussed her experiences as a Deputy Chief Adjudicator in the IAP process. Her advice was to ensure that the environment for questioning a Survivor is sensitive to their experience, and that questions that relate to their experience as a Survivor be asked in a gentle way.
65. Law Society prosecutors should also have prior knowledge of the traumatic material likely to be heard in certain proceedings, and the benefit of a pre-determined plan to remain as healthy and committed as possible throughout the duration of the proceedings. Ms. Opekokew, in relaying her experience as an adjudicator in the IAP, stressed the importance of self-awareness of the effect of hearing the Survivors’ stories. Supports for those staff directly involved with Survivors as complainants and witnesses should be made available through the Law Society.
66. The Review Panel under Recommendation 1 refers to the visioning exercise for the Law Society to begin the journey to transformative change. This was part of the advice received from Professor Jeffery Hewitt, a Cree, who spoke with the Review Panel about the Law Society’s processes and Indigenous legal orders (in particular Cree and Anishinaabe).
67. In Professor Hewitt’s view, the Law Society has rules and regulations applying to legal practitioners that should be rigorously enforced. These rules and processes should not be suspended or varied from a misguided sense of moral righteousness when dealing with those from the Indigenous community who intersect with those processes. In his view, trying to apply Indigenous law within the Law Society will not fix anything if the underlying architecture of the Law Society’s structure does not change. In determining that change, the questions of why and for whom the Law Society exists are key. Professor Hewitt stated that an examination and the process of change is part of the longer term decolonization work for the Law Society and it is important to include, through both recognition and structure, Indigenous legal orders.

Recommendation 6

The Professional Regulation Division should create the required permanent internal structures and supports to appropriately manage investigations and prosecutions of licensees who are the subject of complaints from Indigenous people and of Indigenous licensees. These structures and supports should extend to other divisions at the Law Society to the extent that processes related to investigations and/or prosecutions intersect with them.

68. The Review Panel is aware that a special First Nations Inuit and Metis (FNMI) team was established within the Professional Regulation Division as an attempt to deal in a co-ordinated way with the numerous complaints the Law Society was receiving from First Nations Residential School Survivors in 2013. The team included staff from various departments within the Division based on the skills and expertise required to deal with the complaints. A number of unique processes were instituted and resources and supports provided over the course of the Keshen investigation and prosecution.<sup>7</sup>

- Extensive resource materials about the IAP, IRSSA, Apology, IRSSA Agreement, Schedule “D”, Financial Administration Act, decisions of the IRS Supervising Judges were prepared by the Executive Director’s Office and shared with team members;
- An educational brochure and video prepared by the Indian Residential School Adjudication Secretariat “Telling your Story” was provided to team members assigned to the Keshen complaints;
- Important IRSSA decisions were brought to attention of team on an ongoing basis
- IRS Health & Cultural Support Workers were available to Survivors and their families during all aspects of our complaint and investigative processes. (e.g. interviews, witness preparation, and at the hearing)
- NAN Legal designated and made available one of its Victim Witness staff to all Law Society Survivor witnesses
- The Division arranged for a male and female Elder from the Treaty #3 territory to be present at each day of the hearing
- Interpreters, drawn from and recommended by the Indigenous community, fluent in the first language and culturally appropriate and respectful of the language, were made available during investigative meetings and interviews
- The Professional Regulation Division arranged for lawyers to give independent legal advice to survivor witnesses re: confidentiality etc.
- NAN Legal agreed to offer legal services to any Law Society complainant Survivor
- Aboriginal Legal Services upon request made legal assistance available to Survivor complainants
- Lawyers were retained to meet with and provide legal advice to Survivor complainants prior to testifying in the proceedings
- A 1-800- number was offered as a direct line to Intake staff person who was member of the dedicated team; this number was for Indigenous people alone. IRS Health Support Workers agreed to share the number with Survivors and Indigenous people
- The Compensation Fund Department set up a 1-800 number that Indigenous people could use that would provide direct access to counsel who was a member of the Team, available to assist them in making an application and to answer questions; a simplified application form was developed that was prepopulated with a synopsis of the investigation that the Indigenous claimant could look at, review, agreed, modify or augment

Convocation - Law Society Review Panel on Regulatory and Hearing Processes Affecting Indigenous Peoples Report

69. However, there were gaps in approaches, despite efforts that were well-intentioned, which may have exacerbated the difficulties some complainants were experiencing in understanding the Law Society role and processes. An aggressive timeline for the investigation and a number of staff changes at crucial stages of the investigation and prosecution were elements added to an already complex process.
70. Based on information received from Law Society staff in the course of its review, the Review Panel recognized that the Law Society was doing its best to address a unique situation in processing and investigating complaints. However, the Law Society was not able to rely on any established culturally-informed process for working with and supporting complainants who were Residential School Survivors from northern First Nations communities or dealing with the complexity of the issues that were presented by the community members.
71. A required level of knowledge and expertise in Indigenous culture to deal with demanding investigations and the unique circumstances of Indigenous complainants is necessary. The Law Society needs learn from the efforts it undertook to establish these and other procedures as process standards within the Division.
72. The Review Panel believes the Law Society should explore the following:
- a. Specialized teams that are appropriately trained;
  - b. Comprehensive professional resources across departments covering a range of topics and subjects;
  - c. Established advisory channels with the Indigenous community in ways that respect the principles of fairness and independence of the Law Society's regulatory process); and
  - d. Personal resources for both the Law Society staff and Indigenous complainants or licensees for required support.
73. For example, it may be appropriate to explore establishing a specialized support unit for victims who are complainants. The role of the team would be to provide information generally about the Law Society process and make referrals for counselling or other support resources.
74. In cases involving vulnerable complainants where actual harm is capable of resulting from their appearance as witnesses, the Law Society should consider a specialized analysis that is aimed at determining whether the public interest requires that vulnerable complainants appear as witnesses. This analysis may include:
- a. identifying with precision the nature of the true harm sought to be addressed through the use of the regulatory hearing process;
- The Compensation Fund department reviewed and revised its forms to use plain language and developed an information sheet specifically for the Indigenous applicant.

- b. considering whether the public interest requires a regulatory hearing to address that harm, given that there is a potential for adverse impact upon vulnerable witnesses at both the investigative and hearing stages;
  - c. if a hearing is necessary, ascertaining whether the presentation of the case could be configured in such a way as to avoid the appearance of vulnerable witnesses; and
  - d. if the public interest required that vulnerable witnesses appear, determining whether alternate methods are available through which their evidence could be presented to minimize the adverse effects arising from their appearances.
75. If the Law Society is not required to compel a witness because they voluntarily choose to testify<sup>8</sup>, the Law Society should ensure that the consent of the witness to appear is fully informed and that the process is fully understood. Further, as a component of the assessment of whether vulnerable witnesses should be requested to testify in a conduct hearing, the Law Society should take into account the possibility that further counselling after the hearing may be required and recognize that it should share in the potential cost of making that assistance available.
76. A fully informed consent would ensure that the witness has an adequate understanding of the purpose of the hearing, the true jurisdictional scope of the Tribunal and the Law Society, the issues raised in the allegations, the general function of witnesses and the areas in which the witnesses can be expected to be examined in chief and cross-examined. In certain cases where the complainant is a client of the lawyer appearing before the Tribunal, this advice should include an explanation of the potential nature of the cross-examination by the lawyer or their counsel, which may include other matters disclosed within the solicitor-client relationship.
77. Providing this advice may require retaining counsel for the witness who can provide neutral explanations and independent advice, both for the benefit of the witness and the protection of the Law Society. In the Keshen case, the Law Society hired independent counsel to be available to Survivor witnesses to give them independent legal advice. The advice was limited to whether or not they wished to give evidence and protecting the confidentiality of the witnesses' identity and evidence. Independent counsel was not otherwise involved in the prosecution.
78. Generally, procurement processes and protocols should be established for the retention of external counsel, where required, who are engaged to work on files involving Indigenous complainants or Indigenous licensees, to ensure appropriate competencies for this work.

Recommendation 7

The Law Society Tribunal and the Tribunal Committee should explore, with the assistance of Indigenous Law experts, how to incorporate Indigenous Law principles

within its adjudicative and dispute resolution processes and apply them in the appropriate case.

79. The following excerpt from the oral reasons for decision of the Law Society Tribunal Hearing Panel<sup>9</sup> concluding the Keshen prosecution describes the Hearing Panel's approach to its adjudicative process in this case:

[17] Within the limits of the process we have to follow under the law and considering the rights of the parties to the hearing – the Law Society and Mr. Keshen -- we tried to incorporate Anishinaabe culture and values into the process. We arranged the hearing room in a circle and made sure the circle had a central place for community members attending. We have valued the openings, closings, smudging and advice from Elders and the support and advice from health support workers. We tried to ensure that to the extent possible we engaged with community members present on a personal level, avoiding discussions about the subject of the hearing. The panel was honoured to attend a sweat lodge in the evening after one of our early hearing dates.

[18] We are grateful for the willingness to teach us about and allow us to participate in your culture, history and traditions and your understanding when we made mistakes. We tried very hard to learn, to listen in a good way to the Elders and to the witnesses and the submissions. We know, though, that the hearing did not meet what many of you were hoping for.

[19] We have tremendous respect for the residential school survivors who told us their stories during the hearing. We come away with a deeper understanding of the terrible impact of residential schools on those forced to attend them and on their families and communities. We saw how that impact continues throughout survivors' lives and in many generations. We were struck by the courage of those survivors in putting their stories down on paper as part of the hearing process and we heard how, for many, Canada's legal processes did not bring the closure and healing they were hoping for. We reflected on how important it is for those representing Indigenous peoples to understand, and have the trust and confidence of those communities. We recognize that the process of being examined and cross-examined and questioned by us in this hearing was often stressful and difficult.

Convocation - Law Society Review Panel on Regulatory and Hearing Processes Affecting Indigenous Peoples Report

[20] We recognize that overall, this Tribunal's hearing did not give many complainants and the communities affected the answers they were hoping for. From our perspective as the adjudicators, it seemed that in many ways that came from the adversarial process, with the parties' roles built on the criminal law model. It appeared to leave many witnesses feeling they couldn't tell their stories the way they wanted to and that it was held in a way disconnected from Anishinaabe culture. We often wished we could adapt the process to something that would allow the survivors to tell their stories in a more meaningful way for them. That was hard given the legal constraints and that the issues in the hearing were mostly about whether Mr. Keshen did things wrong and should be punished and whether the Law Society had been fair to him.

[21] We have seen in this process how important it is that administrative tribunals that serve Indigenous people and communities build the trust of those communities. Although we have done some work in this, including a recent training session for all adjudicators at our Tribunal, we recognize as individuals, as adjudicators of the Law Society Tribunal and decision makers in the Canadian justice system that we have more learning and thinking to do in this regard. We see how those involved in the administration of justice need to pay much more attention to how we serve Canada's Indigenous peoples.

80. As indicated above, the Tribunal Panel recognized that it has more learning and thinking to do to build trust with Indigenous communities.

81. As the above excerpt indicates, a number of steps were taken during the hearing process in the Keshen case, some arranged by the Law Society Tribunal, to accommodate complainants and adopt special processes for this hearing.<sup>10</sup> The Review Panel believes

<sup>10</sup> These steps included the following (some already referred to earlier in this report):

- The hearing took place in Kenora (and the panel offered to hold hearings in other communities).
- A room was provided at the hearing site for survivors to meet with health support workers.
- Many witnesses had a health support worker or other support person sit next to them during testimony.
- Elders were present throughout the hearing, conducted openings, closings and smudging throughout the day for all participants, provided support to witnesses on request and feedback to the panel.
- The Law Society retained counsel to advise survivors on confidentiality issues, and all survivors were given the option to have their names, testimony and exhibits referring to them not public, which most accepted.
- The room was arranged in a circle rather than a traditional courtroom style.
- The panel asked participants not to stand when the panel entered and left the room and the lawyers not to stand when making submissions/questioning witnesses.

the Tribunal should build on this experience and institutionalize certain features of this approach for cases involving Indigenous complainants or Indigenous licensees who are the subject of a complaint that results in a hearing before the Tribunal.

82. The Tribunal should determine the most effective method of including Indigenous perspectives in the adjudicative process. This will involve understanding the nature of dispute resolution systems of Indigenous people and determining how they may be applied within the current more adversarial approach to Law Society discipline.
83. As the Review Panel learned, this is a crucial point to understand. It is not within the Indigenous community's cultural norms to enter into an adversarial exercise. This type of process to resolve disputes is not aligned with Indigenous culture, ways of knowing or values. As such, the Law Society needs to determine a different approach and how Indigenous perspectives can be included and reconciled in the Law Society's hearing process. The wisdom of experience shared by Justice Mandamin and summarized in the discussion under Recommendation 5 is relevant here.
84. The Review Panel received the advice of the chair of the Law Society Tribunal, David Wright. He indicated that on a go forward basis, the Law Society needs to approach solutions in a spirit of reconciliation. For example, he indicated that the Law Society needs to explore the Indigenous legal principles that would advance the Law Society's learning about alternatives to the classic litigation model and the approaches that might be adapted in the hearing process. Mr. Wright indicated that the current Rules of Practice and Procedure adopted by Convocation provide that the civil rules of evidence apply to Tribunal proceedings. However, as a policy discussion, the application of the Statutory Power and Procedures Act (SPPA) specifically, discussed below, and the proceedings of other adjudicative tribunals might be an appropriate subject of further study.

- The Tribunal sat late or started early and took extended breaks to accommodate witness requests and schedules. Scheduling of particular witnesses was flexible.
  - On several occasions the Tribunal purchased food for witnesses. For one survivor witness, the panel funded transportation home as the witness had no other way to get home.
  - The panel asked and reframed questions from lawyers to witnesses to ensure understanding, plain language and reduce the adversarial tone.
  - The panel and clerks wore casual attire and encouraged counsel to do the same, upon request of community members/Elders.
  - For one witness, the panel chair sat next to the witness at her request.
  - The panel attended a sweat lodge, upon request of community members/Elders.
  - The panel consulted with Elders, health support workers and experts on process.
  - Before the settlement was reached, the Tribunal raised with the parties the possibility of Elder assistance to the panel in deliberations (submissions were to be made later). Elders were consulted in deliberations about the joint submission with consent of the parties, and participated in the invitation to attend process.

Convocation - Law Society Review Panel on Regulatory and Hearing Processes Affecting Indigenous Peoples Report

85. Mr. Wright advised that the Tribunal, through the Tribunal Committee, is working on a new set of rules and practice directions to be presented to Convocation that will be more flexible, user-friendly and plain language.
86. In the spirit of this ongoing work, consideration should be given to developing practice directions that make clear what is currently permissible within the Law Society Tribunal Hearing Division Rules of Practice and Procedure, but which may not be widely understood. This may include, for example,
  - a. permitting a witness to testify with a support worker nearby;
  - b. permitting a witness to testify outside the hearing room by closed circuit television or behind a screen;
  - c. allowing a victim's statement (done currently by affidavit) in certain cases to be admitted as evidence for the truth of its content; and
  - d. requiring the cessation of any part of an examination or cross-examination of a witness that is, in the opinion of the adjudicator, abusive, repetitive or otherwise inappropriate.
87. The Tribunal Committee should also explore the possibility of a rule that would permit the appointment of a lawyer to cross-examine a witness if the subject licensee at the hearing is unrepresented.
88. Mr. Wright advised that testifying by video is already proposed in the new draft rules for the Tribunal (to be reported to Convocation later this year) and is part of current practice. Written evidence-in-chief is permitted in the often-used ability to call a witness's evidence-in-chief by affidavit.
89. Mr. Wright also advised that subsection 23(2) of the SPPA allows a Tribunal to "reasonably limit further examination or cross-examination of a witness where it is satisfied that the examination or cross-examination has been sufficient to disclose fully and fairly all matters relevant to the issues in the proceeding." The ability to use this and other sections of the SPPA that allow for departures from the civil rules of evidence will be a decision for Convocation. In that respect, the Tribunal Committee may wish to consider whether the current Rules that apply the civil rules of evidence and thereby exclude the SPPA evidence provisions should continue.
90. Earlier in this report, the Review Panel noted that in the Law Society's process, the complainant is not a party to the Tribunal proceeding and is not represented. David Wright advised that he saw no impediment, other than funding, to Indigenous complainants having independent counsel available to advise them throughout the hearing process. The Review Panel understands that any funding for counsel for complainants or respondents should be the responsibility of the Law Society, and not the Tribunal, to protect the Tribunal's impartiality and neutral role.<sup>11</sup> The Review Panel suggests that the availability of counsel as described should be explored.

91. With respect to applying procedures that integrate Indigenous traditions and beliefs, Mr. Wright's advice was that this could be implemented within the Tribunal process. His view was that the appropriate process would be best implemented after extensive consultation and under the leadership or co-leadership of Indigenous lawyers and paralegals, and other relevant stakeholders. The Tribunal pre-hearing process is highly flexible and the proposals for the new rules promote flexibility in process and responsiveness to individual cases. The Review Panel recognizes that it is important to have clear statutory and rule authority for processes that are implemented.
92. As noted earlier, resources are available to the Law Society, including the processes applied in the Independent Assessment Process and procedures in the Federal Court Guidelines. The Law Society should consider how to adapt and incorporate these processes in its own hearing process to improve the manner in which these types of cases are heard.
93. For example, the Federal Court Guidelines provide that, for cross-examination of Elders, "The special context of the testimony of Elders suggests that alternative ways of questioning on cross-examination should be explored in appropriate cases. This exploration should be done on consent of the parties or on direction of the Case Management Judge." In referencing these Guidelines, Justice Mandamin described circumstances where the adjudicator, rather than the examining counsel, asks the questions of the Elder where circumstances may warrant such an approach. Another example may be the use of an independent examiner who, with the consent of both parties, would examine the witness and provide the evidence through an affidavit or oral testimony.
94. Mr. Wright advised that he saw no impediments to exploring how such practices could be incorporated in the Tribunal processes. He indicated that the Tribunal's protocols and policies should respond to the particular issues involving Indigenous peoples that can arise in different Tribunal cases - Indigenous lawyers and paralegals as respondents, Indigenous complainants who are represented by lawyers and paralegals as individuals, and Indigenous governments and communities as complainants about the legal services they received. Given the fact that the Gladue principles have been recognized as applying to penalty at the Tribunal, Mr. Wright believes it is essential that best practices for applying Gladue in the professional regulatory context be part of any policy.

95. The Tribunal should determine how to ensure the appointment to the Tribunal of otherwise qualified adjudicators who are Indigenous or who have experience with Indigenous legal issues and/or the Indigenous communities. This would involve the Tribunal Chair in establishing criteria and recruiting the right members. This may evolve to take the form of an 'expert panel' within the Tribunal from which adjudicators with relevant experience may be assigned to hearings.
96. The Tribunal should also consider the merits of a guideline for the composition of Tribunal hearing panels convened to hear conduct applications relating to complaints from Indigenous people or where the licensee is Indigenous. In this respect, consideration will be required of the nexus between the current process to select panels and the experience and competence required, and how to address discretionary powers and codification of the process around the selection of panel members, with fairness as the overarching principle to be observed.

Recommendation 8

Law Society Tribunal adjudicators should receive ongoing training in the history of Indigenous Law in Canada, Indigenous methods of dispute resolution, Indigenous ceremony and protocols, the Independent Assessment Process and other relevant related topics.

97. There are a number of efforts that could be undertaken to ensure competency among adjudicators for these matters.
98. The Tribunal should consider the merits of a competency matrix for trainers for adjudicators on Indigenous Law, dispute resolution processes and protocols and customs that may be relevant to the Tribunal process.
99. As the design and implementation of training for adjudicators is one of the responsibilities of the Tribunal Chair, the Law Society should refer this issue to David Wright for review and implementation.
100. The Review Panel notes that, as noted earlier, under the Indigenous Framework approved by Convocation in June 2017, Law Society staff and benchers are to have the opportunity to access cultural competency training within the Law Society that includes unconscious bias, the history and legacy of Residential Schools, the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, Treaties and Aboriginal rights, Indigenous Laws, Aboriginal-Crown relations and basic cultural protocols.

OTHER LAW SOCIETY FUNCTIONS

Recommendation 9 – Practice Supports

The Law Society should ensure that guidance and education is available for lawyers and paralegals who serve Indigenous clients and in particular individuals who have experienced trauma arising from the Indian Residential School experience, the Sixties Scoop or Day Schools to assist in their competent representation of these individuals.

101. While the Law Society's Rules of Professional Conduct and Paralegal Rules of Conduct provide comprehensive guidance on competence in legal practice, the Review Panel believes there is merit to including additional commentary in the rules in relation to the representation of vulnerable clients, such as Residential School Survivors, and recommends that the competence rules be reviewed for this purpose.
102. As stated previously, in 2003, the Law Society created Guidelines for Lawyers Representing Residential School Claimants<sup>12</sup>, updated recently to reflect changes in the Rules of Professional Conduct more generally. The Law Society should review the Guidelines and revise them accordingly as required to ensure they are current and cover the broad scope of representation of those from Indigenous communities who may seek legal assistance as a claimant.
103. The Law Society should also explore partnering with other organizations who have the knowledge and experience to help frame guidance, act as referrals for resources for lawyers or contribute to continuing professional development programs to assist lawyers and paralegals who may serve these clients. A recent example, as noted earlier in this report, is the Guide for Lawyers Working with Indigenous Peoples which is a joint project of The Advocates' Society, the Indigenous Bar Association the Law Society.
104. The Review Panel also notes, as mentioned earlier, that the IRS Adjudication Secretariat has published expectations for legal professionals representing claimants in the IAP process in its Desk Guide for Legal Counsel Practising in the IAP.
105. With respect to CPD, the Review Panel also believes the Law Society should explore targeted CPD offerings that would be mandatory for lawyers who are representing these affected clients.

Concluding Comments

106. As the Review Panel concludes its work, it offers the recommendations in this report in support of the Law Society's commitment to the First Nations communities in Northern Ontario to listen, learn and engage in respectful and ongoing dialogue. This will help to make the Law Society an organization that is responsive to Indigenous communities and how they and the Law Society may interact.

107. As noted in this report, the Law Society will achieve success in its journey to become culturally competent when the Indigenous communities see their identity, culture and laws as part of the Law Society and its processes. This is central to the Law Society's ongoing commitment to reconciliation. The vision for change described earlier in this report will be advanced through the principles that underlie the recommendations, which focus on processes and procedures that are inclusive of Indigenous perspectives.
108. The Review Panel will be returning to Sioux Lookout with the Treasurer in mid-June 2018 to meet once again with the Leadership of a number of First Nations in the north, Elders and Residential School Survivors and to present this report. The Review Panel looks forward to this second opportunity to visit the community and listen to the views and stories of those in attendance. The hope is that the Review Panel can convey the message that the report represents the Law Society's commitment to becoming a more culturally competent organization on Indigenous histories, experiences, cultures and affairs, in an effort to build mutually respectful relationships with Indigenous communities.

REVIEW PANEL TERMS OF REFERENCE

OFFICE OF THE TREASURER MEMORANDUM

TO: ALL BENCHERS
FROM: TREASURER
DATE: JUNE 27, 2017
RE: REVIEW PANEL ON REGULATORY AND HEARING PROCESSES AFFECTING INDIGENOUS PEOPLES

The experience of the Law Society of Upper Canada in Law Society of Upper Canada v. Keshen (“Keshen”) raised questions about the Law Society’s regulatory and hearing process in relation to Indigenous persons, complaints, and issues. We need to listen and learn from our historical experiences in dealing with Indigenous issues and review and reform our processes to accommodate the unique historical and cultural circumstances of Indigenous peoples and Indigenous approaches to conflict resolution.

I am therefore today establishing a Review Panel to undertake an immediate review of the way in which the Law Society and its Tribunal address regulatory matters involving Indigenous issues. The review is intended to identify issues and make recommendations on opportunities for inclusion of Indigenous perspectives.

The Review Panel shall consist of:

- Dianne Corbiere, Bencher, Co-Chair
- Julian Falconer, Bencher, Co-Chair<sup>1</sup>
- Robert Burd, Bencher
- Teresa Donnelly, Bencher
- Isfahan Merali, Bencher
- Kathleen Lickers, Co-Chair of the Indigenous Advisory Group
- Elder Advisor Myeengun Henry, Co-Chair of the Indigenous Advisory Group

The review of the Law Society's complaints, investigation, prosecution and adjudication processes will include:

- an analysis of the effects on Indigenous complainants of the processes used to gather, assess, introduce and submit evidence during investigations and hearings;
- consideration of the nature and goals of prosecutions that involve Indigenous people and Indigenous communities;
- consideration of the differences that exist between Indigenous perspectives regarding conflict resolution, and the traditional approach of the Law Society and the Law Society Tribunal to investigation, discipline and adjudication
- how to incorporate Indigenous perspectives into Law Society complaints, investigation, discipline and Tribunal processes and procedures;
- consideration of cultural competence at the Law Society, and opportunities for training and development;
- consideration of the use of expertise on Indigenous issues by Law Society staff, the Tribunal and outside counsel, and opportunities to enhance the use of expertise where required;
- consideration of the Law Society's approach to regulating licensees in rural or remote communities, with particular focus on those who serve Indigenous communities or address Indigenous legal issues; and
- identification of proactive and possible remedial measures to address the impacts of licensee misconduct on Indigenous complainants and their communities.

In conducting its review, the Review Panel will conduct interviews with key stakeholders, including Law Society staff and members of the Law Society Tribunal (in a manner consistent with its independence). Within eight weeks of its appointment, the Review Panel, and the Independent Reviewer described below, will each prepare a Workplan, both of which will be provided to me, outlining the anticipated scope of their work, including interviews, and the procedures to be undertaken to gather information to complete their work.

To the extent that there are other major issues that arise as the review is conducted, the Review Panel will identify these to me for consideration as additions to its Terms of Reference, or for further examination in another context.

Convocation - Law Society Review Panel on Regulatory and Hearing Processes Affecting Indigenous Peoples Report

Recommendations

The Review Panel will prepare a written report containing its recommendations for future action to me within six months from the date on which the Workplan is provided to me.

Independent Reviewer

Based upon consultations with the Law Society's Indigenous Advisory Group, I will also be appointing an Independent Reviewer, Ovide Mercredi, former National Chief of the Assembly of First Nations.

Objective

Following the experience in the Keshen matter, there is an immediate need to hear directly from the complainants and Indigenous community stakeholders in an objective and neutral environment. It will also be necessary to learn from their experience in guiding best practices which the Independent Reviewer can help define in consultation with the complainants and other experts. The Independent Reviewer will be supported by the Indigenous Advisory Group wherever necessary.

The mandate of the Independent Reviewer

The mandate of the Independent Reviewer will be to work in tandem with the Review Panel and meet with complainants and residential school survivors, community stakeholders and other experts to provide guidance on a way forward for the Law Society to improve its processes and relations with Indigenous communities. The work of the Independent Reviewer in accordance with his Workplan will be based on the guidance and advice received from the community consultations and our Indigenous Advisory Group.

BACKGROUND

1. The Law Society of Upper Canada (Law Society), as a regulator of all lawyers and licensed paralegals in the province of Ontario, pursuant to its legislative mandate under the Law Society Act R.S.O. 1990, Chapter L.8 (the Act) must have regard to the following duties:
  - To maintain and advance the cause of justice and the rule of law;
  - To act so as to facilitate access to justice for the people of Ontario;
  - To protect the public interest;
  - To act in a timely, open and efficient manner; and
  - Standards of learning, professional competence and professional conduct for licensees and restrictions on who may provide particular legal services should be proportionate to the significance of the regulatory objectives sought to be realized
2. In 2000, consistent with the duties encoded in the Act, the Law Society established a standing committee of Convocation called the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee (now the Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee or EIAC)<sup>2</sup>, to develop policies, programs and initiatives to best serve and promote an inclusive profession. Subject to Convocation's approval, the EIAC's mandate is to develop policy options for the promotion of equity and diversity having to do in any way with the practice of law in Ontario or provision of legal services in Ontario and for addressing all matters related to Indigenous peoples and French-speaking peoples. As a best practice, the EIAC consults with Indigenous peoples, Francophone citizens and other communities in the development of such policy options.
3. As part of the Law Society's efforts over the years to consult with Indigenous peoples, a number of working groups and strategies have been established including Rotiio>taties<sup>3</sup> in 1998.
4. Rotiio>taties was an independent board of Elders, Indigenous lawyers<sup>4</sup>, community representatives and law students who advised various bodies, including the Law Society, on Indigenous issues arising in law and the legal profession. The membership of Rotiio>taties changed over the years until its eventual transition to an Aboriginal Working Group.

5. In 2009 Convocation approved the Final Report of the Indigenous Bar Consultation which identified a number of recommended actions the Law Society could undertake. These recommendations included:
  - Expanding the Members' Annual Report Practice Categories to include Aboriginal Law (to determine how many lawyers in Ontario self-identify as practicing Aboriginal law)
  - Mentoring and Networking Program
  - Continuing Legal Education Course in Aboriginal Law and Issues
  - Certified Specialist Program in Aboriginal Law<sup>5</sup>
6. In 2014, Convocation affirmed its commitment to place emphasis, through the EIAC, on Indigenous issues. In June 2016, the Indigenous Advisory Group<sup>6</sup> (IAG) was established as an independent body to advise the Law Society on the unique issues faced by Indigenous practitioners, paralegals and Indigenous peoples in Ontario and to promote the development of the relationships between Indigenous peoples and Canadian legal structures and institutions in a manner that respects Indigenous values, beliefs and legal systems.
7. In September 2016, the EIAC and the IAG committed to work collaboratively in the development of the Law Society's Indigenous Framework and on November 5, 2016, the EIAC and the IAG held a joint meeting to begin the development of this Indigenous Framework.

INTRODUCTION

8. The Indigenous Framework has been developed in accord with the priorities identified in three key Law Society documents:
  - Convocation's 2015-2019 Strategic Plan, as relevant to the EIAC's mandate;
  - Treasurer's Memorandum to the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee (September 22, 2016); and
  - Approaches for the Law Society of Upper Canada's Responses to the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada (TRC) Final Report (Sept. 2, 2016).<sup>7</sup>

9. The priorities identified in the above documents often intersect and coalesce, helping to shape this Framework into the following Four Pillars:
- Creating and Enhancing Cultural Competency
  - Achieving and Improving Access to Justice
  - Promoting and Supporting Knowledge of Indigenous Legal Systems
  - Taking Action on Reconciliation
10. The development of every initiative by the Law Society within any one of these Four Framework Pillars must be guided through an “Indigenous lens” in order to fully meet the objective of this Framework. The Treasurer, through his Memorandum to the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee, directed the EIAC to develop policies that will ensure an Indigenous lens to all the Law Society does.
11. The IAG define the Indigenous lens as inclusive of the Anishinabe Seven Sacred Laws ; the teachings of the Haudenosaunee of peace, respect, friendship and a good mind; Cree principles compliment the Seven Sacred Laws, are supported by the Métis and the 8 Inuit Qaujimajatuqangit guiding principles.<sup>8</sup> Such principles are :
- Love: To know love is to know peace.
  - Respect: To honour all Creation is to have respect
  - Courage: To face life with courage is to know bravery
  - Honesty: To walk through life with integrity is to know honesty
  - Humility: To accept yourself as a sacred part of Creation is to know humility
  - Wisdom: To cherish knowledge is to know wisdom
  - Truth: To know of these things is to know truth

CREATING AND ENHANCING CULTURAL COMPETENCY<sup>9</sup>

12. The Law Society will work in partnership with the IAG to create and enhance cultural competency recognizing the continued need for licensees to be equipped with the cultural, historical and legal knowledge that will enable the provision of legal services in a manner that supports Indigenous peoples in addressing their unique interests, issues and challenges.
13. The Law Society prioritizes life-long competence for lawyers and paralegals. The Treasurer's Memorandum to the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee further contextualizes this priority, and directs the EIAC to develop programs that will enhance cultural competence internally to the Law Society (staff, Benchers) and the profession (licensees) in dealings with Indigenous peoples.<sup>10</sup>
14. Specific proposed approaches towards supporting cultural competency are detailed in the Approaches for the Law Society of Upper Canada's Responses to the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada Final Report and include knowledge enhancements, working with the Federation of Law Societies of Canada and developing skills-based training and other supports.

I. Creating and Enhancing Knowledge

- a. Ensure Law Society staff and Benchers have the opportunity to access cultural competency training within the Law Society that includes unconscious bias, the history and legacy of residential schools, the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, Treaties and Aboriginal rights, Indigenous laws, Aboriginal-Crown relations and basic cultural protocols.
- b. Ensure licensees have the opportunity to access cultural competency training that includes the history and legacy of residential schools, the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, Treaties and Aboriginal rights, Indigenous laws, and Aboriginal-Crown relations and basic cultural protocols.
- c. Ensure licensees that are required by their employment to engage directly with the Indigenous people of Ontario, undertake cultural competency training which includes the history of residential schools, the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, Treaties and Aboriginal rights, Indigenous laws, and Aboriginal-Crown relations and basic cultural protocols.

<sup>9</sup> To be clear, the language of inter-cultural "competency" comes from the Truth and Reconciliation Calls to Action. In applying the term within this Framework, the IAG is not asking everyone to adopt the cultural practices that are unique to the Indigenous peoples of Ontario, rather, to gain knowledge of and respect for each Indigenous person's right to maintain justice in their own way. The IAG will further develop what is the intended meaning within this Framework and include examination of systemic barriers and anti-racism measures.

<sup>10</sup> Convocation's 2015-2019 Strategic Plan prioritizes life-long competence for lawyers and paralegals. Priorities include enhancing licensing standards, improving and increasing practice supports and considering education beyond traditional Continuing Professional Development formats (e.g. possible multiple-day courses including practical application of knowledge and skills), and working with the professions to develop initiatives that institutionalize mentoring, advisory services and other types of support.

- d. Work with Deans, law faculty and students of Ontario Law Schools and colleges (paralegal education) to enhance their knowledge of a range of subjects, including but not limited to the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, Treaties and Aboriginal rights, Indigenous laws and Aboriginal-Crown relations.
- e. Develop and offer Continuing Professional Development (CPD) programs and legal education sessions independently and in collaboration with partners to illustrate the relevance of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples in Ontario and its relevance to various practice areas.

II. Working with Partners

- a. Participate with other Law Societies in Canada and the Federation of Law Societies in examining whether changes can be made to the National Standards and other licensing requirements to enhance knowledge of a range of subjects, including but not limited to the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, Treaties and Aboriginal rights, Indigenous laws and Aboriginal-Crown relations.
- b. In partnership with the Indigenous Bar Association, examine the codes of professional conduct and the commentaries as well as the Federation Model Code to explore changes, where necessary, to promote reconciliation and culturally competent provision of legal services.
- c. Engage with other legal associations, advocates and professional entities in Ontario to further educate, consult and inform.

III. Developing Skills-Based Training and Other Supports

- a. Support, develop and offer independently and/or in partnership with other providers, skills-based training and practice supports in inter-cultural competency, conflict resolution, human rights and anti-racism.
- b. Support Deans, law faculty and students of Law Schools and Colleges in Ontario regarding how skills-based training in inter-cultural competency, conflict resolution, human rights, and anti-racism can be introduced into experiential learning in Law Schools and Colleges.
- c. Support the Law Society's Equity Legal Education programs—developed, as appropriate, in partnership with Deans, faculty and students of Law Schools as well as Indigenous knowledge keepers, practitioners, organizations and others—to address the legacy of the Indian Residential School experience and Canada's colonialist law and policy, Treaty and Aboriginal Rights, the meaning of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples and current initiatives of First Nations, Métis and Inuit peoples.

ACHIEVING AND IMPROVING ACCESS TO JUSTICE

15. The Law Society will work with the IAG recognizing that achieving and enhancing Access to Justice across Ontario is a key priority of the Law Society. It identifies strategic goals towards increasing collaboration with access to justice partners and other stakeholders as well as developing and implementing a more concrete access to justice action plan.
16. Additional priorities in the Strategic Plan, including engaging stakeholders and the public with responsive communications and increasing organizational effectiveness, will also support enhancing access to justice.
17. An important element of achieving and improving access to justice will be the review and improvement of the Mentoring and Networking Program to ensure it continues to deliver the objectives called for in 2009 by the Final Report of the Indigenous Bar Consultation.
18. The Treasurer's Memo provides further direction on specific priorities in relation to improving access to justice for Indigenous peoples, including improving access to the complaints process for Indigenous communities.
19. Improve the Law Society's hearing and regulatory process, including the Tribunal, in every interaction with Indigenous people.
20. Engage with the Law Society's Legal Aid Working Group to examine and improve the delivery of legal aid to Indigenous people community and address the financial barriers that prohibit meaningful access to justice.
21. Provide support for the National Inquiry into Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls (MMIWG), including:
  - a. Further support for Inquiry processes
  - b. Develop communication materials to promote awareness and access to justice, published in English, French and Indigenous languages.
  - c. Commit to address Inquiry recommendations.
22. Contribute to the elimination of the overrepresentation of Indigenous people in legal proceedings, care and incarceration through a number of channels:
  - a. Supporting the implementation of the recommendations of the Debwewin Implementation Committee's Final Report and Feathers of Hope.
  - b. Considering the results of TAG's cluster on "the Seventh Generation – the Crisis of Aboriginal Children and Youth in Care".

- c. Considering, as a justice system stakeholder, actions the Law Society can take and what collaborative opportunities exist with other stakeholders to promote alternatives to community sanctions, mandatory minimum sentences, bail procedurals and supporting culturally appropriate services to reduce domestic violence, dispute resolution mechanisms, Aboriginal healing lodges and halfway homes.
- d. Undertaking a study on barriers to access to justice in Northern Ontario, including the efficacy and standardization of the preparation of Gladue Reports (across all of Ontario).
- e. Expanding the Guidelines for Lawyers Representing Residential School Claimants to other areas within the Law Society's regulatory scope.

PROMOTING AND SUPPORTING KNOWLEDGE OF INDIGENOUS LEGAL SYSTEMS

23. The Law Society will work with the IAG recognizing that knowledge of Indigenous legal systems is an essential as part of the Law Society's commitment to prioritizing life-long competence and enhancing access to justice for Indigenous peoples. The promotion and support of knowledge of Indigenous legal systems can include:
- a. In response to Call to Action 50, support "the establishment of Indigenous Law institutes for the development, use and understanding of Indigenous laws and access to justice in accordance with the unique characteristics of Aboriginal peoples in Canada."
  - b. Develop and offer Continuing Professional Development (CPD) programs and legal education sessions independently and with partners to support understanding, respect for and application of Indigenous legal systems in Ontario.
  - c. Develop and enhance services available to licensees, including practice supports and learning resources that could provide guidance on Indigenous justice issues, including but not limited to the application of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, Treaties and Aboriginal Rights, and the MMIWG.
  - d. Enhance the Law Society's Lawyer Referral Program and Mentorship to provide support and guidance on Indigenous justice issues.
  - e. Enhance the Member Assistance Program to provide for the well-being of Indigenous licensees in ways that promote and support Indigenous, traditional healing methods.
  - f. Enhance supports for small and solo firm practices within the Indigenous community (i.e. mentoring).

TAKING ACTION ON RECONCILIATION

24. The Law Society recognizes that it will work in partnership with the IAG and be guided by Indigenous knowledge keepers, leaders and citizens, Indigenous practitioners and others, in the development of the Law Society's responses to the Final Report of the Truth and Reconciliation's Calls to Action.
25. The Law Society's priority to engage with stakeholders and the public with responsive communications will support strengthened relationships with Indigenous and non-Indigenous licensees and members of the public, as well as build greater awareness of the Law Society's role in the reconciliation process.
26. Specific proposed actions related to reconciliation are outlined in the TRC Responses document and include:
  - a. A statement of support for the adoption and implementation of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples as a framework for reconciliation.
  - b. A commitment to actively consider opportunities to collaborate with partners, including legal and professional entities in Ontario to extend the impact of the responses the Law Society undertakes and explore how the Law Society can support the work of partners in advancing reconciliation.
  - c. Examine, in partnership with the Indigenous Bar Association, the codes of professional conduct and the commentaries as well as the Federation Model Code to consider changes to promote reconciliation and culturally competent service delivery.

Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee Overview

Barreau
de l'Ontario

EIAC's Purpose and Mandate

---

- 1997 LSO Adopts Bicentennial Report Recommendations
- Creation of standing committee of Convocation dedicated to equity and diversity issues
- By-Law 3, s.122 sets out Committee's mandate:
  - a. Develop for Convocation's approval, policy options for the promotion of equity and diversity having to do in any way with the practice of law or provision of legal services in Ontario and for addressing matters related to Aboriginal peoples and Francophones; and
  - b. To consult with Aboriginal, Francophone and other equality-seeking communities in the development of such policy options.

Purpose of EIAC:

- This mandate is important because licensees and articling students report barriers that limit entry and advancement in the profession based on race, ethnicity, gender, or other personal characteristics
- We have data that supports anecdotal evidence
- The committee works to identify obstacles (often hidden) that contribute to a lack of diversity in the field
- We do this through stakeholder consultation and by consulting with communities impacted by unconscious bias and systemic inequality
- We develop strategies based on consultation to help address barriers that impact licensees and the public in the delivery of legal services

Stakeholders for EIAC Consultations

- Indigenous Advisory Group (IAG)
- Equity Advisory Group (EAG)
- L'Association des juristes d'expression française de l'Ontario (AJEFO)

- Roundtable of Diversity Associations (RODA)
- South Asian Bar Association (SABA)
- Canadian Black Lawyer's Association (CABL)
- Canadian Hispanic Bar Association (CHBA)
- Federation of Asian Canadian Lawyers (FACL)

- Legal Leaders in Diversity and Inclusion (group of Canadian General Counsel)
- Law firms Diversity and Inclusion Network
- Academic institutions
- Social justice organizations.

Background (Data)

- 2016 Canada Census – 29.3% of the Ontario population are a “visible minorities”
- Since 2001, steady increase of racialized lawyers:
  - In 2001, 9.2% of the legal profession was racialized
  - In 2006, 11.5% of the profession was racialized
  - Currently, 22.94% of lawyer and paralegal in licensing process are racialized, 5.74% are Francophone and 1.56% are Indigenous
  - This data comes from licensing process applications

Data

-In developing recent reports, LSO commissioned a number of studies and surveys

- A significant amount of data comes from research by the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group
- That research process included:

What the Data Tells Us: Racialization impacts aspects of professional life

Career Development

- More difficult to secure articling positions
- Less likely to be hired back
- More challenges finding employment generally, as well as in practice area
- Racialized licensees twice as likely to experience slow career advancement
- 40% rank ethnic/racial identity as the most serious barrier to entry to practice
- 43% rank ethnic/racial identity as the most serious barrier to career advancement
- 50% name racial prejudice as having disadvantaged during career
- 42% identify expectations to perform to a higher standard because of racial stereotypes
- 26% report experiencing disrespectful remarks by judges and other lawyers

What the Data Tells Us

Complaints and Discipline

- Higher representation of racialized lawyers in sole practice is significant; 78% of racialized licensees note a lack of mentors and professional networks
- 71% perceive racial stereotyping by clients as a risk factor for discipline
- -70% note lower quality articling positions and inadequate training as putting them at greater risk for complaints and discipline

Firm Interviewing and Hiring Processes

- Equity-seeking groups less likely to article for large private law firms in Toronto
- Students who article at small firms are less likely to be hired back (firm less likely to take on another lawyer)
- Indigenous lawyers more likely to be in sole practice or practice in a legal clinic, education or government and are much less likely to be law firm partners
- 20% of law firm associates are racialized, compared to about 18% of white lawyers - portends growth in the percentage of racialized law firm partners
- Racialized lawyers more likely to be assigned tasks that were beneath their skill level
- 10% of racialized lawyers have been denied an opportunity for a case or file because clients had objected, compared to 4% of non-racialized lawyers.

What the Data Tells Us: Racialization impacts several aspects of professional life

Earnings

- Evidence suggests racialized lawyers earn less, on average, than non-racialized lawyers - difference in the median earnings of racialized and white lawyers is $4,000 between 25 and 29 but grows to more than $40,000 by 40 to 44.
- 2016 Census, racialized women earn 58 cents, and racialized men earn 76 cents, for every dollar a white man earns in Ontario in 2015 (across all industries)
- 45% income gap between Indigenous women and non-Indigenous men, while the average income gap between all Indigenous and non-Indigenous people is 33%
- 2018 Law Society survey respondents: 21% face harassment and discrimination while articling. 1 in 5 face comments/conduct based on personal characteristics during articling.
- 2019 survey by the Law Societies of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba: 1 in 3 articling students and new lawyer respondents experience discrimination and harassment during recruitment or articling

Conclusions Drawn from Data and Recommendations

- Impacts of discrimination are experienced by licensees in various aspects of professional life
- Racialization establishes measurable career challenges for racialized licensees distinct from those of their non-racialized colleagues
- Challenges are rooted in racialized status and many related challenges are compounded and amplified as a consequence of racialization
- Broader data around race and diversity (i.e.. census) support notion that inequality exists
- The Challenges Working Group's 16 recommendations fall within four interrelated categories: accelerating culture shift, measuring progress, educating for change and implementing supports
- The recommendations were developed with the following objectives in mind:
  - Achieve inclusive legal workplaces in Ontario;
  - Reduce barriers created by racism, unconscious bias and discrimination; and
  - Assist in improving representation of racialized licensees, in proportion to the representation in the Ontario population, in the professions, in all legal workplaces and at all levels of seniority
- Most of the recommendations embrace a voluntary approach but speak to the obligation of the Law Society to facilitate and provide leadership in the area of EDI

Indigenous Framework

- 2017 - All LSO initiatives are to be designed using this framework
- Ensures that indigenous communities see their identity, culture and laws reflected in the LSO
- Acknowledges importance of LSO ensuring its approach is consistent with Indigenous, Inuit and Metis traditions and laws

Review Panel on Regulatory and Hearing Processes Affecting Indigenous Peoples

- 2017 – the Review Panel identified issues and made recommendations regarding regulatory and hearing processes at the LSO involving Indigenous, Inuit and Metis people
- Prompted by experience in LSUC v. Keshen.
- Ultimate goal of implementing recommendations to become culturally competent and support broader change in the interest of Indigenous communities

Common Goals of Challenges Report, Indigenous Framework and Review Panel

Pursuing diversity, inclusion and cultural competence is directly linked to the LSO purpose:

The Law Society governs Ontario's lawyers and paralegals in the public interest by ensuring that the people of Ontario are served by lawyers and paralegals who meet high standards of learning, competence and professional conduct.

- The 3 reports recognized a fundamental need for the LSO to better serve all people of Ontario
- We are pursuing this goal using equity initiatives by:
  - Building and supporting a diverse profession (removing barriers to entry and career advancement) that can better serve diverse communities
  - Having enhanced regulatory processes that address the persistent effect of historical oppression in disenfranchising members of the public and the profession (recommendations of the Review Panel and Indigenous Framework)
  - Promoting a high standard of professional conduct by ensuring that all lawyers and paralegals have equal opportunity to seek out mentorship, a foundation of good practice which is often achieved in larger firms/organizations with HR/mentorship infrastructure.

Re.: Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Overview

1. Funded by the Law Society of Ontario, the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel (DHC) Program operates at arm's length, and is available free-of-charge to the Ontario public, lawyers, paralegals and students. The DHC derives its mandate and authority from By-law 11- Regulation of Conduct, Capacity and Professional Competence Part II.
2. In May 1997, the Law Society adopted the Bicentennial Report and Recommendations on Equity Issues in the Legal Profession which has since guided the Law Society's efforts to advance equity and diversity in the legal profession. One of the report's recommendations speaks to the creation of a "safe counsel" program for "victims of discrimination and harassment" that would operate independent of the Law Society.
3. On September 1, 1999, the DHC began operating as a pilot project. In June 2001, after a review of the program, the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel was established as a permanent initiative.
4. While operating at arms-length, the DHC forms an integral part of the Law Society's equity initiatives and regulatory functions. The DHC's role is primarily to support complainants and the resources of the DHC have been focused in this area.
5. The DHC assists anyone who may have experienced discrimination or harassment based on human rights grounds by a lawyer, paralegal or student member of the Law Society. Since its creation, the DHC has been bilingual. The DHC is not an in-house employee of the Law Society and as per By-law 11, information received by the DHC is kept confidential. The only information provided to the Law Society is anonymous statistical data showing the number and type of complaints and anonymous demographic data about complainants.
6. The DHC's role is to:
  - Listen to concerns

- Clarify issues
  - Provide information and advice
  - Review options and avenues of recourse (e.g. filing a complaint with the Law Society, filing an application with the Human Rights Tribunal of Ontario)
  - Explain the advantages and disadvantages of each option
  - Provide referrals to other resources that may be of assistance.
7. Upon request, the DHC may attempt to resolve issues through intervening informally as a neutral facilitator or by conducting formal mediation. Mediation is a voluntary process and requires the consent of all parties.
8. The DHC does not have investigative powers and does not operate a formal complaints process that involves fact-finding. The DHC does not provide legal advice or legal representation and cannot make referrals to lawyers or paralegals.
9. There are currently two Alternate DHCs.
10. The DHC provides regular reports to Committee as outlined in By-law 11:

Annual and semi-annual report to Committee

20. (1) Unless the Committee directs otherwise, the Counsel shall make a report to the Committee,

(a) not later than January 31 in each year, upon the affairs of the Counsel during the period July 1 to December 31 of the immediately preceding year; and

(b) not later than September 1 in each year, upon the affairs of the Counsel during the period January 1 to June 30 of that year

11. The public semi-annual report (TAB 2.1) is presented to EIAC for information. This report also goes to Convocation for information. There is a supplemental, confidential report that includes additional details about the activities of the DHC. The confidential report is attached at TAB 2.2.

A. INTRODUCTION

1. Under their respective Rules of Professional Conduct and Paralegal Rules of Conduct, lawyers and paralegals licensed in Ontario have legal and ethical obligations as professionals to deliver their services and engage in and conduct their employment practices in a manner that is free of discrimination and harassment.
2. Rules 6.3 and 6.3.1 of the Rules of Professional Conduct set out these professional obligations as follows:
  - 6.3-3 A lawyer shall not sexually harass a colleague, a staff member, a client, or any other person.
  - 6.3.1-1 A lawyer has a special responsibility to respect the requirements of human rights laws in force in Ontario and, specifically, to honour the obligation not to discriminate on the grounds of race, ancestry, place of origin, colour, ethnic origin, citizenship, creed, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity, gender expression, age, record of offences (as defined in the Ontario Human Rights Code), marital status, family status, or disability with respect to professional employment of other lawyers, articled students, or any other person or in professional dealings with other licensees or any other person.
  - 6.3.1-2 A lawyer shall ensure that no one is denied services or receives inferior service on the basis of the grounds set out in this rule.
  - 6.3.1-3 A lawyer shall ensure that their employment practices do not offend rule 6.3.1-1, 6.3.1-2 and 6.3-3.
3. These Rules of Professional Conduct are supplemented by 29 paragraphs of commentary that provide guidance on the interpretation and application of these Rules and outline how they are anchored in equivalent legal obligations under the provincial Human Rights Code and Occupational Health and Safety Act.
4. Rule 2.03 of the Paralegal Rules of Conduct holds paralegals to professional standards of human rights compliance as follows:

(3) A paralegal shall not engage in sexual or other forms of harassment of a colleague, a staff member, a client or any other person on the ground of race, ancestry, place of origin, colour, ethnic origin, citizenship, creed, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity, gender expression, age, record of offences, marital status, family status or disability.

(4) A paralegal shall respect the requirements of human rights laws in force in Ontario and without restricting the generality of the foregoing, a paralegal shall not discriminate on the grounds of race, ancestry, place of origin, colour, ethnic origin, citizenship, creed, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity, gender expression, age, record of offences, marital status, family status or disability with respect to the employment of others or in dealings with other licensees or any other person.

(5) The right to equal treatment without discrimination because of sex includes the right to equal treatment without discrimination because a woman is or may become pregnant.

(6) A paralegal shall ensure that no one is denied services or receives inferior service on the basis of the grounds set out in this rule.

(7) A paralegal shall ensure that his or her employment practices do not offend this rule.

5. The Discrimination and Harassment Counsel (DHC) program was established in 1999 as an independent office funded by, but operating at arm's length from, the Law Society of Ontario. The DHC began operating in the fall of 1999 to provide information to and support individuals who had experienced discrimination or harassment by licensees contrary to their binding rules of professional conduct as a means to help eradicate discrimination in the legal profession.
6. The DHC can be accessed by email at assistance@dhcounsel.on.ca, toll free by phone at 1-877-790-2200, or through direct message on Twitter @DH_Counsel. In this reporting period, for the first time, the DHC office was also approached by complainants through private direct messages on Twitter.

7. The DHC serves two important functions:
  - (a) The DHC provides a range of confidential services to individuals who have concerns or complaints about discrimination or harassment by lawyers or paralegals licensed in Ontario, or by students in the Ontario licensing process; and
  - (b) The DHC provides anonymized statistical data to the Law Society of Ontario so that it can better understand the dynamic and nature of discrimination and harassment in the legal professions and address systemic issues of discrimination and harassment in the legal professions. This statistical data is released publicly to support public accountability of a profession that is self-governing.
8. The DHC services are provided without charge to members of the public as well as to licensees.
9. In order to fall within the mandate of the DHC Program, allegations of misconduct must be based on one or more of the prohibited grounds of discrimination listed in the Ontario Human Rights Code. This is the discriminatory conduct prohibited by the Law Society's codes of conduct for licensees. Personal harassment (e.g. intimidation and bullying) that is not based on any human rights grounds does not fall within the mandate of the DHC Program.
10. The complaints reported to the DHC arise in a variety of contexts, including but not limited to:
  - (a) clients who report that they have been subjected to discrimination or harassment by their own lawyer or paralegal;
  - (b) participants in litigation – whether they are clients, witnesses, articling students, paralegals or lawyers – who have experienced discrimination and/or harassment by opposing counsel or opposing paralegals and justice system employees (such as court/tribunal staff, law firm staff, process servers, etc.) who have experienced discrimination and/or harassment by licensees in the course of litigation;

- (c) law firm employees, summer students, articling students, paralegals and lawyers who are experiencing or have experienced harassment and/or discrimination by licensees in the workplace based on intersecting or distinct grounds of prohibited discrimination;
- (d) service providers, law firm employees, law students, summer students, articling students, paralegals and lawyers who are experiencing and/or have experienced discrimination and/or harassment by licensees in the context of professional training programs, continuing professional education programs, public or privately hosted legal events; and
- (e) members of the public, service providers, law firm employees, law students, summer students, articling students, paralegals and lawyers who are experiencing or have experienced discrimination and/or harassment by licensees in other contexts which implicate the licensees professional obligations.

11. The DHC services are delivered by Fay Faraday, Lai-King Hum and Natasha Persaud. The Counsel who is on duty rotates each week. When any individual Counsel is unable to act due to a conflict of interest, one of the other Counsels handles the matter. To promote accessibility for those who contact the DHC office, the biographies of Ms Faraday, Ms Hum and Ms Persaud are posted on the DHC website. Ms Hum assists individuals seeking service in French.

B. SERVICES PROVIDED BY THE DHC

12. The DHC provides individuals who have experienced or witnessed discrimination or harassment by lawyers and/or paralegals with an opportunity to discuss their concerns confidentially with a knowledgeable and empathetic listener who is an expert in discrimination and harassment law and issues, who has skills of mediation and conciliation regarding human rights, and who is committed to promoting equality and compliance with professional ethical standards in the legal professions.

13. The DHC also supports lawyers and paralegals to comply with their professional rules of conduct by participating in continuing professional education events to advance licensees' training on the substantive legal issues and best practices to ensure compliance with their codes of conduct and human rights laws.
14. The DHC does not provide legal advice or legal representation. The DHC does not conduct investigations or fact finding. Instead, the DHC provides general information and support to complainants to assist them in identifying and evaluating their options to resolve their concerns, provides information to licensees to support best practices, and where appropriate to provide mediation or conciliation. The nature of services provided is outlined below.

Counselling, Data Collection and Coaching for Self-Help

15. For some complainants, the ability to talk through their issues confidentially with an objective, knowledgeable outsider is all they want.
16. Some complainants want to report their experiences to the DHC so that their experience will be recorded as part of the DHC's semi-annual statistics. For complainants this is an important means of alerting the legal profession to the reality and frequency of discrimination and harassment by licensees and of providing an evidence-based foundation for systemic change.
17. In some cases, strategic tips and/or coaching are provided by the DHC to complainants who want to handle a situation directly by themselves.
18. The DHC also provides informal resolutions, which involve education or reminders to respondent licensees by way of a discussion with DHC. This coaching of respondent licensees aims to ensure that they understand their professional obligations regarding human rights compliance in their service delivery and workplaces and that they move toward best practices. This informal coaching may be appropriate in situations where the complainant wishes to remain anonymous but authorizes the DHC to contact the respondent, advise them of their alleged behaviour in breach of human rights without making any finding, and educate or remind the respondent of their professional and legal obligations. Even though the DHC cannot make any factual findings, such calls are effective in providing education and guidance to respondent licensees.

Information about Avenues of Recourse

19. Complainants who contact the DHC are informed about the avenues of recourse available to them, including (where applicable):
- (f) speaking to their union representative (if they are unionized and the complaint relates to their employment);
  - (g) filing an internal complaint within their workplace (if the complaint relates to their employment);
  - (h) making a complaint to the respondent licensee's employer (e.g. the managing partner of the respondent's law firm or supervisor of a respondent who works in-house or in government);
  - (i) filing an application with the Human Rights Tribunal of Ontario or the Canadian Human Rights Commission;
  - (j) filing a formal complaint of professional misconduct with the Law Society;
  - (k) contacting the police (where criminal conduct is alleged);
  - (l) applying to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board;
  - (m) filing a complaint about an articling principal with the Law Society's Articling Program; and
  - (n) contacting a lawyer and/or Human Rights Legal Support Centre for legal advice regarding possible civil causes of action.

20. Complainants are provided with information about each of these options, including:
- (a) what (if any) costs might be involved in pursuing an option;
  - (b) whether legal representation is required in order to pursue an option;
  - (c) referral to resources on how to obtain legal representation such as the Law Society's Lawyer Referral Service (actual referrals to lawyers or paralegals are not made by the DHC);
  - (d) how to file a complaint or initiate an application (e.g. whether it can be done electronically, whether there are filing fees, whether particular forms are required, where to locate the requisite forms, etc.);
  - (e) what processes are involved in pursuing any of the available options (e.g. investigation, conciliation, mediation, adjudication, etc.);
  - (f) what general types of remedies that might be available in different fora (e.g. compensatory remedies in contrast to disciplinary penalties; reinstatement to employment versus monetary damages; public interest remedies); and
  - (g) what general time limits exist for each avenue of redress (complainants are advised to seek legal advice with respect to specific limitation periods).

Complainants are advised that the options available to them are generally not mutually exclusive (though some exceptions apply).

Resolution Services

21. In addition to being advised about the above-noted options, where appropriate, complainants are offered resolution services (mediation or conciliation).

22. Whenever formal mediation is offered, the nature and purpose of mediation is explained, including that it is a confidential and voluntary process, that it does not involve any investigation or fact finding, and that the DHC acts as a neutral facilitator to attempt to assist the parties in negotiating the terms of a mutually satisfactory settlement of the issues raised in the complaint.
23. When a complainant opts for mediation, they are given the choice of contacting the respondent to propose the mediation or having the DHC contact the respondent to canvass their willingness to participate (prior written consent for the DHC to contact the respondent licensee must be provided). If both parties are willing to participate, they are required to sign a mediation agreement (setting out the parameters of the mediation and ground rules) prior to entering into discussions facilitated by the DHC. The agreement clearly stipulates that the mediation process is confidential and subject to a mutual "without prejudice" undertaking by both parties.
24. Where informal conciliation services are offered, the complainant is advised that the DHC can contact the respondent confidentially and discuss the complainant's concerns with the goal of achieving a resolution to the complaint through shuttle diplomacy. Where such an intervention occurs, both the complainant and respondent are advised that the DHC is not acting as the complainant's counsel, advocate or representative, but rather as an impartial go-between to facilitate constructive dialogue between the parties and try to resolve their issues. When a complainant requests such an intervention, written consent must be provided before the DHC contacts the respondent. Depending on the nature of the complaint and the parties involved, a conciliation agreement is sometimes executed to set out the ground-rules for the conciliation process.
25. Some complainants are not interested in the DHC's resolution services because they are seeking an adjudicative process to create a formal record of the respondent's misconduct or they desire a process that includes a fact-finding investigation. Sometimes they decline an offer of resolution services based on a belief that the respondent would not participate in good faith. When a complainant elects to attempt mediation or conciliation, respondent licensees are generally receptive to the DHC's offer of resolution services. On occasion, however, respondents decline to participate.

26. During this reporting period no mediation/conciliation processes were completed, though two formal mediation processes were requested by complainants and are ongoing. Multiple informal resolutions have been used.

Referrals

27. The DHC refers some complainants to other agencies or organizations (such as the Member Assistance Program, a sexual assault crisis centre, a suicide prevention helpline, the Barbra Schlifer Commemorative Clinic, ARCH Disability Law Centre, or the Human Rights Legal Support Centre). The DHC also directs complainants to relevant resource materials available from the Law Society, the Ontario Human Rights Commission, or other organizations.
28. The DHC does not operate a lawyer referral service.

C. OVERVIEW OF NEW CONTACTS WITH THE DHC PROGRAM

29. During this reporting period, 80 individuals and 2 groups of complainants contacted the DHC Program with a new matter.<sup>1</sup> This represents an average of 13.7 new contacts per month, up from 11 new contacts per month in the previous six-month reporting period.

- 10 -

The volume of new contacts with the Program was distributed monthly as shown in the following chart.

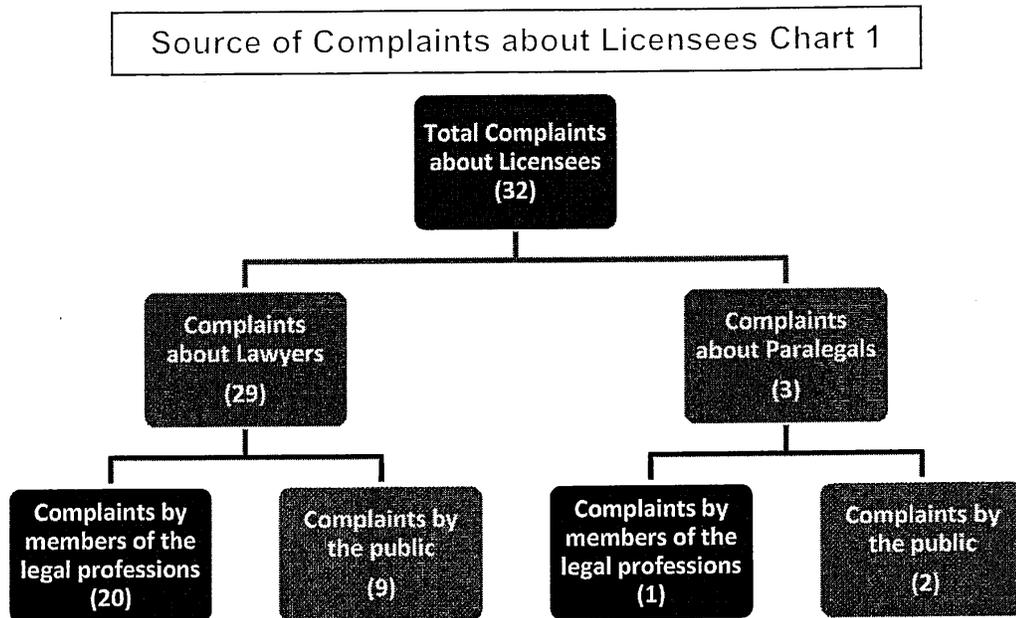

30. During this reporting period, one individual sought French-language services.

C. SUMMARY OF DISCRIMINATION AND HARASSMENT COMPLAINTS

31. Of the 82 new contacts with the Program, 32 contacts raised substantive concerns about discrimination and/or harassment by licensees that fall within the mandate of the DHC program. Three complaints concerned the conduct of a paralegal. The remaining 29 complaints were about lawyers' conduct. Two of the complaints against lawyers involved multiple complainants.
32. Of the three complaints about paralegals, two were made by a member of the public; one was made by another paralegal.
33. Of the 29 complaints about lawyers, 9 were made by members of the public, 3 were made by a person within the justice system, 17 were made by individuals or groups within the legal professions.

The breakdown of complaints made about licensees can be represented as follows:

Complaints about Lawyers by Members of the Legal Profession

34. The 20 complaints about lawyers that were made by members of the legal profession were made by individuals with a variety of careers/career stages within the profession and a variety of roles within the justice system:
  - 12 complaints by lawyers;
  - 5 complaints by articling students/law students; and
  - 3 by other members of the justice system (including legal staff).

35. Of the 20 complaints against lawyers made by members of the legal profession:
  - 14 (70%) were made by women, 64% of whom (9) voluntarily self-identified as racialized women and/or women with disabilities;
  - 6 (30%) were made by men, all of whom are racialized, have disabilities

- 12 -

and/or are members of minority religions.

36. For complaints against lawyers made by students, two were made by women and three were made by men.
37. Of the 20 complaints from members of the legal profession, 13 complaints (65%) related to the complainants' employment and 4 complaints (31%) related to training contexts. The remaining complaints (3) related to interactions with lawyers in other professional contexts.
38. Of the 20 complaints from members of the legal profession:
- 12 complaints (60%) raised allegations of harassment and discrimination on intersecting grounds including combinations of sex, race, disability, religion, age, and place of origin.
  - 8 complaints raised only a single ground of discrimination, all involving sex, race or disability.

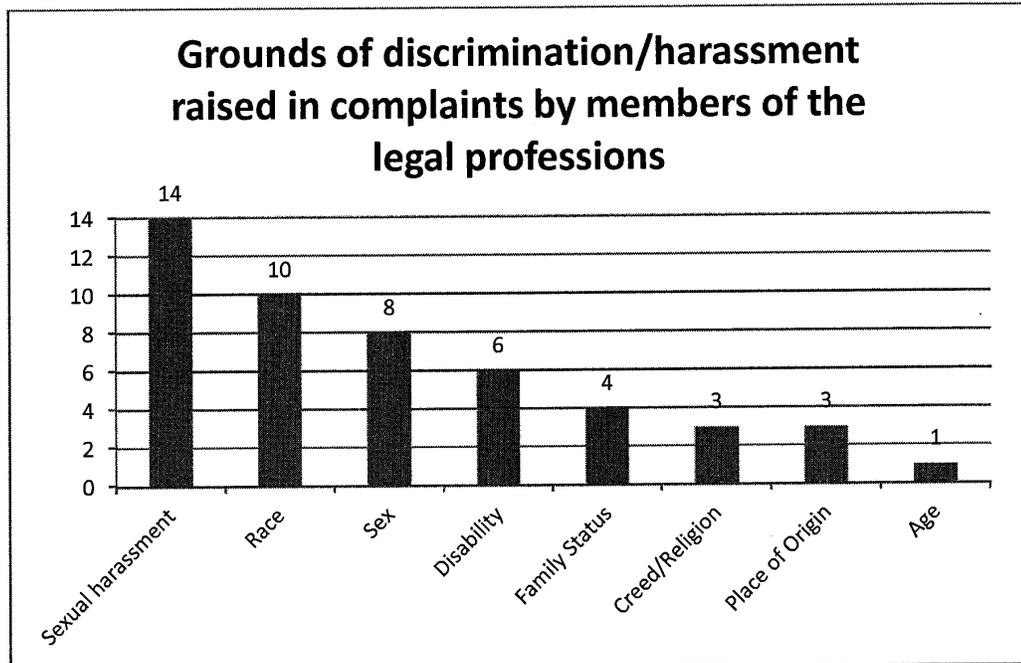

39. In summary, the following prohibited grounds of discrimination were raised with the following frequency in complaints by members of the legal profession about the conduct of lawyers. The total exceeds 20 as most complaints raised more than one ground of discrimination

Sexual harassment	14
Race	10
Sex	8
Disability	6
Family Status	4
Creed/Religion	3
Place of Origin	3
Age	1

The distribution of grounds of discrimination and harassment are depicted in the table on the following page.

40. The complaints with respect to employment typically involved a power (seniority, security of employment) differential between the complainant and the lawyer complained about, although some complaints concerned peer-level harassment. The range of behaviour that was complained about in the context of employment included:

- (a) Sexual harassment, including verbal harassment; sexually explicit harassment and comments; pressuring complainant(s) for sexual relationships, including pressuring complainant(s) to have sexual relationships with clients; disparaging women in front of colleagues; physical sexual harassment; and the employer's failure to respond appropriately when complaints of harassment were raised;
- (b) Racial discrimination and harassment, including verbal harassment; verbal and physical harassment; differential access to files; unequal pay; and the employer's failure to respond appropriately when complaints of harassment were raised;

- 15 -

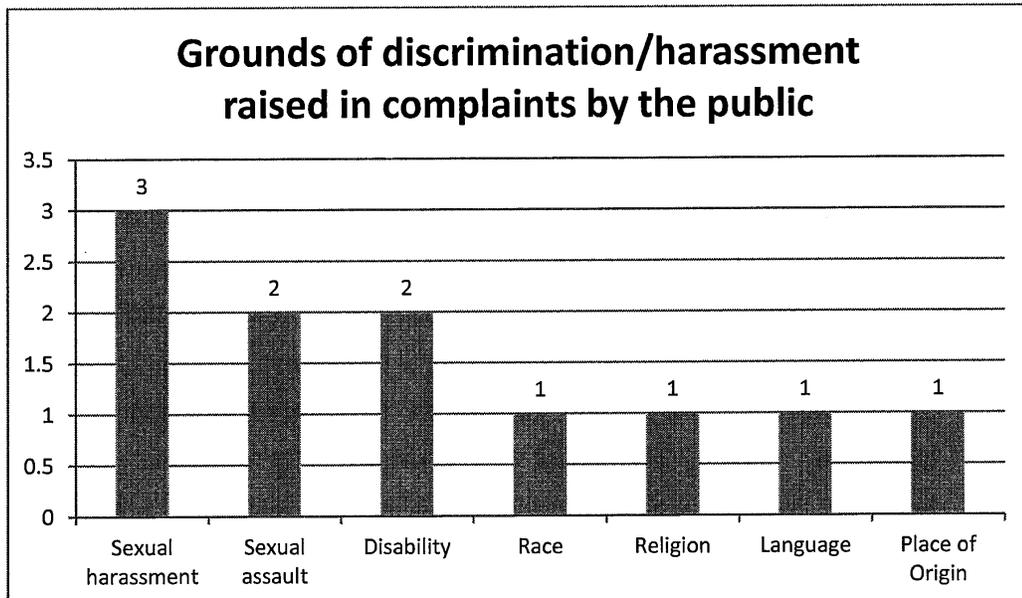

- (c) Half of the sex discrimination complaints related to discrimination and reprisals against female lawyers for taking maternity leave, including being terminated while on maternity leave; being harassed repeatedly to return to work early from maternity leave; and on return from leave being removed from files and/or practice areas, and/or having their pay and/or benefits cut. Other sex discrimination matters included significant pay disparities between women and men at the workplace; women being denied access to more desirable work; and reprisals for raising concerns about discrimination.
  - (d) Discrimination and harassment with respect to disability, including verbal harassment, verbal abuse, refusal to accommodate and reprisals;
  - (e) Harassment and refusal to accommodate with respect to religion, family status and age; and
  - (f) Reprisals for raising complaints about discriminatory treatment, including reprisals in the form of termination.
41. The range of behaviour identified in complaints about lawyers in other professional settings included sexual and/or racial harassment; discriminatory conduct in the context of public legal events and legal training; and failure to accommodate disability.
42. The DHC observes that in addition to formal complaints that were received during this reporting period, a significant number of complaints by members of the professions were raised publicly, during and following the spring Benchers Election, regarding licensees' behaviour in the course of disputing the Statement of Principles. These public complaints highlighted the tone of the public discourse, including the denial of the existence of systemic racism by some licensees, and the attacks of a personal nature which lead some licensees to publicly voice their misgivings at being and/or becoming members of the professions. The DHC has not included these public complaints in the tabulation of its statistics. The volume and intensity of the concerns expressed, however, were significant enough that they warrant noting in this report.

Complaints about Lawyers by Members of the Public

- 43. During this reporting period, 9 complaints were made about lawyers by members of the public: 5 complaints were made by clients who reported discrimination or harassment by their own lawyer; 2 complaints were made about opposing counsel; and 2 complaints were made about a lawyer outside of a lawyer-client relationship.

- 44. The grounds of discrimination and harassment raised by the public were sexual harassment, disability, race, religion, language and place of origin. The grounds exceed 6 because complaints raised intersecting grounds of discrimination and harassment:

Sexual harassment	3
Sexual assault	2
Religion	1

- 17 -

45. The behaviour identified in complaints relating to the complainant's own lawyer included:
- (a) Sexual harassment and coercion, including intimidation and demanding sex as a form of payment for legal services;
  - (b) Sexual assault in relation to which complaints were made to the police and criminal charges were laid;
  - (c) Failure to accommodate a client's disabilities; and
  - (d) Harassment based on race, language, place of origin and religion.

Complaints about Paralegals

46. Three complaints were made about paralegals, two about paralegals representing another party and one about the complainant's own paralegal. All three complaints raised issues of failure to accommodate disabilities and harassment based on disabilities.

D. MATTERS OUTSIDE THE DHC MANDATE

47. During this reporting period, the DHC received 50 contacts by phone or email relating to matters outside the Program's mandate. The "outside mandate" calls typically are dealt with quickly and typically do not involve follow up by the individual complainant.
48. We stress, however, that the fact that these contacts may be outside the DHC mandate in that they do not fall squarely within violations of the rules of conduct and law on discrimination and harassment, nearly half of the calls raise allegations of serious misconduct by licensees that implicates other professional conduct rules and/or legal obligations. In redirecting these contacts to the appropriate agencies, the DHC serves its public interest mandate of supporting public accountability of the legal professions and of (re)building public trust in the legal professions and of support public access to justice.

49. A slight majority of these new “outside mandate” contacts inquired about discriminatory and/or harassing behaviour by individuals who are not licensees including employers, landlords, healthcare providers or others. As these actors are beyond the Law Society’s and DHC’s mandate, the DHC redirects these callers to the appropriate agencies and sources for legal support.
50. The second largest category of new contacts outside the DHC mandate (21 contacts, or 42% of the outside mandate contacts) involved complaints about the conduct of Ontario lawyers (17), and paralegals (2). Two involved complaints about judges and were redirected to the appropriate judicial councils. The complaints about licensees did not involve discrimination or harassment on Human Rights Code grounds but did report behaviour that reflects breaches of the Rules of Professional Conduct or Paralegal Rules of Conduct, abusive employment relationships, and/or potentially criminal conduct. These contacts were redirected to the Law Society Complaint and Compliance office and/or police.
51. An explanation of the DHC’s mandate, role and duties was provided to each person who contacted the DHC with a matter outside the Program’s mandate. All new contacts raising matters outside the DHC mandate were referred to other agencies for assistance.

E. PROMOTIONAL AND EDUCATIONAL ACTIVITIES

52. During this reporting period, the DHC undertook a variety of proactive actions to raise awareness of the DHC’s services and promote licensee compliance with the relevant codes of conduct, including:
  - (a) We promoted the DHC services and engaged in public conversation about the DHC on Twitter (@DH_Counsel);

- 19 -

- (b) We conducted media interviews to raise awareness of the DHC's mandate, including in the Toronto Star;
  - (c) All three DHC counsel attended an Innovation Session with community stakeholders convened by the Law Society of Ontario as part of the review of the DHC program;
  - (d) We participated in a number of continuing professional development events, including:
    - (i) Lai-King Hum chaired a program and Fay Faraday spoke about equity and equality at the Law Society of Ontario CPD program "Practice Management for Litigators" (2 April 2019);
    - (ii) Fay Faraday presented at the Law Society of Ontario CPD program "Litigating Harassment: A Strategic Focus for Practitioners" (3 April 2019);
    - (iii) Lai-King Hum co-chaired a Law Society of Ontario CPD program on "Addressing Harassment and Discrimination in Lawyer and Paralegal Workplaces" (28 May 2019); and
    - (iv) Fay Faraday spoke about the DHC services at the national Canadian Association of Labour Lawyers on a panel discussion about "#MeToo V2: Discrimination and Harassment in the Legal Profession" (1 June 2019).
53. Throughout this reporting period, periodic advertisements continued to be placed (in English and French) in the Ontario Reports to promote the DHC Program within the legal profession. The LSO continues to maintain a bilingual website for the DHC Program.

A. INTRODUCTION

1. This report was prepared at the request of the Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee (EIAC). We have been asked to supplement the statistical report on the activities of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel (DHC) Program with a confidential report about the outcomes of longstanding mediation/conciliation matters and/or observations about trends of note.
2. We have been reassured that this confidential report will not be made public and it is on that basis that we have provided this additional information. We have endeavoured to do so without jeopardizing the anonymity of any complainants or respondents and without violating our obligations of confidentiality as DHC.
3. This report covers the period from 1 January 2019 to 30 June 2019, and deals mainly with the “in mandate” files.

B. CONCILIATION AND MEDIATION FILES

4. As conciliation or mediation is voluntary, both parties must agree to participate in order to proceed.
5. Two formal mediations were requested by complainants during this 6-month period and remain ongoing.
6. Cases that do not go to conciliation or mediation do, nevertheless, typically involve multiple contacts between the complainant and the DHC. Often complainants contact the DHC office in a state of significant stress or trauma. It often takes a few conversations to build trust and help complainants understand and weigh their options. In addition to substantive knowledge about human rights law, ethics and professional codes of conduct, working with these complainants requires DHC Program counsel to have advanced skills in trauma-informed legal practice, cultural competence, communication and trust building. This is necessary particularly as complainants’ experiences of discrimination and harassment by licensees creates heightened distrust of all legal professionals.

7. In other cases which do not proceed to conciliation or mediation, the DHC provides ongoing coaching where a complainant is trying to resolve the dispute themselves.
8. Over the past year, the DHC office has addressed some complaints by offering informal conversations with respondents in a manner that preserves anonymity while providing an opportunity for education on their professional obligations and coaching toward best practices.

C. PERSISTENT OUT OF MANDATE CONTACTS

9. Usually the out of mandate contacts received by the DHC are handled easily and quickly, typically in less than 10 minutes. These contacts typically involve redirecting the caller to one or more appropriate resources.
10. However, occasionally situations arise in which a caller with mental health concerns becomes fixated on the DHC and makes repeated contact with the office even though their concerns do not fall within the DHC mandate.
11. For a period of about five years (beginning before the tenure of current DHC counsel), one complainant has gone through and continues to go through cycles of silence followed by a period with dozens of repeated contacts. We continue to monitor the emails but, consistent with our previous communications to the complainant, we are not responding unless the emails raise a new issue that is within mandate. The DHC Program counsel consult as a group to ensure that matters such as this are dealt with consistently, and without drawing inappropriately on the Program's resources.

D. OBSERVATIONS ABOUT THE DHC PROGRAM

12. As a team, the DHC Program counsel meet regularly to ensure we take a consistent approach to the contacts that arise, to ensure consistent communications, to confer on complex matters, and to discuss emerging trends.

13. We offer a few observations about the trends that we are observing among the contacts to the DHC Program.

(a) Number of New Contacts

14. From January to June 2019, there was a 20% increase in the number of new contacts over the period from July to December 2018. As anticipated in our last report, the drop in contacts that appeared in that six-month period in 2018 was not indicative of an overall downward trend.

(b) Abusive Articling Experiences

15. Since January 2018 we have detailed our concerns about the numbers of “out of mandate” contacts we receive from articling students who are experiencing abusive employment practices in their articling placements. The nature of the abusive employment practices extend beyond discrimination or harassment into abusive practices such as verbal abuse, threats and humiliation; not being paid for hours worked; being forced to work 100+ hours per week every week; being subject to bullying; and being threatened with termination if they do not comply with unreasonable demands. Media within the legal profession have begun reporting on this issue in response to the DHC reports, as have the mainstream press. We continue to receive contacts of this nature from articling students.

(c) Discrimination and/or Harassment on the Basis of Disability

16. Since the current DHC Program counsel began their mandate in July 2017, we have consistently observed that a significant proportion of complaints deal with a client’s own lawyer/paralegal or an opposing lawyer/paralegal failing to appropriately accommodate clients with disabilities. In addition to undermining service quality and access to justice, these skill deficits create high levels of stress, anger, anxiety, alienation and distrust among clients that undermine the client-lawyer relationship and often create delays in delivering the required services. Often only small changes in behaviour are required to avoid or pre-empt discriminatory relationships from developing but these changes are not made. We note that this continues to be a pressing concern and an obvious area of skill deficit within the profession that needs to be addressed.

(d) Public Profile of the DHC

14. The DHC Program launched its Twitter feed in November 2018 using the handle @DH_Counsel. The Twitter account is managed by Fay Faraday. We tweet about the DHC Program, about equity, diversity and inclusion issues in the legal profession, and circulate information about continuing education programs on equity, diversity and inclusion in the profession. Our tweets reached over 11,000 people during this six month period. Sometimes we engage in twitter conversations with members of the legal profession who tweet at us to ask if particular kinds of issues are dealt with by the DHC. Other times, members of the legal profession who are engaged in twitter discussions about equity in the legal profession remind people to raise their concerns with the DHC and we amplify those messages. We participate in these online conversations to remind people of the DHC's mandate, to tell them they can reach out to us and to circulate our email, phone, website and social media contacts. During this six month period, for the first time, individuals with substantive complaints about licensees contacted the DHC office through private direct messages via Twitter.

Subject: Concerns about the upcoming "Inclusion Index"

Dear colleagues,

I am writing to convey my concerns about developments at the Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee regarding the upcoming "Inclusion Index".

The Treasurer's recent mandate letter to Committees suggested that if Committee members had issues or concerns about a topic in an upcoming meeting, they should raise them with Committee chairs before the meeting. Accordingly, prior to the EIA meeting of September 10, I wrote to EIA Committee chairs and members outlining some specific and (I believe) important concerns about the Inclusion Index which, it is said, will be publicly released by the Law Society "this fall".

I reproduce the text of my email to the Committee below, in case you are interested.

At the meeting there was no effort to address my concerns – quite the opposite. I was told that my concerns 1) dealt with "operational" matters and therefore were not the purview of Committee members, 2) were out of place because they dealt with “implementation” of a previous Convocation decision, and 3) that I and others would receive further information when the Inclusion Index was ready to be released (that is, when it is more or less a “fait accompli”).

The Committee, in my view, is deliberately turning a blind eye to what I would suggest are some serious problems.

The Inclusion Index seems to be part of the current movement at the Law Society towards prioritizing birth characteristics such as skin colour and facial features and sex chromosomes over competence. This radical identity politics is, in my opinion, not progressive, and not progress, and will drag us all backwards and downwards.

One of the lessons I believe I have learned in life is that problems are of two kinds: first, those problems that, if ignored, go away, and second, those problems that, if ignored, get worse. I believe that the problems described in my email are of the second type.

Respectfully,

Murray Klippenstein

TEXT OF MY EMAIL OF SEPT 9 2020

Dear Committee Chairs and Committee members,

I am writing to convey a number of concerns regarding a matter to be considered at tomorrow’s EIA meeting.

I have reviewed the Treasurer’s “mandate memo” to the EIA Committee dated September 4, which states that “Prior to the [Committee] meeting, if a bencher ... has issues or questions about the work of the committee, that bencher should communicate with the chairs of the committee in advance of the meeting”. I am writing to provide to the Committee Chairs and the Committee members ahead of tomorrow’s Committee meeting my serious concerns regarding the issue of the “Inclusion Index” mentioned in the Treasurer’s memo. In her memo the Treasurer states that it is a priority for the Committee to “prepare for the fall release of the Inclusion Index as per recommendation six of the Working Together for Change [Report]”.

On reflection, I in fact have some broader concerns with the basic idea of a “mandate memo”, since it seems to me to create new and unprecedented powers in the position of the Treasurer, and severely restricts the role of elected Benchers in committees. However, I will set aside the details of those concerns for now and focus on the Inclusion Index.

The planned Inclusion Index is a momentous and unprecedented public interference in the internal operations of more than 100 of Ontario’s largest law firms. And yet it appears that the planned Inclusion Index has received no significant review or scrutiny by the EIA Committee or Benchers in general.

1. The Inclusion Index will publicly identify by name, and then rank (by categories), more than 100 of Ontario’s law firms, based on a complex and detailed matter of internal firm operations. This is a public and detailed intrusion into the management of Ontario’s law firms of unprecedented scope.
2. The basis for this unprecedented interference is an extremely complex but untested and never-before used method of evaluation. It is, according to the consulting firm’s website, the “first of its kind”. This is apparently a worldwide first.
3. The methodology of the Inclusion Index has received no scrutiny by the EIA Committee or by Benchers in general, despite its unprecedented nature and momentous implications. There is considerable irony in the fact that the consulting company is trumpeting this Inclusion Index on its public promotional website when it has received no actual serious review by the sponsoring organization.

4. The consulting company states on its website that it uses “advanced analytics” and its own “proprietary Inclusion Score technology”. That suggests that its methodology is confidential, and that the actual way that it operates will not be allowed to be reviewed by anyone, including Benchers. Further, this apparently complex technology has, it would seem, not been the subject of any outside professional scrutiny or testing or peer review (as in the academic field of statistics or data management). It is a complete secret to everyone.
5. It appears that the project of the Inclusion Index has for the last almost two years been “managed” entirely by four (now three) Benchers, and presumably some LSO staff members, with no significant reporting to anyone else, and no significant input or oversight from anyone else.

According to the Minutes of the November 15, 2018 EIAC meeting (emphases added):

27. Marian MacGregor also provided an update on Recommendation 6 – the Inclusion Index. She noted that the EIAC executive has agreed to the creation of a Steering Committee. The Steering Committee will review the vendor proposals and make a decision on the provider for the project. The Steering Committee will update EIAC at regular intervals.

29. Vice-Chair of EIAC, Isfahan Merali, will chair the Steering Committee. Benchers Robert Burd, Julian Falconer and Avvy Go will also sit on the Steering Committee.

Then, at the February 14, 2019 meeting of EIAC, a report “For Information” (that is, not for consideration for approval by vote) at Tab 3.1 was included about “Implementation of ... Inclusion Index”. The report includes the following:

7. The Steering Committee has reviewed and selected the Inclusion Index provider from the proposals provided in response to the RFQ. The Steering Committee will provide oversight, with the support of staff, as the development of the Inclusion Index unfolds. The steering committee will also provide updates to EIAC at appropriate intervals.

It should be noted that according to the above, it seems that the EIA “executive” appointed a powerful four person Steering Committee, without an actual vote by the Committee, which Steering Committee has now been “managing” this extremely important Inclusion Index project, which will constitute an unprecedented public interference in the internal management of Ontario’s law firms, “behind the scenes” for the last almost two years, with no reporting or oversight.

6. Former Treasurer Mercer recently announced, in a public letter dated June 25, 2020, that “We expect to release the Inclusion Index this fall.”
7. The forthcoming Inclusion Index is based on seriously invalid and misleading previous research, that is, the Challenges report of 2014 prepared by Stratcom Communications.

The consulting company’s website states that the “Regulatory body study found evidence of systemic racism and sexism within the sector”. The website then quotes three specific data points from the Stratcom Report, stating that 52%, 52%, and 43% of “racialized members” experienced certain disadvantages.

The Stratcom report was critiqued in my Critical Review dated January 8, 2020, which was distributed to all Benchers and became publicly available. The Critical Review showed how the report’s stark proclamations about how specific percentages of members in the legal professions felt a certain way had no valid statistical foundation. The conclusion of the Critical Review was that: “the Challenges Report ... is methodologically invalid, seriously misleading and driven by a particular political ideology, and was and is an unacceptable basis for serious policy-making by the Law Society ...”.

Despite its detailed and harsh and public critique, the Critical Review has not received any rational rebuttal from anyone. The conclusions of the Critical Review stand.

In addition to relying on the invalid Stratcom report, the Inclusion Index appears, like the Stratcom report, to be basing all its work on a statistically invalid self-selected and skewed data base (derived from the voluntary questions in an annual Law Society filing by all licensees).

8. The problem of survey sample self-selection bias could possibly, and indeed is likely to, exist in the Inclusion Index because persons-of-colour (or of other so-called “equity seeking groups”) who in fact feel “included” in their firms are less likely to voluntarily answer the survey questions because they have less motivation to do so, or perhaps because they find the questions personally insulting or offensive as a matter of principle. Such a sample self-selection bias would potentially be a very serious issue for two reasons.

First, the Inclusion Index would, quite simply, be inaccurate. That in itself is a serious issue. Second, since the survey results will be made public by firm name (in ranked groupings), individual firms are vulnerable to public disparagement by name, in effect by the Law Society, based on methodologically invalid data.

Consider an example. Firm A employs ten persons of colour, and three feel motivated to complete the survey questions because they are not satisfied with their situation (while seven are more or less satisfied with their situation and decide not to bother with the questions). Firm B, on the other hand, employs ten persons of colour but seven are unhappy and say so in survey answers.

The survey data analyst, it would appear, has no way to account for the seven in Firm A who chose not to answer – because of a reason that is “good” in terms of the goals of the survey (that is, they feel “included”). In particular, the survey data analyst, it would appear, has no way to “adjust” for those non-reporting “contented” individuals for reporting purposes, for the simple reason that the analyst doesn’t know that they exist. Will the data analyst treat the three responders from Firm A as being equivalent to the seven responders from Firm B, when clearly they are not?

There is an additional important factor which it appears that the Inclusion Index will not, and indeed cannot, account for. Not all legal work is equal. Firm B may be a “higher end” firm, that does more advanced, more difficult, and more stressful legal work. That is, persons in Firm B may simply be under more day-to-day work pressure than persons in Firm A – because of the nature of the Firm’s work. That factor, while in a sense laudable from a professional point of view, may result in persons in the firm sometimes feeling less content in certain ways. The rewards of high achievement, while real, do not always manifest themselves in day-to-day cheerfulness. The result of not accounting for this factor may be that the survey, and the Inclusion Index, in effect “punishes” those firms who aim for high professional achievement.

These are serious and important questions. Do the Steering Committee and the consultant have answers? I am asking.

9. According to the consultant’s original proposal, the project was expected to cost $225,000 in consultant fees, plus $15,000 in expenses. These funds, of course, come out of our membership’s pocket by way of compulsory annual license fees. How much has been spent to date? How much more expenditure is expected?

10. The entire Inclusion Index project is clearly centred on advancing a particular political ideology under the rubric of “diversity and inclusion”. That ideology throws out the window the basic ideas and principles of equality and non-discrimination, and openness and opportunity, which have been the core of Ontario’s human rights policy for more than half a century (and which have resulted in a great deal of social progress, in my opinion), and puts in their place a general rule of discrimination and across-the-board preferential treatment based on the skin colour, facial features, and sex chromosomes that a person was born with, rather than relying on principles of competence, smarts, skills, effort, and contribution.

This ideology assumes that persons with certain categories of birth characteristics should be hired, promoted, and appointed “in all legal workplaces, at all levels of seniority” based on the proportion of those birth features in the general population (see the Working Together report, p. 14). This idea of “entitlement by population percentage” is a radical idea with no serious intellectual foundation and with serious pernicious effects, in my opinion.

That ideology is currently fashionable in many circles, but it is inappropriate for a regulatory body with the serious responsibilities of the Law Society to engage in the massive intrusion into its membership's business affairs (as represented by the Inclusion Index) based on a particular political ideology (the Law Society intrudes into the business affairs of its licensees on a significant number of important matters, such as the management of trust funds, but those are in an entirely different category).

11. The current pushing ahead of the Inclusion Index without meaningful input or oversight ignores the results of the last Bencher election. I was elected as Regional Bencher on a platform explicitly based on concerns such as those expressed above. Twenty-one other Benchers were similarly elected. Those views and those results are being ignored.

Given that this Inclusion Index appears to be a runaway freight train, I am doubtful that my concerns will be addressed. I hope that they are.

Sincerely,

Murray Klippenstein

IN PUBLIC

TECHNOLOGY TASK FORCE REPORT

Ms. Horvat presented the Report.

Re: Report on Regulatory Sandbox for Innovative Technological Legal Services

It was moved by Ms. Horvat, seconded by Mr. Graham, that Convocation:

1. Approve the launch of a regulatory sandbox as a five-year pilot with the following features:
  - Approved participants will receive permission from the Law Society to serve consumers through innovative technological legal services while complying with requirements for risk-based monitoring and reporting.
  - The Law Society will determine whether, and under what conditions, participants may receive a permit to continue providing the services after their participation in the sandbox has ended.
  - Annual reports will be submitted to Convocation to enable consideration of possible regulatory changes
2. Adopt amendments to the Law Society's By-Laws, as set out at Tab 1.1.

Mr. Fagan moved, seconded by Ms. Shi, that the Technology Task Force Report currently before Convocation be referred to Convocation's Professional Regulation Committee for further study, the matters to be studied further there, after solicitations for input from the legal and paralegal professions at large, to include:

- a) What is in the true overall public interest in this matter?
- b) What might the LSO do to attempt to deter any unauthorized legal practice/provision of legal services via technology?
- c) Such further considerations as may be presented to the Professional Regulation Committee for further study.

Mr. Desgranges moved, seconded by Mr. Prill, that the motion be amended as follows:

That paragraph 1 be amended as follows:

That:

1. Subject to paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 below, Convocation approve the launch of a regulatory sandbox as a five-year pilot with the following features:
  - Approved participants will receive permission from the Law Society to serve consumers through innovative technological legal services while complying with requirements for risk-based monitoring and reporting.
  - The Law Society will determine whether, and under what conditions, participants may receive a permit to continue providing the services after their participation in the sandbox has ended.

- Annual reports will be submitted to Convocation to enable consideration of possible regulatory changes.

That paragraph 2 be added to the motion to read:

2. As of October 31, 2022, the pilot project shall be continued on a full cost-recovery basis (which may include grants from outside funding sources) such that no annual fees or other monies derived from Licensees shall be used to subsidize: (i) the ongoing operations of the sandbox or any derivative thereof, (ii) any staffing salaries, benefits or other costs associated with retaining any staff, data analysts, program managers, advisory councils or any other consultants of any nature whatsoever with respect to the operations of the sandbox or (iii) any additional costs associated with any additional internal or external resources that may be needed to support the sandbox project.

That paragraph 3 be added to the motion to read:

3. A detailed yearly financial report be presented to Convocation for consideration of the progress of the pilot project.

That paragraph 4 be added to the motion to read:

4. As soon as possible and at the latest, after the five-year pilot period after the completion of the five-year pilot project the LSO devolves itself of the responsibility of managing the sandbox project, the development or regulation of ITLS software and the approval or permitting of any other legal software whatsoever.

That paragraph 5 be amended as follows:

5. Convocation adopt amendments to the Law Society's By-laws as set out at Tab 1.1.

That Tab 1.1 be amended as to include paragraph 2:

1. For the purposes of the Act, By-law 16 shall be a temporary exemption from the Society's requirements with respect to the practicing of law or providing legal services and By-Law 16 shall expire and be automatically repealed with no further action on the part of the Society on the earlier of 5 years from the date this By-Law is brought into force or such other date as such other independent regulatory body is brought into existence for the purposes of approving or permitting such ITLS tools or programs.

So that the motion would now read:

That:

1. Subject to paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 below, Convocation approve the launch of a regulatory sandbox as a five-year pilot with the following features:
  - Approved participants will receive permission from the Law Society to serve consumers through innovative technological legal services while complying with requirements for risk-based monitoring and reporting.
  - The Law Society will determine whether, and under what conditions, participants may receive a permit to continue providing the services after their participation in the sandbox has ended.
  - Annual reports will be submitted to Convocation to enable consideration of possible regulatory changes.
2. That as of October 31, 2022, the pilot project shall be continued on a full cost-recovery basis (which may include grants from outside funding sources) such that annual fees or other monies derived from Licencees shall not be used to subsidize the: (i) the ongoing operations of the sandbox or any derivative thereof, (ii) any staffing salaries, benefits or other costs associated with retaining any staff, data analysts, program managers, advisory councils or any other consultants of any nature whatsoever with respect to the operations of the sandbox or (iii) additional costs associated with any additional internal or external resources that may be needed to support the sandbox project.

3. A detailed yearly financial report be presented to Convocation for consideration of the progress of the pilot project.
4. As soon as possible and at the latest, after the five-year pilot period after the completion of the five-year pilot project the LSO devolves itself of the responsibility of managing the sandbox project, the development or regulation of ITLS software and the approval or permitting of any other legal software whatsoever.
5. Convocation adopt amendments to the Law Society's By-laws as set out at Tab 1.1

And that Tab 1.1 would now read:

1. For the purposes of the Act, a person, including an individual, corporation or other entity, who is an approved participant in the Societies innovative technological legal services ("ITLS") sandbox program, or who has received a permit from the Society to provide an ITLS, and in each case is operating an ITLS tool or program in compliance with the Societies requirements, shall be deemed to not be practicing law or providing legal services with respect to the operation of that ITLS tool or program.
2. For the purposes of the Act, By-law 16 shall be a temporary exemption from the Society's requirements with respect to the practicing of law or providing legal services and By-Law 16 shall expire and be automatically repealed with no further action on the part of the Society on the earlier of 5 years from the date this By-Law is brought into force or such other date as such other independent regulatory body is brought into existence for the purposes of approving or permitting such ITLS tools or programs.

The Treasurer called for debate on the motion to amend.

The motion to amend was lost.

2. Adopt amendments to the Law Society's By-Laws, as set out at Tab 1.1.

Executive Summary

The Law Society's Technology Task Force recommends the creation of a regulatory sandbox for innovative technological legal services ("ITLS") as a five-year pilot.

Advancements in technological capabilities like artificial intelligence have contributed to the rapid rise of ITLS. Through websites, apps and software, ITLS providers offer tools to help people find legal information, answer routine questions, navigate legal processes, analyze contracts, generate legal documents, or predict outcomes. Consumers may see such tools as the only practical option for legal assistance or as a precursor or supplement to a legal professional. There is a growing demand for ITLS due to unmet legal needs, consumer comfort with technologically delivered services, and the convenience of accessing help on demand.

The trend in technological advancement in the legal sector has accelerated during the COVID-19 pandemic with the adoption of digital and online tools by public institutions, private enterprises, and community organizations. Moving more of the justice sector infrastructure online (such as through e-filing portals and video hearings) has opened up new pathways for ITLS tools in Ontario.

Despite the growth of digital innovation, ITLS currently operate in an environment of regulatory uncertainty. Standards for competent and ethical legal tech services have not been established. ITLS provided by persons not licensed as lawyers or paralegals may be subject to prosecution for the unauthorized practice of law. ITLS provided by licensees may be subject to professional conduct rules in ways that have not been clarified. This uncertainty can both deter the best innovation and deprive ITLS consumers of basic safeguards accorded to clients of licensees.

An “Uber moment” is arriving in the legal sector as it has in other sectors and industries when innovative technologies transform markets and consumer choices. Inaction on the Law Society’s part would risk allowing ITLS providers to proliferate in Ontario outside of an effective regulatory scheme.

In the proposed sandbox pilot, approved participants will receive permission from the Law Society to serve consumers through ITLS while complying with requirements for risk-based monitoring and reporting. Amendments will be required to create a new category of permitted exception from licensure in the Law Society’s By-Laws (See Tab 1.1). The Law Society will determine whether, and under what conditions, participants should receive a permit to continue providing the services after their participation in the sandbox has ended. During the pilot the Law Society will gather critical information about the operation of ITLS and will use that information to inform policy and regulatory decisions, including possible changes to professional conduct rules.

The sandbox will help to fulfill the Law Society’s responsibilities as a public interest regulator by:

- Facilitating access to justice: By eliminating regulatory uncertainty, the sandbox will remove barriers to the development of ITLS that could reach new consumers in new ways, especially in areas of high unmet need.
- Protecting the public: The sandbox will provide a mechanism to ensure ITLS consumers have the same type of safeguards available to clients of licensees: competent and ethical services, recourse when required, and the provision of relevant details enabling informed choices to be made about the providers of the services.
- Informing future regulatory development: The sandbox will gather evidence to inform longer term decision-making about ITLS regulation. During the pilot period, the sandbox team will report, at a minimum, annually to Convocation, thus enabling Convocation to review and potentially adjust rules, by-laws, or standards that participants have demonstrated can be satisfied in alternative ways.

The sandbox will also enable licensees to better understand how the public is using ITLS and the impact on legal service delivery. With this information, licensees can enhance their practices by using, adapting to, or developing ITLS tools.

The presence in Ontario of leading legal tech entrepreneurs and proponents in legal, academic, government, and judicial circles bodes well for attracting sandbox participants and expert advisors. Several entrepreneurs have already expressed interest in participating. Participation in the sandbox would provide a measure of quality assurance to consumers and reassurance to developers and investors who would otherwise be wary of investing resources in an enterprise that could be shut down by the regulator.

This report begins by describing developments in Ontario and elsewhere that have created the impetus to move forward in establishing the Law Society's regulatory role for ITLS. It then discusses benefits and risks of proceeding (or inaction) to launch the sandbox pilot. The latter half of the report provides an overview of the sandbox proposal, including the project's purpose, concept, key features, and legal framework. It concludes with a discussion of budgetary considerations along with the need for a small staff team and expert volunteer advisory council. An Appendix provides additional detail on operational issues.

The Task Force recommends the sandbox as an imperative in regulatory advancement. The Law Society is well positioned to assess the potential benefits of innovative legal technologies, minimize risks of harm, and identify new pathways for regulation in the public interest.

Background

The Law Society's Technology Task Force was formed in 2018. Its mandate is to consider the role of technologies in the delivery of legal services, and the Law Society's role as a regulator in this changing environment.

The Task Force submitted an Update Report<sup>1</sup> to Convocation in November 2019. That report discusses the technological landscape for legal services, implications for access to justice and the regulation of legal services, and potential regulatory directions. Building on extensive research and consultation, the Task Force recommends that the Law Society launch a regulatory sandbox to test ITLS in a safe environment.

Momentum for Change

Several factors have created momentum for the Law Society to establish a role in relation to ITLS. Key factors are the proliferation of and demand for legal technological tools, the accelerated adoption of digital and online tools during the pandemic, and the emergence of regulatory sandboxes in the legal sectors of other jurisdictions.

Emergence of and Demand for Legal Tech Tools

There has been a rapid rise of novel legal technological tools and services due to advancements such as artificial intelligence. The new technologies are developing unprecedented capabilities at an unprecedented pace, sparking innovations in the ways that legal services are being delivered. The demand for ITLS has grown stronger due to rising unmet legal needs, constant downward pressure on prices for legal services and increasing consumer expectations for on-demand online services.

Many of the new tools aim to help consumers of legal services make more informed decisions in their own legal matters. Different consumers may see such "direct-to-public" tools as the only practical option for legal assistance or as a precursor or supplement to a legal professional. Such tools may perform a range of legal tasks and functions, assisting people with locating and identifying legal information, answering routine questions, navigating legal processes, analyzing contracts, generating legal documents, and predicting case outcomes. Such services are commonly delivered through websites, apps, or software. As of August 2019, 88 direct-to-public legal tech tools have been identified as operating in Canada.<sup>2</sup>

Direct-to-public legal tech tools are currently subject to regulatory uncertainty or, in many cases, clear prohibition. If the providers are not licensees, they may be engaging in the unauthorized practice of law and may be subject to Law Society prosecution. If licensees are providing the tools, they may be subject to the Law Society's professional conduct rules, by-laws and other rules in ways that have not been clarified.

Tech Innovation during COVID-19 Pandemic

The impacts of the COVID-19 pandemic have accelerated consumer adoption of digital and online tools, as well as the development of innovative tech products. These patterns have been widely observed across many sectors of the economy, and the legal sector is no different. The announcements since March 2020 of tech modernization projects for Ontario's court and tribunal systems illustrate this trend. Most recently, Attorney General Doug Downey announced the Justice Accelerated Strategy, which includes a $28.5 million investment for a digital case management and dispute resolution system for tribunals and a plan for moving more services online.<sup>3</sup>

Moving the infrastructure of the justice system online (such as through e-filing portals and video hearings) opens more pathways for ITLS tools. For example, platforms that help users prepare legal documents for court filings can now build in the added feature of filing the completed document on the user's behalf, through the court's e-filing portal.<sup>4</sup>

For ITLS developers, the economic impacts of the pandemic have also highlighted opportunities for new services.<sup>5</sup> Innovation can thrive in circumstances where established practices and consumer expectations are disrupted. Ontario can expect to see continued growth in the development of disruptive legal services, which has set the stage for the Law Society to consider its regulatory role.

Sandboxes and Regulatory Reform in Other Jurisdictions

Legal services regulators in other jurisdictions have accelerated reforms that support innovation, including through the use of sandboxes that have attracted a significant number of participants. Momentum for these regulatory reforms is particularly building in the United States. As these other jurisdictions progress in their experiments with ITLS providers, this could change conditions in Ontario's legal sector and increase pressure on the Law Society to act.

In August 2020, the Utah Supreme Court approved the implementation of a regulatory sandbox for non-traditional legal services and providers.<sup>6</sup> A new office within the Supreme Court – the Office of Legal Services Innovation – oversees the approval and monitoring of sandbox participants.<sup>7</sup> The Utah sandbox had about a dozen applications within a week of announcing its launch.<sup>8</sup> As of April 1, 2021, 22 applications had been approved.<sup>9</sup>

Examples of innovations in the Utah sandbox include a technological solution that provides information about Utah's Clean Slate law and legal advice to people with criminal records,<sup>10</sup> a software platform to guide consumers through the process of completing financial disclosures related to divorce proceedings,<sup>11</sup> and a platform to generate legal documents in contested and uncontested divorce and custody cases, eviction cases, and debt-related property seizure cases.<sup>12</sup>

A working group of the California State Bar Board of Trustees is exploring the development of a regulatory sandbox for the innovation of accessible legal services.<sup>13</sup> In Florida, a Special Committee to Improve the Delivery of Legal Services is considering the regulation of online service providers.<sup>14</sup> In its regulatory reform efforts, the Arizona Supreme Court has changed the state's rules around legal services delivery models in order to spur innovation.<sup>15</sup>

A task force established by the Chicago Bar Association and the Chicago Bar Foundation<sup>16</sup> has prioritized the use of legal technology to improve the ability of courts and lawyers to provide legal services to consumers and to make legal services more affordable and accessible.<sup>17</sup> The task force recommends the creation of an "Approved Legal Technology Provider". Lawyers would be able to collaborate with approved entities in the provision of technology-based legal products and services.<sup>18</sup>

In Canada, the Law Society of British Columbia took an initial step by introducing its “Innovation Sandbox” in the fall of 2020.<sup>19</sup> The BC sandbox had 25 applications in its first two months of operations. As of March 8, 2021, there were 32 applications, five of which have been approved thus far.<sup>20</sup>

Benefits of Creating a Regulatory Sandbox

The advantages of creating a sandbox at this time include enhanced access to justice, better protection for the public and the ability to inform future regulatory policy through detailed evidence about an emerging area of service. In addition to achieving these regulatory objectives, the sandbox can also lead to new opportunities for licensees.

Access to Justice

Despite concerted efforts across the justice system, access to legal assistance continues to remain elusive for many people with everyday legal problems. Research shows that Canadians do not seek professional assistance for more than 80% of their legal issues.<sup>21</sup> Everyday legal problems can take a considerable toll, including increased stress, poor physical health, emotional issues, and strained relationships with family members.<sup>22</sup> They can also threaten a family’s basic security by potentially leading to a loss of employment or housing.<sup>23</sup>

Regulatory uncertainty inhibits the development of new services that enhance access to justice through innovative legal services that reach new consumers in new ways. Thoughtful developers and investors may not want to operate in an environment where they risk being shut down by the regulator or becoming the test case on unauthorized practice. By removing that uncertainty, the sandbox can stimulate innovation, including attracting ITLS providers who focus on everyday legal problems in areas of high unmet need such as family law, employment, residential tenancies disputes, wills or powers of attorney.<sup>24</sup>

Public Protection

- ITLS tools pose unique, novel, and complex risks for the public. The sandbox can help to protect the public from the risks while also providing the benefits of expanded opportunities for obtaining legal assistance. The sandbox will help to ensure ITLS consumers have the same type of safeguards available to clients of licensees: competent and confidential services, recourse when required, and the provision of relevant details enabling informed choices to be made about the providers of the services.

Simply shutting down these services would be neither practical nor desirable in the public interest. Consumers are demanding cheaper and more convenient legal services and technological platforms for delivering them.

Informing Regulatory Development

The sandbox presents an opportunity for the Law Society to obtain detailed evidence about the market interest in the new services, as well as their risks and benefits. Sandbox participants would be required to disclose information about their operations as a condition of participation. This would allow the Law Society to learn what kind of consumer uptake there is for these products, which aspects of these services particularly appeal to consumers, and which aspects are posing challenges. This information will aid future policy development.

The sandbox is also consistent with the Law Society's strategic plan, which states that the Law Society must "periodically confirm the scope of what and how it regulates, particularly in an environment where accessibility of affordable legal services is an issue and significant advances in technology and related innovations are taking place."<sup>25</sup>

Through thoughtful operating criteria and ongoing supervision, the Law Society can also help to shape the delivery of emerging services. The sandbox parameters would give providers targets for the features and protections they would need to build into their products.

Impacts on Licensees

As new service models and tools become increasingly available, they will present innovation opportunities across all legal practice areas and settings, and clients will expect providers to take advantage of these opportunities.

The sandbox's information-gathering and awareness-raising functions can benefit lawyers and paralegals by providing information about how the public is using legal technologies and how these tools are impacting legal practices. This will provide a window into the development of tech tools so that licensees can either develop their own tools or adapt their practices.

Establishing this sandbox will help licensees compete in innovative new markets. Lawyers and paralegals start with the built-in advantages of subject matter expertise and client bases. Whether they choose to develop tech tools themselves or to incorporate other tech tools into their services, the scale and convenience offered by the tools can give firms – especially smaller firms – opportunities to build sustainable practices for a more digital future. The Law Society, in turn, can learn from this experience and better tailor regulation for licensees in these practice settings.

Window of Opportunity

The legal sector has reached an “Uber moment.” As with other sectors and industries, the proliferation of new market entrants and innovative technologies will continue to transform markets and gain users, with or without the regulator’s involvement. Inertia on the Law Society’s part risks allowing ITLS providers to proliferate in Ontario outside of an effective regulatory scheme. The time is right for the Law Society to move forward, ensuring the chance for input and regulatory influence.

Risks and Risk Mitigation

The Public

There is a risk that sandbox participants may fail to deliver quality legal services and therefore harm the public. Such risks could be both significant and novel with the use of tech tools. For example, if an algorithm is inadvertently programmed to make an error, it could affect everyone who uses the tool. Such risks will be mitigated by careful vetting and monitoring participants and by imposing tailored operating conditions. As indicated below in the Overview of the Sandbox Proposal, quality assurance processes and tools will focus on key risks of harm to the public. Please also see the Appendix on Sandbox Operations for details about eligibility, approvals, participation agreements, reporting, and final determinations.

It should be noted that such risks already exist in the market for direct-to-public ITLS. The public will continue to be exposed to them if the Law Society does not act. It will be better to learn about problems with an ITLS tool in a structured sandbox with safeguards as opposed to in the open market. And if some or all of the services prove to be effective, the Law Society will see new pathways forward for effective regulation and quality assurance.

The Law Society

There is a risk that the sandbox will fail to attract a sufficient number of applicants. However, the Task Force has consulted with legal tech entrepreneurs and closely observed developments in other jurisdictions. Many entrepreneurs have confirmed that they would be interested in participating, so long as the sandbox provides a potential pathway to long-term operation. In addition to providing a measure of quality assurance for consumers, sandbox participation will also provide reassurance to developers and investors who would otherwise be wary of investing resources in an enterprise that could be shut down by the regulator.

The experience of regulatory sandboxes in other jurisdictions also provides some assurance of an interest among legal entrepreneurs to engage with sandboxes. As noted above, sandboxes in Utah and British Columbia have attracted a significant number of participants shortly after launching.

The jurisdictions of Utah and British Columbia are both smaller than Ontario. Moreover, the interest of Ontario government and judicial officers in innovative technologies, along with a healthy legal tech sector, will help to create a climate conducive to participation in the sandbox initiative.

A further risk is that the sandbox will not generate sufficient evidence to support Convocation's decision-making. To mitigate this risk, ongoing reporting requirements will be imposed on participants to generate data that will help to inform decision-making. The parameters will be designed and negotiated with the assistance of a skilled data analyst who can gather, analyze and present data to Convocation in formats that are accessible to policy-makers.

Finally, there is a potential risk that the Law Society could be exposed to legal action or damage to its reputation for approving a tool that fails to deliver quality legal services. The Law Society has statutory protection for good faith actions<sup>26</sup> and there is no known precedent for successful claims in comparable situations. The legal and policy risks of launching the sandbox are likely less than the risks of doing nothing.

Overview of the Sandbox Proposal

This section provides an overview of the proposed sandbox. Please see the Appendix for additional details about sandbox operations.

Purpose

The purpose of the sandbox is to assess and facilitate access to technological innovation in legal service delivery, especially in areas of unmet legal needs. The sandbox will also provide detailed evidence to the Law Society to inform regulatory policy-making.

<sup>26</sup> See Law Society Act, s. 9: "No action or other proceedings for damages shall be instituted against the Treasurer or any bencher, official of the Society or person appointed in Convocation for any act done in good faith in the performance or intended performance of any duty or in the exercise or in the intended exercise of any power under this Act, a regulation, a by-law or a rule of practice and procedure, or for any neglect or default in the performance or exercise in good faith of any such duty or power."

<https://www.ontario.ca/laws/statute/90I08#BK15>

Project Concept

Interested individuals and entities will apply to provide ITLS tools and programs in Ontario. The sandbox is intended to be exploratory and innovative. For this reason, eligibility at the initial application stage will be open to a wide range of ITLS and providers, including licensees, governments, charities, not-for-profit and for-profit corporations.

Accepted participants will be permitted to serve consumers while complying with risk-based monitoring and reporting requirements during their allotted operating period in the sandbox. Each participant is expected to operate in the sandbox for about two years. At the end of that period, the Law Society will determine whether (and under what conditions) the participant should be permitted to continue providing the services. It is expected that different participants will start their operating period at different times throughout the five-year life of the sandbox.

Key Features

The Law Society will evaluate and monitor sandbox participants in order to protect the public and gain valuable insights into potential regulatory reforms for Convocation's consideration.

The sandbox will introduce novel, tailored quality assurance processes and tools that will need to be continually re-evaluated and honed. At the outset, they will focus on key risks of harm to the public:

- Failure to exercise legal rights or pursue legal recourse as a result of ignorance, error, or poor-quality legal services;
- Purchase of unnecessary or inappropriate legal services;
- Exposure or sale of confidential client data to third parties; and
- Inability to seek redress or recompense from a legal service provider that has failed to provide the service expected or agreed.

Applicants who meet approval criteria will be permitted to participate in the sandbox. The criteria will be designed to serve the following objectives:

- Expand public access to ITLS tools and programs, particularly in areas of high unmet need;
- Explore flexible new approaches to protecting the public from risk of harm when using ITLS tools and programs;
- Collect information about ITLS outcomes that will support evidence-based regulatory policy-making; and
- Foster responsible development of ITLS tools and programs.

Metrics will be developed in order to evaluate the success of individual participants and the pilot as a whole.

Pathways to Ongoing Delivery

Two key pathways will be available for ITLS providers that have completed their participation in the pilot to continue operating in Ontario:

- (a) Individual permits - Individual participants that have satisfied their performance objectives at the conclusion of their sandbox period may be given permission to continue operating in Ontario on an ongoing basis, notwithstanding their continued non-compliance with certain Law Society standards that apply to lawyer and paralegal licensees. The Law Society's permit could continue to impose any conditions deemed necessary based on the participant's experience in the sandbox.
- (b) Annual reviews of regulatory standards - Annually, for the duration of the sandbox pilot project, the Law Society will formally review and potentially adjust any rules, by-laws, or other regulatory standards that participants have demonstrated can be satisfied in alternative ways. If Convocation approves amendments of general application, certain participants' permits (obtained through pathway (a)) might be obsolete, as their operations would now be compliant with the Law Society's amended regulatory framework.

Duration

The sandbox will be established as a five-year pilot project as opposed to a permanent program. A five-year window will enable the Law Society to inform itself for longer-term and broader regulatory decision-making and to observe trends regarding the capabilities of ITLS and consumer interest.

Legal Framework

The sandbox will operate pursuant to a new category of permitted exception from licensure under the Law Society's By-Laws. The Law Society Act permits the Law Society to use its by-laws to deem certain activities not to be the practice of law or the provision of legal services, as well as to identify certain classes of persons who may provide legal services without a licence.<sup>27</sup> This authority permits the Law Society to establish a comprehensive set of circumstances and conditions in its By-Laws under which an approved sandbox participant (an individual or an entity) may provide legal services to the public. Proposed amendments to the By-Laws are found at Tab 1.1.

<sup>27</sup> See Law Society Act, paragraph 5 of s.1 (8): "For the purposes of this Act, the following persons shall be deemed not to be practising law or providing legal services: A person or a member of a class of persons prescribed by the by-laws, in the circumstances prescribed by the by-laws." See also paragraph 3.1 of s. 62 (0.1): "Convocation may make by-laws, for the purposes of paragraph 5 of subsection 1 (8), prescribing persons or classes of persons who shall be deemed not to be practising law or providing legal services and the circumstances in which each such person or class of persons shall be deemed not to be practising law or providing legal services;" <https://www.ontario.ca/laws/statute/90I08#BK184>

Resources

Staffing

The sandbox will begin with three staff: a manager, data analyst, and program administrator. The manager will be a full-time position reporting jointly to the Executive Directors of Policy and Professional Development & Competence. The other two positions will be filled by contract and will report to the manager.

The manager will have lead responsibility for policy and program development, outreach and communications, evaluation of applicants, negotiation of participation agreements, monitoring of participants, analysis and reports to Convocation. The data analyst will establish data reporting and protection protocols, monitor compliance with data reporting and protection, and assist with analysis and reporting. The administrator will manage routine communications with applicants, participants and the advisory council, coordinate media requests, manage records, and publish decisions, in addition to scheduling and general administrative work.

Advisory Council

A volunteer advisory council of external experts will be established to help steer the sandbox to meet its objectives, by providing advice and assisting in reviewing applications and evaluating participants. Advisory council members would represent a range of expertise, including: legal technology and innovation; legal regulation and professional ethics; priority legal practice areas such as family law; consumer protection and advocacy; economics; regulatory sandboxes and government or judicial administration.

Advisory bodies are common for regulatory sandboxes. They allow the regulator to tap into skills and perspectives that it lacks in-house. They also give the public and participants confidence that the regulator will be open to exploring new ideas, guided by leading independent experts.

Program Costs

There will be one-time start-up costs associated with implementing and launching the sandbox, followed by ongoing operating costs, the bulk of which will relate to compensation for the three positions. The table below contains a preliminary cost projection, on the understanding that specific operational details are still to be developed<sup>28</sup>. The projected costs include inflationary increases of approximately 2% in Year 2.

<sup>28</sup> Spending for Year 1 is expected to start around the midpoint of 2021. The 2021 budget includes $200,000 to support the sandbox. The estimated budget requirements for 2022 are preliminary, and need

Expenses	Basis	Annual Budget Year 1 ($)*	Annual Budget Year 2 ($)*

Total		$435,000	$428,500

Funding Sources

Initially, the sandbox will be funded by licensee annual fees. Ideally, ongoing operations can ultimately be funded on a cost recovery basis, recognizing however that unduly high fees could deter applicants, especially those with limited access to capital, thereby undermining the sandbox's overall potential.<sup>29</sup> Tiered fee structures may be needed, including separate fee categories for not-for-profit providers and small or early-stage companies.

Additional funding will be sought from external sources, which could offset participant fee shortfalls or help to minimize participant fees. Exploratory conversations have taken place but formal fundraising cannot take place until Convocation's approval has been provided and publicly communicated. Potential funders include government to be revisited once further information is available. Funding requirements for 2023 and onwards will be assessed as the sandbox evolves. As the sandbox initiative is at the conceptual stage, it is not possible to project possible additional costs of internal or external resources that may be needed to support the project.

<sup>29</sup> The legal innovation sandboxes in BC and Utah do not currently charge fees to applicants or participants, although the Supreme Court of Utah has expressly given Utah's program the power to do so. It is first working on learning more about the profiles of participants before determining fee structures.

contributions, grants from funding organizations, and collaboration or resource-sharing with other regulators.

Implementation and Launch

If Convocation approves the pilot, an early priority will be to recruit sandbox staff and advisory council members. These individuals will be centrally involved in completing the pre-launch implementation work. Staff will keep the Task Force updated on implementation progress.

Conclusion

The Law Society has an opportunity to play a proactive, forward thinking role in developing a regulatory framework for ITLS. The technologies will continue to develop, but the Law Society may lose the opportunity to have an influence if it does not act quickly. Through the sandbox pilot, the Law Society can establish a presence in the ITLS field while building evidence to inform longer term decision-making about future regulatory policies. The Law Society is well positioned to assess the potential benefits of innovative technologies, minimize risks of harm, and identify new pathways for regulation in the public interest. Entering this arena represents an imperative in regulatory advancement and leadership.

Appendix: Sandbox Operations

Operating the sandbox will involve the following functions:

- Communicating with potential applicants and other stakeholders;
- Fundraising and liaising with governments and other regulators;
- Reviewing and approving applications;
- Drafting participation agreements for eligible applicants;
- Publishing application decisions;
- Monitoring and auditing participants;
- Evaluating data received from participants and users, and potentially gathering data in other ways such as conducting surveys or focus groups or consultation with courts;
- Making final determinations following a participant's sandbox period;
- Publicly reporting participant evaluation outcomes; and
- Reporting annually to Convocation about overall sandbox outcomes and making recommendations for Convocation to review and amend any rules, by-laws, or other regulatory standards that can demonstrably be satisfied in alternative ways.

Communications

A branding and communications strategy will be developed for the sandbox. This will address how to present the sandbox to potential applicants, the public, licensees and other stakeholders.

One of the key pre-launch outreach functions will be to identify target sandbox participants, as well as target users of participants' ITLS tools and programs.

Eligibility

Any person or entity that is prevented by current regulations from operating an ITLS tool or program may apply to the sandbox.

The sandbox is intended to be exploratory, innovative, and educational. For this reason, eligibility at the initial application stage will be open to the widest possible range of ITLS tools and programs. While applicants' tools or programs must have as a central feature the innovative delivery of legal services via technology, there will not be restrictions on the kinds of legal tasks and functions performed. The approval and evaluation processes serve as safeguards to ensure that only participants who do not pose unacceptable risks of harm to the public will be permitted to operate. Applicants must have obtained all applicable permissions, such as business permits, to operate their ITLS tool or program in Ontario.

Some applicants may be given priority, such as those that are focused on expanding access to justice in areas of law with high unmet legal needs.

Intake, Application Review and Approval

Successful applicants will be permitted to join the sandbox at any point during the five-year pilot period, rather than at certain fixed intake periods. This rolling admission offers participants flexibility to apply at whatever stage in their development works best for them, with the caveat that applicants cannot join so late in the pilot period that there is insufficient time to monitor and assess their service.

The following process will be used to review and approve participants' applications:

- Sandbox staff receive and process applications, including following up with applicants to identify gaps or concerns.
- The advisory council reviews completed applications and prepares a recommendation to approve, reject, or return the application for further information.
- After reviewing the advisory council's recommendation, the sandbox manager decides to approve, reject, or return the application.
- Applicants may request a review of a decision to reject an application, or of conditions imposed in a decision to approve an application; review decisions are made by a Law Society Executive Director.

Application approval decisions will be made with reference to a detailed set of approval criteria, which will be publicly available. The following are examples of topics that the detailed criteria will include:

- Viability (whether the applicant or its tool demonstrates capability of delivering legal services over the duration of sandbox participation; whether it is at a sufficient stage of development to launch);
- Consumer benefit (whether the tool offers a good prospect of identifiable benefit to users (either directly or via increased competition) and whether it poses likely detrimental impacts to users or to the legal system);
- Licensee involvement (whether the tool has involved licensed Ontario lawyers or paralegals in its development, delivery, or both);
- Insurance (whether the applicant carries appropriate insurance commensurate to the risks involved in the delivery of its services, e.g. errors and omissions insurance, product liability insurance, general commercial liability insurance, and/or cyber insurance);
- Quality assurance (whether the applicant has appropriate mechanisms in place for continuously assuring and enhancing the tool's technical quality; whether persons involved with the operation of the tool receive appropriate training and support); and
- Exit strategy (whether the applicant has adequate plans for protecting users' rights and interests in the event of either the tool or the entity itself ceasing operation due to business or regulatory reasons).

Approval criteria will be designed to be flexible and responsive to novel proposals. Operating conditions can be imposed to address certain weaknesses in an applicant's overall compliance with the criteria. Approval criteria should focus on the outcomes that ITLS tools generate, though in some circumstances it will also be appropriate to focus on those tools' processes. They will aim to measure tools in terms of both risks and benefits so that a balancing exercise can be done.

Approval decisions will aim to ensure that minimum viability and public protection requirements are met, while recognizing that some degree of uncertainty is acceptable in this environment, and indeed is beneficial for the sandbox's testing, evaluation, and learning functions. Approval decisions at this entry stage will aim to minimally impair innovation and public access to legal services. Insurance requirements, consumer communication and disclosure requirements, and compliance with other relevant law (such as privacy legislation) will also serve as concurrent public protection safeguards.

The sandbox office will publish a written decision for each completed application that it receives.

Participation Agreements

If approved to join the sandbox, participants will need to enter into a participation agreement with the Law Society, which will set out the conditions under which the participant can provide legal services. Conditions will include:

- protocols for data collection and data governance;
- requirements for participants to communicate certain information to users and the public;
- requirements for participants to address user complaints;
- maintenance of approval conditions, e.g., carrying insurance; and
- reporting and auditing requirements.

These approvals and agreements will bring participants under the exception to be created in the By-Laws that will permit participants to provide legal services. They will preclude the Law Society from exercising its "unauthorized practice" enforcement powers as long as a participant abides by the terms of its approval and agreement.

Each approved participant will be given an individualized operating period in the sandbox that best meets the needs of both the Law Society and the participant. As a general rule, participants would be given an operating period of two years, with options to extend on mutual consent. Participants need sufficient time to effectively demonstrate their viability. At the end of a participant's operating period in the sandbox, the Law Society will need to decide whether the participant can continue operating under an ongoing permit.

A process for suspension or revocation of an approval will be established, where serious problems have arisen during a participant's operating period in the sandbox. Suspension or revocation could be based on non-compliance with the participant's approval conditions or participation agreement, as a result of a complaint resolution process, or as a result of the entity ceasing operations.

Reporting on Data and Outcomes

Each participant would have individually tailored reporting requirements. The resulting data would be evaluated based on the individualized risks of the participant and would inform decision-making about the participant. Examples of information that participants may be required to report include:

- Consumer demographics;
- Consumer interest and uptake;
- Performance outcomes and quality of service;
- Legal process outcomes;
- Complaint resolution outcomes and service feedback;
- Pricing information;
- Financial and other business outcomes;
- Marketing models; and
- Viability and sustainability of the tool.

Policies will also be developed for the Law Society's own use and protection of data shared by sandbox participants. Such policies would likely include:

- A requirement that participants anonymize any data shared with the Law Society;
- A guarantee that the Law Society would keep data provided by sandbox participants confidential, and not share it with any other organization, except for certain legal reasons, or to publicly report certain sandbox outcomes
- A policy governing who within the Law Society can access the data and for what purposes; and
- A policy for maintaining and ultimately destroying shared data.

Participants will also be required to communicate certain information to users and the public. This information could include, for example:

- Information about the sandbox program and the tool's permission to operate within it, including any conditions imposed;
- Informed consent disclosures, acknowledging that the tool or service:
  - is not being provided by an Ontario licensee,
  - carries liability insurance, and/or
  - has certain limitations in terms of the tasks or functions that it can perform, as applicable; and
- Information about the applicable complaint resolution processes and feedback channels available through the participant and/or the Law Society.

There may also be a need for escalation protocols for users who are unsatisfied with the participant's process.

A protocol will also be established for users who wish to provide additional feedback about the tool, the entity, or the sandbox pilot.

Making Final Determinations about Participants

Individual participants that have satisfied their performance objectives at the conclusion of their sandbox period may be given permission to continue operating in Ontario on an ongoing basis, notwithstanding their continued non-compliance with certain Law Society standards that apply to lawyer and paralegal licensees. The permit issued by the Law Society could continue to impose any conditions deemed necessary based on the participant's experience in the sandbox.

The decisions about participants will be made public to support transparency and to educate the public, the professions, and legal innovators about the benefits, risks, and other developments in this emerging field.

Dealing with Non-Participants

A strategy will be developed with respect to entities that do not apply to participate in the pilot project but conduct similar operations to sandbox participants, in contravention of Law Society rules and by-laws. Some of these entities may operate outside of the Law Society's traditional purview, and some may raise challenging issues about whether they provide legal services as defined by the Law Society Act.

Prosecution is only one among several tools available to the Law Society for these circumstances, and has a variety of practical and strategic limitations. A staged approach will be coordinated with the Law Society's Professional Regulation Division, with the aim of incentivizing non-participants to apply for participation in the sandbox. This approach will accord with the Law Society's current approach to addressing unauthorized practice complaints.

NOTICE OF MOTION

Ms. Shi moved, seconded by Mr. Fagan, THAT:

WHEREAS

- (1) Since the passage of The Law of the People’s Republic of China for Safeguarding National Security in the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region (the “National Security Law”), Hong Kong government has used it to arrest and charge dissenters. Those targeted are mostly activists and young people who did no more than to participate in expressing views on how Hong Kong should be governed.

The latest round of arresting 55 activists was condemned around the world, including Canada. (Tab 1)

Respected Chinese human rights artist Ai Weiwei made a film about the struggle of Hongkongers, including teenagers, for freedom and the price that they have paid for it. (Tab 2)

Amnesty International raised its concern about this Law. (Tab 3)

- (2) On January 14, 2021, Hong Kong passed another grim milestone. A lawyer has been arrested with others for having assisted protesters seeking universal suffrage (Tab 4)
- (3) The Right Honourable Beverley McLachlin, former Chief Justice of Canada, is a current overseas non-permanent judge of Hong Kong Court of Final Appeal and therefore part of the system of enforcement of the National Security Law. (Tab 5)
- (4) Unlike Canada, Hong Kong does not enjoy any constitutional guarantee of fundamental rights and freedoms that the judiciary can safeguard by striking down any laws that are in breach of such rights and freedoms.
- (5) Instead, this National Security Law specifically stipulates in Article 65 that

The power of interpretation of this law shall be vested in the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress (of the People's Republic of China) (Tab 6)

- (6) There is increasing concern that the Communist rulers of China use foreign judges in the Hong Kong Court of Final Appeal as a fig leaf to create the illusion of legitimacy to an increasingly oppressive regime and its latest and most blatant oppression of the fundamental freedoms of people of Hong Kong.
- (7) Noted UK barrister David Perry QC has withdrawn from Hong Kong government's team that will prosecute Martin Lee QC, a noted Hong Kong barrister and the founder of Hong Kong Democratic Party. Mr. Lee was arrested for having participated in the well-known demonstration in Hong Kong which was attended by over 1 million Hongkongers last year. (Tab 7, 8)

UK has commenced discussion on whether UK judges should continue their membership of said Court. (Tab 9)

- (8) It is time that LSO and the former Chief Justice address such concern.
- (9) Not only is it a moral imperative for LSO to take a stand with respect to one of the highest and most respected legal officers of Canada and her continuing membership in an oppressive and brutal regime, but it is also difficult to justify the LSO's having a Human Rights Monitoring Group advocating human rights to foreigners, while remaining silent as Canada's own former Chief Justice sits on a court whose mandate from a brutal regime is to enforce a law as interpreted by the Communist government of China, a law that is antithetical to all that Canada stands for, and one that punishes a lawyer for doing his or her job in supporting fundamental freedoms.

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that Convocation direct LSO to write to the Right Honourable Beverly McLachlin forthwith, and request that she resign her position at the Hong Kong Court of Final Appeal immediately.

FOR DECISION*Law Society of Ontario
Annual Financial Statements
for the year ended December 31, 2020*Motion:

That Convocation approve the audited annual financial statements for the Law Society of Ontario for the financial year ended December 31, 2020, including the net inter-fund transfers listed in Note 14, which are as follows:

- $1,519,000 from the Capital Allocation Fund to the Invested in Capital and Intangible Assets Fund representing assets capitalized during the year in compliance with the Society's accounting policies;
- $156,000 from the Special Projects Fund to the General Fund to fund the facilities condition assessment, work related to the implementation of approved recommendations from the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group and maintenance of the Society's grounds, net of funding transferred to the Special Projects Fund to fund the next bench election; and
- $100,000 from the lawyer General Fund to the Repayable Allowance Fund, as provided in the 2020 budget to fund the Repayable Allowance Program in the Licensing Process.

The financial statements are accompanied by an unmodified opinion from the auditor. Michael Hawtin, Partner Assurance, from PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP will be in attendance.

The financial statements present the financial position and operations of the Law Society and include the General Funds (or operating funds) and a number of special purpose or restricted funds. The restricted funds are described in the financial statements and are:

- The Compensation Fund, restricted by the Law Society Act;
- The Errors & Omissions Insurance Fund (E&O Fund), the Capital Allocation Fund, the Invested in Capital & Intangible Assets Fund, the County Libraries Fund, the Repayable Allowance Fund, the Special Projects Fund and the Parental Leave Assistance Fund, all restricted by policies of Convocation.

Inter-fund Transfers

The net inter-fund transfers are listed in Note 14 to the Annual Financial Statements and are routine in nature. Generally, inter-fund transfers relate to the capitalization of capital and intangible assets at year-end or the transfer of budgeted funds to appropriate Restricted Funds based on the criteria of the Fund. As these Funds are restricted by Convocation, the transfers are requested to be specifically approved by Convocation as part of the approval of the financial statements.

As the Special Projects Fund sees the transfer of budgeted funds in and out of that Fund, the following information is intended to provide greater clarity.

The net inter-fund transfer of $156,000 from the Special Projects Fund to the General Fund includes $184,000 of transfers from the Special Projects Fund to the General Fund offset by $28,000 of transfers from the General Fund to the Special Projects Fund. The Special Projects Fund ensures that budgeted funds have been approved by Convocation and are intended for a specific initiative in a given budget year, remain available for the successful completion of the project in the following year if the project is delayed.

In 2020, the transfers from the Special Projects Fund to the General Fund relate to:

- $109,000 to fund the Facilities Condition Assessment and 10-year Facility Plan (FCA) that informed the capital process for 2021 and onwards. The FCA was budgeted in 2019 but was delayed to allow the completion of some large facilities projects in 2019, which would impact the assessment. Spending occurred in 2020 and the results of the FCA were used in the 2021 capital budget.
- $55,000 to fund the work to implement approved recommendations from the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group. The initiative was budgeted in 2018 but was delayed as further consideration was required by the Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee prior to commencing the project. Work on this initiative was completed over 2019 and 2020.
- $20,000 to fund grounds maintenance activities in 2020. The funding was originally received as a grant from Canada Life in response to the development of a building adjacent to the Law Society's property and the negative impact it would have on sun exposure for our grounds.

Transfers from the General Funds to the Special Projects Fund relate to the following expenditures in 2020:

- $28,000 to fund the next bench election. To evenly allocate the cost of the bench election over four years rather than budget for all election expenses in one year, funds are transferred to the Special Projects Fund each year. This approach allows for the smoothing of the impact on annual fees.

Management Discussion & Analysis

The primary Management Discussion and Analysis can be found at the start of the Annual Financial Statements. In addition, supplementary unaudited Schedules of Revenues and Expenses for the General Fund, Compensation Fund and Errors & Omissions Fund comparing actual results to budget are included at Tab 3.1.3.

2020 ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENTS

MANAGEMENT DISCUSSION AND ANALYSIS

Summary of Financial Performance

The Law Society of Ontario's ("Society") Lawyer and Paralegal General Funds, which account for the Society's program delivery and administrative activities, are reporting combined revenues in excess of expenses of $4.1 million (2019 - $836,000 excess of expenses over revenues). To reduce annual fees for licensees, the 2020 budget incorporated funding of $5.1 million from the fund balance of the Lawyer General Fund along with $1.2 million in funding from surplus investment income in the Errors & Omissions Insurance Fund ("E&O Fund"). Similarly, the 2020 budget planned for utilization of $2.4 million of the Paralegal General Fund balance to fund operations associated with the Paralegal General Fund. The use of the fund balances is based on the Society's Fund Balance Management Policy and not-for-profit budgeting best practices. The Society did not use these sources of funding in 2020 despite experiencing a decrease in revenues as it proactively introduced expenditure containment measures in response to the COVID-19 pandemic.

The Society's restricted funds are reporting combined excess of revenues over expenses of $10.9 million in 2020 (2019 - $8.4 million) with the lawyer pool of the Compensation Fund experiencing revenues in excess of expenses of $8.7 million (2019 - $10.1 million). In response to unusually high claims arising prior to 2017 against the lawyer pool of the Compensation Fund, which led to the decline of the fund balance below the Fund Balance Management Policy minimum threshold, the Society implemented a three-year plan from 2018 to 2020 to replenish the Fund and restore its financial stability. As part of the three-year replenishment plan, the annual fee for the lawyer pool of the Compensation Fund was set with the objective of increasing the fund balance by an additional $5 million in each of the three years. As at the end of 2020, this plan, coupled with claims returning to a more normal level, has resulted in the fund balance increasing to $30.5 million, which is above the minimum permissible threshold under the Society's Fund Balance Management Policy.

Statement of Revenues and Expenses and Change in Fund Balances

Revenues

The Society implemented a number of different initiatives to assist licensees in addressing the challenges of the COVID-19 pandemic in 2020 and beyond. These include the deferral of withdrawals for those licensees on the Society's monthly pre-authorized payment plan for annual fees and the delay of administrative late fees and suspension for those licensees who had not complied with annual fee and filing obligations.

Annual Fees

With an annual fee reduction of $135 for lawyers and $109 for paralegals approved in the 2020 budget, total annual fee revenues have decreased to $95.3 million (2019 - $99.3 million). The reduction in annual fees was partially offset by an increase in the number of licensees billed in 2020 although the rate of growth in the number of full-fee-paying-equivalent paralegals has continued to slow over the last several years.

Insurance Premiums and Levies

The E&O Fund accounts for insurance related transactions between Lawyers' Professional Indemnity Company ("LAWPRO"), the Society and insured lawyers. The E&O Fund collects premiums and levies from lawyers and remits these amounts to LAWPRO. Insurance premiums and levies decreased slightly to $101.8 million in 2020 (2019 - $102.8 million). The base premium for professional liability insurance coverage for Ontario lawyers remained unchanged at $2,950 in 2020. The overall reduction in revenue is attributable to a decline in transaction levies partially offset by an increase in the number of lawyers obtaining insurance coverage.

Professional Development & Competence ("PD&C")

PD&C revenue comprises licensing process and continuing professional development fees. With COVID-19 restrictions on large gathering and physical distancing requirements, total PD&C revenue decreased this year to $20.0 million (2019 - $23.1 million).

Licensing Process revenue from lawyer ($11.6 million) and paralegal candidates ($2.2 million) has decreased by $1.1 million from 2019. The underlying licensing process fees charged to candidates were unchanged, but several factors drove the decrease in revenue. Among these was an increase in the number of candidates deferring their examinations to the following year. COVID-19 restrictions resulted in a reduction in the number of articling positions contributing to a decline in articling fee revenue from the prior year. In addition, with large gathering restrictions, the Society was not able to hold the ceremonial component of the Call to the Bar for lawyer candidates and reduced fees accordingly, resulting in a reduction in the Call to the Bar fee revenues.

Total Continuing Professional Development ("CPD") revenue decreased to $6.3 million (2019 - $8.2 million). Revenues from CPD were adversely impacted by COVID-19 as all in-person programming was cancelled effective March 2020. The Society provided several complimentary CPD webinars to support licensees during the pandemic and opened the CPD archives to allow licensees to watch these programs free of charge while still meeting their CPD requirements. The Society mitigated revenue declines in the second half of the year by delivering programming through alternate delivery methods including on-demand webinars, audio recordings, live webcasts and pivoting program delivery to reflect emerging topics as a result of the pandemic.

Investment Income and Change in Fair Value of Investments

There was significant financial market volatility in 2020, resulting in lower investment returns of $3.9 million (2019 - $4.9 million). Increases in the market value of Canadian equities resulted in unrealized gains of $1.7 million for the year (2019 - $2.6 million unrealized gains) while lower interest rates led to a reduction in investment income to $2.2 million (2019 - $2.3 million).

Other Revenue

Other revenue of $7.5 million (2019 - $8.4 million) primarily comprises income from Ontario Reports royalties, administrative fees, regulatory compliance ordered cost recoveries, and catering sales. The decrease from 2019 is primarily due to a decline in catering revenue. All restaurant and catering operations were closed in mid-March 2020 through to the end of the year because of the COVID-19 related restrictions.

Expenses

The Society proactively addressed the uncertainties associated with the COVID-19 pandemic through cost containment measures that cut across the organization. In 2020, the decrease in expenditures are as a result of intentional staffing cost reductions and lower operating expenses due to the impact of COVID-19 on aspects of operations.

Professional Regulation, Tribunals and Compliance

Total regulatory expenses increased slightly to $30.7 million (2019 - $30.5 million) but were less than budget. The variance from budget was driven by staff vacancies and the circumstantial impact of work at home protocols that produced savings in travel, office and document reproduction costs.

Professional Development and Competence

Total PD&C expenses have decreased to $26.8 million (2019 - $30.8 million).

With CPD revenue declining due to the cancellation of large flagship summits and in-person programming, costs related to hosting these large programs including venue rental, catering, audio-visual and contract staffing to administer in-person programming were also eliminated. As a result, CPD expenses were reduced to $3.3 million (2019 - $4.2 million) coinciding with the reduction in CPD revenues during the year.

Lawyer and paralegal licensing examination costs were reduced to $10.6 million (2019 - $13.2 million). The decrease in the examination costs were the combination of lower numbers of candidates writing examinations in the current year reducing revenue and a transition to online examinations from in-person as a result of COVID-19. The lower examination costs were partially offset by online implementation expenses in 2020, with further spending on infrastructure and technology requirements anticipated in the next few years.

Corporate Services

Corporate services expenses, primarily comprising the Client Service Centre, Information Technology, Facilities, Finance, Office of General Counsel and Human Resources, along with general corporate costs, were $27.6 million (2019 – $33.9 million). The decrease was primarily due to a legal matter that was settled in the prior year and for which the Society is actively pursuing recovery through its insurer.

Convocation, Policy and Outreach

Convocation, policy and outreach expenses, primarily related to Policy, External Relations & Communications, and Governance, including bencher related expenses, decreased to $6.0 million (2019 – $8.8 million).

With COVID-19 restrictions, all Committee and Convocation meetings moved from in-person to virtual from March 16, 2020 through to the end of the year. This reduced bencher related travel time impacting the associated remuneration and expense reimbursements as well as catering costs. In addition, bencher remuneration was also reduced with Convocation's decision to not claim for governance work occurring from April 9, 2020 to June 30, 2020. Bencher and Convocation related expenses declined to $932,000 (2019 - $2.2 million). Similarly, the restrictions resulted in stakeholder engagement shifting to virtual platforms with reductions in related expenses.

Changes in Fund BalancesGeneral Fund

The excess of revenues over expenses for the year of $4.1 million led to an increase in the fund balance of the Lawyer General Fund to $30.3 million. Convocation's fund balance management policy establishes minimum and maximum benchmarks of two and three months of operating expenses, respectively, to be maintained as the Lawyer General Fund balance; a balance between $17 million and $26 million. As the fund balance of the Lawyer General Fund was projected to exceed three months of budgeted General Fund expenses, the Society has budgeted to use $6.2 million of the fund balance in 2021 to reduce the lawyer annual fee.

Revenues in excess of expenses for the year of $8,000 led to the fund balance of the Paralegal General Fund remaining at $1.8 million.

Restricted Funds

In 2020, the excess of revenues over expenses for the year in the lawyer pool of the Compensation Fund amounted to $8.7 million, increasing the fund balance for lawyers to $30.5 million. The Society utilizes stochastic modeling to forecast future claims experience against the lawyer pool of the Compensation Fund. This model is also used by the Society's Lawyer Compensation Fund Balance Management Policy to determine fund balance minimum and maximum thresholds, which are set at an amount sufficient to provide for a minimum of one 97.5th percentile aggregate claim scenario (a one-in-forty-year event) and a maximum of four 99th percentile aggregate claim scenarios (four one-in-one-hundred-year events). The 2020 year was the final year of a three-year plan to restore the fund balance with it now above the minimum fund balance threshold of $19.6 million.

In 2020, the Compensation Fund balance for paralegals increased slightly to $959,000 after revenues in excess of expenses for the year of $11,000.

The E&O Fund balance increased slightly to $55.4 million after revenues in excess of expenses for the year of $941,000. The transfer of $1.2 million from the E&O Fund to the Lawyer General Fund approved in the 2020 budget was not executed due to the favourable operating results in the Lawyer General Fund.

Balance Sheet*Portfolio Investments

Portfolio investments are shown at fair value of $69.7 million (2019 – $63.8 million). Portfolio investments have increased because of total unrealized gains and investment income. Investments comprise Canadian equities (30%) and Canadian fixed income instruments (70%).

Deferred Revenue

Deferred revenue relates primarily to licensee annual fees, insurance premiums and licensing process fees collected prior to December 31 relating to fees for the subsequent fiscal year. Deferred revenue decreased to $5.7 million (2019 - $16.0 million). This decrease is primarily due to the change in the timing of the issuance of licensee annual fee invoices from the December prior to the year being billed for to the January of the given year. This change was made to align with decisions made by Convocation in 2020, which take effect in 2021, to harmonize the date for licensees to fulfill their administrative requirements by March 31. Annual fees were payable by March 1 in 2020.

Provision for Unpaid Grants

The Compensation Fund liability for unpaid grants decreased to $16.9 million (2019 – $17.4 million). The provision for unpaid grants in the Compensation Fund represents the estimate for unpaid claims against the Compensation Fund, supplemented by the costs for processing these claims. The slight decrease in this liability in the current year is a reflection of normal Compensation Fund operations.

Conclusion

Despite the challenges faced by the Society in 2020 due to the COVID-19 pandemic, the Society is in a financially sound position, is in compliance with its fund balance management policies and is well placed for the future. In 2020, the Society implemented initiatives to assist licensees and reduce the overall cost of its operations. Looking forward to 2021, these initiatives, including the 2021 Annual Fee COVID-19 Deferral Option, will assist licensees dealing with the burdens of the COVID-19 pandemic.

What we have audited

The Law Society's financial statements comprise:

- the balance sheet as at December 31, 2020;
- the statement of revenues and expenses and change in fund balances for the year then ended;
- the statement of cash flows for the year then ended; and
- the notes to the financial statements, which include significant accounting policies and other explanatory information.

Basis for opinion

We conducted our audit in accordance with Canadian generally accepted auditing standards. Our responsibilities under those standards are further described in the Auditor's responsibilities for the audit of the financial statements section of our report.

We believe that the audit evidence we have obtained is sufficient and appropriate to provide a basis for our opinion.

Independence

We are independent of the Law Society in accordance with the ethical requirements that are relevant to our audit of the financial statements in Canada. We have fulfilled our other ethical responsibilities in accordance with these requirements.

Other information

Management is responsible for the other information. The other information comprises the information, other than the financial statements and our auditor's report thereon, included in the annual report.

Our opinion on the financial statements does not cover the other information and we do not express any form of assurance conclusion thereon.

In connection with our audit of the financial statements, our responsibility is to read the other information identified above and, in doing so, consider whether the other information is materially inconsistent with the financial statements or our knowledge obtained in the audit, or otherwise appears to be materially misstated.

If, based on the work we have performed, we conclude that there is a material misstatement of this other information, we are required to report that fact. We have nothing to report in this regard.

Responsibilities of management and those charged with governance for the financial statements

Management is responsible for the preparation and fair presentation of the financial statements in accordance with Canadian accounting standards for not-for-profit organizations, and for such internal control as management determines is necessary to enable the preparation of financial statements that are free from material misstatement, whether due to fraud or error.

In preparing the financial statements, management is responsible for assessing the Law Society's ability to continue as a going concern, disclosing, as applicable, matters related to going concern and using the going concern basis of accounting unless management either intends to liquidate the Law Society or to cease operations, or has no realistic alternative but to do so.

Those charged with governance are responsible for overseeing the Law Society's financial reporting process.

Auditor's responsibilities for the audit of the financial statements

Our objectives are to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the financial statements as a whole are free from material misstatement, whether due to fraud or error, and to issue an auditor's report that includes our opinion. Reasonable assurance is a high level of assurance, but is not a guarantee that an audit conducted in accordance with Canadian generally accepted auditing standards will always detect a material misstatement when it exists. Misstatements can arise from fraud or error and are considered material if, individually or in the aggregate, they could reasonably be expected to influence the economic decisions of users taken on the basis of these financial statements.

As part of an audit in accordance with Canadian generally accepted auditing standards, we exercise professional judgment and maintain professional skepticism throughout the audit. We also:

- Identify and assess the risks of material misstatement of the financial statements, whether due to fraud or error, design and perform audit procedures responsive to those risks, and obtain audit evidence that is sufficient and appropriate to provide a basis for our opinion. The risk of not detecting a material misstatement resulting from fraud is higher than for one resulting from error, as fraud may involve collusion, forgery, intentional omissions, misrepresentations, or the override of internal control.

- Obtain an understanding of internal control relevant to the audit in order to design audit procedures that are appropriate in the circumstances, but not for the purpose of expressing an opinion on the effectiveness of the Law Society's internal control.
- Evaluate the appropriateness of accounting policies used and the reasonableness of accounting estimates and related disclosures made by management.
- Conclude on the appropriateness of management's use of the going concern basis of accounting and, based on the audit evidence obtained, whether a material uncertainty exists related to events or conditions that may cast significant doubt on the Law Society's ability to continue as a going concern. If we conclude that a material uncertainty exists, we are required to draw attention in our auditor's report to the related disclosures in the financial statements or, if such disclosures are inadequate, to modify our opinion. Our conclusions are based on the audit evidence obtained up to the date of our auditor's report. However, future events or conditions may cause the Law Society to cease to continue as a going concern.
- Evaluate the overall presentation, structure and content of the financial statements, including the disclosures, and whether the financial statements represent the underlying transactions and events in a manner that achieves fair presentation.

We communicate with those charged with governance regarding, among other matters, the planned scope and timing of the audit and significant audit findings, including any significant deficiencies in internal control that we identify during our audit.

LAW SOCIETY OF ONTARIO

Notes to Financial Statements, December 31, 2020

Stated in whole dollars except where indicated

1. Background

The Law Society of Ontario (“Society”) was founded in 1797 and incorporated in 1822 with the enactment of the Law Society Act.

The Law Society Act, section 4.1, states that it is a function of the Society to ensure that:

- all persons who practise law in Ontario or provide legal services in Ontario meet standards of learning, professional competence and professional conduct that are appropriate for the legal services they provide; and
- the standards of learning, professional competence and professional conduct for the provision of a particular legal service in a particular area of law apply equally to persons who practise law in Ontario and persons who provide legal services in Ontario.

In carrying out its functions, duties and powers, the Society, pursuant to section 4.2 of the Law Society Act, shall have regard to the following principles:

- the Society has a duty to maintain and advance the cause of justice and the rule of law;
- the Society has a duty to act so as to facilitate access to justice for the people of Ontario;
- the Society has a duty to protect the public interest;
- the Society has a duty to act in a timely, open and efficient manner;
- standards of learning, professional competence and professional conduct for licensees and restrictions on who may provide particular legal services should be proportionate to the significance of the regulatory objectives sought to be realized.

The governing body of the Society, which is known as Convocation, carries out this mandate. Convocation comprises benchers and the Treasurer who presides over Convocation.

As at December 31, 2020, lawyers entitled to practice law and paralegals entitled to provide legal services in Ontario numbered approximately 57,000 and 9,600, respectively. The primary sources of revenues are licensee annual fees and insurance premiums and levies, set by Convocation, based on the financial requirements of the Society.

The Society is not subject to federal or provincial income taxes.

2. Nature of Financial Statements

These financial statements present the financial position and operations of the Society and include the General Funds and a number of special purpose funds restricted by the Law Society Act or Convocation.

Subsidiaries and Related Entity

The Society has two wholly-owned subsidiaries: Lawyers' Professional Indemnity Company ("LAWPRO"), and LIRN Inc. ("LIRN") and a related entity, The Law Society Foundation. The audited annual financial statements for these three entities are available separately.

General Funds

The General Funds account for the Society's program delivery and administrative activities related to the regulation and licensing of lawyers and paralegals. These funds report unrestricted resources. As at December 31, 2020, the Lawyer General Fund balance was $30,301,000 (2019 – $26,106,000). The Paralegal General Fund balance was $1,832,000 (2019 – $1,834,000).

The Society's policy is to maintain the Lawyer General Fund balance at no less than two and no more than three months of Lawyer General Fund budgeted expenses.

If the Lawyer General Fund balance exceeds three months of budgeted Lawyer General Fund expenses, Convocation shall utilize the excess for one or more of the following:

- mitigate the Lawyer General Fund levy for the next fiscal year;
- transfer the excess to another Society fund if the fund balance is below its stated policy benchmark.

If the Lawyer General Fund balance is less than two months of budgeted Lawyer General Fund expenses, Convocation shall budget for an annual surplus to restore the fund balance to its minimum policy objective. The minimum policy benchmark should be restored within three fiscal periods.

If the Lawyer General Fund balance is more than two months of budgeted Lawyer General Fund expenses and less than three months of budgeted Lawyer General Fund expenses, Convocation may appropriate funds from the Lawyer General Fund balance for one or more of the following:

- mitigate the Lawyer General Fund levy for the next fiscal year;
- transfer the excess to another Society fund if the fund balance is below its stated policy benchmark.

Restricted Funds

Compensation Fund

The Society maintains the Compensation Fund pursuant to section 51 of the Law Society Act to relieve or mitigate loss sustained by any person in consequence of dishonesty on the part of a licensee, in connection with the licensee's professional business or in connection with any trust of which the licensee was a trustee.

Pursuant to the Law Society Act, the Compensation Fund is supported by licensee annual fees, investment income and recoveries. The Compensation Fund expenses are only for payment of grants, and direct program delivery and administration costs. There are separate fund balances for lawyer licensees and paralegal licensees.

The Society's policy is to maintain the lawyer pool of the Compensation Fund balance at an amount sufficient to provide for a minimum of one 97.5th percentile aggregate claim scenarios (one-in-forty-year event) and a maximum of four 99th percentile aggregate claim scenarios (one-in-one hundred-year event). The estimated amount of aggregate claims is to be actuarially reviewed at least every three years.

If the lawyer pool of the Compensation Fund balance exceeds four one-in-one hundred-year events, Convocation shall utilize some or all of the excess for the following:

- mitigation of the lawyer pool of the Compensation Fund levy for the next fiscal year; or
- annual mitigation of the lawyer pool of the Compensation Fund levy shall continue such that within the next three fiscal years, the maximum benchmark shall be achieved.

If the lawyer pool of the Compensation Fund balance is less than the minimum of one one-in-forty-year event, Convocation shall budget for an annual surplus to restore the fund balance to its minimum policy objective. The minimum policy benchmark should be restored within three fiscal periods.

If the lawyer pool of the Compensation Fund balance is more than the minimum of one one-in-forty-year event and less than four one-in-one-hundred-year events, Convocation may:

- mitigate the lawyer pool of the Compensation Fund levy for the next fiscal year;
- budget for a surplus sufficient to increase the fund balance to its maximum policy objective of four one-in-one-hundred-year events;
- leave the fund balance at its current balance for the upcoming fiscal year.

The statement of financial position for the Compensation Fund is set out below:

Errors and Omissions Insurance Fund

The Errors and Omissions Insurance Fund (“E&O Fund”) accounts for insurance-related transactions between LAWPRO, the Society and insured lawyers. The E&O Fund collects premiums and levies from lawyers, reported as revenues, and remits these amounts to LAWPRO, reported as expenses.

Pursuant to section 61 of the Law Society Act, the Society arranges mandatory professional liability insurance for practising lawyers with LAWPRO, and through the E&O Fund, levies the insured lawyers. Each year, the premium for the insurance program is established through a process whereby LAWPRO provides an offer for review and acceptance by Convocation. The offer provides details on the components of the insurance program, including anticipated base premiums, claims history levies, transaction-based levies and amounts to be drawn from the E&O Fund balance.

Commencing in 2010, there was an additional premium endorsement included in the Society's insurance policy with LAWPRO. To the extent actual underwriting results exceeded an approved threshold loss ratio, additional premiums could be charged. The aggregate total of additional premium that could be charged for all claims years was capped at $15 million. From 2010 to 2019, no additional premium was assessed against the Society and this endorsement has been discontinued for the 2020 insurance program.

From 2010 to 2019, Convocation restricted $15 million of the E&O Fund balance as a backstop for this additional premium endorsement. Removal of the additional premium endorsement from the 2020 LAWPRO insurance policy enabled Convocation to remove this restriction.

As at December 31, 2020, the E&O Fund balance was $55,386,000 (2019 – $54,445,000). The fund balance is comprised of:

Investment in LAWPRO shares	5,000	5,000
Contributed capital	30,642	30,642
Additional premium backstop	-	15,000
Unrestricted	19,744	3,803
Total fund balance	55,386	54,445

Convocation, with the adoption of the Society's annual budget, has periodically approved the transfer of accumulated investment income surplus to the needs of the E&O Fund to the Lawyer General Fund. In 2020, $nil (2019 – $1,200,000) was transferred from the E&O Fund to the Lawyer General Fund.

Capital Allocation Fund

The Capital Allocation Fund is maintained to provide a source of funds for the acquisition and maintenance of the Society's capital and intangible assets, which comprise buildings and major equipment including computers and software. Amounts of assets capitalized, according to the Society's capital asset policy, are transferred to the Invested in Capital and Intangible Assets Fund. Expenditures not capitalized are expended in the Capital Allocation Fund. As at December 31, 2020, the fund balance was $5,458,000 (2019 – $2,927,000).

Invested in Capital and Intangible Assets Fund

The Invested in Capital and Intangible Assets Fund records transactions related to the Society's capital assets and intangible assets, specifically acquisitions, amortization and disposals. As at December 31, 2020, the balance was $10,548,000 (2019 – $11,778,000), representing the net book value of the Society's capital and intangible assets.

County Libraries Fund

The County Libraries Fund records transactions related to the Society's support of county law libraries. As approved by Convocation, the fund accumulates funds for county library purposes, which are remitted to LIRN. The fund balance as at December 31, 2020 was $85,000 (2019 – $189,000).

Other Restricted Funds

The Repayable Allowance Fund provides loans for tuition and living expenses to candidates in the lawyer licensing process. As at December 31, 2020, the fund balance was $84,000 (2019 – $76,000).

The Special Projects Fund is maintained to ensure that financing is available for ongoing special projects. The fund balance as at December 31, 2020 was $778,000 (2019 – $934,000).

The Parental Leave Assistance Fund accounts for the delivery of the Parental Leave Assistance Program (“PLAP”) and is funded by lawyers’ annual fees. PLAP provides financial assistance to lawyers in firms of five lawyers or fewer who have a net annual practice income of less than $50,000 and who do not have access to any other parental leave financial benefits. Under PLAP, the Society provides a fixed sum of $750 a week to eligible applicants for up to 12 weeks to cover expenses associated with maintaining their practice during a maternity, parental or adoption leave. As at December 31, 2020, the fund balance was $166,000 (2019 – $56,000).

3. Significant Accounting Policies

Basis of presentation

The financial statements have been prepared in accordance with the accounting standards for not-for-profit organizations set out in Part III of the Chartered Professional Accountants of Canada Handbook – Accounting (“Part III”).

Financial instruments

The Society’s financial assets and financial liabilities are measured at fair value on the original date of the transaction and then subsequently measured as follows:

Asset / Liability	Measurement
Cash	Fair value
Short-term investments	Fair value
Accounts receivable	Amortized cost
Portfolio investments	Fair value
Loan receivable	Amortized cost
Accounts payable and accrued liabilities	Amortized cost
Unclaimed trust funds	Amortized cost

Investments in subsidiaries are reported at cost.

The fair value of portfolio investments is determined by reference to transactional net asset values for the fixed income and Canadian equity pooled funds. Transaction costs are expensed as incurred. The carrying values of accounts receivable, loan receivable, accounts payable and accrued liabilities and unclaimed trust funds approximate fair value due to their nature or capacity for prompt liquidation.

There has been no change in risk exposures from the previous period.

Interest rate risk

The risk that the fair value of financial instruments will fluctuate due to changes in market interest rates is managed through compliance with the Society’s investment policy. The normal duration range for the bond portfolio administered under the policy is between 1 and 5 years. The Society has no material interest-bearing liabilities.

Fluctuations in interest rates do not have a significant effect on cash and short-term investments of the Society.

Market risk

The risk that the fair value of financial instruments will fluctuate due to changes in market prices is managed through compliance with the Society's investment policy, which requires a diversified portfolio of government bonds, corporate bonds and Canadian equities meeting specified quality requirements.

Credit risk

Credit risk is the possibility that other parties may default on their financial obligations. At year-end, the maximum exposure of the Society to credit risk in cash, loan receivable, short and long-term fixed income investments was $96,100,000 (2019 – $100,253,000). In compliance with the Society's investment policy, fixed income investments are in the financial obligations of governments, major financial institutions and commercial paper with investment grade ratings.

At year-end, the maximum exposure of the Society to credit risk in accounts receivable was $13,258,000 (2019 – $11,967,000). This credit risk is minimized by the credit quality and a diverse debtor base. The Society maintains an allowance for potential credit losses.

Liquidity risk

Liquidity risk is the risk that the Society will not be able to fund its obligations as they come due, including being unable to liquidate assets in a timely manner at a reasonable price. The Society monitors forecasts of cash flows from operations and investments and holds investments that can readily be converted into cash. Investment income is not a primary source of revenue for the Society and all underlying long-term securities are publicly listed.

The Society has not entered into any derivative transactions. In addition, the Society's contractual arrangements do not have any embedded features.

Cash and short-term investments

Cash (bank balances) and short-term investments (less than one year) are amounts on deposit and invested in short-term investment vehicles according to the Society's investment policy.

Portfolio investments

Portfolio investments are recorded at fair value. The Society manages financial risk associated with portfolio investments in accordance with its investment policy. The primary objective of the investment policy is to preserve and enhance the real capital base. The secondary objective is to generate investment returns to assist the Society in funding its programs. Convocation monitors compliance with the investment policy and regularly reviews the policy.

Capital assets

Capital assets are presented at cost net of accumulated amortization. Amortization is charged to expenses on a straight-line basis over the estimated useful lives of the assets as follows:

Buildings	30 years
Building and leasehold improvements	Lesser of 10 years or term of lease
Furniture, equipment and computer hardware	3 to 5 years

Intangible assets

Intangible assets comprising computer applications and software are presented at cost net of accumulated amortization. Amortization is charged to expenses on a straight-line basis over three years.

Revenue recognition

Annual licensee fees, insurance premiums and levies are set annually by Convocation and are recognized in the year to which they relate if the amount can be reasonably estimated and collection is reasonably assured. Accordingly, fees for the next fiscal year received prior to December 31 have been deferred and are recognized as revenue in the next year.

Insurance premiums related to the unexpired term of coverage at the balance sheet date are reported as deferred revenue.

Professional development and competence revenues are recognized in the year to which they relate if the amount can be reasonably estimated and collection is reasonably assured. Fees for the next fiscal year received prior to December 31 have been deferred and are recognized as revenue in the next year.

Other revenues and realized investment gains/losses are recognized when receivable if the amount can be reasonably estimated. Unrealized investment gains/losses are recognized with changes in the fair value of financial instruments.

Fees, insurance premiums and other revenues receivable are recorded as accounts receivable on the balance sheet, net of any required provision for doubtful amounts.

Provision for unpaid grants

Pursuant to section 51(5) of the Law Society Act, the payment of grants from the Compensation Fund is at the discretion of Convocation. Grants paid from the lawyer pool of the Compensation Fund are subject to a limit per claimant of $150,000 for claims incurred before September 22, 2016 and $500,000 thereafter. Grants paid from the paralegal pool of the Compensation Fund are subject to a $10,000 limit per claimant. The Compensation Fund expense represents a provision for unpaid grants and administrative expenses.

Provisions for unpaid grants are recorded as liabilities on the balance sheet. The measurement of the ultimate settlement costs of claims made to date that underlies the provision for unpaid grants involves estimates and measurement uncertainty. Ultimate costs incurred could vary from current estimates. Although it is not possible to measure the degree of variability inherent in such estimates, management believes that the methods of estimation that have been used will produce reasonable results given the current information. These provisions represent an estimate of the present value of grants to be paid for claims and the associated administrative costs net of recoveries. Grant liabilities are carried on a discounted basis using the yield of the underlying assets backing the grant liabilities with a provision for adverse deviation. The discount rate is 0.61% (2019 – 1.95%).

Collections

The Society owns a collection of legal research and reference material as well as a collection of portraits and sculptures. The cost of additions to the collections is expensed as incurred. No value is recorded in these financial statements for donated items. There have not been any significant changes to the collections in the current year.

Volunteer services

Convocation, consisting of the Treasurer and benchers, governs the Society. Benchers may be elected by lawyers, paralegals, appointed by the provincial government, or achieve ex-officio or emeritus status based on past service.

Elected and ex-officio benchers are remunerated for adjudication and authorization activities. They are only remunerated for eligible governance work after contributing 26 days of voluntary time. The work of the Society is also dependent on other voluntary services by lawyers and paralegals. No value has been included in these financial statements for volunteer services.

Measurement uncertainty

The preparation of the financial statements in accordance with Canadian accounting standards for not-for-profit organizations requires management to make estimates and assumptions that affect the reported amount of assets and liabilities and disclosure of contingencies at the date of the financial statements and reported amounts of revenues and expenses during the reporting period. Actual results could differ from those estimates.

The valuation of certain liabilities, unpaid grants and unpaid claims anticipates the combined outcomes of events that are yet to occur. There is uncertainty inherent in any such estimation and therefore a limitation upon the accuracy of these valuations. Future loss emergence may deviate from these estimates.

4. Investment in Subsidiaries

Investment in the Society's subsidiaries is recorded at cost:

	2020	2019
LAWPRO	35,642,000	35,642,000
LIRN	100	100

LAWPRO

The Society provides mandatory professional liability insurance to lawyers through LAWPRO, a provincially licensed insurer and wholly-owned subsidiary of the Society.

The professional liability insurance program generally requires practising lawyers to pay premiums and levies to the E&O Fund that contribute toward the premium paid by the Society to fund the anticipated costs of professional liability claims made in each annual policy period.

Paralegals obtain this form of coverage through independent insurance companies. In addition to providing mandatory professional liability insurance to lawyers, LAWPRO also sells optional excess professional liability and title insurance.

The investment in LAWPRO comprises:

30,000 common shares of par value of $100 each	3,000	3,000

LAWPRO contributed $561,000 to the Society towards directors’ fees for benchers appointed to the LAWPRO Board and a wellness program available to licensees (2019 – $523,000). LIRN

LIRN, a wholly-owned, not-for-profit subsidiary of the Society, was established to develop policies, procedures, guidelines, and standards for the delivery of county law library services and legal information across Ontario and to administer funding on behalf of the Society. LIRN was incorporated under the Business Corporations Act (Ontario) in 2001 and at the beginning of 2020, Articles of Amendment were filed to rename LibraryCo. Inc. as LIRN Inc.

The Society holds all of the 100 common shares. Of the 100 special shares, 25 are held by the Toronto Lawyers Association (“TLA”) and 75 are held by the Federation of Ontario Law Associations (“FOLA”). The independent skills-based board of directors of LIRN is appointed based on the recommendations of a Nominating Committee comprised of three members from the Society, two members from FOLA and one member from TLA.

The Society levies and collects funds for county and district law library purposes and transfers these funds to LIRN. Convocation internally restricts these funds for use by county and district law libraries to carry out their annual operations and any special projects approved by Convocation.

The Society provides some administrative services to LIRN as well as certain other services and publications. The total amount billed by the Society for 2020 was $11,000 (2019 – $32,000). ## 5. Related Entity

The Law Society Foundation (“LSF”) is regarded as a related entity, although the Society does not have an equity interest in the LSF.

The LSF, a registered charity, was incorporated by Letters Patent in 1962. The objectives of the LSF are to foster, encourage and promote legal education in Ontario, provide financial assistance to licensing process candidates in Ontario, restore and preserve land and buildings of historical significance to Canada’s legal heritage, receive gifts of muniments and legal memorabilia of interest and significance to Canada’s legal heritage, maintain a collection of gifts of books and other written material for use by educational institutions in Canada and receive donations and maintain funds for the relief of poverty by providing meals to persons in need.

The Society provides facilities and certain administration services at no cost to the LSF. Trustees of the LSF are elected by the members of the LSF. Included in the Society’s accounts are amounts due to the LSF of $1,000 (2019 – due from of $9,000).

Lexum Informatique Juridique Inc. (“Lexum”) is a software company that operates online legal information delivery products, primarily for CanLII. CanLII purchased all the shares of Lexum in 2018. The Society contributed $878,000 to a subordinated syndicated loan with all the other Canadian law societies as part of the funding of this purchase in 2018. This loan has an annual interest rate of 4.74%, compounded semi-annually and will mature in full five years from the date of closing.

In 2020, the Society made an annual repayable capital payment of $274,000 (2019 - $280,000) as the second of three annual balance of sale payments to the vendors of Lexum.

Money paid to the Society is held in trust in perpetuity for the purpose of satisfying the claims of the persons who are entitled to the capital amount. Subject to certain provisions in the Law Society Act enabling the Society to recover its expenses associated with maintaining these funds, net income from the money held in trust shall be paid to the Law Foundation of Ontario. Unclaimed money held in trust amounts to $6,075,000 (2019 – $5,587,000).

11. Other Trust Funds

The Society administers client funds for licensees under voluntary or court-ordered trusteeships. These funds and matching liabilities are not reflected on the Balance Sheet. Money paid to the Society is held in trust until it is repaid to the clients or transferred to the Unclaimed Trust Funds. As at December 31, 2020, total funds held in trust amount to $3,815,000 (2019 – $4,132,000).

12. Other Revenues

Other Revenues primarily comprise income from Ontario Reports royalties, administrative fees, regulatory compliance ordered cost recoveries and catering.

13. Other Expenses

Included in Convocation, policy and outreach expenses are payments for the remuneration of elected, ex-officio and lay benchers during the year of $309,000 (2019 – $693,000). The total expense reimbursements of the elected, ex-officio and lay benchers during the year was $61,000 (2019 – $430,000). The Treasurer's honorarium expense for the year was $206,000 (2019 – $203,000).

- $156,000 from the Special Projects Fund to the General Fund to fund the facilities condition assessment, work related to the implementation of approved recommendations of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group, and maintenance of the Society's grounds, net of funding transferred to the Special Projects Fund to fund the next bencher election; and
- $100,000 from the Lawyer General Fund to the Repayable Allowance Fund, as provided in the 2020 budget to fund the Repayable Allowance Program in the Licensing Process.

15. Pension Plan

The Society maintains a defined contribution plan for all eligible employees of the Society. Each member of the plan, other than designated employees, elects to contribute matching employee and employer contributions from 1% to 6% of annual earnings up to the maximum deduction allowed by the Canada Revenue Agency. Designated employees, who hold executive positions, have contributions made to the plan by the Society equivalent to 12% of annual earnings up to the maximum deduction allowed by the Canada Revenue Agency. The Society's pension expense in 2020 amounted to $3,017,000 (2019 – $2,846,000).

16. Commitments

The Society is committed to monthly lease payments for basic and additional rent for property under leases having various terms up to February 2028. Aggregate minimum annual payments to the expiry of the leases are approximately as follows:

2021	$2,348,000
2022	$2,464,000
2023	$2,580,000
2024	$2,697,000

Pursuant to the loan arrangement described in Note 7, the Society is committed to pay $265,000 in 2021 to fund annual balance of sale payments to the vendors of Lexum.

17. Contingent Liabilities

A number of claims or potential claims are pending against the Society. It is not possible for the Society to predict with any certainty the outcomes of such claims or potential claims. Management is of the opinion, based on the information presently available, that it is unlikely any liability, to the extent not covered by insurance or inclusion in the financial statements, would be material to the Society's financial position.

18. COVID-19 Pandemic

The COVID-19 outbreak negatively impacted the timing and amount of the Society's revenues in 2020, and the duration and overall impact on the Society's future revenues is unknown at this time. There were deliberate measures taken by the Society in 2020 along with circumstantial savings that resulted in expense reductions greater than the decline in revenue. It is not possible to reliably estimate the length and severity of the COVID-19 pandemic on the financial results and condition of the Society in future periods.

FOR INFORMATION
Lawyers' Professional Indemnity Company
Audited Financial Statements for the year ended December 31, 2020

The Committee recommends the audited financial statements for the Lawyers' Professional Indemnity Company (LAWPRO) for the year ended December 31, 2020 be received by Convocation for information.

The Law Society provides mandatory professional liability insurance to lawyers through LAWPRO, a provincially licensed insurer and wholly-owned subsidiary of the Law Society. The statements have been approved by LAWPRO's Board.

The professional liability insurance program generally requires practising lawyers to pay premiums and levies to the E&O Fund that contribute toward the premium paid by the Law Society to fund the anticipated costs of professional liability claims made in each annual policy period.

In addition to providing mandatory lawyers professional liability insurance, LAWPRO also sells optional excess lawyers professional liability insurance and title insurance.

The audited financial statements for LAWPRO were received for information by the Audit & Finance Committee at its April meeting. They are available as part of LAWPRO's Annual Report found at Tab 9.

FOR INFORMATION

LIRN INC. Audited Financial Statements for the year ended December 31, 2020

The Committee recommends the audited Annual Financial Statements for LIRN Inc. (LIRN) for December 31, 2020 be received by Convocation for information.

LIRN is the central manager of the Ontario county courthouse library system in accordance with the objectives, policies and principles established and approved by the Law Society, in consultation with the Federation of Ontario Law Associations and the Toronto Lawyers' Association, all shareholders of the organization. This is the first year of operations as LIRN since the transition from LibraryCo Inc. at the beginning of 2020. As part of the transition, the governance structure shifted from shareholder appointed directors to a new skills-based board that includes independent board members nominated to provide specified knowledge and skills that would best support the future decision-making of LIRN.

LIRN is a wholly-owned subsidiary of the Law Society with two classes of shares: 100 common shares and 100 special shares. The Law Society holds all of the common shares outstanding. Of the special shares outstanding, 25 are held by the Toronto Lawyers' Association and 75 are held by the Federation of Ontario Law Associations.

LIRN is fully funded by the Law Society through the lawyer's annual fee. The LIRN component of the annual fee for 2020 was $182 per lawyer. Grants to the 48 county libraries comprised most of LIRN's expenditures with the balance being centralized expenses such as access to online research products.

These financial statements have been approved by the LIRN Board. They received an unqualified audit opinion from the auditors, PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP, with no issues or exceptions identified.

MANAGEMENT DISCUSSION AND ANALYSIS

Articles of Amendment were filed with the Minister of Government Services at the beginning of 2020 to rename LibraryCo Inc. as LIRN Inc. with a new governance structure to oversee the delivery of library services and legal information to Ontario licensees. This is the first year of operation under this new structure with a new independent, skills-based board of directors focussed on the modernization of the delivery of legal information and library services.

Results of Operations

Results for the year identify an excess of revenues over expenses of $25,692 (2019 - $299,499). The 2020 budget approved the utilization of $89,000 of the General Fund balance to support the operations of LIRN. Transition to the new structure was completed during the year resulting in expenditures being less than planned. This resulted in the small excess of revenues over expenses for 2020. While core expenses such as grants to county libraries increased from 2019, a number of smaller expense categories were under budget and the draw on the General Fund balance did not occur.

Statement of Revenues and Expenses – Revenues

The Law Society of Ontario (the Society) grant totalled $8 million (2019 - $8.1 million). The slight decline in the Society grant from 2019 is a reflection of the growth in the General Fund balance experienced by LIRN. The 2020 funding of operations by the Society grant was intended to be supplemented by the utilization of the General Fund balance as previously mentioned.

Statement of Revenues and Expenses – Expenses

Administration expenses were incurred as LIRN Inc. transitioned from LibraryCo Inc., and a Managing Director was hired. In 2019 these services were provided by the Law Society at no charge.

Electronic products and services expenses of $363,000 increased slightly over 2019.

County and district law library grants of $7.1 million (2019 - $6.9 million) are detailed by county in the notes to the financial statements and include both the annual grants approved as part of the budget process and also special needs grants. All counties received increases in their annual grants in 2020.

Balance Sheet and Statement of Changes in Fund Balances

The General Fund accounts for the delivery, management and administration of library services. The General Fund has increased by the excess of revenues over expenses of $25,692 to $533,689. LIRN's budget for 2021 envisages using $456,000 of the fund balance to finance operations.

The Reserve Fund has an unchanged balance of $500,000.

Independent auditor's report

To the Board of Directors of LIRN Inc.

Our opinion

In our opinion, the accompanying financial statements present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of LIRN Inc. (the Organization) as at December 31, 2020 and the results of its operations and its cash flows for the year then ended in accordance with Canadian accounting standards for not-for-profit organizations.

What we have audited

The Organization's financial statements comprise:

- the statement of financial position as at December 31, 2020;
- the statement of revenues and expenses for the year then ended;
- the statement of changes in fund balances for the year then ended;
- the statement of cash flows for the year then ended; and
- the notes to the financial statements, which include significant accounting policies and other explanatory information.

Basis for opinion

We conducted our audit in accordance with Canadian generally accepted auditing standards. Our responsibilities under those standards are further described in the Auditor's responsibilities for the audit of the financial statements section of our report.

We believe that the audit evidence we have obtained is sufficient and appropriate to provide a basis for our opinion.

Independence

We are independent of the Organization in accordance with the ethical requirements that are relevant to our audit of the financial statements in Canada. We have fulfilled our other ethical responsibilities in accordance with these requirements.

Other information

Management is responsible for the other information. The other information comprises the information, other than the financial statements and our auditor's report thereon, included in the annual report.

Our opinion on the financial statements does not cover the other information and we do not express any form of assurance conclusion thereon.

In connection with our audit of the financial statements, our responsibility is to read the other information identified above and, in doing so, consider whether the other information is materially inconsistent with the financial statements or our knowledge obtained in the audit, or otherwise appears to be materially misstated.

If, based on the work we have performed, we conclude that there is a material misstatement of this other information, we are required to report that fact. We have nothing to report in this regard.

Responsibilities of management and those charged with governance for the financial statements

Management is responsible for the preparation and fair presentation of the financial statements in accordance with Canadian accounting standards for not-for-profit organizations, and for such internal control as management determines is necessary to enable the preparation of financial statements that are free from material misstatement, whether due to fraud or error.

In preparing the financial statements, management is responsible for assessing the Organization's ability to continue as a going concern, disclosing, as applicable, matters related to going concern and using the going concern basis of accounting unless management either intends to liquidate the Organization or to cease operations, or has no realistic alternative but to do so.

Those charged with governance are responsible for overseeing the Organization's financial reporting process.

Auditor's responsibilities for the audit of the financial statements

Our objectives are to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the financial statements as a whole are free from material misstatement, whether due to fraud or error, and to issue an auditor's report that includes our opinion. Reasonable assurance is a high level of assurance, but is not a guarantee that an audit conducted in accordance with Canadian generally accepted auditing standards will always detect a material misstatement when it exists. Misstatements can arise from fraud or error and are considered material if, individually or in the aggregate, they could reasonably be expected to influence the economic decisions of users taken on the basis of these financial statements.

As part of an audit in accordance with Canadian generally accepted auditing standards, we exercise professional judgment and maintain professional skepticism throughout the audit. We also:

- Identify and assess the risks of material misstatement of the financial statements, whether due to fraud or error, design and perform audit procedures responsive to those risks, and obtain audit evidence that is sufficient and appropriate to provide a basis for our opinion. The risk of not detecting a material misstatement resulting from fraud is higher than for one resulting from error, as fraud may involve collusion, forgery, intentional omissions, misrepresentations, or the override of internal control.
- Obtain an understanding of internal control relevant to the audit in order to design audit procedures that are appropriate in the circumstances, but not for the purpose of expressing an opinion on the effectiveness of the Organization's internal control.
- Evaluate the appropriateness of accounting policies used and the reasonableness of accounting estimates and related disclosures made by management.
- Conclude on the appropriateness of management's use of the going concern basis of accounting and, based on the audit evidence obtained, whether a material uncertainty exists related to events or conditions that may cast significant doubt on the Organization's ability to continue as a going concern. If we conclude that a material uncertainty exists, we are required to draw attention in our auditor's report to the related disclosures in the financial statements or, if such disclosures are inadequate, to modify our opinion. Our conclusions are based on the audit evidence obtained up to the date of our auditor's report. However, future events or conditions may cause the Organization to cease to continue as a going concern.
- Evaluate the overall presentation, structure and content of the financial statements, including the disclosures, and whether the financial statements represent the underlying transactions and events in a manner that achieves fair presentation.

We communicate with those charged with governance regarding, among other matters, the planned scope and timing of the audit and significant audit findings, including any significant deficiencies in internal control that we identify during our audit.

Lawyers' Professional Indemnity Company (LAWPRO) provides professional liability insurance to lawyers in Ontario and is also a wholly owned subsidiary of the Society. There were no transactions with LAWPRO during 2020 or 2019.

These transactions are entered in the ordinary course of business and are measured at fair value.

7. Other Expenses – Head Office/Administration

Included in these expenses are directors' and officers' insurance, Board of Directors' meetings, transition expenses and other miscellaneous items.

8. Other Expenses – County and District Law Libraries – Centralized Purchases

Motion

That Convocation approve the amendments to Rules 3.4-13 and 3.4-14 at Tab 4.1.1 (English) and Tab 4.1.2 (French), as detailed in this report and summarized as follows:

- That the definition of “lending client” in Rule 3.4-13 be amended to clarify those entities that qualify as “finance companies”; and
- That Rule 3.4-14 be amended to increase the amount of consideration from $50,000 to $75,000 for a mortgage or loan under which a lawyer may act for both borrower and lender.

Executive Summary

In March 2018, the Professional Regulation Committee (the “Committee”) began considering a proposal from the Ontario Bar Association’s Real Property Law Executive (the “OBA”) to define the term “finance company”, as used in Rules 3.4-12 to 3.4-16 (Acting for Borrower and Lender). At that time, the Committee agreed with the objective of the OBA’s proposal, that is, to provide clarity and certainty to lawyers and their clients.

With some modifications, the Committee adopted the definition recommended by the OBA. Before proceeding to Convocation, input was sought from the Real Estate Liaison Group (“RELG”).<sup>1</sup> RELG advised of concerns among some real estate lawyers that certain mortgage investment companies (“MICs”) would be excluded by the definition. A public call for comment was launched to solicit feedback, in particular with respect to the issue of MICs. While responses generally supported the need for clarity in the rules, there was a lack of consistency in the responses and no viable solutions to issues surrounding MICs were proposed. The submissions were reviewed in consultation with RELG, which embarked on further consideration and discussion.

At its meeting in January 2021, RELG proposed amendments to Rule 3.4-13 to define the term “finance company”. RELG’s definition tracks the Committee’s prior proposed definition, but adds Community Futures Development Corporations, federal and provincial Crown corporations, municipalities, and agencies affiliated with or funded by such corporations or municipalities. RELG also recommended the addition of Commentary to note specifically that a mortgage investment company that does not meet the criteria in the definition is not considered a finance company under the Rule. At its meeting on April 8, 2021, the Committee accepted the amendments proposed by RELG and recommends that they be adopted by Convocation.

RELG has also proposed increasing the threshold amount of the consideration for a mortgage or a loan under which a lawyer may act for both borrower and lender from $50,000 to $100,000. LAWPRO has advised, however, that they have concerns that this increase will result in increased claims costs. Therefore, the Committee recommends a more measured increase to $75,000, as well as the addition of Commentary to highlight the risks of acting for borrower and lender in a mortgage or loan transaction, as requested by LAWPRO.

Background

In March 2018, the Law Society received submissions from the OBA, which advised of a possible gap in the Rules of Professional Conduct and provided suggestions for a solution. The issue identified by the OBA related to the meaning of “lending client” as used in Rules 3.4-12 to 3.4-16.

Those rules provide an exception to a lawyer’s general duty to avoid conflicts of interest by allowing a lawyer to represent both a borrower and a lender in a mortgage or loan transaction in certain situations, including when the lender is a “lending client”. Lending client is defined in Rule 3.4-13 as a “client that is a bank, trust company, insurance company, credit union or finance company that lends money in the ordinary course of its business.”

The OBA suggested that the inclusion of “finance company” in the list of lending clients without defining the term creates confusion for licensees because it does not provide sufficient guidance about what types of entities should be considered to fall within the rule. As a result, lawyers who are asked to act for both a borrower and a lender, in certain circumstances, may be unsure about whether doing so would be permissible, and may act inadvertently for both a borrower and a lender in a conflict of interest. Anecdotally, it also appears that some lenders may exert pressure on lawyers to interpret the Rule so as to apply to them, even though that may not have been the rule’s intent.

Information from Law Society operational departments supports the OBA’s conclusion that there may be confusion among licensees about what constitutes a finance company for the purposes of Rules 3.4-14 to 3.4-16.

A. Acting for Borrower and Lender

The rules regarding acting for a borrower and a lender appear in the conflicts section of the Rules.

Rule 3.4-12 provides that:

Subject to rule 3.4-14, a lawyer or two or more lawyers acting in partnership or association must not act for or otherwise represent both lender and borrower in a mortgage or loan transaction.

Rule 3.4-14 provides that a lawyer may represent both a borrower and a lender in a mortgage or loan transaction in certain enumerated situations, including where the lender is a lending client or where the consideration for the mortgage or loan does not exceed $50,000. As discussed above, rule 3.4-13 provides a definition of “lending client”, which includes a “finance company”.

Although the rules regarding acting for borrower and lender are not explicit in this regard, it appears that the provisions were originally drafted to prohibit a lawyer from acting for both parties unless the funds being advanced by the lender are below a certain threshold or the lender is an institutional lending client, which would presumably have the sophistication to understand and consent to the requirements of a joint retainer. Convocation may have also considered that clients would be able to seek remedies against institutional lenders if necessary, or that the terms and conditions under which such entities would lend funds would be somewhat standardized and understood by most borrowers, thereby decreasing the likelihood of subsequent conflicts between the parties, and the need for independent legal advice. Paragraph [1] of the Commentary to Rule 3.4-16 provides

Rules 3.4-13 to 3.4-16 are intended to simplify the advice and consent process between a lawyer and institutional lender clients. Such clients are generally sophisticated. Their acknowledgement of the terms of and consent to the joint retainer is usually confirmed in the documentation of the transaction (e.g. mortgage loan instructions) and the consent is generally acknowledged by such clients when the lawyer is requested to act.<sup>2</sup>

In order for a lawyer to represent both a borrower and a lending client, according to a leading legal ethics text, “the lending client must be a regulated financial institution (bank, trust company, insurance company, credit union or finance company) which lends money in the ordinary course of its business.”<sup>3</sup> The definition of lending client in rule 3.4-13 does not specifically indicate that the lending client must be a regulated institution, although banks, trust companies, insurance companies, and credit unions are statutorily regulated entities.

B. Prior to Consultation

The Committee began considering this issue in February 2019, and at that time agreed that the uncertainty about what entities are finance companies should be addressed.

From the information provided by the OBA, and from the Law Society’s operational units, there does not appear to be any confusion with respect to the references to banks, trust companies, insurance companies, and credit unions. All are known entities defined by governing legislation. For instance, banks are listed in Schedules I or II to the Bank Act, S.C. 1991, c.46, while trust companies, insurance companies, and credit unions are all defined and regulated under various provincial and federal statutes. The types of entities that may be considered finance companies, however, are not so generally identifiable or as clearly defined in statute.

The OBA suggested a definition of finance company, which was largely accepted by the Committee. That definition incorporated two primary features:

1. A known definition of finance company

As noted by the OBA, finance company is a defined term in two regulations to the Mortgage Brokerages, Lenders and Administrators Act, 2006 (“MBLAA”). For instance, section 17(2) of O.Reg. 407/07 to the MBLAA, defines a finance company as a corporation or a partnership, other than a financial institution, that satisfies both of the following two criteria:

- I) a material business activity of the corporation or partnership involves making or refinancing loans, or entering into other similar arrangements for advancing funds or credit; and
- II) the shares or ownership interests of the corporation or partnership, or another person or entity with which it is affiliated, are listed on a stock exchange in Canada or outside Canada that is a prescribed stock exchange for the purposes of the Income Tax Act (Canada) (emphasis added).<sup>4</sup>

2. Other approved institutional lenders

The OBA also suggested extending the scope of the exemption to include other institutional lenders listed as approved lenders under the National Housing Act (“NHA”), as published by the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation (“CMHC”).<sup>5</sup>

NHA-approved lenders must satisfy the requirements in a regulation under that Act (SOR 2012-232 under the Act). Section 2 of the Regulation provides that in order to be designated as an approved lender for the purposes of Part 1 under the NHA, a person must meet the criteria set out in paragraphs 3(1)(a) or (b):

- a) a corporation whose articles do not restrict its powers to lend in the jurisdictions in which it operates and
- (i) a financially sound institution with at least $3,000,000 of unencumbered paid-up capital that is incorporated by or under an Act of Parliament or of the legislature of a province;
  - (ii) a federal financial institution or an authorized foreign bank within the meaning of section 2 of the Bank Act;
  - (iii) a trust, loan or insurance corporation that is incorporated or regulated by or under an Act of the legislature of a province,
  - (iv) a cooperative credit society that is incorporated and regulated by or under an Act of the legislature of a province;
  - (v) a federal or provincial department, agency, or Crown corporation; or
  - (vi) any other entity as long as the housing loans that it insures with the Corporation are guaranteed by Her Majesty in the right of Canada or a province; or
- b) a federally or provincially-regulated pension fund, or its subsidiary, that was designated, before the coming into force of these Regulations, as an approved lender under section 5 of the Act.<sup>6</sup>

Stock Exchange

As detailed above, the MBLAA definition of “finance company” includes a requirement that the entity be listed on a “stock exchange within or outside Canada that is a prescribed stock exchange for the purposes of the Income Tax Act (Canada)”. It appears, however, that there have been changes to the concept of “prescribed stock exchange” as had been used for a variety of purposes under the Income Tax Act.

As explained by the Department of Finance, in 2007, the two lists of prescribed stock exchanges were replaced with three categories of stock exchange: Designated Stock Exchange, Recognized Stock Exchange and Stock Exchange.<sup>7</sup>

Designated stock exchanges are designated by the Minister of Finance and are listed on the Department of Finance website. They include all stock exchanges that were prescribed in the Income Tax Regulations immediately before the new regime took effect in 2007. In considering whether a stock exchange should be designated, the Minister of Finance considers a number of factors relating to its structure and governance. For foreign-based exchanges, those criteria include that the host country is a member in good standing of the international financial community through membership in organizations such as the World Trade Organization, and that there is a securities and judicial framework in the host country that provides rights and remedies to Canadian investors.<sup>8</sup>

Recognized stock exchanges are used for limited purposes under the Income Tax Act and consists of exchanges that are located in Canada or in another country that is a member of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and development, and that has a tax treaty with Canada.<sup>9</sup> This category of stock exchanges is based strictly on location and is not approved by the Minister.

The stock exchange category includes all stock exchanges, regardless of location. There is no process by which any particular exchange is categorized as a stock exchange. This category is used for the purposes of the securities lending rules under the Income Tax Act.

Given that all stock exchanges that were prescribed under the Income Tax Act in 2007 are now Designated Stock Exchanges, that category would appear to correspond most closely to the intent of the definition of finance company in the MBLAA.

Mortgage Investment Companies

The Committee also considered Mortgage Investment Companies (MICs), which under the above criteria would not be considered finance companies unless they could satisfy either the NHA requirements, or fall within the MBLAA's definition.

A MIC is an unregulated lender.<sup>10</sup> As a result, the residential mortgages provided by these entities are not subject to the lending rules set out by federal or provincial governments. MICs provide mortgages to borrowers who would typically not qualify for a loan with a regulated financial institution because of their credit histories and credit risk profiles. Such borrowers may include self-employed individuals, real estate investors and recent immigrants. According to the CMHC, MICs typically charge higher mortgage rates compared to regulated and quasi-regulated lenders.<sup>11</sup> There are an estimated 200-300 MICs in Canada, with a significant number formed since 2007.<sup>12</sup>

While it was acknowledged that there are a wide array of MICs, many of whom may be sophisticated lenders, there did not appear to be a reasonable means by which to make that determination other than the proposed definition. Therefore, the Committee decided that MICs that could not satisfy either of the above two defining features should not be included in the definition of finance company.

The Committee's Definition

Based on the above, the Committee approved amendments to the Rule 3.4-13 to clarify the meaning of "finance company" as follows:

3.4-13 In Rules 3.4-14 to 3.4-16 a 'lending client' is any of the following:

- a) a bank, trust company, insurance company, or credit union;
- b) a finance company that is a corporation or partnership :
  - i) whose material business involves making or refinancing loans, or entering into other similar arrangements for advancing funds or credit; and,

C. Consultation with the Real Estate Liaisons Group and Public Call for Comment

Prior to proceeding to Convocation, the proposed amendments were discussed with RELG at its meeting in March, 2019. After that meeting, one member of RELG advised that members of a county law association had expressed concerns that large MICs that are not publicly traded, but are nonetheless sophisticated, would not be considered to be a finance company under the proposed amendments.

In April 2019, the Committee was advised of RELG's concern, and determined that a public call for comment should be held to solicit feedback from the profession. Although it was hoped that the call for comment might provide clarity, in particular with respect to issues concerning MICs, that was ultimately not the case. Approximately 20 submissions were received but there was not consensus on any issues. While there appeared to be some agreement that clarity was needed with respect to the definition of finance company, there were no viable solutions offered nor any reasonable suggestions beyond the proposed amendments about how to address MICs or other lenders. There were a number of submissions that identified Community Futures Development Corporations as entities that should be included within the definition of finance company.<sup>13</sup>

The submissions were reviewed in consultation with RELG, which embarked on further consideration and discussion, in particular with respect to the issue of MICs.

Proposed Amendments

The proposed amendments at Tabs 4.1.1 (English) and 4.1.2 (French) were the subject of considerable discussion among members of RELG. It was generally agreed that clarity about the meaning of "finance company" was required. However, it was also acknowledged that defining the term would necessarily require drawing a line that would exclude some lenders. This was noted as being particularly relevant in respect of MICs.

Exempting all MICs from the two-lawyer rule was considered; however, RELG ultimately agreed with the Committee's initial determination that doing so would be contrary to the intent of the exemption, given the limited regulation of MICs. Prescribing additional tests to determine the sophistication of particular MICs was not considered a practical solution to impose on real estate lawyers.

Therefore, RELG recommended amendments that include a definition of "finance company", which tracks the Committee's prior proposed definition, but adds Community Futures Development Corporations, federal and provincial Crown corporations, municipalities, and agencies affiliated with or funded by such corporations or municipalities.

Members of RELG also suggested that Commentary be added to Rule 3.4-13 to confirm that a mortgage investment company is not considered a finance company unless it fits within the criteria in the Rule.

In addition, a majority of RELG recommended changing the amount of consideration for a mortgage or loan under which a lawyer may act for both a borrower and a lender from $50,000 to $100,000. The $50,000 threshold was set by Convocation in 2000, when what was then Rule 2.04(11) was added to prohibit a lawyer or law firm acting for both a borrower and lender except in limited defined circumstances, including with respect to the amount of the consideration for the mortgage or the loan.<sup>14</sup> Among RELG members there was consensus that the $50,000 amount was too low and should be adjusted. It was also suggested that the Committee should revisit the amount periodically, perhaps every five years, and adjust it for inflation.

Subsequent to RELG's meeting, LAWPRO advised that they had concerns with the proposed increase. In particular, they advised that while they support the amendments to define "finance company", they are concerned that increasing the $50,000 threshold "can be expected to increase claims costs".

Recommendation and Rationale

It is recommended that Convocation adopt the amendments to Rule 3.4-13 as proposed by RELG and approved by the Committee.

The proposed amendments offer clarity and certainty for lawyers about what entities are considered finance companies to ensure that they do not act in circumstances that are impermissible or inadvertently act in a conflict of interest. Instead of having to make a determination each time they are faced with a possible finance company, and possibly facing pressure from lenders or clients about the interpretation of the rule, lawyers will have clear guidance and verifiable sources by which to make the determination about whether a lender qualifies as a finance company.

In addition, a fundamental principle of the Rules of Professional Conduct is that lawyers must avoid conflicts of interest, which exist when there is a substantial risk that a lawyer's loyalty to or representation of a client would be materially or adversely affected by the lawyer's duties to another client. While exceptions to the conflicts rule are in the public interest in certain circumstances, those exceptions should be limited and clearly defined to preserve the duties owed to the client. Clients' interests are better served by providing clarity to the exception regarding when a lawyer can act for both a borrower and a lending client.

It is also recommended that Commentary be added to the Rules to confirm that a mortgage investment company is not considered a finance company unless it fits within the criteria detailed in the Rule.

Given LAWPRO's concerns about increasing the $50,000 threshold, a more moderate increase to $75,000 is recommended. This measured increase is more closely tied to inflation<sup>15</sup> and would allow for a more cautious adjustment to the current regime. In addition, as suggested by LAWPRO, it is recommended that Commentary be added to encourage lawyers to recognize the risk of conflicts claims in these transactions.

The proposed amendments at Tab 4.1.1 (English) and 4.1.2 (French) reflect these recommendations.

Next Steps

If approved by the Convocation, the Rules of Professional Conduct will be amended as detailed at Tab 4.1.1 (English) and Tab 4.1.2 (French).

<sup>15</sup> According to the Bank of Canada inflation calculator, a “basket of goods” that cost $50,000 in 2000 would cost $73,804.46 in 2021 (as at April 12, 2021, <https://www.bankofcanada.ca/rates/related/inflation-calculator/>).

3.4-13 In rules 3.4-14 to 3.4-16 "lending client" means: ~~a client that is a bank, trust company, insurance company, credit union or finance company that lends money in the ordinary course of its business.~~

- a) a bank, trust company, insurance company, or credit union;
- b) a finance company that is a corporation or partnership:
  - i) whose material business involves making or refinancing loans, or entering into other similar arrangements for advancing funds or credit; and
  - ii) whose shares or ownership interests (or another person or entity with which it is affiliated) are listed on a stock exchange within or outside Canada that is a Designated Stock exchange for the purposes of the Income Tax Act (Canada); including any subsidiaries of such finance companies;

- c) a corporation or partnership designated as an approved lender under the National Housing Act (Canada); or
- d) a Community Futures Development Corporation, a federal or provincial crown corporation or a corporation or agency affiliated with or funded by such a corporation, a municipality or an agency affiliated with or funded by a municipality.

Commentary

[1] A mortgage investment company is not considered a finance company unless it satisfies the criteria in Rule 3.4-13.

3.4-14 Provided there is compliance with this rule and rules 3.4-15 to 3.4-19, a lawyer may act for or otherwise represent both lender and borrower in a mortgage or loan transaction in any of the following situations:

- (a) the lender is a lending client;
- (b) the lender is selling real property to the borrower and the mortgage represents part of the purchase price;

(c) the lawyer practises in a remote location where there are no other lawyers that either party could conveniently retain for the mortgage or loan transaction;

(c.1) the consideration for the mortgage or loan does not exceed ~~$50,000~~ $75,000; or

(d) the lender and borrower are not at "arm's length" as defined in section 251 of the Income Tax Act (Canada).

Commentary

[1] There is an increased risk that conflicts of interest may arise where a lawyer acts for both borrower and lender. Lawyers should review rules 3.4-5 to 3.4-9 (Joint Retainers) and should exercise the appropriate degree of formality with respect to these retainers, including making contemporaneous notes, obtaining a signed acknowledgment of the joint retainer from lender and borrower, and retaining copies of other relevant documents.

3.4-13 Dans les règles 3.4-14 à 3.4-16, « client prêteur » s'entend : ~~d'un client qui est une banque, une société de fiducie, une compagnie d'assurance, une caisse populaire ou une société de financement qui prête de l'argent dans le cours normal de ses activités.~~

- a) d'un client qui est une banque, une société de fiducie, une compagnie d'assurance, une caisse populaire ;
- b) d'une société de crédit qui est une société ou une société de personnes :
  - i) dont les principales activités professionnelles visent à prêter de l'argent, à refinancer des prêts ou à prendre d'autres dispositions similaires pour avancer des fonds ou du crédit ;
  - ii) dont les actions ou titres de participation (ou ceux d'une autre personne ou entité avec qui elle est affiliée) sont cotés à une bourse de valeurs désignée au Canada ou à l'étranger aux termes de la Loi de l'impôt sur le revenu (Canada) ;
y compris toute filiale de telles sociétés de crédit ;
- c) d'une société ou d'une société de personnes désignée prêteur agréé en vertu de la Loi nationale sur l'habitation (Canada) ;
- d) d'une société d'aide au développement des collectivités, d'une société fédérale ou provinciale de la Couronne ou d'une société ou d'une commission affiliée ou financée par une telle société, d'une municipalité ou d'une commission affiliée ou financée par une municipalité.

Commentaire

[1] Une société de placements hypothécaires n'est pas considérée comme une société de crédit sauf si elle répond aux critères établis à la Règle 3.4-13.

3.4-14 Pourvu que la présente règle soit respectée, et particulièrement les règles 3.4-15 à 3.4-19, un avocat peut agir pour, ou autrement représenter, à la fois le prêteur et l'emprunteur dans une opération hypothécaire ou une opération de prêt dans l'une ou l'autre des circonstances suivantes :

a) le prêteur est un client prêteur ;

b) le prêteur vend un bien-fonds à l'emprunteur et le prêt hypothécaire représente une partie du prix d'achat ;

c) l'avocat exerce dans une région éloignée où il n'y a aucun autre avocat que l'une ou l'autre des parties pourrait facilement engager pour la représenter dans l'opération hypothécaire ou l'opération de prêt ;

c.1) la contrepartie du prêt hypothécaire ou autre ne dépasse pas ~~50 000 $~~ 75 000 $ ;

d) le prêteur et l'emprunteur ont un lien de dépendance au sens de l'article 251 de la Loi de l'impôt sur le revenu (Canada).

Commentaire

[1] Il existe un risque accru de conflits d'intérêts lorsqu'un avocat agit à la fois pour l'emprunteur et le prêteur. Les avocats doivent examiner les règles 3.4-5 à 3.4-9 (mandats communs) et doivent respecter le degré de formalité approprié en ce qui concerne ces mandats, notamment en prenant des notes contemporaines, en obtenant du prêteur et de l'emprunteur une reconnaissance signée du mandat commun et en conservant des copies des autres documents pertinents.

Motion

That Convocation approve the Motion at Tab 4.2.1, which amends By-Law 4 in order to permit lawyers from Quebec to practice in Ontario on the same basis as lawyers from all other Canadian provinces as detailed in this report.

Executive Summary

Beginning in June 2020, the Priority Planning Committee (“PPC”) considered various proposals for strategic change made by the CEO and informed by the deliberations and decisions of the Proportionate Regulation and Program Review Task Forces. Included in those strategic change items, PPC and Convocation approved in principle the implementation of aspects of the National Mobility Agreement (2013) in order to permit lawyers from Quebec to practice in Ontario on the same basis as lawyers from all other Canadian provinces.

The Motion at Tab 4.2.1 includes specific by-law amendments to implement this strategic change item.<sup>1</sup>

Context

A. Background

In June 2020, PPC began a review of several proposals for strategic change made by the CEO and informed by the deliberations of the Proportionate Regulation and Program Review Task Forces.

The strategic change items are intended to:

- Reduce regulatory burdens on licensees;
- Modernize and streamline the Law Society’s internal processes, providing flexibility to adapt to new circumstances and challenges; and
- Achieve savings and internal efficiencies.

Among the items PPC considered was implementing mobility for Quebec lawyers on the same basis as lawyers from other Canadian provinces.

Convocation approved this change in principle in June 2020.

The proposed amendments in the Motion at Tab 4.2.1 implement Convocation’s decision.

B. Recommended Change

Canadian law societies have facilitated temporary and permanent national mobility for lawyers through a series of mobility agreements, which have been implemented in Ontario in By-Law 4.

Subject to terms and conditions in that by-law, lawyers from all Canadian provinces other than Quebec (the “common law provinces”) may practise law in Ontario on a temporary basis for up to 100 days in a calendar year without permission, and may apply for an extension if necessary.<sup>2</sup> Lawyers from the common law provinces who wish to transfer to Ontario on a permanent basis may do so by application with only a requirement to complete reading materials about substantive law, professional responsibility, and practice management.

Under the current by-law provisions in Part VII of By-Law 4, lawyers from Quebec who wish to practise in Ontario on a temporary basis may only do so for up to 10 matters in a calendar year, and must apply for a permit before representing clients in those matters (an Occasional Practice Permit).

Lawyers from Quebec who wish to fully transfer to Ontario on a permanent basis must complete examinations. If they do not have a common law degree, they may have to complete additional educational requirements through the National Committee on Accreditation (“NCA”).

Lawyers from the Territories of Canada are subject to the same permanent and temporary mobility provisions as lawyers from Quebec.

Lawyers from Quebec may also apply for an L3 licence, as a “Canadian Legal Advisor”.<sup>3</sup> The scope of practice for the L3 licence is limited. L3 licensees are permitted to provide advice in Ontario with respect to:

- The laws of Quebec;
- The laws of Canada; and
- Public international law.

They may also select, draft, complete or revise a document for use in a proceeding with respect to matters concerning the laws of Canada and represent a person in a proceeding with respect to matters concerning the laws of Canada. There are currently approximately 55 L3 licensees.

Through an addendum to the Quebec Mobility Agreement, mobility rights have also been extended to Quebec notaries, based on the recognition that Quebec’s civil law system divides the legal profession in that province between advocates, who are governed by the Barreau du Québec and notaries, who are governed by the Chambre des notaires du Québec.<sup>4</sup> Quebec notaries provide solicitor services relating to real estate law, corporate law, family law, and succession law. They may also provide mediation and arbitration services, and may appear before courts and tribunals in certain circumstances.<sup>5</sup> Mobility for Quebec notaries was implemented into section 52 of By-Law 4, which allows members of the Chambre des Notaires du Québec to apply to provide limited legal services within the L3 scope in Ontario.<sup>6</sup> The proposed amendments in the Motion at Tab 4.2.1 do not alter mobility rights or the mobility application process for Quebec Notaries.

In 2013, all Canadian provinces signed the National Mobility Agreement 2013, which extends mobility to Quebec lawyers on the same terms as are currently applicable to lawyers from other Canadian provinces.<sup>7</sup> That agreement, however, requires implementation in each province in order for it to come into force. In Quebec, approval is required through a government agency, the Office de Professions du Québec. Approval has not been granted and does not appear to be forthcoming. Even though the agreement has not been implemented in Quebec, other law societies have begun to enact provisions in their jurisdictions to allow for the mobility of lawyers licensed in Quebec.

Between 2018 to 2020 the Law Society received the following applications from Quebec lawyers and notaries:

Application Type	2018	2019	2020
Occasional Practice Permit	175	169	139
Permanent Transfer	42	40	32
L3	5	8	4
Quebec Notary	1	0	2

In its report to Convocation in June, 2020, PPC recommended that Quebec lawyers be permitted to practise in Ontario subject to the same terms and conditions as lawyers from other Canadian provinces. This proposed change would allow the Law Society to streamline its application processes and reallocate resources that are currently used to grant Occasional Practice Permits and administer examinations for Quebec lawyers.

Accordingly, Convocation approved the following motion:

That amendments in principle to By-Law 4 be approved to permit Quebec lawyers to practise in Ontario subject to the same terms and conditions as lawyers from other Canadian provinces.

<sup>5</sup> See the website for the Chambre des notaries du Québec, FAQs – “What is the notary’s role?”, at <https://www.cng.org/en/your-notary/frequently-asked-questions-on-the-notary/the-notarys-role/#faq-8924>.

C. L3 – L1 Transition

To allow for permanent mobility for Quebec lawyers on the same basis as lawyers from the common law provinces, existing L3 licensees will be given the opportunity to transition to L1 licensees, during a six month transition period.<sup>8</sup> If they confirm within the transition period that they wish to transition to an L1 licence, and they meet the technical requirements specified below, their class of licence would change from L3 to L1.

To obtain a L1 licence, L3 licensees will be required to:

- Complete an L1 application
- Provide an up-to-date Certificate of Standing
- Complete reading materials that all mobility transfer candidates currently complete, including new content respecting civil/common law issues.<sup>9</sup>
- Pay a fee that is the difference between the usual mobility transfer fee and the fee they originally paid for obtaining the L3 licence, which is $950 plus HST.<sup>10</sup>

In order to practice in Ontario, Quebec lawyers who become L1 licensees must purchase LAWPRO insurance and are not able to rely on their liability insurance coverage in Quebec as an exemption from coverage in this province.

During the transition period, the Law Society will have both L1 and L3 licensees. However, the L3 class of licence will be discontinued at the end of the six months following the proposed amendments coming into force.

A L3 licensee who does not complete the L1 application process before the end of the transition period will be deemed to have surrendered their L3 licence. If they wish to obtain an L1 licence at a later date, they will be treated as any other new mobility applicant for an L1 licence. New applicants from the Barreau du Québec, other than those licensed under their mobility agreement with France<sup>11</sup>, will follow the same procedure as mobility applicants from the other provinces, but will not be required to have a common law degree or NCA certificate.<sup>12</sup> Quebec lawyers licensed under that province's mobility agreement with France are excluded from the permanent mobility

<sup>8</sup> The National Mobility Agreement (2013) replaces existing Quebec mobility provisions, including substituting the L3 or Canadian Legal Advisor regime with permanent transfer with Quebec on the same terms as are already in place between the other provinces.

<sup>9</sup> Prepared under the auspices of the Federation of Law Societies of Canada. Completion of the reading materials is provided for under the general requirement in paragraph 8(1) 5 of By-Law 4 that an applicant must provide all documents and information, as required by the Law Society.

<sup>10</sup> NMA transfer candidates are required to pay a non-refundable licensing application fee of $1,450 plus HST.

<sup>11</sup> In June 2010, Quebec implemented an agreement with the bars of France providing for permanent mobility, which allows for the reciprocal transfer of lawyers between Quebec and France subject only to the successful completing of an exam on ethical principles and regulations applicable to practice in each jurisdiction (Règlement sur la délivrance d'un permis du Barreau du Québec pour donner effet à l'Arrangement conclu par le Barreau du Québec en vertu de l'Entente entre le Québec et la France en matière de reconnaissance mutuelle des qualifications professionnelles). See <https://www.barreau.qc.ca/en/ressources-avocats/tableau-ordre/permit-practise/>.

provisions in the National Mobility Agreement (2013), on the basis that they do not have the same knowledge of Canadian law, government, and legal structures as those who have gone through the Barreau's full admissions process. In the proposed amendments detailed in the Motion at Tab 4.2.1, this exclusion is maintained for these Quebec lawyers with respect to both permanent and temporary mobility.

If the proposed amendments in the Motion at Tab 4.2.1 are adopted by Convocation, L3 licensees will be provided with a notification advising of the process that will apply and the steps that they will be required to take if they wish to transition to an L1 licence.

D. Proposed Amendments

The proposed amendments in the Motion at Tab 4.2.1 amend By-Law 4 in order to implement the provisions necessary to enact this strategic change item as follows:

- Amendments to subsection 1(1) remove the L3 licence from the Law Society's classes of licence to practise to law.
- A new subsection 1(5) establishes the six month transition period after which L3 licensees are deemed to have surrendered their licence.
- A new subsection 1(6) provides that L3 licensees will continue to hold their licence until it is forfeited and they are issued a class L1 licence, or until it is deemed to be surrendered at the end of the transition period.
- Subsection 1(7) is added to detail the L3 scope of activities during the transition period. That scope of activity, which is deleted from subsection 2(3), remains the same.
- A new subsection 1(8) maintains the terms, conditions, limitations, and restrictions applicable to L3 licensees during the transition period. In particular, they must remain active and in good standing with the Barreau and must maintain liability insurance in Quebec. These provisions are deleted at section 4.1 as they will no longer be applicable beyond the transition period.
- Amendments at section 9 apply the same permanent transfer requirements to Quebec lawyers, other than those licensed under the mobility agreement with France, as are currently in place for licensees from other Canadian provinces, specifically:
  - Paragraph 9(1.1)(c) is added to exempt Quebec lawyers from the requirement to have a bachelor of laws or juris doctor degree from an accredited law school, or a certificate from the National Committee on Accreditation;
  - Paragraph 9(2)(i) exempts Quebec lawyers from the requirement to successfully complete licensing examinations; and
  - Paragraph 9(3)(a.1) extends the exemption from the experiential training requirement to Quebec lawyers.
- Those requirements remain in place for Quebec lawyers licensed under the Quebec-France agreement.
- Section 10.001 is repealed to remove the requirements for the issuance of a L3 licence.
- Section 10.01 is amended to provide that if an applicant for an L1 licence holds any other licence issued by the Law Society, that licence is forfeited upon the issuance of a L1.
- Subsection 40(16), which applies to all temporary mobility permits, is amended to allow the Law Society the flexibility to issue practice permits for a specified time period, rather than until December 31 of each year.

- Subsection 45(3) is repealed. That subsection allowed the Law Society to permit an applicant for a licence to practice law on a more than temporary basis pending their licensing application. The temporal flexibility provided by the amendment to subsection 40(16) makes this subsection no longer necessary.
- Sections 46-50, which govern temporary mobility for Quebec lawyers and lawyers from the Territories of Canada, are amended as follows:
  - The temporary mobility rules applicable to lawyers from the common-law provinces are applied to Quebec lawyers, who may practice in Ontario for up to 100 days in a calendar year without permission, and may apply for an extension if necessary.
  - Quebec lawyers licensed under the Quebec-France agreement and lawyers from the Territories of Canada remain subject to limited mobility and may apply to the Law Society for permission to practise law in Ontario in respect of not more than ten matters per year.
  - Quebec lawyers licensed under the Quebec-France Agreement and lawyers from the Territories of Canada may exceed 10 matters in a calendar year with permission from the Law Society.

A. Introduction

I am pleased to present this 2020 Annual Report of the Office of the Complaints Resolution Commissioner (Office of the Commissioner).

The Office of the Commissioner is part of the broader organizational regulation of the conduct, capacity and professional competence of licensed lawyers and paralegals. The role of the Complaints Resolution Commissioner (Commissioner) was established in 1998, by the Law Society Amendment Act, 1998, as part of a package of reforms designed to support the Law Society of Ontario (Law Society) in carrying out its mandate to protect the public and consumers of legal services. The role of the Commissioner was described during debate on the proposed amendments as one that would “ensure that complainants are dealt with fairly and that complaints receive thorough attention.”<sup>1</sup> The independence of the Office of the Commissioner and its accessibility to people with complaints were emphasized.<sup>2</sup>

In 1998, when the role of the Commissioner was established, there were some 28,665 members of the Law Society. The number of total licensees, both lawyers and paralegals, has more than doubled, to 66,550.

Section 49.14 of the Law Society Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. L.8 (Act) gives Convocation statutory authority to appoint the Commissioner in accordance with O. Reg. 31/99. Marilyn Marshall was appointed Commissioner effective April 1, 2018 and subsequently reappointed for a three-year term commencing April 1, 2020.

The Commissioner’s functions, powers of investigation and right to access information are set out in section 49.15 of the Act. Sections 49.16 to 49.18 address administrative matters, and section 49.19 provides that decisions of the Commissioner are final and not subject to appeal. A copy of these sections is attached as Appendix 1.

Part 1 of By-Law 11<sup>3</sup>, made pursuant to subsection 62 (0.1) clause 32 of the Act, provides additional detail on what complaints are reviewable, the process that applies to the review, and the dispositions available following a review. A copy of Part 1 of By-Law 11 is attached as Appendix 2.

Under section 3 of By-Law 11, the Commissioner is required to submit an Annual Report to the Professional Regulation Committee of the Law Society “upon the affairs of the office of the Commissioner during the immediately preceding year.”

This Annual Report covers the activities of the Office of the Commissioner for the 2020 calendar year, and includes statistical information, comparisons to prior years, and the Commissioner's observations.

B. The Role of the Commissioner

By-Law 11 provides the Commissioner with two distinct functions: complaints resolution and complaints review.

Complaints Resolution Function

The complaints resolution function provides the Commissioner with the statutory authority to perform a formal resolution role. It allows the Law Society, with the consent of the complainant and the licensee, to refer a matter to the Commissioner for resolution before the Law Society itself has attempted any resolution.

The Commissioner has broad discretion to determine the process for the resolution function.

The resolution function has been available since 2007. To date, the Commissioner has not been called upon to perform the resolution function.

Complaints Review Function

By-Law 11 provides the Commissioner with the statutory authority to review a complaint if a complainant requests that the Law Society refer a reviewable complaint to the Commissioner for review.

Subsection 4 (1) of By-Law 11 establishes four criteria for a complaint to be reviewable by the Commissioner. A complaint may be reviewed if,

- (a) the merits of the complaint have been considered by the Law Society;
- (b) the complaint has not been disposed of by the Proceedings Authorization Committee, Hearing Division or Appeal Division;
- (c) the complaint has not been previously reviewed by the Commissioner; and
- (d) the Law Society has notified the complainant that it will be taking no further action in respect of the complaint.

Subsection 4 (2) of By-Law 11 provides that a complaint may not be reviewed by the Commissioner if, in the opinion of the Commissioner, it concerns only the quantum of fees or disbursements charged by a licensee, requirements imposed on a licensee under By-Law 9 (financial transactions and records), or the negligence of a licensee.

Subsection 5 (3) of By-Law 11 requires that a request to refer a reviewable complaint to the Commissioner for review be made within 60 days after the day on which the Law Society notifies the complainant that it will be taking no further action in respect of the complaint.

Referral of Complaints to the Commissioner

Section 6 of By-Law 11 provides that the Society shall refer every reviewable complaint to the Commissioner, where a complainant has made a request under, and in accordance with, section 5. The licensee concerned is notified by the Law Society that the complaint has been referred to the Commissioner for review but does not participate in the review.

Fresh Evidence

Subsection 7 (1) of By-Law 11 provides that when “reviewing a complaint that has been referred to the Commissioner for review, if the Commissioner receives or obtains information, which in the Commissioner’s opinion is significant, about the conduct of the licensee who is the subject of the complaint that was not received or obtained by the Society as a result of or in the course of its consideration of the merits of the complaint, the Commissioner shall refer the information and complaint back to the Society for further consideration.”

Standard of Review and Outcomes

Subsection 7 (2) of By-Law 11 requires the Commissioner to apply a standard of reasonableness in the review of the Law Society’s consideration of a complaint and its decision to take no further action.

If the Commissioner is satisfied that the Law Society’s consideration of a complaint and its decision to take no further action in respect of the complaint are reasonable, the Commissioner will notify the complainant and the Law Society of this decision. If the Commissioner is not satisfied that the Law Society’s consideration of a complaint and its decision to take no further action in respect of the complaint are reasonable, the complaint will be referred back to the Law Society with a recommendation for further action. The Commissioner will notify the complainant of this decision.

Subsection 7 (4) of By-Law 11 states that if the Commissioner refers a complaint back to the Law Society with a recommendation that the Law Society take further action in respect of the complaint, or in respect of the licensee who is the subject of the complaint, the Law Society shall consider the recommendation and notify the Commissioner, complainant, and licensee who is the subject of the complaint, in writing, whether the Law Society will be following the recommendation. If the Law Society determines that it will not follow the Commissioner’s recommendation for further action, subsection 7 (5) of By-Law 11 requires that the Law Society provide the complainant, the Commissioner, and the licensee with a written explanation for its determination.

C. Brief Overview of Law Society’s Historical Approach to Referral of Complaints to the Commissioner

This section sets out historical changes that have occurred in the Professional Regulation Division (PRD) over the past few years that impacted the process of referral of complaints to the Commissioner. This brief overview provides contextual information for the statistical information in this Annual Report.

Prior to February 2017

Prior to February 2017, when a complaint was received by the Law Society, the Intake Department (Intake) would consider it and determine whether to close the file or send it for investigation to either the Investigations Department (Investigations) or to the Complaints Resolution Department (Complaints Resolution). Complainants who had a file that was closed in Investigations or Complaints Resolution, which complaint had been reviewed on the merits, were offered the opportunity to have the Commissioner review the decision of the Law Society.

February 2017 and Ongoing

On February 7, 2017, a reorganization of the PRD was implemented. The Intake, Complaints Resolution and Investigations departments were eliminated and a new Intake & Resolution Department (Intake & Resolution) and three Enforcement Departments (Enforcement), now Investigation Services (Investigations), were established. Staff from Complaints Resolution were transferred to either Intake & Resolution or Investigations.

Complaints Resolution staff, who were transferred to Intake & Resolution, continued to offer a review by the Commissioner on Complaints Resolution files received prior to February 7, 2017. However, complainants whose files were opened in the new Intake & Resolution on or after February 7, 2017 were not offered a review by the Commissioner. Rather than referring the complaint to the Commissioner, where a complainant disagreed with the decision of Intake & Resolution, the complainant was offered a managerial review by a manager of Intake & Resolution. Complainants whose files were transferred to Investigations continued to be offered a review by the Commissioner. The 2017 reorganization significantly decreased the number of files referred to the Commissioner for review during this time period.

The PRD's rationale for the limited right to request a review by the Commissioner was based on the Law Society's position, at the time, that a complaint file closed in Intake & Resolution had not been considered on its merits and, accordingly, did not meet the criteria for a reviewable complaint as defined in By-Law 11.

The Office of the Commissioner disagreed with the Law Society's rationale and was of the view that many of the complaints closed in Intake & Resolution had been reviewed on the merits and complainants should have been offered a review by the Commissioner. The view of the Office of the Commissioner was set out in greater detail in the Commissioner's Annual Reports of 2018 and 2017.

In early 2019, the Office of the Commissioner and the PRD had discussions regarding reviews by the Commissioner of Intake & Resolution files which were reviewed on the merits.

On August 12, 2019, Intake & Resolution started advising complainants, whose complaints were closed in Intake & Resolution and that were eligible for review by the Commissioner, of their right to ask that their complaint be referred to the Commissioner for review.

Intake & Resolution had a number of files which had been closed prior to August 12, 2019, where the complainants had been offered and accepted a managerial review, but the review had not yet occurred. To assist with these outstanding files, complainants whose files were closed between January 1, 2019 and August 11, 2019, and who had accepted to have a managerial review, were offered a review by the Commissioner. Unlike the 60-day time period in place under By-Law 11 for requesting a review by the Commissioner, no time limit had been in place for a complainant to ask for a managerial review. Between June 2019 and November 2019, the Office of the Commissioner received 102 of the outstanding Intake & Resolution files.

As part of an organizational realignment to better meet strategic and operational priorities, effective November 30, 2020 the Office of the Commissioner transitioned from the Professional Regulation Division to the Office of General Counsel.

D. Complaints Review Process

Complainants are advised by staff in Investigations and Intake & Resolution of their right to request a review by the Commissioner if the merits of their complaint have been considered by the Law Society and it has determined that no further action would be taken in response to the complaint. The Law Society's letter to the complainant refers them to the Law Society's website where a link to the Commissioner's Request for Review form and Information Sheet can be found. A copy of the Request for Review form is attached as Appendix 3 and a copy of the Information Sheet is attached as Appendix 4.

Where the complainant has submitted a request for a review within 60 days after the day they are notified by the Law Society that it will be taking no further action in respect of the complaint, the Office of the Commissioner will confirm the request and notify the Law Society.

In 2020, changes were implemented by the PRD to support and strengthen a move to the use of electronic files for complaints dealt with at Intake & Resolution.

This change has resulted in the Office of the Commissioner receiving file materials from Intake & Resolution in both paper form and electronically during 2020.

Where the complaint was dealt with at Investigations, a bound copy of pertinent materials, referred to as the document book, was prepared. The document book generally included the Law Society's closing letter and copies of relevant materials submitted by the complainant in support of their complaint. In some instances, it also included either the licensee's written response to the complaint or a summary of the response, and other material arising out of the investigation. Investigations prepared a second copy of the document book which the Office of the Commissioner provided to the complainant, prior to the review, for their use during the review meeting.

Investigations also provided the Office of the Commissioner with documents that fell within the confidentiality provisions of section 49.12<sup>4</sup> of the Act. This material was not shared with the complainant.

As with the receipt of electronic files from Intake & Resolution, it is expected that the Office of the Commissioner will soon receive electronic files from Investigations, and that document books will no longer be prepared.

The licensee is notified by the Law Society of the request for review, but pursuant to subsection 8 (4) of By-Law 11, does not participate in the review. Once the review is concluded, it is the Law Society that notifies the licensee, in writing, of the Commissioner's decision.

Previously complainants were offered a choice of a review being conducted in person, by teleconference or in writing.<sup>5</sup> However, due to the Covid-19 pandemic, complainants who had asked for an in-person review were offered the option of a written review, a teleconference meeting, or a video conference meeting. If a teleconference or video conference review is chosen, the complainant is advised in writing of the time, date and how to call into or join the review meeting. The Office of the Commissioner will continue to offer the option of a video conference meeting when in-person meetings resume.

Under subsection 8 (1) of By-Law 11, the Commissioner determines what procedures apply to the review of a complaint. For example, the practice has been that review meetings are not recorded, and complainants are asked to confirm they are not recording the meeting.

E. Statistical Information

Number of Requests for Review

Of the 304 requests for review received by the Office of the Commissioner in 2020, no reviews were conducted in respect of 50 of the complaint files for the following reasons:

<sup>4</sup> Unless exempt under subsection 49.12 (2) e.g. disclosure required in connection with the administration of the Act, subsection 49.12 (1) provides that "A benchler, officer, employee, agent or representative of the Society shall not disclose any information that comes to his or her knowledge as a result of an audit, investigation, review, search, seizure or proceeding under this Part."

<sup>5</sup> Subsection 8 (2) of By-Law 11 provides that "The Commissioner shall, where practicable, meet with each complainant whose complaint has been referred to the Commissioner for review, and the Commissioner may meet with the complainant by such telephone, electronic or other communication facilities as permit all persons participating in the meeting to communicate with each other simultaneously and instantaneously."

- 28 requests for review were of Intake & Resolution decisions and the complaint had not been referred to the Commissioner for a review by Intake & Resolution for the reason that they were not reviewable complaints as set out in section 4 of By-Law 11. These complaints included complaints not reviewed on the merits, and complaints that dealt only with issues of negligence or fees. A copy of the Commissioner's response letter to the complainant's request for a review, which explains why the Commissioner will not be conducting a review, is forwarded to the Director of Intake & Resolution.
- 11 requests were received beyond the 60-day time period for requesting a review.
- In three requests for review, the Commissioner determined that the file was not one for which a review should have been offered, as the merits of the complaint had not been considered or the complaint was in respect of matters the Law Society had determined were not within its jurisdiction. As such, they were not reviewable by the Commissioner.
- Two requests were not eligible for review as they were open files that were still being considered by Intake & Resolution.
- Two requests for review were accepted, however, the subject licensee passed away before the conclusion of the review process. The files were returned to the Law Society and no further steps were taken by the Commissioner.
- One request was for a review of a decision made by the Law Society's Complaints and Compliance Department in respect of a complaint that had not been reviewed on the merits by Intake & Resolution or Investigations.
- One request was for a review of a decision from Investigations dealing with unauthorized practice and had not been referred to the Commissioner for review.
- One request was in respect of a decision of the Compensation Fund and was not reviewable by the Commissioner.
- One request was in respect of a matter that had not been reviewed by any department at the Law Society.

Of the 304 requests for review received by the Office of the Commissioner in 2020, 254 requests were accepted for review.

By comparison, in 2019 there were 264 requests for review received, of which 191 were accepted for review.

In 2018, of the 91 requests for review received, 31 were accepted for review.

Table 1 – Comparison of Requests for Review Received in 2020, 2019 and 2018

Table 1, above, provides a comparison of files accepted or not accepted for review, for the years 2020, 2019 and 2018. As in 2020, in 2019 and 2018, the basis for not accepting most of the files was because the complaint file had not been referred to the Commissioner by Intake & Resolution for review.

Number of Reviews Conducted

Table 2, above, provides a comparison of the number of files reviewed in 2020, 2019 and 2018. In 2020, the Office of the Commissioner reviewed 137<sup>6</sup> files. By comparison, 134 files were reviewed in 2019 and 96 files were reviewed in 2018.

<sup>6</sup> One file not captured was reviewed by the Commissioner prior to meeting with the complainant. However, on the day of the review meeting, the complainant advised he was withdrawing from the review process. The file was closed, and no decision letter was prepared.

Format of Review Meetings

Table 3 – Comparison of Format of Reviews for 2020, 2019 and 2018

Table 3, above, shows that of the 137 files reviewed in 2020, 17 (12%) proceeded by an in-person meeting, 87 (64%) were conducted by teleconference, 27 (20%) proceeded based on the written material in the file, and 6 (4%) were conducted by video conference.

Due to the Covid-19 pandemic, in mid-March the Office of the Commissioner started working remotely. Consequently, in-person meetings were no longer being conducted. Of the 43 in-person meetings that were rescheduled, 36 proceeded by teleconference, six were conducted by video conference, and one was reviewed based on the written material in the file, as requested by the complainants.

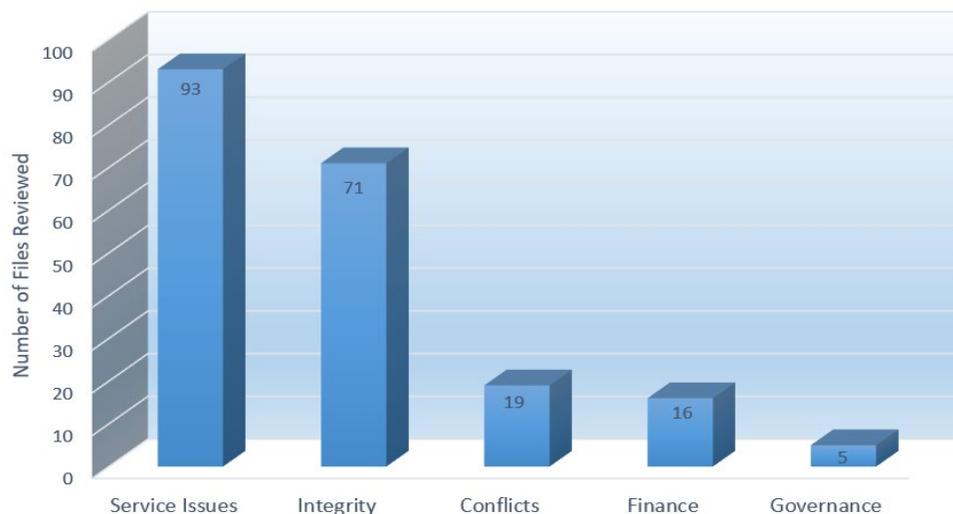

By comparison, of the 134 files reviewed in 2019, 54 (40%) proceeded by an in-person meeting, 47 (35%) were conducted by teleconference, and 33 (25%) proceeded based on the written material in the file.

In 2018, of the 96 files reviewed, 40 (42%) proceeded by an in-person meeting, 23 (24%) were conducted by teleconference, and 33 (34%) proceeded based on the written material in the file.

Had it not been for the Covid-19 pandemic, it is likely that an in-person review would have continued to be the preferred meeting format.

Issues Identified in Files Reviewed

Table 4 –Issues by Category for Files Reviewed in 2020

The Law Society tracks the regulatory issues raised in each file. Relying on the Law Society's categorization, Table 4, above, identifies the five categories of issues raised in the 137 files reviewed in 2020. Since the current case management system may record more than one issue in each file, the total number of issues identified exceeds the number of files reviewed.

In 2020, as in previous years, service and integrity issues continued to be the predominant issues raised by complainants.

Results of Reviews Conducted in 2020 with Comparisons to 2019 and 2018

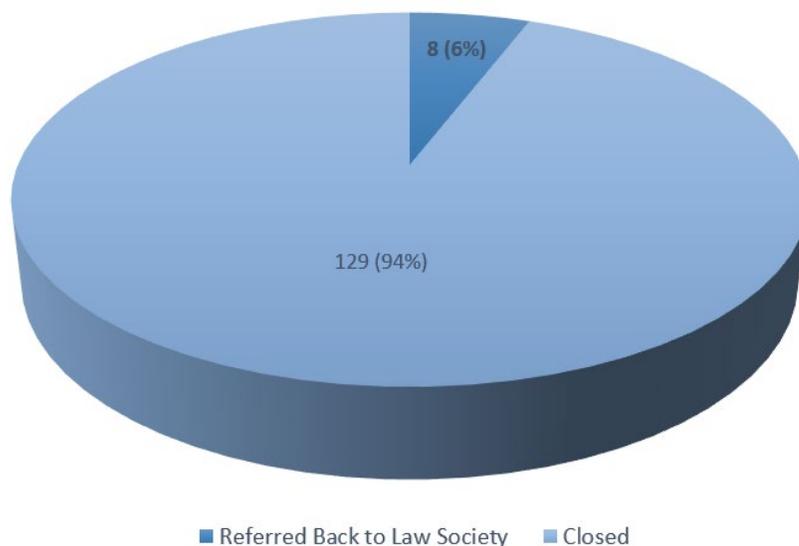

Figure 1, above, shows the outcome of the files reviewed in 2020 by number and percentage. The Commissioner reviewed and rendered a decision in 137 files. Of those 137 files, 129 (94%) remained closed and eight (6%) were referred back to the Law Society with a recommendation for further action.

In seven of the eight files that were referred back to the Law Society, the Commissioner was not satisfied that the decision to close was reasonable. In one file, while satisfied that the decision to close was reasonable, the Commissioner referred the matter back for other reasons. All files were referred back pursuant to subsection 7 (2) (b) of By-Law 11, with recommendations for further action.

In three of 129 files closed, while the Commissioner was satisfied that the decisions to close the files were reasonable in respect of the issues raised in the complaint, the Commissioner brought practice and process concerns to the Law Society's attention for its consideration.

By way of comparison, in 2019, the Commissioner reviewed and rendered a decision in 134 files. Of those 134 files, 125 (93%) remained closed and nine (7%) were referred back to the Law Society.

In 2018, of the 96 decisions rendered, 91 files (95%) remained closed and five (5%) were referred back to the Law Society.

The Manager and Counsel in the Office of the Commissioner, together with Counsel to the Executive Director of the PRD and department directors, work to resolve and clarify process related issues raised in specific files. More generally, the Manager in the Office of the Commissioner and the Executive Director, and her staff, have engaged in discussions on systemic practice and process concerns identified through the review process, including issues relating to the sharing of information with complainants.

Executive Director's Response to Files Referred Back to the Law Society in Respect of Reviews Conducted in 2020 with Comparisons to 2019 and 2018

In 2020, the Executive Director agreed to take further action on the recommendations made by the Commissioner on seven files referred back and declined to take further action on one file. The Executive Director also agreed to inquire further into the three files where the Commissioner identified practice and process concerns.

In 2019, the Executive Director agreed to take further action on all nine files referred back by the Commissioner to the Law Society.

In 2018, of the five files referred back by the Commissioner to the Law Society, the Executive Director agreed to take further action on the recommendations made by the Commissioner on four of those files and declined to take further action on one file.

F. Age Tracking of Files Closed in 2020 with Comparisons to 2019 and 2018

What follows is statistical data regarding the average time it took to advance a file through the complaints review process in 2020 with comparisons to 2019 and 2018.

Average Age of Reviews Completed

	2020 (days)	2019 (days)	2018 (days)
Average age from the receipt of the request to the date the Commissioner's decision was released	241	352	496
(a) Average age from the date the request for a review was received to the date the PRD was notified of the request	2	2	2
(b) Average age from the date that the PRD was notified of the request to the date the file materials were received in the Office of the Commissioner	65	98	120
(c) Average age from the date the file materials were received to the date the review meeting was first scheduled	69	80	119
(d) Average age from the date the review meeting was first scheduled to the date the review meeting was conducted	84	56	143
(e) Average age from the date the review meeting was conducted to the date of the Commissioner's decision	43	37	108

Active Inventory as of December 31, 2020

There were 206 files in the Office of the Commissioner's active inventory as of December 31, 2020, with the following status:

- 18 files scheduled for review in 2021
- 118 files awaiting materials from the Law Society prior to being scheduled, including both physical and electronic files
- 70 files ready to be scheduled

The Office of the Commissioner typically schedules meetings no more than three months out to minimize missed or cancelled review meetings.

G. Commissioner's Observations

Capacity, Wills and Powers of Attorney

2020 had several complaint files involving seniors, and their wills and powers of attorney. The complaint files had siblings, and other family members and friends, at odds with each other when an elderly parent or relative finds themselves in vulnerable circumstances. Complainants made allegations that an adult child or relative had put undue pressure on an elderly person and that the lawyer had failed to act in that person's best interests or had failed to ensure that the person had the necessary capacity to make the decisions they were making. Some complainants struggled with what they saw as a failure on the part of the licensee to protect the senior client from being manipulated and subjected to undue pressure.

When coupled with one family member arranging the appointment with the lawyer, sometimes their own lawyer, and physically bringing the parent to the meeting with the lawyer, you have all the elements to fuel a belief that there is undue influence being brought to bear on the elderly person, a potential conflict of interest, and a resulting perception that the lawyer did nothing to stop it from happening.

In some files, there was a misunderstanding of the lawyer's standard for determining whether a person has capacity to give instructions as distinct from a medical determination of capacity.

There were files where lawyers were alert to the risk of undue pressure and made significant documented efforts to ensure that instructions were properly and independently given. I have also seen files where there was limited evidence of what inquiries were made into the circumstances that brought the client to the lawyer, and on the matter of competency.

Proposed amendments to the Substitute Decisions Act, 1992<sup>7</sup> would permit remote witnessing of powers of attorney on a permanent basis, a continuation of interim measures introduced because of Covid-19. Witnessing of powers of attorney could be done by audio-visual communication technology. For wills, proposed amendments to section 4 of the Succession Law Reform Act, governing the execution of wills, would also permit remote witnessing by means of audio-visual communication technology. If the proposed changes become law, they would apply to powers of attorney entered into, and wills made, on and after April 7, 2020.

While there are benefits to remote witnessing, it is not without its own risks. One proposed safeguard that would accompany the changes is that at least one person who is acting as a witness must be a Law Society licensed lawyer or paralegal. These new procedures add to the already significant responsibility of the licensee when dealing with an elderly client who may find themselves in vulnerable circumstances.

I committed to the complainants to bring these concerns to the attention of the Law Society. I would urge the Law Society to consider whether there are measures that might be introduced to this area of practice.

Paralegal Engaging Lawyer to Act as Lawyer for the Paralegal's Client

Some complaint files pointed to issues with how paralegals describe the services they are authorized to provide and how arrangements are made by them to engage a lawyer to act for the paralegal's client, when a lawyer is needed. Issues include how the lawyer is retained and paid, and the client's role.

While the Paralegal Rules of Conduct (Paralegal Rules) speak to advertising and to how fees are paid to or shared with a lawyer, it may be timely to reinforce the paralegal's obligation to be clear in communications about the services they are authorized to provide. Additional guidance might also be helpful in respect of the engagement of a lawyer by a paralegal for a client's matter, specifically how to ensure that a client understands what costs they will be responsible for and how instructions will be given to the lawyer.

Fees and Accounting

The perennial problem of disputes about licensee fees and accounting remains. While generally outside the jurisdiction of the Law Society, except in limited circumstances where the broader allegation is that the fees are not fair or reasonable, disputes over fees are matters to be addressed through the assessment process for lawyers and Small Claims Court for paralegals.

However, this can be a hollow remedy in many cases, as the time for pursuing a dispute over fees through the assessment process or Small Claims Court is often well past by the time the complainant has the process explained to them, and the cost and complexity of seeking an extension of time can be a challenge. Whether some information about the assessment process or Small Claims Court process should be included as part of a written or verbal retainer should perhaps be considered. Steps have been taken in this direction for contingency fees, with new rules requiring disclosure of information about the assessment process, including contact information for the Superior Court in the applicable jurisdiction.

Recent Law Society Changes – Contingency Fees and Firms

I am pleased to see the Law Society's announcement of changes in respect of two areas of concern discussed in previous Annual Reports: contingency fees and firm regulation. I note that contingency fee reforms are scheduled to take effect July 1, 2021. The reforms include clearer communications on maximum fees, a standard form consumer guide on contingency fees for clients, and a new standard form contingency fee agreement.

The Law Society's decision to proceed with legislative changes to permit regulation of firms is also welcome. The changes will permit regulation of firms in a way that is consistent with the public interest and supports consumers in making informed choices when choosing a licensee to represent them.

French and Other Language Reviews

The Office of the Commissioner supports complainants in participating in the review process by offering reviews in French, and the opportunity of having an interpreter present for reviews in other languages, when requested. In 2020, six review meetings were conducted in French and one review meeting was conducted with the aid of an Arabic interpreter. The complainants expressed appreciation for having been offered these opportunities.

Ethics at the Core of the Rules

The Law Society of Ontario Rules of Professional Conduct (Rules) and the Paralegal Rules are detailed codes of professional conduct for lawyers and paralegals, respectively. In format, they might look more like regulatory statutes than codes, with their many prescriptive obligations and expectations. However, they are more than technical sets of rules to be followed. Underlying the Rules and the Paralegal Rules are ethical foundations that reflect something more than a set of minimum standards. It was just over 100 years ago that the Canadian Bar Association adopted the 1920 Canons of Legal Ethics. The Canons formed the basis of the various provincial rules of professional conduct that were to follow, and their ethical core continues to influence the application of the Rules and Paralegal Rules. It is this ethical element that figures prominently in the complaint process.

Complainants can be forgiving of technical slips - a phone call not returned or being late for a meeting. What is more difficult to accept, and what presents itself in many complaints, is a complainant's feeling of having been abandoned, treated indifferently, having their voice ignored or, worse yet, simply used as a means of generating income. This sense of an injustice having been committed is often what propels a complaint forward.

There was a lesson taught many years ago at the Bar Admission Course as part of the Practice Management and Professional Conduct Module. There was a short video of a solicitor moving from London to a small community. She gave perfectly good advice in a business dispute but at the end of the day, the owner did not continue with her services. What she had missed was the dynamics at the local community level, the interdependencies of the various businesses that were unique to that community. In short, she was “Perfectly Competent But...”. As with the fictional London solicitor, the complaint files remind us that meeting one’s responsibilities as a licensee is about more than adherence to the technical requirements of the Rules.

Closing Comments

I would like to thank the staff, Counsel, Senior Counsel, and Senior Counsel and Manager for their dedication to the mandate and the work of the Office of the Commissioner. Their hard work and commitment supported a seamless move to working remotely when the Covid-19 pandemic hit in mid-March. Their exceptional professionalism and dedication ensured that, despite the challenges presented by the pandemic and the temporary loss of one counsel position, the work of the Office of the Commissioner proceeded with minimal disruption.

A. INTRODUCTION

1. Under their respective Rules of Professional Conduct and Paralegal Rules of Conduct, lawyers and paralegals licensed in Ontario have legal and ethical obligations as professionals to deliver their services and engage in and conduct their employment practices in a manner that is free of discrimination and harassment.
2. Rules 6.3 and 6.3.1 of the Rules of Professional Conduct set out these professional obligations as follows:
  - 6.3-3 A lawyer shall not sexually harass a colleague, a staff member, a client, or any other person.
  - 6.3.1-1 A lawyer has a special responsibility to respect the requirements of human rights laws in force in Ontario and, specifically, to honour the obligation not to discriminate on the grounds of race, ancestry, place of origin, colour, ethnic origin, citizenship, creed, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity, gender expression, age, record of offences (as defined in the Ontario Human Rights Code), marital status, family status, or disability with respect to professional employment of other lawyers, articulated students, or any other person or in professional dealings with other licensees or any other person.
  - 6.3.1-2 A lawyer shall ensure that no one is denied services or receives inferior service on the basis of the grounds set out in this rule.
  - 6.3.1-3 A lawyer shall ensure that their employment practices do not offend rule 6.3.1-1, 6.3.1-2 and 6.3-3.
3. The “requirements of human rights laws in force in Ontario” which lawyers have a “special responsibility to respect” are the prohibitions against both discrimination or harassment on prohibited grounds of discrimination listed in the Ontario Human Rights Code. The discrimination or harassment must have taken place within one of the social areas recognized in the Human Rights Code (discrimination or harassment in relations to goods, services and facilities; accommodation; employment; contracts; and vocational associations).

4. These Rules of Professional Conduct are supplemented by 29 paragraphs of commentary that provide guidance on the interpretation and application of these Rules and outline how they are anchored in equivalent legal obligations under the provincial Human Rights Code and Occupational Health and Safety Act.
5. Rule 2.03 of the Paralegal Rules of Conduct holds paralegals to professional standards of human rights compliance as follows:
  - (3) A paralegal shall not engage in sexual or other forms of harassment of a colleague, a staff member, a client or any other person on the ground of race, ancestry, place of origin, colour, ethnic origin, citizenship, creed, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity, gender expression, age, record of offences, marital status, family status or disability.
  - (4) A paralegal shall respect the requirements of human rights laws in force in Ontario and without restricting the generality of the foregoing, a paralegal shall not discriminate on the grounds of race, ancestry, place of origin, colour, ethnic origin, citizenship, creed, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity, gender expression, age, record of offences, marital status, family status or disability with respect to the employment of others or in dealings with other licensees or any other person.
  - (5) The right to equal treatment without discrimination because of sex includes the right to equal treatment without discrimination because a woman is or may become pregnant.
  - (6) A paralegal shall ensure that no one is denied services or receives inferior service on the basis of the grounds set out in this rule.
  - (7) A paralegal shall ensure that his or her employment practices do not offend this rule.
6. The Discrimination and Harassment Counsel (DHC) program was established in 1999 as an independent office funded by, but operating at arm's length from, the Law Society of Ontario. The DHC began operating in the fall of 1999 to provide information to and support individuals who had experienced discrimination or harassment by licensees contrary to their binding rules of professional conduct as a means to help eradicate discrimination in the legal profession.<sup>1</sup>

7. In carrying out its functions, the DHC supports the LSO's core regulatory function of holding licensees accountable for compliance with their Rules of Professional Conduct and Paralegal Code of Conduct. This is necessary to ensure that public trust in the self-governing legal professions is not eroded by abuses of power through discriminatory or harassing behaviour by professionals.
8. The DHC can be accessed by email at assistance@dhcounsel.on.ca, toll free by phone at 1-877-790-2200, or through direct message on Twitter @DH_Counsel.
9. The DHC serves two important functions:
  - (a) The DHC provides a range of confidential services to individuals who have concerns or complaints about discrimination or harassment by lawyers or paralegals licensed in Ontario, or by students in the Ontario licensing process; and
  - (b) The DHC provides anonymized statistical data to the Law Society of Ontario so that the regulator can better understand the dynamic and nature of concerns about discrimination and harassment that are being raised in the legal professions and address possibly systemic issues of discrimination and harassment in the legal professions. This statistical data is released publicly to support public accountability of a profession that is self-governing.
10. The DHC services are provided without charge to members of the public as well as to licensees.
11. In order to fall within the mandate of the DHC Program, allegations of misconduct must be based on one or more of the prohibited grounds of discrimination listed in the Ontario Human Rights Code, in one or more of the five social areas to which the Code applies. This is the discriminatory conduct prohibited by the Law Society's codes of conduct for licensees. Personal harassment (e.g. intimidation and bullying) that is not based on any of the listed prohibited grounds does not fall within the mandate of the DHC Program.

12. The complaints reported to the DHC arise in a variety of contexts, including but not limited to:
  - (a) clients who report that they have been subjected to discrimination or harassment by their own lawyer or paralegal;
  - (b) participants in litigation – whether they are clients, witnesses, articling students, paralegals or lawyers – who have experienced discrimination and/or harassment by opposing counsel or opposing paralegals and justice system employees (such as court/tribunal staff, law firm staff, process servers, etc.) who have experienced discrimination and/or harassment by licensees in the course of litigation;
  - (c) law firm employees, summer students, articling students, paralegals and lawyers who are experiencing or have experienced harassment and/or discrimination by licensees in the workplace based on intersecting or distinct grounds of prohibited discrimination;
  - (d) service providers, law firm employees, law students, summer students, articling students, paralegals and lawyers who are experiencing and/or have experienced discrimination and/or harassment by licensees in the context of professional training programs, continuing professional education programs, public or privately hosted legal events; and
  - (e) members of the public, service providers, law firm employees, law students, summer students, articling students, paralegals and lawyers who are experiencing or have experienced discrimination and/or harassment by licensees in other contexts which implicate the licensees' professional obligations.

13. For complaints that do not fall within the DHC Program's mandate, the DHC will provide information and guidance about other resources that the individual can access.
14. The DHC services are delivered by Fay Faraday, Lai-King Hum and Natasha Persaud. The Counsel who is on duty rotates each week. When any individual Counsel is unable to act due to a conflict of interest, one of the other Counsels handles the matter. To promote accessibility for those who contact the DHC office, the biographies of Ms Faraday, Ms Hum and Ms Persaud are posted on the DHC website. Ms Hum assists individuals who seek service in French.

B. SERVICES PROVIDED BY THE DHC

15. The DHC provides individuals who have experienced or witnessed discrimination or harassment by lawyers and/or paralegals an opportunity to discuss their concerns confidentially with a knowledgeable and empathetic listener who is an expert in discrimination and harassment law and issues, who has skills of mediation and conciliation regarding human rights, who has skills of cultural competence, and who is committed to promoting compliance with professional ethical standards in the legal professions.
16. The DHC also supports lawyers and paralegals to comply with their professional rules of conduct by participating in continuing professional education events to advance licensees' training on the substantive legal issues and best practices to ensure compliance with their codes of conduct and human rights laws.
17. The DHC does not provide legal advice or legal representation. The DHC does not conduct investigations or fact finding. Instead, the DHC provides general information and guidance to complainants to assist them in identifying and evaluating their options to resolve their concerns, provides information to licensees to support best practices, and where appropriate, provides focused mediation or conciliation. The nature of services provided is outlined below.

Counselling, Data Collection and Coaching for Self-Help

18. For some complainants, the ability to talk through their issues confidentially with an objective, knowledgeable outsider is all they want.
19. Some complainants want to report their experiences to the DHC so that their experience will be recorded as part of the DHC's semi-annual statistics. For complainants, this is an important means of alerting the legal profession to the reality and frequency of discrimination and harassment by licensees and of providing an evidence-based foundation for change.
20. In some cases, strategic tips and/or coaching are provided by the DHC to complainants who want to handle a situation directly by themselves.
21. The DHC also provides informal resolutions, which involve education or reminders to respondent licensees by way of a discussion with the DHC. This coaching of respondent licensees aims to ensure that they understand their professional obligations regarding human rights compliance in their service delivery and workplaces and that they move toward best practices. This informal coaching may be appropriate in situations where the complainant wishes to remain anonymous but authorizes the DHC to contact the respondent, advise them of their alleged behaviour in breach of human rights without making any finding, and educate or remind the respondent of their professional and legal obligations. Even though the DHC cannot make any factual findings, such calls are effective in providing education and guidance to respondent licensees.

Information about Avenues of Recourse

22. Complainants who contact the DHC are informed about the avenues of recourse available to them, including (where applicable):
  - (a) speaking to their union representative (if they are unionized and the - complaint relates to their employment);

  - (b) filing an internal complaint within their workplace (if the complaint relates to their employment);
  - (c) making a complaint to the respondent licensee's employer (e.g. the managing partner of the respondent's law firm or supervisor of a respondent who works in-house or in government);
  - (d) filing an application with the Human Rights Tribunal of Ontario or the Canadian Human Rights Commission;
  - (e) filing a formal complaint of professional misconduct with the Law Society;
  - (f) contacting the police (where criminal conduct is alleged);
  - (g) filing a complaint about an articling principal with the Law Society's Articling Program;
  - (h) contacting the Human Rights Legal Support Centre for legal advice on Human Rights Tribunal of Ontario matters; and
  - (i) contacting a lawyer regarding possible civil causes of action.
23. Complainants are provided with information about each of these options, including:
- (a) what (if any) costs might be involved in pursuing an option;
  - (b) whether legal representation is required in order to pursue an option;
  - (c) referral to resources on how to obtain legal representation such as the Law Society's Lawyer Referral Service, <https://lso.ca/public-resources/finding-a-lawyer-or-paralegal/law-society-referral-service>, (actual referrals to specific lawyers, paralegals or law firms are not made by the DHC);
  - (d) how to file a complaint or initiate an application (e.g. whether it can be done electronically, whether there are filing fees, whether particular forms are required, where to locate the requisite forms, etc.);

- (e) what processes are involved in pursuing any of the available options (e.g. investigation, conciliation, mediation, adjudication, etc.);
- (f) what general types of remedies might be available in different fora (e.g. compensatory remedies in contrast to disciplinary penalties; reinstatement to employment versus monetary damages; public interest remedies); and
- (g) what general time limits exist for each avenue of redress (complainants are advised to seek legal advice with respect to specific limitation periods).

Complainants are advised that the options available to them are generally not mutually exclusive (though some exceptions apply).

Resolution Services

- 24. In addition to being advised about the above-noted options, where appropriate, complainants are offered resolution services (mediation or conciliation).
- 25. Whenever formal mediation is offered, the nature and purpose of mediation is explained, including that it is a confidential and voluntary process, that it does not involve any investigation or fact finding, and that the DHC acts as a neutral facilitator to attempt to assist the parties in negotiating the terms of a mutually satisfactory settlement of the issues raised in the complaint.
- 26. When a complainant opts for mediation, they are given the choice of contacting the respondent to propose the mediation or having the DHC contact the respondent to canvass their willingness to participate (prior written consent for the DHC to contact the respondent licensee must be provided). If both parties are willing to participate, they are required to sign a mediation agreement (setting out the parameters of the mediation and ground rules) prior to entering into discussions facilitated by the DHC. The agreement clearly stipulates that the mediation process is confidential and subject to a mutual “without prejudice” undertaking by both parties.

27. Where informal conciliation services are offered, the complainant is advised that the DHC can contact the respondent confidentially and discuss the complainant's concerns with the goal of achieving a resolution to the complaint through shuttle diplomacy. Where such an intervention occurs, both the complainant and respondent are advised that the DHC is not acting as the complainant's counsel, advocate or representative, but rather as an impartial go-between to facilitate constructive dialogue between the parties and try to resolve their issues. When a complainant requests such an intervention, written consent must be provided before the DHC contacts the respondent. Depending on the nature of the complaint and the parties involved, a conciliation agreement is sometimes executed to set out the ground-rules for the conciliation process.
28. Some complainants are not interested in the DHC's resolution services because they are seeking an adjudicative process to create a formal record of the respondent's misconduct or they desire a process that includes a fact-finding investigation. Sometimes they decline an offer of resolution services based on a belief that the respondent would not participate in good faith. When a complainant elects to attempt mediation or conciliation, respondent licensees are generally receptive to the DHC's offer of resolution services. On occasion, however, respondents decline to participate.
29. During this reporting period two formal mediation processes were requested by complainants. One mediation was successfully completed during the reporting period. Multiple informal resolutions have been used.

Referrals

30. The DHC refers some complainants to other agencies or organizations where appropriate (such as the Member Assistance Program, a sexual assault crisis centre, a suicide prevention helpline, the Barbra Schlifer Commemorative Clinic, ARCH Disability Law Centre, or the Human Rights Legal Support Centre). The DHC also directs complainants to relevant resource materials available from the Law Society, the Ontario Human Rights Commission, or other organizations.

31. The DHC does not operate a lawyer referral service.

C. OVERVIEW OF NEW CONTACTS WITH THE DHC PROGRAM

32. The six months covered by this report falls entirely within the period of COVID-19 pandemic. Throughout this period, legal professionals have worked primarily from home in accordance with pandemic physical distancing directives and lockdowns. Nevertheless, from July to December 2020, 73 individuals contacted the DHC with a new matter,<sup>2</sup> for an average of 12.2 new contacts per month. While this is 16% lower than the corresponding period in 2019, it is consistent with the first four months of the pandemic and a higher proportion were in mandate. The frequency of new contacts was fairly consistently distributed throughout the six month period as shown in the following chart.

<sup>2</sup> Individuals who had previously contacted the Program and who communicated with the DHC during this reporting period with respect to the same ongoing matter are not counted in this number. Individuals who had multiple communications with the DHC about the same matter are only counted once.

33. During this reporting period, one new contact requested services in French.

D. SUMMARY OF DISCRIMINATION AND HARASSMENT COMPLAINTS

34. Of the 73 new contacts with the Program, 30 contacts raised substantive concerns about discrimination and/or harassment by licensees that fall within the mandate of the DHC program. Two complaints concerned the conduct of a paralegal. The remaining 28 complaints were about lawyers' conduct.

35. One complaint about a paralegal was made by a member of the public, the other was made by a member of the legal professions.

36. Of the 28 complaints about lawyers, 10 were made by members of the public, and 18 were made by individuals or groups within the legal professions. The breakdown of complaints made about licensees is represented on the chart below.

Source of Complaints Against Licensees – Chart 1

Complaints about Lawyers by Members of the Legal Profession

37. The 18 complaints about lawyers that were made by members of the legal profession were made by individuals with a variety of careers/career stages within the profession and a variety of roles within the justice system:

11 complaints by lawyers;

6 complaints by articling students, LPP students, or law students;

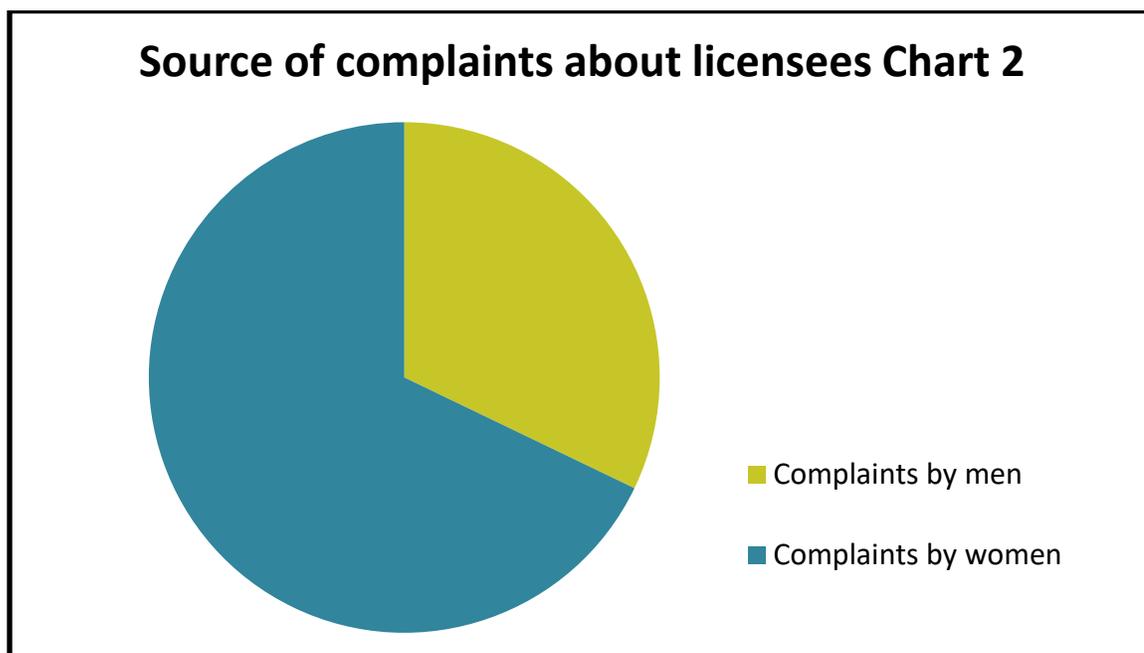

1 by paralegals; and

0 by non-licensee staff at legal workplaces.

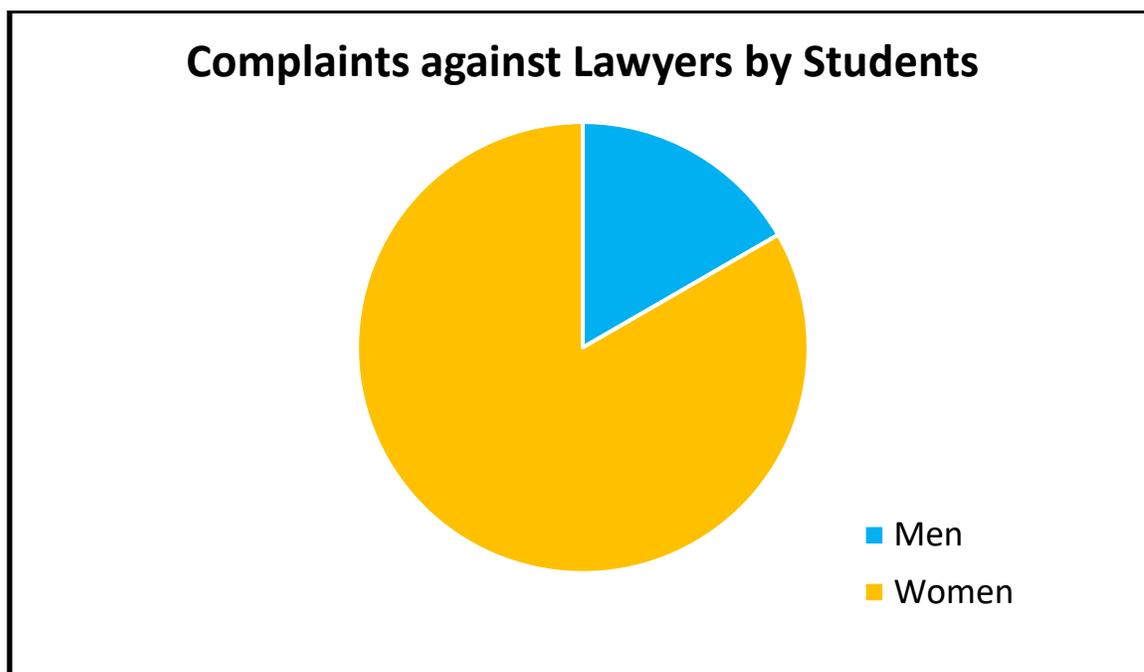

38. Of the 18 complaints against lawyers made by members of the legal profession:

14 (78%) were made by women, 10 of whom (71%) voluntarily self-identified as racialized women and/or women with disabilities;

4 (22%) were made by men, 3 of whom (75%) are racialized or have disabilities.

39. Five of the six complaints by students were made by women.

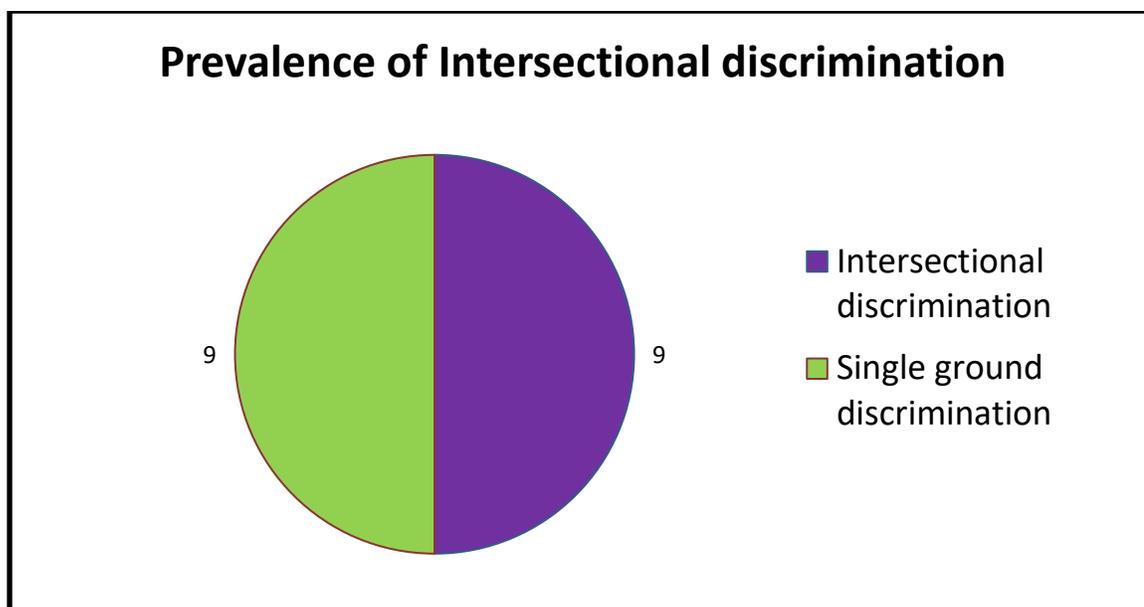

40. Of the 18 complaints from members of the legal profession, 13 complaints (72%) related to the complainants' employment and the remaining 5 complaints (28%) related to interactions with lawyers in other professional contexts.

41. Of the 18 complaints from members of the legal profession:

9 complaints (50%) raised allegations of harassment and discrimination on intersecting grounds including combinations of sex, race, disability, ethnic origin, age, and family status.

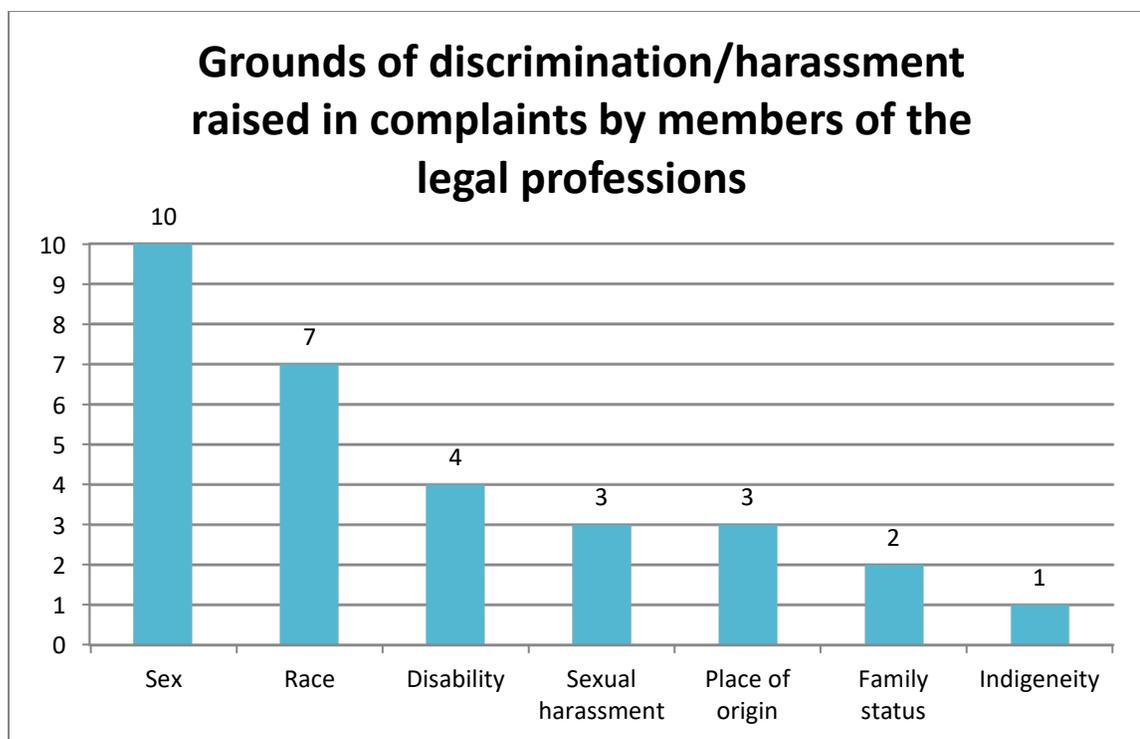

9 complaints (50%) raised a single ground of discrimination, primarily sexual harassment and disability.

42. In summary, the following prohibited grounds of discrimination were raised with the following frequency in complaints by members of the legal profession about the conduct of lawyers. The total exceeds 18 as half of the complaints raised more than one ground of discrimination

Sex	10
Race	7
Disability	4
Sexual harassment	3
Place of origin	3
Family status	2
Indigeneity	1

The distribution of grounds of discrimination and harassment are depicted in the table on the following page.

43. The complaints with respect to employment typically involved a power (seniority, security of employment) differential between the complainant and the lawyer complained about, although some complaints concerned peer-level harassment. The range of behaviour that was complained about in the context of employment included:
- (a) Sex discrimination including denial of opportunities and/or support provided to male colleagues; discriminatory recruitment practices; being subjected to explicitly misogynistic comments; actual or perceived threat to employment due to pregnancy and/or family status; being subjected to reprisals, including threats, for complaining about discrimination;
  - (b) Sexual harassment, including verbal abuse; sexually explicit harassment and comments; physical harassment and pressure by lawyer in position of authority to enter sexual relationships.
  - (c) Racial discrimination and harassment, including verbal harassment; racist comments; refusal to address racialized employees by their names; denial of opportunities available to non-racialized colleagues; being assigned to menial non-legal tasks; and employers' failure to respond appropriately when complaints of harassment were raised.

- (d) Discrimination and harassment with respect to disability, refusal to accommodate disabilities, denial of opportunities and denial of career progression due to disabilities;
  - (e) Verbal harassment with respect to place of origin/ethnic origin and denial of opportunities at work; and
  - (f) Reprisals for raising complaints about discriminatory treatment, including reprisals in the form of termination.
44. The range of behaviour identified in complaints about lawyers in other professional settings included sexist and racist comments directed at individuals in public settings; sexual and/or racial harassment; and harassment on the basis of place of origin.
45. During this period, there has been a notable increase in complaints about lawyers engaging in online racial and sexual harassment in public contexts/on public platforms and in targeted communications, some of which include threats of potential violence directed at the complainants.
46. Since July 2017, the DHC has been compiling statistics that are disaggregated by sex, race, disability and other grounds of discrimination as well as compiling statistics about contacts that raise multiple intersecting grounds of discrimination. This provides a sufficient time frame to identify meaningful patterns in the contacts to the DHC office.
47. It is significant to note that in this report, as has been the case consistently in previous reports since July 2017, contacts to the DHC indicate that the burden of discriminatory and harassing behaviour within the legal profession falls most heavily on women, and particularly racialized women. Moreover, this discriminatory and harassing behaviour is experienced at all stages of women's careers in law from their time as students through to senior stages in their careers. The DHC reports also show a consistent pattern by which members of the profession of all genders who have disabilities consistently reports the next most frequent incidence of discrimination and harassment. The consistency of these systemic patterns is concerning.

Complaints about Lawyers by Members of the Public

48. During this reporting period, 10 complaints were made about lawyers by members of the public: 4 complaints were made by clients who reported discrimination or harassment by their own lawyer; 6 complaints were made about opposing counsel.
49. Eight of the ten complaints involved discrimination and/or harassment on the basis of disability, one involved sex discrimination and one involved discrimination on the basis of religion:

Disability	8
Religion	1

50. The complaints about disability were divided equally those reporting behaviour about a complainant's own lawyer and about opposing counsel. The issues raised were the complainant's own lawyer failing to accommodate disabilities, opposing counsel's refusal to agree to accommodations in the context of legal proceedings, and lawyers about taking advantage of the complainant because of their disability. Again, this pattern of complaints about failure to accommodate disabilities has remained a consistent priority for clients and points to need for focused professional training to ensure that all lawyers know and are able to meet their obligations to accommodate to the point of undue hardship.

Complaints about Paralegals

51. The two complaints made about paralegals were made by women and involved incidents of sexual harassment and sexual assaults.

E. MATTERS OUTSIDE THE DHC MANDATE

52. During this reporting period, the DHC received 43 contacts by phone or email relating to matters outside the Program's mandate. The "outside mandate" calls typically are dealt with quickly and typically do not involve follow up by the individual complainant.
53. An explanation of the DHC's mandate, role and duties was provided to each person who contacted the DHC with a matter outside the Program's mandate. All new contacts raising matters outside the DHC mandate were referred to other agencies for assistance.
54. While they are labelled "out of mandate", the majority of "out of mandate" contacts (23 of 43, or 54%) related directly to the regulatory mandate of the LSO and to the public's respect for the legal professions and the administration of justice. These "out of mandate" contacts do not directly raise issues of discrimination and harassment under the anti-discrimination/anti-harassment rules of the relevant rules or code of professional conduct, but they do raise serious issues of professionalism and professional conduct by lawyers and paralegals. During this reporting period, of these 23 contacts:

- (a) 21 (91%) raised concerns about conduct by Ontario lawyers and paralegals that reflect breaches of their respective professional conduct rules, potentially criminal conduct and/or abusive employment practices. These contacts were redirected to the Law Society Complaint and Compliance office and/or police as appropriate; and
  - (b) 2 contacts (9%) raised concerns about systemic barriers to access to justice.
55. As in past reports, the DHC again flags the continuing complaints about toxic and abusive legal work environments including workplaces where verbal abuse, yelling, demeaning comments, abusive emails, bullying, aggressive intimidation and inappropriate intrusion on personal time are routine.

F. PROMOTIONAL AND EDUCATIONAL ACTIVITIES

56. While the DHC's ability to engage in proactive actions to raise awareness of the DHC's services and promote licensee compliance with the relevant codes of conduct was restricted due to the COVID-19 pandemic, the DHC counsel were able to engage in some promotional activities including the following:
- (a) Lai-King Hum and Natasha Persaud attended a Law Society Equity Network event in November 2020 to discuss the role of the DHC;
  - (b) Lai-King Hum did an interview with the Globe and Mail in December about women in the legal profession; and
  - (c) Fay Faraday, Lai-King Hum and Natasha Persaud conducted a CPD event with the Ontario Trial Lawyers Association addressing the role of the DHC.

Throughout this reporting period, the DHC Program was promoted in the Law Society's monthly e-Bulletins to licensees. The LSO continues to maintain a bilingual website for the DHC Program.

Executive Summary

On March 18, 2021 the Law Society sent a letter of intervention to the military junta controlling Myanmar, demanding that they comply with international human rights laws after reports emerged of numerous incidents of violence against Myanmar citizens, including lawyers and law students. A public statement was also posted on the Law Society of Ontario's (LSO) website, outlining the information gathered in preparing the intervention, as well as the demands made by the LSO.

These documents were prepared using the same standard approach and process that the Human Rights Monitoring Group (the Monitoring Group) has used to prepare interventions in the past. Information was gathered from trusted sources, such as the United Nations and Human Rights Watch, and the intervention was written and approved by the Monitoring Group during a meeting on March 16. During the meeting, the Monitoring Group discussed the rapidly escalating violence in Myanmar and decided to ask that the Treasurer review the materials so that they could be issued as soon as possible. This procedure is written into the Convocation-approved mandate of the Monitoring Group which provides that "where Convocation's meeting schedule makes such a review and approval impractical, the Treasurer may review such responses in Convocation's place and take such steps as he or she deems appropriate and shall report on the matter at the next Convocation."

The Treasurer reviewed the Monitoring Group's materials, and agreed that the intervention should be issued urgently. The intervention letter was signed and sent on March 18, and the public statement was posted at the same time.

As was feared by the Monitoring Group, the situation in Myanmar has dramatically worsened, since the LSO's intervention letter was sent. As of March 18, 70 people had been killed and 1726 citizens were being detained. At least 45 lawyers and 15 law students were among those who were being detained. As of April 13, the number detained citizens has increased to 3054, and the number of citizens killed has risen to 693. Calls from the international community continue to demand an immediate halt to the violence against Myanmar citizens by the military junta.

Context

A. Rationale

The request for intervention to the Treasurer fell within the mandate of the Human Rights Monitoring Group (the “Monitoring Group”) to:

- a. review information that comes to its attention about human rights violations that target members of the professions and the judiciary, here and abroad, as a result of the discharge of their legitimate professional duties;
- b. determine if the matter is one that requires a response from the Law Society; and
- c. prepare a response for review and approval

B. Considerations

The Monitoring Group considered the following factors when making a decision about the case:

- a. there are no concerns about the quality of sources used for this report; and
- b. the letter and public statement regarding the arrest and detention of lawyers and law students in Myanmar falls within the mandate of the Monitoring Group.

The background information used to support the intervention was retrieved from the following sources:

- a. The United Nations<sup>1, 2</sup>
- b. Human Rights Watch<sup>3</sup>

C. Human Rights Monitoring Group mandate

The mandate of the Monitoring Group is to:

- i. review information that comes to its attention about human rights violations that target members of the profession and the judiciary, here and abroad, as a result of the discharge of their legitimate professional duties;
- ii. to review information that comes to its attention about human rights violations that target human rights defenders in the same event or circumstances as a member of the legal profession or the judiciary as described above;
- iii. determine if the matter is one that requires a response from the Law Society; and
- iv. prepare a response for review and approval by Convocation.

Where Convocation's meeting schedule makes such a review and approval impractical, the Treasurer may review such responses in Convocation's place and take such steps as he or she deems appropriate and shall report on the matter at the next Convocation.

D. Review and Approval process

The intervention documents were prepared using the same standard approach and process that the Human Rights Monitoring Group (the Monitoring Group) has used to prepare interventions in the past. The Chairs of the Monitoring Group received a request from a former bencher to investigate reports of possible human rights violations against members of the legal professions in Myanmar. Staff gathered information from trusted sources, such as the United Nations and Human Rights Watch, following the standard procedure used to create each intervention the Monitoring Group has proposed. Once staff was satisfied that there were sufficient reports from trusted, high-quality sources draft intervention documents were written and presented to the Monitoring Group during a meeting on March 16. The Monitoring Group agreed that case merited intervention. The discussion then shifted to the rapidly escalating violence in Myanmar and the Monitoring group decided to ask that the Treasurer review the materials so that they could be issued as soon as possible. This procedure is written into the Convocation-approved mandate of the Monitoring Group, as follows:

Where Convocation's meeting schedule makes such a review and approval impractical, the Treasurer may review such responses in Convocation's place and take such steps as he or she deems appropriate and shall report on the matter at the next Convocation.

The Treasurer reviewed the Monitoring Group's materials, and agreed that the intervention should be issued urgently. The intervention letter was signed and sent on March 18, and the public statement was posted at the same time. This information report is intended to inform Convocation of the actions taken the Monitoring Group, as required by the Monitoring Group's mandate..

Background

On February 1, 2021, the Myanmar military arrested the elected civilian leaders of the national and state governments and announced the start of year-long state of emergency<sup>8</sup>. The state of emergency is intended to be in place until a new round of elections could be held. The military arrested leader Aung San Suu Kyi, President Win Myint, and several dozen other senior officials in early morning raids in the capital, Naypyidaw<sup>9</sup>. The officials were in Naypyidaw for the convention of the lower house of parliament, following the November 2020 national elections, which were won decisively by the National League for Democracy (NLD) party<sup>10</sup>. The military also detained NLD officials and civil society activists in other parts of Myanmar, and cut telecommunications and the internet so that citizens and journalists within the country could not publicly report on the military's actions<sup>11</sup>.

Additionally, the military's commander-in-chief, Senior General Min Aung Hlaing, has been credibly implicated in crimes against humanity on several occasions, most recently for his role in the military's actions against Rohingya Muslims in 2017<sup>12</sup>. Similar reports have also been made regarding several other members of the military-installed government<sup>13</sup>.

According to the International Commission of Jurists, since the February 1 coup the military has made changes to several laws that have eliminated many human rights for citizens<sup>14</sup>. For example, laws against arbitrary detention have been suspended and the penal code has been amended to make speaking critically of the military a punishable offense<sup>15</sup>.

Since the February 1 coup by the military, Myanmar citizens have been protesting in increasingly large numbers. On February 16, over 40 lawyers were arrested for peacefully protesting the military's coup.<sup>16</sup> On February 28, 18 protestors were killed and 30 others were injured when the police and military used live rounds of ammunition to disperse crowds who were participating in the nationwide protests<sup>17</sup>. On March 3, another 38 protestors were killed<sup>18</sup>. The arrest, detention, and death numbers continue to grow, according to reports by the Assistance Association for Political Prisoners. As of March 5, 1522 people had been arrested, charged or sentenced; 1215 continued to be detained; and 50 people had been killed<sup>19</sup>. As of March 11, 2045 individuals have been arrested, charged or sentenced; 1726 remain in detention or have outstanding warrants; and at least 70 have been killed<sup>20</sup>. There are numerous stories about individuals who are in hiding, or have tried to flee the country out of fear for their lives. Although it is unclear how many detainees are members of the legal profession, several stories have surfaced outlining how members of the legal professions have been targeted by the military. The targeting of lawyers, along with civil servants, doctors, and healthcare workers, has been documented by the UN.<sup>21</sup>

On March 5, the Law Society of England and Wales called for the immediate release of three lawyers, and asked the military to guarantee that all lawyers in Myanmar would be

As of April 13, the number detained citizens has increased to 3054, and the number of citizens killed has risen to 693. Calls from the international community continue to demand an immediate halt to the violence against Myanmar citizens by the military junta.

A. International Response

On February 23, the foreign affairs ministers of all G7 nations and the European Union jointly issued a statement condemning the acts of violence against Myanmar citizens.<sup>25</sup>

On February 28, the Honourable Marc Garneau, Minister of Foreign Affairs issued a statement on behalf of the Canadian government, which demanded that the military stop using violence against its own citizens, urged the restoration of democracy, and called on the international community to unite in condemning the violent acts committed against Myanmar citizens.<sup>26</sup>

Rules of Practice and Procedure

A. Executive Summary

Beginning in November 2020, the Tribunal Committee has worked with Tribunal Chair Malcolm M. Mercer to review the policy implications brought about by the government measures undertaken following the declaration of a COVID-19 pandemic and the Tribunal's mandate to continue operations. The focus has been on what has been learned and accomplished at the Tribunal during this time and how to best proceed in the future. Convocation is provided with a copy of the draft changes to the Law Society Tribunal Rules of Practice and Procedure. We invite comment from Law Society and public stakeholders by May 30, 2021.

B. Committee Process

The Committee discussed the Rules and proposed policy changes and later draft language at the November 2020, and January, February, and April 2021 Committee meetings. The Rules were also discussed at the March 2021 meeting of the Tribunal Chair's Practice Roundtable and meetings and e-mail exchanges with the Law Society Tribunal's post-pandemic working group.

The Tribunal Chair's Practice Roundtable is a forum for the Tribunal to consult with and obtain feedback from those who practice before the Tribunal and is made up of individuals who regularly appear before the Tribunal as counsel whether representing licensees / licence applicants, the Law Society or as duty counsel.

The Tribunal's post-pandemic working group is a group made up of Tribunal staff, adjudicators (Benchers) and counsel from the LSO and the duty counsel program who expressed an interest in considering how the Tribunal can best respond to the pandemic and moving forward.

C. Background

As a result of pandemic measures, all Law Society staff, including those at the Tribunal, began working at home during the last two weeks of March 2020. All in-person appearances were cancelled at that time and since then, appearances have taken place by videoconference, teleconference or in writing.

Most merits and motion hearings have taken place by videoconference; PMCs have taken place by teleconference, and PHCs have transitioned from primarily by teleconference to primarily by videoconference. While most of the hearings initially scheduled for videoconferences were summary hearings or uncontested matters, as the pandemic continues more continuation dates, and hearings for more complex matters, are being scheduled to take place by videoconference. As of February 17, 2021, all in-person hearings at the Tribunal have been cancelled to the end of September 2021.

The professions and the public have been kept up-to-date by notices posted on the Tribunal's website such as this one. The notices are also published on the Tribunal's twitter feed.

While many of the steps taken to adapt the Tribunal's processes in response to pandemic measures were ad-hoc, the Tribunal Committee, together with the Tribunal Chair, is tasked with considering the policy implications on the Tribunal of pandemic measures.

D. Discussion

The proposed changes to the Rules of Practice and Procedure reflect the discussions that have taken place at the Committee and also comments received from the Roundtable and working group.

Electronic Documents

There was little, if any, negative response to the proposed move to electronic filing of documents and maintaining an electronic record of proceeding, supplemented by physical documents only where physical documents are, by their nature, required.

Concern was raised that some licensees / licence applicants will require assistance to ensure that their documents complied with any requirements set out in a practice direction. Standardization of formats, file naming conventions, pagination and ease of use were all issues discussed in regards to electronic documents. It is desirable to ensure that panels of three or five are not unnecessarily duplicating work to access filed materials.

Electronic Appearances

There has been much discussion about whether certain types of, or indeed all, appearances should be electronic by default or not. The responses to this question have been varied.

On the one hand, some have suggested that in addition to substantial savings for parties and for the Tribunal (on office space, transportation, hotel accommodations etc.), moving to a presumption of videoconference hearings will also increase access to the Tribunal for licensees / licence applicants residing outside of Toronto. Licensees / licence applicants and out of town adjudicators would not have to travel to Toronto, incurring transportation, accommodation and other costs which would be compounded if they are also represented at the Tribunal. Positive environmental impacts were also raised.

On the other hand, feedback received from representatives appearing at the Tribunal included concern about any presumption of virtual hearings. Some suggested that in-person hearings should remain the default and/or the licensee / licence applicant ought to retain the right to choose an in-person reason. Others did not agree that the licensee / licence applicant ought to have essentially a veto but agreed that videoconference hearings ought not to be the default.

There was broad agreement that videoconference appearances and hybrid hearings would be appropriate. The differences of opinion were with respect to the extent to which in-person hearings were appropriate.

Availability of technology and connectivity

Concerns about difficulties accessing reliable technology (both hardware and reliable/sufficient internet connection) by licensees / licence applicants and the need to address those difficulties were often mentioned. In addition, the ability of all licensees / licence applicants to actually use the technology was raised. The issue of access to justice also includes improving access to the Tribunal for licensees and licence applicants wherever located throughout the province. There is substantial interest in working to ensure access to technology and connectivity for effective remote access to the Tribunal and its proceedings.

E. Proposed Amendments to the Rules of Practice and Procedure

The proposed draft amendments to the Rules (Tab 8.1) reflect the Committee's intent to move forward with greater reliance on electronic / videoconference hearings and acceptance of electronic documents.

Rule 1 has been updated to include the importance of efficient processes and proceedings.

Rule 5 has been updated to reflect the move to electronic documents. Corresponding changes have also been made in Rule 3 regarding starting proceedings. Rule 13 – record of proceedings has been updated to reflect this move as well. Rule 18.2 was similarly updated.

Rule 9 addresses the manner of appearance and sets out that the Tribunal will direction the manner of the appearance. Rule 2.1(2) sets out a non-exhaustive list of considerations to be taken into account in making the determination. Rule 7.3 has been deleted as a consequence.

We are also using this time to make some updates to the language and certain rules to make them easier to understand and apply, based on experience gained over the last year.

Rule 6.4 is updated to reflect the language used in the Act. The same is true for Rules 9.9 and 9.10, though Rule 9.10 requires someone who wants to make an audio recording to notify the Tribunal.

Improvements have been proposed for Rule 17 to account for experience in applying the rule over the past year. Issues have arisen in multiple proceedings because of the requirement in the initial rule to base calculations on the date a notice of appeal was filed, regardless of any steps taken afterwards. The update proposed changes this to use a "deadline" as the basis for calculating time; either the deadline established in Rule 17.3 or as otherwise set by the Tribunal.

Tribunal Statistics – For Information

A. Executive Summary

Ongoing collection and reporting of Tribunal operational statistics assists the Tribunal to track issues, identify needs and monitor emerging trends in Tribunal proceedings. This enables the Tribunal Committee and Convocation to make policy decisions with a more fulsome understanding of the Tribunal's work.

B. Committee Process

The Committee met on April 8, 2020. Committee members Julia Shin Doi (Chair), Marian Lippa (Vice-Chair), Malcolm M. Mercer, (ex officio), Jared Brown, Jean-Jacques Desgranges, John Fagan, Michael Lesage, C. Scott Marshall, Barbara Murchie, Geneviève Painchaud, and Chi-Kun Shi attended. Bencher Cathy Banning and staff members Celia Lieu and Lisa Mallia also attended.

C. Background

The statistics that the Tribunal reports on were decided upon through an extensive process. In 2016, the Tribunal Committee considered what types of data would be useful in public and internal reports. This review was done while considering the goals of the Tribunal model as well as issues raised in the 2016 Tribunal Model Three-Year Review final report. That report highlighted the need for a revised approach to data collection that would focus on adjudicative purposes in order to measure the effectiveness of the Tribunal's processes.

In 2017, the Committee approved a list of statistics to be gathered and reported on quarterly and annually. The Tribunal then designed data collection and technology around this list. The goal of the statistics the Committee chose is to have focused reporting that:

- measures outcomes;
- measures efficiency;
- monitors trends; and
- monitors data around adjudicators, duty counsel/self-represented licensees, French language hearings, and licensee/licensee applicant data.

These goals must be pursued while bearing in mind the public interest nature of the information and the goal of transparency.

The Tribunal provides five statistical reports each year to Convocation: four quarterly reports and one year-end report. The Q4 2020 quarterly report is set out at TAB 8.2.

D. Q4 2020 quarterly report

The Fourth Quarter 2020 report provides operational statistics during a period where the Tribunal continued to operate remotely. In this quarter, the Tribunal rescheduled many of its cancelled hearings from earlier in the year and converted all in-person hearings to videoconference.

The volume of cases open at any point in time is generally between 165 and 175. In 2020, the case load was higher: from 185 files open at the end of Q1 to 219 at the end of Q4: Caseload on page 6 of the Q4 report.

The number of hearing files opened in Q4 of 2020 (47) was an increase from Q3 of 2020 (40) and also an increase from Q4 of 2019 (34): Figure 1 on page 2. Slightly fewer files were closed in Q4 of 2020 (33) than Q3 2020 (37) but more than in Q4 2019 (28): Figure 6 on page 5.

Following a significant decrease in full days used for hearings from Q1 to Q2, the number of full days used more than doubled from Q2 to Q3 and more than doubled again from Q3 to Q4: Figure 14 on page 7. Most longer, more complex hearings were cancelled during the first months of pandemic measures and have now begun to be heard by videoconference.

The Tribunal also measures the length of time taken to complete reasons: Figure 20 on page 13. The average number of days to deliver written reasons continues to decrease from 82 in Q1 to 69.5 in Q2 to 61 in Q3 and 57 days in Q4.

The report also shows that 25 applications by the Law Society were closed in Q4: Figure 25 on page 14. Most were granted in full (19), four were withdrawn, one was dismissed and one was granted in part. There were two motions for interlocutory suspension closed in Q4, both of which were granted in full. Five matters initiated by the licensee / licence applicant were closed in Q4, four were granted and one withdrawn – they were all licencing matters: Figure 32 on page 16.

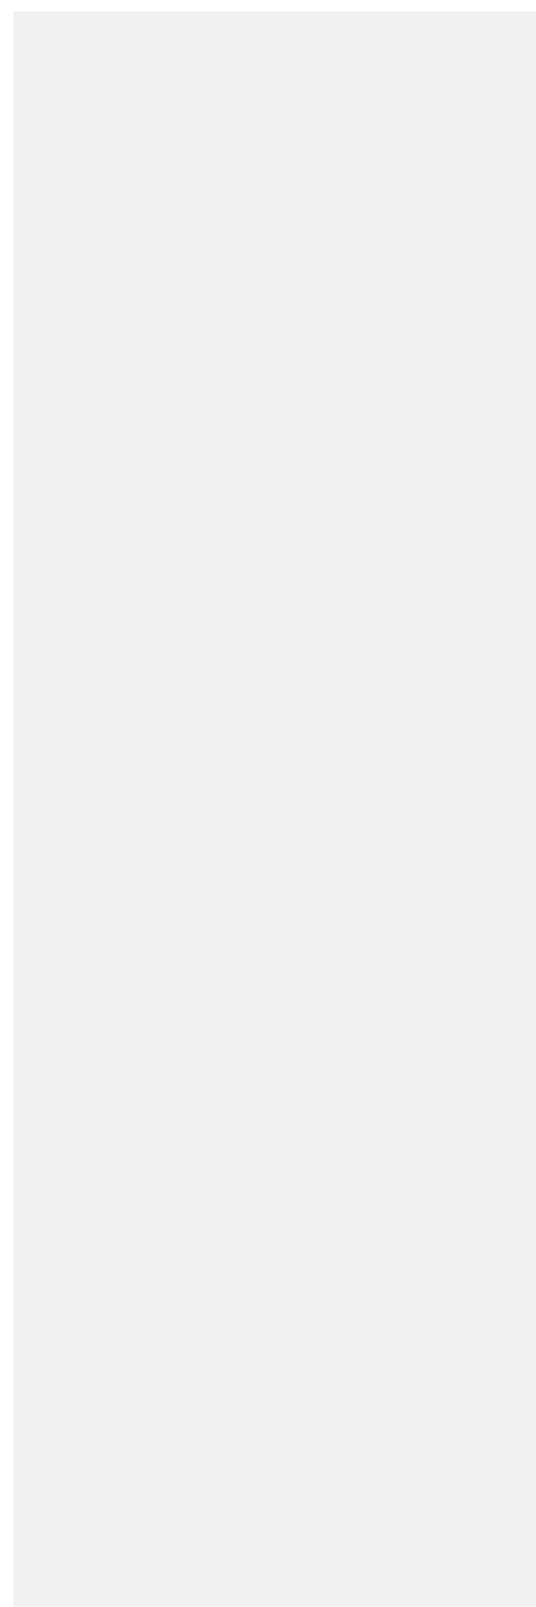

One appeal brought by a licensee / licence applicant was closed in Q4: it was abandoned/withdrawn: Figure 36 on page 17. No appeals brought by the Law Society were closed in Q4.

RULE 3: STARTING AND WITHDRAWING PROCEEDINGS

Service

3.1 (1) A party starts a proceeding by serving and filing the appropriate originating process (Forms 1-17) and information sheet (Forms 18-25).

(2) A party must serve an originating process and information sheet by:

(a) hand delivery to the person being served;

~~(b)~~ regular mail, registered mail or courier sent to the party's home and / or business addresses;

(a) in the case of licensees, the addresses provided to the Law Society under By-Law 8; and

(b) in the case of licence applicants, the addresses provided to the Law Society during the licensing process.

Commented [A1]: This addition makes it clearer that the LSO will rely on the information that the licensee has provided to the Law Society either pursuant to By-Law 8 or the licensing process.

Amending an originating process

3.2 (1) A party may amend an originating process by serving and filing an amended version that clearly indicates the nature of the changes:

(a) in a proceeding in the Hearing Division, no later than 10 days before the hearing on the merits; and

(b) in a proceeding in the Appeal Division, at any time before the appeal is perfected.

(2) A party may amend an originating process after the deadline with consent of the other party or with leave.

Withdrawing a proceeding or motion

3.3 (1) A party may, at any time, withdraw a proceeding or motion by serving and filing a Notice of Withdrawal (Form 26).

(3) A responding party may request costs after a proceeding or motion is withdrawn or deemed withdrawn.

RULE 4: ADDITIONAL PARTICIPANTS

How to serve

5.1 A document other than an originating process may be served by:

- (a) hand delivery;
- (b) regular mail, registered mail or courier;
- (c) e-mail, if less than 20 MB;
- (d) uploading an electronic document to the Tribunal's File Sharing Platform and serving notice on the other party that the electronic document has been uploaded; ~~fax, if the document is 20 pages or less~~; or
- (e) any other method agreed to by the person being served or directed by the Tribunal.

Effective date of service

5.2 Service is deemed to be effective:

- (a) if the document is ~~faxed, e-mailed, uploaded to the file-sharing system, hand delivered or delivered by courier~~ served, other than by mail, before 5 p.m. on a business day, on that day;
- (b) if the document is ~~faxed, e-mailed, uploaded to the file-sharing system, hand delivered or delivered by courier~~ served, other than by mail, on a holiday or after 5 p.m. on a business day, on the next business day;

Commented [A2]: This change makes the rule simpler to understand.

Service using contact information in the Law Society's records

- 5.3 Service on a licensee using contact information provided to the Law Society under By-Law 8, ss. 3 and 4 is considered effective unless otherwise ordered by the Tribunal.

Confirmation of service

5.4 When a document is filed with the Tribunal, service must be confirmed by:

- (a) a Confirmation of Service form (Form 27), which may be provided in the body of an e-mail;
- (b) an affidavit of the person who served it;
- (c) an e-mail showing that the document was sent to the other person's e-mail address including by
  - i. copying the Tribunal in the original e-mail to the other person; or
  - ii. forwarding the original e-mail to the Tribunal; or
- ~~(e)~~ (d) written acceptance of service by the person served, which may be provided electronically by e-mail to the Tribunal.

Communication with the Tribunal

- 5.5 (1) All parties must be copied on correspondence sent to the Tribunal about the substance of the proceeding.

(2) Failure to comply with this rule is a relevant factor in making a costs award.

Acceptance of documents by the Tribunal

5.7 Acceptance of documents by the Tribunal does not mean that they are timely, properly served or otherwise comply with these rules or the order or direction under which they were filed. The Tribunal may reject documents after they are filed.

Filing requirements: electronic and hard copies

~~5.8~~

~~5.9~~ Other than physical documents filed at an in-person appearance, (1) The following Aall documents must be filed in electronic copy form and be in accordance with the Tribunal's practice direction on electronic filing:-

~~(e) facta;~~

~~(f) written submissions; and~~

~~(g) notices of motion.~~

~~(3) All other documents must be filed in hard copy.~~

Filing electronic documents

Commented [A3]: This is a major change. All documents, unless provided in hard copy at an in-person appearance, must be filed in electronic form.

This also anticipates a practice direction on electronic filing. A practice direction is preferred as it is an easier process for amending in the future – although practice directions go to Convocation for approval currently, changes to practice directions are not as significant as changes to the Rules.

~~5.115.9~~ Where possible, ~~Electronic copies of documents may~~ must be filed in pdf format or, alternatively, in both pdf and other formats such as .doc, .ppt and .xlsx. ~~Word and/or pdf format. Electronic documents may be filed~~ by e-mail (if less than 20 MB), on a USB drive, ~~by the Tribunal's File Sharing Platform~~ or by such other method as the Tribunal may permit. The ~~document~~ file name ~~and the structure and format of the electronic document~~ must include the Tribunal file number, the name of the document and the party filing ~~comply with the Tribunal's practice direction on electronic documents filing.~~

Filing ~~physical documents~~ ~~hard copy documents~~

5.10 ~~When~~ Where a party files a document ~~sing~~ in physical form ~~hard copy at an in-person appearance:~~

(1) ~~the party must file:~~

- (a) two copies of the document if the appearance is before a single-member panel;
- (b) four copies of the document if the appearance is before a three-member panel; or
- (c) six copies of the document if the appearance is before a five-member panel;

together with an electronic copy, or an additional un-tabbed and unbound ~~hard copy, of the physical document.~~

(2) ~~the electronic copy of the physical document filed by the party, or an electronic copy created by the Tribunal if no electronic copy is filed by the party, becomes part of the record of proceeding but the physical document does not.~~

Layout

5.11 (1) Documents ~~prepared for~~ filed with the Tribunal ~~proceedings~~ must be legible. Written documents must be typed or printed. Electronic documents must be formatted to be printed on white 8.5 by 11 inch paper 216 millimetres by 279 millimetres (8.5 by 11 inches), using 12 point font, double spaced, except for quotations which may be single spaced, with a margin of at least 1 ½ inches on the left hand side.

(2) Physical documents must be on white 8.5 by 11 inch paper 216 millimetres by 279 millimetres (8.5 by 11 inches).

5.12 (3) ~~These requirements do not apply to documentary evidence or copies of documentary evidence.~~

Commented [A4]: This mirrors the current Rules of Civil Pro.

Commented [A5]: This mirrors the current Rules of Civil Pro.

Facta

5.13 A factum must include at least the following sections:

- (a) overview;

- (b) issues;
- (c) facts, argument and law;

- ~~(a) green if filed by the Law Society;~~
- ~~(b) white if filed by a licensee or licence applicant;~~
- ~~(c) buff if filed by any other party; or~~

RULE 6: SCHEDULING, ADJOURNMENTS AND ACCOMMODATION

First appearance

- 6.1 (1) The date of the first appearance, in Hearing Division proceedings, is set out on the information sheet.
- (2) For a summary hearing, interlocutory suspension or restriction motion, or motion to vary or cancel an interlocutory suspension or restriction, the first appearance is the scheduled hearing date. The applicant must confirm the availability of a proposed hearing date with the Tribunal Office before including it in the information sheet.

(3) For all other Hearing Division proceedings, the first appearance is a proceeding management conference. Available proceeding management conference dates are posted on the Tribunal website.

(4) An appeal hearing is scheduled by the Tribunal Office once the appeal has been perfected.

Who may schedule or adjourn

6.2 An appearance may be scheduled or adjourned by:

- (a) a pre-hearing conference or proceeding management conference;
- (b) the assigned hearing panel or its chair; or
- (c) the Tribunal Office, if the scheduling or adjournment is on consent.

Adjournments

6.3 Adjournments are not automatic, even if the parties consent. Once an appearance before the assigned hearing panel is scheduled, that date is firm and adjournments will be granted only in exceptional circumstances, as set out in the Tribunal's Practice Direction on Adjournments. Parties must be ready to proceed on the dates scheduled.

6.4 An order adjourning an appearance may include such terms and conditions as the panel considers appropriate. The Tribunal may order that there be terms to an adjournment.

Commented [A6]: Tracking the language of section 49.26 of the Act

Accommodation

6.5 Participants in proceedings are entitled to accommodation of their needs under the Human Rights Code, RSO 1990, c. H. 19, to the point of undue hardship. A participant in a proceeding must notify the Tribunal as soon as possible of any accommodation requests.

Accommodation for Witnesses

6.6 Where it would be fair and in the interests of justice, the Tribunal may:

- (a) permit a support person to sit near a witness while the witness testifies;
- (b) order that a witness testify in a manner that would allow the witness not to see the licensee, licence applicant or any other person;
- (c) order that a licensee or licence applicant not personally conduct the cross-examination of a witness, and shall appoint counsel for the purpose of conducting the cross-examination without cost to the licensee or licence applicant; and

- (d) make other orders accommodating or protecting witnesses.

Failure to attend or participate

- 6.7 Where notice of an appearance has been given to a party and the party does not attend or does not participate, the panel may proceed in the absence of the party or without the party's participation. The party will not be entitled to any further notice in the proceeding.

RULE 7: CASE MANAGEMENT

Principles

Issues discussed at pre-hearing conference

- 7.8 A pre-hearing conference panel may discuss with the parties,
- (a) the identification, limitation or simplification of the issues in the proceeding;
  - (b) the identification and limitation of evidence and witnesses;

Pre-hearing conference memoranda

- (2) Each party's memorandum must be sent by e-mail to the other parties and to the Tribunal Office. The Law Society's memorandum must be sent at least seven days prior to the first pre-hearing conference. The licensee or licence applicant's memorandum must be sent at least two days prior to the first pre-hearing conference.
- (3) The Tribunal may waive the requirement to file a memorandum, if the preparation of the memorandum would not be practical or of assistance in the circumstances.

Limitation on assignment of pre-hearing conference Tribunal member

- 7.13 (1) Except with agreement of the parties, a Tribunal member who conducted a pre-hearing conference in an application shall not be assigned to a motion or merits hearing or to any appeal of that proceeding, nor shall a member of the panel assigned to a hearing preside at a pre-hearing conference. The parties must confirm their agreement by filing a consent (Form 31).

(2) This rule does not preclude a Tribunal member who conducted a pre-hearing conference from conducting a proceeding management conference.

Case conference

7.14 The Tribunal may hold a case conference on the assigned hearing panel's own initiative, as directed at a proceeding management conference, or at the request of any party.

Directions at case conference

7.15 At a case conference, the assigned hearing panel or its chair may:

- (a) schedule or adjourn an appearance;
- (b) set timelines and deadlines for steps in the proceeding;

RULE 8: MOTIONS

Motions

(2) If a motion date has not been confirmed by the Tribunal at the time the notice of motion is served and filed, the notice of motion must indicate that the motion will be heard on a date to be set by the Tribunal.

(3) The Tribunal may direct that the parties attend a proceeding management conference before setting a motion date.

(3) A responding party to the motion must serve and file a factum, together with a motion record and book of authorities, if any, at least three days before the hearing of the motion.

(4) A motion record must have consecutively numbered pages and contain;

- (c) all affidavits and other material upon which the party intends to rely.

Commented [A7]: This change removes the default of in-person hearings.

Attending an in-person appearance electronically

Filing materials before the hearing

- 11.4 A party may file an agreed statement of facts, request to admit that has been deemed admitted, affidavit or document book for the panel to review to prepare for the hearing. - 12.2 Rule 8 applies to interlocutory suspension or restriction motions, except where it differs from this rule.

Service and materials

- 12.4 (1) In an interlocutory suspension or restriction motion, the Law Society must serve and file its Notice of Motion, Information Sheet, motion record, factum and book of authorities at least three days before the hearing of the motion unless the motion is being heard on 10 days' notice or more, in which case they must be filed no later than 10 days prior to the hearing, or unless the Tribunal orders otherwise.

Motion to vary or cancel

- 12.8 A party starts a request to vary or cancel an interlocutory suspension or restriction order by serving and filing a Motion – Vary or Cancel Interlocutory Suspension or Restriction (Form 8 or 9) and information sheet (Form 21 or 22).

RULE 13: RECORD OF PROCEEDING AND TRANSPARENCY

Record of proceeding

- 13.1 \(1\) The record of proceeding consists of:

Commented [A8]: This change reflects the intention that the Tribunal will only maintain electronic files in the future. Physical documents provided at an in-person hearing for example, will be scanned and retained electronically only unless the nature of the document dictates otherwise.

Open tribunal

- 13.2 (1) The contents of the record of proceeding and all appearances except pre-hearing conferences are public, unless the Tribunal or a court orders otherwise.
- (2) Anyone may attend a public appearance unless the Tribunal orders otherwise.

Departing from openness

- (a) an order is necessary to prevent a serious risk to the administration of justice because reasonable alternative measures will not do so; and
- (b) the benefits of the order outweigh the effects on the right to free expression and the transparency of the administration of justice.

(2) If a not public order, non-disclosure order or publication ban is necessary, the Tribunal shall make the order that affects openness the least while achieving the objective.

Capacity proceedings

13.4 In applying Rule 13.3 to a request for a not public order, non-disclosure order or publication ban in a capacity proceeding, a panel shall consider:

- (a) that a central issue in capacity proceedings is the licensee's health;
- (b) the nature and impact on the public of any of the licensee's actions that led to the proceeding;
- (c) any stigma related to the nature of the licensee's health issues;
- (d) the possible impact of disclosure on the licensee's or others' health; and
- (e) any other relevant factor.

Children and sexual misconduct complainants

13.5 A not public order, non-disclosure order or publication ban shall be made to ensure that the identities of children and persons who allege sexual assault or misconduct are not made public, except where an adult who alleges sexual assault or misconduct requests otherwise.

Effect of non-disclosure order

13.8 (1) When there is a non-disclosure order, no one other than the licensee or licence applicant and the parties' representatives may receive or view the transcript, except that witnesses may view the transcript of their own testimony.

(2) No one may disclose what occurred during an appearance subject to a non-disclosure order to anyone other than the parties or their representatives. No one who has become aware of a not public document as a result of attending the appearance may disclose its contents to anyone other than the parties or their representatives.

Effect of publication ban

13.9 (1) When a publication ban has been made, the hearing and Tribunal file remain open to the public.

(2) No one may publish in any document or broadcast or transmit in any way information or documents subject to a publication ban.

(3) The Tribunal and the court reporting service that transcribes the proceeding shall include a written notice of a publication ban on documents and transcripts to which it applies.

Effect of order

13.10 No order under this part prevents Tribunal staff or panelists from accessing materials in the Tribunal's file or attending an appearance.

RULE 14: ORDERS AND REASONS

Orders

Formal order

- 14.4 (1) Any party may prepare a draft of a formal order.
- (2) A formal order shall be in Form 34-38 as appropriate.

RULE 15: COSTS

Power to award costs

- 15.1 (1) Costs may only be awarded against the Law Society,

  - (b) in a proceeding not mentioned in clause (a), where the Law Society caused costs to be incurred without reasonable cause or to be wasted by undue delay, negligence or other default.
- (2) Costs may be awarded against the licensee or licence applicant,

- (a) the applicant has an order against him or her for costs in the same or another proceeding under the Act that remains unpaid in whole or in part;
  - (b) in the case of a reinstatement or terms dispute proceeding, there is good reason to believe that the proceeding is without merit and the applicant has insufficient assets in Ontario to pay an order for costs against him or her if an order were to be made; or

- (c) in the case of a licensing or restoration proceeding, there is good reason to believe that the applicant has insufficient assets in Ontario to pay an order for costs against him or her if an order were to be made.

(3) Unless the Tribunal orders otherwise, the applicant against whom an order for security for costs has been made may not, until the security has been given, take any step in the proceeding.

(4) Where the applicant defaults in giving the security required by an order for security for costs, on the motion of the Society, an order may be made dismissing the proceeding.

RULE 16: REPRIMANDS

Administration of reprimands

- 16.1 (1) A reprimand shall be administered either orally at a hearing open to the public or in writing.
- (2) A written reprimand is part of the record of the proceeding.
- (3) A reprimand may be administered by any panelist on the panel that ordered the reprimand.

Appeals and reprimands

- 16.2 The administration of a reprimand does not affect the right to appeal the order or the arguments that can be raised on appeal.

RULE 17: APPEALS

Orders that may be appealed

- 17.1 (1) Sections 49.32 and 49.33 of the Act set out when an appeal of a final order may be started.

Deadline for appeal

- 17.2 (1) To start an appeal, the appellant must file a notice of appeal (Form 14 or 15) and information sheet (Form 24 or 25) within 30 days of the date of the final order in the Hearing Division proceeding appealed from. After that, an appeal may be started only with the written consent of the respondent to the appeal or with leave.

(2) The motion record for a motion to extend the time to appeal must include a draft notice of appeal.

(3) No later than 10 days after filing the notice of appeal, the appellant must serve and file written confirmation from the court reporting service that all transcripts of the proceeding under appeal not already filed in the Hearing Division, have been ordered.

17.3 The appellant must perfect the appeal within 60 days of filing the notice of appeal or 60 days from the panel giving its reasons for the final order, whichever comes last. An appeal is perfected by serving and filing the appellant's appeal book, factum, book of authorities and any transcripts not filed in the Hearing Division proceeding.

If the appellant to cross-appeal has advised of a desire to pursue a cross-appeal, a proceeding management conference shall be scheduled to set a timeline for the hearing of the cross-appeal.

(5) The Tribunal may reinstate an appeal or cross-appeal that was deemed withdrawn.

Commented [A9]: This change updates 17.4 so that the actions taken to deem an appeal withdrawn are all based off of the deadline (either Rule 17.3 or as otherwise set by an adjudicator) and not tied to the date the appeal was filed.

The change is recommended based on recent experience with implementing the Rule.

Deadline for respondent's materials if no cross-appeal filed

- 17.5 If the respondent has not filed a cross-appeal, the respondent must serve and file the respondent's appeal book, factum and book of authorities no later than 14 days before the appeal hearing.

(2) The appellant must file an affidavit or affidavits that set out the factual basis for the appeal no later than 45 days after the filing of the Notice of Administrative Suspension Order Appeal.

(3) Cross-examination on the affidavits and any reply evidence will take place orally at the appeal hearing, unless otherwise ordered.

(4) No facts need be filed prior to the hearing, unless otherwise ordered.

Introduction

Statistics are critical to understanding the work of the Law Society Tribunal. By recording, analyzing and sharing data, we can identify areas for improvement, inform the continual evolution of our processes and policies, assist Convocation in making policy decisions, and be transparent with the public about the work we do.

This report provides operational statistics during a period where the Tribunal continued to operate remotely during COVID-19.

In this quarter, the Tribunal saw an increase in hearings held due to the result of rescheduled hearings that were previously cancelled due to COVID-19.

Volume

Files Opened

A Tribunal file is opened when an applicant files a notice of application, notice of referral for hearing, notice of motion for an interlocutory suspension or restriction or notice of appeal with the Tribunal.

Type of file	Lawyer	Paralegal	Total
Regular	16	9	25
Summary	7	8	15
Appeal	5	2	7

Unlike non-summary files, summary hearings tend to be brief, and are always heard by a single adjudicator.

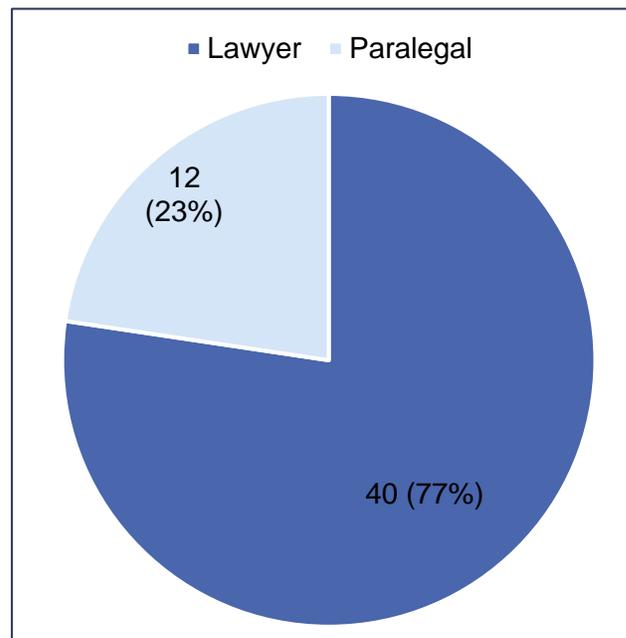

There has been an increase with the number of files opened compared to quarter three of 2020, when there were 32 files opened. There was also an increase in files opened compared to the third quarter of last year, representing a 38% increase in files that were opened in this quarter.

There has been an increase in the number of paralegal licence type related cases opened in the fourth quarter compared to previous quarters of this year.

Files Closed

The Tribunal closes a file after the final order is issued, final reasons are published, or if the matter is withdrawn, abandoned or deemed abandoned.

Type of file	Lawyer	Paralegal	Total
Regular	20	5	25
Summary	4	3	7
Appeal	1	0	1

There has been a slight decrease in the number of files closed in this quarter compared to last quarter, however, there was an increase of 18% when compared to the fourth quarter of 2019.

Caseload

219 files (173 lawyer and 46 paralegal files) were open at the end of the fourth quarter of 2020 compared to 205 at the end of the previous quarter and 173 at the end of the quarter of 2019.

Hearings

Oral hearing days (either in-person or electronic) that are more than three hours are considered a full hearing day and those that conclude within three hours are considered a half hearing day.

Written hearings are conducted by written submissions, with the panel making its decision based on the documents without an in-person or electronic hearing. There were 27 written hearings this quarter compared to 7 last quarter and 19 in the fourth quarter of 2019.

The increase in hearing days used can be attributed to the fact that most hearings were rescheduled in the third quarter and held during this quarter.

---

The average number of hearing days used per file closed in this quarter was 1.7 days.

Timeliness

Proceedings Milestones

Tribunal proceedings pass most or all of the following milestones, though not always in the order listed below.

Averages are based on files that do pass the corresponding milestone.

The Law Society of Ontario requires approval from the Proceedings Authorization Committee (PAC) to commence certain proceedings at the Tribunal. Conduct, capacity, non-compliance and interlocutory suspension or restriction motions require PAC approval.

Of the 33 files closed in this quarter 25 files were authorized by PAC.

Orders and Reasons

Orders

There are many types of orders that the Tribunal may make during a proceeding. Merits orders decide an application on its merits (for example, whether an interlocutory suspension is granted or whether a licensee has engaged in misconduct and will be subject to penalty) and are often accompanied by reasons.

The panel may reserve its decision at the end of a hearing or may provide its decision at the hearing with oral reasons given on the record or with written reasons to follow.

The Tribunal issued 64 orders this quarter, 35 of which were merits only or merits and costs orders while the remaining 29 were orders pertaining to a motion, public access or costs only. This is an increase from last quarter and in keeping with the number of overall orders issued in 2019 for the same period. However, there is a 30% increase in merits or disposition orders from the same period last year, which may be a result of the increased hearings held during this reporting period.

Reasons

At the end of an oral hearing, or when the last submissions are received in a written hearing, the panel can begin the process of writing reasons. The Tribunal publishes written reasons on CanLII, usually within a week of their delivery to the parties.

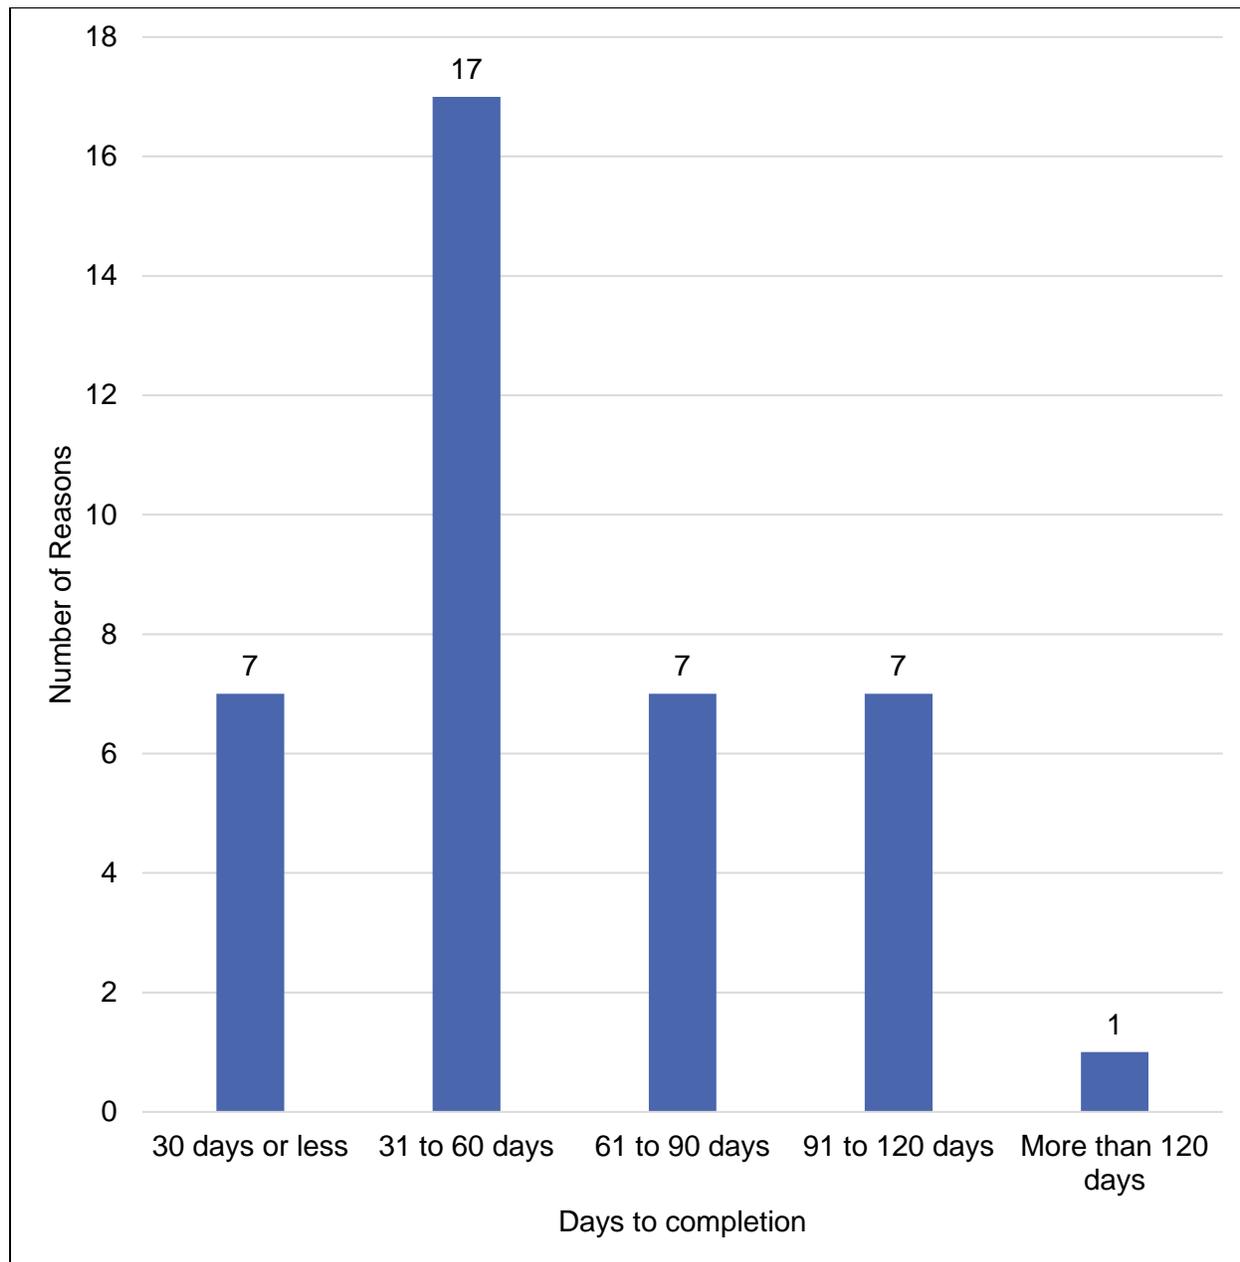

Sometimes the panel delivers oral reasons at the end of the hearing instead of written reasons. When oral reasons are given, the Tribunal also publishes a written version on CanLII.

The Tribunal published a total of 40 reasons this quarter, with 39 written reasons and 1 written version of oral reasons.

Remarks of the Chair

2020 was a year like no other in living memory, but the business of law managed to continue, even if the way we accomplished it felt completely unfamiliar.

Likewise, LAWPRO continued to operate, even though the pandemic impacted us in many ways including closed courts and a real estate market that sprung back to life quickly after a short-lived lull in the spring. As expected, we saw a decline in the number of claims and transaction levies. However, some of what we saw was unexpected such as an increase in the number of lawyers we insure by 2% from the previous year.

Gross written premiums were slightly lower in 2020: $113.9 million, compared to the $114.7 million seen in 2019. Net claims expenses of $100.9 million were above last year's total of $99.4 million. Even as LAWPRO transitioned to work from home and adapted to new processes, we were able to cut general expenses to 10% under budget and 3% below 2019. LAWPRO had sufficient capital available to cover requirements as demonstrated by the Minimum Capital Test (MCT) of 229% at year end, within our preferred range of 210% to 240%.

As the financial statements in the following pages demonstrate, LAWPRO continues to fulfill the mandate given by Convocation more than two decades ago. To do so we navigate a careful balancing act: keeping revenues (i.e., premiums, levies, and investment returns) high enough to be commercially viable and satisfy regulators that the company is financially healthy, while handling claims and carefully controlling premiums to maintain affordability and properly reflect the cost of risk. In doing so, we effectively operate as a not-for-profit entity, while being regulated as a for profit insurance company.

Even with the changes and challenges brought on by the COVID-19 pandemic, we remain financially healthy as we plan for scenarios similar to what we are now experiencing as part of our corporate governance processes and risk management strategies put in place by our Board. As a measure of our success, I am pleased, that for the 20th consecutive year, insurance rating agency AM Best Co. issued LAWPRO an "A" rating for financial strength and "a" issuer credit rating in November of 2020. This independent rating is provided to companies that have an "excellent" ability to meet ongoing insurance obligations and reflects our long-term financial stability.

LAWPRO is steady and secure and we remain ready to pay claims and help our insureds, even in and after the exceptional circumstances we experienced in 2020.

LAWPRO emerged as a separate, commercially run, regulated insurance company out of the legal professional liability insurance crisis that occurred in the late 1980's and early 1990's. At that time, the liability indemnity program was run in-house in the Law Society and the lawyers of Ontario were faced with a $200 million dollar liability shortfall.

In response to this crisis, the Law Society set up the Lawyers' Professional Indemnity Company (now LAWPRO) as a fully regulated insurance company in order to prevent similar circumstances from happening again.

LAWPRO has been remarkably successful in achieving the mandate the Law Society gave it in 1994. It is a success the Benchers who made the decision to set up LAWPRO in the early 1990's can justifiably be proud of. Today, because of their foresight, and the prudent and skilled management of LAWPRO's executive leadership and the thoughtful and accomplished oversight of its largely independent Board of Directors, LAWPRO offers many advantages to the bar including:

- Guaranteed availability of affordable insurance to all lawyer licensees;
- Consistent coverage, terms, and conditions for all;
- Claims prevention efforts and resources;
- Automatic, free Run-off coverage; and
- Company stability.

LAWPRO will continue to serve and support Ontario lawyers in 2021 and beyond as together we tackle the challenges of the COVID-19 pandemic. Good claims service and financial stability not only protects Ontario lawyers, but also indirectly, the public.

Remarks of the President & CEO

My remarks for last year's annual report were written in late March, just a few weeks after the pandemic started. The "incredible events and changes" of those first few weeks (as I then described them) did little to foreshadow the countless ways the COVID-19 pandemic upended our personal and professional lives through the rest of 2020.

Needless to say, the pandemic led to major transformations at LAWPRO. While many activities slowed or stopped in 2020, they did not do so in the world of malpractice claims. We saw some significant impacts on the claims portfolio, some of which we expect will carry into future years in ways we are still trying to understand. For the first time in a long time, LAWPRO saw the number of new claims decrease with 2,768 reported claims, down 11.3% from the 3,121 reported in 2019. Along with the courts being closed we attribute this decrease to less economic activity and work for law firms. But, despite seeing fewer reported claims, total claims costs only decreased by 2.7% (from $76.7m to $74.6m). Interestingly, 2021 Q1 claims reports appear higher than last year. Perhaps we are seeing some catch-up. Only time will tell.

At December 31, we had 46 claims that were directly attributed to COVID-19 related circumstances. While some of these claims saw clients seeking recompense for economic losses they suffered (something we typically see in economic downturns), the majority of pandemic related claims now being reported involve limitation periods and procrastination. Many of these claims are from confusion about the emergency suspension of limitations during the pandemic. We also saw more claims involving the inadequate investigation or discovery of the client's circumstances and more clerical errors. These claims are likely a symptom of virtual client meetings and remote work.

While only one or two of our pandemic related claims have an obvious mental health or wellness aspect to them, we know that many lawyers and firm staff are struggling with the stresses and isolation of remote work. LAWPRO continues to provide major financial support to the Members Assistance Program and I am very proud of the mental health and wellness focused issue of LAWPRO Magazine that we published in early 2020. In the coming months and beyond, we all need to continue to focus on supporting the mental health and wellness of lawyers, law firm staff and their family members.

I am proud to report that LAWPRO continued its commitment to the profession, our communities, employee wellness, and the environment in 2020 – despite impacts of the pandemic. On top of the multiple resources and updates related to the COVID-19 pandemic that we provided to lawyers, LAWPRO became an accredited CPD provider in Ontario and we provided multiple free Continuing Professional Development programs on risks associated with COVID-19, cultural competency, real estate fraud, cybersecurity, and common claims, to name a few.

As we emerge from this pandemic, I expect that many of the changes forced upon us will stay in one form or another, including work from home and the broader use of technology. There is a lesson to be learned here: the legal profession can change and be resilient. Lawyers continued to serve their clients through a once in lifetime upheaval. Necessity was the catalyst for significant change, much of which had been resisted in the past. As we leave the pandemic behind, many of these changes are harbingers of the future of legal services. LAWPRO is working to fully understand how these changes are affecting our insureds and their claims exposures.

The bottom line, after a year of ups and downs and many unexpected challenges, the plans and preparations LAWPRO made for adverse financial scenarios worked as intended. Although the common shares held in our investment portfolio were down $50 million at the end of March, we recovered slightly more than half of that by year end. As well, the majority of our investments are held in relatively stable fixed income products that increased in value over the year. LAWPRO remains financially healthy and continues to meet all regulatory requirements. I thank everyone on the LAWPRO team for stepping up and responding to everything we faced in 2020. I also acknowledge the extra engagement and support that LAWPRO's Board of Directors provided as we navigated the financial and operational changes the company faced.

As we patiently wait for everyone to get vaccinated, we will continue to provide the same level of service we always have. LAWPRO will support lawyers and protect the public through the remainder of the pandemic as we prepare to operate in a post pandemic world.

Primary E&O Program Claims

Insurance can be a source of stability and calm in a storm and a foundation from which to rebuild after a storm has passed.

2020 was an alarming year in an unpredictable world. It often seemed to be a year on pause.

But the legal profession did not stop. The number of insured lawyers in Ontario continued to grow at a steady pace. In 2020, the number of full premium equivalent (FPE) lawyers insured under the LAWPRO primary E&O program increased by over 2% to just over 28,600 FPE lawyers, up from about 27,900 in 2019.

These lawyers found innovative ways to work and advocate for their clients during a global pandemic and LAWPRO continued alongside them to provide the stability and security they expect.

Fewer claims, but likely not for long

For the first time in recent years, the number of new claims decreased slightly in 2020. Widespread and long-lasting health and safety restrictions led to reduced economic activity and, for many, a reduction in legal activity. Less legal work meant fewer claims.

In 2020, LAWPRO dealt with 2,768 reported claims, a decrease of 11.3% from the 3,121 reported in 2019. Claims frequency was down slightly to 93 claims per thousand lawyers, as compared to 106 claims per thousand lawyers last year.

Litigation-related claims showed a particularly substantial decline, largely due to the temporary court closures and delays associated with implementing virtual court access.

However, with the increase in technological availability and competency, along with the gradual re-opening of Ontario's economy and in-person legal proceedings, LAWPRO expects this temporary decrease in claims to reverse. LAWPRO anticipates deferred activity and claims from 2020 to show up in subsequent years.

Despite seeing approximately 11.3% fewer claims in 2020, total claims costs only decreased by 2.7% (from $76.7m to $74.6m). Coupled with a reduction in premiums and levies in 2020, this led to financial impacts discussed further below.

The types of claims we saw, and didn't see

As in past years, the largest percentage of reported claims were related to real estate (27%) and litigation (24%). However, the number of real estate-related claims decreased to 609 in 2020, from 648 the previous year. Litigation-related claims had an even larger decrease to 549 in 2020, from 822 the previous year.

This reduction in litigation and real estate-related claims (two areas particularly affected by closures due to the pandemic) account for most of the decline in new claims for 2020. Claims in the family and criminal areas were also down, while labour/employment and wills/estates claims were up.

Meeting challenges, closing claims

Like others, LAWPRO's operations were disrupted by the pandemic. But LAWPRO's staff and counsel quickly rose to these challenges. Despite the restrictions imposed throughout much of the year by stay-at-home orders and other health and safety requirements, LAWPRO closed 3% more files in 2020 than in 2019. Of these files, 88% of claims were closed without any indemnity payment, an increase from 86% in 2019.

LAWPRO's claims management philosophy is to resolve claims quickly in situations where there is liability, defend vigorously if the claim has no merit, and avoid economic settlements.

In 2020, LAWPRO won two of four matters brought to trial and in which a decision was rendered, succeeded in the one appeal we argued, and won 7 of 13 summary judgment motions at first instance.

Number of claims reported with a value greater than $100,000***

*As at December 31, 2020

Causes of loss

The investigation of claims can take up to a year or more after an initial report. For this reason, LAWPRO is cautious when interpreting short term fluctuations in the cause-of-loss data. This is particularly important for a year as anomalous as 2020.

In 2020, inadequate investigation and communications errors tied – at 609 each – for the cause of the highest number of claims followed by time management and errors of law.

There were 609 communication-related claims in 2020, a decrease from 724 the previous year. Similarly, there were 309 time management-related claims in 2020 compared with 494 the previous year. The reduction in time management-related claims was a direct result of the closing of the courts and follows the long-term trends we have observed since 2011, when 570 time management-related errors were reported. The previous highs and subsequent reduction in time management errors were caused by the introduction of Rule 48, which led to a temporary increase in administrative dismissals and a corresponding temporary increase in time management claims.

Coverage and Insurance Options

Putting insureds first

In 2020, LAWPRO maintained a base premium of $2,950. Because of extraordinary circumstances, LAWPRO offered premium deferrals for part of the year.

Cost-cutting measures, including a wage and hiring freeze and a reduction in operational expenses, were implemented in order to prudently respond to budgetary pressures.

One of the hallmarks of the LAWPRO E&O insurance program is its flexibility. Lawyers have a number of options to tailor their insurance coverage to their specific needs – often with the added benefit of reducing the actual premium payable below the base premium level. The number of lawyers availing themselves of these options continues to increase, as indicated in Figure 3.

Policy changes

To reflect changing events and the evolving understanding of claims and lawyer practices, the primary policy is updated annually. For 2020, changes included a refinement of the definitions under the policy for “spouse,” “dishonest conduct,” and the “circumstances” in which notice of a claim or potential claim must be provided.

Starting in the 2021 policy year, Innocent Party coverage will be included in the base coverage and required for all insureds. Accordingly, the base premium for 2021 is $3,000. The inclusion of Innocent Party coverage will reduce the total premiums paid by more than 70% of Ontario lawyers by $75. Roughly 30% of Ontario lawyers will see their annual premium increase by $25 or $50 because of this change.

Notable reduction in levies collected

In addition to the modest reduction in premiums collected in 2020, there was a more notable reduction in transaction levies, which are particularly vulnerable to market forces. These levies reflect the higher risk of claims associated with real estate and civil litigation and impose per-transaction surcharges in those areas. The reduction in activity within these areas led to a substantial reduction in collected levies and a budgetary shortfall for LAWPRO.

Real estate and litigation continue to be the costliest areas of law with respect to claims. The use of levies to impose a fair distribution of claims costs among the profession helps LAWPRO to use risk-rating levers to benefit the program and insureds.

Coverage for new lawyers and those retiring

For new or retiring lawyers, LAWPRO offers reduced premiums to address their reduced risk profiles. New lawyers see fewer claims than those with more experience, which may be partly due to new calls often having less responsibility over various files than their senior colleagues. LAWPRO responds to the reduced risk inherent in new calls by providing premium discounts to new lawyers with less than four years of practice. This discount ranges from 50% of base premium (for lawyers with less than one full year in practice) to 20% of base premium (for lawyers with between three and four years in practice).

For lawyers that are retiring or leaving private practice and provide notice of such, LAWPRO offers Run-Off coverage of $250,000 per claim and in the aggregate, at no charge. Additional coverage options are available for lawyers who need more protection beyond that amount.

Excess Insurance

Since it was established in 1997, LAWPRO's optional Excess insurance program has posted consistent annual growth in revenues and numbers of law firms (and lawyers) insured under the program. An impressive 1,557 firms received their excess insurance from LAWPRO as at the end of 2020, 211 of which chose the maximum $9 million limit option.

With 121 new firms opting to buy excess coverage from LAWPRO, our client base saw approximately 12% growth from the previous year. The Company's retention rate on excess business of 92% is evidence that this program meets the needs of the small and medium-sized firms of fewer than 50 lawyers that it is designed to serve.

LAWPRO's Excess program insures approximately 15% of the lawyers employed in firms of 50 or fewer lawyers. Prudent underwriting and solid claims management have helped ensure that the Excess program is a successful line of business for LAWPRO.

The TitlePLUS Program

The TitlePLUS program is the only wholly Canadian-owned title insurance program available in Canada. It is underwritten by LAWPRO and protects not only Canadian homeowners and lenders, but also lawyers through included legal services coverage which covers errors and omissions made by the lawyer for the entire transaction, excluding properties in Quebec and OwnerEXPRESS policies.

Service

Working from home; working for insureds

LAWPRO's Underwriting & Customer Service department is the point of contact for licensees seeking to renew, change, or inquire about their insurance options, including the primary policy. A new account is established soon after a lawyer is called to the Ontario bar, and existing accounts are adjusted as lawyers move their practice or move out of private practice entirely.

This year, customer service saw a 4% increase in correspondence volume. At the same time, health and safety restrictions meant this correspondence, and most company operations, had to be carried out remotely. Like much of the Ontario workforce, many staff members had to adapt to more flexible work hours to accommodate care-giving responsibilities.

Nevertheless, the customer service team adapted quickly and was able to sustain response times and meet client needs, delivering service levels throughout the year that were on par with previous years.

LAWPRO takes its commitment to customer service seriously. Consisting of approximately 25 team members, the department is responsible for maintaining accurate records for all insureds; policy drafting; creation of program guides, forms, and other explanatory materials; underwriting optional coverages; processing filings; and, answering questions from licensees.

repairs

When LAWPRO is quickly alerted to potential claims, we are often able to rectify the problem and prevent loss and further lawsuits from arising. Our counsel know how to best address issues such as failure to comply with strict notice requirements, failure to discover unknown defendants within the limitation period, and the threat of dismissal on account of delay.

Here are a few examples of cases where LAWPRO successfully repaired potential losses in 2020.

1. The fast and the curious: Delayed discoverability of defendants

It's hard to sue someone when you don't know they exist. Unfortunately, the discoverability doctrine sometimes requires lawyers to not only dig a little deeper and ask whether there may be additional defendants in a given action, but do it fast before potential limitation periods expire.

In this case, the Plaintiff had been struck by the First Defendant's vehicle while using a crosswalk.

The Plaintiff retained a Lawyer and filed a cause of action one month before the expiration of the relevant limitation period. However, upon receiving the First Defendant's pleadings, the Plaintiff and their Lawyer became aware that the First Defendant claimed that a second vehicle, driven by a Second Defendant, had stopped in the middle of the intersection at the time of the accident, causing the First Defendant to swerve into the Plaintiff.

The Plaintiff and their Lawyer had previously been unaware of the existence of this Second Defendant. The redacted police report initially made available to them had not made this clear, although an unredacted report would later confirm the involvement of the Second Defendant.

The Plaintiff moved to have the Second Defendant added to the proceedings.

However, the Second Defendant claimed they could no longer be added to the proceedings as the limitation period had expired. The Second Defendant took the position that their own potential liability was reasonably discoverable by the Plaintiff more than two years prior.

LAWPRO assisted the Plaintiff in successfully arguing that the redacted police report was not sufficiently clear and could not have alerted the Plaintiff to the existence of a Second Defendant. The redacted report was, in parts, illegible, and in other parts, confusingly drafted. There was no additional evidence suggesting the involvement of the Second Defendant available to the Plaintiff, and it was therefore not reasonable to have expected the Plaintiff to discover the Second Defendant prior to receiving the pleadings of the First Defendant.

The limitation period had not expired, and the claim against both Defendants was allowed to proceed.

2. The fairest claim of all: Mirror claims and unreasonable delay

Unreasonable delay or abandonment of a cause of action will generally lead to an order for dismissal. But dismissing a claim while allowing a mirror-like counterclaim to proceed can have unfair consequences.

That was the circumstance in this case where the Plaintiff entered into an Agreement of Purchase and Sale involving a $50,000 deposit. The Agreement required the Plaintiff to obtain financing. When they were unable to do so, the Plaintiff terminated the Agreement.

The Plaintiff then commenced a proceeding for recovery of the deposit and additional damages. In response, the Defendant counterclaimed for damages and breach of contract. Then, no action was taken on either side for an extended period of time.

Four years later, the Plaintiff acquired new counsel. One year after that, the Defendant acquired new counsel and the Plaintiff filed a motion in the proceeding to prevent an administrative dismissal. At that time, a Master ordered that the case not be dismissed, a litigation timetable be set, and a trial be scheduled within approximately one year.

Again, no immediate action was taken by the Plaintiff. The following year, the Defendant sought to have the Plaintiff's claim dismissed for delay or, in the alternative for summary judgment to be rendered.

The motion judge found that the action satisfied all the relevant Reid criteria and dismissed the Plaintiff's action for delay. However, the motion judge did not address the Defendant's Counterclaim and, therefore, the Counterclaim continued.

The Plaintiff appealed on the grounds that the motion judge should not have dismissed the claim for delay, but should have instead resolved the claims summarily on the merits. Further, the Plaintiff claimed it was unjust for the motion judge to dismiss their Claim while the Defendant's mirror Counterclaim continued.

LAWPRO successfully assisted the Plaintiff in appealing the dismissal of the action. The appeal court agreed that, although the motion judge correctly applied the test, and their decision would normally be subject to deference, this particular context led to an unjust result. Since the Counterclaim dealt with the same facts and issues as the Claim, allowing one to continue and not the other did not save judicial time or resources and was not in the interests of justice. The matter was remitted to the Superior Court for determination.

3. Authority issues: Keeping courts in the loop

Lawyers act as officers of the court and are obligated to present an accurate account of relevant law to the presiding judge. But does this mean a lawyer is obligated to provide continuing updates on new case law developments after a hearing ends?

That question arose in this case where the Lawyer acted for an Applicant seeking summary judgment in an estates dispute. After the motion was heard, but before judgment was rendered, new, on-point authority was rendered by the Court of Appeal that undermined the Lawyer's position in the motion. The Lawyer did not bring this new authority to the court's attention while judgment was under reserve.

The court found that the Lawyer's failure to immediately bring new relevant authority to their attention while the judgment was under reserve breached the Lawyer's duty to the court, and therefore awarded substantial indemnity costs against the Lawyer's client. This led to the Client refusing to pay the Lawyer's fees, for which the Lawyer sued.

Meanwhile, the underlying matter for which the costs judgment was awarded was settled by the parties, making an appeal of the summary judgment application moot. Nevertheless, the Lawyer sought leave to intervene in the matter and have an appeal heard despite its mootness. It was the Lawyer's position that the costs award was wrongly decided and had an adverse impact on the Lawyer's reputation as well as the standards expected of the rest of the profession.

LAWPRO supported the Lawyer in their intervention and application for leave to appeal, and arranged for an amicus curiae to argue against the Lawyer's position in the absence of other interested parties.

The court found that this was an appropriate circumstance to depart from the doctrine of mootness and grant leave to appeal. The Lawyer had a meaningful interest in the outcome of the appeal, as their fee dispute with their client relied substantially on whether the Lawyer's alleged error warranted the adverse costs award. The appeal was allowed.

4. Notionally "notable" notices: Complying with notification requirements

Combining distinct statutory obligations into a single document, when not expressly authorized, can lead to avoidable frustrations and disputes. This happened to a Lawyer whose franchisee client encountered financial problems and defaulted on a bank loan made for the acquisition of the franchise.

The franchisee issued a Third Party Notice to the franchisor, claiming damages and rescission of the franchise agreement. The Arthur Wishart Act (Franchise Disclosure), required notice of such a rescission of the franchise agreement to be delivered in writing. However, the franchisee's Lawyer opted to provide such notice within the pleadings of the Third Party Notice, rather than as a separate written notice.

The franchisor claimed that using the Third Party Notice to also satisfy the rescission notice requirements did not comply with the Act, and therefore notice was not provided within the time period allotted. As such, rescission could not be claimed under the Act.

The franchisee then brought their Lawyer into the proceedings in the Lawyer's personal capacity as an additional third party potentially liable for negligence for failing to comply with the terms of the Act. With both the franchisor and franchisee claiming that the Third Party Notice did not meet the requirements under the Act.

The motion judge found that a pleading could not constitute notice under the Act, and therefore the rescission claim could not proceed. The Lawyer appealed.

The appeal court found that, although the use of a Third Party Notice to satisfy the rescission notice requirements of the Arthur Wishart Act was irregular and not ideal, the express language of the Act only required the notice to be in writing and delivered within a certain period. The Third Party Notice satisfied these requirements. Therefore, the rescission claim could proceed and there was no potential claim for negligence against the Lawyer.

5. Overruling the rule in Medhurst: Notice requirements in condo disputes

Requiring strict adherence to statutory provisions can sometimes have unintended outcomes that undermine the purpose of those very provisions. When binding precedent leads to such perverse outcomes, it's sometimes necessary to seek the overturning of that precedent.

In this case, a condominium Corporation issued a notice of claim against various Defendants allegedly responsible for defects in the construction of the condominium. The Condominium Act required that notice of such an action be provided to the corporation's owners prior to commencing the action.

In this case, the condominium Corporation provided notice to the owners after the notice of action was issued but before filing the statement of claim. The Defendants, relying on the binding ONCA authority of Medhurst, argued that this failed to comply with the Act's notice requirements and the action was therefore a nullity.

The Corporation argued that the notice provided did comply with the statutory requirements, or, in the further alternative, failure of providing such notice did not render the action a nullity.

A summary judge found in favour of the Corporation on the basis that sufficient notice was provided or, in the alternative, notice was not required in these circumstances.

The Defendants appealed.

LAWPRO assisted the condominium Corporation in seeking a five-judge panel at the Court of Appeal and successfully argued that Medhurst should be overturned. The Court found that Supreme Court of Canada jurisprudence released subsequent to Medhurst attenuated the result of that case and, further, that the decision in Medhurst resulted in unjust consequences, as it allowed defendants to undermine the interests of the Corporation's owners by relying on a provision that was intended to protect those owners.

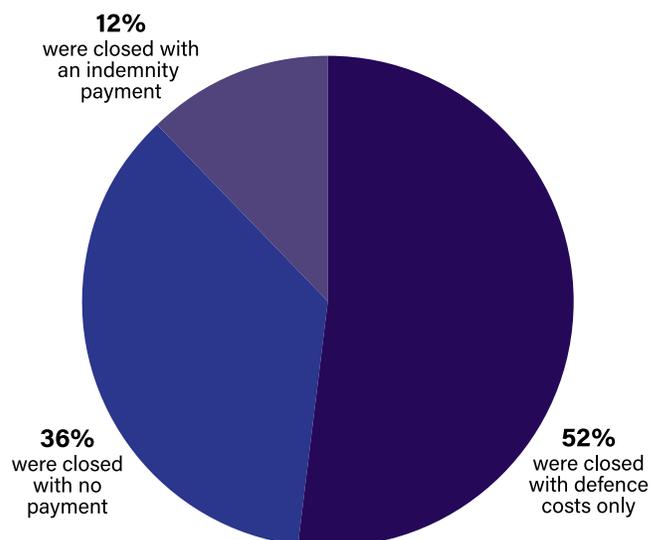

Failure to comply with the notice requirements under the Act was found to not automatically render the action a nullity, and the appeal was dismissed.

Small fixes now prevent big problems later

Every year, LAWPRO resolves potential claims before they become actual claims. In 2019, 86% of claims were closed without any indemnity payment, and 35% of claims were closed without any defence costs whatsoever.

Immediately notifying LAWPRO of potential errors or omissions means steps can be taken to resolve the situation before it develops into a malpractice claim. If you make an error, or believe you could be accused of making an error down the road, don't try to resolve the problem on your own. A call to LAWPRO means we can provide expedient and experienced advice and assistance.

Despite any attempts to resolve claims without litigation, sometimes court is inevitable. Every year, LAWPRO steps in to defend licensees from unwarranted lawsuits and accusations.

Here are a few examples of defences successfully advanced by LAWPRO in 2020 on behalf of insureds.

Contract law – Claims against alleged partners of debtors

Partners in a legal firm can be held liable for the business debts incurred by other partners as part of the partnership. In some circumstances, it may be unclear whether lawyers are practising in partnership, or as sole practitioners in “association” with one another.

That was the situation in this case, where a solicitor Debtor had practised in association with a Litigation Firm for many years, sharing things like office space and holiday parties, and whose name was included in the name of the litigation firm.

The Debtor, however, kept separate finances and files and was not included in the Litigation Firm’s partnership agreement.

The Debtor incurred a substantial amount of business debt from multiple parties and eventually defaulted on it. The Creditors sought judgment against the Litigation Firm and its Partners as being liable for the amounts owing by the Debtor.

The Partners argued that the Debtor was not part of their firm, as the Debtor kept separate finances with a different banking institution, did not work with the Litigation Firm on business matters, and was not included in the Partnership Agreement, which expressly stated that the Debtor was not defined as a founding partner of the Litigation Firm.

The Creditors argued that the Debtor's name was included in the name of the Litigation Firm, that the Debtor was listed as a partner and member of the Litigation Firm in multiple online summaries of the Litigation Firm, and the Debtor was held out as a partner either explicitly or implicitly on multiple occasions. In the alternative, the Creditors argued that the Partners were responsible for the debts pursuant to the Partnership Act, since the Debtor was held out as a Partner and the Creditors relied on that representation when advancing loans to the Debtor.

The court found that the Debtor was not a partner in the Litigation Firm, as the parties practised independently and the Debtor was not included in the Partnership Agreement. Further, even if the Debtor was held out as a Partner, the Creditors could not prove that they relied on that alleged relationship when advancing funds to the Debtor, and therefore the Litigation Firm and its Partners could not be held liable for the unpaid debts. The claim against the Litigation Firm and its Partners was dismissed.

Criminal law – Ineffective representation and collateral attacks

When alleging that counsel's negligence led to a criminal conviction, the appropriate forum for litigating such a claim is an appeal of the conviction itself. Pursuing a separate claim of negligence after losing an appeal case is a collateral attack on the conviction and is impermissible.

In this case, Lawyers represented the Plaintiffs in defending a proceeding before the Ontario Securities Commission. The defence was unsuccessful, and the OSC found the Plaintiffs guilty of securities fraud.

The Plaintiffs appealed the OSC's decision, alleging ineffective representation by counsel. The Lawyers were granted intervenor status and provided evidence in the appeal to dispute the Plaintiffs' arguments about ineffective representation. The appeal was dismissed.

Before the appeal was even argued, however, the Plaintiffs commenced this civil action against the Lawyers for professional negligence. After the appeal was dismissed, the Lawyers moved to also have the civil action dismissed as a collateral attack on the conviction.

The motion judge dismissed the Plaintiffs' claims against the Lawyers, as the negligence allegations were res judicata. The Plaintiffs appealed.

LAWPRO successfully assisted the Lawyers in having the appeal dismissed. The appeal court agreed that the civil claim was as a collateral attack on the conviction. The proper forum for arguing ineffective representation is an appeal of the conviction itself, which the Plaintiffs had already unsuccessfully pursued. A civil claim was therefore inappropriate.

Corporate law – Conflicts of interest

Circumstances will sometimes arise where lawyers find themselves asked to represent multiple sides in a transaction; or, alternatively, representing one side before later representing another. These situations place the lawyer in a conflict of interest and should be avoided unless all parties agree to the situation and all ethical rules are complied with.

This case involved the sale of a medical equipment distribution business. The Plaintiff owned both the distribution business and a manufacturing counterpart for many years before selling the distribution arm to an American corporation. The Plaintiff maintained ownership of the manufacturing arm and entered into a supply agreement with the American Purchaser. The Plaintiff's In-House Lawyer represented the Plaintiff in this transaction.

After the transaction was completed, the Plaintiff's In-House Lawyer took a position with the American Purchaser.

The supply agreement was unsuccessful, as the Purchaser failed to satisfy many of the terms of the Agreement, including minimum purchase amounts. The Plaintiff sued the Purchaser in response. This claim was brought to arbitration, where the Plaintiff was represented by the Defendant Law Firm. In this arbitration, the In-House Lawyer was part of the Purchaser's legal team.

The arbitration was settled, and a new supply agreement was made between the Plaintiff and the Purchaser. Unfortunately, this new agreement led to further struggles for the Plaintiff's business, and the Plaintiff was eventually forced to wind down the business.

By this point, the former In-House Lawyer was no longer working with the American Purchaser, but was now practising with the Defendant Law Firm. This put both the Defendant Law Firm and the former In-House Lawyer in a conflict of interest with respect to the ongoing dispute between the Plaintiff and the Purchaser, as the former In-House Lawyer had formerly worked with both parties on matters central to their dispute. The Plaintiff had never provided informed consent to the Defendant Law Firm with respect to this conflict of interest.

The Plaintiff sued the Defendant Law Firm and the former In-House Lawyer for breach of fiduciary duty. The Plaintiff alleged that had they known about the former In-House Lawyer's conflict, they never would have agreed to the arbitration settlement and would have avoided subsequent business losses.

The court found that both the Defendant Law Firm and the former In-House Lawyer had breached their fiduciary duties to the Plaintiff, as the actions of the former In-House Lawyer constituted a conflict of interest to which the Plaintiff never provided consent.

However, the court also found that this breach of duty was not causative of the business failure, nor could the Plaintiff connect any actual business losses to this breach. Therefore, the court only awarded nominal damages to the Plaintiff in the amount of $2,000.

Tort law – Negligent representation

Unsuccessful clients can sometimes direct follow-up lawsuits to their former counsel, regardless of the merits of such claims.

In this case, the Plaintiffs had been sued by their former employer, who alleged the Plaintiffs had stolen confidential and proprietary information. In response, the Plaintiffs retained the Defendant Lawyers and pursued an aggressive litigation strategy in hopes of motivating their former employer to settle. The strategy was unsuccessful, and the Plaintiffs were found liable to their former employer.

The Plaintiffs then retained new counsel and sued the Defendant Lawyers, alleging professional negligence in the conduct of their unsuccessful litigation strategy.

The trial judge found in favour of the Defendant Lawyers and dismissed the claim. The Plaintiffs appealed.

LAWPRO successfully assisted the Defendant Lawyers in defending the appeal. The court agreed that the Defendant Lawyers took steps to communicate all relevant information and advice to the Plaintiffs, who considered the information and provided instructions to the Defendant Lawyers to pursue a specific course of action. The Plaintiffs were advised of the risks associated with the litigation, and the Defendant Lawyers were not professionally negligent.

Real estate law – No duty of care to opposing parties

This case arose in the context of a failed real estate transaction. The Plaintiff agreed to purchase a particular property from the Vendors. After signing the Agreement of Purchase and Sale, the Plaintiff assigned their rights in the Agreement to the Defendant Purchaser. The Vendors then failed to close the transaction and subsequently sold the property to alternate buyers. The Defendant Purchaser responded with an action against the Vendors for specific performance.

The Plaintiff then sued the Defendant Purchaser as well as the Defendant Purchaser's Lawyer for failing to inform the Plaintiff of the failure to close the transaction. Specifically, the Plaintiff alleged that the Lawyer was negligent in allowing the Defendant Purchaser to breach the assignment agreement.

The Lawyer sought a dismissal of the Plaintiff's claims against them as disclosing no cause of action.

LAWPRO successfully assisted the Lawyer in having the claim against them dismissed. The court agreed that the Plaintiff was always adverse in interest to the Lawyer's client, both before and after signing the Assignment Agreement. As well, the Plaintiff did not allege that it placed any reliance on the Lawyer.

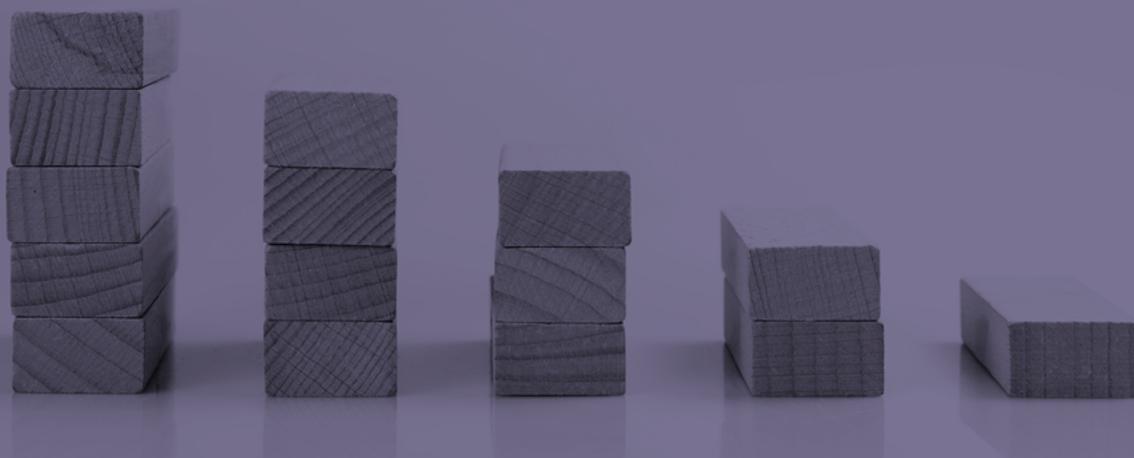

Further, the only evidence of negligence advanced by the Plaintiff was that the Lawyer had made a false statement in pleadings filed in other proceedings against the Vendors. The court found that this could not be used against the Lawyer as the statement was subject to the doctrine of absolute immunity.

Therefore, the Lawyer had no duty of care to the Plaintiff, there was no evidence of negligence or misconduct, and the claim was dismissed as disclosing no cause of action and an abuse of process.

COVID-19 Articles and Resources

The disruptions resulting from the COVID-19 virus caused uncertainty for many lawyers as they attempted to run their practices remotely while continuing to provide professional services to their clients. This new page on practicepro.ca offered help with virtual meetings, understanding e-signatures, working from home tech tips, and cyber security advice.

Lawyers, particularly litigators, had to keep up with emergency changes to court rules and limitation periods. Articles and alerts kept lawyers informed of changes to Ontario and federal limitation periods and court procedures, and an article with tips for calculating limitation periods helped ensure new deadlines would not be missed. For real estate lawyers, the Planning Act emergency period suspension calculator helped navigate the new timelines for Planning Act matters. Wills and estates lawyers were advised on how to reduce the risk of claims when virtually witnessing wills and powers of attorney.

These comments should be read in conjunction with the corresponding audited financial statements, including the accompanying notes.

Financial highlights

Statement of profit or loss

During 2020 the Company generated a profit of $21.0 million, an increase in earnings of $16.2 million over 2019, and experienced a comprehensive loss of $1.7 million compared to $17.8 million comprehensive income during the prior year.

Premiums

Gross premium written decreased by $0.9 million to $113.9 million, due to lower transaction levies collected during the pandemic in 2020. Premiums earned, net of reinsurance ceded, decreased by $0.8 million to $106.8 million in 2020. Premiums from the mandatory Ontario errors and omissions ("E&O") insurance program were $0.9 million lower than 2019 results. The optional excess E&O insurance program remained steady in the year, while TitlePLUS premiums were $0.1 million higher than 2019 results.

Net claims incurred

Incurred claims in 2020, net of reinsurance recoveries, was $1.5 million higher than in 2019. Due to a decline in market interest yields in 2020, discounted actuarial reserves were increased by $14.1 million compared to an increase of $4.4 million in 2019. The impact of discounting was partially offset by a $11.2 million net reduction in the E&O program's reserves due to favourable development of prior Fund Years' loss experience (compared to a reduction of $29.3 million in 2019).

Reinsurance

Similar to recent years, the Company purchased two layers of excess-of-loss clash reinsurance coverage, which limits its exposure to one or more large aggregations of multiple claims arising from the same proximate cause. Furthermore, the Company maintained its 10% retention in the optional excess E&O program, whereas prior to 2011 the program was fully reinsured. The high level of reinsurance significantly mitigates exposure to the Company from claims in this program.

General expenses

LAWPRO's general expenses in 2020 were $0.8 million lower than 2019, and $2.3 million lower than its annual budget, primarily due to savings in salaries and benefits related expenses ($0.8 million savings compared with 2019, and $1.9 million savings compared with budget).

Commissions earned

The Company earned reinsurance commissions of $1.5 million on premium ceded in respect of its 2020 optional excess E&O insurance program, a similar result to 2019. In addition, the Company also incurred a slight profit commission expense (less than $0.1 million) for unfavourable claims development on the quota share reinsurance arrangements that it had prior to January 1, 2003, compared to a slight profit commission income (less than $0.1 million) in 2019. As claims estimates become more certain with time, there is generally less potential for favourable development on claims relating to older fund years, resulting in a tendency towards lower profit commissions.

Investment income

Income generated from investments increased by $23.2 million to $46.2 million in 2020. Investment income from interest and dividend receipts decreased by $2.3 million to $18.3 million, primarily due to the decrease in dividend income from equity portfolio amid the pandemic. As a result of the sharply lowered market yields during 2020, the Company experienced a $13.0 million increase in net unrealized gains on its fixed income security portfolio used to match its claims liabilities, compared to $4.0 million increase in 2019. The 2020 results also included net capital gains of $16.1 million realized on disposition of investments, compared to net loss of $0.3 million in 2019.

Statement of comprehensive income

Other comprehensive loss

During 2020, LAWPRO experienced other comprehensive loss of $22.7 million, primarily due to a significant decrease in net unrealized gains on its surplus investments in the equity security markets, in addition to the impact of unwinding the impairment losses associated with the disposition of securities held in the surplus portfolio as part of the portfolio manager transition. These results compare to other comprehensive income of $13.0 million experienced during 2019.

Statement of financial position

Overall, the Company ended 2020 in a satisfactory financial position, with shareholder's equity down slightly by $1.7 million year over year, as the significant other comprehensive loss recorded during the year was offset somewhat by the net income experienced during the same period.

Investments

As at December 31, 2020, the market value of the Company's investment portfolio exceeded its cost by $32.1 million, compared to 2019 where the market value exceeded cost by $38.2 million. Investment assets, inclusive of cash and cash equivalents and investment income due and accrued, increased by $11.9 million to $714.7 million as at December 31, 2020. This reflects the overall positive investment returns as interest and dividend income and strong performance of fixed income securities outweighed negative returns on the equity portfolio.

The investment portfolio is managed in accordance with the investment policy approved by the Company's Board of Directors in diversified, high-quality assets. A portion of the investment portfolio, which is composed of primarily fixed income securities, is invested in a manner that is expected to substantially match in maturity to the payment of claims liabilities in future years. The portion of the Company's investment portfolio which is considered surplus to the requirements of settling claims liabilities is managed separately and includes fixed income securities and equity investments in publicly traded companies, the values of which are more subject to market volatility.

Claims liabilities

The claims liabilities represent the amount required to satisfy all of the Company's obligations to claimants prior to reinsurance recoveries. This balance has increased by $20.5 million. Reinsurance recoverables have increased by $3.9 million and accordingly the increase in the net provision is $16.6 million. This increase is attributable to the fact that the claims expense relating to the additional risk associated with underwriting the 2020 program is greater than the net favourable development of prior years' reserves experienced during the year.

Report on LAWPRO operations

LAWPRO is an insurance company with three product lines: a mandatory E&O insurance program, as required by the Law Society for all lawyers in private practice in Ontario; an optional excess E&O insurance program that enables Ontario law firms to increase their insurance coverage limit to a maximum of $9 million per claim/$9 million in the aggregate above the $1 million per claim/$2 million aggregate levels provided by the mandatory E&O program; and an optional TitlePLUS title insurance product that real estate practitioners across Canada can make available to their clients.

Management Statement on Responsibility for Financial Information

The preparation of the annual financial statements, Management's Discussion and Analysis and all other information in the Company's Annual Report is the responsibility of the Company's management, and the annual financial statements have been approved by the Board of Directors.

The financial statements have been prepared in accordance with International Financial Reporting Standards. Financial statements, by their very nature, include amounts and disclosures based on estimates and judgements. Where alternative methods or interpretations exist, management has chosen those it deems most appropriate in the circumstances, including appropriate consideration to relevance and materiality. Actual results in the future may differ materially from management's current assessment given the inherent variability of future events and circumstances. Financial information appearing elsewhere in the Company's Annual Report is consistent with the financial statements.

Management maintains the necessary system of internal controls over financial reporting to meet its responsibility for the reliability of the financial statements. These controls are designed to provide management with reasonable assurance that the financial records are reliable for preparing financial statements and other financial information, assets are safeguarded against unauthorized use or disposition and liabilities are recognized.

The Board of Directors is responsible to ensure that management fulfils its responsibilities for financial reporting and is ultimately responsible for reviewing and approving the financial statements. The Board carries out its responsibility primarily through its audit committee, which is independent of management. The audit committee reviews the financial statements and recommends them to the Board for approval. The audit committee also reviews and monitors the Company's system of internal controls over financial reporting in the context of reports made by management or the external auditor.

Role of the Auditor

The external auditor, PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP, has been appointed by the shareholder. Its responsibility is to conduct an independent and objective audit of the financial statements in accordance with Canadian generally accepted auditing standards and to report thereon to the Company's shareholder. In carrying out its audit, the auditor considers the work of the appointed actuary and his report on the policy liabilities of the Company. The external auditor has full and unrestricted access to the audit committee and the Board of Directors to discuss audit, financial reporting and related findings. The auditor's report outlines the scope of its audit and its opinion.

Role of the Appointed Actuary

The actuary is appointed by the Board of Directors of the Company. With respect to the preparation of these financial statements, the appointed actuary is required to carry out a valuation of the policy liabilities and to report thereon to the Company's shareholder. The valuation is carried out in accordance with accepted actuarial practice and regulatory requirements. The scope of the valuation encompasses the policy liabilities as well as any other matter specified in any direction that may be made by the regulators. The policy liabilities consist of a provision for unpaid claims and adjustment expenses on the expired portion of policies, a provision for future obligations on the unexpired portion of policies, and other policy liabilities that may be applicable to the specific circumstances of the Company.

In performing the valuation of the policy liabilities, which are by their very nature inherently variable, the appointed actuary makes assumptions as to the future rates of claims severity, inflation, reinsurance recoveries, expenses and other matters, taking into consideration the circumstances of the Company and the nature of the insurance coverage being offered. The valuation is necessarily based on estimates; consequently, the final values may vary significantly from those estimates. The appointed actuary also makes use of management information provided by the Company, and uses the work of the auditor with respect to the verification of the underlying data used in the valuation.

What we have audited

The Company's financial statements comprise:

- the statement of financial position as at December 31, 2020;
- the statement of profit or loss for the year then ended;
- the statement of comprehensive income for the year then ended;
- the statement of changes in equity for the year then ended;
- the statement of cash flows for the year then ended; and
- the notes to the financial statements, which include significant accounting policies and other explanatory information.

Basis for Opinion

We conducted our audit in accordance with Canadian generally accepted auditing standards. Our responsibilities under those standards are further described in the Auditor's responsibilities for the audit of the financial statements section of our report.

We believe that the audit evidence we have obtained is sufficient and appropriate to provide a basis for our opinion.

Independence

We are independent of the Company in accordance with the ethical requirements that are relevant to our audit of the financial statements in Canada. We have fulfilled our other ethical responsibilities in accordance with these requirements.

Responsibilities of management and those charged with governance for the financial statements

Management is responsible for the preparation and fair presentation of the financial statements in accordance with IFRS, and for such internal control as management determines is necessary to enable the preparation of financial statements that are free from material misstatement, whether due to fraud or error.

In preparing the financial statements, management is responsible for assessing the Company's ability to continue as a going concern, disclosing, as applicable, matters related to going concern and using the going concern basis of accounting unless management either intends to liquidate the Company or to cease operations, or has no realistic alternative but to do so.

Those charged with governance are responsible for overseeing the Company's financial reporting process.

Auditor's responsibilities for the audit of the financial statements

Our objectives are to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the financial statements as a whole are free from material misstatement, whether due to fraud or error, and to issue an auditor's report that includes our opinion. Reasonable assurance is a high level of assurance, but is not a guarantee that an audit conducted in accordance with Canadian generally accepted auditing standards will always detect a material misstatement when it exists. Misstatements can arise from fraud or error and are considered material if, individually or in the aggregate, they could reasonably be expected to influence the economic decisions of users taken on the basis of these financial statements.

As part of an audit in accordance with Canadian generally accepted auditing standards, we exercise professional judgment and maintain professional skepticism throughout the audit. We also:

- Identify and assess the risks of material misstatement of the financial statements, whether due to fraud or error, design and perform audit procedures responsive to those risks, and obtain audit evidence that is sufficient and appropriate to provide a basis for our opinion. The risk of not detecting a material misstatement resulting from fraud is higher than for one resulting from error, as fraud may involve collusion, forgery, intentional omissions, misrepresentations, or the override of internal control.
- Obtain an understanding of internal control relevant to the audit in order to design audit procedures that are appropriate in the circumstances, but not for the purpose of expressing an opinion on the effectiveness of the Company's internal control.
- Evaluate the appropriateness of accounting policies used and the reasonableness of accounting estimates and related disclosures made by management.
- Conclude on the appropriateness of management's use of the going concern basis of accounting and, based on the audit evidence obtained, whether a material uncertainty exists related to events or conditions that may cast significant doubt on the Company's ability to continue as a going concern. If we conclude that a material uncertainty exists, we are required to draw attention in our auditor's report to the related disclosures in the financial statements or, if such disclosures are inadequate, to modify our opinion. Our conclusions are based on the audit evidence obtained up to the date of our auditor's report. However, future events or conditions may cause the Company to cease to continue as a going concern.
- Evaluate the overall presentation, structure and content of the financial statements, including the disclosures, and whether the financial statements represent the underlying transactions and events in a manner that achieves fair presentation.

We communicate with those charged with governance regarding, among other matters, the planned scope and timing of the audit and significant audit findings, including any significant deficiencies in internal control that we identify during our audit.

ECKLER

February 24, 2021

I have valued the policy liabilities including reinsurance recoverables of Lawyers' Professional Indemnity Company for its statement of financial position as at 31 December 2020 and their changes in the statement of income for the year then ended, in accordance with accepted actuarial practice in Canada, including selection of appropriate assumptions and methods.

In my opinion, the amount of the policy liabilities makes appropriate provision for all policy obligations and the financial statements fairly present the results of the valuation.

Notes to Financial Statements

For the year ended December 31, 2020 (Amounts stated in thousands of Canadian dollars)

1. Nature of Operations

Lawyers' Professional Indemnity Company (the "Company") is an insurance company, incorporated on March 14, 1990 under the Corporations Act (Ontario) and licensed to provide lawyers professional liability insurance in Ontario and title insurance in all provinces and territories in Canada. The Company is a wholly-owned subsidiary of the Law Society of Ontario (the "Law Society"), which is the governing body for lawyers and paralegals in Ontario. The Company's registered office is located at 250 Yonge Street, Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

2. Basis of Preparation and Significant Accounting Policies

These financial statements have been prepared under the Insurance Act (Ontario) and related regulations which require that, except as otherwise specified by the Company's primary insurance regulator, the Financial Services Regulatory Authority of Ontario ("FSRA"), the financial statements of the Company are to be prepared in accordance with International Financial Reporting Standards ("IFRS") as issued by the International Accounting Standards Board ("IASB").

These financial statements have been prepared in accordance with accounting standards issued and effective on or before December 31, 2020. None of the accounting requirements of FSRA represent exceptions to IFRS. These financial statements were authorized for issuance by the Company's Board of Directors on February 24, 2021.

The significant accounting policies used in the preparation of these financial statements are summarized below. These accounting policies conform, in all material respects, to IFRS.

Basis of measurement

The financial statements have been prepared under the historical cost basis that are measured at the end of each reporting period, except for certain financial instruments and the claims liabilities, as explained in the accounting policies below. Historical cost is generally based on the fair value of the consideration given for goods and services.

Fair value is the price that would be received to sell an asset or paid to transfer a liability in an orderly transaction between market participants at the measurement date, regardless of whether that price is directly observable or estimated using another valuation technique. In estimating the fair value of an asset or liability, the Company takes into account the characteristics of the asset or liability that market participants would likely take into account when pricing the asset or liability at the measurement date. A fair value measurement of a non-financial asset takes into account a market participant's ability to generate economic benefits by using the asset in its highest and best use or by selling it to another market participant that would use the asset in its highest and best use.

The valuation process includes utilizing market driven fair value measurements from active markets where available, considering other observable and unobservable inputs and employing valuation techniques which make use of current market data. Considerable judgement may be required in interpreting market data used to develop the estimates of fair value. Accordingly, the estimates presented in these financial statements are not necessarily indicative of the amounts that would be realized in a current market exchange.

The Company utilizes a fair value hierarchy to categorize the inputs used in valuation techniques to measure fair value, which prioritizes these inputs into three broad levels. The level in the fair value hierarchy within which the fair value measurement is categorized in its entirety is determined on the basis of the lowest level input that is significant to the fair value measurement in its entirety. For this purpose, the significance of an input is assessed against the fair value measurement in its entirety. The three levels of the fair value hierarchy are:

Level 1 - Quoted market prices in active markets

Inputs to Level 1, the highest level of the hierarchy, reflect fair values that are quoted prices (unadjusted) in active markets for identical assets and liabilities. An active market is considered to be one in which transactions for the asset or liability occur with sufficient frequency and volume to provide pricing information on an ongoing basis. Level 1 assets and liabilities include debt and equity securities, quoted unit trusts and derivative contracts that are traded in an active exchange market, as well as certain government and agency mortgage-backed debt securities that are highly liquid and are actively traded in over-the-counter markets.

Notes to Financial Statements

For the year ended December 31, 2020 (Amounts stated in thousands of Canadian dollars)

Level 2 – Modelled with significant observable market inputs

Inputs to Level 2 fair values are inputs, other than quoted prices within Level 1 prices that are observable or can be corroborated by observable market data for substantially the full term of the assets or liabilities. Level 2 inputs include: quoted prices for similar (i.e. not identical) assets and liabilities in active markets; quoted prices for identical or similar assets and liabilities in markets that are not active, the prices are not current, or price quotations vary substantially either over time or among market makers, or in which little information is released publicly; inputs other than quoted prices that are observable for the asset or liability (for example, interest rates and yield curves observable at commonly quoted intervals, volatilities, prepayment spreads, loss severities, credit risks, and default rates); and inputs that are derived principally from, or corroborated by, observable market data by correlation or other means (market corroborated inputs). Valuations incorporate credit risk by adjusting the spread above the yield curve for government treasury securities for the appropriate amount of credit risk for each issuer, based on observed market transactions. To the extent observed market spreads are either not used in valuing a security, or do not fully reflect liquidity risk, the valuation methodology reflects a liquidity premium. Examples of these are securities measured using discounted cash flow models based on market observable swap yields, and listed debt or equity securities in a market that is inactive. This category generally includes government and agency mortgage-backed debt securities and corporate debt securities.

Level 3 - Modelled with significant unobservable market inputs

Inputs to Level 3 are unobservable, supported by little or no market activity, and are significant to the fair value of the assets or liabilities. Unobservable inputs may have been used to measure fair value to the extent that observable inputs are not available, thereby allowing for situations in which there is little, if any, market activity for the asset or liability at the measurement date (or market information for the inputs to any valuation models). As such, unobservable inputs reflect the assumptions the business unit considers that market participants would use in pricing the asset or liability. Where estimates are used, these are based on a combination of independent third-party evidence and internally developed models, calibrated to market observable data where possible. Level 3 assets and liabilities generally include certain private equity investments, certain asset-backed securities, highly structured, complex or long-dated derivative contracts, and certain collateralized debt obligations where independent pricing information was not able to be obtained for a significant portion of the underlying assets.

Use of estimates and judgments made by management

The preparation of financial statements requires management to make estimates and assumptions that affect the reported amounts of assets and liabilities and disclosure of contingent assets and liabilities at the date of the financial statements and the reported amounts of revenues and expenses during the reporting period. Actual results could differ from these estimates and changes in estimates are recorded in the reporting period in which they are determined. Key estimates are discussed in the following accounting policies and applicable notes.

Key areas where management has made difficult, complex or subjective judgments in the process of applying the Company's accounting policies, often as a result of matters that are inherently uncertain, include:

Impairment	Note 5c
Unpaid claims incurred	Note 10
Income taxes	Note 15

Financial instruments – recognition and measurement

Financial assets are classified as fair value through profit or loss ("FVTPL"), available-for-sale ("AFS"), held to maturity or loans and receivables. Financial liabilities are classified as FVTPL or as other financial liabilities. These classifications are determined based on the characteristics of the financial assets and liabilities, the company's choice and/or the company's intent and ability. As permitted under the IFRS standards, a company has the ability to designate any financial instrument irrevocably, on initial recognition or adoption of the standards, as FVTPL provided certain criteria are met.

Notes to Financial Statements

For the year ended December 31, 2020 (Amounts stated in thousands of Canadian dollars)

The Company's financial assets and liabilities are measured on the statement of financial position at fair value on initial recognition and are subsequently measured at fair value or amortized cost depending on their classification as indicated below.

Transaction costs for FVTPL investments are expensed in the current period, and for all other categories of investments are capitalized and, when applicable, amortized over the expected life of the investment. The Company accounts for the purchase and sale of securities using trade date accounting. Realized gains or losses on disposition are determined on an average cost basis.

The effective interest method is used to calculate amortization/accretion of premiums or discounts on fixed income securities over the relevant period. The effective interest rate is the rate that exactly discounts estimated future cash receipts through the expected life of the fixed income security, or, where appropriate, a shorter period, to the net carrying amount on initial recognition.

Financial assets at fair value through profit or loss

Financial assets at FVTPL are measured at fair value in the statement of financial position with realized gains and losses and net changes in unrealized gains and losses recorded in net investment income along with dividends and interest earned.

The Company maintains an investment portfolio, referred to as the asset-liability matched ("ALM") portfolio, which is designated as FVTPL. This portfolio is invested with the primary objective of matching the cash inflows from fixed income investment securities with the expected timing and magnitude of future payment of net claims liabilities. The ALM portfolio represents a significant component of the Company's risk management strategy for meeting its claims obligations. The designation of the financial assets in the ALM investment portfolio as FVTPL is intended to significantly reduce the measurement or recognition inconsistency that would otherwise arise from measuring assets, liabilities, and gains and losses under different accounting methods. Interest rate movements cause changes in the values of the investment portfolio and of discounted estimated future claims liabilities. As the changes in values of the matched portfolio and of the discounted estimated future claims liabilities flow through profit or loss, the result is an offset of a significant portion of these changes.

Cash and cash equivalents are also classified as FVTPL. Cash and cash equivalents consist of cash on deposit and short-term investments that mature in three months or less from the date of acquisition. The net gain or loss recognized incorporates any interest earned on the financial asset.

AFS financial assets

Financial assets classified as AFS are measured at fair value in the statement of financial position. Net interest income, including amortization of premiums and the accretion of discounts, are recorded in net investment income in the statement of profit or loss. Dividend income on common and preferred shares is included in investment income on the ex-dividend date. Changes in fair value of AFS fixed income securities resulting from changes to foreign exchange rates are recognized in net investment income as incurred. Changes in the fair value of AFS fixed income securities related to the underlying investment in its issued currency, as well as all elements of fair value changes of AFS equity securities, are recorded to unrealized gains and losses in accumulated other comprehensive income ("AOCI") until disposition or impairment is recognized, at which time the cumulative gain or loss is reclassified to net investment income in profit or loss.

Financial assets in the Company's surplus portfolio (consisting of all investments outside the ALM portfolio), including fixed income securities and equities, are designated as AFS.

Loan and receivables and Other liabilities

The Company has not designated any financial assets as held to maturity. Due from reinsurers, insureds and Law Society of Ontario and Other receivables and Due to reinsurers and insureds are carried at amortized cost using the effective interest rate method. Given the short term nature of these financial assets and liabilities, amortized cost approximates fair value.

Leases

The Company is a lessee under various operating leases relating to premises and equipment. For all leases, except for leases which are short term or of low value, a right-of-use asset and a lease liability are recognized on the statement of financial position. Right-of-use assets are initially measured at cost, which comprises the amount of the initial measurement of the lease liability. Right-of-use assets are subsequently measured at amortized cost. Right-of-use assets are depreciated on a straight-line basis over the lease term. Lease liabilities are measured at the present value of future payments, using the Company's incremental borrowing rates. Interest charge is applied based on the discount rate used in the calculation of the initial lease liability, and increases the value of the lease liability. Amounts paid under the terms of the lease are deducted from the value of the lease liability, representing the reduction in the Company's payment obligations.

Notes to Financial Statements

For the year ended December 31, 2020 (Amounts stated in thousands of Canadian dollars)

Property and equipment

Property and equipment are recorded in the statement of financial position at cost less accumulated amortization. Amortization is charged to operating expense on a straight-line basis over the estimated useful lives of the assets as follows:

Furniture and fixtures	5 years
Computer equipment	3 years
Computer software	1 to 3 years
Leasehold improvements	Term of lease
Right-of-use assets	Term of lease

An item of property and equipment is derecognized upon disposal or when no future economic benefits are expected to arise from the continued use of the asset. Any gain or loss arising from the disposal or retirement of an item of property and equipment is determined as the difference between the sales proceeds and the carrying amount of the asset and is recognized immediately in profit or loss.

Intangible Assets

Intangible assets with finite useful lives that are acquired separately or internally developed are carried at cost, less any applicable accumulated amortization and accumulated impairment losses. Once an acquired intangible asset is available for use, amortization is recognized on a straight-line basis over its estimated useful life. The estimated useful life and amortization method are reviewed at the end of each reporting period, with the effect of any changes in estimate being accounted for on a prospective basis.

An intangible asset is derecognized on disposal, or when no future economic benefits are expected from its use or disposal. Gains and losses arising from derecognition of an intangible asset, measured as the difference between the net disposal proceeds and the carrying cost of the asset, are recognized in profit and loss when the asset is derecognized.

Impairment

Financial Assets

AFS financial assets are tested for impairment on a quarterly basis. Objective evidence of impairment for fixed income securities includes financial difficulty of the issuer, bankruptcy or defaults and delinquency in payments of interest or principal. Objective evidence of impairment for equities includes a significant or prolonged decline in fair value of the equity below cost or changes with adverse effects that have taken place in the technological, market, economic or legal environment in which the issuer operates that indicates the cost of the security may not be recovered. In general, an equity security is considered impaired if the decline in fair value relative to cost has been either at least 25% for a continuous nine-month period or more than 40% at the end of the reporting period, or been in an unrealized loss position for a continuous period of 18 to 24 months.

Where there is objective evidence that an AFS asset is impaired, the loss accumulated in AOCI is reclassified to net investment income. Once an impairment loss is recorded to profit or loss, the loss can only be reversed into income for fixed income securities to the extent a subsequent increase in fair value can be objectively correlated to an event occurring after the loss was recognized. Following impairment loss recognition, further decreases in fair value are recorded as an impairment loss to profit or loss, while a subsequent recovery in fair value for equity securities, and fixed income securities that do not qualify for loss reversal treatment, are recorded to other comprehensive income ("OCI"). Interest continues to be accrued, but at the effective rate of interest based on the fair value at impairment, and dividends of equity securities are recognized in income when the Company's right to receive payment has been established.

Non-Financial Assets

At the end of each reporting period, the Company reviews the carrying amount of its property and equipment, intangible assets and other non-financial assets to determine whether there is any indication that those assets have suffered an impairment loss. If any indication exists, the recoverable amount of the asset is estimated in order to determine the extent of the impairment loss, if any. When it is not possible to estimate the recoverable amount of an individual asset, the Company estimates the recoverable amount of the cash-generating unit to which the asset belongs. Intangible assets not yet available for use are tested for impairment at least annually, and whenever there is an indication that the asset may be impaired.

Recoverable amount is the higher of fair value less costs of disposal and value in use. In assessing value in use, the estimated future cash flows are discounted to their present value using a pre-tax discount rate that reflects current market assessments of the time value of money and the risks specific to the asset for which the estimates of future cash flows have not been adjusted. If the recoverable amount of an asset (or cash-generating unit) is estimated to be less than its carrying amount, the carrying amount of the asset (or cash-generating unit) is reduced to its recoverable amount. An impairment loss is recognized immediately in profit or loss. If an impairment loss subsequently reverses, the carrying amount of the asset (or cash-generating unit) is increased to the revised estimate of its recoverable amount, but so that the increased carrying amount does not exceed the carrying amount that would have been determined had no impairment loss been recognized for the asset (or cash-generating unit) in prior years. A reversal of impairment loss is recognized immediately in profit or loss.

Foreign currency translation

The Canadian dollar is the functional and presentation currency of the Company. Transactions in foreign currencies are translated into Canadian dollars at rates of exchange at the time of such transactions. Monetary assets and liabilities are translated at current rates of exchange, with all translation differences recognized in investment income in the current period. If a gain or loss on a non-monetary asset and liability is recognized in OCI, any exchange component of that gain or loss is also recognized in OCI, and conversely, if a gain or loss on a non-monetary asset and liability is recognized in profit or loss, any exchange component of that gain or loss is also recognized in profit or loss.

Premium-related balances

The Company issues two types of professional liability policies: a primary lawyer's errors and omissions policy and an excess policy increasing the insurance coverage limit to a maximum of $9 million per claim/$9 million in the aggregate above the $1 million per claim/$2 million aggregate levels provided by the primary policy; and a title insurance policy. Insurance policies written under the professional liability insurance program are effective on a calendar year basis. Professional liability insurance premium income is earned on a pro rata basis over the term of coverage of the underlying insurance policies, which is generally one year, except for policies for retired lawyers, which have terms of up to five years. Title insurance premiums are earned at the inception date of the policies.

Unearned premiums reported on the statement of financial position represent the portion of premiums written that relate to the unexpired risk portion of the policy at the end of the reporting period.

Premiums receivable are recorded in the statement of financial position as amounts due from insureds, net of any required provision for doubtful amounts. Premiums received from insureds in advance of the effective date of the insurance policy are recorded as amounts due to insureds in the statement of financial position.

The Company defers policy acquisition expenses, primarily premium taxes on its written professional liability insurance premiums, to the extent these costs are considered recoverable. These costs are expensed on the same basis that the related premiums are earned. Deferred policy acquisition expenses are not material at year-end, and therefore the Company's policy is to not recognize an asset on the statement of financial position.

Claims liabilities

The Claims liabilities includes an estimate of the cost of projected final settlements of insurance claims incurred on or before the date of the statement of financial position, consisting of case estimates prepared by claims adjusters and a provision for incurred but not reported claims ("IBNR") calculated based on accepted actuarial practice in Canada as required by the Canadian Institute of Actuaries ("CIA"). These estimates include the full amount of all expected expenses, including related investigation, settlement and adjustment expenses, net

Notes to Financial Statements

of any anticipated salvage and subrogation recoveries. The professional liability insurance policy requires insureds to pay deductibles to the maximum extent of $25,000 on each individual claim, subject to an additional $10,000 for certain claims involving an administrative dismissal. Expected deductible recoveries on paid and unpaid claims are recognized net of any required provision for uncollectible accounts at the same time as the related claims liability.

The Claims liabilities takes into consideration the time value of money using discount rates based on the estimated market value based yield to maturity of the underlying assets backing these liabilities, with reductions for estimated investment-related expense and credit risk. A provision for adverse deviations (“PfAD”) is then added to the discounted liabilities, to allow for possible deterioration of experience in claims development, recoverability of reinsurance balances and investment risk, in order to generate the actuarial present value.

These estimates of claims liabilities are subject to uncertainty and are selected from a wide range of possible outcomes. All provisions are periodically reviewed and evaluated in light of emerging claims experience and changing circumstances. The resulting changes in estimates of the ultimate liability are reported as net claims incurred in the reporting period in which they are determined.

Reinsurance

In the normal course of business, the Company enters into per claim and excess of loss reinsurance contracts with other insurers in order to limit its net exposure to significant losses. Amounts relating to reinsurance in respect of the premiums and claims-related balances in the statements of financial position and profit or loss are recorded separately. Premiums ceded to reinsurers are presented before deduction of broker commission and any premium-based taxes or duty. Amounts recoverable from reinsurers are estimated and recognized in a manner consistent with the Company’s method of determining the underlying claims liabilities covered by the reinsurance contract. Amounts recoverable from reinsurers are assessed for indicators of impairment at the end of each reporting period. An impairment loss is recognized and the amount recoverable from reinsurers is reduced by the amount by which the carrying value exceeds the expected recoverable amount under the impairment analysis.

Ceding commissions, which relate to amounts received from the Company’s reinsurers on the placement of its reinsurance contracts, is earned into income on a pro rata basis over the contract period.

Income taxes

Income tax expense is recognized in profit or loss and the statement of profit or loss and other comprehensive income. Current tax is based on taxable income which differs from profit or loss as reported in the statement of profit or loss and in the statement of other comprehensive income because of items of income or expense that are taxable or deductible in other years and items that are never taxable or deductible. Current tax includes any adjustments in respect of prior years.

Deferred tax assets are generally recognized for all deductible temporary income tax differences to the extent that it is probable that taxable profits will be available against which those deductible temporary differences can be utilized. Deferred tax liabilities are generally recognized for all taxable temporary differences. Deferred tax assets and liabilities are determined based on the enacted or substantively enacted tax laws and rates that are anticipated to apply in the period of realization. The measurement of deferred tax assets and liabilities utilizes the liability method, reflecting the tax consequences that would follow from the manner in which the Company expects to recover or settle the carrying amount of the related assets and liabilities. The carrying amount of the deferred tax asset is reduced to the extent that it is no longer probable that sufficient taxable profits will be available to allow all or part of the asset to be recovered.

Income tax assets and liabilities are offset when the income taxes are levied by the same taxation authority and there is a legally enforceable right to offset current tax assets with current tax liabilities.

Employee benefits

The Company maintains a defined contribution pension plan (“DCPP”) for its employees. It also maintains a defined benefit pension plan (“DBPP”), also called a supplemental designated executive plan (“SDEP”), for certain designated employees, which provides benefits in excess of the benefits provided by the Company’s DCPP. For the SDEP, the benefit obligation is determined using the projected unit credit method. Actuarial valuations are carried out at the end of each annual reporting period using management’s assumptions on items such as discount rates, expected asset performance, salary growth and retirement ages of employees. The discount rate is determined based on the market yields of high quality, mid-duration corporate fixed income securities.

Notes to Financial Statements

For the year ended December 31, 2020 (Amounts stated in thousands of Canadian dollars)

DCPP expenses are recognized in the reporting period in which services are rendered. Regarding the SDEP, remeasurements comprising actuarial gains and losses, the effect of the changes to the asset ceiling (if applicable) and the return on plan assets (excluding net interest cost), is reflected immediately in the statement of profit or loss and other comprehensive income with a charge or credit recognized in OCI in the period in which they occur. Remeasurements recognized in OCI are transferred immediately to retained earnings and will not be reclassified to profit or loss. Past service cost is recognized in profit or loss in the period of a plan amendment. Net interest is calculated by applying the discount rate at the beginning of the period to the net defined benefit liability or asset. Defined benefit costs are categorized as follows: service cost (including current service, past service cost, as well as gains or losses on curtailments and settlements), net interest expense or income, and remeasurements. The Company presents the first two components of defined benefit cost as part of operating expenses in the statement of profit or loss.

The retirement benefit obligation recognized in the statement of financial position represents the actual deficit or surplus in the Company's SDEP. Any surplus resulting from this calculation is limited to the present value of any economic benefits available in the form of refunds from the plan or reductions in future contributions to the plan.

3. Application of New and Revised IFRSs Relevant to the Company

In the current year, the Company has applied the following revised IFRSs issued by the IASB that are mandatorily effective for an accounting period that begins on or after January 1, 2020.

a) Amendments to IAS 1 "Presentation of Financial Statements" and IAS 8 "Accounting Policies, Changes in Accounting Estimates and Errors"

In October 2018, the IASB issued amendments to IAS 1 and IAS 8 to align the definition of "material" across the standards and to clarify certain aspects of the definition. The objective of this amendment is to improve disclosure effectiveness in the financial statements by improving the understanding of the existing requirements rather than to significantly impact an entity's materiality judgements. The amendments apply prospectively to annual periods beginning on or after January 1, 2020. The adoption of these amendments did not have an impact on the Company's financial statements.

b) Conceptual Framework for Financial Reporting

In March 2018, the IASB issued a comprehensive set of concepts for financial reporting: the revised Conceptual Framework for Financial Reporting ("Conceptual Framework"), which replaces its previous version. The Conceptual Framework assists companies in developing accounting policies when no IFRS standard applies to a particular transaction and it helps stakeholders more broadly to better understand the standards. The revised Conceptual Framework's effective date is January 1, 2020. The adoption of these amendments did not have an impact on the Company's financial statements.

c) Amendments to IFRS 9, 'Financial instruments', IAS 39, 'Financial instruments', and IFRS 7, 'Financial instruments: disclosures' - Interest rate benchmark reform

Following the financial crisis, the replacement of benchmark interest rates such as LIBOR and other interbank offered rates ('IBORs') has become a priority for global regulators. Given this potential impact on financial reporting, the IASB has devised two-phase amendments

- Phase 1: considers reliefs to hedge accounting in the period before the reform, has led to these amendments.
- Phase 2: addresses issues that arise once the existing interest rate is replaced with an alternative interest rate.

Notes to Financial Statements

For the year ended December 31, 2020 (Amounts stated in thousands of Canadian dollars)

The amendments are particularly relevant and provide temporary relief to entities that utilize hedge accounting. The amendments are effective for periods beginning after January 1, 2020. The adoption of these amendments did not have an impact on the Company's financial statements.

4. New and Revised IFRSs Issued but Not Yet Effective

The Company has not applied the following new and revised IFRSs that have been issued but are not yet effective:

a) IFRS 9 "Financial Instruments"

IFRS 9, issued in November 2009 as part of a three-phase project to replace IAS 39 "Financial Instruments: Recognition and Measurement", introduced new requirements for the classification and measurement of financial assets. IFRS 9 was subsequently amended in October 2010 to include requirements for the classification and measurement of financial liabilities and for derecognition, and in November 2013 to include the new requirements for general hedge accounting. Another revised version of IFRS 9 was issued in July 2014 mainly to include impairment requirements for financial assets as well as limited amendments to the classification and measurements by introducing fair value through other comprehensive income ("FVOCI") measurement category for certain simple debt instruments.

Pursuant to IFRS 9, all recognized financial assets that are within the scope of IAS 39 are required to be subsequently measured at amortized cost or fair value. Specifically, debt instruments that are held within a business model whose objective is to collect the contractual cash flows, and that have contractual cash flows that are solely payments of principal and interest on the principal outstanding, are generally measured at amortized cost. Debt instruments that are held within a business model whose objective is achieved both by collecting contractual cash flows and selling financial assets, and that have contractual terms that give rise on specified dates to cash flows that are solely payments of principal and interest on the principal amount outstanding, are measured at FVOCI. All other debt securities, as well as equity securities, are measured at FVTPL. Entities may make an irrevocable election to present subsequent changes in the fair value of an equity security in OCI, with only dividend income generally recognized in profit or loss. In addition, under the fair value option, entities may elect for amortized cost or FVOCI debt securities to be designated as FVTPL.

With regard to the measurement of financial liabilities designated as FVTPL, IFRS 9 requires that the amount of change in the fair value of the financial liability that is attributable to changes in the credit risk of that liability is to be recognized in OCI, unless the recognition of the effects of changes in the liability's credit risk in OCI would create or enlarge an accounting mismatch in profit or loss. Under IAS 39, the entire amount of the change in the fair value of the financial liability designated as FVTPL is recognized in profit or loss.

With regards to debt securities measured at amortized cost or FVOCI, IFRS 9 requires an expected credit loss model for determining impairment, as opposed to an incurred credit loss model under IAS 39. The expected credit loss model requires an entity to account for expected credit losses and changes in those expected credit losses at each reporting date to reflect changes in credit risk since initial recognition. In other words, it is no longer necessary for a credit event to have occurred before impairment losses are recognized. Under IFRS 9, impairment is not considered for equity securities.

IFRS 9 as revised (2014) is effective for annual periods beginning on or after January 1, 2019. In September 2016, the IASB published amendments to IFRS 4 "Insurance Contracts", which provides two options for entities that issue insurance contracts: a) recognize in OCI, rather than profit or loss, the volatility that could arise when IFRS 9 is applied before the new insurance contracts standard is effective (the 'overlay approach') and b) if the entity's activities are predominantly connected with insurance it may exercise a temporary exemption to continue applying IAS 39 instead of IFRS 9 until January 1, 2021 (the 'deferral approach'). The Company qualifies for, and has elected to apply, the deferral option. The Company has concluded that its activities are predominantly connected with insurance, as the amount of its insurance liabilities are significant compared with its total amount of liabilities and the percentage of its liabilities connected with insurance relative to its total amount of liabilities is greater than 90%. The Company anticipates that the application of IFRS 9 in the future may have a material impact on amounts reported in respect of the Company's financial assets. However, it is not practicable to provide a reasonable estimate of the effect of IFRS 9 until the Company completes its detailed review.

Notes to Financial Statements

For the year ended December 31, 2020 (Amounts stated in thousands of Canadian dollars)

In November 2018, the IASB tentatively decided that the mandatory effective date of IFRS 17 should be deferred by one year, and consequently, the fixed expiry date for the temporary exemption in IFRS 4 should be amended to annual periods beginning on or after January 1, 2022, subject to public consultation. Further, in their March 2020 meeting the IASB decided to defer the effective date of IFRS 17 another year to January 1, 2023.

b) IFRS 17 "Insurance Contracts"

In May 2017, the IASB published IFRS 17, a comprehensive new accounting standard for insurance contracts covering recognition and measurement, presentation and disclosure, which replaces IFRS 4 and introduces consistent accounting for all insurance contracts. IFRS 17 provides a general model for the recognition of insurance contracts, as well as a simplified model (premium allocation approach) for short-duration contracts, which will be applicable to most property and casualty insurance contracts. The standard requires a company to measure insurance contracts using updated estimates and assumptions that reflect the timing of cash flows and any uncertainty relating to insurance contracts. Additionally, IFRS 17 requires a company to recognize profits as it delivers insurance services.

The main features of the simplified new accounting model for property and casualty insurance contracts are as follows:

- the concept of portfolio, which is a group of contracts covering similar risks and managed together as a single pool. As such, contracts will be grouped for allocation of deferred acquisition costs, the calculation of risk adjustment, the determination of onerous contracts and the application of the discount rate;
- insurance liabilities will be discounted at a rate that reflects the characteristics of the liabilities (as opposed to a rate based on asset returns) and the duration of each portfolio. Entities will record the effect of changes in discount rates either in profit or loss or OCI, according to their accounting policy choice;
- changes in statement of financial position presentation where unearned premiums will correspond to premiums received in advance, while accounts receivable will be constituted of amounts not received when revenue is recognized. In profit or loss, direct premiums written will no longer be presented (only earned premiums). Also, insurance results will be presented without the impact of discounting. Amounts relating to financing and changes in discount rates will be shown separately;
- disclosure: extensive disclosures to provide information on the recognized amounts from insurance contracts and the nature and extent of risks arising from these contracts.

The standard applies to annual periods beginning on or after January 1, 2023, (see note 4a above). Retrospective application is required, but, if full retrospective application for a group of insurance contracts is impracticable, then the entity is required to choose either a modified retrospective approach or a fair value approach. The Company plans to adopt the new standard on the required effective date together with IFRS 9 (see note 4b above). The Company has been performing a high-level impact assessment of IFRS 17. The Company expects that the new standard will result in significant changes to accounting policies for insurance contract liabilities, but the impact has not yet been determined.

c) Amendments to IAS 1, 'Presentation of financial statements' – Classification of liabilities as current or non-current Effective date EU adoption status

On January 23, 2020, the IASB issued a narrow-scope amendment to IAS 1 to clarify that liabilities are classified as either current or non-current, depending on the rights that exist at the end of the reporting period. The amendment changes the guidance for the classification of liabilities as current or non-current. It could affect the classification of liabilities, particularly for entities that previously considered management's intentions to determine classification and for some liabilities that can be converted into equity. The amendments apply retrospectively to annual periods beginning on or after January 1, 2022. The Company is currently assessing the impact of these amendments.

c) Impairment Analysis

Management performs a quarterly analysis of the Company's AFS investments to determine whether there is objective evidence that the estimated cash flows of the investments have been affected. The analysis includes the following procedures as deemed appropriate by management:

- identifying all security holdings in unrealized loss positions that have existed for a length of time that management believes may impact the recoverability of the investment;
- identifying all security holdings in unrealized loss positions that have an unrealized loss magnitude that management believes may impact the recoverability of the investment;
- reviewing the trading range of certain investments over the preceding calendar period;
- assessing whether any credit losses are expected for those investments. This assessment includes consideration of, among other things, all available information and factors having a bearing upon collectability such as changes to credit rating by rating agencies, financial condition of the issuer, expected cash flows and value of any underlying collateral;
- assessing whether declines in fair value for any fixed income securities represent objective evidence of impairment based on their investment grade credit ratings from third party security rating agencies;
- assessing whether declines in fair value for any fixed income securities with non-investment grade credit rating represent objective evidence of impairment based on the history of its debt service record; and
- obtaining a valuation analysis from third party investment managers regarding the intrinsic value of these holdings based on their knowledge, experience and other market based valuation techniques.

The movements in cumulative impairment write-downs on AFS investments (in OCI, pre-tax) for the years ended December 31 were as follows:

10. Claims Liabilities

a) Nature of claims liabilities

The determination of the claims liabilities is a complex process based on known facts, interpretations and judgment and is influenced by a variety of factors. These factors include the Company's own experience with similar cases and historical trends involving claim payment patterns, loss payments, pending levels of unpaid claims liabilities, product mix and concentration, claims severity and claim frequency patterns.

Other factors include the continually evolving and changing regulatory and legal environment, actuarial studies, professional experience and expertise of the Company's claim departments' personnel and independent adjusters retained to handle individual claims, the quality of the data used for projection purposes, existing claims management practices including claims handling and settlement practices, the effect of inflationary trends on future claims settlement costs, investment rates of return, court decisions and economic conditions. In addition, time can be a critical part of the provision determination, since the longer the span between the incidence of a loss and the settlement of the claim, the more potential for variation in the ultimate settlement amount. Accordingly, short-tailed claims, such as property claims, tend to be more reasonably predictable than long-tailed claims, such as professional liability and title claims.

The process of establishing the provision relies on the judgment and opinions of a number of individuals, on historical precedents and trends, on prevailing legal, economic, social and regulatory trends and on expectations as to future developments. The provision reflects expectations of the ultimate cost of resolution and administration of claims based on an assessment of facts and circumstances then known, together with a review of historical settlement patterns, estimates of trends in claims severity and frequency, legal theories of liability and other factors.

Consequently, the measurement of the ultimate settlement costs of claims to date that underlies the claims liabilities, and any related recoveries for reinsurance and deductibles, involves estimates and measurement uncertainty. The amounts are based on estimates of future trends in claim severity and other factors which could vary as claims are settled. Variability can be caused by several factors including the emergence of additional information on claims, changes in judicial interpretation, significant changes in severity or frequency of claims from historical trends, and inclusion of exposures not contemplated at the time of policy inception. Ultimate costs incurred could vary from current estimates. Although it is not possible to measure the degree of variability inherent in such estimates, management believes that the methods of estimation that have been used will produce reasonable results given the current information.

b) Methodologies and assumptions

The best estimates of claims payments and adjustment expenses are determined based on one or more of the following actuarial methods: the chain ladder method, the paid frequency and severity method, the expected loss ratio method, and the Bornheutter-Ferguson method. Considerations in the choice of methods to estimate ultimate claims include, among other factors, the line of business, the number of years of experience and the relative maturity of the experience, and as such, reflect methods for lines of business with long settlement patterns and which are subject to the occurrence of large claims.

Each method involves tracking claims data either by “accident year”, which is the year in which such claims are made for the Company’s professional liability policies, or by “policy year”, the year in which such policies were written for its title policies. Claims paid and reported, gross and net of reinsurance recoveries and net of salvage and subrogation, are tracked by lines of business, accident/policy years and development periods in a format known as claims development triangles.

A description of each of these methods is as follows:

i. Chain ladder method

The distinguishing characteristic of this form of development method is that ultimate claims for each policy year are projected from recorded values assuming the future claim development is similar to the prior years’ development.

ii. Paid frequency and severity (“PFS”) method

The PFS method assumes that, for each identified homogenous claims type group, claims count reported to date will develop to ultimate in a similar manner to historical patterns, and settle at predictable average severity amounts. This method involves applying the developed estimated ultimate claims count to selected estimated ultimate average claim severities.

iii. Expected loss ratio method

Using the expected loss ratio method, ultimate claims projections are based upon a priori measures of the anticipated claims. An expected loss ratio is applied to the measure of exposure to determine estimated ultimate claims for each year. This method is commonly used in lines of business with a limited experience history.

iv. Bornheutter-Ferguson (“BF”) method

The BF method applied to reported loss data relies on the assumption that remaining unreported losses are a function of total expected losses rather than a function of currently reported losses. The BF method is most useful when the actual reported losses do not provide a good indicator of future losses (e.g. for immature and/or unstable accident years).

Claims data includes external claims adjustment expenses (Allocated Loss Adjustment Expenses or ALAE), and for a portion of the portfolio includes internal claims adjustment expenses (Unallocated Loss Adjustment Expenses or ULAE). A provision for ULAE has been determined based on the Mango-Allen claim staffing technique, a transaction-based method which utilizes expected future claims handler workload per claim per handler, claims closure rates and ultimate claims count.

The claims liabilities are discounted using an interest rate based on the estimated market value based yield to maturity, inherent credit risk and related investment expense of the Company’s fixed income securities supporting the claims liabilities as at December 31, 2020, which was 1.26% (December 31, 2019: 2.45%). Reinsurance recoverable estimates and claims recoverable from other insurers are discounted in a manner consistent with the method used to establish the related liability. The provision for adverse development has been selected based on the risk associated with development and within the prescribed CIA guidelines.

As the claims liabilities are recorded on a discounted basis and reflect the time value of money, its carrying value is expected to provide a reasonable basis for the determination of fair value. However, determination of fair value also requires the practical context of a buyer and seller, both of whom are willing and able to enter into an arm’s length transaction. In the absence of such a practical context, the fair value is not readily determinable.

As adjustments to estimated claims liabilities become necessary, they are reflected in current operations.

c) Changes in methodologies or basis of selection of assumptions

Based on the Company's actuarial valuation process, at each valuation the Company's claims data is analyzed to determine whether the current methodologies and basis of selection of actuarial assumptions continue to be appropriate for the estimation of unpaid claims liabilities. Upon review, the Company has incorporated the BF method in addition to the already prescribed methods and consequently deemed it appropriate to modify the basis of its selected methods from the prior year-end for the purposes of its actuarial evaluation as at December 31, 2020.

d) Loss development tables

The tables on the following pages show the development of claims, excluding IAE, by policy year over a period of time. The first table reflects development for gross claims, which excludes any reductions for reinsurance recoverables. The second table reflects development for net claims, which is gross claims less reinsurance recoverables. The top triangle in each table shows how the estimates of total claims for each policy year develop over time as more information becomes known regarding individual claims and overall claims frequency and severity. Claims are presented on an undiscounted basis in the top triangle. The bottom triangle in each table presents the cumulative amounts paid for claims and external loss adjustment expenses for each policy year at the end of each successive year. At the bottom of each table, the provision for IAE as well as the effect of discounting and the PfAD, as at December 31, 2020, is presented based on the net amounts of the two triangles.

12. Reinsurance

The Company's reinsurance program consists of a 90% quota share cession on its excess professional liability policies (2019: 90%), and a $10 million in excess of $5 million per occurrence clash reinsurance arrangement which provides protection for single events that bring about multiple professional liability and/or title claims with an additional $20 million in excess of $15 million per occurrence. Reinsurance does not relieve the Company of its primary liability as the originating insurer. In the event that a reinsurer is unable to meet obligations assumed under reinsurance agreements, the Company is liable for such amounts. Reinsurance treaties typically renew annually and the terms and conditions are reviewed by senior management and reported to the Company's Board of Directors. Reinsurance agreements are negotiated with reinsurance companies that have an independent credit rating of "A-" or better and that the Company considers creditworthy. Based on current information on the financial health of the reinsurers, no provision for doubtful debts has been made in the financial statements in respect of reinsurers.

13. Related Party Transactions

Pursuant to a service agreement effective January 1, 1995, and as amended effective September 30, 2009, the Company administers the Errors and Omissions Insurance Fund (the "Fund") of the Law Society and provides all services directly related to the operations and general administration of the Fund in consideration for the Law Society insuring its mandatory professional liability insurance program with the Company.

The insurance policy under the mandatory professional liability insurance program of the Law Society is written by the Company and is effective on a calendar year basis. The insurance policy is renewed effective January 1 each year subject to the Law Society's acceptance of the terms of renewal submitted by the Company. The annual policy limits for each of the years effective January 1, 1995 to December 31, 2019 are $1 million per claim and $2 million in aggregate per member. Under the insurance policy that was in force between July 1, 1990 and December 31, 1994, the Company was responsible for claims in excess of the Law Society and member deductibles. The claims liabilities is net of amounts relating to policies for years prior to 1995 that are payable by the Law Society.

The Law Society offers a wellness program to their members, the Company shares a portion of this cost in order to make the program available to their insureds. The amounts expensed are included in operating expenses under professional fees (see note 16).

14. Employee Benefits

The Company has a DCP which is available to all its employees upon meeting the eligibility requirements. Each employee is required to contribute 4.5% of yearly maximum pensionable earnings, and 6% in excess thereof, of an employee's annual base earnings. Under the plan, the Company matches all employee contributions. In 2020, the Company made payments of $809,639 (2019: $761,697) and recorded pension expense of $853,985 (2019: $826,418).

The Company also has a SDEP or DBPP, which provides pension benefits on a final salary or fixed schedule basis, depending on certain criteria. Measurements and funding requirements of this plan are based on valuations prepared by an external actuary. For reporting purposes the plan is measured using the projected unit credit method, which involves calculating the actuarial present value of the past service liability to members including an allowance for their projected future earnings. Funding requirements for the plan are determined using the solvency method, which utilizes the estimated cost of securing each member's benefits with an insurance company or alternative buy-out provider as at the valuation date. The valuation methods are based on a number of assumptions, which vary according to economic conditions, including prevailing market interest rates, and changes in these assumptions can significantly affect the measurement of the pension obligations.

Funding for the supplemental plan commenced in 2005, with $818,906 in contributions made in 2020 (2019: 1,156,227) and recorded pension expenses of $343,264 in 2020 (2019: $241,903). Funding requirements are reviewed annually with an actuarial valuation for funding purposes effective as at December 31. As the Company's DBPP qualifies as a "retirement compensation arrangement" pursuant to the Income Tax Act, half of any required annual contribution to the plan is remitted to the Canada Revenue Agency, held in a refundable tax account and refunded in prescribed amounts as actual benefit payments are made to the participants. The most recent actuarial valuation for funding purposes was performed effective December 31, 2020. Management's preliminary estimate is that $852,000 is the required contribution to the plan during the year ending December 31, 2021.

The assets of both pension plans are held separately from those of the Company in funds under the control of trustees.

Notes to Financial Statements

For the year ended December 31, 2020 (Amounts stated in thousands of Canadian dollars)

The DBPP exposes the Company to risks such as: investment risk, interest rate risk, longevity risk and salary risk.

Investment risk	The present value of the defined benefit plan liability is calculated using a discount rate determined by reference to high quality mid-duration corporate bond yields; if the return on plan assets is below this rate, it will create a plan deficit. Currently the plan has a relatively balanced investment in equity and fixed income securities. Due to the long-term nature of the plan liabilities, the Company considers it appropriate that a reasonable portion of the plan assets should be invested in equity securities to leverage the return generated by the fund.
Interest rate risk	A decrease in the market interest rate will increase the plan obligation; however, this will be partially offset by an increase in the return of the plan's fixed income securities.
Longevity risk	The present value of the defined benefit plan obligation is calculated by reference to the best estimate of the mortality of plan participants both during and after their employment. An increase in the life expectancy of the plan participants will increase the plan's obligation.
Salary risk	The present value of the defined benefit plan liability is calculated by reference to the future salaries of plan participants. As such, an increase in the salary of the plan participants will increase the plan's obligation.

The significant assumptions used by the Company for year-end measurement purposes are as follows:

	2020	2019
Discount rate	2.45%	3.05%
Rate of compensation increase	4.50% starting in 2021	4.50% starting in 2021

The sensitivity of the key assumption, namely discount rate, assuming all other assumptions remain constant, is as follows: as at December 31, 2020, if the discount rate was 0.6% higher / (lower) the defined benefit obligation would increase by $788,666 (decrease by $1,111,816). Note that the sensitivity analysis may not be representative of the actual change in the defined benefit obligation as it is unlikely that the change in assumption would occur in isolation of one or other changes as some of the assumptions may be correlated.

The expected maturity profile of the DBPP obligation as at December 31, 2020 is as follows:

	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	Thereafter

19. Capital Management

Capital is comprised of the Company's equity. As at December 31, 2020 the Company's equity was $269,569,898 (December 31, 2019: $271,301,246). The Company's objectives when managing capital are to maintain financial strength and protect its claims paying abilities, to maintain creditworthiness and to provide a reasonable return to the shareholder over the long term. In conjunction with the Company's Board of Directors and its Audit Committee, senior management develops the capital strategy and oversees the capital management processes of the Company. Capital is managed using both regulatory capital measures and internal metrics.

FSRA, the Company's primary insurance regulator, along with other provincial insurance regulators, regulate the capital required in the Company using two key measures, i.e., Minimum Capital Test ("MCT") and the Financial Condition Testing ("FCT"). FSRA mandates the MCT guideline which sets out 100% as the minimum and 150% as the supervisory target for P&C insurance companies. To ensure that it attains its objectives, the Company has established an internal target of 170% (2019: 170%) in excess of which, under normal circumstances, the Company will maintain its capital. During the year ended December 31, 2020, the Company complied with the various provincial regulators' guidelines and as at December 31, 2020, the Company has a MCT ratio of 229% (December 31, 2019: 242%). Annually, the Company's Appointed Actuary prepares a FCT on the MCT to ensure that the Company has adequate capital to withstand significant adverse event scenarios. These scenarios are reviewed each year to ensure appropriate risks are included in the testing process. The Appointed Actuary must present both an annual report and the FCT report to management and the Audit Committee. The FCT report prepared during the year indicated that the Company's capital position is satisfactory. In addition, the target, actual and forecasted capital position of the Company is subject to ongoing monitoring by management using stress and scenario analysis to ensure its adequacy.

The Company may use reinsurance to manage its capital position.

20. Risk Management

By virtue of the nature of the insurance company business, financial instruments comprise the majority of the Company's statement of financial position as at both December 31, 2020 and 2019. The most significant identified risks to the Company which arise from holding financial instruments and insurance contract liabilities include insurance risk, credit risk, liquidity risk and market risk. The market risk exposure of the Company is primarily related to changes in interest rates and adverse movement in equity prices.

The Company employs an enterprise-wide risk management framework which establishes practices for risk management and includes policies and processes to identify, assess, manage and monitor risks and risk tolerance limits. It provides governance and supervision of risk management activities across the Company's business units, promoting the discipline and consistency applied to the practice of risk management.

The Company's risk framework is designed to minimize risks that could materially adversely affect the value or stature of the Company, to contribute to stable and sustainable returns, to identify risks that the Company can manage in order to increase earnings, and to provide transparency of the Company's risks through internal and external reporting. The Company's risk philosophy involves undertaking risks for appropriate return and accepting those risks that meet its objectives. The Company's risk management program is aligned with its long term vision and its culture supports an effective risk management program. The key components of the risk culture include acting with fairness, appreciating the impact of risk on all major stakeholders, embedding risk management into day to day business activities, fostering full and transparent communications, cooperation, and aligning of objectives and incentives. The Company's risk management activities are monitored by its Risk Committee and Board of Directors.

The risk exposure measures expressed below primarily include the sensitivity of the Company's profit or loss, and OCI as applicable, to the movement of various economic factors. These risk exposures include the sensitivity due to specific changes in market prices and interest rate levels projected using internal models as at a specific date, and are measured relative to a starting level reflecting the Company's assets and liabilities at that date and the actuarial factors, investment returns and investment activity the Company assumes in the future. The risk exposures measure the impact of changing one factor at a time and assume that all other factors remain unchanged. Actual results can differ materially from these estimates for a variety of reasons including the interaction among these factors when more than one changes, changes in actuarial and investment return and future investment activity assumptions, actual experience differing from the assumptions, changes in business mix, effective tax rates, and other market factors and general limitations of the Company's internal models.

For the year ended December 31, 2020 (Amounts stated in thousands of Canadian dollars)

a) Insurance risk

Insurance risk is the risk of loss due to actual experience differing from the experience assumed when a product was designed and priced with respect to claims, policyholder behaviour and expenses. The Company has identified pricing risk, concentration of risk and reserving risk as its most significant sources of insurance risks. The Company's underwriting objective is to develop business within its target market on a prudent and diversified basis and to achieve profitable operating results.

Pricing risk

Pricing risk arises when actual claims experience differs from the assumptions included in pricing calculations. Historically, the underwriting results of the property and casualty industry have fluctuated significantly due to the cyclical nature of the insurance market. The market cycle is affected by the frequency and severity of claims, levels of capacity and demand, general economic conditions and price competition.

The Company focuses on profitable underwriting using a combination of experienced underwriting staff, pricing models and price adequacy monitoring tools. The Company prices its products taking into account numerous factors including claims frequency and severity trends, product line expense ratios, special risk factors associated with the product line, and the investment income earned on premiums held until the payment of claims and expenses. The Company's pricing is designed to ensure an appropriate return while also providing long-term rate stability. These factors are reviewed and adjusted periodically to ensure they reflect the current environment.

Concentration of risk

A concentration of risk represents the exposure to increased losses associated with an inadequately diversified portfolio of policy coverage. The Company has a reinsurance program to limit its exposure to catastrophic losses from any one event or set of events. The Company has approximately 99% of its business in Ontario (2019: 99%) and 95% in professional liability (2019: 95%), and consequently is exposed to trends, inflation, judicial changes and regulatory changes affecting these segments.

Reserving risk

Reserving risk arises because actual claims experience can differ adversely from the assumptions included in setting reserves, in large part due to the length of time between the occurrence of a loss, the reporting of the loss to the insurer and the ultimate resolution of the claim. Claims provisions reflect expectations of the ultimate cost of resolution and administration of claims based on an assessment of facts and circumstances then known, a review of historical settlement patterns, estimates of trends in claims severity and frequency, legal theories of liability and other factors. Reserve changes associated with claims of prior periods are recognized in the current period, which could have a significant impact on current year profit or loss. In order to mitigate this risk the Company utilizes information systems in order to maintain claims data integrity, and the claims provision valuations are prepared by an internal actuary on a quarterly basis, and are reviewed separately by, and must be acceptable to, management of the Company every quarter and the external Appointed Actuary at mid-year and year-end.

Sensitivity analyses

Risks associated with property and casualty insurance contracts are complex and subject to a number of variables which complicate quantitative sensitivity analysis. The Company considers the claims liabilities recognized in the statement of financial position is adequate. However, actual experience will differ from the expected outcome. Among the Company's lines of business, the professional liability line of business has the largest claims liabilities. Given this line of business and the actuarial methods utilized to estimate the related claims liabilities, the reported claims count development factors and average claim severity selections are the most critical of the assumptions used. The following table provides the estimated increase (decrease) of net claims liabilities and the after-tax net effect on equity if the reported claims count development factors were increased such that the estimate of unreported claims was 20% higher or the average claim severity selections were 1% higher. Other changes in assumptions are considered to be less material.

	DECEMBER 31, 2020		DECEMBER 31, 2019
	Net claims liabilities	Equity	Net claims liabilities	Equity
Unreported claims +20%	$ 4,628	(3,402)	4,493	(3,302)
Average claim severities +1%	$ 3,749	(2,755)	3,757	(2,761)

b) Credit risk

Credit risk is the risk of loss due to the inability or unwillingness of a borrower or counterparty to fulfill its payment obligation to the Company. Credit risks arise from cash and cash equivalents, investments in fixed income securities and preferred shares, and balances due from insureds and reinsurers.

Management monitors credit risk and any mitigating controls. The Company has established a credit review process where the credit quality of all exposures is continually monitored so that appropriate prompt action can be taken when there is a change which may have material impact.

Governance processes around investments include oversight by the Board of Directors' Investment Committee. The oversight includes reviews of the Company's third party investment managers, investment performance and adherence to the Company's investment policy. The Company's investment policy statement is reviewed at least on an annual basis and addresses various matters including investment objectives, risks and management. Guidelines and limits have been established in respect of asset classes, issuers of securities and the nature of securities to address matters such as quality and concentration of risks.

With respect to credit risk arising from balances due from reinsurers, the Company's exposure is measured to reflect both current exposure and potential future exposure to ceded liabilities. Reinsurance and insurance counterparties must also meet minimum risk rating criteria. The Company's Board of Directors has approved a reinsurance policy, which is monitored by the Company's Audit Committee.

c) Liquidity risk

Liquidity risk is the risk that the Company will not have enough funds available to meet all expected and unexpected cash outflow commitments as they fall due. Under stressed conditions, unexpected cash demands could arise primarily from a significant increase in the level of claim payment demands.

To manage its cash flow requirements, the Company has arranged diversified funding sources and maintains a significant portion of its invested assets in highly liquid securities such as cash and cash equivalents and government bonds (see note 5b). In addition, the Company has established counterparty exposure limits that aim to ensure that exposures are not so large that they may impact the ability to liquidate investments at their market value.

Claims liabilities account for the majority of the Company's liquidity risk. A significant portion of the investment portfolio is invested with the primary objective of matching the investment asset cash flows with the expected future payments on these claims liabilities. This portion, referred to as the ALM investment portfolio, consists of fixed income and preferred equity securities that are intended to address the liquidity and cash flow needs of the Company as claims are settled. The remainder of the Company's overall investment portfolio, the AFS portfolio, backs equity and is invested in fixed income securities and equities with the objective of preserving capital and achieving an appropriate return consistent with the objectives of the Company.

The following tables summarize the maturities of the assets and contractual obligations by contractual maturity or expected cash flow dates (the actual repricing dates may differ from contractual maturity because certain securities and debentures have the right to call or prepay obligations with or without call or prepayment penalties) as at:

d) Market and interest rate risk

Market risk is the risk that the fair value or future cash flows of financial instruments will fluctuate due to changes in market variables such as interest rate, foreign exchange rates, and equity prices. Due to the nature of the Company's business, invested assets and insurance liabilities as well as revenues and expenses are impacted by movements in capital markets, interest rates, and to a lesser extent, foreign currency exchange rates. Accordingly, the Company considers these risks together in managing its asset and liability positions and ensuring that risks are properly addressed. These risks are referred to collectively as market price and interest rate risk - the risk of loss resulting from movements in market price, interest rate, credit spreads and foreign currency rates.

Interest rate risk is the potential for financial loss arising from changes in interest rates. The Company is exposed to interest rate price risk on monetary financial assets and liabilities that have a fixed interest rate and is exposed to interest rate cash flow risk on monetary financial assets and liabilities with floating interest rates that are reset as market rates change.

For FVTPL assets and other financial assets supporting actuarial liabilities, the Company is exposed to interest rate risk when the cash flows from assets and the policy obligations they support are significantly mismatched, as this may result in the need to either sell assets to meet policy payments and expenses or reinvest excess asset cash flows under unfavourable interest environments. Bonds designated as AFS generally do not support actuarial liabilities. Changes in fair value, other than foreign exchange rate gains and losses, of AFS fixed income securities are recorded to OCI.

The following chart provides the estimated increase (decrease) on the Company's net investment income, net claims liabilities, and after-tax comprehensive income, after an immediate parallel increase or decrease of 1% in interest rates as at December 31 across the yield curve in all markets.

		DECEMBER 31, 2020
		Net investment income	Net claims liabilities	After-tax OCI	After-tax CI
Interest rates	+1%	$ (10,854)	(12,027)	(5,668)	(28,549)
	-1%	$ 10,314	8,745	5,327	24,386

		DECEMBER 31, 2019
		Net investment income	Net claims liabilities	After-tax OCI	After-tax CI
Interest rates	+1%	$ (8,792)	(11,136)	(1,327)	(21,255)
	-1%	$ 9,283	11,493	1,366	22,142

Market price and interest rate risk is managed through established policies and standards of practice that limit market price and interest rate risk exposure. Company-wide market price and interest rate risk limits are established and actual positions are monitored against limits. Target asset mixes, term profiles, and risk limits are updated regularly and communicated to portfolio managers. Actual asset positions are periodically rebalanced to within established limits.

Equity price risk is the risk that the fair values of equities decrease as the result of changes in the levels of equity indices and the value of individual equity securities. The Company's equities are designated as AFS and generally do not support actuarial liabilities. The following chart provides the estimated increase (decrease) on the Company's after-tax OCI, assuming all other variables held constant, after an immediate 10% increase or decrease in equity prices as at December 31.

		2020	2019
		After-tax OCI
Equity prices	+10%	9,979	11,692
	-10%	(9,979)	(11,692)

Notes to Financial Statements

Currency risk is the risk that the fair value or future cash flows of a financial instrument will fluctuate because of changes in foreign exchange rates, in particular when an asset and liability mismatch exists in a different currency than the currency in which they are measured. As the Company does not hold significant liabilities in foreign currencies, the resulting currency risk is borne by the Company and forms part of its overall investment income. The table below details the effect of a 10% movement of the currency rate against the Canadian dollar as at December 31, with all other variables held constant.

Currency	2020		2019
	Effect on profit (loss) before taxes (+/-)	Effect on OCI (+/-)	Effect on profit (loss) before taxes (+/-)	Effect on OCI (+/-)
US Dollar	9	3,906	26	4,150
Euro	-	159	-	1,333
Other	-	2,316	1	2,115
	9	6,381	27	7,598

The Company also manages possible excessive concentration of risk. Excessive concentrations arise when a number of counterparties are engaged in similar business activities, or activities in the same geographic region, or have similar economic features that would cause their ability to meet contractual obligations to be similarly affected by changes in economic, political and other conditions. Concentrations indicate the relative sensitivity of the Company's performance to developments affecting a particular industry or geographic location. In order to avoid excessive concentrations of risk, the Company applies specific policies on maintaining a diversified portfolio. Identified risk concentrations are managed accordingly.

The following tables summarize the carrying amounts of financial assets by geographical location of the issuer, as at:

21. Contingent Asset

In 2013, the Income Tax Act was amended to extend tax exempt status given to certain subsidiaries of Canadian municipalities to also include certain subsidiaries of public bodies performing a function of government in Canada. Transitional rules were also included to allow applicable taxpayers to refile on this tax exempt basis for their taxation years beginning after May 8, 2000. After completing a detailed and careful evaluation of the applicability of the new provisions to the Company, the Company believes that it is probable that a refund claim would be successful. Accordingly, during 2014 the Company began filing as a tax exempt organization for income tax purposes, and has requested full retrospective exemption back to its 2001 taxation year. The income tax payments relating to taxation years 2001 onwards total as much as $90,527,811. The exemption would also give rise to significant ongoing future income tax savings, but the Company's deferred income tax asset would be of nil value.

Canada Revenue Agency did not approve the Company's request for exemption and the Company appealed to the Tax Court of Canada. The judgement was released in 2018 and the Company was not successful. The Company further appealed to the Federal Court of Appeal. The judgement was released in 2020 and the Company was not successful. In November 2020, the Company sought leave from the Supreme Court of Canada to submit a further appeal and is awaiting a decision on the leave application.

* Committee Chair

(A) Affiliated Director within meaning of Ontario Insurance Act

N.B. The Chair and Vice-Chair of LAWPRO are ex-officio members of all committees, by resolution of the Board.

<sup>2</sup> The Audit and Conduct Review Committees must have at least three director-members and a majority must be non-affiliated directors. Officers or employees of LAWPRO cannot be members of the Committees.

The Board of Directors, either directly or through its committees, bears responsibility for the stewardship of the Company. To discharge that responsibility, the Board supervises the management of the business and the affairs of the Company, including the oversight or monitoring of all significant aspects of the operation, so that the Company effectively and efficiently fulfills its mission, vision and values.

The Company's corporate governance framework, processes, structures and information are designed to strengthen the ability of the Board to oversee management, and to enhance long-term policyholder value. Every director has a duty to guide the Company's affairs in a manner that achieves the Company's objectives.

The corporate governance processes and mandate are derived, in part, from the Ontario Insurance Act and regulatory "best practices," and are expressed in the Company's corporate governance framework.

Board Independence

Demonstrable evidence of independence is at the heart of effective governance. Independence is normally a matter of a board demonstrating its ability to act independently of management when appropriate. Currently, only the chief executive officers of LAWPRO and the Law Society of Ontario are "affiliated" to the Company within the meaning of applicable legislation. A minority of directors are Benchers or employees of the Law Society of Ontario.

Board Composition

Annually, the Board reviews its composition to determine whether or not the Board is optimally structured to ensure the achievement of the corporate strategy and business plan. Also important is a regular assessment of the skills, experience and independence of those on the Board.

Board Responsibilities

The basic oversight responsibilities of the Board are described in its corporate governance framework, and include:

- Corporate performance oversight: The Board ensures that corporate management continuously and effectively strives to meet the two opposing goals of minimizing premiums and achieving a satisfactory financial result, taking account of risk.
- Appointment of CEO and related human resources issues: The Board appoints the CEO and approves the CEO's objectives, assesses their performance and determines compensation of the CEO. As well, the Board approves key appointments reporting to the CEO, reviews key executive performance and approves compensation policy and succession plans.

- Strategic direction and policy: The Board reviews and approves management's proposed strategic direction and policy matters, and ensures that policies on key issues, including exposure to various risks, are in place, are appropriate and are reviewed to ensure compliance with same.
- Budgeting and planning: The Board approves the Company's proposed budgets and other performance goals, reviews performance against goals and recommends corrective actions.
- Risk Management: The Board monitors all categories of risk affecting the Company's operations, approves risk management strategies and assesses risk management performance, including the Company's audit universe and its Own Risk and Solvency Assessment (ORSA).
- Regulatory compliance and financial monitoring: Through an independent audit committee, the Board requires and monitors regulatory compliance, appoints the auditor, oversees the audit process and reviews and approves financial reports. The Board also ensures that financial systems produce accurate and timely information, and that appropriate controls are in place.
- Ensuring its own effectiveness: The Board establishes committee structures that assist the effective operations of the Board, and enable a review and assessment of the Board's own performance.
- Setting an appropriate cultural tone: Through its support for the corporation's vision, mission and values and corporate social responsibility statement and its adherence to the Code of Business Conduct, the Board promotes a culture of integrity, exemplary business conduct, and due regard for the fair treatment of customers while acting in a commercially reasonable manner.

Board Committees

The members of the Board are assisted in fulfilling the responsibilities explained above through the following committees:

Audit committee

The audit committee assists the Board in monitoring:

- the integrity of the Company's financial reporting process;
- the financial and solvency risks that the Company is exposed to;
- the controls for managing those risks, including the internal audit function; and
- the independence and performance of the Company's external auditor and actuary.

Conduct review committee

The conduct review committee oversees the Company's compliance with the related party provisions of the Ontario insurance legislation.

Executive committee

The executive committee has the authority of the Board, subject to the limitations of law and those set forth in the Company's bylaws, to consider urgent matters that require action prior to the next Board meeting. Actions taken by the executive committee are reported to the full Board at the next meeting.

Governance committee

The governance committee:

- assists the Board in its oversight role with respect to: a) the development of the Company's corporate governance policies, practices and processes; and b) the effectiveness of the Board and its committees;
- identifies individuals qualified and suitable to become Board members and recommends the director nominees to each annual meeting of the shareholder;
- assists the Board in its oversight role with respect to: a) the Company's human resources strategy, policies and programs; and b) all matters relating to proper utilization of human resources within the Company, with special focus on management succession, development and compensation;
- oversees procedures for resolving conflicts of interest; and
- assists the Board in liaising with the shareholder.

Investment committee

The investment committee:

- assists the Board and management in managing the invested assets of the Company;
- develops and monitors investment policies and guidelines;
- provides recommendations to the Board in connection with the hiring of external investment managers; and
- meets with and monitors the performance of external investment managers.

Risk committee

The risk committee assists the Board in monitoring all risks (other than financial and solvency risks) to which the Company is subject and overseeing the development and implementation of appropriate risk management policies and programs.

Subject: Serious concerns about new (secret) expert hires at LSO EIA Committee
Date: Monday, November 22, 2021 2:32:02 PM
Attachments: MK draft email to EIAC and Benchers re three experts - 10VW1.docx

Chair and Members of EIA Committee (with copy to all Benchers, and some senior staff),

I am writing as a member of EIAC to express my most serious concerns about being advised, for the first time, in the briefing memo received on Nov. 19 in preparation for the upcoming EIA Committee meeting on Thursday, that "someone" (I don't know who) has, without any prior notice to or involvement of the Committee, already selected and retained three unnamed "experts" to perform major (and no doubt expensive) work on a fundamental issue pertaining to this Committee's and Convocation's work.

None of the important (and controversial) work, or the expenditures, that this involves has, as far as I can tell, been discussed with, or been authorized by, the Committee or Convocation.

The gist of things seems to be that the Law Society a few years ago spent close to half a million dollars on some seriously unprofessional and extremely misleading consultants reports, which were then used and are still being used on important policy matters, and now a small group of Law Society staff and Benchers have, in secret, decided to spend probably hundreds of thousands of dollars more to try to cover up and clean up the previous (and continuing) mess, without letting on that that is what they are doing. All without any authorization from the Committee or Convocation.

I regret feeling that I have to send this to all Benchers, but as Benchers, we are also each a director of the Law Society corporation, with individual fiduciary duties, and I believe that the issues herein raise serious issues of financial management, good governance, and quite simply, honesty and integrity at the Law Society, of which I believe each of us needs to be aware in order to carry out our due diligence.

For the reasons and in the context summarized below, I am therefore formally requesting that I promptly be provided (by the appropriate staff member) with:

1. The names of the three experts who have been retained;
- 2.. A copy of any Request for Proposal or equivalent that was delivered to the three experts (or to any other experts as part of this process);
3. A copy of any proposal or similar materials that was received from the three experts (or any other expert that was part of this process);

4. A copy of any contracts, agreements, or retainers entered into with those three experts, and of any directions given to them; and

5. The amounts already paid to those experts, and the amounts agreed to be paid to them in the future.

Please note that this is a formal request as a director of the Law Society corporation for information to which I believe I am legally entitled under s. 302 (a), (b) and (d) and s. 304(1) of the Ontario Corporations Act, and under the common law rights of a corporate director (see also Tyler v. Envacon Inc., 2012 ABQB 631). Further, given the circumstances, I believe that I need the above information to properly carry out my due diligence role as a director of the Law Society corporation.

For context, the memo dated November 17, 2021 (and posted to members of the Committee on November 19) states regarding the retaining of the three experts:

Given [the above] context, a peer review of the Challenges Report has been undertaken. A decision on how to move forward with the Inclusion Index data will be made once the review is completed. The review will explore whether the implementation of the Challenges Report provides effective requirements, incentives and information that assist in reducing barriers faced by racialized and Indigenous licensees. ... The review will also provide recommendations for further enhancement of EDI within the legal community. (p. 3)

The peer review is being conducted by a panel of experts and will be completed in April 2022. The three experts who have been retained possess significant knowledge in survey methodology, research, and equity, diversity and inclusion. Care was taken to compile a list of experts who can provide neutral and objective commentary. A summary of the review will be presented to the Committee and Convocation in May or June 2022. (p. 3)

What is omitted from this memo is any mention of the reality that the Challenges/Stratcom report (and the Inclusion Index which was recommended as an eventual offshoot) were both simply appallingly bad, in terms of the quality of the surveying and statistical methodology, interpretation, and presentation. One would get no hint of that reality in reading this memo. What seems to be going on here is that "someone" has secretly hired several experts basically to try to re-do the work that was originally completely bungled (at great expense to the Law Society). It seems like a small secret cabal of Benchers and staff, presumably with the knowledge and approval of the CEO, is unilaterally spending large amounts of our members' licensing dues to try to repair a massive and expensive previous mistake - without hinting that there is any problem.

A central and key part of the Challenges report by Stratcom was what they called a "survey" involving all (approximately 52,000, at that time) of the members of the lawyer and paralegal professions in Ontario. However, the survey had no element of random sampling (which is critical), the response rate was extremely low (about 6% overall, and about 10% from the key visible minority segment of the target population), there was no recognition or discussion whatsoever of the enormous potential for non-response bias and self-selection bias, and the survey questions were incompetently worded. Nor were many of the critical data points actually presented in the report, thus breaching fundamental principles of disclosure that are basic to survey professionalism - perhaps because clearly presenting that data would have exposed the incompetence of the "survey" and would have made clear some "real" results that did not fit the preexisting political purpose of the project.

Yet the Stratcom consultants stated that the survey had resulted in a sample "that produces representative, unbiased estimates of the views and opinions of Law Society licensees." It beggars the imagination as to how Stratcom could make that pronouncement. As I have repeatedly stated in meetings, the consultant was either seriously unprofessional, or seriously dishonest, or both.

Furthermore, the Challenges/Stratcom report was partly based on interviews with 27 so-called "experts", whose identity, and whose basis for the asserted expertise, was never provided. Nor were their actual views described, other than in a short summary by an unknown LSO staff member. The result was that a reader had no way at all of assessing whether this so-called "expert" evidence actually meant anything at all.

Finally, the Challenges/Stratcom report itself was never actually provided to or presented to Benchers or Convocation for their review (as is the almost universal practice for important documents at the LSO), which made it very difficult for the Benchers at the time to carry out any sort of proper due diligence check.

And yet the subsequent use made of this appallingly poor-quality report was immense. It served as the foundation for a massive suite of policy initiatives implementing sweeping changes within the Law Society and throughout the legal professions in Ontario. Its results were trumpeted in the media, and have been cited in at least one court decision. At least one of its (false) statistical “findings” found its way into the EDI CPD videos which all licensees are required to watch, so the misrepresentations of the Stratcom report have been disseminated far and wide, seemingly backed up by the authority of the Law Society.

One example of the extreme distortion resulting from the grossly unprofessional Challenges/Stratcom report is that no one has mentioned a critically important fact revealed by the survey: that when every single member of the legal professions in Ontario was directly and repeatedly invited to anonymously fill out a major survey on the topic of discrimination in the professions, about 90% of visible minority licensees simply decided to not bother at all. Furthermore, and importantly, of the extremely small percentage that did answer, in response to one oft-cited question (Question 17) regarding whether they had experienced their race as a barrier, the majority of visible minority respondents answered "no" (or some other answer, but not "yes"). That is, given the opportunity, only about 4% of visible minority members of the legal professions as a whole answered "yes" – not the 40% that is frequently repeated and broadcast.

Similarly, the Inclusion Index plan that was adopted based on the Challenges/Stratcom report suffered from severe (and fatal) survey methodological errors (including a critical error that was expressly warned against by the very expert who was cited in support of the Inclusion Index).

These various fundamental and egregious errors have been repeatedly pointed out by me, including in a Critical Review distributed by me on January 8, 2020, and in detailed emails to all Benchers (see my emails to all Benchers dated Sept. 15, 2020 and Sept. 29, 2020). One would have thought that if my critiques were misplaced, someone - the experts whom I criticized, or LSO staff - would have pointed out my mistakes and defended the Report and the Index. That has not happened. Not a single point of my critiques has ever been rebutted or even addressed. They have been met with a “wall of silence” from the majority of Benchers and from all staff, probably because the Challenges/Stratcom report, and the planned Inclusion Index, are so bad that they are simply indefensible (almost the only response received was a “reply-all” from Bencher Falconer, who tersely stated only that my critiques were “meritless”, without any elaboration. Presumably these three new “secret” experts are now needed because it has dawned on some that my critiques were not, indeed, “meritless”).

I suppose one might ask whether someone concerned about the Stratcom report and the Inclusion Index, or a critic of them such as myself, should not draw some comfort from the fact that they are now going to be reviewed by “a panel of experts”. I wish that that were the case, but it is not. The current process of selecting these experts, and of instructing them, has been conducted so far in complete secrecy (for almost a year (?) - without most of us even being aware that any of this was going on), and based on the memo, that secrecy appears to be the plan for the rest of their work, for the next six or so months - all seemingly under the guidance of some individuals who already have been heavily involved from the start in what I call “the ideologically-driven train-wreck” in which we now find ourselves.

Finally, I would quote from the Law Society's “Business Conduct Policy”, which states: “The Law Society's reputation for integrity is one of its most valued assets and essential to the fulfillment of its mission of governing the profession and protecting the public interest. It is imperative that honesty and fair dealing characterize all of the Law Society's activities both with the public and the profession.”

It is time for the Law Society to be frank and transparent about what has happened, both financially and substantively, with the Challenges/Stratcom report and the Inclusion Index.

I look forward to the prompt delivery of the requested information.

Sincerely,

Murray Klippenstein

Re.: Change of Status Survey Results for Lawyers and Paralegals

---

1. Purpose

To provide the Committee with an update on the Change of Status Survey results for lawyers and paralegals.

2. Background

In 2008, the Retention of Women in Private Practice Working Group (the “Working Group”) of the Law Society conducted a series of consultations to better understand movements within the legal profession in Ontario among women.

The final consultation report of the Working Group put forth a series of recommendations to promote the advancement of women in private practice.

In order to better understand and begin benchmarking movements and changes of women lawyers and paralegals, the Law Society commissioned Navigator to undertake an analysis of legal professionals who have filed a change of status.

Navigator will present their research findings to the Committee at its November meeting. Slide presentations summarizing the findings can be found at TAB 1.1 and TAB 1.2.

Law Society of Ontario Lawyer Change Survey

About the Research

Background and Purpose

In 2008, the Retention of Women in Private Practice Working Group of The Law Society conducted a series of consultations to better understand movements within the legal profession in Ontario among women.

The Final Consultation Report of the Working Group put forth a series of recommendations to promote the advancement of women in private practice.

In order to better understand and begin benchmarking movements and changes within the legal profession among women, The Law Society commissioned Navigator to undertake an analysis of lawyers who have filed a notice of change.

Three years of research data (2016-17 and 2019 and 2020) have been collected and combined in order to inform the Law Society about gender-related trends among lawyers, in addition to informing the development of initiatives to support and retain women and men in the legal profession – with an emphasis on private practice.

This report also compares the 2016-2020 data with two previous waves of research (2010-2012 and 2013-2015) to provide analysis of changes over time.

Issues Explored in the Research

What the Research Explored

The main trends among lawyers who make a change:

- Is there a shift to or away from private practice?
- Where are those leaving private practice going:
  - Practise in a non-private practice setting;
  - Working, but not practising law;
  - Not working.

For those leaving private practice, what are the greatest motivators?

How do trends differ, if at all, between women and men?

Are there trends in movement across the three waves of research (2010-2012, 2013-2015, 2016-2020)?

Who was Surveyed

The current wave of the survey was conducted online among lawyer members who made a change in 2016-2017 and 2019-2020.

During these time periods, 10,872 lawyers submitted a change notice.

The response rate for the current wave of the survey was 23% (n=2473).

Respondent Characteristics

Analytical Approach:

The analysis focuses on strictly those whose change did not involve a move into or out of maternity/ parental leave or retirement.

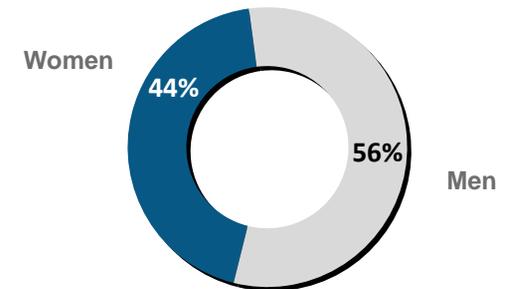

The representation of women among the Law Society of Ontario's membership is 44%.

Those who have submitted a change notice to the LSO, are significantly more likely to be women (59%) than men (41%).

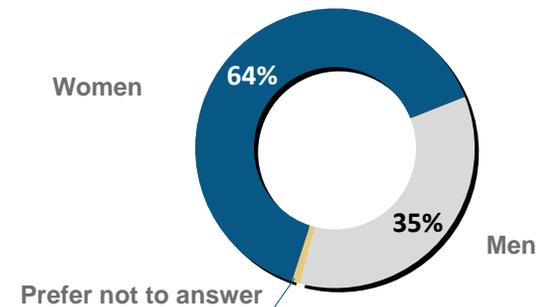

The representation of women among survey respondents is slightly higher (64%) than the broader population of those who submitted a change notice.

Lawyer Membership of The Law Society in 2020*

% Among survey respondents (excluding those whose change is related to maternity/ parental leave or retirement)

Respondent Characteristics**

Among those who have submitted a change notice, over four-in-ten are women under 45 years of age, with one-in-five under the age of 35. By contrast, only one-in-five are men are under 45 years of age, and just one-in-ten is under 35 years.

Key Trends

As the Law Society seeks to promote the retention of women in private practice, trends among those who are moving to non-private practice are significant.

The incidence of those who are making a change from a position in private practice has increased significantly with each wave (9 points over three waves). Further, over the last two waves, the drop in those who are in private practice has more than doubled (from 7 points to fully 15 points). These results indicate that there is a challenge in private practice retention and are reflective of an overall decline of members in private practice evident in LSO's membership statistics.

Change trends among women are critical given that women are disproportionately represented among those who submitted a change notice (59%) compared to their representation within LSO's lawyer membership (44%).

- 1) Across all three waves of research, while at least half of women were in private practice prior to their change, 45% or less are in private practice after their change. The rate of retention in private practice for women compared to men is significantly lower across all waves of the research. These findings strongly suggest that a private practice retention challenge exists for women lawyers.
- 2) The research finds that in the last two waves, there has been a significant loss from private practice of younger women (<45 years) who have no dependent children. While there has been a loss in 2016-2020 among men, the rate is lower than for women. There was no significant decline in the incidence of private practice among younger men with no dependents in 2013-2015. For those with dependents under 13 years of age, there are no significant differences in private practice retention rates between women and men. This suggests that there is a particular retention concern among younger female lawyers who have not become parents.

Key Trends

- 3) Women who have left private practice for non-private practice are more likely than men who have done the same to report on an unprompted basis that work-life balance, poor fit or negative aspects of previous job or discrimination / harassment were important factors in their decision to leave. On a prompted basis, work-life balance also emerges more strongly for women than men who have left private practice, as do the need to reduce stress in the workplace, decrease workload, and the availability of a pension and parental leave in non-private practice positions.
- 4) Digging more deeply into the reasons why the youngest cohort of women – specifically those with no dependents – are leaving private practice for non-private positions, fit appears to be a driving factor. The data provide some evidence that these women are seeking more team-oriented environments, and those that are less competitive in nature.
- 5) Once women have left private practice, the vast majority report that they will be unlikely to return.

Change Trends

Incidence of private practice setting prior to and after a change

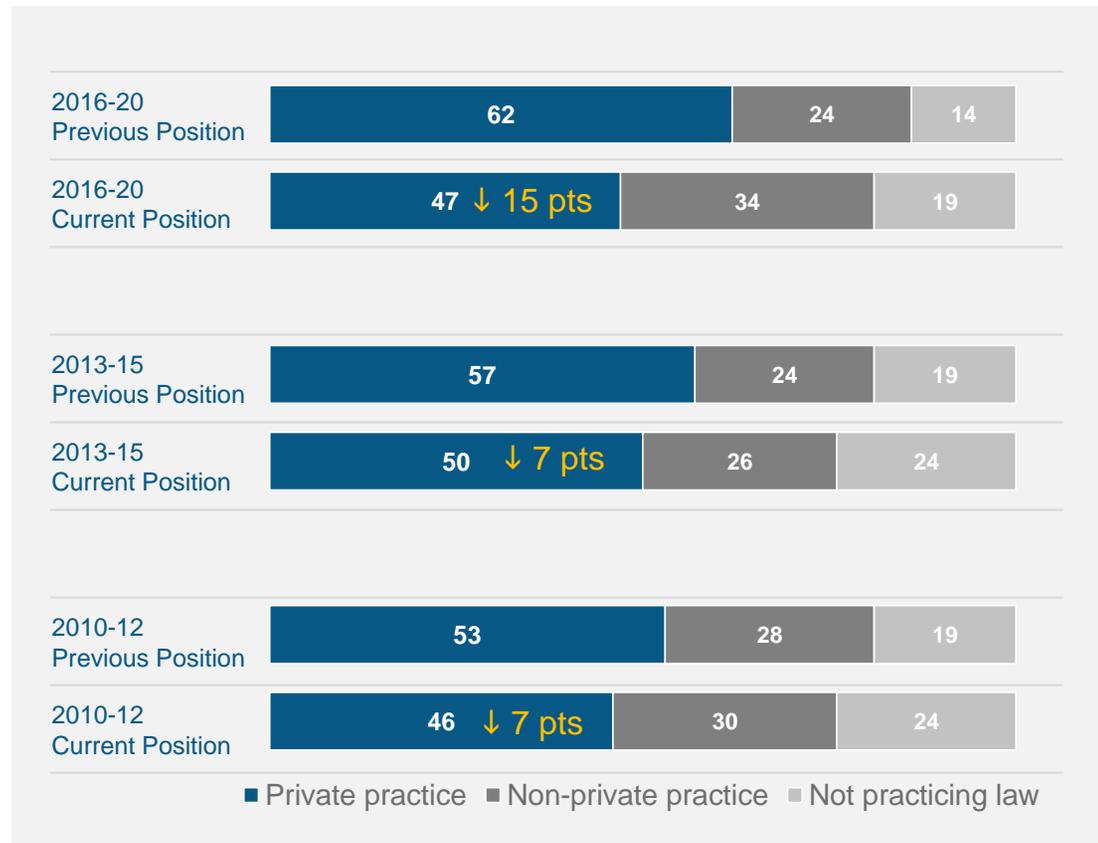

There is an overall decline in the incidence of those in private practice after a change across all three waves of research.

Six-in-ten (62%) respondents** in the 2016-2020 wave indicate that they were in private practice prior to their change.

Only 47% were in private practice following a change – down 15 points.

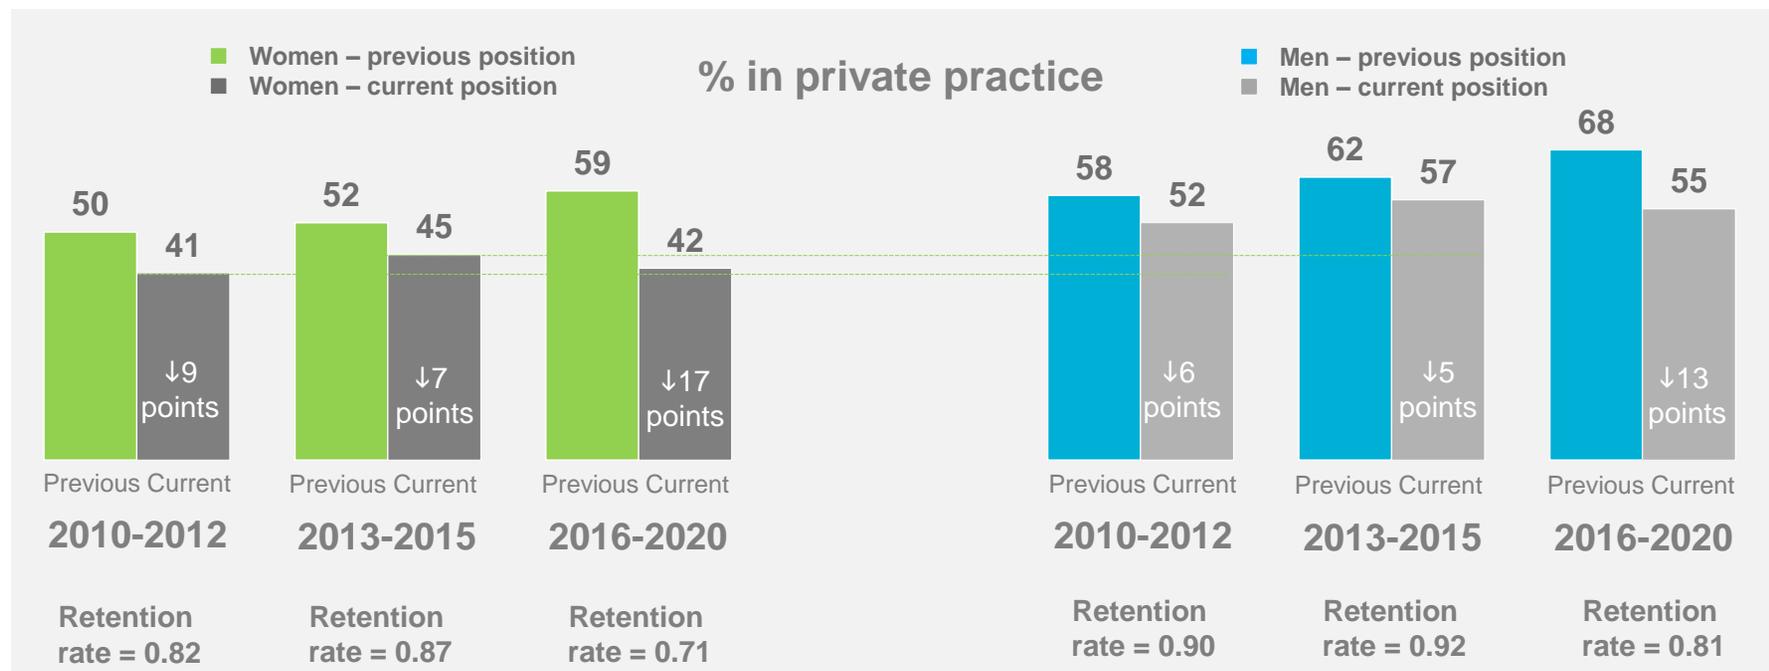

There were also declines in the previous two waves, but those declines were significantly smaller (down 7 points in each wave).

Overall Change Trends

Incidence of Private Practice Setting by Gender

Across all three waves, the decline is evident among both men and women, although for women the decline is greater in each wave. The private practice retention rate (i.e., the proportion who are in private practice after a change of status divided by the proportion in private practice prior a change of status) is significantly lower for women than it is for men (0.87 and 0.92, respectively).

Private Practice Retention Rates Based on Age of Dependents

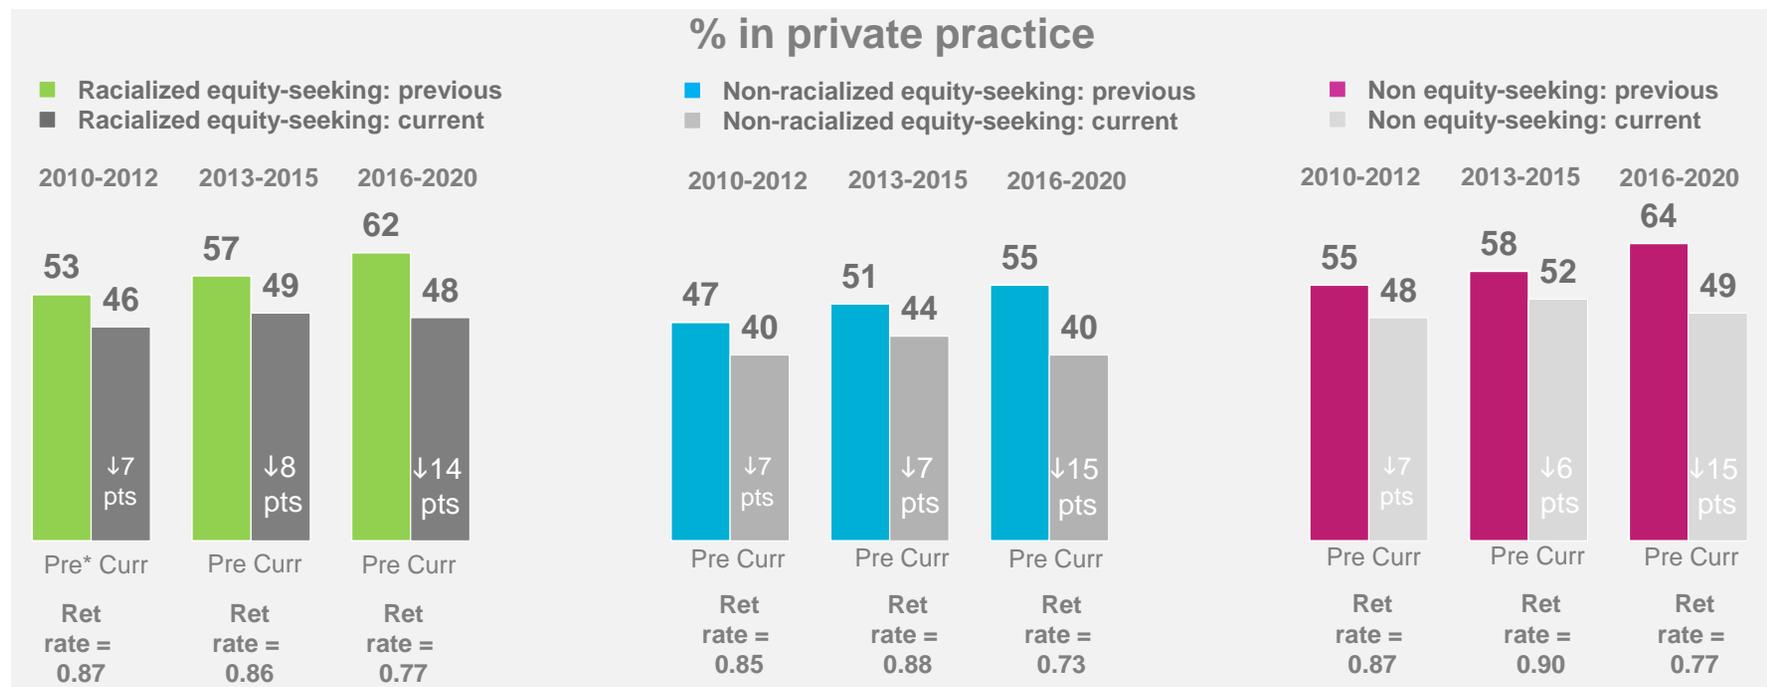

An examination of change rates based on age of dependents in the household finds that women under 45 years of age with no dependents are more likely to be leaving private practice than their male counterparts in 2013-2015 and 2016-2020. Over half of women in this cohort in each wave (56% and 66%, respectively) were in private practice prior to their change, but less than half (47% and 42%) were in private practice after a change (declines of 9 points and 24 points respectively). Among men, the declines are significantly smaller (-3 points and -19 points). Retention rates reflect the declines among women compared to men.

* Caution: Sample size is under 75. Results should be considered directional

Incidence of Private Practice by Equity-Seeking Communities

There have been no significant differences across equity-seeking and non-equity seeking communities in the private practice retention rates over the three waves.

* This category includes: Laid off, termination, contract ended, semi-retired, health problems leading to leave, back to original position, firm closure, relocation, leave, return after leave, end of articling, return from clerkship.

Unprompted Key Factors for a Change

Two approaches were taken to explore why lawyers made their change. First, they were asked to identify, on an unprompted basis, the key factors that influenced their decision to make a change. Following this unprompted approach, they were provided with a list of potential reasons for a change and asked how important each was in their decision.

This approach ensures that the exploration taps into both top-of-mind (unprompted) reasons for a change, and also peels the onion to tap into other, more latent factors that played a role in their decision (prompted reasons).

Unprompted key factors for a change

Among all respondents, the factor cited most frequently for a change – on an unprompted basis - is improved professional opportunities.

The end of a position, contract or leave is cited by over one-quarter. Work-life balance is a factor among just under one-quarter of those who made a change.

Unprompted Factors for Change by Gender

Improved professional opportunities is the key factor cited for leaving private practice for a non-private position among both women and men – although slightly more prevalent among men.

Work-life balance is next on the list for women (41%) – but is significantly less likely to be cited by men (27%).

Other issues that are significantly more likely to drive a change among women than among men who have left private practice for a non-private position are negative aspects of a previous position** and discrimination or harassment.

Prompted Reasons for a Change by Gender and Change Outcome

Women who have left private practice are significantly more likely than the comparative groups (women remaining in private practice, and men both having stayed in or left private practice) to identify the following as important reasons for having made their change:

- Balancing career and family
- Reducing stress in the workplace
- Decreased workload
- Pension
- Parental leave

Importance of prompted reasons for change among those who were in private practice prior to a change

Top Prompted Reasons For Change Among Younger Lawyers

Noted earlier, younger women with no dependents have had lower private practice retention rates than men over the past two waves.

Looking at the prompted reasons that have driven a change among these women, the most likely to be identified as an important reason is the ability to use their skills (63%). Although this is the top reason among young men as well, the frequency with which it is considered an important reason is lower (54%) compared to women.

Second most important among younger women is the ability to balance career and family (58%). This reason is lower down on the list among men at 45%.

Sample sizes restrict the ability to look specifically at the differences in reasons among younger women who have left private practice compared to other cohorts and younger men who have left private practice.

Digging More Deeply into Why Younger Lawyers with No Dependents are Leaving Private Practice for Non-Private Practice

A new set of questions was added to the Change Survey in the most recent wave.

Those who have made a change were asked to think back to their first position out of articling. If they started out in private practice and moved to another practice setting, the reasons for doing so were explored. Some of the reasons for leaving private practice probed in this wave were not probed in previous waves.

As women with no child dependents have consistently been moving out of private practice to non-private practice positions at a greater rate than men over the past two waves, the findings among this segment are particularly important. While the results should be considered qualitative in nature due to the relatively small sample sizes, they do provide some insights into why younger women are leaving.

The results suggest that women and men with no dependents who have moved to a non-private practice position are equally as likely to report that they started out in private practice after articling. Those who reported that they intended to make their careers in private practice but their path changed were asked why this has been the case.

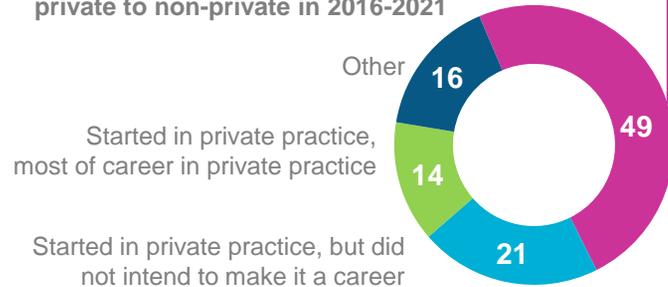

Women place a greater focus than their male counterparts on finding workplace environments that are more team-oriented, and those that are less competitive in nature. Further, they are more likely to be seeking a workplace culture that promotes and exhibits equality, diversity and inclusion.

Likelihood of Returning to Private Practice Among Those who have moved to Non-Private Practice

Women who have left private practice for a non-private practice position are significantly less likely than are men to report that they would consider returning to private practice. Less than one-quarter in the last two waves report some likelihood to return to private practice.

Suggestions for What LSO Can Do to Assist

Those who have left private practice for non-private practice but might consider returning were invited to provide suggestions as to how the LSO could assist them to return.

The sample sizes for this area of exploration are small as only a small proportion of these respondents say that they might return to practice. As such, results should be considered directional.

Among women, interest in seeing a change in corporate culture emerges as a suggestion. This does not appear to be an issue among men.

Among men, there appears to be a greater emphasis on education and training opportunities.

Law Society of Ontario Paralegal Change Survey

Issues Explored in the Research

WHAT THE RESEARCH EXPLORED

The main trends among paralegals who make a change:

- Is there a shift to or away from private practice?
- Where are those leaving private practice going:
  - Practise in a non-private practice setting;
  - Non-paralegal work setting (non-practice work);
  - Not working; or
  - Some other setting.

For those leaving private practice, what are the greatest motivators?

How do trends differ, if at all, between women and men?

Are there trends in movement across waves of research 2012-2014 and 2016-2020?

WHO WAS SURVEYED

The current wave of the survey was conducted online among paralegal members who made a change in 2016-2017 and 2019-2020.

During these time periods, 2623 paralegals submitted a change notice.

The response rate for the survey across these two periods was 24% (n=642).

Respondent Characteristics

The analysis focuses on strictly those whose change did not involve a move into or out of maternity/ parental leave or retirement.

The gender representation of survey respondents is consistent with the Law Society's of Ontario's (LSO) paralegal membership overall*.

Paralegal Membership of The Law Society in 2020*

% Among survey respondents (excluding those whose change is related to maternity/ parental leave or retirement)

Research Context and Key Trends

As the Law Society sees paralegal practice as enhancing access to justice, trends among those in private practice who make a change are highly significant. The importance is underscored by the fact that according to LSO member data from 2020, only 38% of the paralegal membership is providing legal services.

Related to this analysis, trends among women are also critical given that women comprise 66% of paralegals.

- 1) Across both waves of research, at least four-in-ten women and men who were in private practice prior to a change report that they are no longer practising as a paralegal. In the current wave, the proportion no longer practising is fully half among both women and men. These findings strongly suggest that a private practice retention challenge exists.
- 2) The research finds that there is a significant loss of women from private practice among the youngest age cohort (<35 years). By contrast, there is no significant change in the incidence of the youngest cohort of men in private practice. This suggests that there is a particular retention concern among women under the age of 35.
- 3) Women who left private practice for another setting are more likely than their colleagues (both women and men who have stayed in private practice, and men who have left private practice) to report better remuneration, job security, opportunities for promotion and benefits were important factors in their decision to leave. Sample sizes preclude analysis of women younger than 35 on this issue.
- 4) Those who have left private practice altogether were invited to provide suggestions as to how the LSO could assist them to return. Analysis of this question among women who have left private practice does not provide any significant amount of guidance. Responses are widely diffused, with no single type of suggestion being made by more than one-in-five of these women and the majority being provided by 12% or less. Mentioned by at least one-in-ten are job search and networking assistance, a focus on billable hours, and mentoring.

Executive Summary

INCIDENCE OF PRIVATE PRACTICE SETTING PRIOR TO A CHANGE

There is an overall decline in the incidence of those in private practice after a change across both waves of research.

Six-in-ten (60%) respondents** in the 2016-2020 wave indicate that they were in private practice prior to their change. The proportion declined significantly following a change – down 18 points to 42%. The decline in 2012-2014 was significantly smaller at -5 points.

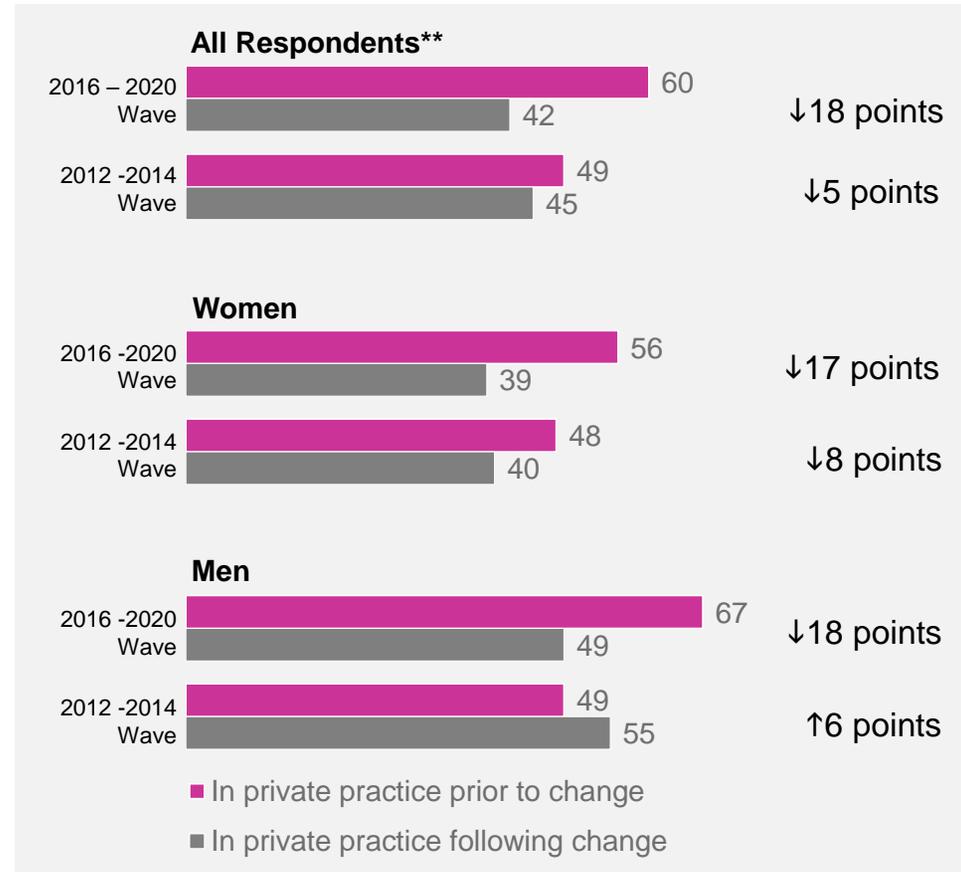

In both the 2012-2014 and 2016-2020 waves, the incidence of women in private practice declines significantly (down 8 points and 17 points, respectively).

In both waves, the incidence of women in private practice after a change is lower than the incidence among men.

Among men, the movement is not consistent across waves.

- The representation of men in private practice after a change increased by 6 points in the 2012-2014 wave. In the 2016-2020 wave, by contrast, the incidence declined by 18 points.

Executive Summary

PRIVATE PRACTICE REPRESENTATION BASED ON AGE OF THOSE WHO HAVE MADE A CHANGE

In both waves of research, younger women are leaving private practice, whereas the incidence of younger men in private practice remains stable.

- The representation of women in private practice in the 2016-2020 wave declines fully 15 points among those <35 years of age who have made a change.
- By contrast, there is no significant difference in the representation of men <35 years of age in private practice after a change.
- This trend is evident in the 2012-2014 results as well.

Among the middle and older age cohorts in both waves, there is a significant decline in the representation of both women and men in private practice after a change.

Executive Summary

DESTINATION OF CHANGE – THOSE WHO WERE IN PRIVATE PRACTICE

In both waves of research, almost half of those who made a change from a position in private practice left the profession entirely (45% and 49%, respectively, were no longer practising in 2012-2014 and 2016-2020 after their change).

Fully 49% of women who left private practice in the 2016-2020 wave are no longer practising.

- 29% are employed but not practising as a paralegal, 14% report they are not working, and 6% indicate they are in some other setting.

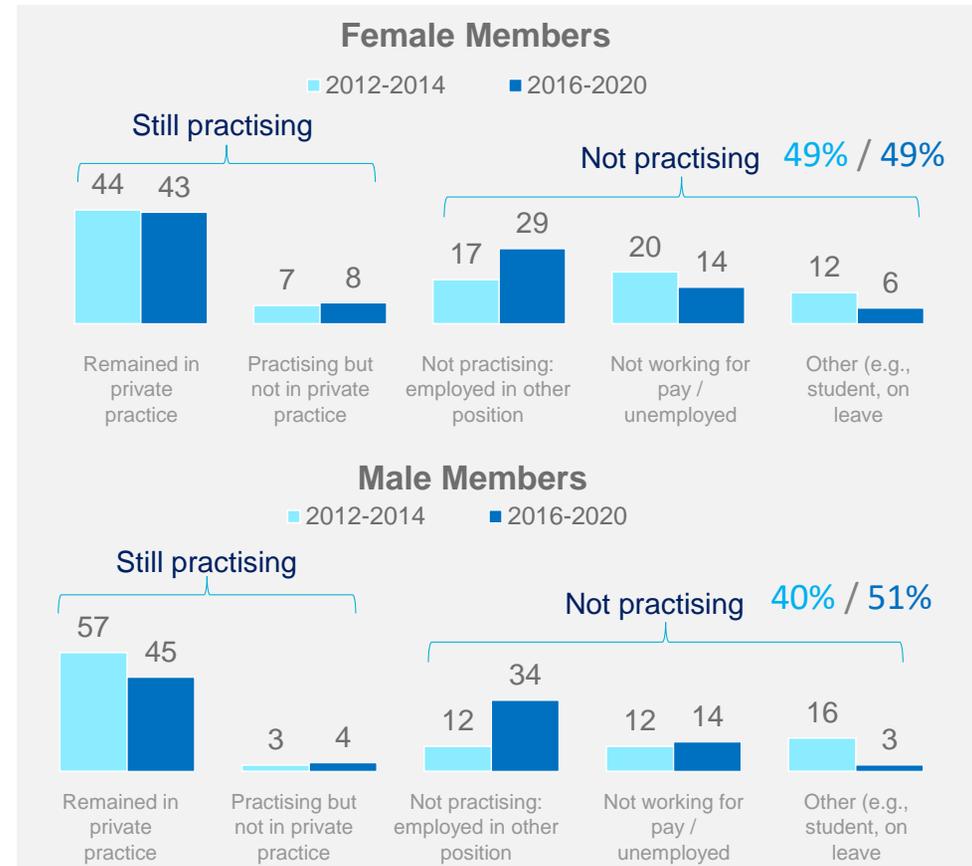

Similarly, 51% of men who were in private practice prior to a change are no longer in paralegal practice in the most recent wave.

- 34% are employed but not practising as a paralegal, 14% report they are not working for pay or unemployed, and 3% indicate they are in some other setting.

The trend away from paralegal practice altogether among those who started out in private practice is consistent for women across both waves of research (49% in both waves). Among men, the decline in practice is higher in this wave (51% are no longer practising) than in the 2012-2014 wave (40%).

Destination of change among those who were in private practice prior to their change

Executive Summary

Two approaches were taken to explore why paralegal members made their change. First, they were asked to identify, on an unprompted basis, the key factors that influenced their decision to make a change. Following this unprompted approach, they were provided with a list of potential reasons for a change and asked how important each was in their decision.

This approach ensures that the exploration taps into both top-of-mind (unprompted) reasons for a change, and also peels the onion to tap into other, more latent factors that played a role in their decision (prompted reasons).

UNPROMPTED KEY FACTORS FOR A CHANGE

Among all respondents, the key factors cited most frequently unprompted as influencing a change are improved remuneration and benefits and improved professional opportunities.

Samples sizes for both women and men preclude examination of key factors influencing a change among those who have left private practice by gender and age combined.

Executive Summary

UNPROMPTED KEY FACTORS FOR A CHANGE (CONT'D)

Sample sizes do, however, allow a high-level view by age of why women who started out in a private practice position have decided to make a change.

The youngest cohort of women - under 35 years – are almost equally likely to identify remuneration and benefits (35%) as they are improved opportunities in their new position (36%) as the main unprompted factor for their change.

In particular, this younger group is significantly more likely than their older colleagues to cite improved or new workplace opportunities.

Executive Summary

TOP PROMPTED REASONS FOR CHANGE AMONG WOMEN - BASED ON AGE

Younger women are more likely than other cohorts to identify pay and job security as factors driving their change. By contrast, among those in the age group where young children are most likely to be in the household (35-44 years) work-life balance is the primary factor.

- Younger women place a greater emphasis on pay and job security as reasons for making a change from a position in private practice. Over six-in-ten report these issues are important factors in their decision to make a change.
- Those in the middle age cohort place significantly greater emphasis on balancing career and family (70% report this is important).
- The oldest cohort – those 45+ years – place the greatest emphasis on their new position allowing them to use their skills (49%).

UNPROMPTED KEY FACTORS INFLUENCING A CHANGE

Unprompted, among both men and women who have left private practice, improved remuneration and benefits is the key factor cited most frequently.

- Over four-in ten women (44%) and men (45%) cite this as a key factor. Comparatively, less than one quarter of those who remained in private practice do so (23% and 18%, respectively).
- The second most frequently cited key factor among women who have left private practice is improved professional opportunities (30%). The proportion of women citing this factor is twice that compared to men who have left private practice (15%).
- While the sample size is limited, men who have left private practice cite work-life balance second most frequently as a key factor (25%). Among women who have left private practices by contrast, just 14% cite work-life balance as a key factor.

Executive Summary

PROMPTED REASONS FOR A CHANGE – WOMEN VS MEN WHO STARTED FROM PRIVATE PRACTICE

Women who have left private practice are significantly more likely than women who have stayed in private practice, as well as all men (both those who left and those who stayed in private practice) to identify the following as important reasons for having made their change out of private practice:

- Better pay
- Job security
- Opportunities for promotion
- Benefits

The single most important reason among both women and men who stayed in private practice is the ability to use talents and paralegal skills (60% and 66%, respectively). This stands in contrast to those who have left private practice. One-third of women (32%) and just one-quarter of men (24%) identify this as important in their change.

ASSESSMENTS OF PREVIOUS AND POSITION

When women who have left private practice are asked to assess key characteristics of their current position compared to their previous position, the results reflect their expressed motivations for leaving.

- Women who moved out of private practice are more than three times more likely to agree that their current position outside of private practice offers them job security (62%) and good pay (53%) compared to their previous position (18% and 15%, respectively).
- While among women who stayed in private practice the proportions reporting good job security and good pay have increased from previous to current setting, the increases are much smaller than found among women who have left private practice.

The research suggests that women who have left private practice have less scope for using their talents and paralegal skills in their new position.

- There has been a significant decline in the proportion agreeing that their current position allows them to use their paralegal skills (a 28-point drop). By contrast, there has been a 12-point increase in agreement among women who have remained in private practice.

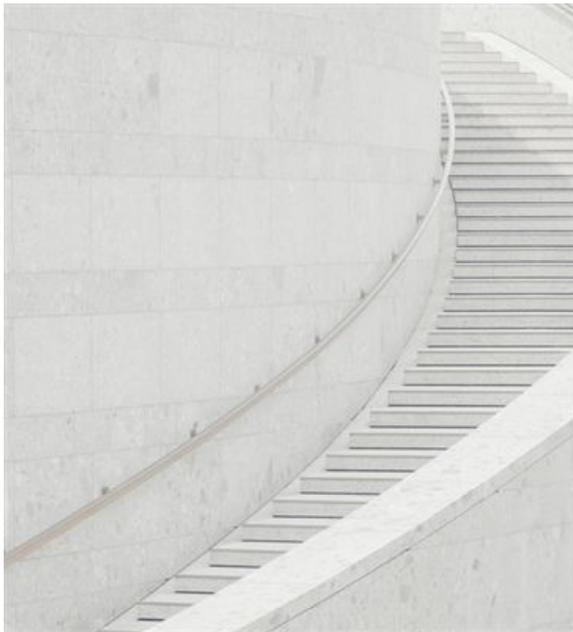

Agreement that previous versus current position offers specific attributes among WOMEN who started in private practice

Q12: Please indicate how strongly you agree or disagree with the following statements as they relate to your previous status or position to your current status or position. Please do this using a scale from 1 to 5, where "1" means you agree strongly and a "5" means that disagree strongly. If you don't know or you do not feel the statement is applicable to you, you may indicate that.

Executive Summary

THE ROLE OF BENEFITS IN A CHANGE

While benefits are identified less frequently as a driving factor in a change compared to remuneration and job security, the results suggest that the type of positions that are sought by women offer a cross-section of benefits that were not available to many in their previous work setting.

Women, more so than men, are moving to settings where there is an availability of:

- Pension plans;
- Flexible work arrangements (e.g., flexible full-time work hours, part-time work, leaves of absence);
- Policies to address discrimination; and
- Harassment, special needs, and formal mentoring policies

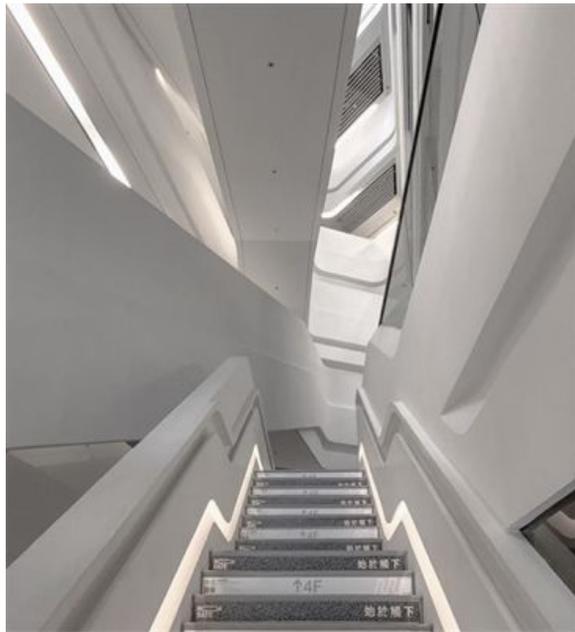

The greater likelihood of having access to benefits/policies after a change is most evident among women who have left a private practice setting. There is a greater incidence of access in their current position to benefits/policies in 13 of 19 benefit and policy categories explored:

- Medical Insurance; Dental plan; Long-term disability; Pension plan; Flexible full-time work hours; Paid maternity leave; Paid parental leave; Childcare benefits; Sick leave; Leave of absence or sabbatical; Harassment and discrimination policy; Accommodation for special needs policy; Formal mentoring policy.

This contrasts with women who remained in a private practice setting, among whom there was an increase in access for only 5 of the categories examined:

- Flexible full-time work; Job sharing; Paid maternity leave; Paid parental leave; Childcare benefits.

Executive Summary

LIKELIHOOD OF RETURNING TO PRACTICE AS A PARALEGAL

One-third of all those who have left paralegal practice* in 2016-2020 believe it is unlikely they will return.

There is no significant difference between women and men on this issue, nor has the incidence changed significantly compared to the 2012-2014 wave.

Memorandum

To: Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee
From: Reshma Budhwani, Policy Counsel, Equity Initiatives
Date: November 25, 2021
Re: Update on Recruitment of Paralegal Alternate to the DHC

---

1. Purpose

To request the approval of a proposal to recruit a paralegal to fulfill the role of Discrimination & Harassment Educator to work in collaboration with and be mentored by the Acting and Alternate Discrimination and Harassment Counsel (DHC).

2. Background

At its January 28, 2021 meeting, at the request of Benchers Marian Lippa and Rob Burd, the majority of the Committee voted to recruit a paralegal who could perform the functions of the DHC. The Committee directed staff to develop a draft recruitment plan.

At its April 8, 2021, the Committee approved the process and selection criteria for the recruitment. The Committee agreed to use the same selection criteria used for the recruitment of the current DHCs. The selection criteria is attached at Tab 3.1. To date, a suitable candidate has not been recruited, despite extensive advertising of the position.

3. Recruitment for the Paralegal Alternate to the DHC

The job posting with the selection criteria for the paralegal alternate to the DHC was advertised on the Law Society's website and the Ontario Reports in French and English. The job posting was promoted through various Law Society communication platforms, including the Gazette, e-Bulletins and Licensee Updates, and through various social media channels. This process is typically used for most Law Society appointment and employment opportunities and has been successful in most cases.

A selection committee composed of Bencher Rob Burd, Bencher Nancy Lockhart and Kate Lamb Executive Director, Client and People Services, was formed to oversee the recruitment. Tessa Meyer, Recruitment Manager, Human Resources and Courtney Carrier, Executive Assistant, Policy, provided staff support to the selection committee and conducted the initial screening process, in keeping with standard Law Society processes

The selection committee undertook the first round of interviews for the three candidates in July. Upon completing the interviews, the selection committee recommended a second round of interviews as there was no consensus on the preferred candidate. The second round of interviews were conducted by Kate Lamb and two DHCs Fay Faraday and Natasha Persaud in October. Unfortunately, the interview process did not result in a successful recruitment, possibly because the pool of candidates is small. The position as advertised required a seasoned professional with extensive experience in the area of human rights. However, a very small number of paralegals focus their practices on human rights and even fewer have the required years of experience. According to data from the 2020 Annual Report filings, only 84 paralegals reported spending 25% or more of their time providing legal services in human rights. Of those, only 18 paralegals reported spending 75% or more of their time providing legal services in human rights. Furthermore, according to internal Law Society data from 2020, over a third of paralegals have been licensed for less than 5 years (37.12%) and three-quarters of paralegals (75%) have been licensed for less than 10 years.

4. Enhancing the Education and Outreach Function in the DHC Program

The education and outreach function has always been a critical element of the DHC program. The duties of the DHC as set out in By-Law 11<sup>1</sup> and the DHCs' contracts for services specifically require the DHCs to promote their services and develop and conduct informational and educational programs.

Policy reviews of the DHC's function have also stressed the need for enhanced education and awareness of the program among the lawyer and paralegal communities and the public. The DHC program review conducted by Navigator Ltd. identified the need for enhanced awareness of the DHC. At its May 13, 2021 meeting, the Committee responded to the review by approving a communication and awareness plan to be implemented by the Law Society. In particular, the review noted that awareness of the DHC is particularly low among paralegals and recommended that information sessions about the DHC should be undertaken at a number of points during the term of the paralegal education program. The review also found that paralegals on average were less likely to be aware of the DHC program. Of those paralegals who were aware of the DHC program (1/3 of those interviewed), a large percentage reported becoming aware of the DHC program through their educational institution. The task of reaching out and educating paralegal students is particularly challenging for the DHCs. Paralegal students are found in 28 accredited paralegal education programs at Ontario colleges, operating across 34 campuses.

To address these needs, a new position of Discrimination & Harassment Educator ("D&H Educator") was identified in consultation with the DHCs. The position is best suited for a paralegal professional as they will have greater knowledge of paralegal programs and are better positioned to develop relationships with paralegal licensees and paralegal organizations. Furthermore, this will provide an opportunity for the Law Society to further enhance its relationship and credibility within the paralegal profession.

The D&H Educator will work with the DHCs to develop educational materials and deliver presentations, with an initial focus on paralegal students, licensing candidates and practising paralegals. The role would include developing relationships with paralegal associations and the paralegal education programs at Ontario colleges. While the role would focus initially on the paralegal community, it would also include outreach and education for law students, lawyers and lawyer licensing candidates.

In addition to working with the D&H Educator on presentations and other materials, the DHCs will provide mentorship on all aspects of the role. This will give all parties the opportunity to consider how the educator role could evolve. After two years, the role would be evaluated with a view to determining if the role should expand to contain the other functions of the DHC.

5. Analysis

The creation of the D&H Educator role could enhance awareness of the DHC program in a focused and effective manner, while creating an opportunity for an interested paralegal to learn new skills and grow into a DHC role. It plays to the strengths of paralegals who are educated and trained in oral advocacy and communication. It promises to be an innovative way to enhance the DHC program at a time when ways of addressing discrimination and harassment are a significant concern within the legal professions. It is estimated that the additional fees involved in supporting a D&H Educator could be managed from the existing budget allocation.

6. Next Steps

While this position would not require an amendment to By-Law 11<sup>2</sup>, it would require adjustments to the contracts for services of the DHC to ensure that the obligations of collaboration and mentorship are included in the contractual duties of the DHC.

If the proposal for the D&H position is approved, staff will work the Human Resources department to develop the selection criteria for the D&H Educator and take the necessary steps to move forward with the recruitment. The Committee will be provided with periodic updates with respect to the recruitment as matters progress.

<sup>2</sup> The Office of General Counsel has advised that the position would be in furtherance of developing and conducting information and educational programs as set out in subsection 19(1)(b) of By-Law 11.

Memorandum

To: Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee
From: Reshma Budhwani, Policy Counsel, Equity Initiatives
Date: November 25, 2021
Re.: Reappointment of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel

---

1. Purpose

The Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee (“EIAC”) is asked to recommend that Convocation approve the following:

- i. The reappointment of Fay Faraday as Acting Discrimination and Harassment Counsel (“DHC”) effective February 24, 2022 to February 23, 2025, in accordance with the terms set out in the draft contract attached at Tab 4.1., with eligibility for reappointment, in accordance with subsection 15 of By-Law 11 – Regulation of Conduct, Capacity and Professional Competence;
- ii. The reappointment of Lai-King Hum as Alternate DHC, effective February 24, 2022 to February 23, 2025, in accordance with the terms set out in the draft contract attached at Tab 4.2, with eligibility for reappointment, in accordance with subsection 15 of By-Law 11 – Regulation of Conduct, Capacity and Professional Competence;
- iii. The reappointment of Natasha Persaud as Alternate DHC, effective February 24, 2022 to February 23, 2025, in accordance with the terms set out in the draft contract attached at Tab 4.3, with eligibility for reappointment, in accordance with subsection 15 of By-Law 11 – Regulation of Conduct, Capacity and Professional Competence; and
- iv. An increase to the DHC hourly fee from $315.00 to $345.00 commencing February 24, 2022.

2. Background

The DHC program was previously reviewed in 2001 and 2005. In February 2017, EIAC approved a third review of the DHC program (“DHC program review”) in accordance with recommendation 12(1) of Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions (the “Challenges Report”) which called for the Law Society to review the function, processes and structure of the DHC program. The Challenges Report was approved by Convocation in December 2016.

EIAC determined that the approval of the program review was an opportunity to:

- Expand the role of the Alternate DHCs to give them an equal profile to the DHC in order to make the program more responsive and efficient;
- Provide complainants with the option of who they want to consult; and
- Create a more diverse and inclusive DHC Program that would be representative of the communities that the DHC serves.

In keeping with the purpose of the program review, EIAC approved the reappointment of DHC Cynthia Petersen, but did not renew the contracts of the Alternate DHCs, David Bennett and Lynda Bevan. Starting in April 2017, EIAC engaged in a full recruitment process for the Alternate DHCs. EIAC adopted the recruitment process for the DHC Alternates in accordance with subsection 17 of By-Law 11<sup>1</sup>.

A recruitment committee was established by EIAC.<sup>2</sup> EIAC approved the selection criteria for the recruitment of the Alternate DHCs. The selection criteria is attached at Tab 4.4.

The positions were advertised in both English and French on the Law Society website and the Ontario Reports. A total of 32 applications were received for the positions. The recruitment committee narrowed the group of proposed candidates to eight applicants for telephone interviews, and eventually conducted in-person interviews with four candidates. In selecting applicants to interview, special attention was paid to applicants who identified as bilingual (French and English) and had experience with or knowledge of Indigenous communities. At the close of discussions, the recruitment committee prepared a recommendation for EIAC's consideration.

On June 29, 2017, Convocation approved the appointments of Fay Faraday, Lai-King Hum, and Natasha Persaud as Alternate DHCs for a one-year term, at the recommendation of EIAC. In June of 2017, EIAC appointed Fay Faraday to the position of Acting DHC due to departure of Cynthia Petersen who was appointed to the Superior Court of Justice<sup>3</sup>. EIAC also expanded the role of the Alternate DHCs to give them an equal profile to the DHC as equal work distribution would allow the DHC to respond to calls more quickly and efficiently. There was no additional cost as a result of this change as the DHCs are paid on an hourly basis.

<sup>1</sup> Subsection 17 of By-Law 11 sets out the appointment process for the Alternate DHCs: <https://lso.ca/about-lso/legislation-rules/by-laws/by-law-11>

<sup>2</sup> The Recruitment Committee consisted of the following members:

- Sandra Nishikawa, then-Co-Chair of EIAC
- Tanya Walker, Licensee Bencher
- Gisele Chretien, Appointed Bencher
- Michael Doi, Member of EAG
- Constance Simmonds, Member of IAG
- Marian MacGregor, Equity Advisor, support to the Committee
- Suzanne Douglas, Senior Resource Manager, support to the Committee

<sup>3</sup> Subsection 22(3) of By-Law 11 states: Despite subsection (1), if there is a vacancy in the office of the Counsel, an Alternate Counsel chosen by the Committee shall perform the function of the Counsel until a Counsel is appointed under section 15.

Since their initial appointment, the Acting DHC and Alternate DHCs have been reappointed by Convocation for one-year terms at the recommendation of EIAC to allow for the completion and consideration of the DHC program review. The DHCs current term ends February 24, 2022.

On May 13, 2021, EIAC considered the results of the DHC program review. The committee approved a plan to make changes to the DHC program, which includes raising awareness of the DHC program through existing communications channels and enhancing the educational function of the DHC through a redesign of the DHC's website. Since that decision, the Policy and External Relations and Communications divisions have been implementing the awareness campaign according to the workplan considered by EIAC at its May meeting.

3. Analysis

As the DHC program review has been completed<sup>4</sup>, it is recommended that the committee appoint each DHC for a three-year term, effective February 24, 2022 to February 23, 2025. A three-year appointment will provide stability to the DHC program, enhance the effectiveness of the awareness campaign, and allow the seasoned DHCs to collaborate with and mentor the Discrimination & Harassment Educator, if the latter position is approved by EIAC.

The Appointment Process

The recommended appointment process outlined above is consistent with Part II of the By-Law 11.

- EIAC has the authority to recommend the reappointment of the Alternate Counsel pursuant to subsection 17 and to enable Fay Faraday to continue in the role of Acting DHC pursuant to subsection 22(3).
- Pursuant to subsection 18, the requirement to provide a ranked list to Convocation or undergo a candidate search does not apply in the case of a reappointment of the Alternate Counsel.
- Subsection 17(5) of By-Law 11 requires Convocation to consider EIAC's recommendations in the absence of the public.

Reasons Supporting the Reappointments

The reappointments of Fay Faraday, Lai-King Hum and Natasha Persaud as alternate DHCS are recommended based on their outstanding credentials, extensive practice experience in human rights law and alternate dispute resolution techniques and successes in their current roles. The three counsel were recruited in 2017 after an extensive recruitment process and have been in their current positions for approximately 52 months. Fay Faraday has assumed the role of Acting DHC since 2017 when she was appointed by EIAC pursuant to subsection 22(3) of By-Law 11 to perform the functions of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel. Since their appointments, <sup>4</sup> On May 13, 2021, EIAC considered the results of the DHC program review. The committee approved a plan to make changes to the DHC program, which includes raising awareness of the DHC program through existing communications channels and enhancing the educational function of the DHC through a redesign of the DHC's website.

all three DHCs have gained additional experience and profile as DHCs to the benefit of the program. Each DHC has indicated an interest in continuing to participate in the program and to collaborate with and mentor the Discrimination & Harassment Educator, should this committee approve that position.

In addition, Ms. Faraday and Ms. Hum are fully bilingual and able to provide services in English and French. The bios of the three counsel are attached at Tab 4.5.

Increase to the DHC's Hourly Rate

An increase to the DHC's hourly fee from $315.00 to $345.00 without an increase to the annual DHC budget is recommended for the following reasons:

- The rate of $315.00 has not been increased since 2012, when it was increased from $250.00 per hour.
- The increased fee is lower than the rate of inflation from 2012 to 2021<sup>5</sup>;
- The increase in the hourly fee could be managed within the existing the $160,000 annual budget;
- There have been no significant changes in the position of the DHC since 2017 when the current DHCs were appointed following a comprehensive recruitment process; and
- Historically, the hourly fee of the DHC has been approved by Convocation.

Implications if No Reappointments

If the DHCs are not reappointed, EIAC will need to engage in a full recruitment process to fill the positions of the DHC and Alternate DHCs. This will have financial and resource impacts and could adversely affect the education and awareness campaign approved by EIAC in May 2021. A decision to not reappoint could also interrupt the provision of services to vulnerable individuals who have been negatively impacted by the behaviour of lawyers or paralegals.

---

<sup>5</sup> The Bank of Canada inflation calculator estimates a 17.13 per cent rate of inflation from 2012 to 2021, which would amount to an hourly rate of $368.96.

Memorandum

To: Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee
From: Ada Maxwell-Alleyne
Date: November 17, 2021
Re.: Challenges Report Implementation Update

---

Purpose

This memo provides the Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee (“Committee”) with:

1. an update on the implementation of the Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions Report (“Challenges Report”); and
2. an outline of the peer review undertaken to evaluate the implementation of the Challenges Report, with decisions on the use of the results of the Inclusion Index to be made following that review.

Timeline

The following outlines the significant steps in the development and implementation of the Challenges Report:

2012: Challenges Working Group begins an engagement process to gather information about barriers faced by racialized licensees. The firm Strategic Communications Inc. (Stratcom) manages this data gathering process employing a multi-model research approach and presents its final report.

2014: The Working Group reviews the data from the engagement process and drafts a consultation paper titled Developing Strategies for Change: Addressing Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees. Convocation approves this consultation paper.

2014-2015: The Working Group consults broadly with licensees, law students, articling students and the public. The Law Firms Diversity and Inclusion Network and legal organizations are also consulted.

2015-2016: The Working Group develops its final report with 13 recommendations.

2016: Convocation approves the final report and recommendations in December.

2017 forward: Implementation of recommendations.

Status of the Challenges Report

The Challenges Report outlines five strategies and 13 recommendations to address systemic barriers faced by racialized licensees. Most of the recommendations have been implemented and others are in process. The recommendations and the status of each can be found at TAB 5.1.

To date, the Law Society has not evaluated the project, its recommendations or its implementation to assess the effectiveness in achieving the Law Society's goal to reduce barriers faced by racialized and Indigenous licensees, thereby helping to ensure healthy and successful legal professions and advancing the public interest. Project reviews are generally seen as standard best practice when an institution undertakes a major initiative. Moreover, before moving forward with outstanding recommendations developed in 2016, the Law Society should obtain expert advice on the relevance of those recommendations in the 2021 environment.

The Inclusion Index

One of the outstanding recommendations of the Challenges Report is Recommendation 6 which provides that:

Every four years, the Law Society will develop and publish an Inclusion Index that reflects the following information, including, for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees: the legal workplace's self-assessment information (Recommendation 3(3)), demographic data obtained from the Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report (Recommendation 4) and information gathered from the inclusion questions provided by the Law Society (Recommendation 5).<sup>1</sup>

The data underlying the Index comes from the 2018 Annual Report and was collected in the first quarter of 2019. In April 2019, the Law Society engaged the firm Diversio to develop the Index. Diversio delivered a draft of the Index in the fall of 2019. By that time, Law Society counsel who were originally involved in the development of the Index had left the organization. New Policy counsel engaged with Diversio to further develop the Index and understand the methodology underlying the results before planning its release.

In March 2020, the Law Society shifted its focus to addressing the challenges and disruptions caused by the pandemic. EIAC resumed its regular work in late 2020. Before a decision is made on how to move forward with the information collected for the Index, a number of questions should be considered:

1. Were the demographic, inclusion and self-assessment questions in the lawyer and paralegal annual reports the right questions to meet the purpose?
2. Given the three-year period between the collection of the data and the current date, is it scientifically sound to release the data?
3. The data on which the Index is based is now three years old. Is the Inclusion Index based on that data relevant today?

<sup>1</sup> Recommendations 3, 4, 5 and 6 of the Challenges Report speak to the creation of an Inclusion Index for legal workplaces with 25 or more licensees. The Index was to include data from three sources in the 2018 Members' Annual Report: the legal workplace mandatory self-assessment responses; individual licensee voluntary responses to self-identification; and inclusion questions. The Index was to be published every four years.

4. In anticipation of the release of the Inclusion Index, some workplaces proactively adopted strategies to promote equity, diversity and inclusion within their workplaces. The progress of these workplaces is not reflected in the current Index. Would the release of the Index at this point support the Law Society's goal of reducing barriers faced by racialized and Indigenous licensees?
5. If the answer to any of the above questions is "no", would the Law Society's reputation be negatively impacted by the release of the Index?

Peer Review of Challenges Report

Given this context, a peer review of the Challenges Report has been undertaken. A decision on how to move forward with the Inclusion Index data will be made once the review is completed. The review will explore whether the implementation of the Challenges Report provides effective requirements, incentives and information that assist in reducing barriers faced by racialized and Indigenous licensees. The review will assess:

- a. the impact of fully implemented recommendations of the Challenges Report (e.g. Recommendation 9, regarding mandatory EDI CPD and related products);
- b. the impediments to implementing certain recommendations (e.g. Recommendation 12, regarding addressing systemic discrimination); and
- c. the reliability of the data collection and analysis used in 2019;
- d. the extent to which the above data and analysis is relevant for 2021.

The review will also provide recommendations for the further enhancement of EDI within the legal community.

Structure of the Peer Review

The peer review is being conducted by a panel of experts and will be completed in April 2022. The three experts who have been retained possess significant knowledge in survey methodology, research, and equity, diversity and inclusion. Care was taken to compile a list of experts who can provide a neutral and objective commentary. A summary of the review will be presented to the Committee and Convocation in May or June 2022.

An evaluation rubric will be provided to the reviewers. Some of the questions to be addressed through this review include:

With respect to the Challenges Report

- Was the data collection process valid?
- Were response rates sufficient?
- Were the questions posed as part of the membership survey appropriate?
- Is the process of using key informants effective/reliable?

With respect to the Inclusion Index

- Were the demographic, inclusion and self-assessment questions in the lawyer and paralegal annual reports the right questions to meet the purpose?
- Was the scope appropriate?

- Would the Index, as produced, achieve the desired result vis-à-vis legal workplaces?
- Is the data still reliable?
- Should the next version include any changes?

With respect to future equity work at the Law Society

- Is there a more effective way to collect equity data than the Law Society's current approach?
- Is the format of the collected data appropriate? (for example, are the Law Society's demographic categories generally accepted?)
- Are there other probative questions that can assist in the equity agenda? (i.e. income related to demographics)

The Committee will receive the Inclusion Index and the supporting materials for the peer review when the peer review is completed.

Recommendation 4 – Measuring Progress through Quantitative Analysis Each year, the Law Society will measure progress quantitatively by providing legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees in Ontario with the quantitative self-identification data of their licensees compiled from the Lawyers Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report in a manner consistent with the best practices established to protect licensees vulnerable to harm that may flow from this disclosure, so they can compare their data with the aggregate demographic data gathered from the profession as a whole through the annual reports.	Self-identification data is part of the Inclusion Index package. Diversio offers a dashboard to legal workplaces based on their individual inclusion scores. Discussions are under way to determine next steps regarding the dashboards and their efficacy as they are based on 2018 data. Outside of collecting data on legal workplaces, the Law Society develops annual demographic “snapshots” of the legal professions that indicate the breakdown of the professions in terms of race, language, Indigeneity, gender and sexual orientation.

Memorandum

To: Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee
From: Ada Maxwell-Alleyne
Date: November 15, 2021
Re.: 2020 Statistical Snapshots of Lawyers and Paralegals in Ontario

---

1. Purpose

To provide the Committee with an update on the 2020 Statistical Snapshots of Lawyers and Paralegals.

2. Background

Since 2009, the Law Society has asked licensees to voluntarily answer self-identification demographic questions in the lawyer and paralegal annual report filings. The questions allow the Law Society to compare the demographics of the Ontario population with those of the legal professions. The Law Society publishes yearly snapshots of the professions that provide statistical data on women, LGBTQ2+, Francophone, Indigenous, and racialized licensees in Ontario.

These Snapshots are developed by Michael Ornstein, Associate Professor of Sociology at York University. The 2020 Statistical Snapshots are available at TAB 6.1 for the Committee's information. The Snapshots will be posted to the Law Society website in the coming weeks once they have been edited and formatted for publishing.

Key Points about Lawyers in the 2020 Snapshots

Michael Ornstein

November 2021

The tabulations include lawyers who in 2020 were:

- sole practitioners
- law firm partners, associates and employees
- lawyers working in legal clinics, in house or in government
- lawyers in education (who may or may not practice)
- lawyers in other employment “work but do not practise law or provide legal services, including lawyers employed in education, in government or in a corporate position where they do not practise law or provide legal services.”
- lawyers under the age of 70 who are retired or not working “do not engage in any remunerative work and do not engage in the practice of law or provision of legal services”
- new licensees

They exclude:

- lawyers whose practice is outside of Ontario
- legal advisors
- honorary licensees
- lawyers whose license is suspended
- lawyers whose fee is excused on grounds of disability
- lawyers whose license is in abeyance when serving on a court or board
- lawyers 70 and older who are “retired or not working”.

For an explanation of these categories see <https://www.lso.ca/lawyers/about-your-licence/annual-reports-fees-and-insurance/fee-categories>

These tabulations are based on responses to the equity survey in licensees’ annual reports. While gender is taken from LSO records, licensees were allowed to decline to answer the questions about Indigeneity, racialization, sexual orientation, Francophone identity, the ability to counsel and represent in French and disability.

Table 1

Indigeneity and Racialization for Ontario Lawyers, 2020, compared to the 2016 Ontario Population

In the equity survey, 6,157 out of the 49,206 licensees did not answer the questions about Indigeneity and racialization and another 3,914 answered the Indigeneity question but not the one about racialization. The figures for the distribution of groups in Table 1, which exclude non-response, are therefore biased if the characteristics of non-respondents are not the same as licensees who do answer. Short of making responses mandatory, statistical models can be used to predict the answers of the non-respondents. A disadvantage is that these models require assumptions and there is no one way to predict the answers of nonrespondents. Analysis of the responses of licensees who did not respond in one year’s annual report but did so in another year demonstrates that some non-respondents are Indigenous or racialized.

Comparisons to the Ontario population are based on the most recently available, 2016 Canadian Census. An update using the 2021 Census will be possible in 2023.

1. 1.42% of lawyers are Indigenous, compared to 2.91% of the 2016 Ontario population, 2.38% of the labour force age 25-69 and 1.08% of university graduates in the labour force age 25-69.
2. Racialized Ontarians, following Statistics Canada practice of excluding Indigenous persons, account for 25.1% of lawyers, compared to 29.3% of the 2016 Ontario population, 28.0% of the labour force age 25-69 and 37.6% of university graduates in the labour force age 25-69. The totals include 1.1% of lawyers who identify with two or more racialized groups or with a racialized group not listed on the survey form (such as non-Canadian indigenous people) and 1.9% who identify as racialized and White.
3. 73.5% of Ontario lawyers are White, compared to 67.8% of the 2016 Ontario population, 69.7% of the Ontario labour force age 25-69 and 61.3% of Ontario university graduates in the labour force age 25-69.
4. 56.3% of Indigenous lawyers are women, along with 56.8% of racialized lawyers, compared to 47.4% of White lawyers. Table 3 shows that this is partly because non-White lawyers are younger, on average.
5. Black lawyers account for 3.8% of all licensees, compared to 4.2% of the 2016 Ontario population, 4.0% of the Ontario labour force age 25-69 and 2.9% of university graduates in the labour force age 25-69. All the other racialized groups have a smaller percentage of lawyers than their representation among Ontario university graduates in the labour force age 25-69, but the groups vary dramatically. 9.1% of Ontario university graduates in the labour force age 25-69 identify as Chinese, compared to 4.3% of lawyers; for Latinos the comparable figures are 1.3% and 0.7%; and for Filipinos 3.4% and just 0.4%. By a wide margin Filipinos have the fewest lawyers relative to population. After that, the Arab, Chinese, Latino and South Asian groups are the most under-represented groups, with about 40 to 50% as many lawyers as their percentage of employed university graduates.

Tables 2 and 3 for Year of Call and Age by Indigeneity and Racialization

Apparent inconsistencies between Tables 2 and 3, respectively based on year of call and age, result from group differences in age at call, age-related withdrawal from the profession and age at retirement. The figures for year of call allow finely detailed study of new lawyers, but not too much emphasis should be placed on comparisons between single years.

Table 1 gives the number of Inuk lawyers, but due to their small number it is inappropriate to report their years of call and ages in detail. Instead, Inuk lawyers are combined with First Nations lawyers in Tables 2 and 3.

Table 2

Year of Call for Ontario Lawyers by Indigeneity and Racialization, 2020

1. Just 0.3% of lawyers called before 1981 were Indigenous, rising to 2.0% for years of call 1996-2000. After steady gains between 1981 and 2000, however, the proportion of Indigenous lawyers, roughly 2.0% of all licensees called in 2020, has not increased.
2. The proportion of racialized lawyers reached its highest-ever figure of 43.2% for the 2020 year of call, up from 40.1% for lawyers called in 2019, 37.6% for 2016-18, 33.7% for 2011-2015 and 28.2% for 2006-2010. There has been remarkable, uninterrupted growth, from a base of just 1.9% racialized licensees called before 1981.

3. The representation of the Arab, Black, Chinese, South Asian groups increased substantially in recent years, reaching 2.2, 5.8, 6.7, and 17.6% in 2020, respectively. This partly reflects the changing numbers of young people potentially able to attend university and then law school.

Table 3

Age by Indigeneity and Racialization for Ontario Lawyers, 2020

1. 1.5% of lawyers under 35 are Indigenous, compared to 1.6% of lawyers 35-44 and 1.9% of lawyers 45-54.
2. Just 5.2% Ontario lawyers 65 and older are racialized, rising to 23.6% of lawyers 45-54 and 35.2% of lawyers under 35.
3. Comparing the 45-54, 55-64 and 65 and older groups, reveals major increases in the representation of every racialized group; starting around 1990. Under age 45 the groups diverge, with the Arab, Chinese, South Asian and West Asian groups making more progress in recent years. Black lawyers account for 3.5% of lawyers under 35, 4.7% of lawyers 35-44 and 4.8% of lawyers 45-54. This contrasts with Table 2, based on year of call, which shows a slow, but continuing increase in the representation of Black lawyers.

Table 4

Gender, Sexual Orientation, Francophone Identity, Ability to Practice in French and Disability by Age for Ontario Lawyers, 2020

Regarding the measurement of disability, please see the note for Table 8

1. Table 4 shows the remarkable growth in the representation of women, from 17.0% of lawyers over 65 to 52.3% of lawyers age 35-44, with a further small increase to 55.9% of lawyers under 35. Gender differences in age groups are affected by women's higher rate of withdrawal from the profession and earlier retirement.
2. The third panel of Table 4 shows male lawyers are markedly older: 15.7% are 65 and older, compared to just 3.7% of women; and 19.7% are between 55 and 64, compared to 14.4% of women. 29.1% of women lawyers are under 35 and 30.2% are 35-44, considerably more than 20.0% and 24.1% of men in these age groups.
3. 7.1% of lawyers under 35 identify as LGBT2Q, compared to 5.1% for ages 35-44, about 3.8% for ages 45-64 and 1.5% for age 65 or more. Around one-fifth of licensees do not answer this question.
4. Considerably more lawyers are able to practice in French than identify as Francophone, though the age patterns are similar. There is a dramatic increase in the proportion of lawyers identifying as Francophone, from 2.4% of lawyers over 65 to 7.3% of lawyers under 35. Over the same age range, lawyers able to counsel and represent in French increased from 4.3% to 10.2%. Counting lawyers who say they can counsel but not represent in French, the figures increase by about one-third. Assuming that lawyers who do not answer the questions about Francophone identity and practicing in French are non-Francophone and English-only practitioners, would decrease the percentages of Francophone and French practicing lawyers by about ten percent.

- 3.5% of lawyers under 35 have a disability, rising to 4.5% for ages 45-54 and 5.6% for ages 55-64. The lower proportion with a disability for ages 65 or more, 4.7%, suggests that disability leads to earlier retirement. About 15% of licensees do not answer the question.

Table 5

Status, Size of Law Firm and Region by Racialization for Ontario Lawyers, 2020

Licensee status – especially the distinction between partners and associates, but true across the board – differs substantially for Indigenous, racialized and White lawyers. This is partly because White lawyers are older, on average.

The figures for location partly reflect the total population; lawyers and law firms are concentrated in Toronto, but so is the Ontario population, although to a lesser extent.

- 27% of First Nations and Inuk lawyers and 19% of Métis are sole practitioners, compared to 17% of White lawyers; 17% of Indigenous lawyers work for government, compared to 14% of White lawyers and 3% work in legal clinics, compared to just 1% of White lawyers. Indigenous lawyers are much less likely to be law firm partners – 8% versus 16% for White lawyers – and they are somewhat less likely to be law firm associates or practice in house. Indigenous lawyers tend to work at smaller firms.
- Compared to White lawyers, racialized lawyers are somewhat more likely to be sole practitioners. Just 7% of racialized lawyers are law firm partners, compared to 16% of White lawyers. In contrast, 21% of law firm associates are racialized, compared to 20% of White associates, which portends considerable growth in the percentage of racialized partners.
- There are complex differences in the workplaces of the eight racialized groups, with Black, Filipino and Japanese lawyers most distinctive. Notably, there are low numbers of Black licensees at law firms, combined with a high level of sole practice.
- 15% of Indigenous lawyers work in the North, compared to just 2% of non-Indigenous lawyers. Then Indigenous lawyers are much more likely to practice in the Central North, Eastern Ontario and Ottawa. Racialized lawyers are concentrated in Toronto, except for the concentration of Arab lawyers in Ottawa and South Asian lawyers in (the combined area of) Durham, Halton, Peel and York. Chinese lawyers are concentrated in Toronto.

Table 6

Gender by Status, Size of Law Firm and Region for Lawyers, 2020

- Men are much more likely to be sole practitioners, 24.2% versus 14.0% of women, and law firm partners, 20.0% of men versus 8.3% of women. There are more women in all the other categories, including employment in house, at clinics, in government and in education. While women lawyers are younger than men, on average, this does not account for the dramatic gender difference in partners. In the 45-54, 55-64 and 65 and older age groups, respectively 13.0, 13.0 and 13.1% of women are partners, compared to 26.6, 29.9 and 28.7% of men. Although the comparison does not exactly account for age – so women in, say, the 45-54 age group, could on average be younger than men in that age range. The stability of this gender difference from age 45 suggests it arises from deep institutional factors.

2. The much lower representation of women among law firm partners than associates suggests that women associates are much less likely to become partners. This is consistent with other research based on the annual reports that show women are more likely than men to leave law firms for employment in government, education and in house and outside of law practice. “Retired, or not working” lawyers, account for 12.8% of all women licensees, 5.5% of men.
3. Gender differences in geographical location are small.

Table 7

Status, Size of Law Firm and Region by Francophone Identity and Ability to Practice in French for Lawyers, 2020

1. Francophone lawyers and the considerably larger number of lawyers able to practice in French are roughly twice as likely to work in government and five times more likely to work in Ottawa. Fully 48.2% of Francophone lawyers are in Ottawa and 26.9% of Francophone lawyers work in government; with similar percentages for lawyers able to counsel and represent in French. Just 12.3% of non-Francophone lawyers work in government and 9.7% are in Ottawa. Lawyers able to practice in French are also more likely to work in Eastern Ontario.
2. Their concentration in government employment means that Francophone lawyers and lawyers able to practice in French are less likely work in all the other sectors, including sole practice and law firm partners, associates and employees.

Table 8

Status, Size of Law Firm and Region by Disability for Lawyers, 2020

The annual reports do not allow for a full understanding of disability in the profession. First, that would necessitate separating lawyers with a disability when called from those who developed it afterward. In mid-career, a licensee might require accommodation, they may be forced to change employment or retire, but this is different from the barriers to the initial employment of lawyers with a disability. A second problem is that the question does not differentiate among types of disability, or their effects on a lawyer's practice. A third concern is that disability is under-reported, perhaps out of concern it will cast doubt on a lawyer's competence. Gathering better data poses serious, though not insurmountable, concerns about privacy.

1. Disability is significantly related to sector of employment. Most notably, 19.5% of lawyers with a disability work for government, compared to 12.8% without a disability; law firm partners account for 8.1% of lawyers with a disability, compared to 14.8% without, and for law firm associates the corresponding figures are 12.8% and 20.3%. Just over one-eighth of lawyers with a disability are “retired or not working”, versus 8.3% for lawyers who do not report a disability.
2. For lawyers at law firms, having a disability is unrelated to firm size.

Table 9

Status, Size of Law Firm and Region by Sexual Orientation for Lawyers, 2020

1. 19.6% of LGBT2Q lawyers work for government, compared to 13.0% of non-LGBT2Q lawyers; and 2.9% of LGBT2Q lawyers work in legal clinics, compared to 1.3% of non-LGBT2Q lawyers.

LGBT2Q lawyers are less slightly less likely to be sole practitioners and half as likely to be law firm partners, though this must in part reflect their younger ages, shown in Table 4.

2. LGBT2Q lawyers are concentrated in Toronto and Ottawa.

Table 10

Area of Practice by Racialization and Gender for Ontario Lawyers, 2020

To be counted as specializing in an area in Table 10 at least 30% of a lawyer's practice must be in the area. By this criterion, most lawyers' practice is concentrated in just one of the 23 areas in the Table, although about one fifth spend at least 30% of their time in two or more areas.

1. 28% of First Nations and 9% of Metis lawyers specialize in Aboriginal law, compared to just one percent of lawyers overall. First Nations lawyers are also more likely to specialize in criminal and family law and less likely to specialize in civil litigation, corporate law and real estate.
2. The relatively small percentages in many of the areas give rise to random variation that obscures the group differences, although a few are quite large. For example, Black lawyers are more likely to practice family and immigration law, while Chinese lawyers are under-represented in these areas and are concentrated in corporate, real estate and securities law. Generally, lawyers from communities with higher income appear to gravitate towards real estate and different areas of commercial law, while lawyers from poorer communities gravitate towards criminal, family and immigration law.
3. There are notable gender differences in specialization. Civil litigation representing plaintiffs accounts for 8% of women lawyers versus 13% of men, but there is no difference for civil litigation representing defendants; 13% of women and 7% of men specialize in family law; 10% of women and 17% of men specialize in real estate; and there is also some greater concentration of men in corporate, securities and tax law.

Key Points about Paralegals in the 2020 Snapshots

Michael Ornstein
November 2021

The comparisons to the Ontario population are based on the most recently available, 2016 Canadian Census. An update using the 2021 Census will be possible in 2023.

Table 1

Representation of Indigenous and Racialized Persons for Ontario Paralegals, 2020, compared to the Ontario Population

1. 1.9% of paralegals are Indigenous, compared to 2.9% of the 2016 Ontario population, 2.4% of labour force participants age 25-69 and 1.1% of university graduates in the labour force age 25-69.
2. 41.0% of paralegals are racialized, compared to 29.3% of the 2016 Ontario population, 28.0% of labour force participants age 25-69 and 37.6% of university graduates in the labour force age 25-69.
3. The Black, Latino and West Asian groups have considerably more paralegals than their representation in the population. South Asians are the largest non-White group, counting 11.0% of all paralegals, followed by Black paralegals, 7.9%, and Chinese paralegals, 6.4%.
4. Some groups have small numbers of paralegals. In all of Ontario there are just 9 Japanese, 69 Korean, 103 Southeast Asian and 154 Indigenous paralegals.
5. The feminization of paralegal practice is plain: 67% of all paralegals are women, including 73% of Indigenous paralegals, 66% of racialized paralegals and 71% of White paralegals.

Table 2

Age by Indigeneity and Racialization for Ontario Paralegals, 2020

1. In each of the four age groups, about 2% of paralegals identify as Indigenous. This compares to 69.8% of paralegals age 60 or more are White, compared to 58.7% for ages 50-59, 55.3% for ages 30-39 and 57.4% for the youngest, 20-29 age group.
2. There are fewer racialized paralegals 60 and older, 28.4% of the total, than in the younger groups where the figures are between 39.3 and 46.6 percent, with the youngest group age 20-29 40.6% racialized. Younger paralegals are less likely to identify as Black, Chinese, Latino and West Asian, but more likely to be South Asian.

Table 3

Age by Gender, Sexual Orientation, Francophone Identity, Ability to Practice in French and Disability for Ontario Paralegals 2020

1. 67.0% of paralegals are women. The striking and continuing feminization of paralegal practice is apparent from a comparison of age groups. From just 35.6% women among paralegals age 60 or more, their representation increases to 54.7% for ages 50-59, 65.6% for ages 40-49, 74.1% for ages 30-39 and 80.6% for paralegals under 30.

2. 4.7% of paralegals identify as LGBT2Q, with 7.0% of paralegals age 20-29 identifying as LGBT2Q, about 3.6% for ages 40-59, and 1.2% for age 60 or more.
3. 2.9% of Ontario paralegals identify as Francophone, 2.8% can counsel and represent clients in French; and another 1.2% can counsel but not represent clients in French. Both indicators are highest for older paralegals, with a decline from 3.6% for paralegals age 50-59 able to counsel and represent in French down to about 2.4% for paralegals under 40.
4. The incidence of disability is 6.6% overall, climbing steadily from 4.5% for paralegals under 30 to 7.9% of paralegals age 40-49 to 9.7% of paralegals 60 or older.

Table 4

Status and Region by Indigeneity and Racialization for Ontario Paralegals 2020

1. Just over half of all paralegals are not practicing; 29% have other remunerative employment and 22% report they are not employed. Respectively, 43, 57 and 48% of Indigenous, racialized and White paralegals are in other employment or not employed.
2. 19% of paralegals are in sole practice and 10% are employees of a firm, with sole practice accounting for 25% of Indigenous paralegals, 20% of racialized paralegals and 17% of White paralegals.
3. The largest number of paralegals is in Toronto, 38% of the total. The combination of the Durham, Halton, Peel and York areas surrounding Toronto accounts for another 32.9%. 9 percent of paralegals work in the Central South, 7% in the Southwest, 6% in the Central North and 5% in Ottawa. Just 1% of paralegals are in the North and 2% in Eastern Ontario.
4. 48% of racialized paralegals are in Toronto and 39% are in Durham, Halton, Peel and York, leaving only 13% in the rest of the province. In contrast, 24% of Indigenous paralegals are in Toronto and 21% in Durham, Halton, Peel and York. The North accounts for 9% of Indigenous paralegals, compared to 2% of White paralegals.

Status by Gender by Age and Region by Gender for Ontario Paralegals, 2020

1. Male paralegals are much more likely to be sole practitioners, by a margin of 33.7% to 11.6%. The difference is almost entirely made up by “other employment”, which accounts for 34.3% of all women paralegals, compared to 18.6% of men. Sole practice increases with age, from just 2.7% of women paralegals under 30 to 18.6% for ages 40-49; and the comparable figures for men are 10.7% and 32.7%.
2. “Other employment” outside of paralegal practice, decreases from 48.6% of women paralegals under the age of 30 to 37.6% for ages 30-39 and 24.3% for ages 40-49; with comparable figures for men of 31.7, 26.7 and 18.6%. This might mean that most younger paralegals eventually practice as paralegals, but it is also possible that licensees who cannot or choose not to practice do not maintain their license.
3. Gender has little impact on the geographical distribution of paralegals.

Table 6

Area of Practice by Racialization and by Gender for Ontario Paralegals, 2020

To be counted as specializing in an area of practice in Table 6, at least 30% of a paralegal's practice must be in the area. By this criterion, most paralegals' practice is concentrated in just one area. Note that Table 6 reports on only 3456 of the total of 9128 licensees show in Table 1.

1. The number of paralegals reporting their area of practice, in the rightmost column, is quite small for many of the racialized groups and this results in some random variation. For example, not too much should be made of 42% of Korean paralegals reporting "Accident Benefits" as an area of specialization, as the figure describes just 7 out of 19 individuals reporting, compared to 65 Korean paralegals in Table 1.
2. It is difficult to see meaningful differences in the areas of practice of the individual racialized groups or between racialized, Indigenous and White paralegals.
3. Similarly, the gender differences are small except that 32% of male paralegals report practicing in the area of "Provincial Offenses", compared to 18% of women, while 17% of women work in "other" areas (not among the eight areas listed specifically), compared to 7% of men.

Dear Treasurer, Benchers Corbiere and Groia, and Ms. Miles and Ms. O'Hara,

I am writing to follow up on and repeat my request for certain LSO documents, as set out in my email of Nov. 22, and to additionally request two more items, on the same basis as my Nov. 22 requests.

For convenience, I have copied the relevant parts of my earlier email:

For the reasons and in the context summarized below, I am therefore formally requesting that I promptly be provided (by the appropriate staff member) with:

1. The names of the three experts who have been retained;
2. A copy of any Request for Proposal or equivalent that was delivered to the three experts (or to any other experts as part of this process);
3. A copy of any proposal or similar materials that was received from the three experts (or any other expert that was part of this process);
4. A copy of any contracts, agreements, or retainers entered into with those three experts, and of any directions given to them; and
5. The amounts already paid to those experts, and the amounts agreed to be paid to them in the future.

Please note that this is a formal request as a director of the Law Society corporation for information to which I believe I am legally entitled under s. 302 (a), (b) and (d) and s. 304(1) of the Ontario Corporations Act, and under the common law rights of a corporate director (see also Tyler v. Envacon Inc., 2012 ABQB 631). Further, given the circumstances, I believe that I need the above information to properly carry out my due diligence role as a director of the Law Society corporation.

Please also note that I am adding the following two items to my above requests, based on the same context summarized and partly set out in my earlier email (I also made a request for the first item below in the Nov. 25 Committee meeting):

6. A copy of the full Stratcom survey data set (that is, all the raw data from the survey of lawyers and paralegals) on which the Challenges report by Stratcom is based. According to the Stratcom report (p. 33, note 8), this was provided to the Law Society with the report. In addition, I would request a copy of any spreadsheets or models using that data, which were received by the Law Society; and
7. A copy of the draft Inclusion Index report provided to the Law Society by Diversio in the fall of 2019, as mentioned in the EIAC Committee memo of November 25 ("Update on the Implementation of the Challenges Report") on p. 2

I look forward to receiving this information as soon as possible.

Sincerely,

Murray Klippenstein

Toronto Regional Bencher

Law Society of Ontario
Osgoode Hall, 130 Queen Street West
Toronto, ON M5H 2N6

Attention: Teresa Donnelly, Treasurer

Dear Madam:

RE: Re: Director/Bencher Klippenstein's Request for Information

We have been retained by Bencher Murray Klippenstein in connection with his repeated requests as a Bencher of the Law Society of Ontario ("LSO") for information, which have gone unanswered.

As you know, Mr. Klippenstein was elected a bencher in April of 2019. Pursuant to s 10 of the Law Society Act, RSO 1990, c L.8, the benchers are mandated to "govern the affairs of the Society." It is perhaps axiomatic, but nonetheless worth stating, that benchers are therefore the directors of the LSO. Section 283 of the Corporations Act, RSO 1990, c C.38 ("Corporations Act"), provides that the "affairs of every corporation shall be managed by a board of directors howsoever designated." In the case of the LSO, benchers are the designated directors of the corporation. Tribunals and courts across Canada have recognized this self-evident equivalency of benchers and directors.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Halsbury's Laws of Canada – Legal Profession (2021 Reissue), R. Anand and J. Adamski explain that law societies "act through their directors generally known as benchers, who are given the statutory power to govern and administer the affairs of their law societies." See Law Society of Upper Canada v Polisuk, 2017 ONLSTH 171 at para 35ff, in which the Law Society Tribunal of Ontario recognized the equivalency of benchers and directors. See Gichuru v The Law Society of British Columbia, 2009 BCHRT 360 at para 18, in which the BC Human Rights Tribunal found that "the Board of Directors of the Law Society are called the Benchers." See also Law Society of Saskatchewan v Peet, [2004] LSDD No 54 at para 13, in which the LSS Discipline Committee rehearsed the platitude that the Law Society of Saskatchewan's "Board of Directors, called Benchers, consists of 17 persons." Similar language is found in other reasons of the LSS Discipline Committee, including Law Society of Saskatchewan v Armitage, [2009] LSDD No 147 at para 1.

As a Bencher and therefore director of the LSO, Mr. Klippenstein has both statutory and common law rights to information, to enable him to properly discharge his duties and responsibilities qua director. Under ss 302 and 304 of the Corporations Act, the LSO is required to keep proper books of account and make them available for inspection by any director during normal business hours. At common law, directors have robust and sweeping entitlement to information, as set out in the jurisprudence dating back to Burn v London and South Wales Coal Co, [1890] 7 TLR 118 (Eng).<sup>2</sup> A director has an unconditional right to access all records and information held by the corporation for the purpose of performing his duties, and need not provide explanation or reason for the request for inspection.<sup>3</sup> Importantly, there is a presumption that a director will “use his knowledge for the benefit of the company” in the absence of “clear proof to the contrary.”<sup>4</sup>

Regardless of any legal presumption, there can be no doubt that Mr. Klippenstein’s purpose in requesting information is to fulfill his obligations as director, for the benefit the LSO. In order to satisfy himself as to the propriety of certain decisions, policies, and expenditures, Mr. Klippenstein requires additional information and records that are being withheld from him. Accordingly, we demand that the following records be provided to Mr. Klippenstein for his use as director/bencher of the LSO. In some cases, brief explanatory notes are provided as to the significance of the record being sought, though as noted, no explanation is strictly necessary.

Stratcom Report: dataset and background

1. A copy of the full Stratcom Communication Inc. (“Stratcom”) survey dataset (that is, all the raw data from the survey of lawyers and paralegals), which was used to generate the report entitled Challenges Facing Racialized Licensees: Final Report, dated March 11, 2014, and submitted to the LSO in March of 2014 by David Kraft, John Willis, and Michael Charles on behalf of Stratcom (“Stratcom Report”). According to the Stratcom Report (p 33, note 8), the full survey dataset was provided to the LSO in conjunction with the report. Additionally requested is a copy of any spreadsheets or models using that data, which were received by the LSO. Mr. Klippenstein requested these materials by email dated November 29, 2021, with a follow-up request by email dated December 17, 2021. The LSO offered no response. Mr. Klippenstein requires this dataset in order to properly analyze the merits of the Stratcom Report, and to assess conclusions drawn within it or based upon it. This dataset is particularly necessary given that Stratcom performed a non-random sample survey, received a low response rate, and extrapolated the results of the non-random survey to the entire population of licensees in Ontario.

2. A copy of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group's ("Working Group") "Request for Proposal" of December, 2012 regarding the consultant work eventually carried out by Stratcom.
3. A copy of the proposal submitted by Stratcom in response to the "Request for Proposal" of December, 2012.
4. A copy of the written agreement entered into between the LSO and Stratcom, circa March 15, 2013.

Stratcom and the Working Group

5. A copy of the memo provided to the Working Group Chair by Bencher Falconer prior to the May 8, 2013 Working Group meeting and considered at the meeting. This memo apparently expressed discontent with Stratcom's methodology.
6. Materials for the May 8, 2013 Working Group meeting. The materials for this contentious meeting are not posted as is normal in the bencher archives.
7. Copies of all financial records showing payments made by the LSO to Stratcom (related to the Stratcom Report) subsequent to the retainer agreement of March 15, 2013, and up to the present.
8. A copy of the draft Stratcom Report delivered to LSO staff in January of 2014.
9. Copies of minutes or meeting materials of Working Group meetings in the period between the meeting of June 27, 2013 and the meeting of October 15, 2014. The bencher record files contain no materials relating to any Working Group meeting over that one year and four-month period, contrary to usual practice. The Working Group must have met during this important and lengthy period, during which the Stratcom draft and final reports were received, and an important public consultation paper and consultation plan was prepared for presentation to Convocation on October 30, 2014.

The Kay Report on Diversity in the legal profession – missing key data

10. A copy of missing p 53 of the Kay Report. The Kay Report was a major earlier survey and study on diversity in the legal professions which was important background for Stratcom and the Working Group. The Kay Report's List of Tables refers to Table 4.19, on the important topic of "Partnership by Racial/Cultural Community, Controlling for Year of Call to the Bar", as being on p 53 of the Report, but p 53 is missing from copies provided to the Working Group, and from all available copies.

Responses to Mr. Klippenstein's A Critical Review of the Law Society's Challenges Report, dated January 8, 2020

11. Copies of any memos or staff notes or communications (including emails between staff and between staff and benchers), which address the detailed methodological and other critiques in Mr. Klippenstein's A Critical Review of the Law Society's Challenges Report, dated January 8, 2020, and distributed to senior staff and all benchers on January 8, 2020.

Inclusion Index, Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions, Working Group Final Report ("Working Together Report"), Recommendation 6

12. A copy of the consulting agreement between the LSO and Diversio consultants for purposes of preparing the Inclusion Index, date unknown.

13. Copies of all records showing payments made by the LSO to Diversio (related to the Inclusion Index) after the retainer or consultation agreement (date unknown), and up to the present.
14. A copy of the draft Inclusion Index report by Diversio delivered to Law Society staff in the fall of 2019. Mr. Klippenstein requested a copy of this draft report by email dated December 17, 2021.

Changes to the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct related to the prohibition of “systemic discrimination” by any licensee (Working Together Report, Recommendation 12(2))

15. Copies of any proceedings by the Professional Regulation Committee of the LSO, including briefing memoranda and staff communications to this Committee, related to amending the Rules of Professional Conduct or the Paralegal Rules of Conduct so as to prohibit “systemic discrimination”, as set out in the Working Together Report, Recommendation 12(2).

Enforcement and compliance measures (Working Together Report, Recommendation 8)

16. Copies of all financial records documenting resources spent on the types of investigations described in a memo from the LSO “Senior Management Team” dated April 25, 2016, entitled “Operationalizing RWG Draft Recommendations” (“RWG Memo”), since the adoption of the Working Together Report. Also requested are copies of records indicating how many of the types of investigations described in the RWG Memo have been initiated since the adoption of the Working Together Report. By way of background, the RWG Memo addresses the “operational considerations” in implementing aspects of the draft Working Together Report. The RWG Memo states that “[i]nvestigations and prosecutions of failures by licensees to abide by articulated principles or failures by firms to implement human rights/diversity policies will likely be resource intensive, potentially involving interviews of and evidence from everyone in the office or firm, and perhaps others.” Further, the RWG Memo provides that “a reasonable estimate of the cost for the first few investigations and prosecutions” is $350,000 of external investigator and prosecutorial time, plus 1,000 hours of internal investigative and prosecutorial time “per prosecution”.

Addressing Complaints of Systemic Discrimination (Working Together Report, Recommendation 12(4))

17. Any records describing “the specialized team that has been established,” and records providing “details related to [the] training plan,” as referred to in materials for the LSO Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee meeting of June 8, 2017. These materials touch upon the process of how complaints of discrimination (under the heading of “systemic discrimination”) will be dealt with, and state (at p 97) that “Karen Manarin, Executive Director, Professional Regulation, will attend to discuss the specialized team that has been established and details related to a training plan for this item, in support of the implementation of Recommendation 12(4) of the Challenges Final Report.”

Cultural Competency training in bar admission course materials (Working Together Report, Recommendation 10)

18. A copy of the bar admission course materials pertaining to “cultural competency”, as referred to in Recommendation 10 of the Working Together Report, for the years 2017 and each year thereafter. Other benchers have also requested copies of those bar admission course materials, but have been denied such copies despite their right to information as directors. Any concern of confidentiality cannot be a ground to prevent benchers having access to this information, and could in any event be addressed if only the LSO would respond.

Consultant panel (of three experts) retained by the Law Society in or about November, 2021 to review the Stratcom Report and the Inclusion Index and other matters.

19. A copy of any Request for Proposal or equivalent that was delivered to the three experts (or to any other experts as part of the process).
20. A copy of any proposal or similar materials that was received from the three experts (or any other expert that was part of the process).
21. A copy of any contracts, agreements, or retainers entered into with those three experts, and of any directions given to them.
22. Copies of all records showing amounts already paid to those experts, and the amounts agreed to be paid to them in the future. Mr. Klippenstein requested these records (items 19-22) by email dated November 22, 2021, sent to senior staff and all benchers.
23. Copies of any materials submitted by the three consultants showing their qualifications for the review (including in relations to survey and statistical methodology).

Mr. Klippenstein requires the records described above in order to discharge his duties as director/bencher of the LSO. We ask that you provide them on or before May 20, 2022, failing which we have instructions to commence legal proceedings to compel production.

Yours truly,

Attention: Teresa Donnelly, Treasurer

Dear Madam:

RE: Re: Director/Bencher Klippenstein's Request for Information

We have not yet received your response to our correspondence of April 26, 2022. Frankly, we find it rather impertinent that a serious and formal legal request to the LSO by one of its Benchers would merit no response whatsoever from the LSO.

In the meantime, Bencher Klippenstein has apprised us of the two meetings of the Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee (“EIAC”) that took place on May 3 and 12. We are advised that at the May 3 meeting three consultants retained by the LSO (Michael Ornstein, Sujitha Ratnasingham, and Scot Wortley), referred to by LSO staff as a “Peer Review Panel,” presented their assessments of the Stratcom Report and the draft Inclusion Index.

We are advised that, among other criticisms, the three consultants confirmed that there was a serious lack of transparency in the Stratcom Report. Some of the areas in which Stratcom failed to be forthright include the survey response rate, reporting in general, and analysis of the dataset. With respect to the Inclusion Index, the methodology of the consultant Diversio was similarly characterized as non-transparent in a number of respects.

Nevertheless, notwithstanding the many criticisms regarding lack of transparency, and other substantive criticisms, that the so-called Peer Review Panel leveled against the Stratcom Report and the Inclusion Index, these were described as “water under the bridge” by one consultant, and the three consultants opined that many of the policy measures based on the Stratcom Report should be continued with by the LSO. It therefore appears that Bencher Klippenstein's longstanding and previously expressed concerns about the Stratcom Report and the Inclusion Index have been, on the one hand, validated, and on the other hand, brushed aside.

All of the foregoing strongly supports Bencher Klippenstein being provided on an urgent basis the information he has requested. If on the one hand the Peer Review Panel regards Stratcom's process and analysis as lacking transparency and integrity, but on the other hand considers such deficiencies to be merely "water under the bridge", then Mr. Klippenstein is all-the-more justified in having continuing serious concerns about these reports and the whole process, and as a director of the LSO must be furnished with all pertinent records in order to perform the detailed independent due diligence analysis necessary to discharge his duties to the LSO.

It should not be surprising that a fundamental breakdown of trust occurs in this situation that is proportional to the lack of transparency in the process that Stratcom and the LSO have undertaken with respect to the Stratcom Report, the Inclusion Index, and the Working Together Report. It takes some effort to rebuild trust. The most obvious avenue to building trust in these circumstances is to open to full scrutiny the research and analysis that have been conducted. If there is nothing to hide, full disclosure could dispel the concerns of a conscientious director, not to mention the legal profession(s) at large. On the other hand, if there is something that ought to be remedied, transparency and the shedding of light would offer the possibility of resolution of any latent issues and the reestablishment of trust.

As a result of these developments, Bencher Klippenstein requires, in addition to the records that we requested in our correspondence dated April 26, 2022, the following record:

The full dataset of answers (redacted as necessary to protect the confidentiality of the respondents) to the demographic and "inclusion" questions distributed to all lawyer licensees as part of the 2018 LSO Annual Filing required of all lawyer licensees. In that Annual Filing, answering the demographic and inclusion questions was mandatory for all individual licensees. This disclosure is required for adequate transparency, due to the possibility of misuse of these numbers, in the past and in the future, in terms of response rate and sample size, as has already occurred in a preliminary Inclusion Index analysis.

Be advised that we have instructions to issue a Statement of Claim without delay in the event that the LSO does not reply by May 27, providing the records that Bencher Klippenstein has requested.

Yours truly,

KENNY LAW

Memorandum

To: Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee
From: Cara-Marie O'Hagan, Executive Director, Policy
Date: April 29, 2022
Re.: For Discussion: Peer Review Findings

Purpose

1. To update the Committee on the preliminary findings of the peer review of the Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Profession Report (Challenges Report) and the Inclusion Index;
2. To consider whether the Inclusion Index should be released at this time;
3. To discuss next steps.

Background

The Law Society established a facilitated peer review to evaluate the Challenges Report and its recommendations, including the Inclusion Index. The peer review was conducted by a panel of 3 experts between December 2021 and April 2022. The scope of the peer review was set out in a report to EIAC in November 2021 (Tab 1.1).

The three peer reviewers will present their findings to EIAC on May 3rd in a verbal presentation. While it was anticipated that the full written review would be available in advance of May 3rd, that is not available at this time. Due to personal circumstances, one of the reviewers was not able to complete his portion of the work. This matter is being brought to EIAC to commence the discussion of the Inclusion Index.

Recommendation

It is recommended that the current version of the Inclusion Index (Found at Tab 3.2 of the materials) not be released. This recommendation is supported by the Treasurer, Chair Dianne Corbiere and the CEO.

Discussion

The peer reviewers shared their preliminary findings with policy staff in March 2022. Policy staff has had the opportunity to discuss the findings with the CEO Diana Miles, Chair Dianne Corbiere and the Treasurer. For the reasons that will be presented by the peer reviewers at the May 3rd EIAC meeting, it appears that the Inclusion Index will not further the Law Society's equity goals and should not be released in its current iteration.

EIAC will need to consider this recommendation and start to consider next steps for the Law Society's equity agenda.

Memorandum

To: Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee
From: Ada Maxwell-Alleyne
Date: November 17, 2021
Re.: Challenges Report Implementation Update

---

Purpose

This memo provides the Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee (“Committee”) with:

1. an update on the implementation of the Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions Report (“Challenges Report”); and
2. an outline of the peer review undertaken to evaluate the implementation of the Challenges Report, with decisions on the use of the results of the Inclusion Index to be made following that review.

Timeline

The following outlines the significant steps in the development and implementation of the Challenges Report:

2012: Challenges Working Group begins an engagement process to gather information about barriers faced by racialized licensees. The firm Strategic Communications Inc. (Stratcom) manages this data gathering process employing a multi-model research approach and presents its final report.

2014: The Working Group reviews the data from the engagement process and drafts a consultation paper titled Developing Strategies for Change: Addressing Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees. Convocation approves this consultation paper.

2014-2015: The Working Group consults broadly with licensees, law students, articling students and the public. The Law Firms Diversity and Inclusion Network and legal organizations are also consulted.

2015-2016: The Working Group develops its final report with 13 recommendations.

2016: Convocation approves the final report and recommendations in December.

2017 forward: Implementation of recommendations.

Status of the Challenges Report

The Challenges Report outlines five strategies and 13 recommendations to address systemic barriers faced by racialized licensees. Most of the recommendations have been implemented and others are in process. The recommendations and the status of each can be found at TAB 5.1.

To date, the Law Society has not evaluated the project, its recommendations or its implementation to assess the effectiveness in achieving the Law Society's goal to reduce barriers faced by racialized and Indigenous licensees, thereby helping to ensure healthy and successful legal professions and advancing the public interest. Project reviews are generally seen as standard best practice when an institution undertakes a major initiative. Moreover, before moving forward with outstanding recommendations developed in 2016, the Law Society should obtain expert advice on the relevance of those recommendations in the 2021 environment.

The Inclusion Index

One of the outstanding recommendations of the Challenges Report is Recommendation 6 which provides that:

Every four years, the Law Society will develop and publish an Inclusion Index that reflects the following information, including, for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees: the legal workplace's self-assessment information (Recommendation 3(3)), demographic data obtained from the Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report (Recommendation 4) and information gathered from the inclusion questions provided by the Law Society (Recommendation 5).<sup>1</sup>

The data underlying the Index comes from the 2018 Annual Report and was collected in the first quarter of 2019. In April 2019, the Law Society engaged the firm Diversio to develop the Index. Diversio delivered a draft of the Index in the fall of 2019. By that time, Law Society counsel who were originally involved in the development of the Index had left the organization. New Policy counsel engaged with Diversio to further develop the Index and understand the methodology underlying the results before planning its release.

In March 2020, the Law Society shifted its focus to addressing the challenges and disruptions caused by the pandemic. EIAC resumed its regular work in late 2020. Before a decision is made on how to move forward with the information collected for the Index, a number of questions should be considered:

1. Were the demographic, inclusion and self-assessment questions in the lawyer and paralegal annual reports the right questions to meet the purpose?
2. Given the three-year period between the collection of the data and the current date, is it scientifically sound to release the data?
3. The data on which the Index is based is now three years old. Is the Inclusion Index based on that data relevant today?

<sup>1</sup> Recommendations 3, 4, 5 and 6 of the Challenges Report speak to the creation of an Inclusion Index for legal workplaces with 25 or more licensees. The Index was to include data from three sources in the 2018 Members' Annual Report: the legal workplace mandatory self-assessment responses; individual licensee voluntary responses to self-identification; and inclusion questions. The Index was to be published every four years.

4. In anticipation of the release of the Inclusion Index, some workplaces proactively adopted strategies to promote equity, diversity and inclusion within their workplaces. The progress of these workplaces is not reflected in the current Index. Would the release of the Index at this point support the Law Society's goal of reducing barriers faced by racialized and Indigenous licensees?
5. If the answer to any of the above questions is "no", would the Law Society's reputation be negatively impacted by the release of the Index?

Peer Review of Challenges Report

Given this context, a peer review of the Challenges Report has been undertaken. A decision on how to move forward with the Inclusion Index data will be made once the review is completed. The review will explore whether the implementation of the Challenges Report provides effective requirements, incentives and information that assist in reducing barriers faced by racialized and Indigenous licensees. The review will assess:

- a. the impact of fully implemented recommendations of the Challenges Report (e.g. Recommendation 9, regarding mandatory EDI CPD and related products);
- b. the impediments to implementing certain recommendations (e.g. Recommendation 12, regarding addressing systemic discrimination); and
- c. the reliability of the data collection and analysis used in 2019;
- d. the extent to which the above data and analysis is relevant for 2021.

The review will also provide recommendations for the further enhancement of EDI within the legal community.

Structure of the Peer Review

The peer review is being conducted by a panel of experts and will be completed in April 2022. The three experts who have been retained possess significant knowledge in survey methodology, research, and equity, diversity and inclusion. Care was taken to compile a list of experts who can provide a neutral and objective commentary. A summary of the review will be presented to the Committee and Convocation in May or June 2022.

An evaluation rubric will be provided to the reviewers. Some of the questions to be addressed through this review include:

With respect to the Challenges Report

- Was the data collection process valid?
- Were response rates sufficient?
- Were the questions posed as part of the membership survey appropriate?
- Is the process of using key informants effective/reliable?

With respect to the Inclusion Index

- Were the demographic, inclusion and self-assessment questions in the lawyer and paralegal annual reports the right questions to meet the purpose?
- Was the scope appropriate?

Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee November 25, 2021 - Update on Implementation of the Challenges Report

- Would the Index, as produced, achieve the desired result vis-à-vis legal workplaces?
- Is the data still reliable?
- Should the next version include any changes?

With respect to future equity work at the Law Society

- Is there a more effective way to collect equity data than the Law Society's current approach?
- Is the format of the collected data appropriate? (for example, are the Law Society's demographic categories generally accepted?)
- Are there other probative questions that can assist in the equity agenda? (i.e. income related to demographics)

The Committee will receive the Inclusion Index and the supporting materials for the peer review when the peer review is completed.

Motion

That Convocation approve the following thirteen recommendations outlined in the Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions report:

Recommendation 1 – Reinforcing Professional Obligations

The Law Society will review and amend, where appropriate, the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, and Commentaries to reinforce the professional obligations of all licensees to recognize, acknowledge and promote principles of equality, diversity and inclusion consistent with the requirements under human rights legislation and the special responsibilities of licensees in the legal and paralegal professions.

Recommendation 2 – Diversity and Inclusion Project

The Law Society will work with stakeholders, such as interested legal workplaces, legal associations, law schools and paralegal colleges to develop model policies and resources to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees.

Recommendation 3 – The Adoption of Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Principles and Practices

The Law Society will:

- 1) ~~require every licensee to adopt and to abide by a statement of principles acknowledging their obligation to promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally, and in their behaviour towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public;~~ See note at page 4a
- 2) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy for their legal workplace addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement, which will be available to members of the professions and the public upon request;
- 3) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to complete, every two years, an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment for their legal workplace, to be provided to the Law Society; and
- 4) encourage legal workplaces to conduct inclusion surveys by providing them with sample templates.

Recommendation 4 – Measuring Progress through Quantitative Analysis

Each year, the Law Society will measure progress quantitatively by providing legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees in Ontario with the quantitative self-identification data of their licensees compiled from the Lawyers Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report in a manner consistent with the best practices established to protect licensees vulnerable to harm that may flow from this disclosure, so they can compare their data with the aggregate demographic data gathered from the profession as a whole through the annual reports.

Note: Convocation amended Recommendation 4 by adding the above, underlined content. References to Recommendation 4 have been updated throughout the report.

Recommendation 5 – Measuring Progress through Qualitative Analysis

The Law Society will measure progress by:

- 1) asking licensees to voluntarily answer inclusion questions, provided by the Law Society, about their legal workplace, every four years; and
- 2) compiling the results of the inclusion questions for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees in Ontario and providing the legal workplace with a summary of the information gathered

Recommendation 6 – Inclusion Index

Every four years, the Law Society will develop and publish an inclusion index that reflects the following information, including, for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees: the legal workplace's self-assessment information (Recommendation 3(3)), demographic data obtained from the Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report (Recommendation 4) and information gathered from the inclusion questions provided by the Law Society (Recommendation 5).

Recommendation 7 – Repeat Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project Inclusion Survey

The Law Society will conduct inclusion surveys with questions similar to those asked in Appendix F of the Stratcom Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Final Report (March 11, 2014) (available online at <http://www.stratcom.ca/wp-content/uploads/manual/Racialized-Licensees-Full-Report.pdf>). The first inclusion survey will be conducted within one year of the adoption of these recommendations, and thereafter every four years, subject to any recommendation by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee to Convocation.

Recommendation 8 – Progressive Compliance Measures

The Law Society will consider and enact, as appropriate, progressive compliance measures for legal workplaces that do not comply with the requirements proposed in Recommendation 3 and/or legal workplaces that are identified as having systemic barriers to diversity and inclusion.

Recommendation 9 – Continuing Professional Development (CPD) Programs on Topics of Equality and Inclusion in the Professions

The Law Society will:

- 1) launch a three hour accredited program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions;
- 2) develop resources to assist legal workplaces in designing and delivering their own three hour program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions, to be accredited by the Law Society; and
- 3) require each licensee to complete three hours of an accredited program focused on equality and inclusion within the first three years following the adoption of these recommendations and one hour per year every year thereafter, which will count towards the licensee's professionalism hours for that year.

Recommendation 10 – The Licensing Process

The Law Society will include the topics of cultural competency, equality and inclusion in the professions as competencies to be acquired in the Licensing Process.

Recommendation 11 – Building Communities of Support

The Law Society, in collaboration with legal associations where appropriate, will provide support to racialized licensees in need of direction and assistance through mentoring and networking initiatives.

Recommendation 12 – Addressing Complaints of Systemic Discrimination

The Law Society, in light of the findings of this project and emerging issues in the professions, will:

- 1) review the function, processes and structure of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC), including considering effective ways for the DHC to address issues of systemic discrimination;
- 2) revise the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, where appropriate, so that systemic discrimination and reprisal for complaints of discrimination and harassment are clearly identified as breaches of professional conduct requirements;
- 3) create effective ways for the Professional Regulation Division to address complaints of systemic discrimination; and
- 4) create a specialized and trained team to address complaints of discrimination.

Recommendation 13 – Leading by Example

- 1) The Law Society will continue to monitor and assess internal policies, practices and programs, to promote diversity, inclusion and equality within the workplace and in the provision of services by:
  - a) as required, adopting, implementing and maintaining a human rights/diversity policy addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement;
  - b) measuring quantitative progress through a census of the workforce or other method;
  - c) measuring qualitative progress by conducting inclusion surveys;
  - d) conducting regular equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessments; and
  - e) based on the results from b), c) and d), identifying gaps and barriers and adopting measures to address the gaps and barriers;
  - f) publishing relevant findings from b), c), d) and e); and
  - g) providing equality and inclusion education programs for staff at the Law Society on a regular basis.
- 2) The Law Society will:
  - a) conduct an internal diversity assessment of the bench composition and publicize the results;
  - b) provide equality and inclusion education programs for Convocation on a regular basis

Note:

Recommendation 3.1 of this report regarding the Statement of Principles was repealed by Convocation on September 11, 2019. At that time, Law Society benchers approved a motion to require licensees to acknowledge in their annual reports, in accordance with the professional conduct rules, their special responsibility as a lawyer or paralegal to respect the requirements of human rights laws in Ontario and to honour the obligation not to discriminate.

Overview of Submissions

The Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group (“the Working Group”) provided its final report, Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions on September 22, 2016 for information. The report is to be before Convocation for decision on December 2, 2016.

Members of the legal professions and the public were invited to provide comments on the recommendations outlined in the report until November 14, 2015. The Law Society received 46 submissions – 23 from individuals and 23 from organizations (see TAB 3.1.1). The Working Group has determined that only submissions from organizations are to be public. Many of the individual submissions speak to personal experiences and the Working Group believes that should those individuals wish to make their views public, they should have the option to do so on their own. What follows is a summary of both individual and organization submissions divided by the five interrelated categories outlined in the report: accelerating culture shift; measuring progress; educating for change; implementing supports; and operations of the Law Society.

The Working Group received positive comments from the professions and the public, with many individuals and organizations commending the Law Society for taking steps to address issues of systemic racism in the legal professions. The Working Group is encouraged by the submissions it received.

Many of the comments spoke to the implementation of the recommendations in the report. These comments are not outlined in this document – however, should the recommendations be approved by Convocation, the comments will be considered during the implementation phase.

General comments

All of the submissions from organizations representing licensees from equality-seeking organizations expressed support for the 13 recommendations put forward by the Working Group, with suggestions provided on how to strengthen the recommendations. Generally, no organizations were opposed to the recommendations.

Specifically, the submissions from the Canadian Association of Black Lawyers, the Roundtable of Diversity Associations, the Metro Toronto Chinese & Southeast Asian Legal Clinic, the South Asian Bar Association, the Equity Advisory Group, the Canadian Hispanic Bar Association, and the Federation of Asian Canadian Lawyers stressed that Convocation should vote on the thirteen recommendations as a package and not individually.

In addition, many of the submissions from organizations suggested that the recommendations outlined in the Working Group’s report should apply to all equality-seeking groups and not solely to racialized licensees. Some submissions also noted that the report and the recommendations should recognize how intersections of gender, race, sexual orientation, disability and other aspects of identity shape the experiences of licensees.

Accelerating culture shift

The Working Group received submissions supporting the need to accelerate cultural change in the legal professions.

The Working Group received a comment about the importance of taking an approach that recognizes the unique barriers faced by Indigenous licensees and the challenges that both racialized and Indigenous licensees face. Additionally, the comment asked that the Working Group make specific mention of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's final report and the need to address reconciliation between Indigenous and non-Indigenous peoples.

The Working Group is thankful for this comment and has included text that reflects this suggestions in the "Guiding Principles" section of the report.

One comment received by the Working Group advised that the Law Society should require law schools to remove obstacles against racialized licensees. The Working Group notes that the Law Society does not have authority over law schools; however, law schools are encouraged to participate in the Diversity and Inclusion Project outlined in Recommendation 2.

Some submissions suggested that the Law Society, under Recommendation 3, should require all legal workplaces, not just workplaces of at least 10 licensees, to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy and complete an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment. In determining the size of workplace for this requirement, the Working Group considered balancing burden and benefit. Although the requirement applies to workplaces of at least 10 licensees, workplaces of less than 10 licensees are strongly encouraged to develop policies and complete self-assessments. This encouragement is reflected in the text that accompanies the recommendation.

One submission suggested that legal workplaces' diversity policies should be made publicly available on the workplace website. In considering this suggestion, the Working Group determined that not all legal workplace websites are used as a recruitment tool - some are intended as advocacy tools, for example. The Working Group, however, noted that policies should be available to the public. Consequently, the Working Group has modified Recommendation 3(2) to note that the policies should be available to members of the professions and the public upon request.

An additional submission proposed that an exemption be provided for legal workplaces that have existing human rights/diversity policies provided they satisfy the Law Society's requirements. The text that accompanies Recommendation 3 recognizes that licensees' employers may already have workplace policies that satisfy the requirement under Recommendation 3(2)

Measuring Progress

The Working Group received positive responses to the recommendations regarding data collection.

One submission suggested that the quantitative self-identification data collected by the Law Society should be published in an aggregate manner. The Working Group notes that the Law Society currently provides race-based self-identification data by size of firm in its annual statistical snapshots, which are available at: https://www.lsuc.on.ca/uploadedFiles/Equity\_and\_Diversity/Members2/TAB%207.3.1%20-%20Snapshot-Lawyers16\_apr13.pdf (lawyers) and https://www.lsuc.on.ca/uploadedFiles/Equity\_and\_Diversity/Members2/TAB%207.3.2-%20Paralegal-Snapshot16\_apr13.pdf (paralegals).

One comment proposed that equity-seeking legal associations should have access to the data collected by the Law Society and that data should be made public at the law school level. The Working Group is of the view that the data should be disseminated to the public through the annual statistical snapshots and that the inclusion index will provide equity-seeking associations and law schools with insights into diversity and inclusion in various workplaces.

Another submission recommended that legal workplaces should be required to engage in internal collection of data in their workplaces. The Working Group is conscious of the fact that many firms may not have the resources to properly collect data from licensees and that there may be privacy concerns if legal workplaces are collecting data from licensees directly. The Working Group asserts that privacy and confidentiality are essential principles to uphold in collecting quantitative demographic data and qualitative inclusion data from licensees.

One comment suggested that the inclusion index include information for all legal workplaces regardless of their size, not just workplaces of at least 25 licensees. Legal workplaces of less than 25 licensees are encouraged to participate in the inclusion index; however, in balancing benefit with burden, the Working Group has determined that 25 licensees and above is an appropriate number.

In terms of conducting inclusion surveys that are similar to the Stratcom survey, the Working Group received a comment that an interval of four years would not capture the issues the Working Group seeks to identify given the rate at which lawyers leave law firms. The Working Group carefully considered this time interval and notes that four years was seen as an appropriate amount of time for changes to take hold.

The Working Group received questions about the nature of the progressive compliance measures outlined in Recommendation 8. The Working Group notes that the nature of the compliance measures will be carefully considered by the Law Society in due course. The intent of the Working Group is to foster cooperation to the extent possible and engage in reactive measures only when necessary.

Educating for Change

The Working Group is pleased that, from the comments received, the professions and the public are in agreement with the requirement for licensees to complete equality and inclusion Continuing Professional Development hours.

The Working Group received a number of comments that suggested that licensees be required to complete a one hour equality and inclusion program per year instead of three hours once every three years. One submission suggested that the Law Society require licensees to participate in an equality and inclusion program once every year following an initial three hour training program. The Working Group believes that this is an excellent suggestion as the three hour training program will allow for licensees to develop a foundation in equality and inclusion principles. The annual one hour requirement, following the initial three hour program, will ensure that equality and inclusion principles are top of mind for licensees.

Building Communities of Support

Comments on the final report reiterated the importance of mentoring and networking. Suggestions made included the creation of a mentoring initiative specifically for junior racialized licensees, free mentoring services to all new lawyers of any background and mentoring for law students. One submission also proposed that the Law Society monitor the success of all mentoring and networking initiatives and identify any improvements. The Working Group notes that the Law Society recently launched the Coach and Advisor Network, which will, in addition to providing advisor and coaching services, act “a centralized source of information to the professions on mentorship programs in Ontario.”<sup>1</sup>

The Working Group received a submission that noted the importance of employing an approach that addresses the unique experiences of Indigenous licensees and the similar barriers faced by Indigenous and racialized licensees – in addition to a suggestion that mentioned be made of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission’s final report. The Working Group has incorporated this suggestion in the “Guiding Principles” section of the report.

The Working Group notes that in November 2016, Convocation determined that the Law Society will engage in an analysis of the licensing process. The Working Group expects that the principles of equality and inclusion will be considered during this process.

The Law Society received submissions regarding the review of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel (“DHC”) program outlined in Recommendation 12 – particularly related to the need to maintain the confidentiality and independence of the DHC program. The Working Group notes that the Law Society’s Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee (“EAIC”) commenced a review of the DHC program in Fall 2016. EAIC is alive to the importance of the DHC’s duty of confidentiality and the arms-length position of the DHC.

Leading by Example

Comments regarding leading by example spoke largely to the bench election process. The Working Group notes that in September 2016, the Law Society established a Governance Task Force to make recommendations in regard to the Law Society’s governance structure.

A suggestion was made that Recommendation 13(1)(a) should include the words “discipline, discharge and revocation”, however, the Working Group points out that the requirement for the Law Society to adopt, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy speaks to the need for the policy to address at the very least recruitment, retention and advancement. The wording of this recommendation is broad in order to allow for the Law Society to examine various aspects of its operations.

Other comments

The Working Group received submissions that outlined the importance of addressing the challenges faced by racialized licensees in law school and upon entry into the profession. The Diversity and Inclusion Project, contemplated in Recommendation 2, is intended to allow for a forum to address these issues. Other submissions suggested that the Working Group should address the pathways to licensing for lawyers. The Working Group notes, again, that Convocation has already approved a review of the licensing process.

One submission noted that the report has been silent on the unique needs of racialized internationally trained lawyers without Canadian education or experience. It is the Working Group's intention that the implementation of the recommendations will consider all racialized licensees and the intersections of their experiences, including the experiences of internationally trained racialized licensees.

Some submissions suggested that the Law Society should consider the economic barriers for racialized licensees and other licensees from equity-seeking groups. The Working Group notes that in the implementation of the recommendations, economic barriers will be considered.

One submission noted that the report had failed to direct the Law Society to develop mental health strategies specific to racialized licensees. The Working Group notes that in April 2016, the Law Society approved a long-term mental health strategy, which "builds on the Law Society's existing mental health initiatives and lays the groundwork to explore additional supports or programs that fall within the organization's mandate."<sup>2</sup>

One submission suggested that the Report should call upon the Law Society to work with the Roundtable of Diversity Associations (RODA) and other associations serving racialized lawyers across Ontario using a similar approach to The Action Group on Access to Justice. It is contemplated that the Diversity and Inclusion Project under Recommendation 2 will be a forum for the Law Society to work with associations serving racialized licensees.

Executive Summary

“Inclusion is not about bringing people into what already exists; it is making a new space, a better space for everyone.”<sup>3</sup>

This is the unanimous final report of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group. The fifteen Benchers on the Working Group have reviewed the written submissions and other input of Benchers and many external stakeholders since the initial presentation of the report to Convocation on September 22, 2016. After discussion and some revisions, the Working Group now presents this Report, unanimous in its 13 recommendations and the rationale supporting them, for approval by Convocation on December 2, 2016.

This Report represents the final stage of a lengthy consultative and study exercise which has led to the conclusion that racialized licensees<sup>4</sup> face widespread barriers within the professions at all stages of their careers. As the title “Working Together for Change” bears out, the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group is confident that there is a unique opportunity for change, based on collaborative, concrete steps to implement solutions. That said, the challenges faced by racialized licensees are both longstanding and significant. In our view, the Law Society must take a leadership role in giving legal workplaces reasonable deadlines to implement steps that are important to bringing about lasting culture change. The Working Group has concluded that prescribing minimum standards of equality, diversity and inclusion are consistent with the human rights responsibilities of the profession — obligations already required by the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct and, more generally, the Human Rights Code.

Reform in addressing barriers faced by racialized licensees is an essential component of ensuring a healthy and successful legal profession, and to advancement of the public interest — goals that we all share and must achieve.

Background

1. The Law Society of Upper Canada (The Law Society) has a duty to maintain and advance the cause of justice and the rule of law, to facilitate access to justice for the people of Ontario and to protect the public interest. Furthermore, the Law Society is committed to adhering to its obligations under the Human Rights Code. In fulfilling its mandate, the Law Society integrates equality and diversity values and principles into all of its policies, practices and programs. The

<sup>4</sup> The Ontario Human Rights Commission notes that using the terminology “racialized person” or “racialized group” is more accurate than “racial minority”, “visible minority”, “person of colour” or “non-White”. Race is the socially constructed differences among people based on characteristics such as accent or manner of speech, name, clothing, diet, beliefs and practices, leisure preferences, places of origin and so forth. Racialization is the “process by which societies construct races as real, different and unequal in ways that matter to economic, political and social life”. See Ontario Human Rights Commission, Racial discrimination, race and racism, online: Ontario Human Rights Commission <http://www.ohrc.on.ca/en/racial-discrimination-race-andracism>

Law Society works to ensure that the law and the practice of law are reflective of all the people of Ontario, including Indigenous peoples, Francophones and equality-seeking communities. The Law Society also seeks to ensure that its workplace and the legal professions are free of harassment and discrimination.

In 2012, the Law Society created the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group (“the Working Group”) to:

- a. identify challenges faced by racialized licensees in different practice environments, including entry into practice and advancement;
- b. identify factors and practice-challenges faced by racialized licensees that could increase the risk of regulatory complaints and discipline;
- c. consider best practices for preventative, remedial and/or support strategies;
- d. if appropriate, design and develop preventative, remedial, enforcement, regulatory and/or support strategies, for consideration by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee (“EAIC”) and other committees, to address these challenges.

The Working Group’s Approach

Since 2012, the Working Group has been actively engaged in gathering information about the challenges faced by racialized licensees and developing recommendations to address these challenges.

In order to fulfil its mandate, the Working Group gathered information about the challenges faced by racialized licensees using consultant and community engagement processes.<sup>5</sup> Further information about this part of the Working Group’s activities can be found at: <http://www.lsuc.on.ca/racialized-licensees/>.

The Working Group reviewed all of the information gathered through the engagement process and drafted a consultation paper titled Developing Strategies for Change: Addressing Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees.<sup>6</sup>

Convocation approved the consultation paper in November 2014, and the Working Group consulted with over 1,000 racialized and non-racialized lawyers, paralegals, law students, articling students and members of the public throughout the province of Ontario between January and March 2015. The Working Group met with organizational stakeholders and members of the Law Firms Diversity and Inclusion Network. The Working Group also received feedback from 45 individuals and organizations in the form of written submissions.<sup>7</sup>

Engagement Process Results

The qualitative and quantitative data the Working Group obtained from the engagement process identified widespread barriers experienced by racialized licensees within the legal professions at all stages of their careers. Examples of challenges faced in the legal professions include discrimination and stereotyping, negotiating concepts of “culture” and “fit”, and lack of mentors, networks and role models. Participants also noted that race-based barriers are often complicated by additional intersecting experiences of discrimination based on gender identity, gender expression, disability, sexual orientation, class and creed.

Some participants in the engagement process believed that racialized licensees were more likely to go into sole practice as a result of barriers faced in other practice environments. They also noted that internationally trained lawyers and paralegals face additional barriers in the professions. Generally, participants noted the vulnerability of racialized licensees in the legal professions in the context of professional regulation and discipline.

Consultation Process Results

The information gathered from the consultation process is summarized as follows:

- Consultation participants expressed significant support for the creation of diversity programs for the recruitment, retention and advancement of racialized licensees in legal workplaces.
- The Working Group heard a broad range of views on the issue of demographic data collection. However, most participants agreed that the collection of data would be, as one participant noted, “a humble but important first step”.
- The Working Group heard that the Law Society could play a facilitative role by encouraging corporate procurement policies that consider suppliers that promote equality and diversity.
- The majority of participants in the consultation process emphasized the importance of mentoring for racialized licensees. Generally, the Working Group heard that there is no “one size fits all” model for mentoring.
- Many participants stated that associations of racialized lawyers and paralegals are beneficial for fostering collaboration and creating a sense of belonging.
- A large number of participants were in favour of the Law Society requiring licensees to participate in mandatory Continuing Professional Development (CPD) training on cultural competence, unconscious bias, and anti-racism.

- Participants suggested updating the Rules of Professional Conduct<sup>8</sup> and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct<sup>9</sup> to specifically address systemic discrimination and subtle forms of discrimination.

Objectives

The Working Group has distilled the themes in the consultation into the following three objectives:

1. Inclusive legal workplaces in Ontario;<sup>10</sup>
2. Reduction of barriers created by racism, unconscious bias and discrimination; and
3. Better representation of racialized licensees, in proportion to the representation in the Ontario population, in the professions, in all legal workplaces and at all levels of seniority.

The Working Group makes 13 recommendations in order to meet these objectives. They fall within four interrelated categories: accelerating culture shift, measuring progress, educating for change and implementing supports. The final recommendation speaks to the operations of the Law Society.

Recommendations

Recommendation 1 – Reinforcing Professional Obligations

The Law Society will review and amend, where appropriate, the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, and Commentaries to reinforce the professional obligations of all licensees to recognize, acknowledge and promote principles of equality, diversity and inclusion consistent with the requirements under human rights legislation and the special responsibilities of licensees in the legal and paralegal professions.

Recommendation 2 – Diversity and Inclusion Project

The Law Society will work with stakeholders, such as interested legal workplaces, legal associations, law schools and paralegal colleges to develop model policies and resources to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees.

Recommendation 3 – The Adoption of Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Principles and Practices

The Law Society will:

- 5) ~~require every licensee to adopt and to abide by a statement of principles acknowledging their obligation to promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally, and in their behaviour towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public;~~ See note at page 4a

<sup>8</sup> Rules of Professional Conduct, The Law Society of Upper Canada available online at <http://www.lsuc.on.ca/WorkArea/DownloadAsset.aspx?id=2147486159>

<sup>9</sup> Paralegal Rules of Conduct The Law Society of Upper Canada available on-line at <http://www.lsuc.on.ca/paralegal-conduct-rules/>

- 6) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy for their legal workplace addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement, which will be available to members of the professions and the public upon request;
- 7) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to complete, every two years, an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment for their legal workplace, to be provided to the Law Society; and
- 8) encourage legal workplaces to conduct inclusion surveys by providing them with sample templates.

Recommendation 4 – Measuring Progress through Quantitative Analysis

Each year, the Law Society will measure progress quantitatively by providing legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees in Ontario with the quantitative self-identification data of their licensees compiled from the Lawyers Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report in a manner consistent with the best practices established to protect licensees vulnerable to harm that may flow from this disclosure, so they can compare their data with the aggregate demographic data gathered from the profession as a whole through the annual reports.

Recommendation 5 – Measuring Progress through Qualitative Analysis

The Law Society will measure progress by:

- 3) asking licensees to voluntarily answer inclusion questions, provided by the Law Society, about their legal workplace, every four years; and
- 4) compiling the results of the inclusion questions for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees in Ontario and providing the legal workplace with a summary of the information gathered

Recommendation 6 – Inclusion Index

Every four years, the Law Society will develop and publish an inclusion index that reflects the following information, including, for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees: the legal workplace's self-assessment information (Recommendation 3(3)), demographic data obtained from the Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report (Recommendation 4) and information gathered from the inclusion questions provided by the Law Society (Recommendation 5).

Recommendation 7 – Repeat Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project Inclusion Survey

The Law Society will conduct inclusion surveys with questions similar to those asked in Appendix F of the Stratcom Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Final Report (March 11, 2014) (available online at http://www.stratcom.ca/wp-content/uploads/manual/Racialized-Licensees\_Full-Report.pdf). The first inclusion survey will be conducted within one year of the adoption of these recommendations, and thereafter every four years, subject to any recommendation by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee to Convocation.

Recommendation 8 – Progressive Compliance Measures

The Law Society will consider and enact, as appropriate, progressive compliance measures for legal workplaces that do not comply with the requirements proposed in Recommendation 3 and/or legal workplaces that are identified as having systemic barriers to diversity and inclusion.

Recommendation 9 – Continuing Professional Development (CPD) Programs on Topics of Equality and Inclusion in the Professions

The Law Society will:

- 4) launch a three hour accredited program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions;
- 5) develop resources to assist legal workplaces in designing and delivering their own three hour program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions, to be accredited by the Law Society; and
- 6) require each licensee to complete three hours of an accredited program focused on equality and inclusion within the first three years following the adoption of these recommendations and one hour per year every year thereafter, which will count towards the licensee's professionalism hours for that year.

Recommendation 10 – The Licensing Process

The Law Society will include the topics of cultural competency, equality and inclusion in the professions as competencies to be acquired in the Licensing Process.

Recommendation 11 – Building Communities of Support

The Law Society, in collaboration with legal associations where appropriate, will provide support to racialized licensees in need of direction and assistance through mentoring and networking initiatives.

Recommendation 12 – Addressing Complaints of Systemic Discrimination

The Law Society, in light of the findings of this project and emerging issues in the professions, will:

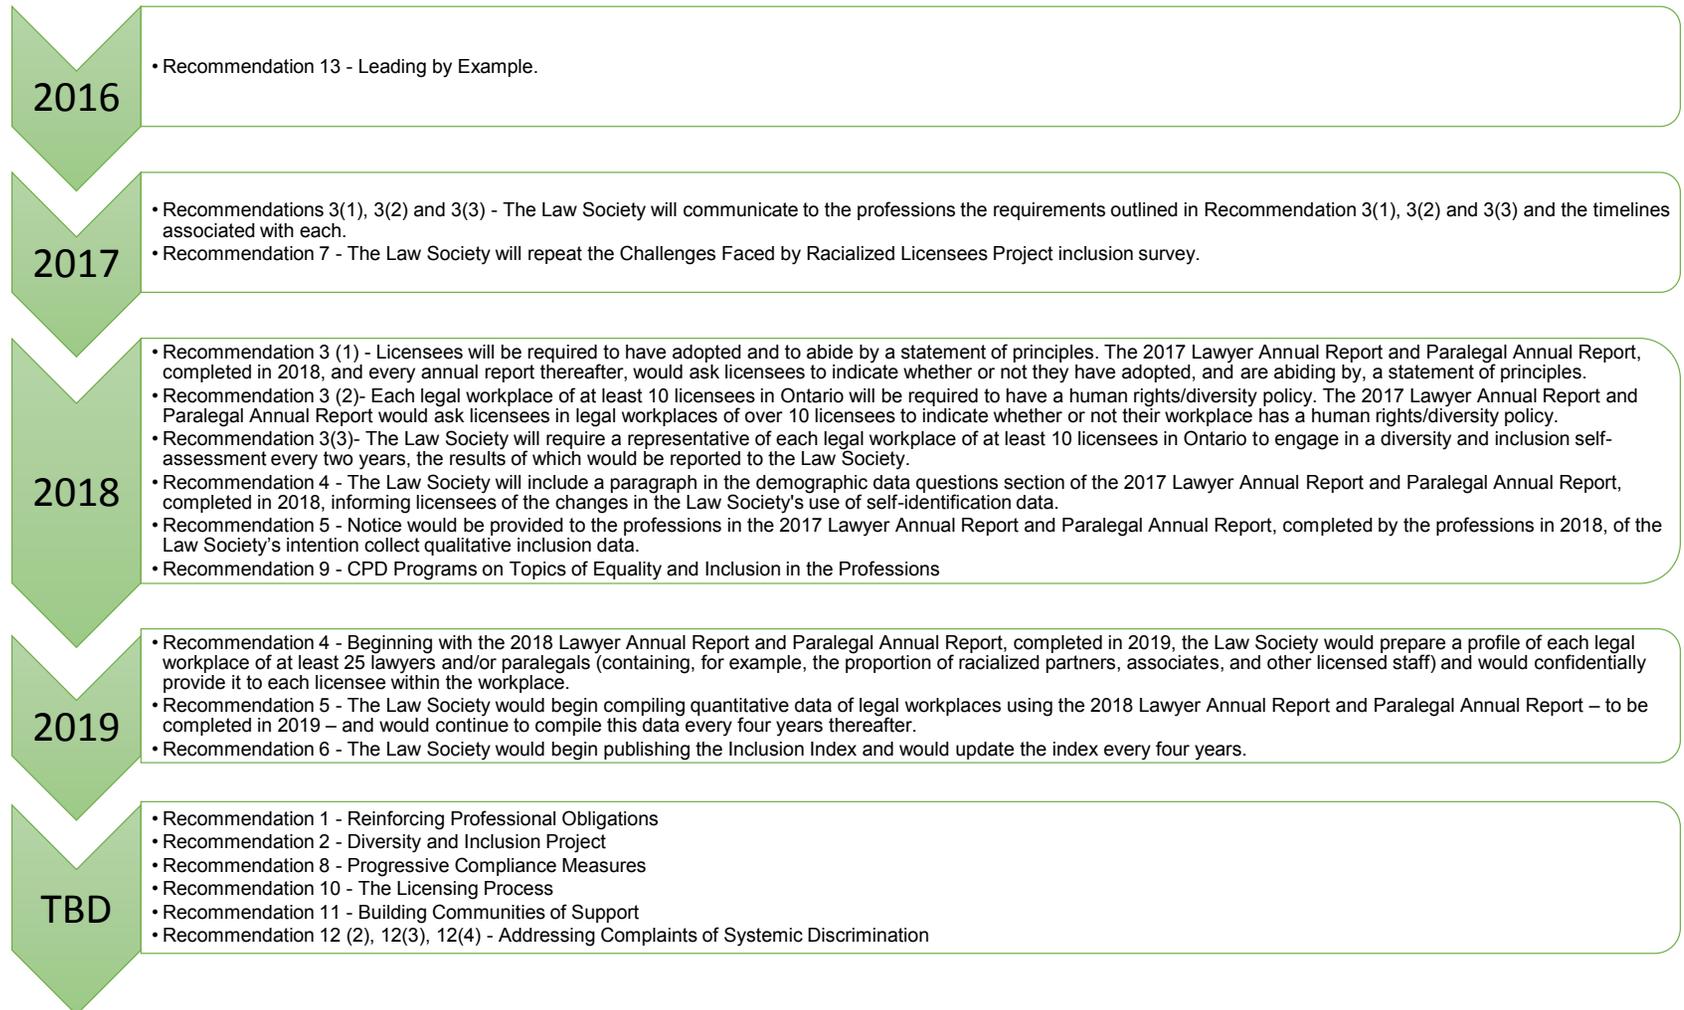

- 5) review the function, processes and structure of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC), including considering effective ways for the DHC to address issues of systemic discrimination;

- 6) revise the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, where appropriate, so that systemic discrimination and reprisal for complaints of discrimination and harassment are clearly identified as breaches of professional conduct requirements;
- 7) create effective ways for the Professional Regulation Division to address complaints of systemic discrimination; and
- 8) create a specialized and trained team to address complaints of discrimination.

Recommendation 13 – Leading by Example

- 3) The Law Society will continue to monitor and assess internal policies, practices and programs, to promote diversity, inclusion and equality within the workplace and in the provision of services by:
  - a) as required, adopting, implementing and maintaining a human rights/diversity policy addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement;
  - b) measuring quantitative progress through a census of the workforce or other method;
  - c) measuring qualitative progress by conducting inclusion surveys;
  - d) conducting regular equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessments; and
  - e) based on the results from b), c) and d), identifying gaps and barriers and adopting measures to address the gaps and barriers;
  - f) publishing relevant findings from b), c), d) and e); and
  - g) providing equality and inclusion education programs for staff at the Law Society on a regular basis.
- 4) The Law Society will:
  - a) conduct an internal diversity assessment of the bench composition and publicize the results;
  - b) provide equality and inclusion education programs for Convocation on a regular basis.

Timeline for Implementation of Recommendations

Introduction

“What we need to do is learn to respect and embrace our differences until our differences don’t make a difference in how we are treated.”

— Yolanda King<sup>11</sup>

Background

1. The Law Society of Upper Canada (“The Law Society”) is the governing body for more than 50,000 lawyers and 8,000 paralegals in Ontario. The Law Society is committed to advancing equality, diversity and inclusion in the legal professions — a commitment which includes addressing any barriers faced by lawyers and paralegals to full and active participation in the professions. The Law Society’s Rules of Professional Conduct and Paralegal Rules of Conduct specifically prohibit discrimination and harassment and speak to lawyers’ and paralegals’ responsibility to adhere to human rights laws in Ontario.
2. Since 2001, the proportion of racialized<sup>12</sup> lawyers in the Ontario legal profession has doubled, rising from 9% of the profession in 2001 to 18% in 2014.<sup>13</sup> This is compared to 23% of the Ontario population who indicated in the 2006 Canada Census that they are racialized and 26% of the Ontario population who indicated in the 2011 National Household Survey that they are racialized.<sup>14</sup> The Law Society’s Statistical Snapshot of Paralegals from the Paralegal Annual Report 2014 also show a high proportion of racialized paralegals at 34% of the paralegal profession.<sup>15</sup> The Law Society’s Statistical Snapshots of Paralegals also indicate that 34% of licensed paralegals in Ontario are racialized.
3. A review of statistical data, research findings and anecdotal evidence suggested that, notwithstanding their increase in representation, racialized lawyers face challenges in the practice of law. The Law Society also noted a lack of information about the challenges faced, if any, by racialized paralegals.
4. In 2012, the Law Society created the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group (“the Working Group”) to:

<sup>12</sup> The Ontario Human Rights Commission notes that using the terminology “racialized person” or “racialized group” is more accurate than “racial minority”, “visible minority”, “person of colour” or “non-White”. Race is the socially constructed differences among people based on characteristics such as accent or manner of speech, name, clothing, diet, beliefs and practices, leisure preferences, places of origin and so forth. Racialization is the “process by which societies construct races as real, different and unequal in ways that matter to economic, political and social life”. 5. Since 2012, the Working Group has been actively engaged in gathering information about the challenges faced by racialized licensees and developing recommendations to address these challenges.

The Process: Listening and Learning

6. The members of the Working Group began their work by conducting a review of the data and literature available on the challenges faced by racialized licensees. The Working Group then gathered information about the challenges using an engagement process, followed by an extensive consultation process.<sup>17</sup>

7. The qualitative and quantitative data obtained from the engagement processes identified widespread barriers experienced by racialized licensees within the professions at all stages of their careers.
8. Through the consultation process, the Working Group received rich feedback on questions organized under the following themes:

<sup>16</sup> The Working Group considered available information regarding the experience of racialized licensees in the regulatory process and determined that there is more work to be done. The preliminary work thus far will be continued.

Recommendations: Framework to Address the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees

On Racism and Initiatives for Change

“Effective responses to racial discrimination and racial profiling start with acknowledging that racism exists.”<sup>18</sup>

— Ontario Human Rights Commission

10. The Working Group acknowledges that the legal professions operate in a broader social context in which racism continues to negatively impact the lives of racialized people. During the consultation phase, a participant noted that society could currently be at an inflection point – a point at which there is a significant possibility for change in the way in which the professions engage with equality and diversity principles and practices.
11. Recently, the Ontario government announced the establishment of an Anti-Racism Directorate tasked with “increas[ing] public education and awareness of racism to create a more inclusive province” and “apply[ing] an anti-racism lens in developing, implementing and evaluating government policies, programs and services.”<sup>19</sup> Similarly, in November 2015, the Ontario Public Service (OPS) launched an Anti-Racism Action Plan. This plan focuses on “preventing race-based discrimination and harassment; further diversifying the public service at every level, including senior management; and increasing OPS employees’ awareness of racism and its impacts.”<sup>20</sup>
12. In the academic sphere, in February 2016, University of Toronto committed to collecting race-based data from its students in an effort to “tackle a lack of representation in the lecture hall among some groups and lend hard numbers to the push for equity in the public realm.”<sup>21</sup> In the area of child welfare, in June 2016, children’s aid societies agreed to collect race-based data to address concerns that there are a high number of black and Indigenous children in care.
13. On the popular culture front, in early 2016, media attention turned to #OscarsSoWhite<sup>22</sup> — Hollywood actors and filmmakers who were speaking up against the lack of diversity in the nominations for the Academy Awards. Those who work in Hollywood note that the lack of diversity and inclusion goes beyond the Academy Awards, with one director noting, “I was meeting with potential investors, and right away everybody’s like, “It’s an Asian-American cast. It’ll never sell.””<sup>23</sup>

14. Race and racism are also at the forefront of issues in the justice system — from the overrepresentation of black and Indigenous peoples in federal prisons<sup>24</sup> to police violence to calls for judicial diversity and beyond. In spring 2016, Black Lives Matter Toronto, “a coalition of black Torontonians working in solidarity with communities/individuals seeking justice from state-sanctioned violence”<sup>25</sup> occupied the space in front of Toronto Police Headquarters for two weeks to protest police violence against the black community. Acknowledging that racialized communities are “over-represented and subject to different treatment in the justice system as a whole”,<sup>26</sup> Legal Aid Ontario is currently developing a strategy to “identify the legal needs and to protect the legal rights of racialized communities in the justice system”.
15. Additionally, the Ontario Human Rights Commission is currently working on a new policy on racial profiling that will “provide guidance on combatting racial profiling in a range of institutional and community settings” and “seek to support and enable Ontario organizations, legal decision-makers and affected community members to better identify, address and prevent racial profiling as a prohibited form of discrimination under the Ontario Human Rights Code.”<sup>27</sup>
16. The information outlined is only a snapshot of the efforts in Ontario and beyond to address racial discrimination. The Working Group is encouraged by these initiatives and is hopeful that implementation of the recommendations listed in this report will lead to systemic change.

Guiding Principle

“Nothing about Us, Without Us”<sup>28</sup>

17. The Working Group’s recommendations stem from an intention to create long lasting systemic change within the professions. The recommendations are put forward in an effort to support the Law Society’s ongoing commitment to ensure that both the law and the practice of law are reflective of all peoples in Ontario and that the professions are free of discrimination and harassment. The Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct speak to the special responsibility of lawyers and paralegals to adhere to the requirements of human rights laws in Ontario, including the obligation not to discriminate.
18. Although the Working Group’s report does not speak to the experiences of Indigenous licensees, the Working Group recognizes that Indigenous peoples face barriers that are unique to Indigenous licensees and barriers that are shared by both racialized and Indigenous licensees. The Working Group notes the importance of addressing the ongoing colonial violence experienced by Indigenous communities and of working towards reconciliation between Indigenous and non-Indigenous peoples. As expressed in the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's final report, "Reconciliation is not an Aboriginal problem; it is a Canadian one. Virtually all aspects of Canadian society need to be reconsidered."<sup>29</sup> The Law Society is currently working on a framework of reconciliation, with the guidance of the Indigenous Advisory Group, comprised of First Nation, Inuit and Métis community representatives, to address unique issues faced by Indigenous peoples in Ontario. The framework of reconciliation is also intended to promote responses to and implementation of the Calls to Action from the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada's final report and the First Nations Representation on Ontario Juries report by The Honourable Frank Iacobucci.

19. In working towards achieving the Working Group's overriding objective, establishing partnerships is important. How we do this is integral to what we do, and 'we' are all lawyers and paralegals, not just the Law Society. The Law Society's consultation was successful in part because the Working Group used a spirit of open inquiry. The consultation was also well attended. There was general acceptance that there is a problem and that it is time to address it.
20. The Working Group heard offers to assist with mentoring, that changes are beginning to happen within firms, that the Law Society should support work that is already being done, and that legal workplaces are willing to share best practices and collaborate to create effective models for progressive change in all parts of the professions. Representatives of the Working Group spoke with firms that provide unconscious bias training to all members, firms that have affinity groups in their workplace and firms that are actively participating in the Law Firm Diversity and Inclusion Network. There were requests that the Law Society not impose mandatory hiring targets and timetables, but accelerate a culture change that has already begun as a result of business imperatives, changing demographics and the interests expressed by clients, students, lawyers, paralegals and indeed the public.
21. At the same time, the Working Group heard concerns that the identified challenges were longstanding, and that change would occur very slowly without strong leadership from the Law Society. The Working Group heard generally that the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project has raised the profile and understanding of these issues, but the Working Group was also urged to use the Law Society's authority to effect change.
22. To satisfy these goals, the Working Group concluded that the Law Society should use a combination of voluntary and mandatory measures, fulfilling its multiple roles in the public interest as change agent, facilitator, resource and regulator. The Law Society's authority to adopt mandatory measures must be interpreted and understood in light of its rights and obligations under the Human Rights Code to protect the public interest balanced with the current explicit authority under the Law Society Act<sup>30</sup> and By-Laws<sup>31</sup> and recent jurisprudence. Within this overarching goal, partnerships with legal workplaces and associations are essential to the success of the proposed measures and projects detailed below.

Objectives

23. The Working Group has identified the following three objectives:
1. Inclusive legal workplaces in Ontario;<sup>32</sup>
  2. Reduction of barriers created by racism, unconscious bias and discrimination; and
  3. Better representation of racialized licensees, in proportion to the representation in the Ontario population, in the professions, in all legal workplaces and at all levels of seniority.
24. The Working Group puts forward the following recommendations in order to meet these objectives. It is anticipated that in order to implement a number of the mandatory recommendations, the Law Society will need to consider appropriate by-law amendments. Additionally, the Law Society will need to invest in information technology that will allow it to effectively record and analyze progress across workplaces. The Working Group has contemplated budgetary considerations in developing these recommendations and it is anticipated that a senior staff implementation working group will be involved in implementing the recommendations.
25. The recommendations fall within four interrelated categories: accelerating culture shift, measuring progress, educating for change and implementing supports. The final recommendation speaks to the operations of the Law Society.

Recommendations

Accelerating Culture Shift

Recommendation 1 – Reinforcing Professional Obligations

The Law Society will review and amend, where appropriate, the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, and Commentaries to reinforce the professional obligations of all licensees to recognize, acknowledge and promote principles of equality, diversity and inclusion consistent with the requirements under human rights legislation and the special responsibilities of licensees in the legal and paralegal professions.

26. The Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct outline the professional and ethical obligations of lawyers and paralegals. The Working Group recommends that in order to ensure that licensees infuse the principles of equality, diversity and inclusion into their everyday practice, the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct and/or the Commentaries be reviewed to determine how this objective can be advanced.

Recommendation 2 – Diversity and Inclusion Project

The Law Society will work with stakeholders, such as interested legal workplaces, legal associations, law schools and paralegal colleges to develop model policies and resources to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees.

27. The Working Group recommends that the Law Society engage in a collaboration between, for example, legal associations, government legal departments, the Law Firms Diversity and Inclusion Network (“LFDIN”), Legal Leaders for Diversity and Inclusion (“LLD”), sole practitioners, licensees in private practice, and law schools to develop and support diversity and inclusion policies, programs and practices intended to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees. The project would focus on the following areas:
- Developing resources on competency hiring, unconscious bias training, barriers to inclusion in the workplace, affinity group development, contract compliance and best practices within firms and workplaces;
  - Considering the assignment of work and career development, particularly understanding the impact of cultural homophily on career development;<sup>33</sup> and
  - Working with law schools to create or provide better sources of information on what is needed to apply, interview and succeed in a larger legal workplace. This could include enhancing or using the On Campus Interview (“OCI”) process for the dissemination of information. This would also include outreach to the National Committee on Accreditation (“NCA”) candidates.
28. The proposed project would build upon the Law Society’s experience with its Justicia Project, created in 2008 with the goal of retaining and advancing women in private practice. The project saw more than 55 law firms voluntarily sign agreements with the Law Society to develop practical resources for law firms and women lawyers. The Justicia resources addressed topics such as: leadership, career advancement, business development, flexible work arrangements and parental leave.
29. A number of participants in the engagement and consultation processes supported the creation of a diversity project similar to the Justicia Project.
30. During the consultation process, the Working Group received feedback from a number of legal workplaces that were actively engaging in work related to enhancing diversity and inclusion in their workplaces. The Working Group also heard from legal workplaces that would benefit from support in developing diversity and inclusion policies and practices.
31. The Working Group concluded that a Justicia-type project would benefit the professions by creating a space where legal workplaces can openly discuss challenges in addressing the barriers faced by racialized licensees in the professions and by creating a forum to document and share best practices. Furthermore, legal workplaces could develop, in advance and with the support of the Law Society, policies that they will be required to have in place under Recommendation 3.

<sup>33</sup> The notion of ‘like’ reaching out to ‘like’ or the tendency of individuals to associate and bond with similar others.

32. Currently, a number of large firms are engaged in a collaborative diversity initiative through the LFDIN and in-house counsel through LLD. Unlike the Justicia Project, which was focused on private practice, the proposed project would bring together legal workplaces from various practice environments and practice areas, in addition to associations and law schools to discuss overlapping concerns and to work on collaborative solutions.
33. In 2009, the Law Society of England and Wales (“LSEW”) created the Diversity and Inclusion Charter (the “Charter”). The LSEW describes the Charter as follows:

The purpose of the Charter is to help practices turn their commitment to diversity and inclusion into positive, practical action for their businesses, staff and clients. This is achieved by helping practices to record and measure their procedures against a set of diversity and inclusion standards and by providing them with opportunities to share best practice advice and guidance with colleagues from across the profession. To date over 300 practices have signed up to the Charter, representing more than a third of all solicitors in private practice.

The Diversity and Inclusion Charter is a public commitment by legal practices to promote the values of diversity, equality and inclusion throughout their business. Whether it's through recruitment, retention, career progression or training and development, all our signatories are committed to improving opportunities for people in the legal profession, regardless of their background or circumstances.<sup>34</sup>

34. Practices that commit to the Charter are required to report biennially and show how well they are meeting their Charter commitments, and where more work needs to be done. Practices complete an online self-assessment report about their progress and performance. The results are published in aggregate by the LSEW and used to identify trends, successes and areas for improvement.
35. The Charter is accompanied by a set of protocols to help practices fulfil their commitments in key areas, such as reporting and monitoring, flexible working and procuring legal services. In addition, checklists, best practice guidance, case studies and toolkits are available.
36. The LSEW has also developed diversity and inclusion standards to help the signatories complete their annual self-assessment form. The standards help to show how well a legal practice is complying with equality legislation, regulation and equality and diversity standards. The Diversity and Inclusion Standards are accompanied by best practice guidance that provide examples of positive diversity and inclusion practices, as well as advice on where to get more help or information.
37. The Barreau du Québec, following a consultation regarding the challenges faced by racialized licensees practising in Québec, developed a three-year action plan, which includes creating Justicia-type project to increase the recruitment, retention and advancement of racialized licensees.<sup>35</sup> In June 2016, the Barreau launched Projet Panorama, a project aimed at recruiting, retaining and advancing lawyers from ethnocultural groups within law firms and legal

Recommendation 3 – The Adoption of Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Principles and Practices

The Law Society will:

- 1) ~~require every licensee to adopt and to abide by a statement of principles acknowledging their obligation to promote equality, diversity and inclusion generally, and in their behaviour towards colleagues, employees, clients and the public; see note at page 4 a~~
- 2) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy for their legal workplace addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement, which will be available to members of the professions and the public upon request;
- 3) require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to complete, every two years, an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment for their legal workplace, to be provided to the Law Society; and
- 4) encourage legal workplaces to conduct inclusion surveys by providing them with sample templates.

38. Some licensees are employed by non-licensees, including, for example, in-house counsel. Both employers and employees in legal workplaces have obligations under the Human Rights Code. Licensees have professional obligations with respect to human rights established by the Rules of Professional Conduct or the Paralegal Rules of Conduct. For licensees employed by non-licensees, the human rights/diversity policy contemplated by this recommendation is a policy in respect of their individual obligations addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement, which may of course be addressed by the employer's policy.

39. To ensure the consistent implementation of this recommendation, the Law Society will guide licensees in the development of statements of principles, and legal workplaces in the development of policies and self-assessment tools. In consultation with legal workplaces, it will develop resources, such as templates, guides and model policies.

40. Recognizing that sole practitioners and small legal workplaces may have limited resources, the Working Group has determined that the requirements under Recommendation 3 (2) and Recommendation 3(3) should apply to legal workplaces of at least 10 licensees; however, legal workplaces comprised of less than 10 licensees are strongly encouraged to develop human rights/diversity policies and complete equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessments.

41. It is anticipated that the nature of the policies and self-assessment tools will vary based on the size and type of legal workplace. As a result, we propose that the Law Society, through the diversity and inclusion project described in Recommendation 2, develop the templates for the statements of principles, policies and self-assessment tools in collaboration with legal workplaces that wish to participate in the project. We believe that this approach would increase the awareness of legal workplaces, begin the cultural shift, create greater buy-in and allow for the development of resources that take into account the realities of legal workplaces.
42. The Working Group believes that the Law Society should minimize unnecessary burdens, and recognize that many licensees and workplaces have already moved forward proactively with equality measures on their own. Licensees and workplaces will be free to adopt templates and model policies where appropriate to their needs, or to create their own statements of principles and policies that include the elements covered by the Law Society's sample documents, but tailor them to their specific contexts.
43. The stages for the implementation of this recommendation would be as follows:
- Stage 1: In 2017, the Law Society would communicate to the professions the requirements outlined in Stages 1-3.
  - Stage 2: By January 1, 2018, licensees would be required to have adopted and to abide by a statement of principles, and each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario would be required to have a human rights/diversity policy as described above.
  - Stage 3: The 2017 Lawyer Annual Report ("LAR") and Paralegal Annual Report ("PAR"), which would be completed by licensees in early 2018, and every annual report thereafter, would ask licensees to indicate whether or not they have adopted, and are abiding by, a statement of principles. The 2017 LAR and PAR would also ask licensees in designated legal workplaces to indicate whether or not their legal workplace has a human rights/diversity policy.
  - Stage 4: By the end of 2018, and every two years thereafter, the Law Society would require a representative of each designated legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to engage in a diversity and inclusion self-assessment. Legal workplaces would then report to the Law Society on whether they had completed the self-assessment and, if not, explain their reasons for not having done so.
44. The Working Group believes that requiring licensees to make a clear commitment to equality, diversity and inclusion will encourage licensees to consider their individual roles in creating lasting change.
45. Section 4.1 of the commentary under section 2.1-1 of the Rules of Professional Conduct reads as follows:

A lawyer has special responsibilities by virtue of the privileges afforded the legal profession and the important role it plays in a free and democratic society and in the administration of justice, including a special responsibility to recognize the diversity of the Ontario community, to protect the dignity of individuals, and to respect human rights laws in force in Ontario.<sup>38</sup>

46. Similarly, section 2.03 of the Paralegal Rules of Conduct state “the principles of the Ontario Human Rights Code and related case law apply to the interpretation of this rule [the rule on Harassment and Discrimination].”<sup>39</sup>
47. A number of consultation participants supported the Law Society’s role in setting guidelines for equality, diversity and inclusion in the professions and requiring legal workplaces to report on their progress in this area. As one group of consultation participants noted, “This would increase the accountability and transparency of legal workplaces in their treatment of racialized licensees, while encouraging a culture of compliance across the province.”<sup>40</sup>
48. The Working Group considered requesting that legal workplaces voluntarily adopt policies. The research and the consultation process, however, made clear that the challenges faced by racialized licensees are both longstanding and significant. In our view, the Law Society must take a leadership role in giving legal workplaces reasonable, but fixed, deadlines to implement steps that are important to achieve lasting change. Indeed, many of these steps have been taken, or will be taken by legal workplaces voluntarily, because of their acknowledged importance.
49. The Working Group concluded that required minimum standards of equality, diversity and inclusion will reinforce the human rights responsibilities of licensees — obligations already required by the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Paralegal Rules of Conduct and, more generally, the Human Rights Code. Furthermore, as the Ontario Human Rights Commission (“OHRC”) notes:

In addition to addressing obligations under the Human Rights Code, the adoption and implementation of an effective anti-racism vision statement and policy has the potential of limiting harm and reducing liability. It also promotes the equality and diversity goals of organizations and institutions and makes good business sense.<sup>41</sup>
50. It is the Working Group’s intention that legal workplaces will take this opportunity to implement comprehensive equality, diversity and inclusion policies, and will consider whether progress is being achieved by engaging in periodic self-assessment.
51. Some organizations have adopted a similar approach by creating a “comply or explain” approach. For example, the Ontario Securities Commission (“OSC”) requires companies regulated by the OSC to disclose the following gender-related information: the number of women on the board and in executive positions; policies regarding the representation of women on the board; the board or nominating committee’s consideration of the representation of women in the director identification and selection process; and director term limits and other mechanisms of renewal on their board.<sup>42</sup> The OSC requires companies to either report their implementation or consideration of the items listed above, or to explain their reasons for not doing so.

52. The Working Group's recommendation that legal workplaces of at least 10 licensees in Ontario complete a self-assessment about diversity performance, and report the results to the Law Society stems from an intention to have legal workplaces engage in dialogue and reflection on the current state of diversity and inclusion within their workplace, and an intention to encourage legal workplaces to work proactively to advance diversity and inclusion efforts.
53. The Working Group has reviewed the Canadian Bar Association's ("CBA") guide Assessing Ethical Infrastructure in Your Law Firm: A Practical Guide for Law Firms.<sup>43</sup> The document was drafted to "assist lawyers and firms by providing practical guidance on law firm structures, policies and procedures to ensure that ethical duties to clients, third parties and the public are fulfilled".
54. The document contains a detailed self-evaluation tool for firms, the CBA Ethical Practices Self-Evaluation Tool, which outlines 10 key areas of ethical infrastructure and provides questions related to firm policies and procedures under each identified area.<sup>44</sup>
55. The self-evaluation tool is modelled on the approach used in New South Wales for regulation of incorporated legal practices. Rather than being required to follow specific rules, the firms are required to self-assess whether their practices and policies are effective in ensuring professional conduct and to establish practices and policies that are effective in their specific context. The result has been a two-third reduction in client complaints for firms regulated in this way.<sup>45</sup>
56. A similar approach has been used for the assessment of diversity performance. The U.S.-based Minority Corporate Counsel Association has developed the Diversity Self-Assessment Tool for Law Firms, in an effort to "stimulate thought and open a dialogue within a firm regarding how to advance its diversity efforts."<sup>46</sup> Firms are asked to assess diversity performance in the following areas: leadership and commitment, professional development, recruitment and retention, representation/demographics, workplace culture and diversity, and external face of the firm.
57. The Law Society of England and Wales ("LSEW") also asks firms that have signed on to its Diversity and Inclusion Charter to complete a self-assessment (discussed previously in Recommendation 2).

58. In addition to the information gathered through the self-assessment, legal workplaces would be encouraged to conduct their own comprehensive inclusion surveys to establish benchmarks and identify and address concerns related to workplace culture. The Law Society has developed a number of model policies and guides to assist law firms in their efforts to ensure that their policies and practices are in keeping with equality and diversity principles. Again, the Law Society would develop sample inclusion survey templates, which would be shared with the profession.

Measuring Progress

59. The Working Group proposes, based on the consultation findings and our review of the literature and best practices on measuring systemic change that both the Law Society and legal workplaces should partner in collecting and analyzing qualitative and quantitative information about diversity. The Law Society would collect demographic data through the annual LAR and PAR, and qualitative information through a periodic questionnaire and a quadrennial province wide cultural inclusion survey similar to the one conducted by Stratcom on behalf of the Law Society in 2013. Legal workplaces of a sufficient size would obtain both quantitative and qualitative information about their workplaces in order to analyze the results, and ultimately an inclusion index would be published by the Law Society.
60. The 2012 CBA guide, Measuring Diversity in Law Firms: A Critical Tool for Achieving Diversity Performance, identifies two types of data for measuring a law firm's diversity performance — self-identification data and diversity climate data. Self-identification data is collected “to assess the representativeness of [a] firm's workforce”<sup>47</sup>, whereas diversity climate data is “focus[ed] on the perceptions and attitudes about diversity held about the members of the firm.”<sup>48</sup>
61. The collection of both self-identification data and diversity climate or inclusion data provides a more complete picture of diversity and inclusion in the professions. In Data & Diversity in the Canadian Legal Community, Dean Lorne Sossin and Sabrina Lyon, basing their conclusion on extensive interviews, a review of ongoing policy initiatives and a comprehensive analysis, state “generating rigorous and meaningful data, both quantitative and qualitative, would advance a culture of inclusion and accountability in the Canadian justice community.”<sup>49</sup>

Recommendation 4 – Measuring Progress through Quantitative Analysis

Each year, the Law Society will measure progress quantitatively by providing legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees in Ontario with the quantitative self-identification data of their licensees compiled from the Lawyers Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report in a manner consistent with the best practices established to protect licensees vulnerable to harm that may

62. Since 2009, the Law Society has collected demographic data based on race, Indigenous identity, gender, Francophone identity, disability, and lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer (“LGBTQ”) identity through the Lawyer Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report. Self-identification questions were included in the annual reports to inform the Law Society of the extent to which the professions are reflective of the broader community they serve, to help meet the needs of the public, and to develop programs to enhance the diversity of the professions. These demographic data are analyzed and published in aggregated form under the following categories: age, year of call, type of employment, size of firm (for those in private practice), and region.<sup>51</sup>
63. In the consultation paper, the Working Group highlighted the importance of gathering and maintaining demographic data, providing the following reasons for engaging in this practice:
  - a. Firms can demonstrate that they value equality, diversity and inclusion in their firm’s culture;
  - b. Maintaining demographic data allows firms to monitor diversity in recruitment and advancement and to adjust policies and practices accordingly;
  - c. Diversity, and data on diversity, assist firms in attracting a strong talent base at all levels. The pool of law students is increasingly diverse, and so is the pool of legal talent. Graduating law students are often interested in the diversity characteristics of the legal workplaces to which they can apply;
  - d. Such data can be a tool to increase a firm’s competitiveness. Numerous large clients in the U.S., and now in Canada, issue requests for proposals (“RFPs”) to select their legal counsel, requiring firms to produce demographic data of their workforce. For example, the Bank of Montreal’s Legal, Corporate & Compliance Group (“LCCG”) requires disclosure of a firm’s diversity statistics as part of its RFP process for legal suppliers;<sup>52</sup>
  - e. Demographic data assist firms to enhance their client services and professional reputation, and to become role models by ensuring representation at all levels;
  - f. Demographic data provide background and incentives for firms to develop programs that enhance inclusion; and
  - g. The information may assist in developing initiatives to enhance access to justice.

64. Dean Lorne Sossin and Sabrina Lyon, in their article Data & Diversity in the Canadian Legal Community, also underline the importance of data collection, noting that while “collecting and publishing data on diversity will not in and of themselves make the justice community more inclusive, it is difficult if not impossible to see how the justice community could become more inclusive without meaningful data.”<sup>53</sup>
65. The options outlined in the Consultation Paper regarding data collection largely focused on the collection of demographic data, including:
- collecting demographic data of licensees through the LAR and PAR, publicly reporting the demographic data based on firm size and disclosing to firms their own demographic data;
  - working with firms to develop consistent templates for demographic data collection and encouraging firms to collect such data on a regular basis;
  - setting parameters for the voluntary collection of demographic data by firms and requiring firms to report either that they are collecting this information or the rationale for not collecting such data; and
  - setting parameters for mandatory collection of demographic data by firm.
66. Throughout the consultant and community engagements and the consultation process, the Working Group heard concerns from some participants that the information obtained from the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project would be shelved and the project would not result in meaningful change. By engaging in periodic litmus tests of equality and inclusion in the professions, the Law Society will ensure that its efforts to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees are ongoing and will evolve based on the issues identified by the inclusion surveys. As the OHRC notes, “When data is gathered, tracked and analyzed in a credible way over time, it becomes possible to measure progress and success (or lack of it). Budgets, policies, practices, processes, programming, services and interventions can then be evaluated, modified and improved.”<sup>54</sup>
67. The Legal Services Board (“LSB”), the independent body responsible for overseeing the regulation of lawyers in England and Wales, has taken a proactive approach to gathering demographic data. In 2011, the LSB published statutory guidance outlining its expectation of approved regulators to measure levels of diversity and mobility in the legal workforce. Approved regulators, including the Solicitors Regulation Authority,<sup>55</sup> now require all practices they regulate to collect, report and publish data annually on the diversity of their workforce. The LSB has cited transparency as the rationale for requiring the publication of diversity data.<sup>56</sup>
68. Information about the demographic composition of legal workplaces would be compiled through the Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report data, which would comprise of the statistical snapshots of the professions as a whole and the data compiled for each firm. This data would be provided to each legal workplace on an annual basis. In considering privacy concerns of individual licensees and the Law Society’s ability to ensure confidentiality, the

Working Group has suggested that this recommendation be applicable only to legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees in Ontario.

69. The Working Group has considered the input received from the engagements and the consultation process and proposes the following stages for the collection of self-identification data by firm:
- Stage 1: The Law Society would continue to measure the representation of racialized licensees using the information in the 2016 Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report, completed by the professions in 2017, by providing the demographic data in aggregate form to the public as general snapshots of the professions in 2018.
  - Stage 2: The introductory paragraph of the self-identification demographic questions of the 2017 Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report, completed by the professions in 2018, would be adapted to inform licensees of the change in the Law Society's use of the self-identification data.
  - Stage 3: Beginning with the 2018 LAR and PAR, completed by licensees in 2019, the Law Society would prepare a profile (containing, for example, the proportion of racialized partners, associates and other licensed staff) of each legal workplace of at least 25 lawyers and/or paralegals, and would confidentially provide it to each licensee within the workplace.

Recommendation 5 – Measuring Progress through Qualitative Analysis

The Law Society will measure progress qualitatively by:

- 1) asking licensees to voluntarily answer inclusion questions, provided by the Law Society, about their legal workplace, every four years; and
  - 2) compiling the results of the inclusion questions for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees in Ontario and providing the legal workplace with a summary of the information gathered.
70. In implementing this recommendation, the Law Society would take into account issues of privacy and confidentiality. The qualitative information about legal workplaces would be gathered by asking licensees voluntary inclusion questions about their legal workplace using a tool that would allow for the information to be compiled and provided to each legal workplace. This information would be collected by the Law Society with the purpose of tracking trends over time and refining and developing programs and initiatives to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees and other equality-seeking groups.
71. Licensees would be asked about their experiences in their workplaces, including subjects such as career advancement opportunities, feelings of belonging, and experiences of discrimination. The questions would be drafted with the assistance of stakeholders and experts in the diversity and inclusion field. Much like the current demographic questions in the Lawyer Annual Report and the Paralegal Annual Report, answers would be voluntary. The information would be shared in aggregate form, with legal workplaces of at least 25 lawyers and/or paralegals.
72. The Working Group proposes the following stages for the collection of qualitative data:

- Stage 1: Notice would be provided to the professions in the 2017 Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report, completed by the professions in 2018, of the Law Society's intention collect qualitative inclusion data.
- Stage 2: The Law Society would begin compiling quantitative data of legal workplaces using the 2018 Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report – to be completed in 2019 – and would continue to compile this data every four years thereafter.

Recommendation 6 – Inclusion Index

Every four years, the Law Society will develop and publish an inclusion index that reflects the following information, including, for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees: the legal workplace's self-assessment information (Recommendation 3(3)), demographic data obtained from the Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report (Recommendation 4) and information gathered from the inclusion questions provided by the Law Society (Recommendation 5).

73. The Working Group has considered a number of options for data collection and has arrived at the recommendations to measure progress outlined in Recommendations 3(3) (self-assessment), 4 and 5. The Working Group also believes that accountability and transparency are key to increasing equality and diversity in the professions. Members of the Working Group have considered a number of methods to ensure that these principles are reflected in the recommendations. The Working Group has decided that in addition to gathering qualitative and quantitative data about legal workplaces, the creation and publication of an inclusion index – an index that would include legal workplaces' assessments of their diversity and inclusion-related achievements and that would allow legal workplaces to demonstrate their performance and progress – would advance the goals of equality, diversity and inclusion. The Law Society would create this index and would determine the categories of information to be included in the index, as well as the weight provided to each category.
74. The Working Group is of the view that a public inclusion index would serve the many objectives cited earlier in relation to the benefits of collecting demographic data. The index would be a valuable tool for legal workplaces and the Law Society to determine whether there is progress in the professions. Legal workplaces could also use the index to attract prospective clients and to recruit talent.
75. A number of consultation participants as well as courts and commentators<sup>57</sup> have stated that to truly understand the equality and inclusion climate in a workplace, it is necessary to look at both quantitative and qualitative data. Sossin and Lyon exemplify this perspective, noting that “a blended ‘index’ of quantitative and qualitative factors best responds to the need for outcomes to matter (how many diverse lawyers a legal workplace is able to recruit relative to the available pool of candidates) and the need for inputs to matter (a legal workplace's policies, participation in proactive recruitment, establishing an inclusive firm culture, etc.).”<sup>58</sup>

76. As Sossin and Lyon note, “the process of collecting and disseminating qualitative and quantitative data is not just an end in itself (to promote transparency, accountability, profile, etc.) but a means to developing responsive and effective policies [...] a range of innovations are already in place to build on – from mentorship programs, to career orientation and outreach, to equity and inclusion officers within legal workplaces, to media and public information campaigns.”<sup>59</sup>
77. The LSEW publishes an annual diversity and inclusion report, which includes the results of self-assessments completed by the signatories to the Diversity and Inclusion Charter. According to the LSEW, “all signatories are required to self-assess against a set of standards and report on diversity data across their organisation, with smaller practices responding to a set of questions tailored to the needs of smaller firms”.<sup>60</sup> Although the data is collected by firm, it is published in aggregate form. In 2015, 341 firms submitted their self-assessment information to the LSEW.
78. For the last 10 years, the Black Solicitors Network (“BSN”), also based in the UK, has published The BSN Diversity League Table, a comprehensive report on diversity and inclusion in the legal profession, on an annual basis. The LSEW is the main sponsor of this initiative. According to the LSEW:
- The Diversity League Table has become an invaluable resource for the legal profession. Each year, the performance of participating law firms and chambers is measured across a range of demographic profiles. This provides an opportunity for firms to compare their performance against peers across key areas. The Diversity League Table also offers an opportunity to monitor the sector as a whole, facilitating a more diverse and transparent profession.<sup>61</sup>
79. The LSEW further notes that the LSEW Diversity and Inclusion Charter and the BSN Diversity League Table are complementary initiatives, as they both “provide comprehensive data sets [and] promote collaboration in equality and diversity matters and best practice across a range of key business areas”.<sup>62</sup>
80. The Diversity League Table includes aggregate demographic data based on gender, ethnicity, LGBTQ and disability status, published by firm. Firms also provide information about policies & practices, specifically addressing the following categories: Monitoring; Leadership and Policy; External Face; Staff Development and Support; and Recruitment, Promotion and Retention. Firms are then given a score and a rank, based on the quantitative and qualitative data obtained. In 2015, 56 firms and chambers participated in the Diversity League Table.<sup>63</sup>
81. A number of organizations have developed similar inclusion indices, detailing aggregate inclusion information about legal workplaces and workplaces in other industries.<sup>64</sup>

82. The Law Society believes that stakeholder participation in the development of the inclusion index is important, such as the participation of the LFDIN, LLD and associations with mandates to represent racialized licensees.
83. The Working Group suggests that the Law Society create a similar inclusion index to those described above, which would reflect the demographic information about the composition of each legal workplace and would include scores and rankings based on the presence or lack thereof of equality-related policies and practices. The Law Society would report this information by legal workplace for all legal workplaces with over 25 licensees. The Law Society would begin publishing the inclusion index in 2019 and would update the index every four years.

Recommendation 7 – Repeat Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project Inclusion Survey

The Law Society will conduct inclusion surveys with questions similar to those asked in Appendix F of the Stratcom Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Final Report (March 11, 2014) (available online at <http://www.stratcom.ca/wp-content/uploads/manual/Racialized-Licensees-Full-Report.pdf>) The first inclusion survey will be conducted within one year of the adoption of these recommendations, and thereafter every four years, subject to any recommendation by the Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee to Convocation.

84. The Stratcom survey was sent to all licensees, both racialized and non-racialized, in 2013. The anonymous 35-question survey included questions on topics such as: career opportunities and professional growth; disrespect and disadvantage; career setbacks; barriers to entry and advancement; and stereotyping.
85. In order to evaluate the success of the proposed initiatives and to identify any potential areas where barriers to inclusion may remain, the Working Group proposes repeating the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project inclusion questions within the abovementioned timeline. The proposed timeline is based on the Working Group's understanding and acknowledgement that systemic change will take time to occur. Four years was seen as an appropriate timespan for changes to take hold.

Recommendation 8 — Progressive Compliance Measures

The Law Society will consider and enact, as appropriate, progressive compliance measures for legal workplaces that do not comply with the requirements proposed in Recommendation 3 and/or legal workplaces that are identified as having systemic barriers to diversity and inclusion.

86. The Working Group, having outlined some mandatory initiatives in the aforementioned recommendations, recognizes that there must be mechanisms in place to deal with non-compliance. The Working Group recommends that the Law Society take a progressive compliance approach with legal workplaces that do not meet the requirements outlined in the recommendations. The Working Group envisions a gradation of responses, beginning with remedial approaches, such as meeting with representatives of legal workplaces to discuss concerns with their policies and/or practices, to disciplinary approaches if there is deliberate non-compliance with requirements, despite multiple warnings, or no efforts are made to address systemic barriers.

Educating for Change

Recommendation 9 – Continuing Professional Development (CPD) Programs on Topics of Equality and Inclusion in the Professions

The Law Society will:

- 1) launch a three hour accredited program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions;
  - 2) develop resources to assist legal workplaces in designing and delivering their own three hour program focused on advancing equality and inclusion in the professions, to be accredited by the Law Society; and
  - 3) require each licensee to complete three hours of an accredited program focused on equality and inclusion within the first three years following the adoption of these recommendations and one hour per year every year thereafter, which will count towards the licensee’s professionalism hours for that year.
87. The Working Group recommends that the Law Society launch an innovative accredited program focused on topics such as equality and inclusion in the professions to assist licensees with promoting these principles. The Law Society would also support legal workplaces in developing their own programs that could be accredited by the Law Society. This would allow legal workplaces and legal associations to build their capacity in this area while addressing the needs of their membership base. The Law Society would work with associations to develop criteria for accreditation and to assist legal workplaces and legal associations in developing their own accredited courses. Programs could be delivered in any format already approved under the eligible education activities criteria available on the Law Society website.
88. In order to create awareness and engagement of the professions, the Law Society would require each licensee to complete three hours of an accredited program focused on equality and inclusion within the first three years following the adoption of these recommendations and one hour per year every year thereafter. . These programs count towards professionalism CPD requirements for the year in which the hours were taken. The monitoring of these activities to confirm completion of hours would be the same as any monitoring conducted to confirm completion of professionalism hours. No additional oversight would be required.
89. Training sessions could cover topics such as unconscious bias, the impact of daily verbal, behavioural and environmental indignities, the value of diversity and inclusion, understanding power and privilege and addressing discrimination and harassment.

90. The Working Group also suggests that the Law Society, as part of its commitment to providing accessible education, offer an online program on topics related to equality and inclusion in the professions. Such program could contain a video presentation with best practices and links to resources, for licensees who wish to complete their professionalism requirements in an online environment. If delivered online, the program could consist of integrated learning modules with integrated polling or test questions, as already done in various contexts including the Accessibility for Ontarians with Disabilities Act training and existing Law Society CPD programs.
91. The Working Group considered the option that the Law Society provide voluntary accredited CPD programs on topics such as equality and inclusion in the professions. However, the Working Group has determined that participation in equality and inclusion-related education is essential to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees. The OHRC notes, in its Policy and Guidelines on Racism and Racial Discrimination, that “mandatory education, training and development initiatives” may be required for an anti-racism policy and program to be effective.<sup>65</sup>
92. The Working Group initially considered training that would focus on “cultural competence”. Ritu Bhasin, a lawyer consultant in this area, defines cultural competence as “how we connect with people who are different than us” or “The ability to relate to others comfortably, respectfully and productively.”<sup>66</sup> A significant number of consultation participants agreed that mandatory CPD would assist in addressing the challenges faced by racialized licensees. A number of consultation participants emphasized the need for training to be delivered through an anti-discrimination or anti-oppression lens. The same participants noted discomfort with the term “cultural competence” due to the focus on understanding difference or “the other” as opposed to encouraging reflection on power and privilege. Consequently, the Working Group has chosen to focus the training on the principles of equality and inclusion, incorporating concepts of unconscious bias and cultural homophily.
93. The Rules of Professional Conduct speak to the responsibility of lawyers to recognize the diversity of the Ontario community. Both the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct require that licensees protect the dignity of individuals and respect human rights laws in force in Ontario. Equality and inclusion training will assist licensees in understanding their obligations under the rules.

Recommendation 10 – The Licensing Process

The Law Society will include the topics of cultural competency, equality and inclusion in the professions as competencies to be acquired in the Licensing Process.

94. The Working Group wishes to integrate the topics of cultural competency, equality and inclusion into the Licensing Process, as appropriate, including within the reference materials for licensing, and in any program or course work that is completed during the Licensing Process.

95. A number of consultation participants emphasized the importance of incorporating teachings of equality and inclusion into the Licensing Process. For example, one participant noted that integrating cultural competence training in the Licensing Process would be “well-suited to ensuring that a strong foundation of diversity awareness and cultural consciousness is in place from the beginning of an individual’s legal career.”<sup>67</sup>
96. The Entry-Level Solicitor Competencies and the Entry-Level Barrister Competencies both include the following section under Ethical and Professional Responsibilities:
19. respects human rights (e.g. does not engage in sexual harassment, discrimination or other human rights violations) (Rules 6.3-0 and 6.3.1. (Part of 24)
97. Additionally, under Client Communications, both sets of competencies include the following:
192. recognizes and is sensitive to clients’ circumstances, special needs and intellectual capacity (e.g. diversity, language, literacy, socioeconomic status, disability, health).
98. Similarly, the Paralegal Competencies, under Ethical and Professional Responsibilities, read:
3. Maintains appropriate professional relationships with clients, other licensees, employees and others (e.g. does not engage in sexual harassment, discrimination and human rights violations, respects multi-cultural issues).
99. Under section 27(2) of the Law Society Act and section 8(1) of By-Law 4, Licensing, a recipient of a lawyer or paralegal licence is also required to be of good character. The Law Society has indicated that adherence to human rights and equality principles should be considered in a determination of good character. The November 2013 Submission on The Federation of Law Societies of Canada’s National Suitability to Practise Standard Consultation Report<sup>68</sup> identifies that “specific reference to respect for and adherence to human rights and equality principles sends an important message to those entering the professions.”
100. The Working Group believes that the integration of equality and inclusion information, presented through an anti-discrimination or anti-oppression lens, will assist in preparing candidates to be competent members of the professions.

Implementing Supports

Recommendation 11 – Building Communities of Support

The Law Society, in collaboration with legal associations where appropriate, will provide support to racialized licensees in need of direction and assistance through mentoring and networking initiatives.

101. In considering this recommendation, the Working Group noted that in November 2013, the Law Society created a Mentoring and Advisory Services Proposal Task Force to consider mentoring

<sup>68</sup> “Federation of Law Societies of Canada – Suitability to Practise Standard” – Report to Convocation, November 21, 2014 – Professional Regulation Committee, online: The Law Society of Upper Canada http://www.lsuc.on.ca/uploadedFiles/For the Public/About the Law Society/Convocation Decisions/2013/convov2013\_PRC.pdf

and advisory services models. The Working Group provided input to the Task Force on the development of models to best address the needs and facilitate the success of racialized licensees. The Task Force provided its final report to Convocation in January 2016. Convocation approved the creation of a law practice and advisory services initiative, which, at the outset of its implementation, "...will focus on providing supports for already identified communities of need, namely, sole practice and small firm licensees, new licensees, racialized licensees, those seeking succession planning supports and those within certain defined practice areas."<sup>69</sup>

102. Data gathered through the LAR and PAR show that 24% of racialized lawyers are in sole practice and 33% of racialized lawyers practice in legal workplaces of two to five. Similarly, 25% of racialized paralegals are in sole practice. Engagement and consultation process participants highlighted the vulnerability of racialized sole practitioners in the professions — emphasizing the need for sole practitioners and licensees in small firms to have strong mentors and networks. The Working Group also recognizes that it is essential to be responsive to the needs and challenges of racialized licensees in a broad range of practice/work settings and practice areas, which will require approaches that are not "one size fits all".
103. The Law Society currently offers mentorship initiatives that will be enhanced by the new Law Practice Coach and Advisor Initiative.<sup>70</sup> Additionally, the Law Society, in partnership with legal associations and community groups, offers educational programs to promote discussion among members of the professions and the public on the challenges and opportunities for Francophone, Indigenous and equality-seeking communities in the legal professions. These Equity Legal Education events are often followed by networking receptions for members of the professions.
104. The Working Group heard that there is a need for increased, and in some cases, revamped, mentoring and networking initiatives to combat the isolation faced by racialized sole practitioners and racialized licensees practising in small firms. In considering potential mentoring and networking initiatives to support racialized licensees, the Working Group has identified the following objectives:
  1. Encourage the development of communities of support in the professions, including facilitating the search for multiple points for direction and assistance (e.g. peers, subject-matter experts, ethics sounding boards);
  2. Increase the capacity of legal associations to reach more licensees for trusted, nonjudgmental advice; and
  3. Foster connections for licensees who feel isolated, recognizing that feeling professionally isolated is not limited to those in small firms and sole practitioners or those in certain practice areas.

<sup>70</sup> Ibid.

105. The Working Group highlighted the importance of working with legal associations in meeting the abovementioned objectives. The Working Group is also mindful of different types of mentoring, including both advisory services and coaching.<sup>71</sup>
106. As a first step, the Working Group proposes the following:
- Enhanced use of technology to facilitate the development of communities of trust;
  - Enhanced networking opportunities.

Enhanced Use of Technology to Facilitate the Development of Communities of Trust

107. The Working Group believes that any successful mentorship initiative should reach racialized licensees across the province. This proposal would involve the robust use of technology to increase the ability of racialized licensees to access information and support, with the goal of enhancing learning, competence and success. For example, the Law Society could work with associations of racialized licensees, where appropriate, to create an online resource centre for racialized lawyers and paralegals. This resource centre could act as a hub to bring together the various mentorship initiatives available around the province. The resource centre could include materials geared toward the needs, concerns and unique situations of licensees in sole practice, associations of sole practitioners and small partnerships. Resources could cover topics such as finding a mentor, action plans for mentor-mentee relationships, networking, and the benefits of joining associations. The resource centre could also include a forum for racialized licensees to discuss topics relevant to their practice environments and a podcast series on a range of topics related to race and racism in the professions and supports for racialized licensees.
108. The Working Group has also considered an initiative that would involve working with stakeholders, existing mentoring groups and others to develop the technology that would allow any licensee (racialized or otherwise) to have access to a diverse group of mentors. It may be helpful to ask licensees to indicate whether they are interested in participating in such a program when they fill out their LAR or PAR or through other methods, such as the Law Society Portal. Alternatively, mentors and mentees could be matched using a mobile application (app) with programmed algorithms to increase the potential of having successful relationships. Similar mobile apps have been created to assist with the search for a mentor or mentee in other industries.<sup>72</sup> For example, Menteer, a free, open source online platform,<sup>73</sup> works to match job seekers and mentors. Potential mentors and mentees are asked to answer a series of questions about their skills, interests and backgrounds to assist with finding suitable matches to meet their needs. Mentees are provided with a number of mentor profiles, which the algorithm has determined would be a good fit. Mentors wait for mentees to communicate with them to ask if they would like to establish a mentor-mentee relationship.<sup>74</sup>

Enhanced Networking Opportunities

109. This project involves reviewing current practices around Law Society events and events co-hosted with equality-seeking legal associations to ensure that networking events are affordable, inclusive and relevant to licensees.

Recommendation 12 – Addressing Complaints of Systemic Discrimination

The Law Society, in light of the findings of this project and emerging issues in the professions, will:

- 1) review the function, processes and structure of the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC), including considering effective ways for the DHC to address issues of systemic discrimination;
- 2) revise the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct, where appropriate, so that systemic discrimination and reprisal for complaints of discrimination and harassment are clearly identified as breaches of professional conduct requirements;
- 3) create effective ways for the Professional Regulation Division to address complaints of systemic discrimination; and
- 4) create a specialized and trained team to address complaints of discrimination.

Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC)

110. The Working Group recommends that the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program (DHC) undergo a review of its function, processes and structure. Although the DHC Program does not maintain self-identification information about complainants, it is noteworthy that for the 10-year-period of 2003 to 2012, only 16% of complaints of discrimination were based on race, 3% on ethnic origin, a nominal number on ancestry and place of origin, while 26% and 50% of complaints were based on the grounds of disability and sex, respectively. This is in contrast with the applications received at the Human Rights Tribunal where 22% of applications are based on race, 16% on colour, 17% on ethnic origin, 15% on place of origin and 13% on ancestry with 54% of applications based on disability and 25% based on sex, pregnancy and gender identity.<sup>75</sup> The lower proportion of race-based complaints to the DHC Program warrants a review of the DHC Program to identify possible barriers to accessing that program, more particularly by members of the racialized, Indigenous and disability communities.
111. In Fall 2016, the Law Society's Equity and Aboriginal Issues Committee commenced a review of the DHC Program. The objective of this review is to identify how this role can be better used to address discrimination and harassment in the professions, including systemic discrimination, while keeping in mind the independent arms-length position of the DHC and the duty of the DHC to maintain the confidentiality of any individuals who use the Program.

Rules of Professional Conduct and Paralegal Rules of Conduct

112. The Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct outline the responsibility of licensees to respect human rights laws — more specifically, not to engage in discrimination or harassment. The Law Society may investigate complaints of systemic discrimination; however, this is not widely known. The Working Group recommends explicitly stating in the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct that systemic discrimination is considered a violation of the rules. The Working Group also recommends that the rules make clear that reprisal for complaints of discrimination and harassment is prohibited.

Specialized Professional Regulation Team

113. The Working Group recognizes that racism is complex and can manifest itself in subtle ways. The Working Group recommends that the Law Society create a specialized team of Professional Regulation staff members to address complaints of racial discrimination. The members of this team would undergo extensive training on issues of race and racism in order to prepare them to effectively handle these types of complaints.

Review Professional Regulation Processes to Effectively Address Systemic Discrimination

114. Along with the creation of a specialized team of Professional Regulation staff members to address complaints of discrimination, including racial discrimination, it is suggested that the Law Society review its complaints process to consider ways to collect data from different sources and identify instances of systemic discrimination. It is recommended that the Law Society consider specific processes to effectively address systemic discrimination.
115. Racialized consultation participants described discriminatory experiences that had serious impacts on their careers, including career opportunities and earnings. Some described experiences of overt discrimination, such as situations of being on the receiving end of racist jokes, comments or assumptions.
116. In addition to the barriers identified through the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project, in its 2009 Aboriginal Bar Consultation<sup>76</sup>, the Law Society found that 26% of Indigenous lawyers felt that their Indigenous status was a negative factor in their experiences in the professions and the majority stated that they attributed their feeling to the racism and discrimination that they faced in their work experiences.
117. It is clear from the Working Group's engagement and consultation processes that discrimination based on race is a daily reality for many racialized licensees; however, many participants stated that they would not file a discrimination complaint with the Law Society for various reasons, including fear of losing their job, fear of being labeled as a troublemaker, and other reprisal-related concerns. Participants also noted that although racism can be experienced on an individual basis, racial discrimination can also be institutional or systemic in nature. Participants did not believe that an effective process was available at the Law Society to address systemic complaints. The Working Group heard from a number of participants who stated that a system of anonymous complaints would assist in alleviating some of the concerns about reporting cases of racial discrimination.

118. The Task Force on Misogyny, Sexism and Homophobia in Dalhousie University Faculty of Dentistry, which was mandated to inquire into a significant number of sexist, misogynist, and homophobic remarks and images posted on Facebook by fourth year male dentistry students at Dalhousie University, noted the pressing need for anonymous reporting mechanisms so that victims can protest such conduct without putting themselves at risk. This proposal was raised as a result of many who spoke to the Task Force about the need to be able to make anonymous complaints, especially in cases of sexual harassment and sexual assault. The Task Force notes “The biggest concern about anonymous complaints is that there is no way to effectively assess the merits of a particular complaint. However, a group of anonymous complaints all reflecting the same concern provides a signal that there may be a problem that requires some attention. Soliciting anonymous complaints for this purpose could be very useful.”<sup>77</sup>
119. Princeton University allows for anonymous complaints of discrimination, harassment and other violations of policies and regulations through an independent provider of hotline services. Complainants can submit a report online or by calling a free hotline to speak with a trained specialist.<sup>78</sup> Similarly, the City of Copenhagen in Denmark has developed an anonymous app for people to report incidents of discrimination. The purpose of the app is “to understand how widespread discrimination is and where and which groups are most likely to be targeted.”<sup>79</sup>
120. In 2010, the Nova Scotia Barristers’ Society (“NSBS”) launched a successful postcard campaign. The purpose of this campaign was “to raise awareness and generate feedback about gender harassment and discrimination in the legal profession.” Licensees were encouraged to share their experiences of gender harassment and discrimination by submitting accounts of their experiences via anonymous postcards.<sup>80</sup> In 2012, the NSBS noted that over 50 postcards had been received, outlining the experiences and viewpoints of lawyers across Nova Scotia.<sup>81</sup>
121. The Working Group envisions a system through which anonymous discrimination complaints can be made to the DHC. If a certain threshold of complaints about a legal workplace is reached, the DHC can speak with the management of the legal workplace regarding the culture of the workplace and systemic issues. The purpose of these discussions would be remedial, rather than punitive. Proposed solutions could include implementing or adjusting policies and procedures or delivery of educational programs.

122. A review of the functions, process and structure of the DHC should take into consideration the concerns raised through the engagement and consultation processes and the anonymous complaint models outlined above.
123. In addition to feedback about the DHC Program, the Working Group heard concerns from consultation participants that systemic discrimination and reprisal for filing complaints are not explicitly cited as conduct violations in the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct. Although the Law Society may investigate complaints of systemic discrimination and reprisal, the Working Group believes that it is important to state this plainly in the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct so that all licensees and members of the public are aware.
124. The Working Group has also heard that a certain level of expertise is essential in dealing with complaints to the Law Society of racial discrimination, particularly systemic discrimination. A trained team of Professional Regulation staff, equipped to deal with racial discrimination complaints, would assist in understanding and addressing the subtleties that often exist in racial discrimination cases.
125. In addition, racial discrimination often has systemic roots. It is suggested that the Law Society review its processes and consider ways to make them more effective in addressing systemic discrimination.
126. The Working Group believes that in order to create a safe space in which licensees can feel comfortable in making complaints of racial discrimination, including complaints related to systemic discrimination, the Law Society should engage in the abovementioned initiatives.

The operations of the Law Society of Upper Canada

Recommendation 13 – Leading by Example

- 1) The Law Society will continue to monitor and assess internal policies, practices and programs, to promote diversity, inclusion and equality within the workplace and in the provision of services by:
  - a) as required, adopting, implementing and maintaining a human rights/diversity policy addressing at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement;
  - b) measuring quantitative progress through a census of the workforce or other method;
  - c) measuring qualitative progress by conducting inclusion surveys;
  - d) conducting regular equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessments;
  - e) based on the results from b), c) and d), identifying gaps and barriers and adopting measures to address the gaps and barriers;

- f) publishing relevant findings from b), c), d) and e); and
- g) providing equality and inclusion education programs for staff at the Law Society on a regular basis.

2) The Law Society will:

- a) conduct an internal diversity assessment of the bench composition and publicize the results;
- b) provide equality and inclusion education programs for Convocation on a regular basis.

127. The rationale for the adoption of human rights/diversity policies to address fair recruitment, retention and advancement; for measuring quantitatively and qualitatively progress; and for conducting self-assessments is well articulated in this report. The strength of having diversity at the board level is also well documented. The Maytree Foundation, for example, notes that,

Governance is the top tier of leadership, where ultimate oversight, strategic direction and policy are determined. But equally important is the representational role that boards uphold. A lack of diversity at this level has sweeping implications for how underrepresented groups see themselves, their relevance and their place at the decision-making table.<sup>82</sup>

128. During the engagement and consultation processes, participants indicated support for an internal equality audit of the Law Society workforce and the development of a more diverse public face/image for the Law Society, including at the governance level. The Working Group is of the view that the Law Society must take a leadership role and model the change it is seeking to create in the professions, which would include increasing diversity at both the governance and the staff levels, and engaging in the same initiatives and measures proposed to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees in the professions.

129. The Law Society has committed to a number of initiatives to increase diversity and inclusion in the organization:

- Operational Equity Audit: In 2015, with the assistance of Canadian Centre for Diversity and Inclusion (CCDI), the Law Society undertook an Operational Equity and Diversity Audit to assess the services provided to licensees and the public and to determine whether there are barriers that are contributing to inequality or perceived inequality in the provision of those services – in particular, involving members of racialized and Aboriginal communities. The Law Society is currently working through the results of this audit to determine where improvements can be made in its operations.
- Employee Diversity Census and Inclusion Survey: Earlier this year, the Law Society, also with the assistance of CCDI, launched an employee diversity census and inclusion survey. The purpose was to collect data to help the Law Society better understand the make-up of its organization and how to best serve Law Society staff's needs. There was a 72% response rate, which was excellent, and the results will assist with the Law Society's efforts to promote a diverse and inclusive culture that is supportive to all employees.
- Employee Engagement and Enablement Survey: This year the Law Society has also conducted an Employee Engagement and Enablement Survey, assisted by the Hay Group, in order to improve the effectiveness of its organization and enhance communications between management and employees at all levels.

- Bencher Diversity Survey: Convocation has identified conducting a diversity survey of the bencher composition as a priority for this term. We are currently working on finalizing this survey.

130. As mentioned above, both the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct provide that licensees have special responsibility to uphold human rights principles, protect the dignity of individuals and recognize diversity and inclusion. The Law Society is committed to identifying barriers and gaps in its workforce and governance and implementing comprehensive equality, diversity and inclusion initiatives to improve equality, diversity and inclusion.

Appendix A

Results

Summary of Community and Consultant Engagement Process Results

“You work harder to prove yourself. You cannot necessarily do things that your white colleagues can do as there is a different connotation. Generally I have always been told that I have to work harder than my white counterparts. Which in some respects is sadly still true at this day and age.”

— Community Liaison Meeting

The qualitative and quantitative data obtained from the engagement processes identified widespread barriers experienced by racialized licensees within the professions at all stages of their careers.

Key informants, focus group participants and survey respondents identified racialization as a significant factor that shapes the experiences and career outcomes of racialized licensees. The consultant engagement results indicated that racialized licensees have a lower success rate in securing job placements, finding first jobs and securing suitable practice environments. Moreover, racialized licensees felt that they were disadvantaged in law school and that they had not advanced in their careers at the same rate as their non-racialized colleagues.

Racial and ethnic barriers were ranked highly among the barriers to entry and advancement. Forty percent (40%) of racialized licensees identified their ethnic/racial identity as a barrier to entry to practice, while only 3% of non-racialized licensees identified ethnic/racial identity as a barrier. Racialized licensees frequently identified physical appearance, socioeconomic status, place of birth and upbringing, age, manner of speaking English/French and gender identity as barriers — more so than non-racialized licensees. Racialized licensees were also more likely to have struggled to find an articling position or training placement.

Similarly, 43% of racialized licensees identified ethnic/racial identity as a barrier/challenge to advancement, while only 3% of non-racialized licensees identified ethnic/racial identity as a barrier. Racialized licensees were more likely than non-racialized licensees to believe they had not advanced as rapidly as colleagues with similar qualifications.

Racialized participants identified a number of specific challenges faced in the professions. Community liaison process participants, key informants and focus group participants provided numerous examples of discrimination and stereotyping faced in the everyday professional experiences of racialized licensees. Some experiences were overt, while others were more subtle. Participants spoke of assumptions by members of the professions and clients that racialized lawyers are unskilled employees, interpreters, social workers, students or clients. Participants also identified situations where racialized licensees were excluded from files and client meetings based on personal characteristics. Some participants stated that in some cases, licensees from certain parts of the world were associated with terrorism. The Working Group heard a number of participants say, “you can’t just be good, you have to be better.”

Racialized participants spoke about challenges linked to cultural differences and fit. Many racialized licensees stated that they felt alienated from the dominant culture of firms. They provided examples of firm-related social events, which involved playing hockey, playing golf and drinking alcohol. Some racialized licensees indicated that they did not participate in these activities and therefore they did not “fit”, noting that “fit” was important for entry and advancement. Some participants also stated that they were not offered career opportunities because of their “foreign sounding” names.

Participants spoke in detail about the lack of access for racialized licensees to mentors, networks and role models. Racialized participants indicated that they were not aware of programs or resources available to them. They also noted that they did not have the same professional connections and networks as their non-racialized colleagues and lacked role models in their field within their ethnic communities.

Participants noted that race-based barriers are often complicated by the additional experiences of discrimination based on sex, gender identity, gender expression, disability, sexual orientation, class and creed.

Some participants believed that racialized licensees were more likely to go into sole practice as a result of barriers faced in other practice environments. They also noted that internationally trained lawyers and paralegals face additional barriers in the professions.

Generally, participants noted that the challenges faced by racialized licensees impact the reputation of the legal system in Ontario, affect access to justice for Ontarians and affect the quality of legal services for the public.

Summary of Consultation Process

The Working Group received thoughtful oral and written submissions from the professions regarding strategies to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees.

A. Enhancing the internal capacity of organizations

The Working Group posed the following questions related to this theme in the consultation paper:

- How should the Law Society act as a catalyst for the establishment of diversity programs within firms and why?
- What is the preferred model for the collection of firm demographic data and why?
- How could the Law Society work with in-house legal departments to develop model contract compliance programs for in-house legal departments that retain firms?

Diversity Programs

“We need to encourage firms to be champions of diversity.”
— Participant

Consultation participants showed significant support for the creation of diversity programs for the recruitment, retention and advancement of racialized licensees in legal workplaces. Participants reminded the Working Group that a “one size fits all” approach should be avoided — firm size, industry and geographical location should be considered if the Law Society is to develop diversity programs.

A number of participants supported the idea of creating a diversity project modelled on the Law Society of Upper Canada’s Justicia Project. Such a project would include the development and adoption of resources for the fair recruitment, retention and advancement of racialized licensees.<sup>83</sup> Participants were divided, however, on whether diversity programs should be mandatory or voluntary. Some participants noted that voluntary programs create buy-in and a willingness to create change. A number of participants stated that it is important to have “diversity champions” who will lead change from the top-down. Participants outside of the Greater Toronto Area (GTA) that work in small firms saw the value of voluntary programs as small firms may lack the resources to implement mandatory programs. Some participants noted that mandatory programs could create backlash.

Participants in favour of mandatory programs argued that mandatory programs create stronger awareness of equality and diversity issues. One participant, who had experience with employment equality programs, said that it is necessary to have an enforcement mechanism in place. Other participants believed that, at the very least, the Law Society should require legal workplaces to have equality and diversity policies in place. Some participants suggested that the Law Society ask licensees to answer questions related to their firm’s policies in the annual report in order to prompt change. Although it was suggested by some that requirements could include mandatory targets for the number of racialized licensees that must be interviewed or hired by legal workplaces; the majority of participants were strongly opposed to the creation of mandatory hiring targets and timelines.

Some participants supported the proposal that firms complete a self-assessment about their diversity performance, which would include more than an analysis of demographic data. One participant stated:

Beyond numbers, look at the ways in which interactions are made, the ways in which people are hired, anti-nepotism policies, mentoring programs. All of these things are bigger pieces of the diversity pie.

The majority of participants interested in this idea indicated that the self-assessment should be voluntary; however, the Law Society could provide incentives for firms to engage in this process. There were some participants who were in support of mandatory self-assessments that would be conducted by employees instead of firm management to garner more valuable results. Additionally, participants stated that the Law Society should provide legal workplaces with self-assessment templates and tools.

Collecting Demographic Data

“Data collection is a humble but important first step.”
— Participant

The Working Group heard a broad range of views on the issue of demographic data collection; however, most participants agreed that the collection of data would be, as one participant noted, “a humble but important first step”. Some participants believed that mandatory data collection is crucial to advancing diversity and inclusion, while others believed that mandatory collection could halt the progress that is already being made by legal workplaces in the area of equality and diversity.

Participants on the side of mandatory collection had a number of suggestions related to the methods of collection and reporting. The majority of participants, including those in small firms and outside of <sup>83</sup> The Justicia Project was launched in 2008 to create a collaboration between medium and large sized firms and the Law Society. The participants signed agreements and committed to develop policies, resources, practices and programs that would address barriers women face in the legal profession in relation to retention and career advancement. The Justicia Project prompted law firms to review policies and practices and to participate in the creation of resources on subjects such as leadership, business development, career advancement, parental leave and flexible work engagements, in order to increase the retention and advancement of women lawyers.

Toronto, were in favour of the Law Society collecting demographic data. Some participants suggested that the Law Society could use the data collected in the annual report to provide legal workplaces with their individual legal workplace demographic data and aggregate demographic data of legal workplaces of similar size and location to provide a benchmark. Participants also noted that it would be useful to capture information about inclusion and advancement in addition to numbers. Some participants in favour of mandatory reporting stated that, in order to encourage change, the demographic information for each firm should be publicly available.

Participants in favour of voluntary data collection noted that a number of large firms are already engaging in demographic data collection and inclusion surveys, and are committed to this work. Should the Law Society mandate data collection, it could have a negative effect on the work already being done. Participants from small firms indicated that they are unsure how mandatory data collection would be enforced. Some participants believed that demographic data should be reported, but on a voluntary basis. A number of participants suggested setting data collection as a criterion of a voluntary diversity program. The Law Society could then incentivize data collection by providing ratings or awards for meeting certain levels of diversity and inclusion.

Contract Compliance

“The case for diversity and inclusion has a business foundation”

— Participant

The Working Group heard that the Law Society could play a facilitative role by encouraging corporate procurement policies that consider suppliers that promote equality and diversity. A number of participants highlighted the Bank of Montreal’s contract compliance program and the work of the Legal Leaders for Diversity (“LLD”) as best practices in this area. Some participants suggested that the Law Society work with LLD, other in-house counsel associations and firms to develop model diversity-related procurement and contract compliance policies.

Some participants noted that they would discourage mandatory contract compliance as often people respond better to incentives rather than punitive consequences. Some participants from small firms pointed out that strict mandatory contract compliance related to diversity could be difficult for small firms and lead to them being unable to compete for work.

B. Mentoring, advisory services and networking

The Working Group posed the following questions related to this theme in the consultation paper:

- What are the preferred mentoring and/or advisory services models for racialized licensees?
- What are the preferred networking models for racialized licensees?

Mentoring and Advisory Services

“Mentoring is not one size fits all.”

— Participant

The majority of participants in the consultation process emphasized the importance of mentoring for racialized licensees; however, ne group of participants noted that, some cases, mentoring “...serves to reproduce institutional inequality and assist white licensees in securing inclusion within social institutions and the professions”.

In November 2013, Convocation created the Mentoring and Advisory Services Proposal Task Force (“Mentoring Task Force”) to consider mentoring, advisor and other support services for lawyers and paralegals. The Working Group worked with the Task Force and shared with the Task Force members the information obtained on mentoring and advisory services from the consultation process. In January 2016, Convocation approved a new law practice coaching and advisory initiative, which “...will assist in the development of competent legal professionals by supporting the growing need in the professions for short-term advisor supports addressing file-specific and substantive/procedural matters, and longer term coaching supports to foster best practices.”<sup>84</sup>

Types of Mentoring and Advisory Services

Generally, the Working Group heard that there is no “one-size-fits-all” model for mentoring. Different types of mentoring may be required at different stages of a person’s career for different purposes. For example, mentoring could be offered to provide assistance on specific cases or it could be related to how to navigate the professions as a racialized licensee.

A number of participants highlighted the importance of providing mentoring for sole practitioners and internationally trained lawyers. Paralegal participants told the Working Group that there is a shortage of mentoring programs in the paralegal community and thus a significant need. Other participants noted that racialized licensees in large firms do not have role models within their firms so would benefit from some assistance to find mentors from outside their firms.

A significant number of participants emphasized that sponsorship<sup>85</sup> is also essential to the career advancement of racialized licensees, noting that it would be helpful to have sponsors or champions advocating for individual licensees at decision-making tables.

Structure of Mentoring and Advisory Services

Some participants stated that it would be useful to have a panel of mentors who could address different facets of a licensee’s career, including providing advice on navigating barriers, substantive legal issues or career advancement. Participants also noted that mentoring should be provided to students before law school, to address pipeline issues, and in law school.

A number of legal workplaces described their mentoring programs and expressed interest in working collaboratively with the Law Society to help licensees in need of mentoring. One way in which this could take place is using enhanced website services and creating a highly functional and welcoming online mentoring community with links to partner legal workplaces. As many legal workplaces have their own websites, the Law Society could function as a connector to these kinds of services. Participants also suggested that the Law Society develop, in collaboration with legal workplaces, best practices toolkits and/or guidelines on mentoring.

Participants proposed various mentoring models including one-on-one mentoring with various mentors for different purposes, study groups with licensees who have similar challenges and group mentoring to assist with practice management and career advancement. Some participants suggested that junior licensees could also mentor other junior licensees from the same racialized community. In a similar vein, some participants stated that junior racialized licensees could act as effective mentors to senior non-racialized licensees.

Participants noted that it is often difficult to find willing and experienced mentors. One participant for example noted difficulties finding racialized mentors because, “we are not grooming racialized lawyers to become leaders.” Some participants suggested that the Law Society could ask licensees to indicate in the annual report or using another methodology such as the Law Society Portal, their willingness to act as mentors. The Law Society could then create a mentor roster. Similarly, other participants suggested having a web-based registry for mentors, which could include the mentors’ area of law and their time availability. Incentives for mentors could include the receipt of professionalism hours for mentoring services or discounted CPD programming. Some participants believed that the Law Society should compensate mentors, while others believed this would negatively impact the mentor-mentee relationship. Participants suggested that mentors should be culturally competent.

Participants outside of the GTA highlighted specific issues related to mentoring in their regions. A number of participants noted that the majority of professional associations that represent equality-seeking groups do not operate outside of the GTA, which limits access to association-based mentoring programs. One participant stated that if mentoring was to be offered in-person, it should be geographically accessible for licensees in areas across the province.

Networking

“Have more inclusive events.”

— Participant

Many participants stated that associations of racialized lawyers and paralegals are beneficial for fostering collaboration and creating a sense of belonging. Some participants suggested that it would be useful for the Law Society to facilitate collaboration between the various associations and/or to promote already-existing networking opportunities provided by the associations.

Some participants told the Working Group that legal associations are often too costly to join. One group of participants suggested that the Law Society provide subsidies to racialized licensees to assist them to join associations.

Some of the associations also described concern with the cost of holding events for their sectors of the bar at the Law Society and expressed interest in having “in-kind” support and partnership from the Law Society to make those events accessible to diverse communities of lawyers.

Some participants proposed that the Law Society hold regional networking events for licensees. Others noted that CPD programs can be good networking opportunities. However, some participants stated that the cost of CPD programs can be prohibitive and suggested that the Law Society provide low-cost or sliding scale CPD programs. One participant suggested that the Law Society “host planned and structured networking events that are, in location and content, culturally relevant to different groups of racialized licensees.” Some participants noted that hosting alcohol-free events would increase inclusivity.

Participants highlighted the fact that internationally trained lawyers and sole practitioners feel particularly isolated, so networking opportunities should also be targeted to these groups.

C. Enhancing cultural competence in the professions

The Working Group posed the following question related to this theme in the consultation paper:

- How could the Law Society enhance the professions' cultural competence through its CPD programs?

CPD Programs

"We need to be educated about diversity."
— Participant

A large number of participants were in favour of the Law Society requiring licensees to participate in mandatory CPD training on cultural competency, unconscious bias, and anti-racism. Some participants suggested that refresher sessions should be mandated "at intervals over the course of licensees' careers."

Others suggested that this CPD training be provided on a voluntary basis. There was concern expressed that requiring this form of training to be taken by all could be counter-productive. In either case however, participants agreed that professionalism credits should be provided CPD training on these topics.

In terms of content, participants suggested that cultural competency training should go "beyond learning about cultural practices of 'other' cultures and towards an examination of bias, inequality and discrimination". Similarly, one participant noted that the Law Society should "utilize an anti-discrimination, anti-racism and anti-oppression framework focused on deconstructing power structures and privilege — not on cultural competency." Participants also suggested that the Law Society work with associations of racialized licensees and/or with knowledgeable experts to develop content for the training sessions.

Some participants highlighted the importance of requiring licensees involved in recruitment, hiring and promotion decisions to participate in CPDs related to cultural competency and unconscious bias, specifically addressing topics such as bias-free interviews. One participant stated, "If attitudes don't change, the numbers are not going to change." Participants suggested that this CPD programming could be offered via webcast during summer student and articling interview periods. It was also proposed that the Law Society deliver these programs and other cultural competence and anti-discrimination and harassment programs at firms.

A number of participants noted the need to ensure that education on cultural competency, unconscious bias, anti-racism and anti-oppression start at law school and in the Licensing Process. A participant suggested that the Law Society use its seat on the Federation of Law Societies to encourage the inclusion of cultural competency and diversity awareness as part of the core law school curriculum. One group of participants suggested adding a cultural competency course to the college curriculum for paralegal programs. Some participants proposed including cultural competency, diversity and inclusion in the Professional Responsibility and Practice Course that articling students must complete.

It was proposed that all benchers attend cultural competency training in order to enhance awareness at the governance level and ensure that equality, diversity and inclusion are taken into account throughout the policy development process.

Generally, participants stated that CPD programs should be widely available via webcast and recorded. Additionally, some participants suggested that the cost of CPD be reduced, perhaps by working with regional associations.

D. Discrimination and the role of the complaints process

The Working Group posed the following question related to this theme in the consultation paper:

- How should the Law Society best ensure that complaints of discrimination are brought to its attention and effectively addressed?

Complaints of Discrimination

“People have to feel comfortable in accessing policies.”

— Participant

The Working Group heard a range of suggestions on encouraging licensees to bring forward complaints of discrimination.

Participants suggested updating the Rules of Professional Conduct<sup>86</sup> and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct<sup>87</sup> to specifically address systemic discrimination and subtle forms of discrimination. Some participants recommended advertising that complaints of discrimination can be made through the complaints process and devoting more resources to promoting the Discrimination and Harassment Counsel Program.

Participants noted that licensees will often refrain from reporting experiences of discrimination because they fear the negative impact a complaint might have on their careers and reputations. One participant stated, “We don’t want to rock the boat or be considered a troublemaker”.

Some participants were in favour of the Law Society creating an anonymous system of receiving complaints. However, licensees in small firms said this would not be helpful for them as their firms are too small for them to remain anonymous. Some participants that supported an anonymous complaints process recommended that the Law Society investigate firms that have been the subject of a number of anonymous complaints. Participants also suggested amending the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Paralegal Rules of Conduct to include a provision that states that reprisals for complaints of discrimination and harassment are prohibited.

Participants believed that bringing a complaint through an association may not alleviate the issues raised. Some participants suggested that the Law Society ask licensees, using the annual report, whether they have ever experienced discrimination. This information could then be compiled by legal workplace and provided to legal workplace management. Other participants proposed that the Law Society audit firms to ensure that they have policies related to equality, diversity, discrimination and harassment.

Regardless of the method taken to receive complaints, participants noted that it is important for the Law Society to advise complainants of what action was taken.

Some participants noted it would be helpful to have a group of diverse expert Professional Regulation staff who are trained in cultural competency and have an understanding of racial discrimination.

E. The operations of the Law Society of Upper Canada

“The best thing the Law Society can do is start to mirror the behaviour they want to see.”

— Participant

The Law Society received support from participants for its proposals to enhance its current equality compliance program, conduct an internal equality audit, collect further data on the regulatory process and develop a more diverse public face/image for the Law Society. A number of participants have emphasized that the Law Society must model the change it is seeking to create in the professions, which would include increasing diversity at both the governance and the staff levels, and engaging in the same initiatives and measures proposed to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees in the professions.

On a few occasions, participants at the meetings and open houses noted the lack of diversity of Working Group presenters. Working Group members attended and presented at open houses and meetings when their schedules permitted, and at some meetings, the group of presenters did not reflect the diversity of racialized licensees at those meetings. That became a point of discussion with participants expressing concern about the overall diversity of Convocation, but also expressing satisfaction that there are non-racialized benchers who are interested in being part of change and in hearing from licensees on these subjects. It is important to note that a bencher election was conducted during the consultation process and the composition of Convocation appears to be more racially diverse than ever and representative of the professions.

White Privilege

Consultation participants spoke of “white privilege”<sup>88</sup>, and expressed the need for all to acknowledge its existence in order to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees. A number of participants noted that it is important for licensees to understand how power operates to produce advantages for some and deny advantages to others.

Daily Verbal, Behavioural and Environmental Indignities

Consultation participants provided descriptions of their experiences of commonplace daily verbal, behavioural, and environmental indignities, whether intentional or unintentional, that communicate

<sup>88</sup> The Ontario Human Rights Commission defines “privilege” generally as ‘unearned power, benefits, advantages, access and/or opportunities that exist for members of the dominant group(s) in society. It can also refer to the relative privilege of one group compared to another. “Policy and guidelines on racism and racial discrimination”, online: Ontario Human Rights Commission <http://www.ohrc.on.ca/en/book/export/html/2475>

hostile, derogatory or negative racial slights.<sup>89</sup> Examples ranged from assumptions that they are not licensees but in fact interpreters or accused, to inappropriate questions regarding their perceived “otherness.” Participants noted that it is important for licensees to understand the impact of such behaviour and for the Law Society to find ways to address these subtle forms of discrimination.

Indigenous Licensees and Racialized Licensees: Historical and Geographical Differences

Open house learning and consultation programs in Northern Ontario yielded interesting information about the similarities and differences between the experiences of Indigenous licensees and licensees that self-identify as racialized. Participants in Thunder Bay noted that, in terms of race and racism, the population in northern areas of the province is often divided into Indigenous and non-Indigenous peoples. Participants identified several examples where they had witnessed racism directed at Indigenous people and where they had observed that racialized people were treated differently from non-racialized people. It was noted that because of the distinctive histories of Indigenous peoples, strategies to respond to racism faced by Indigenous peoples and to racism faced by racialized peoples may need to differ. The Law Society’s policy work reflects this uniqueness, including the work of the EAIC and other initiatives that are outside the scope of this project. The Law Society is also currently developing a framework of reconciliation in consultation with the Indigenous Advisory Group, established in 2016 with the Law Society to guide the Law Society and the legal community towards a better understanding of how to address unique issues faced by Indigenous peoples in Ontario and promote responses to and implementation of the Calls to Action from the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada’s final report and the First Nations Representation on Ontario Juries report by The Honourable Frank Iacobucci.

<sup>89</sup> Such behaviour is sometimes referred to as microaggression. Sue et al. define microaggressions as “the brief and commonplace daily verbal, behavioural, and environmental indignities, whether intentional or unintentional, that communicate hostile, derogatory or negative racial, gender, sexual orientation and religious slights to the target person or group.” Sue et al. note that “Perpetrators of microaggressions are often unaware that they engage in such communications when they interact with racial/ethnic minorities.” Please see http://www.cpedv.org/sites/main/files/file-attachments/how\_to\_be\_an\_effective\_ally-lessons\_learned\_microaggressions.pdf

A Critical Review of the Law Society's Challenges Report: Representations to the Law Society EIA Committee and Benchers

Murray Klippenstein
January 8, 2020

Introduction

On October 30, 2014, a meeting of the Benchers of the Law Society was presented with a summary of a major research report on Challenges Facing Racialized Licensees (herein the Challenges Report, or simply the "Report"). The Challenges Report, completed in March 2014, had been prepared by an outside consulting firm on behalf of a special Working Group of Benchers and some Law Society staff. That Working Group had been mandated to study, and discuss solutions for, challenges faced by racialized lawyers and paralegals. The summary presented on October 30 was contained in a Consultation Paper provided to the Benchers on that date which also included a detailed going-forward proposal for an extensive consultation process with lawyers and paralegals generally in Ontario, and with various legal professional organizations.

The Challenges Report (summarized in the Consultation Paper of October 30, 2014) described a broad information gathering process conducted largely in 2013 that had consisted, chronologically, of interviews with "key informants", followed by consultations with focus groups, and finally an extensive opinion survey of the entire membership of the lawyer and paralegal professions in Ontario.

The Benchers on October 30, 2014 were urged to distribute the Consultation Paper widely in the legal professions to gather input on next steps. Various Benchers who spoke at the meeting lauded the Consultation Paper, and Convocation approved the proposed plan for distribution of the Consultation Paper.

After those extensive consultations, the Working Group prepared a major report entitled Working Together for Change, which recommended sweeping, complex and far-reaching policy initiatives at the Law Society, with major effects throughout the legal professions in the province. The Working Group's recommendations were adopted by Convocation on December 2, 2016, again to much acclaim.<sup>1</sup> Those policy initiatives are presently in the process of being implemented.

This writer believes that it is fair to say, and important to underscore, that all of the reports, consultations, and policy-initiatives on this topic on and after October 30, 2014 were fundamentally based on and purportedly justified by the findings and information in the Challenges Report of March 2014.

This writer, as a decades-long practicing lawyer, had always more or less trusted the Law

<sup>1</sup> The Working Together for Change Report, as presented to the Benchers on December 2, 2016, is found at <https://lawsocietyontario.azureedge.net/media/lso/media/legacy/pdf/w/working-together-for-change-strategies-to-address-issues-of-systemic-racism-in-the-legal-professions-final-report.pdf>

Society to carry out its role based on credible evidence and careful analysis. However, when this writer eventually read the Challenges Report, he began to feel considerable disquiet. After extensive study, and much agonizing, this writer has concluded that the Challenges Report is methodologically invalid, seriously misleading, driven by a particular political ideology, and an unacceptable basis for serious policy-making by the Law Society, in particular the policy initiatives which are currently being implemented.

Among other issues, the province-wide survey of all legal professionals described in the Report, which was a key part of the study, and which was held up as justifying many of its findings, in fact tended to show that the rest of the Challenges Report was not well-founded. The Challenges Report was and is a misleading and deficient foundation for the extensive consultations and for the Working Together for Change report that followed and were based on the Report.

Summary

The reasons for these conclusions are summarized as follows, with more detailed explanations set out below (all references to “the Report” refer to the Challenges Report).<sup>2</sup>

1. A province-wide survey of all legal professionals was a key part of the Challenges Report. However, importantly, the response rate to the survey was very, very low. This raises serious issues, which were not disclosed to the reader of the Report.
2. In particular, the survey response rate amongst racialized lawyers and paralegals, who were the focus of the entire study, was also very low. Again, this fact, and the serious issues that it raises, were not disclosed to the reader.
3. The Report entirely avoided the important issue of why the survey response rates were so low.
4. The Report’s survey, and many of the Report’s conclusions, were based on a non-random sample, which raises fundamental questions about what, if any, conclusions can be drawn from the survey responses.
5. The Report’s survey was marred by many leading questions.
6. A previous survey of lawyers in Ontario had found little evidence of racial prejudice, an important finding which was not referred to or discussed in the Report.
7. The survey sample was skewed due to self-selection, and the Report’s “adjustments” to the survey sample did not fix the self-selection bias in the sample.
8. The significance of the answers to many survey questions was misrepresented in the Report.
9. The views of the “key informants” were largely not validated, and were often contradicted, by the public survey.
10. The Report was very one-sided and seemingly driven by a particular political ideology.
11. The subsequent extensive consultation process in the legal professions was thoroughly undermined by the invalid and misleading “findings” in the preceding Report, on which the entire consultation process was premised.
12. The Report’s various “input” groups likely had considerable overlap and duplication, meaning that the input received was actually from only a very small segment of the professions, creating a misleading picture.

---

1. The response rate of lawyers and paralegals to the Challenges Report survey was very, very low.

The Challenges Report says that a survey questionnaire was sent to all lawyers and paralegals in Ontario, but it does not say how large that population was; that is, the Report does not state how many survey questionnaires were actually sent out. All it says is that 3,296 questionnaires were returned. That sounds like a reasonable number until one realizes that the total polled population was 51,996 lawyers and paralegals (according to Law Society numbers for 2013), which means that the response rate was only 6.3% (another number that is not mentioned in the Report).

It is customary and good professional practice to include such numbers in a serious study. The omission of these key statistics from the Challenges Report is odd and obscures some very serious issues. The missing statistics would be a “red flag”, a “caution sign”, about what the survey results mean (if anything), and how they should be used (or not).

Essentially, the problem raised by the extremely low return rate is that the views of the proportionately very small group of legal professionals who responded to the survey have a rather low probability of being representative of the views of the entire population of lawyers and paralegals in the province. A very low response rate in a study typically means that great caution must be exercised in extrapolating the study findings to the overall population. One would have thought that the researchers who conducted and reported on the Challenges survey understood the limitations associated with interpreting the data from such a small and unrepresentative group of respondents. But no such caution was mentioned in the Report. On the contrary, the Report unqualifiedly and repeatedly declared its findings as accurately representing the professions as a whole.

2. Even the response rate of racialized lawyers was very low.

The information on how many (and what proportion of) racialized lawyers and paralegals completed the survey is similarly important for assessing the Report’s claims. However, again, and disturbingly, the Report gave us no numbers on these critically important points.

Although in this writer’s opinion these statistics are fundamental to assessing the validity of the Report’s findings and therefore should have been provided in the Report (and should be provided now), it is possible to reconstruct the numbers from various disconnected parts of the Report and from Law Society records. Based on these sources<sup>3</sup>, the number of racialized lawyers and paralegals in Ontario in 2013 (the time the survey was conducted) was 11,617 (or close to that), and the number of racialized legal professionals who responded to the survey was 1,118 (or close to that). This represents about 9.6% - only 9.6% - of that important group of lawyers and paralegals.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>4</sup> It must be emphasized that although this writer believes that these reconstructed numbers are likely quite accurate,

Hence, once again, the very low response rate of racialized lawyers and paralegals—who were the focus of the study—should strongly caution both researchers and readers against making broad and definitive generalizations about the views and experiences of the population of racialized legal professionals in the province as a whole. This is especially true given the significance of the issue being examined – racial barriers and racial prejudice.

In fact, the possibility that the realities of racial barriers and racial prejudice in the legal professions have been misrepresented based on unwarranted interpretations of the Challenges survey data is an extremely serious concern because of the Report’s key role as the basis for far-reaching new Law Society policies which will have extensive repercussions on the ways lawyers and paralegals practice and on the ways the public is served by lawyers, paralegals and legal firms.

3. Why the very low response rate from lawyers and paralegals in general and from racialized lawyers and paralegals in particular? The Challenges Report avoided answering this important question.

The Challenges study obtained very low return rates from the population of lawyers and paralegals in the province and specifically from the population of racialized licensees despite extensive efforts to obtain responses from those licensees and despite a format for the survey which was extremely favourable towards obtaining responses from licensees (including guaranteed confidentiality, multiple reminders being sent out, and an extended period of time given to licensees to complete the survey, at times convenient for licensees). According to the research company, “the online survey was advertised in advance through Law Society communications channels, including email to all licensees work addresses, and website promotions. Members were notified by email and invited to participate immediately prior to the posting of the survey and [they were] reminded by email twice during the period that the survey was accessible online” (p. 6). The research company also states that “the subject matter of the survey was widely known to the LSUC [Law Society of Upper Canada] members...” (p. 22).

Therefore it seems unlikely that licensees were unaware of the survey.

So, what was the reason for the extremely low response rates from the survey population as a whole and from the racialized lawyers and paralegals in particular? We don’t know because the non-responders did not say why they did not respond, and the survey company seemingly did not attempt to find out. And the Challenges Report avoids any discussion of this fundamental and glaringly important question. To this writer, this omission, in and of itself, seriously undermines the credibility of the Report.

It is possible to hypothesize as to why lawyers and paralegals would not respond to a survey such as this one. One plausible reason is that lawyers and paralegals were just too busy. Nevertheless, the Report questionnaire says “This survey will take about ... max 20 min to complete”, which is not an imposing amount of time, especially since licensees were given several weeks to complete the survey, at their convenience. It seems that the time required was not a problem.

the real issue is that these numbers should have been provided in the original Report, and should be provided now.

At any rate, the Challenges Report simply ignores the critical issue of the very low response rates.

This writer believes that this issue puts a clear spotlight on “the elephant in the room.” It may be that the reason for the extremely low survey response rates from both the overall population of licensees and specifically from racialized lawyers and paralegals is that the great majority of lawyers and paralegals in the province are not all that concerned about “racism” in the professions, perhaps because we have progressed to the point where the legal professions are characterized more by openness and equality and opportunity than by “systemic racism.”

Surely, if a substantial proportion of lawyers and paralegals in the professions, especially those who self-identify as “racialized,” felt that “systemic racism” was a serious issue, more than 9.6% of the racialized licensees would have responded to the survey (and it must be remembered that a large portion of those 9.6% who responded did not in fact express such concerns, as will be discussed below).

The Law Society’s comprehensive Working Group Report Working Together for Change which was published after the Challenges Report, and which was based on the Challenges Report, forcefully stated (in the second paragraph of its Executive Summary), its conclusion that “racialized licensees face widespread barriers within the professions at all stages of their careers.”

Frankly, it appears to this writer that the more than 90% of the racialized Law Society licensees who chose not to respond to the survey (and many of the 10% who did) either don’t agree with that conclusion, don’t think the issue is all that serious, or prefer to have a more positive outlook.<sup>5</sup>

Of course, this is not to say that there is no ethnic and racial prejudice and discrimination in the legal professions in Ontario. A certain amount of prejudice and discrimination undoubtedly exists—it probably exists everywhere that humans interact—but the extremely low survey response rate from racialized legal professionals gives good reason to believe that the nature and extent of such prejudice and discrimination is nothing like the picture portrayed in most of the Challenges Report or in the Working Group Report.

4. The Challenges study used a non-random sample.

The very low survey response rates would not have been as much of a concern in the Challenges study if the legal professionals who responded were an unbiased sample of lawyers and paralegals in the province. The best way to obtain an unbiased sample is to ensure that respondents are randomly sampled. If a sample is random, readers can be confident that the experiences, views, and characteristics of that sample fairly represent those of the overall population, within easily computed (and disclosed) limits (which is called a standard error of the measurement).

<sup>5</sup> To this writer, the Working Group’s forceful and important conclusion seems to be very “artfully” worded. For example, how many racialized licensees are they suggesting face such barriers? All of them? Including the 90% who chose not to respond to the survey? And the large portion of the 9.6% who did respond, but who did not express concerns about such barriers? And “widespread”? And “at all stages of their careers”?

However, the respondents to the Challenges survey were not a random sample of the population. In fact, the respondents were a special group created through self-selection; that is, they chose to participate in the survey while the non-responders chose not to participate. There is no reason to think that that self-selected sample was representative, and good reason to think the opposite.<sup>6</sup> Therefore the results of the survey were almost certainly a biased set of responses which did not accurately represent the views and experiences of the overall population of lawyers and paralegals in the province.

According to the author of a contemporary Canadian textbook on public opinion surveying:

Social science researchers conceptually divide sampling strategies into non-probability sampling and probability sampling.... Data collected from non-probability samples can be summarized using descriptive statistics but cannot be used to make generalizations about a larger population. In contrast, probability sampling relies on the principle of random selection.... When researchers use probability samples, they rely on the laws of probability to make generalizations about the larger population. [emphasis added]<sup>7</sup>

Or, to quote the blunt “bottom line” of the textbook author: “Non-probability samples cannot be used to generate population estimates.” (p. 542)

The failure of the Challenges survey to obtain a random sample therefore has serious implications for how the results of the survey can and should be interpreted, presented, discussed and acted upon. When the Challenges Report says that 40% of racialized respondents answered “yes” to a question, there are no grounds to say that 40% of all racialized licensees felt that way. One can say that 447 racialized licensees felt that way (being 40% of racialized respondents). But one can, and should, also note that 447 licensees out of 11,617 racialized licensees felt that way. And one can, and should, also note that out of 11,617 racialized licensees who were asked the question, 11,170 either chose not to answer or did not answer yes.

Failure to be frank about the importance of obtaining a random sample, and about the serious limitations of a sample that is not randomized, is an abuse of survey methodology, and seriously misleading, in a study of the scope and seriousness of the Challenges Report.<sup>8</sup> Unfortunately, the Challenges Report does not even acknowledge the gravity of this problem.

5. The Challenges survey included many leading questions.

The Challenges survey contains yet another problem: a great many of its questions were framed with a highly emotional undertone or in a suggestive way. For example, the responders were asked to indicate their agreement (or disagreement) with a number of statements like: “You have been subjected to prejudicial attitudes on the part of other legal professionals, based on your racialized status,” “Your employment environment is not very diverse,” and “Your beliefs or cultural practices preclude you from participating in many of the social networking functions of Ontario legal firms.”

<sup>6</sup> One obvious reason is that given how the survey was characterized, those racialized licensees with concerns about racial prejudice and racial disadvantage in the professions would have had a much higher motivation to respond than those racialized licensees who, for various reasons, did not see them as big issues.

<sup>8</sup> This writer does not know the extent of the resources spent by the Law Society on the Challenges Report, but suspects that the direct costs and indirect costs (such as considerable staff time) amount to hundreds of thousands of dollars, perhaps many hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Clearly, these statements steer respondents towards identifying or interpreting experiences in a way that would align with the conclusion that there are considerable racial barriers or racial prejudice in the legal professions. In the social sciences, such statements are called “loaded,” or “leading,” questions, because they lead respondents to respond in particular ways.<sup>9</sup>

Thus, the biased question format is another reason why the information obtained from the lawyers and paralegals responding to the survey cannot be considered to fairly represent the way the respondents, and by extension, the population of lawyers and paralegals in the province, truly feel or think. Framing survey items in this biased way is widely recognized as a very poor practice, and consequently the information obtained from such questions cannot be treated as valid.<sup>10</sup> The leading questions in the survey instrument are yet another source of intrinsic bias in the Challenges study.

6. A previous survey of Ontario lawyers found little evidence of racism in the profession.

The likelihood that the information in the Challenges study was not a fair reflection of the views and experiences of the overall membership of the legal professions is supported by the results of another previous survey study. The results of that study, the Kay Report of 2004,<sup>11</sup> revealed little evidence of racial prejudice or discrimination experienced by lawyers who identified themselves as racialized.

Specifically, the researchers of the Kay study asked both racialized and non-racialized lawyers nine questions aimed at illuminating whether or not there was “exclusion and discrimination according to racial/cultural group identity” in the legal profession. The evidence showed that, while there were a few small differences between racialized and non-racialized lawyers in their answers, “none of the differences are large in magnitude or statistically significant” (p. 65, emphasis added). In fact, the Kay Report stated:

Lawyers from racialized communities are slightly more likely to report they had been assigned tasks beneath their skill level routinely or frequently (14%, compared with 11% among non-racialized lawyers). Lawyers from racialized communities are slightly more likely to report exclusion, routinely or frequently, from social gatherings (4%); rude or inappropriate remarks by clients (4%); and a lack of support from staff at the firm (5%).

<sup>9</sup> It seems possible and in fact likely to this writer that the “loaded” nature of the questions would in fact have “turned off” some of those who were initially interested in the survey, resulting in many non-completions.

<sup>11</sup> Kay, Fiona M., Cristi Masuch, and Paula Curry. 2004. Contemporary Lawyers: Diversity and Change in Ontario’s Legal Profession. Report submitted to the Law Society of Upper Canada (Toronto: The Law Society of Upper Canada) (157 pages). See:

Yet, their slight differences remain statistically insignificant. (p. 66, emphasis added)<sup>12</sup>

These results are noteworthy because they do not support the claim of “systemic racism” made in or based on the Challenges Report, and would tend to call that claim into question. The fact that the authors of the Challenges study did not compare their results with the results of the Kay Report, and discuss the contrasting findings, is not in keeping with the recognized practice in scientific research in which newly obtained findings are put into the context of the existing evidence. By failing to contextualize its findings, the Challenges Report undermines its credibility, especially since its findings are in clear contradiction with the findings of a previous well-conducted study.<sup>13</sup>

7. The Challenges Report’s “adjustments” did not fix the self-selection bias.

The Challenges Report’s authors acknowledge that the racialized lawyers and paralegals who completed the survey questionnaires were over-represented in the survey results.<sup>14</sup> In response to this over-representation, the Report states that the researchers had made adjustments to the sample to eliminate this biasing effect. The survey company said that this procedure would ensure that the responses accurately represented the members of the professions and that such biases could be corrected for if:

the source and scale of the numeric over- or under-representation of particular subgroups are understood. A typical remedy is to ‘weight’ the survey data so that the results align with the known (or precisely estimated) proportions from a census or other prior reliable quantitative survey (p. 22).

The survey company then described its “weighting” procedure used “to achieve a representative sample” (p. 22):

We used a weight-ranking (sample balancing) algorithm to adjust the samples of lawyers and paralegals separately, using the 2010 Law Society snapshot documents as estimates of the true proportions of different subgroups of licensees. The survey data were weighted to align with the distributions of different subgroups for racial and ethnic groups....

In essence, the “weighting” amounts to a reduction in the number of racialized survey responses in the Report’s calculations so that instead of including all the 1,118 survey responses from racialized licensees,<sup>15</sup> only 741 of the questionnaires completed by these lawyers and paralegals <sup>12</sup> Of the nine questions, responses to one question (referencing disrespectful remarks by judges or other lawyers), showed a small difference which passed the “statistically significant” threshold, but which the Report describes as not large.

<sup>13</sup> Readers of the Challenges Report would not even become aware of the issues raised by the Report’s conflict with a previous major study.

<sup>14</sup> The only comment in the Report about the possible reason(s) for this over-representation is that it is “due to the subject matter of the study” (p. 22). This ambiguous wording avoids the likely reality that those with certain particular views on racial matters were much more likely to complete the survey, resulting in a skewed sample.

<sup>15</sup> Again, that 1,118 is this writer’s (approximately accurate) calculated number. Again, this writer believes that the actual number of racialized respondents should have been originally disclosed, and should be disclosed now.

were included in the analyses.

Put simply, the logic appeared to be that because 1,118 represents a disproportionately high number of racialized lawyers and paralegals in comparison with the proportion of racialized licensees in the overall population, the number of racialized questionnaires used would be reduced to 741 to bring the sample of racialized licensee respondents in line with the proportion of racialized lawyers and paralegals in the professions.

Following this, the Challenges Report authors say: “This process results in a sample that produces representative, unbiased estimates of the views and opinions of Law Society licensees” (p. 23, and also at p. v).<sup>16</sup>

There is no apparent basis for this statement, and it is very likely false. The Report gives no grounds for believing that the 1,118 self-selected racialized survey-responders (9.6% of all racialized licensees in the province) were representative of the views and experiences of the overall population of racialized licensees.<sup>17</sup> Given that, simply adjusting downward the number of racialized lawyers and paralegal responses used for the analyses does not create a representative sample of the racialized population of licensees in the province.

In fact, because the sample was self-selected, there is no practical way to “weight” the sample to ensure that the sample fairly represents all lawyers and paralegals in the province.<sup>18</sup>

8. The answers to many (or most) survey questions were misrepresented in the Report. For example, according to the Challenges Report, 40% of racialized licensees reported that their ethnic/racial identity was a barrier or challenge to entry into practice. That claim is not true.

The Challenges Report states that “fully 40% of racialized licensees identified their ethnic/racial identity as a barrier or challenge to entry into the practice of law or provisions of legal services” (p. 38).<sup>19</sup>

<sup>16</sup> The Report repeatedly claims the fundamental point that its survey results, after this “weighting” procedure, accurately reflect the views of licensees as a whole. The Executive Summary of the Report states that the purpose of using selective interviews and focus groups at the beginning of the study was to generate a detailed account of experiences from those licensees “perspective,” and then “measure or validate those findings across the whole population of licensees.” (p. ii), and that “it is important to understand... how we ensured that the views of all licensees are accurately portrayed in the data and final report (representativeness)” (p. iv) [emphasis added]. In the Conclusions of the Challenges Report the authors state that its methodology has “yielded a nuanced account of the experiences of racialized licensees, validating much of that experience through detailed measurement across the whole population” (p. 77) [emphasis added].

<sup>17</sup> That is, there is no basis for asserting that the mix of views and experiences in the self-selected group of 1,118 was the same as, or “mirrored,” the views and experiences in the group of 10,499 racialized licensees who chose not to respond (11,617-1118=10,499).

<sup>18</sup> There are some recently developed, highly sophisticated and complex survey methods which some companies are experimenting with to try to adjust for self-selection bias. There is no indication in the Report that the authors have any knowledge of such techniques, or even of the complexity and seriousness of the issue.

<sup>19</sup> This specific example is chosen, from amongst many survey questions in the Report, because this statistic has been cited repeatedly in public discussions, in staff summaries of the Report, in the consultation process, in the Law Society’s Continuing Professional Development videos, and in at least one law journal article.

Actually, that isn't true. All we know is that 447 racialized licensees said that (40% of 1,118), out of a total of 11,617 racialized lawyers and paralegals. That's 4%, not 40%, of the survey population.<sup>20</sup>

The problem is the Report's extrapolation from the small sample (the actual 447 respondents who said yes on that point) to the overall study population. Since this small sample is non-random and skewed, the answers cannot and should not be simply generalized to the overall population.

Furthermore, as discussed earlier, the fact that 96% of racialized lawyers and paralegals chose either to not answer the question, or answered but did not agree ( $11,617 - 447 = 11,170$ ;  $11,170/11,617 = 96\%$ ), legitimately raises the suggestion that 96%, or at least a very large majority, of racialized lawyers and paralegals in Ontario do not perceive ethnic/racial barriers as being a major issue for entry into the legal professions.<sup>21</sup>

At no point does the Challenges Report even discuss this possibility, which is clearly raised and tentatively supported by the survey results.<sup>22</sup> Instead, in this writer's opinion, the data has been presented in a seriously misleading way in the Report, and in many subsequent presentations and discussions.

Further, this same concern applies to many other "findings" in the Report. The Report constantly states, on a variety of issues, that a certain percentage of "licensees" agreed with a specific proposition when it can, truthfully, only be claimed that the results refer to the far smaller number of actual "respondents" who agreed. Because of the Report's methodological deficiencies, we only know what those respondents said, and to make statements about what licensees said or believe (suggesting licensees as a whole), which the Report does repeatedly, is seriously misleading.

9. The views of the 'key informants' were largely not validated by the public survey.

The Challenges Report adopted as one of the first steps in its methodology the recruitment of 27 "key informants", whom it describes as "individuals in the legal profession with deep expertise in the realm of diversity and equity" (p. 3). Somewhat ambiguously, the Report states that three of the 27 self-identified as non-racialized, seeming to suggest that 24 of the "key informants" self-identified as racialized, although that is left unclear. However, despite their key role, the Report does not tell us their identity or anything about their backgrounds, so the reader, and the legal professions, have no way of assessing whether they in fact have what should be considered as expertise in anything. Nevertheless, their views appeared to have driven the structure of much of the Report.

<sup>21</sup> This particular question dealt with "entry into" the legal professions. A similar related question in the Report dealt with "advancement" in the professions (subsequent to "entry"), for which the equivalent percentage was stated as 43%. The comments above would apply equally to that question (and to many or most others in the Report).

<sup>22</sup> Again, this writer is by no means suggesting that the views of those 447 respondents are not important. And there were probably others who did not respond to the survey who agree with the 447. On the other hand, based on the very low response rate, there were probably a very large number of racialized licensees who had something quite different to say on this issue, whose views were not appropriately discussed in the Report.

The Report does not state why the identity or background of the “key informants” was kept confidential. Presumably it was to encourage frankness from individuals who considered themselves vulnerable in their careers in the professions. This writer considers that understandable. However, given that we consequently know nothing about these individuals, how much “weight” should be given to their “expertise” is a serious question (for example, it is important but unclear as to how much of their asserted “expertise” is really in the form of a political perspective on which others might seriously differ).<sup>23</sup>

The problem raised by the complete anonymity of these “experts” is highlighted because the survey results of the entire legal professions, including in particular the results from racialized licensees, do not actually back up or validate many of the opinions which derive from their “expertise”, and often contradict them, as described above.

To pick one example, according to the Report: “Through the key informants we got a strong indication that ... overt discrimination and bias – often unconscious – is a feature of daily life for many, or most, racialized licensees” (p. 8, emphases added). This is a shocking assertion. However, this writer has to also consider the fact that the 90% of racialized lawyers and paralegals in the province who chose not to answer the survey at all, and approximately half of the 10% who did answer the survey, apparently did not see things that way.

Frankly, to this writer, many of the problems with the Report (such as the failure to discuss, or even to disclose, the very low survey response rates) appear to arise from the authors of the Report attempting to deal with the fact that the survey of the professions in many ways did not support, and in many ways contradicted, what the “key informants” described as the situation in the professions. The key informants’ “expertise” did not seem to fit the facts.

10. The Challenges Report was very one-sided and seemingly driven by a particular political ideology.

One of the first questions in the survey as sent to all members of the legal professions was: “Do you self-identify as racialized or non-racialized?”. That idea, of “racialization”, is the central and key concept of the entire survey aspect of the Report (and, seemingly, of the entire Report). Most of the survey responses were analyzed based on whether or not the respondents self-identified as “racialized”.

However, the term “racialized” is a highly theoretical, politicized and ideological term.<sup>24</sup> The <sup>23</sup> It is quite ironic that the governing body of lawyers and paralegals in Ontario has been accepting, unquestioned, the views of “experts” in a way that no court would come anywhere close to tolerating. Not only are these experts anonymous, but their asserted expertise is not even described, and their actual views are not quoted either, but are instead collectively “summarized” by an unknown person, often with broad and what this writer considers significantly politically slanted language.

<sup>24</sup> The suffix “ized”, when added to a word, denotes some “action” in the past, and it therefore builds right into the word itself the idea that “somebody or something has done something to somebody”. In other words, simply changing the word from “racial” to “racialized” automatically imports a political and ideological conclusion. Central to the idea of “racialization” is the political theory of “social constructionism”, specifically that “race is

Report's authors acknowledge that the term "racialized" is "relatively new", and that its use in the study is "innovative" and controversial (p. 21). They hint that the use of that term in the survey was based on "clear direction" from the LSUC and the Working Group (p. 21). To this writer, that appears to be politically motivated interference in the work of the opinion survey technicians.

In fact, by the explicit terms of the survey questionnaire, survey respondents were being asked not whether they were a member of an ethnic or visible minority, but whether their racial identity was socially constructed. To this writer, that is simply a bizarre survey question, in this context.

In this writer's view, the use of the esoteric and political term "racialized" in itself was probably an important factor affecting and skewing the response rates to the survey. It seems likely to this writer that many members of the professions were puzzled or downright annoyed by the use of the term, and simply declined to complete the survey for that reason. The use of that term also likely skewed the composition of the sample by "filtering out" licensees who did not agree with the political conclusions they sensed were already "built into" the term itself.

Further, and unsurprisingly to this writer, 11% of survey respondents answered that they were "Unsure" or "Don't know" whether they were "racialized" or not (p. 25). The Report's authors do not explain how they dealt with that "Don't know" category, which seems important, since for many of the "findings" of the Report, that 11% potential "swing vote" would make a critical difference in the results.<sup>25</sup>

The use of the term "racialized" also appears to have produced some very strange and problematic specific results. The Report states that the majority of Aboriginal/Indigenous and Jewish survey respondents did not report themselves as "racialized" (p. 26). Further, 6% of Caucasians identified themselves as "racialized" (p. 26).<sup>26</sup> To this writer, these results veer into the absurd. They also raise the important practical question of how these seeming miscategorizations affected the actual statistical findings. For example, would all the survey answers of the majority of Aboriginal/Indigenous respondents have been tallied as "non-socially constructed". U.S. professors of ethnic studies and sociology Omi and Winant, the leading theorists of the term, in their classic text Racial Formation in the United States (Routledge, originally published in 1986, third edition, 2015) emphasize ("stress" is their word) that "race is a social construction" (p. 12) and define racialization as "the extension of racial meaning to a previously racially unclassified relationship, social practice, or group." (p. 111). Further, this socially created "racial meaning" is not neutral. Omi and Winant say that: "We regard race as a master category of oppression and resistance in the United States. ... The establishment and reproduction of race has established supposedly fundamental distinctions among human beings ("othering"), ranking and hierarchizing them for purposes of domination and exploitation". (p. 245, emphasis in original). This is not the place to debate the validity, usefulness, limitations, excesses or harms of "social constructionist" theory in general and regarding "race" in particular. The point is that the term "racialized" brings with it a lot of baggage, including if used in a survey. Suffice to say that this writer is not "all in" on that "social constructionist" approach, and does not believe that the Law Society should be either.

<sup>25</sup> This writer's two young adult sons are genetically 50% Caucasian and 50% Taiwanese. This writer considered testing the survey question by asking his sons whether they "self-identified" as "racialized", but concluded that asking them that was patently ridiculous, and that we had better things to talk about.

<sup>26</sup> The Report makes it clear that the respondents' self-identification on the "are you racialized" question was considered definitive. This hints at the further intrusion of "identity" politics or ideology into the survey and Report – anyone's "mode of self-identification" must be respected and is not open to discussion or questioning.

racialized”? The Report does not discuss this issue.<sup>27</sup>

Overall, to this writer, the central use of the politically and ideologically loaded term “racialized” as a key component of the survey has alone completely distorted the Report’s survey results, rendering them essentially useless for purposes of serious policy-making by the Law Society.<sup>28</sup>

In addition to the very serious problems arising from the use of the term “racialized”, the Report systematically sidelines and disparages any parts of the survey results that do not match, or that contradict, its overriding political theme of systemic racism. For example, survey respondents, including “racialized” respondents, overwhelmingly agreed that “It is important to reduce discrimination but the profession’s main responsibility is to the client and making sure they are being served by competent lawyers and paralegals” (p. 59, the figure for racialized respondents is 74%). This validation of the emphasis on “competence” does not fit well with the thrust of the Report. Further, the majority of survey respondents, including a majority of “racialized” respondents, agreed that “It is natural and desirable that licensees from various backgrounds conform to the professional culture that is already established in Ontario” (p. 59, the figure for racialized respondents is 53%).<sup>29</sup>

Rather than taking these kinds of responses seriously, the report dismisses them as “conservative or status quo statements” (p. 60). That categorization appears to be disparagingly and misleadingly labelling anyone who does not embrace the particular political ideology espoused by the Report (and those seem to include the majority of the members of the legal professions, and include this writer). It is also demeaning of respondents, including “racialized” respondents, who may have complex views about the present state of affairs in the professions, and about the appropriate path of progress going forward.

Finally, the Report makes no allowance for the variety of important causal factors, other than “systemic racism,” that could, and likely do, contribute to the ethnic/racial statistics that are evident in the legal professions. These causal factors include “demographic lag” (the fact that the increasing racial diversity in the Ontario population simply takes time to work its way into the legal professions), the highly complex, difficult and skills-based nature of legal work (which means that it takes time, often many years, for entrants to become, or to feel, genuinely successful, or to reach senior positions in firms or government), and “sub-culture effects” (the fact that not all sub-cultures in the Ontario population equally value the legal professions as a career).<sup>30</sup>

<sup>28</sup> Even Professors Omi and Winant, the doyens of “racialization” theory, have recently “added back in” to their theory (in the most recent edition of their classic text) the idea of visible bodily differences as an essential element of “racialization” (what they refer to as “ocularity”, see Racial Formation, 2015, pp. viii, 13, 145, 245 and 246). It looks like the term “visible minority” isn’t such an “outdated” term after all. In this writer’s view, the Challenges Report’s survey of the professions would have been far more useful if the survey had used the term “visible minority”, or something similar. That wasn’t apparently ideologically correct enough for the managers of the study, but it is ironic that at least some leaders in the “ideology” itself have since “moved on”.

<sup>29</sup> It is worth repeating that since the survey responses were very likely skewed, the strong affirmation of these sentiments in the survey responses is particularly surprising. The likely skew of the sample also means that these numbers in fact probably understate the actual frequency of these views in the professions overall.

The existence or potential significance of these causal factors, which in this writer’s opinion are very important considerations for any thoughtful understanding of the issues, are ignored by the Report (and by the follow up Working Group Report).

11. The Challenges Report was a seriously misleading basis for the subsequent extensive consultation process.

The Challenges Report was presented to Law Society Convocation by the Working Group on October 30, 2014, with a recommendation to the Benchers that an extensive “consultation” process be implemented within the legal professions generally, and with a large number of “equity” or “diversity” organizations, including by inviting written representations, all based on the Report.

Unfortunately, in this writer’s assessment, the entire consultation process used as its starting point, and was premised on, a Report that was methodologically invalid and seriously misleading, but which was presented as accurately representing an overall picture of the professions (that is, the views of a small and skewed sample or subgroup of the professions were put forward as accurately representing the views and experiences of the professions as a whole, while the omission of key information – such as the extremely low survey response rates – effectively hid serious issues from the readers).

There would have been few, if any, members of the professions who were invited to comment on the Report who would have been able to identify these issues, given the way the Report was written.

This writer has read all of the consultation responses which the Law Society has made public. It is effectively impossible, in this writer’s opinion, to know what to make of them, given that they were all premised on the mistaken and misleading information and conclusions of the Challenges Report. In effect, members of the legal professions, and the consulted organizations, were asked to respond to something that wasn’t true, without them realizing that it wasn’t true.

12. The various “input” groups likely had considerable overlap and duplication, suggesting that the Report overall, and the consultations that followed, represent the views of only a very small number in the legal professions.

It appears to this writer that throughout the whole process, from the Report’s “key informants”, to the focus group members, to the respondents to the survey, and then to the consultation input from various organizations, there is the likelihood of considerable overlap, or duplication, of the individuals involved. That is, it is likely that many individuals participated in more than one of these processes. It is likely, therefore, that the Law Society is hearing the views of a small group of several hundred licensees, repeated and duplicated through different channels. That does not mean that those views are not important – they are – but it does mean, in this writer’s opinion, that there is another reason for caution in extrapolating the results to the legal professions as a whole. In fact, it appears that the vast majority of the professions, and the vast majority of racialized licensees, have not spoken on these issues.

<sup>30</sup> This writer’s sub-culture of origin had no use for lawyers and offered no encouragement towards becoming one, and this writer had never spoken to or met a lawyer until he was in law school. In several other sub-cultures with which this writer has considerable familiarity, parents would much rather have their children become doctors, engineers or business entrepreneurs than lawyers.

Conclusion

The Law Society has spent a very large amount of time and effort, and apparently a very large amount of funds, on an attempt to address challenges faced by lawyers and paralegals from visible or ethnic minorities. In this writer’s opinion, the Law Society could have ended up with a thoughtful and constructive result, but did not.

This writer has concluded that the Challenges Report, which is the foundation and justification for all of the subsequent reports, consultations, and policy plans, is methodologically invalid, seriously misleading, and driven by a particular political ideology, and was and is an unacceptable basis for serious policy-making by the Law Society, in particular the policy initiatives which are currently being implemented.<sup>31</sup>

Re.: FOR REVIEW: Inclusion Index Background

---

1. Purpose

REVIEW the background on the development of the Inclusion Index.

2. Background

In 2016, Convocation committed to implementing the recommendations of the Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions Report (the “Challenges Report”), including the publication and release of an Inclusion Index for legal workplaces (LWPs) with 25 or more licensees every four years. Recommendation 6 of the Challenges Report reads:

Every four years, the Law Society will develop and publish an Inclusion Index that reflects the following information, including, for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees: the legal workplace's self-assessment information (Recommendation 3(3)), demographic data obtained from the Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report (Recommendation 4) and information gathered from the inclusion questions provided by the Law Society (Recommendation 5).<sup>1</sup>

To move forward on this commitment, lawyer and paralegal licensees were asked to complete voluntary demographic<sup>2</sup> and inclusion questions in the 2018 Annual Reports (completed in 2019). LWPs with 10 or more licensees were required to complete mandatory self-assessment questions regarding their policies on diversity and inclusion.

The LSO collected the following information from licensees in the 2018 Annual Reports:

- Demographic/Self-Identification Questions: Voluntary questions regarding Indigenous identity, Francophone identity, race/ethnicity, gender, sexual orientation and disability.

<sup>1</sup> Law Society of Ontario, “Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions” (December 2016), online (pdf): <https://lawsocietyontario.azureedge.net/media/lso/media/legacy/pdf/w/working-together-for-change-strategies-to-address-issues-of-systemic-racism-in-the-legal-professions-final-report.pdf>

<sup>2</sup> Since 2009, the Law Society has been collecting licensee demographic data on a voluntary basis through the Annual Report Filing. The data has been reported in the aggregate through statistical snapshots of the lawyer and paralegal professions.

- Inclusion Questions: Voluntary questions related to licensees' experience with respect to inclusion, respect and safety in their workplaces. The inclusion questions include a 'self-assessment' component where licensees were asked to identify diversity-related policies and programming at their LWPs.
- Self-Assessment Questions: Mandatory questions related to workplace policies, programs and commitment to equality, diversity and inclusion.<sup>3</sup> These were completed by a licensee representative for each LWP with at least 10 licensees.

3. Inclusion Index Structure

Only LWPs with more than 10 respondents were included in the final Index for a total sample set of 192 LWPs.

The 192 LWPs listed in the Index include private firms, corporations and public interest organizations (e.g. universities, government, etc.). The Index ranks the 192 LWPs based on an overall score.

The Index assigns an individual score based on three metrics:

- Diversity (25% of the overall score)
- Commitment (25% of the overall score)
- Inclusion (50% of the overall score).

Diversity Score:

Diversio benchmarked the demographic composition of each LWP against the demographics of the region in which it is located using census data from Statistics Canada.<sup>4</sup> Each demographic trait (ethnicity, Indigenous identity, Francophone background, gender, disability, LGBTQ2+) was assigned equal importance and thus weighted equally.

LWPs with multiple offices were compared against the demographics of their primary region of operation. Ontario-wide entities were compared to province-wide demographics.

Commitment Score:

The commitment score reflects the LWP's self-reported EDI programming and policies plus licensee acknowledgement of this programming. LWPs that had implemented the most programming received top scores.

Diversio noted that 14 out of 192 LWPs did not complete the self-assessment questions. For these LWPs, a commitment score was generated using licensee responses regarding the presence of programming at their LWP.

Inclusion Score:

---

<sup>3</sup> Self-Assessment questions measure for the LWP's commitment to EDI (14 commitments); policies about discrimination, harassment and sexual harassment; whether EDI considerations are made in decision making; and the availability of EDI training or education at the LWP.

<sup>4</sup> LGBTQ2+ representation threshold was set using Diversio's benchmarking data instead of census data. Diversio advised that the census benchmark for LGBTQ2+ is generally considered low.

The inclusion score was generated by aligning each of the 22 inclusion questions to one of Diversio's five sub-metrics: inclusive culture, access to networks, unbiased feedback and reviews, safe work environment, and flexible work options.

To produce the inclusion score for each LWP, Diversio compared the average score on each metric for the dominant group (white, heterosexual, Anglophone men without a disability) to the average score for the non-dominant group. The average response of the dominant group was weighted at 30% of the score, and the average response of the non-dominant group was weighted at 70%.

The Index also provides the response rate for each LWP (# of licensee responses), the type of LWP (public interest, corporate, law firm), and the regional location for each LWP. More information on Diversio's methodology is attached as "Appendix A".

Based on the LWP's scores in each of the three categories, each LWP was assigned a numerical ranking and designated as one of five archetypes (superstar, accidental superstar, inclusive, diverse, accidentally inclusive, accidentally diverse, commitment only, and needs improvement). A legend explaining the archetype assignment is attached as "Appendix B".

Response Rates

Diversio noted that the average response rate to the diversity questions across the 192 LWPs was 78%, while the average response rate to the inclusion questions was 68%. The overall response rate across LSO licensees was 80%. While the overall response rate was very high for a survey of this nature, some LWPs had lower response rates. For example, 40 LWPs had a response rate of less than 60% for the diversity questions and 55 LWPs had a response rate of less than 60% for the inclusion questions. A more detailed explanation of the response rates is attached as "Appendix C".

Diversio LWP Dashboards

In addition to a ranked Index, Diversio produced individual dashboards for each of the 192 LWPs. The dashboard provides each LWP with:

- an overall Index ranking (out of 192) and score (out of 100);
- individual scores and rankings for each of the three metrics (diversity, inclusion, and commitment);
- a diversity composition, which compares the demographics for the LWP against the average for all 192 LWPs;
- an inclusion scorecard for Diversio's five sub-metrics for inclusion (inclusive culture, access to networks, unbiased feedback and reviews, safe work environment, and flexible work options);
- recommendations to promote diversity and inclusion in the workplace

Diversio also provides LWPs an option to update their commitment data through a link on the Dashboard.

Memo re: LSO Follow-up Questions on the Inclusion Index methodology

04/22/2020

A) GENERAL QUESTIONS

1. Can Diversio provide a summary of its methodology?

Diversio's methodology involves collecting and analyzing data from three sources: employee demographic information, employee responses to experience- and inclusion-related questions, and information about a particular organization's programs and policies. Diversio has applied this methodology in several industries across enterprise & SMEs, including Financial Services, Asset Management, Technology, Venture Capital and more. Diversio developed this methodology with input from over 100 industry experts, academics and business leaders, and has used it to assess more than 600 organizations. It has been tested, validated and endorsed by organizations such as the Human Resources Professional Association, Women in Capital Markets, Institutional Limited Partner Association, City of Toronto and Natural Resources Canada.

Diversio's methodology was adapted to the LSO context through input and consultations with the LSO. Advisors on the project included experts such as Hadiya Roderique (JD, Ph D Candidate in Organizational Behaviour), Josh Lokko (JD Candidate, President of the Black Law Students' Association of Canada), and Amy Hepburn, PhD (Professor at Duke University).

Diversio obtained three datasets from the LSO: licensee self-identified demographic data, licensee responses to inclusion questions, and self-assessment information regarding diversity and inclusion programming submitted by legal workplaces (LWPs).

We started by aligning these three data sources to our standard methodology, which includes three core metrics that are aggregated to create an overall score (see "Exhibit A" and "Exhibit B"). Following a joint decision with the LSO, only LWPs with more than 10 respondents were included in the final Index for a total sample set of 192 LWPs.

Diversio Inc.
Private and confidential

The resulting Inclusion Index includes an overall score for each LWP, referred to as the Diversio Score, which is composed of three metrics: A Diversity Score (25% of the Diversio Score), an Inclusion Score (50% of the Diversio Score), and a Commitment Score (25% of the Diversio Score).

The Diversity Score reflects how diverse an LWP is from a demographic perspective. This metric incorporates gender, race/ethnicity (including Indigenous and Francophone identity), sexual orientation and disability. It was calculated from self-identified demographic information submitted by licensees in their Annual Reports. Race/ethnicity and gender were weighted based on regional averages, using Statistics Canada Census Economic Regions (more information below). Sexual orientation was weighted using Diversio's proprietary benchmarking data, and disability was weighted using national averages.

The Commitment Score reflects self-reported programming and policies the LWP indicated having in place, as well as licensee acknowledgement of this programming (i.e., licensees indicating that diversity-related programming is in place at their firm, as reported in the Inclusion Questions).<sup>1</sup> LWPs with the most implemented programming received top scores, and LWPs with less programming received lower scores.<sup>2</sup>

The Inclusion Score was generated by first aligning each of the LSO Inclusion Questions to one of Diversio's five sub-metrics: Inclusive Culture, Access to Networks, Unbiased Feedback and Reviews, Safe Work Environment, and Flexible Work Options. To create the Inclusion Score for each LWP, we compared the average score on each metric for the dominant group to the average score for the non-dominant group. The average response of the dominant group was weighted at 30% of the score, and the average response of the non-dominant group was weighted at 70%. (See Exhibit B for an illustrative example).

As described above, each LWP's overall Diversio Score is a composite of these three metrics. The Inclusion Index is a simple ranking of 192 LWPs in order of their overall Diversio Score, from highest (most diverse, inclusive and committed) to lowest (least diverse, inclusive and committed).

<sup>1</sup> Note that 14 out of 192 LWPs did not complete the Self-Assessment. In this case, a Commitment score was generated using licensee responses regarding the presence of programming at their LWP.

<sup>2</sup> All programming was self-reported and not independently verified by the LSO. The robustness of the Commitment Score is reliant on the competency, knowledge and integrity of the individuals designated by each LWP to complete the Self-Assessment

METHODOLOGY

Exhibit B

Inclusion Score Methodology

1. Identify the dominant and non-dominant groups within the sample set
  - The dominant group across LSO respondents is white heterosexual, Anglophone men without a disability
  - The non-dominant group includes respondents who differ from the dominant group on any demographic trait
2. For each question or metric:
  - Determine the average response of the dominant group (e.g. 8/10) for 30% of the Score
  - Determine the average response of the non-dominant group (e.g. 4/10) for 70% of the Score
  - Combine the average response of each for an overall Score (e.g.  $((0.8 \times 0.3) + (0.4 \times 0.7)) = 5.2/10$ )
3. Combine scores for the overall Inclusion Score

Diversio Inc.

2. Why is the Inclusion Score given more weight than the Commitment and Diversity Scores?

The stated intention of the “Inclusion Index” is to reflect the inclusivity of LWPs, and the presence or absence of bias, systemic barriers and exclusion. The Index is additional to demographic snapshots and self-identification data which is published separately. In addition, this weighting hedges against the possibility of assigning a high ranking to an LWP in a scenario where an LWP is highly diverse but employees from underrepresented backgrounds are subject to racism, bias or harassment. Focusing on inclusion provides a clear incentive for companies to strive for real systemic change rather than “tokenism”.

It is also worth noting that the experiences of diverse employees are accorded more weight, constituting 70% of the Inclusion Score.

B) DETAILED EXPLANATION OF THE METRICS

3. How was the Diversity Score calculated?

The Diversity Score was calculated by first establishing a baseline against which LWPs would be measured for each demographic trait identified by the LSO. Diversio implemented the following benchmarks:

- Set representation for ethnicity, Indigenous identity, gender, and Francophone background based on Statistics Canada Census Economic Regions data, subdividing Ontario into 9 regions
- Set LGBTQ2+ representation at 10% for LWPs within Toronto and 5% for all LWPs outside of Toronto. Since detailed Statistics Canada data was not available for LGBTQ2+ representation, benchmarks were set using a combination of 1) U.S. government data on LGBTQ2+ representation in major U.S. metropolitan areas most comparable to Toronto and 2) proprietary Diversio data collected on LGBTQ2+ representation across Ontario
- Set representation of persons with a disability at 20% for all LWPs, based on Statistics Canada Census data

Diversio Inc.
Private and confidential

After setting the baseline, Diversio compared the representation of each LWP to the demographics of the region in which they were located. LWPs with multiple offices were compared against the demographics of their primary region(s) of operation. Ontario-wide entities were compared to province-wide demographics.

LWPs were awarded points for each of the identified demographic traits (gender, ethnicity, Indigenous identity, disability, LGBTQ2+, Francophone background). Full points were given if an LWP's demographics were at or above the regional population benchmark (no additional points were awarded for being more representative). If LWPs had lower representation than their regional population, points were deducted proportionately to the LWP's deviation from the standard.

Each demographic trait was assigned equal importance and thus weighted equally.

4. How was the Inclusion Score calculated?

LSO Inclusion Questions were bucketed into five sub-metrics that are typically used by Diversio to assess experience in the workplace: Inclusive Culture, Unbiased Feedback, Access to Networks, Flexible Work Options, and Safe Work Environment. These metrics were developed through extensive research and consultation with subject matter experts, and are consistent with assessments Diversio has carried out in other sectors.

- Inclusive Culture refers to an environment where all employees can share their perspective regardless of their background or identity. Research shows that diverse employees often feel they need to compromise their authenticity to fit into company norms (Harvard Business Review)
- Unbiased feedback and Reviews refers to a review and promotion process that perceived as objective, fair and free from unconscious bias. For example, research shows that women, who are part of the non-dominant group, are 1.4 times more likely to receive critical, subjective feedback (Harvard Business Review)
- Access to Networks refers to all employees having a mentor and/or feeling that someone is invested in their growth and professional development. Research shows that equal access to mentors and sponsors boosts the number of ethnic minorities in management by 9-24% (Harvard Business Review)

Diversio Inc.
Private and confidential

- Flexible Working Options refers to a workplace that enables all employees to balance work and family care obligations. Research shows that women and other non-dominant employees (including New Canadians) are more likely to struggle when it comes to establishing sustainable a work-life balance (American Psychological Association)
- Safe Work Environment refers to a workplace that is free from sexual, physical and mental harassment. Research shows that 30% of minorities and 39% of women have witnessed or experienced harassment in the workplace (Financial Times, UN Women)

Respondents were categorized into either the “dominant” or “non-dominant” group according to their self-identified demographic profile. The dominant group within the LSO sample set was identified as white, heterosexual, Anglophone men without a disability. Respondents who identified as not sharing any of these traits were categorized into the non-dominant group.<sup>3</sup>

- Sub-metric scores were generated for each LWP based on the combined answers of all respondents
- The formulas used to create these scores implemented the 70/30 weighting of nondominant/dominant groups described above
- Once the ranking of each LWP was established, all Inclusion Scores were scaled to generate a meaningful, proportionate Index

5. How was the Commitment Score calculated?

The Commitment Score was calculated based on each LWPs self-reported implementation of diversity & inclusion programs and policies as well as licensee acknowledgement of this programming. Points were awarded to LWPs according to how many programs and policies they reported having implemented, as indicated on their LSO Self-Assessment Questionnaire, and licensee acknowledgement of this programming, as indicated in the Inclusion Questions.

Once the ranking of each LWP was established, all Commitment Scores were scaled to generate a meaningful, proportionate Index

<sup>3</sup> Respondents who provided “Prefer Not to Answer” responses were categorized into a separate Prefer Not to Answer (PNA) category.

C) CROSS-SECTOR COMPARISON

6. What is the state of inclusion in the finance, public and technology sectors? How do these compare to the legal profession?

Diversio has conducted broad-based diversity & inclusion assessments of six Canadian sectors: technology, financial services, asset management, the Ontario public service, and small- and medium-sized businesses.

A few observations from Diversio's proprietary benchmarking data:

- The Legal sector is less diverse than the technology sector when it comes to racialized minorities. Our benchmarking data of 100+ Canadian technology companies includes 36% self-identified racialized minorities, compared to 16% in the LSO dataset. The Legal sector is more gender diverse, with 49% of respondents identifying as female compared to 35% of technology sector employees.
- The Legal sector is significantly less diverse than the asset management sector when it comes to racialized minorities (16% v. 37%), individuals with a disability (3% v. 8%) and LGBTQ2+ (3% v. 14%)
- The Legal sector is roughly on-par with the technology sector when it comes to inclusion:

Table 1: Inclusion Comparison: Legal v. Technology Sectors

	Legal Sector	Technology Sector
Inclusive Culture	7.9	7.6
Unbiased Feedback & Reviews	7.7	7.3
Flexible Work Options	7.0	7.4
Access to Networks	6.5	7.0
Safe Work	8.4	8.7

- The Legal sector is more inclusive across each of the five Inclusion sub-metrics than the asset management sector

Access to Networks	6.5	5.6
Safe Work	8.4	6.9

D) RESPONSE RATES

7. What are the overall response rates?

Altogether, 192 LWPs met the threshold necessary to receive scores and be included in the Inclusion Index (25+ licensees, more than 10 responses to the 2018 Lawyer Annual Report).<sup>4</sup> 87.5% of these LWPs had a Diversity Response Rate (DRR) of at least 50% (i.e. self-identified demographic traits). 81.2% of LWPs had an Inclusion Response Rate (IRR) of at least 50% (i.e. Inclusion Questions).

The Average Diversity Response Rate (ADRR) across 192 LWPs was 78%, while the Average Inclusion Response Rate (AIRR) was 68%. The Overall Response Rate across LSO licensees was 80%. The Overall Response Rate is higher than ADRR and AIRR due large concentration of licensees within a subset of LWPs (i.e. over half of all licensees are employed by 30 biggest LWPs)

<sup>4</sup> The LSO provided 3 Files at the beginning of this project, the third of which was a listing of the number of licensees at each LWP. Discussions were had with the LSO to ensure understanding of the File and the process by which it was constructed. The figures in File 3 were used as the denominator. The numerator for this calculation was the sum of licensees from the Individual Record File tagged to or identifiable as working at a given LWP who also submitted a completed Annual Report. This included respondents who responded with at least 1 answer that was not "Prefer Not to Answer" or equivalent. The act of choosing a single affirmative response is sufficient evidence of answering the survey in good faith and is consistent with industry best practice.

Diversio Inc.
Private and confidential

Response rates were significantly higher for law firms (90% ADRR, 78% AIRR) than corporate legal departments (65% ADRR, 56% AIRR) and public organizations (61% ADRR, 54% AIRR).

Large LWPs (150+ licensees) tended to have higher response rates (82% ADRR, 72% AIRR) than medium LWPs (50-149 licensees, 72% ADRR, 63% AIRR) or small LWPs (<50 licensees, 79% ADRR, 69% AIRR).

NB: These response rates are significantly higher than typical employee engagement survey results, which average between 30% and 40%. Given the sensitive nature of the information being collected, employees are often hesitant to self-identify as belonging to a certain group or having certain experiences. This suggests that LSO is more trusted by lawyers/paralegals than their firms would be to collect this data without repercussion.

8. How does the voluntary nature of questions impact results from an analytics perspective?

According to Kiess & Bloomquist (1985), a threshold of 60% is “rule of thumb” to avoid bias by the most happy/unhappy respondents only. The American Journal of Pharmaceutical Education supports the 60% threshold (2008) as a benchmark for academically robust findings. For context, 40 LWPs had a DRR below 60%. 55 LWPs had an IRR below 60%.

9. What are the average response rates for other industries/sectors and other Diversio projects?

Average response rates tend to vary by organization size as well as whether data is being collected for the first time. Typically, smaller organizations (<50 people) have higher average response rates (80-90%) than large organizations (1,000+ people, 65-80%). The first time a survey is deployed, organizations tend to have a lower response rate (40-60%), as employees have concerns about anonymity and confidentiality of their information. Successive instances of surveying yield a higher response rate (70-90%) as employee trust grows and they see the process as an effective way to steer company culture and improve their experience. There is no significant difference in response rate by sector.

E) MISCELLANEOUS

Diversio Inc.
Private and confidential

10. Can Diversio provide more detail on how geographic location of an organization impacts results (particularly Diversity score)? Explain the level of specificity for each diversity dimension.

For most LWPs<sup>5</sup>, we used the region in which they operate (as indicated on their website) as their benchmark. If an LWP operates in more than one region, we used an average of these regions. The rationale for this decision is that the Inclusion Index is designed to incentivize each LWP to become more reflective of the market they serve.

Gender: Gender was categorized as either 1) men or 2) women and other genders. LWPs were compared against the gender demographic breakdown of the Census Economic Region(s) in which they operate. For context, every region had an equal or near-equal split.

Francophone: Francophone background was measured on a binary scale (yes/no). LWPs were compared against the linguistic demographic breakdown of the Census Economic Region(s) in which they operate. LWPs operating in Francophone-heavy regions, such as Ottawa, were held to a higher standard, reflecting the larger pool of Francophone lawyers from which to hire.

Indigenous, Ethnicity: Indigenous identification was measured on a binary scale (yes/no). Ethnicity was subdivided into 12 categories; respondents could indicate that they identified with one or more of these categories<sup>6</sup>. LWPs were compared against the ethnic demographic breakdown of the Census Economic Region(s) in which they operate. LWPs operating in more ethnically diverse regions, such as Toronto, were therefore expected to be more diverse to achieve a high score.

LGBTQ2+: LGBTQ2+ identity was measured on a binary scale (yes/no). There were two benchmarks used in this project: one for LWPs located in Toronto, and one for LWPs located outside of Toronto. The Toronto benchmark reflects the higher proportion of LGBTQ2+ individuals in the local community (estimated at 10%, compared to 5% outside of Toronto).

Disability: Presence of a disability was measured on a binary scale (yes/no). As no statistics on disability are available by region, we used the Statistics Canada nation-wide benchmark, finding that 20% of working-age Canadians (25-64 years old) have at least one disability. All LWPs (regardless of Economic <sup>5</sup> LWPs with a province-wide mandate (e.g. Department of Justice) were assigned the overall Ontario demographic rates as their baselines rather than any particular Census Economic Region(s), using the rationale that these organizations should reflect the province as a whole.

Region) were compared to this baseline with the assumption that persons with a disability are relatively consistently distributed across Canada

11. Can LWPs identify their problems based on results?

Yes. LWPs will be able to easily understand their opportunity areas from a Diversity, Inclusion, and Commitment perspective.

In addition, Diversio has taken further steps to provide tactical recommendations to LWPs based on their individual scores, free of charge. LWPs will also have the option to upgrade for more detailed analytics and customized recommendations, as well as access to an expert community (see attachment: Exhibit C: Diversio Dashboard)

12. Clarify the transition from diversity questions to inclusion questions. Who answered these questions?

Diversity questions are the questions answered by legal professionals in the Self-identification section of their Annual Reports. Inclusion questions were answered by legal professionals in the Inclusion Survey section of their Annual Reports. Commitment questions were answered by an LWP representative in the Self-Assessment and by legal professionals in the Inclusion Survey section of their Annual Reports

13. Is a heat map still a way to present the data publicly in an anonymized way?

We would propose an anonymized ranking as a way to publish results while maintaining LWP confidentiality.

14. Can Diversio speak to the notion that someone with more experience in EDI completed commitment questions and therefore could skew results?

We believe it is a fair assumption that LWPs would nominate their most experienced EDI representative to answer these questions. In the alternative, we believe that a responsible respondent would seek guidance from an experienced EDI colleague. Diversio also assumed that respondents answered honestly and did not embellish their programs and policies.

More importantly, the Commitment Score also factors in employee responses about the presence of programming at their LWP, as indicated in the Inclusion Questions. Firms that failed to submit a Self-

Diversio Inc.

Assessment were not therefore automatically penalized; rather, their Commitment Score reflects employees' reported experience of programming in their LWP.

To mitigate any risks associated with the Self-Assessment Diversio will include a section on the LWP Dashboard that will allow respondents to update their commitment data.

OTHER INDUSTRIES

15. What protocol have other industries used for releasing data? Who has implemented/endorsed Certification and how?

The Human Resources Professional Association, Ontario's HR industry association, chose to endorse Diversio Certification, provide access to Diversio services through its website, and deploy an industry survey to create a baseline report of diversity & inclusion within the HR profession.

The City of Toronto has publicly endorsed Diversio Certification, committed to getting itself Certified, plans to use the program widely throughout its processes.

The Business Development Bank of Canada has rolled out Diversio's technology to assess diversity & inclusion across its portfolio investments, rank companies based on performance, and provide supplementary assistance/recommendations to those companies at risk of developing a toxic culture.

Fintech Alliance, a U.K. government-backed platform for the Fintech industry, has formally endorsed Diversio Certification and provides access to Diversio's services through its website.

The Institutional Limited Partner Association, the global industry body for Asset Managers, chose to endorse Diversio as a tool for measuring progress from a Diversity & Inclusion perspective.

Women in Capital Markets, Canada's leading industry association dedicated to diversity in finance, chose to roll out Diversio's Inclusion Assessment to the six major Canadian banks (Big Five and HSBC) and 5 of its largest pension affiliates. They created an anonymous industry-wide report and delivered company-specific results privately to banks/pensions.

The Canadian Venture Capital Association and Diversity VC chose to endorse Diversio Certification and roll-out a voluntary Inclusion Project with its members. Members are encouraged to deploy Diversio's Inclusion Assessment and privately receive their results, with the option to publicize their involvement. They plan to promote early adopters who publish their results.

Diversio Inc.

Response Rates: LSO Annual Report Survey of Licensees

03/20/2020

A) DEMOGRAPHIC AND INCLUSION QUESTION RESPONSE RATES

Diversity questions relate to the demographics of the legal workplace, and Inclusion questions relate to the experiences of licensees within their workplaces. Diversity data was drawn from self-identification questions, while Inclusion data was drawn from a combination of self-identification questions (to identify the demographic profile of each respondent) and Inclusion Survey questions. Please refer to the LSO Guide Q&A for further explanation on this methodology.

For each category, we defined a ‘response’ as a survey where the licensee recorded at least one answer which was not ‘Prefer Not to Answer’. The tables below summarize our findings.

Please note that the ‘total’ figures are not exact. Due to the nature of the data, as discussed, some firms show response rates above 100% as a result of licensees who worked at multiple legal workplaces in the period.

The Average Diversity Response Rate (ADRR) across 192 LWPs was 78%, while the Average Inclusion Response Rate (AIRR) was 68%. The Overall Response Rate across LSO licensees was 80%. The Overall Response Rate is higher than ADRR and AIRR due large concentration of licensees within a subset of LWPs (i.e. over half of all licensees are employed by 30 biggest LWPs).

2) NUMBER AND PERCENTAGE OF RESPONDENTS BY DOMINANT VS. NONDOMINANT GROUP

To create the Diversity and Inclusion Scores for each LPW, Diversio first classified licensees into 'dominant' and 'nondominant' categories. The Nondominant category includes licensees who filled out the survey and self-identified as being at least one of the following: Indigenous, person with a disability, LGBTQ2+, woman, Francophone, or as a person of colour (POC). The Dominant category includes licensees who filled out the survey and did not identify themselves as belonging to an enumerated group. If a licensee recorded 'Prefer Not to Answer or equivalent to any of the five demographic categories, they were classified as PNA (Prefer Not to Answer) and were not considered in the dominant/nondominant calculations.

Please note that the 'total' figures are not exact. Due to the nature of the data, as discussed, some firms show response rates above 100% as a result of licensees who worked at multiple legal workplaces in the period.

What is the Inclusion Index?

The Law Society of Ontario partnered with Diversio to create an Inclusion Index which ranks all legal workplaces with more than 25 lawyers or paralegals. LSO collected data from lawyers and workplaces in the 2019 Annual Report, including demographic, experience, and programming data. Diversio applied its inclusion algorithms to generate an Inclusion Score and ranking for each workplace.

2018 Lawyer Annual Report

Section 2 – EQUALITY, DIVERSITY AND INCLUSION (EDI)

In 2017, in keeping with its commitment to promote equality and diversity in the legal professions and to enhance legal services provided by and for Indigenous, Francophone and equality-seeking communities, the Law Society began implementing the 13 recommendations of the Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Final Report, Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Professions, and the five strategies designed to address the systemic barriers faced by racialized and other equality-seeking licensees. The following describes actions required by licensees respecting two of the strategies: Accelerating Culture Shift and Measuring Progress.

Question 1: Strategy - Measuring Progress: Self-Identification Data*Recommendation 4

Since 2009, the Law Society has been collecting licensee demographic data on a voluntary basis to better understand demographic trends, to develop programs and initiatives within the mandate of the Law Society and to promote equality and diversity in the professions. The data has been reported in the aggregate in the annual publications, Statistical Snapshot of Lawyers in Ontario and Statistical Snapshot of Paralegals in Ontario (“Snapshots”). To access the yearly Snapshots from previous years, visit the Law Society’s website.

Providing self-identification data will continue to be voluntary each year. In addition to reporting on the legal professions in the aggregate, the Law Society will also provide legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees in Ontario with the self-identification data of their legal workplace. The individual licensees of the workplace will also be provided with a copy. This data will allow legal workplaces to compare their data with the aggregate demographic data gathered from the professions as a whole.

The Law Society will provide the data to legal workplaces in a manner that preserves the privacy and confidentiality of individual licensees.

Question 2: Strategy - Accelerating Culture Shift: Statement of Principles*Recommendation 3(1)

In its commitment to promote equality, diversity and inclusion within the legal professions, the Law Society encourages licensees to consider their individual roles in creating lasting change. Recommendation 3(1) requires licensees to commit to equality, diversity and inclusion by adopting and abiding by a Statement of Principles. The requirement does not create any obligation to profess any belief or to seek to persuade anyone about anything. The requirement will be satisfied by licensees acknowledging their obligation to take reasonable steps to cease or avoid conduct that creates and/or maintains barriers for racialized licensees or other equality-seeking groups. Licensees are not required to make their Statements of Principles public. They are just required to confirm annually that they have considered and implemented this requirement. The content of the Statement of Principles does not create or derogate from, but rather reflects, professional obligations. Accordingly, licensees are not required to disclose the content of their Statement of Principles to the Law Society but are only required to confirm its existence. The Law Society has created resources to assist licensees in completing this requirement. Refer to the Guide for links to online resources.

Question 5: Strategy - Measuring Progress: Inclusion Questions*Recommendation 5

The Law Society encourages licensees to voluntarily answer questions about their individual experiences of inclusion within their legal workplaces. These questions will be asked every four years and a summary of the information gathered will be provided to legal workplaces of at least 25 licensees in Ontario. The responses to these inclusion questions will help the Law Society to track trends over time and refine and develop programs and initiatives to address the challenges faced by racialized licensees and other equality-seeking groups. The

TAB 9.1.1

2018 Lawyer Annual Report

Law Society will provide the data to legal workplaces in a manner that preserves the privacy and confidentiality of individual licensees.

If you are not in a legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario or if you are not the Licensee Representative responsible for completing the equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment for your legal workplace, you may not be required to answer all parts of Questions 6 & 7.

Question 6: Strategy - Measuring Progress: Self-Assessment Questions

Recommendation 3(3)

The Law Society requires a Licensee Representative from each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to complete an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment for their legal workplace. The self-assessment will assist legal workplaces in discussing and reflecting on the current state of diversity and inclusion within their legal workplace, and will encourage legal workplaces to advance diversity and inclusion efforts. The information will also assist the Law Society in understanding the environments within legal workplaces, from the perspective of the legal workplace, and assisting licensees to overcome barriers they are experiencing.

These questions will be completed every two years by the Licensee Representative on behalf of the legal workplace.

Question 7: Strategy - Accelerating Culture Shift: Human Rights Diversity Policy

Recommendation 3(2)

The Law Society requires a Licensee Representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy for their legal workplace. The human rights/diversity policy is to address at the very least fair recruitment, retention and advancement of licensees within their legal workplace. Adopting this policy will encourage licensees to consider their collective roles in creating lasting change within their legal workplaces. The legal workplace's human rights/diversity policy is to be available to members of the professions and the public upon request.

The Law Society has created resources to assist licensees in completing this requirement. Refer to the Guide for links to online resources.

Strategy - Measuring Progress: Inclusion Index (Recommendation 6)

Every four years, the Law Society will develop and publish an inclusion index for each legal workplace of at least 25 or more licensees in Ontario. The inclusion index is a tool intended to advance the goals of equality, diversity and inclusion within the legal professions by demonstrating the progress of equality, diversity and inclusion within legal workplaces. The inclusion index will reflect the responses to the self-assessment and inclusion questions and the data collected from the self-identification questions.

The Law Society will ensure that privacy and confidentiality are preserved when collecting quantitative demographic data and qualitative inclusion data from licensees.

For additional information on any of topics outline above and the questions in Section 2, please visit the Law Society's Equality, Diversity and Inclusion webpage at LSO.ca/EDI.

Memorandum

To: Equity and Indigenous Advisory Committee (EIAC)
From: Promise Holmes Skinner, Strategic Policy Council, Indigenous Initiatives
Date: May 6, 2022
Re.: Indigenous Legal Issues Specialization - Certified Specialist Program (CSP)

---

Purpose

The purpose of this memo is to:

1. Inform the Committee of the recommendation of the Competence Task Force regarding the Certified Specialist Program and Indigenous Legal Issues Specialization;
2. Provide background on the above;
3. Inform the Committee of potential opportunities to enhance the program for its consideration.

Background

In August 2020, the Competence Task Force (Task Force) was struck. Its mandate is to review existing programs to assess their continued relevance and determine whether new programs and rules are required to ensure that the Law Society's competence framework is keeping pace with the evolution of legal services and regulation and that licensee competence is addressed at every stage of a licensee's career.

Recommendation of the Competence Task Force

The Task Force has completed its deliberations and is planning to bring a report to Convocation in May with several recommendations, including a recommendation regarding the Certified Specialist Program (CSP). The Task Force is recommending that the CSP should be eliminated except for the Indigenous Legal Issues specialization. All existing Certified Specialists would be able to retain and use their C.S. designation until they retire, cease practising or surrender their practising license with the Law Society. The Task Force motion proposes winding up the CSP by September 1, 2022.

However, the Task Force specifically "recognized that the Indigenous Legal Issues specialization is unique in that it certifies both substantive legal specialization and inter-cultural understanding. It is intended to enhance the level of service to Indigenous Peoples by providing a mechanism by which excellence in Indigenous legal matters is both identified and encouraged. For these reasons, it is interconnected with the Law Society's Indigenous Framework and commitments to reconciliation.

As such, any recommendations regarding the Indigenous Legal Issues specialization should be made by the Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee (EIAC), with the input of the Indigenous Advisory Group (IAG). To this end, the Task Force recommends retaining the Indigenous Legal Issues specialization in its current form until EIAC has had an opportunity to engage with IAG, review the specialization and determine what role it plays in the Law Society's Indigenous Framework and commitment to reconciliation."<sup>1</sup>

The IAG has been informed of the Task Force recommendation and plans to discuss the recommendation at its May meeting, which was originally scheduled for May 5 and is postponed to a date in May that follows EIAC's May 12th meeting.

Certified Specialist Program

The CSP recognizes lawyers who have met established standards of experience and knowledge requirements in one or more designated areas of law and have maintained exemplary standards of professional practice. The CSP also assists members of the public to identify lawyers who can meet their needs for specialist legal assistance. The Law Society does not offer a CSP for paralegals.

Indigenous Legal Issues Specialization

The Indigenous Legal Issues specialization comprises core requirements and three distinct, but related sub-specializations, each of which has its own set of experience, knowledge and skills requirements. The three sub-specializations are: Rights and Governance, Litigation and Advocacy, and Corporate and Commercial. They were developed in 2016 after significant consultations with Indigenous organizations and members of the Indigenous legal community and broader community. Further information regarding the consultation can be found at Tab 1.1 - Indigenous legal Issues Specialty, at pages 1-2.

The required skills for all sub-specializations include demonstration of the ability to properly articulate the Indigenous perspective and to effectively serve Indigenous clients. To this end, inter-cultural competencies have specifically been integrated into the standards. Applicants are required to submit a brief statement confirming that they have obtained a significant understanding of Indigenous cultures, perspectives and contexts. They must also submit a reference from an Indigenous community member as one of the four references required as part of the application process. See Tab 1.2 - Standards for Certification – Indigenous Legal Issues.

Next Steps and Opportunities

Assuming Convocation adopts the Task Force recommendation to wind up the CSP and maintain the Indigenous Legal Issues Specialization, the program will continue to accept applications of the Indigenous Legal Issues Specialization until otherwise determined by Convocation on the recommendation of EIAC. The CSP will be wound up with respect to all other designations as of September 1, 2022. The end date for the CSP as a whole does not dictate the end date of the Indigenous Legal Issues Specialization designation.

While the Indigenous Legal Issues Specialization is preserved and continues in its current form, discussions with EIAC and IAG are an opportunity to explore the benefits of the current design and uncover areas for adjustment and opportunities for enhancement.

There is an opportunity to incentivize licensees to achieve higher learning by completing the program; exploring the impact of the program and developing programs that meet the standards set out by the Truth and Reconciliation Commission; and promote trust and relationship-building between licensees and the public, and in particular with Indigenous individuals and communities. Consultation and engagement with the broader Indigenous and legal communities, after seeking advice from this committee and IAG, will allow opportunities to speak with community members to identify opportunities for adjustment, that may include:

- Re-situating the designation from under the CSP to the Indigenous Framework – relocating the information about the designation on the Law Society website so that it is included in the Indigenous Initiatives page; making EIAC the committee with policy oversight of the program.
- Making the designation more accessible – streamlining the initial application process, which some licensees consider onerous; re-evaluating the fee structure, which is an initial fee of $400 plus HST and an annual program fee of $375 plus HST, due on January 31 of each year.
- Marketing – undertaking targeted communications about the designation to attract more applicants and is better understood by potential clients.

In the longer term, the Committee may want to consider revising the designation to become a more formative process, setting targets to achieve a certain level of competence, rather than assessing and acknowledging competence that has been achieved.

Moving toward cultural competence for law society staff, benchers and all licensees remains a goal for the Law Society and this is one way to move directly toward that goal.

TAB 1.1

INFORMATION

INDIGENOUS LEGAL ISSUES SPECIALTY

Issue for Information

2. Pursuant to By-Law 15 (Certified Specialist Program) the Certified Specialist Board has certain mandated functions, one of which is to determine the areas of law in respect of which licensees may be certified as specialists. It does not require approval from the Committee or Convocation. By-Law 15 can be accessed at <http://www.lsuc.on.ca/WorkArea/DownloadAsset.aspx?id=2147485815>.
3. In May 2013 the Board approved the development of a new certified specialty in Aboriginal Law. Although not required to do so within the By-law, it sought the approval of the PD&C Committee for the proposal as interest in the specialty was widespread. The Law Society had received 59 letters of endorsement from the profession in support of development of the specialty.
4. The development of the standards for the specialty has followed a rigorous process that included research, consultation, development, review and validation. The Board approved the final standards on May 18, 2016, which are provided here at TAB 11.1.1: Indigenous Legal Issues Specialty Standards. The Certified Specialist Program Administrative Policies referred to in the Standards are set out at TAB 11.1.2: CSP Admin. Policies.
5. The Standards are provided to Convocation for its information.

Key Issues and Considerations

6. Beginning in the spring of 2014, PD&C department team members facilitated a series of working group meetings with 16 subject matter expert practitioners in Indigenous Legal Issues from a variety of geographical areas, client perspectives and practice areas to create, review and validate the Standards. Two working groups met separately to iteratively review, amend and comment on the standards over a two-year period.
7. The focus of the working groups throughout the process has been to ensure the standards set out the requisite knowledge, skills and professional requirements for demonstration of elevated competence in this area of practice, in accordance with the Certified Specialist Program mandate.
8. As part of the final validation of the Standards, in consultation with the Law Society's Equity Initiatives Department, input was sought from the following relevant professional groups and client groups that support provision of legal services in the Indigenous Legal Issues area, many of whom provided assistance and thoughtful comment:

- Canadian Bar Association – Aboriginal Law Section
  - Ontario Bar Association - Aboriginal Law Section
  - Indigenous Bar Association
  - Legal Aid Ontario
  - Chiefs of Ontario
  - Métis Nation of Ontario
  - Ontario Federation of Indigenous Friendship Centres
  - Ontario Native Women's Association
  - Tungasuvvingat Inuit
9. The input received confirmed that the standards are appropriate and that lawyers who achieve the designation will be well qualified to serve the public and, particularly, to serve the legal needs of Indigenous individuals, communities, nations and Peoples.
  10. In developing the specialty area it became clear that the name should reflect the breadth of the practice area. Accordingly, it was determined that the new specialty area is more appropriately named Indigenous Legal Issues. The specialty comprises core requirements and three distinct, but related subspecialties that each has its own set of experience, knowledge and skills requirements. The three subspecialties are: Rights and Governance, Litigation and Advocacy, and Corporate and Commercial.
  11. The required skills for all subspecialties include demonstration of the ability to properly articulate the Indigenous perspective and to effectively serve Indigenous clients. To this end, inter-cultural competencies have specifically been integrated into the Standards. Applicants are required to submit a brief statement confirming that they have obtained a significant understanding of Indigenous cultures, perspectives and contexts. They must also submit a reference from an Indigenous Community Member as one of the four references required as part of the application process.
  12. The next steps in the process, which are underway, involve implementation, which will include program promotion to make the profession aware of the new area of specialization for the summer of 2016. Once there is an initial pool of certified specialists in Indigenous Legal Issues, the Board will be seeking a new member from that specialty area to ensure appropriate representation at the program governance level.
  13. The Certified Specialist Program assists lawyers not yet eligible to become certified to acquire the requisite skills and knowledge to qualify for certification as a specialist in a given practice area. To that end each specialty has,
    - a. learning criteria setting out required procedural and substantive knowledge and skills at the essential, intermediate and advanced levels of activity; and
    - b. detailed experience requirements for certification used to assess a lawyer's eligibility for certification.
  14. The learning criteria for the Indigenous Legal Issues Specialty are in the process of being developed in accordance with the standards and adult learning best practices.

15. As in the case of all applicants, applicants for certification as a specialist in Indigenous Legal Issues will pay an initial application fee of $400 plus HST. Currently, the annual program fee is $375 plus HST, due on January 31 of each year.
16. The Certified Specialist Program is a cost recovery program.

Memorandum

To: Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee
From: Ada Maxwell-Alleyne, Strategic Policy Counsel
Date: May 12, 2022
Re.: For Discussion: Peer Review

---

Purpose

The Committee is asked to:

1. Discuss findings of the peer review of the Working Together for Change: Strategies to Address Issues of Systemic Racism in the Legal Profession Report (Challenges Report) and the Inclusion Index that were presented at the May 3rd EIAC meeting.

Peer Review Findings

The notes from the peer reviewers' May 3rd presentation to EIAC are attached at Tab 2.1.

Notes from Presentation from Peer Reviewers

Equity and Indigenous Affairs Meeting

May 3, 2022, from 1:00pm to 3:00pm

Welcome/Introduction from Chair Dianne Corbiere

- The Peer Review Panel will present their findings of the Challenges Report peer review. The peer review was introduced at the November 2021 EIAC meeting.
- The peer review was motivated by several factors.
  - o First, the Law Society has not evaluated the Challenges Report project, its recommendations or its implementation to assess how effective our approach is in achieving the Law Society's goal of reducing barriers faced by racialized and Indigenous licensees.
  - o Second, project evaluations are generally seen as standard best practice when an institution undertakes a major initiative.
  - o Third, before moving forward with outstanding Challenges Report recommendations developed in 2016, it seemed appropriate that the Law Society obtain expert advice on the relevance of those recommendations in the 2022 environment.
- I'd like to provide some context for today's presentations. There are three broad topics the reviewers will touch on today:
  - o First, the reviewers have been asked to comment on aspects of the Challenges Report research and recommendations that could have the most impact in reducing barriers faced by racialized and Indigenous licensees. In order to assess this, the reviewers looked at the data methodology used in collecting the information that generated the Challenges Report. Specifically, the reviewers looked at the Stratcom Report and they will talk about their observations in relation to that report.
  - o Second, the reviewers were asked to comment on the Inclusion Index. The Inclusion Index ranks legal workplaces based on each workplace's diversity, inclusion and commitment to equity. As a reminder, the consulting firm Diversio used Law Society demographic information from the 2018 Annual Report to generate the Inclusion Index. We asked the reviewers whether the Inclusion Index we currently have is a useful tool to advance our EDI objectives. In order to comment on the Inclusion Index, the reviewers considered Diversio's methodology. They will report on this today. You have the Inclusion Index in your materials for reference. It has not been released publicly and it is recommended that the Index not be released. The reasons for this will be outlined by the reviewers in their presentations.
  - o The third topic for today: the review is intended to provide recommendations to EIAC and the Law Society on how we can enhance our EDI strategy through improved research. The reviewers will provide insight on this as well. Today, you will receive an overview from each expert outlining their own evaluations and observations in relation to these topics.

- While we had hoped to have written materials before the Committee for today's meeting, one of our reviewers, Scot Wortley had very difficult personal circumstances that made it impossible for him to complete his report for today despite his best efforts. Even though the Committee does not have written materials yet, I believe it is beneficial for you to hear from the reviewers today to understand their findings.
- The Committee will have time to ask the reviewers questions following the presentations. I ask that during the time our guests are here, we ask questions about the evaluations they present today.
- Committee members will have an opportunity to exchange observations and reactions to the findings after today at our next EIAC meeting on May 12th.
- On that note, my last comment before turning to the presentations is on the next steps following this meeting.
  - o In the coming weeks, all three peer reviewers will have had the chance to complete their work and the final review will be shared with Committee members.
  - o After the Committee considers the final review, we can discuss the next steps and have a discussion of the recommendation presented in the memo at Tab 1.
- Now, I'd like to invite the reviewers to begin their presentations. They will be present for the whole session. If we want them to come back another time, we will have to ask for their permission.
- The reviewers' bios are in the November EIAC materials.
  - o Michael Ornstein is an Associate Professor of Sociology at York University and has a great deal of experience in the development, design and execution of large-scale research projects.
  - o Sujitha Ratnasingham is the Director of Strategic Partnerships and the Operational Lead of the Indigenous Portfolio at the Institute for Clinical Evaluative Sciences. Sujitha brings expertise in integrating data to develop innovative research.
  - o Scot Wortley is a Professor at the Centre of Criminology and Sociolegal Studies at the University of Toronto. Scot brings expertise in leveraging data to understand and address issues of systemic discrimination within large systems.

1. Professor Michael Ornstein's Presentation

Stratcom Report

- The report begins with qualitative research including 27 key informant interviews and information received from focus groups.
- The intention of this kind of research is not to provide a representative sample, but to elucidate theoretical and policy issues. I think they were successful.

- I will read one key informant comment: “Racialization is a constant persistent factor affecting students and young licensees during their entry to practice and opportunities for career advancement. This is true in all types of practice environments. Racialization presents numerous challenges that operate in subtle ways reflecting their systemic character and may be amplified by an individual’s specific lifestyle, socioeconomic status, age, national origin, and educational pedigree.”
- The focus group participants testified eloquently to the pervasive impact of racialization. I think it’s important that they tied racism to other experiences of discrimination.
- There was a survey that followed. It took a traditional kind of mixed-method approach that is common in the social sciences. The qualitative research was used as a basis for developing a lengthy survey. There was a survey of all licensees that asked about their career, disadvantages in hiring, the impact of racialization, policies to address racism, and risks of complaints against racialized licensees.
- The problem was that the survey response rate was about 7% -- about 11% for non-white licensees and 5.5% for white licensees. In my view, it is unlikely, though we have no way of knowing, whether the survey results represented all licensees.
- There was a further problem. Licensees were asked to identify if they were racialized or not and were given an academic definition of ‘racialization’. This may not have worked in this context.
- This report did not differentiate between Indigenous and Black licensees, lawyers and paralegals, and did not address the situation of the extremely underrepresented Hispanic, Filipino or Southeast Asian licensees. It did not consider intersections with gender. It was a product of its time.
- The consequence of the report...it is water under the bridge.
- There is no point in re-analyzing the data because it is outdated. It is almost 10 years old.

Diversio’s Indices and the Inclusion Index

- The core of Diversio’s work is to develop three indices and to make them a single measure of equity.
- The recommendations that resulted from this work are almost exactly what Diversio did. There is an uncanny resemblance between what the recommendations said and what Diversio did.
- The first index is an index of commitment. It is based on workplace programming that is reported by a knowledgeable informant at each workplace. It combines the survey-based measure of licensees’ knowledge of these programs. This makes sense - if you have programs that the licensees don’t know about, you can’t say they have an impact on the environment.
- Diversity is measured by combining the employment of female, racialized, Indigenous, LGBTQ2+, Francophone licensees, and licensees with disabilities and comparing it to various norms.

- Inclusion is a survey-based measure of the licensees' view of equity.
- With respect to the Inclusion Index, you have the same issue as Stratcom. In many workplaces, the inclusion survey had an unacceptably low response rate. In some of the highest-rated workplaces, the response rate was below 20%. Response rates were much lower in legal workplaces outside of law firms.
- Diversio's index is compromised by the exclusion of responses from licensees who did not answer the question about whether they were racialized. This goes back to Stratcom's issue of self-identification and the complex nature of racialization. What it points to is that measuring attitudes toward equity through surveys in individual workplaces is problematic.
- The diversity data collected in the Annual Report is what I use to develop the Snapshots. The response rate is good. What Diversio did is that it combined female, racialized, and the other groups into a single measure of diversity.
- These might not be the same thing – there is an assumption. You can see this in Stratcom's work as well. There is a single kind of polarization -- there is white/straight/man, and then everyone else.
- The problem is that it doesn't deal with the unique situation of being male or female, it doesn't deal with disability, which is an enormously neglected aspect of equity, etc. The problem is that there is a measure based on these aspects of equity that might be correlated or might not.
- Diversio could have tested this. The data is there. The question about whether there are more racialized licensees in a workplace that has more women is not that difficult of an empirical problem. But instead, they simply assumed this.
- If you think about the Francophone dimension, a lot of Francophone licensees are in Ottawa. It is a largely regional phenomenon, and a lot are employed by the government.
- The idea that you should throw all these things in means that you cannot develop diversified policies and you are making assumptions about how these organizations work.

Overall Inclusion Index

- The Inclusion Index adds the three measures together. Diversio provided numbers for each of these measures. I took them off their spreadsheets and correlated them and found that there is no relationship between progressive policies and whether licensees have positive views of equity.
- Policies may be seen as rhetorical or may be seen as creating a more critical environment. The basic point is there is no relationship. There is a weak relationship between workplaces with greater diversity and more negative workplace cultures. I don't want to overemphasize this; it is a very weak relationship. There is also a small positive relationship between commitment and diversity.

- When you think about creating an index, the general idea is that there are like things that are combined to give a general picture. If these aspects of equity in the workplace are unrelated, why does it make sense to create a single index?

Recommendations of the Challenges Report

Recommendation 3 - The Adoption of Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Principles and Practices

- This recommendation talks about developing policies within workplaces. This makes sense. It suggests that each workplace should provide an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment and report it to the LSO. If it goes to LSO and isn't reported, what's the point?
- It also encourages legal workplaces to conduct their own inclusion surveys. This is problematic. In small workplaces, there will be issues about knowing who completed the survey.

Recommendation 4 - Measuring Progress through Quantitative Analysis

- The question here is at the level of the workplace, how wise is this?
- The Annual Report self-identification is confidential. Let's say you have 25 employees and one or two people who identify with the rarer categories. This turns a lens on how individuals are answering. There may be a discrepancy in the number of visible minorities reported to the LSO.
- This is valuable data, but we need to think about its implications in the workplace.

Recommendation 5 - Measuring Progress through Qualitative Analysis

- This recommendation speaks to a voluntary inclusion survey of workplaces. I talked about this before. It raises privacy concerns. In many workplaces, the survey is not going to produce an acceptable response rate.

Recommendation 6 – Inclusion Index

- Is the Inclusion Index a valid measure of progress and equity? If there isn't a valid single measure, why focus on it?

Recommendation 7 – Repeat Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees Project Inclusion Survey

- This recommendation says that every four years, the LSO will conduct an inclusion survey. I agree with this. A key element of equity is that it isn't just numbers. Culture and attitude are really important, and they can be measured in surveys. If you have a large enough sample, you can look at individual groups. But you need to obtain an acceptable response rate.
- I propose the following modification. Instead of a survey every four years, every two years instead of surveying everyone, conduct a large sample survey addressing equity issues and other concerns such as quality of life, working conditions, hours, satisfaction, key career decisions, etc. These all have important equity dimensions but also important aspects of the well-being of the entire profession.

Future Research on Equity

- At present, gender is measured in the snapshots from administrative data where there is a binary male and female division. Following the 2021 census, the Annual Report should have questions asking for sex at birth and gender and retain the question about sexual orientation.
- Racialization is tied up with immigration. It is theoretically different than immigration, but it's tied up in it. To understand the impact of racialization in the profession, we should try to measure immigration. The Annual Report should ask a question about the place of birth, year of settlement, and place of education. This only needs to be asked once.
- The Annual Report has a single question of disability which is not in keeping with contemporary standards. If the LSO is concerned about disability, you need to do a lot more.
- The progression to equity partnership in firms is a vital aspect of inequality and there is relatively little research on that. This research should be done.
- A key aspect of equity is income. There are no measures of income. This is not easy to do. I got into this in more detail in my report.
- Finally, I want to point out the difference between lawyers and paralegals. The Snapshots show that over 50% of paralegal licensees are not currently practising. The LSO needs to look into that.

2. Sujitha Ratnasingham's Presentation

Personal Background

- I am from a settler family who emigrated from Sri Lanka. I grew up in Nigeria and moved to Toronto at the age of 7.
- I did an undergraduate degree in Human Biology and a master's degree in Epidemiology at UofT. I have worked in public health at the city, provincial and global level at the WHO for the past 20 years.
- In my current role, I co-lead the EDI portfolio.
- These experiences give me a unique perspective from a personal and professional lens.
- When I started the process of assessing the work, I initially put on my research hat and took out the context of the subject matter. I initially wrote a very different assessment than what I will be presenting today. My analysis gave me a result that did not sit well with me. I really reflected on it, and I believe we have to consider the topic when looking at the tools we are examining.

Data Collection Tools

Key Informant Interviews

- There were qualitative in-depth interviews with those who are knowledgeable about these issues. The interviews allow us to collect rich data in a relatively easy, inexpensive way. It provides an opportunity to ask clarifying questions and build and strengthen relationships with important stakeholders and raise awareness about the study at hand.
- Highlights of these particular interviews:
  - o consultation with experts in the field,
  - o anonymous (best practice as it makes informants more comfortable),
  - o part of a mixed model approach – this contributes to the credibility of the findings.
- There were some challenges: selection of key informants was narrow (not diverse enough; perspectives sought were not sufficiently broad) and lack of clarity regarding the methodology and interviews. Overall, I would consider this phase of data collection valid.

Survey

- It is called a survey, but it is a census of population of lawyers and paralegals. A census of a population of interest.
- Highlights of survey:
  - o the number of people who completed it was over 3000; this is larger than a typical random sample,
  - o we may not know how the results apply to those not surveyed, they do represent the lived response of those who did answer,
  - o it was part of the mixed model approach,
  - o it was available in French and English.
- Challenges of survey:
  - o low response rate impacts generalizability of findings. Typically, when there are low response rates, we try and understand why people did not complete the survey. One of the challenges here is that because it was anonymous, we won't know why people did not complete the survey so we can't determine the issues or biases that exist.
  - o Topic of survey was very sensitive so there could be reasons why people did not want to complete the survey: there may have been past bad experiences, or they may not have felt strongly about the issues. That being said, we should not make assumptions about the reasons for non-participation because of the lack of data.
  - o Some of the wording of the questions was not aligned with Stats Canada language. It would be helpful to align them for future surveys so there is a comparator group.

- The term racialized – it's commonly used now and is the more academic term, there is potential for misunderstanding, and we saw some findings that support the misunderstanding.
- It is also a long survey which may have impacted the completion rate, so it may be beneficial to shorten the survey.
- No testing of statistical significance. When we are comparing the racialized and non-racialized respondents and their answers, although we may note differences, it is challenging to know if they are of statistical significance.

Focus Groups

- Focus groups of lawyers and paralegals in good standing that identified as racialized.
- They did try to recruit across Ontario.
- One of the challenges was that it was conducted in major cities which could have made it difficult for those in rural areas who may have different experiences to participate.
- There was limited information about the analytic methods used to interpret the focus group data.

Inclusion Index

- Inclusion indices are used in other sectors, especially in the EDI space with respect to organizations because it allows benchmarking with other organizations in the industry. It also allows us to look at changes over time and across other sectors.
- With this index, the demographic, inclusion and self-assessment questions were adequate with opportunities for improvement.
- There was lack of information about the methodology underlying the calculation of the index. For example, the determination of weighting 25% for demographics, 25% for commitment and 50% for inclusivity – it was not clear how they assigned the weighting.
- In addition, they standardized different attributes against different standard populations which is not the typical method – you try to standardize against the same population with different attributes. One of the attributes was standardized against a proprietary population which speaks to the lack of transparency and trust around the Index.
- In the future, the scope could be expanded to include other classes or equity groups – religions, different types of disabilities, and intersectionality.
- Indigenous is treated as one demographic group and although this is a small group, it is still important to break down First Nations, Metis, Inuit and urban Indigenous to understand the differences and experiences of those populations.

Implementation of Recommendations

- I thought about whether the recommendations naturally fall into categories. They do fall into four broad categories: adoption of principles and policies, education for licensees, support for racialized licensees, and evaluation of progress.

- Most of the recommendations are supported by findings in the various data collection tools.
- The recommendations are in line with most sectors in terms of incorporating and addressing EDI in the workplace. The recommendations are not out of left field – this would be expected in most sectors.
- There are a couple of recommendations the Law Society may want to consider deferring or pausing:
  - o Progressive compliance measures – there is a place for this but it is not in the early stages of implementing EDI initiatives. The LSO is trying to educate and build an understanding of the issues faced by equity seeking groups in the profession and moving forward with a punitive approach prior to education does not support the equity goals of the LSO.
  - o Inclusion Index: because there are many unknowns, there may be limited buy-in using the Diversio dashboard. There may be more value in providing aggregate data itself.

Future Work

- Continue to use mixed models for future data collection – this enables us to look at attribution factors and contribution factors.
  - o Attribution factors are things you know through prior research leads to something, for example A leads to B.
  - o Contribution factors provide a deeper understanding of the context of why A and B may be related.
- Expand the scope to consider other equity seeking groups and intersectionality.
- Future surveys should use a targeted sampling strategy to reduce the number of surveys, reduce costs, improve generalizability. This could involve a short survey for the entire study population and a detailed survey for a much smaller group.
- Strategies to improve the response and completion rate should be employed. This includes notifying participants, publicizing the survey, careful survey design, etc.
- Any bias should be reported in a transparent fashion. There should be an attempt to understand any non-response.
- Use a more nuanced word than ‘racialized’.
- Unless respondents think they have been heard in the past and their concerns were addressed in a meaningful way, there may be challenges in building trust when rolling out a second survey or focus groups. We often hear from partners who work in the EDI space that it is unethical to repeatedly spend funds to measure the issue that we already know exists when the funds can be used to find a solution.

Conclusions

- The data from the key informant interviews, survey and focus groups support the recommendations.

- The EDI work undertaken by the LSO and the Challenges faced by Racialized Licensees Working Group are aligned with the best practices in approaching EDI work in organizations.
- There are challenges with aspects of the data collection tools but this does not warrant dismissal of the findings or abandoning the recommendations. The racialized respondents have shared their negative and harmful experiences – the LSO is in a unique position to support these licensees and to mitigate risks for other racialized licensees from facing the same challenges.

3. Scot Wortley's Presentation

Personal Background

- I am happy to come back and present after I have completed my report.
- I have 25 years of experience working on surveys designed to address issues relating to youth crime and victimization but also perceptions and experiences of racialized people in the justice system. Many of the surveys have been published in peer review journals.
- One survey was conducted as part of an inquiry into racial bias with respect to street checks. The survey included analysis of 11 years of police data into street checks and numerous consultations with Nova Scotia's African Canadian community.
- I agree with many of the points made by my two colleagues.

Stratcom Report

- There is valuable information that comes from the survey but there are distinct weaknesses and challenges. All social science research has its strengths and weaknesses.
- Pros of the study:
  - Quantitative and qualitative mixed methods approach was used. It is important to note that the quantitative information in the survey is highly consistent with the qualitative information derived from the interviews and focus groups.
  - The survey benefits from a large sample size.
  - There were a variety of questions asked, addressing a number of different issues but this could also be a potential weakness.
  - A large proportion of the white respondents also agreed that there were issues with respect to race and bias in the legal profession – these perceptions were not isolated to racialized licensees.
  - Valuable contribution in terms of identifying and raising the issues facing the legal professions in Ontario.
  - It justifies a further focused study, evaluation and action.
- Weaknesses of the study:
  - Although the study represents a large sample (the survey represents 10% of racialized lawyers and 5% of white lawyers), the issue of randomization and the low response rate raises concerns about whether those who did not respond to

- the survey have systematically different views or experiences than those who answered the surveys.
- 40% of the individuals who accessed the survey did not complete it – this is an issue
    - We don't know if they started the survey and did not complete it or they looked at the survey and decided not to do it.
    - Increasing the response rate is imperative and understanding why people are not responding is very important.
    - One critic assumed that the vast majority of those who did not respond do not think that racism is an issue or doesn't exist – I would argue that any individuals who have those views would want to participate in a survey like this to make their views known.
    - Lots of reasons why people don't respond to surveys – timing, time constraints, rejecting the issue as important, etc.
  - Lack of transparency with the write-up of surveys. The response rate wasn't clearly reported.
  - A major issue is the use of the term 'racialization' and what that means – the study needs to be disaggregated by different racial groups.
    - It needs to address Black and Indigenous groups compared to other racialized groups compared to experiences of a white population – this is a major weakness.
    - There is a lot of evidence to suggest that Black and Indigenous peoples have radically different experiences than other racialized groups. If you break it down into smaller groups, you can see huge racial disparities.
    - There is a possibility to reanalyze the data – it looks like the data is there and racial identification exists in the survey, but it was not analyzed or reported in a transparent fashion.
  - No statistical significance at bi-variant or multi-variant level; no multi-variant analysis. I think we observed some major racial differences and experiences, but to what extent were those impacted by race or were there other factors that could explain some of those racial disparities? There is a need to identify more clearly some of the systemic factors that racialized communities face. Things like career stage, school, practice areas, gender, and age. There are so many different variables that could impact experiences that were not controlled for and could have been.
  - The length of the survey may have been related to respondent fatigue -- shorter survey would be better.

Diversio's Inclusion Index

- The methodology was not transparent. I read through it many times but did not find it to be transparent.

- It comes across as elegant and user friendly and easy to interpret but I don't think it would pass an academic peer review journal if it was presented as a new methodology to examine the inclusivity of various law firms.
- Some distinct lack of detail – for example, how was the weighting of 25%, 25% and 50% determined? It was really just mentioned without discussion on how this weighting system was developed.
- Diversity measure – I had some concerns with relying exclusively on geographical benchmarking – the diversity of the law firm was compared to the diversity of the geographic region of the firm. This assumes those who work in the firm live in that region. Also makes assumptions about the pool of applicants who were to be hired – I assume this varies drastically based on the type of practice of law and region. This might be an additional benchmarking technique that can be used to ensure the measures.
- For example, in my department we want to hire more Indigenous faculty but there are so few Indigenous faculty available right now. Would my department be ranked low despite our efforts to hire Indigenous faculty?

Future Research

- This should be a biannual survey – one of the problems with a survey every 4-5 years is that things change, and the data becomes outdated quickly. I have seen more changes to diversity issues in the justice sector in the past two years than I have in the last 25 years.
- These types of surveys are necessary in terms of evaluation but also for accountability. When they are out there and are talked about and transparency exists, it produces a level of accountability and encourages change.
- The other problem I had with the inclusivity survey was the potential of discomfort for those who reside or work in small law firms. If they complain on a survey, they can be easily identified. If you were breaking down the numbers into a unit the size of a 25-person law firm, you could be identified – everyone will know who the person is – this changes the responses and raises privacy concerns.
- The Index can be workable as a measure of EDI and can be re-evaluated, but not with the data that we have now.

4. Committee Questions and Answers

- Dianne Corbiere: We are going to consider the final review and the recommendations of the peer reviews and then we can discuss our next steps.
  - o Transparent was said a lot so to be transparent, I, as the chair of EIAC, had a preliminary meeting with staff and the Treasurer and CEO. We got an oral update from staff on what we would hear today.
  - o One of the recommendations that we heard from all three is that the current Inclusion Index should not be released – this is supported by the CEO, myself, and the Treasurer. That will be the discussion we will be having over the coming months.

Question from Megan Shortreed: I understand the issues of the Inclusion Index. Is there some value in providing some of the underlying data to individual firms in an anonymous or aggregate basis so they can see how they are doing and continue their equity work? Or any other raw data? Is there a possibility if confidentiality could be protected of getting information to the law firms on a private basis so they can see how they are doing?

- Scot Wortley: I have concerns about that. I would not do it without getting the permission of respondents for ethical concerns. Depending on the composition of the law firm, individuals can be easily identified when there is a small firm. If there are two racialized licensees in a firm who have had a negative experience and then you communicate that to the firm, will they know immediately who is being discussed and could that impact the work environment?
  - o At the aggregate level, saying these were the responses in this type of law firm, organizations, etc. that might go further with respect to maintaining confidentiality.
  - o I am reminded of how contentious these surveys and investigations of these types of issues can be. I am reminded of a survey I was involved in many years ago that looked at the views and experiences of racialized vs white police officers in the TPS. There was a front-page Toronto Sun piece from the police union demanding that all officers burn them as a show of solidarity. That is an extreme example.
  - o Does this also affect the willingness of racialized respondents to provide information because they will be labelled as a problem?
- Michael Ornstein: We have to exercise caution for smaller firms. The survey data in many firms, including those from large firms, had a relatively low response rate. It is hard to argue the effect of this. There aren't that many large employers. The large workplaces are the big law firms and there are some government organizations.
  - o Maybe you could provide some data but you need to think about individual pieces of data. The commitment information that Diversio collected is a catalogue of policies. This should be known in a workplace and I don't know why it would need to be disseminated.
  - o The inclusion survey has too many problems. Issues with response rates.
  - o Regarding the demographic data, I'm just not sure how this would be useful. I would need to think about it.
- Sujitha Ratnasingham: My initial issue is there might be something that can be shared, but a few caveats. Confidentiality needs to be considered. What is the risk of reidentification? It's not just using that information, but can you use that with other available information to identify an individual?

- When the response rates are low, there should be a statement around interpreting with caution.
- If you roll it up high enough it may lose value but there may be something of value there if there is transparency of what has been collected, but privacy is the first consideration.

Question from Alexander Wilkes: This question is trying to pick your brain for my own understanding. Professor Ornstein, you made a comment about useful data. That got me thinking about other discussions about NCA lawyers and data we want to collect. There is lots of implications of that data collection, what would we glean from it and what would be taken away from it by other people. My question is with regard to the current project -- with how many variables there are and can be considered, what variables should we be looking for as a regulator and what data should we be collecting at stage one? And then at stage two, how do we weigh that data and move forward from an equity standpoint?

- Scot Wortley: There are two questions -- there are outcome or dependent variables -- what experiences and outcomes you want to document -- and a list of independent variables that might impact that.
  - A lot of independent variables have already been mentioned. I strongly believe one of the biggest weaknesses was clumping of racialized and non-racialized people. You lose a lot of variation in experiences by doing that. Gender, age, being foreign trained, and what law school you come from will impact your placement and promotional activities. The type of law, language, disability issues, etc.
  - The problem is finding the perfect mix because the more information you ask, the longer the survey becomes and the more likely you will face respondent fatigue.
  - An important issue that was raised was not only immigration status, but how long you have been in the country. Some of the recent surveys we have done suggest there is a big difference between those who immigrate as adults and those who immigrate as children. Often surveys will only ask if you moved to Canada instead of looking at migration experience.
- Michael Ornstein: I think what you need to think about is what a model of licensee careers looks like. I think area of practice is hugely important and so are initial jobs -- they shape entire careers.
  - In sociology, we have gone from the idea of aging to the idea that there are distinct trajectories of peoples' careers. There are different caveats for women.

We know that many women leave firms to go to government, education and in house jobs at a certain point.

- To get a better grasp of equity and inequity within the profession, you need to think not about the cross-sections but of the way in which careers change over time. Is it in the law society's purview to think about who goes to law school? There is a lot of selection before we get to any licensees.
  - There is a whole framework and stratification framework for thinking about this. We need an equity lens that looks at divisive changes in individuals' careers and how that is impacted by ableism, racialization, etc.
  - There is a single question about disability. The question doesn't distinguish between whether the licensee had a disability at the time they began their career or if the disability developed once their career was launched. It doesn't differentiate between types of disabilities.
  - It is not enough to say what should we know. It needs to be motivated by the understanding of the nature of careers and of inequities at the decisive points when changes are made.
  - A critical one would be the first job – if you don't have one at a large law firm, your chances of becoming a partner at a large firm are small. That very early choice – which is an aspect of inequality – has a huge impact.
- Sujitha Ratnasingham: I agree with Scot and Michael.
- You need to look at the trajectory of someone's career. You need to start by looking at the entrance in to law school.
  - We are trying to recruit Indigenous scientists within our research institute. If you don't have individuals within that quantitative research, you aren't going to find people so how do you create those pathways?
  - Looking at the trajectory starting quite early to the point of making partner is really important. The framework can guide what your questions are which can then inform the data you collect. If you follow that structure, that is really helpful instead of just asking a lot of questions and hoping that you get the answers you need.
  - Given where the LSO is now, what decisions you make around which recommendations to implement versus which you will pause is important because that will inform what information gaps remain.
- Scot Wortley: There is something that struck me, and I'm not sure how we would measure it, but it has to do with issues of networking and nepotism. That is a form of systemic bias, it is not necessarily overt, but to what extent does first job or placement within a firm and your chance of partnership have to do with family, friends and connections that exist within the community? This is identified in many lines of work.

- As a criminologist, I teach an introduction to criminology course and in my first class I ask how many of you want to be a lawyer and about 90% of the class put up their hand. We calculated that only 5% of them actually make it into law school. What are the systemic challenges? There is a big difference between the kids who live on campus and have their tuition and life paid for by their parents and their focus is to get good grades and LSAT scores to get into law school, and the challenges faced by those who have to work to pay for school and have 4 hour commutes every day to get to campus. There may be issues with respect to systemic bias that impact the pool of potential applicants who become licensees.

Question from Atrisha Lewis: Sujitha – you said that there are challenges in building trust with equity-seeking groups unless we address concerns in a meaningful way. It is unethical to keep asking about what we already know exists. What do we already know that exists?

- Sujitha Ratnasingham: We know there are barriers faced by racialized licensees based on the focus groups and surveys – it has come across consistently across the three data tools and its important to address it.
  - This isn't unique to the legal professions; it exists across various sectors. Waiting to measure it in the best possible survey is great if you are trying to demonstrate that this is an issue that all racialized people face.
  - From my perspective, we know that people are facing these issues, I would think it's important that we act on it.
  - In the health profession, there is a lot of movement to address barriers faced by equity-seeking groups and address systemic barriers for various groups. One thing we hear as a quantitative research shop with lots of data is why do we keep measuring the same thing when we know it exists? Use those funds to make a change.
  - There are issues on the survey including generalizability, but it's important to act because we know these issues exist. People have shared painful experiences with the LSO and is it important for the LSO to act on it. This is an important way to build trust.
- Scot Wortley: Absolutely. Despite the methodological limitations of the survey, you had a large number of racialized lawyers talk about their experiences and their traumas. Those numbers are significant. It is enough to justify action, and further monitoring to evaluate the initiatives that will be and have been implemented.
  - The issue of fatigue emerges a lot in the studies we have been doing lately. The need to conduct research to figure out why people are not answering these questions – those justifications will vary by race. What we found was that many Black Nova Scotians are cynical about these equity exercises – they say we are constantly sharing our pain, why should we go through this entire exercise again, etc. There is a lot of cynicism.

- I think that is the reason why a lot of racialized persons don't participate in these exercises anymore because they have lost faith that it will make a difference. That is a different reason for why racialized individuals may not want to complete these exercises as compared to non-racialized individuals.
- Michael Ornstein: You are all aware that many women who join large law firms as associates leave for in-house work in their late 20s or early 30s.
- We can learn a lot from these records. They don't tell you how people feel but they show trajectories over time. We should collect data on immigration, time of settlement, etc.
  - I think there should be an effort to look at income. It is a primary aspect of inequality. We know very little about income differences and we should look at that.

Question from Atrisha: My second question – the Law Society of Alberta put out a statement that acknowledged systemic discrimination in the justice system and legal profession... Are any of you aware of this statement and the work that went into stating this?

- Peer Reviewers: No.

Question from Julian Falconer: It is imperative that we not reverse engineer these issues. I mean we can't walk in and say there is racism and now prove it or that there is not racism and disprove it. We need to follow the data. My question is for Scot Wortley. You worked on policing for the Ontario Human Rights Commission - can you explain your role and the work?

- Scot Wortley: We began an inquiry in 2018 by making numerous requests to the TPS with respect to race for a number of different outcomes. This included everything from street checks, injury reports, different types of charges, use of force incidents, etc. We uncovered all types of data problems, inconsistencies, and issues with transparency.
  - The major finding was that there was a huge issue of public perception of police violence in the Black community. The trust in the police and perception of racism has increased over the past 25 years, not decreased despite the anti-racism initiatives that have been implemented.
  - We found concrete data that demonstrates a huge overrepresentation in issues with police use of force incidents within Black communities.
  - We have found over-representation in respect of arrests for various crimes, in particular for crimes with police discretion like cannabis possession. Huge overrepresentation which is interesting because white people consume more cannabis than the Black community.

- There is a need for constant data monitoring. Data is not only a research exercise to document whether something exists or not, but ongoing data collection is needed to keep the system honest.
- To a certain extent, policing now has become more transparent with respect to these issues than other elements of the justice system.

Question from Julian Falconer: Michael, can you tell us your views on accepting the issue around data collection? How do you see the significance of the consultation that was led by African Canadian leaders at the bar? Were you aware of that?

- Michael Ornstein: There is a problem here. We essentially worked with the received documents. From what I could tell, the key informants were representative of a small number of organizations. There were 500 volunteers for focus groups and about 100...
- Julian Falconer: I am talking about something different. There were a number of different means by which information was gathered. The Stratcom exercise was one method, another the conducting of a whole host of focus groups of racialized licensees in a safe space led by a prominent member of the racialized bar. Was the usage of that process not shared with you?
- Michael Ornstein: No
- Julian Falconer: That's troubling.
- Michael Ornstein: The Stratcom report on those focus groups...
- Julian Falconer: No, I'm talking about something different. The report explains the different means of data gathering. One of the three means was through these focus groups, conducted by prominent members of the bar in a safe space where they were allowed to exchange their experiences. Given the efforts, it's troubling that this didn't make its way to the reviewers. Can this be rectified?
- Cara: We will look into this and get back to the reviewers.

Stratcom's Report, Diversio's Indexes, Recommendations 3–7 & Future Equity Research

Michael Ornstein

May 3, 2022

Stratcom's "Challenges" Report I

Summarizing interviews with 27 "key informants"

"... racialization is a constant and persistent factor affecting students, young licensees during their entry into practice and opportunities for career advancement. ... true ... in all types of practice environment. ... Racialization generates numerous specific challenges that operate in subtle ways, reflecting their systemic character, and that may be amplified by individuals' lifestyles, socio-economic status, age, gender, national origin, and educational pedigree."

Focus group participants testified eloquently to the pervasive impact of racialization on many aspects of licensees' experience. They tied racism to "the experiences of discrimination" of women, younger, older, LGBT and Jewish licensees.

Stratcom's "Challenges" Report II

A lengthy survey of all licensees covered

- licensees' careers
- experiences of disadvantage in hiring, advancement and pursuit of an area of practice
- the impact of racialization
- policies to address racism and challenges facing racialized licensees
- factors contributing to the risk of complaints against racialized licensees

Stratcom's "Challenges" Report III

- The survey response rate was 7.4%, about 11% for racialized licensees and 5.5 percent for self-identified "non-racialized" licensees – it is unlikely, but we have no way of knowing, whether the survey results represented all or racialized or non-racialized licensees
- Licensees' self-identification as racialized or non-racialized, is not consistent with research based on "structural" definitions (anyone could identify as racialized; and there were as many Whites identifying as racialized as Blacks)
- A product of its time in not differentiating Indigenous and Black licensees; also did not separate lawyers and paralegals; or attending to the situation of the very under-represented Hispanic, Southeast Asian or Filipino groups
- Did not consider intersections with gender, certainly on the radar at the time
- This is water under the bridge

Diversio's Three Indexes

For legal workplaces with 25 or more licensees Diversio measured:

- commitment, workplace programming and policies reported by a knowledgeable informant combined with a survey-based measure of licensees' knowledge of them (following Recommendation 3)
- diversity, in the form of the combined employment of female, racialized, Indigenous, LGBTQ2+, Francophone licensees and licensees with a disability – relative to certain norms (following Recommendation 4)
- inclusion, licensees' attitudes regarding equity, measured in a survey (following Recommendation 5);

The inclusion index, based on a survey

- In many workplaces the inclusion survey had an unacceptably low response rate
- In some of the highest rated workplaces, Diversio's response rate was below 20%
- Response rates were much lower in legal workplaces other than law firms
- The utility of Diversio's index was compromised by the exclusion of responses from licensees who did not self-identify as either racialized or non-racialized
- Implies that measuring attitudes towards equity in individual workplaces using a standardized survey is problematic

The diversity index, based on the Annual Report equity survey component

- The measure of diversity combined the employment of female, racialized, Indigenous, LGBTQ2+, Francophone licensees and licensees with a disability – relative to certain norms
- Diversion presented no evidence these different elements of the representation historically disadvantaged groups represents a single dimension (even though this is a straightforward empirical question, they could have address with the data they had in hand)
- Any single index of diversity risks diverting attention away from concerns specific to Black, Indigenous, female, etc. ... licensees

The Overall Inclusion Index

The components of Diversio's inclusion index are essentially unrelated

- There is no relationship between progressive policies and whether licensees have positive views of equity in their workplace; perhaps policies are seen as rhetorical or place a critical focus on diversity;
- a very weak negative relationship between greater diversity in employment and a workplace culture sympathetic to diversity; and
- a very weak positive relationship between commitment and diversity, casting doubt on the efficacy of formal policies to achieve diversity

The implication is that no meaningful single “inclusion” index can effectively combine measures of commitment, diversity and inclusion

My opinion on the recommendations

Recommendation 3 – Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Principles and Practices Workplaces of size 10 or more are to:

- 2) develop, implement and maintain a human rights/diversity policy ...
available to the public – Makes sense
- 3) every two years, complete an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment, provided to the LSO – Absent feedback, is there evidence that a confidential report to the LSO will have impact?
- 4) encourage legal workplaces to conduct [their own] inclusion surveys.
Is this advisable? In many workplaces a voluntary survey is unlikely to obtain a satisfactory response rate; disclosure of the results raises confidentiality issues in smaller workplaces; conducted by managers of the workplace, there may be pressure to complete a voluntary survey and to answer in some way; effects of disclosing the survey results are unpredictable

Ornstein Presentation May 3, 2022

Recommendation 4 – Measuring Progress through Quantitative Analysis

Annually, workplaces of size 25 or more are to measure diversity from the Lawyers and Paralegal Annual Report ... [and disseminate the results in a manner] ... consistent with the best practices established to protect licensees vulnerable to harm ... so [licensees in a workplace] can compare [their] data with the aggregate results.

- Risks violating privacy in all smaller workplaces and in all workplaces for numerically smaller historically disadvantaged groups, including LGBTQ2+, Indigenous individual racialized groups and persons with a disability
- A global measure of the representation of all historically disadvantaged groups is not necessarily meaningful
- Instead, I suggest these measures be computed by the LSO and used to measure progress and guide policy, perhaps linking them to policies measured by Recommendation 3(2), but not released all workplaces, maybe released to some places on application only with conditions

Ornstein Presentation May 3, 2022

10

Recommendation 5 – Measuring Progress through Qualitative Analysis

Every four years, in workplaces size 25 or more, the LSO is to:

- 1) conduct a voluntary inclusion survey;
- 2) compile the survey for each workplace and provide the legal workplace with a summary.

- Raises privacy concerns in smaller workplaces
- In many workplaces a voluntary survey will not have an acceptable response rate
- See Recommendation 7

Recommendation 6 – Inclusion Index

Every four years in workplaces of size 25 or more, the LSO is to develop and publish [and so make public] an inclusion index [for each workplace] combining:

- 1) a workplace's self-assessment information (Recommendation 3);
  - 2) demographic data obtained from the Lawyer and Paralegal Annual Report (Recommendation 4);
  - 3) information from the inclusion survey conducted by the LSO (Recommendation 5)
- I am unconvinced that there exists a valid measure of inclusion that combines these three dimensions
  - Instead, focus on the separate dimensions and consider their (shifting?) relationship – see Recommendation 7

Recommendation 7 – Inclusion Survey

Every four years, the LSO will conduct an inclusion survey.

- A vital subjective element of the understanding of equity not visible in the “structural” measures of employment
- Offers the opportunity to place diversity issues in the context of career trajectories
- Could identify the concerns of individual historically disadvantaged groups
- Considering all licensees and segments of the profession (sole practitioners, law firms classified by size, employment segments, geographical regions) poses no privacy concerns
- The challenge, still, is to obtain an acceptable survey response rate

Recommendation 7 – Inclusion Survey, CONTINUED

Every four years, the LSO will conduct an inclusion survey.

I propose this modification

Every two years conduct a large sample survey of all licensees, addressing equity issues, and larger concerns, for example the quality of work life (including working conditions and hours, satisfaction) and key career decisions such as changing jobs and retirement. All these have important equity dimensions.

Future Research on Equity I

1. Consistent with the 2021 Canadian Census, add two questions to the Annual Report asking for: sex at birth and gender; retain the question about sexual orientation
2. To the Annual Report, add questions about place of birth, year of settlement; and country of first and law degrees – which need be asked only once
3. Conduct research on disability, presently measured with just one plainly inadequate question in the Annual Report, in the framework of contemporary research on activity limitation and comparable to the Census questions, to allow comparisons to the population

Future Research on Equity II

4. Study progression to equity partnership in law firms (and maybe to other statuses). This is especially important for understanding gender inequality
5. Study income, because it is a critical aspect of inequality. But how to do so is unclear. A voluntary question in the Annual Report might have a very low response; maybe include this in a sample survey; maybe conduct analysis of the Census, as done once before
6. Study the very high level (around 50%!) of paralegal licensees not in practice

At its June 10, 2021 meeting, the majority of the Committee (7 votes) voted to continue to have the equity partners send representatives to participate in discussions at Committee meetings, except for in camera matters and to give the equity partners an option to send up to two representatives to Committee meetings. The Committee’s recommendations were sent to June Convocation for information.

Following the receipt of the April 26, 2022 letter, there were two meetings of the Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee (EIAC) held May 3 and May 12, which you attended. Let me address your requests for information.

With respect to information that is confidential to the Law Society of Ontario, under the current legislative framework governing the Law Society of Ontario, the Treasurer has no unilateral authority to decide on a request for information from a bencher. Convocation must be engaged in considering the request and providing directions on a response. With respect to information that is not confidential to the Law Society (information that is publicly available), in the first instance, a bencher's request for such information falls within the authority of the Chief Executive Officer to respond to. However, if the work of responding to the request would exceed the normal duties of staff, the CEO would ordinarily seek directions from Convocation on proceeding with a response. Information that is regulatory in nature, obtained by the Law Society of Ontario further to its regulatory powers and, as such, intended solely for regulatory use and disclosure, cannot be provided to a bencher other than if the bencher is engaged in the regulatory process for which the information was obtained. None of the CEO, the Treasurer or Convocation has authority to decide otherwise.

I will be referring your requests for information to the Strategic Planning and Advisory Committee. I will ask the Committee to consider the requests and to recommend to Convocation whether it should refuse or accede to them, in whole or in part.

Yours truly,

Memorandum

To: Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee
From: Jim Varro, Director and Corporate Secretary, Office of the CEO
Date: June 17, 2022
Re.: Update on Trip to Northern Indigenous Communities

---

Purpose

To provide the Committee with an update on the Treasurer and Benchers' trip to visit the northern First Nations communities from June 7 to 9, 2022.

Summary of the Trip

Treasurer Teresa Donnelly and benchers Cathy Banning, Robert Burd, Dianne Corbiere, Etienne Esquega and Julian Falconer visited northern First Nations communities June 7 through 9. Joining the Law Society was The Honourable Geoffrey B. Morawetz, Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Justice, Elder Myeengun Henry, Jim Varro, and Ovide Mercredi, who acted as the independent reviewer to the Law Society during the work undertaken by the Review Panel in 2017-2018.

On June 7, the Treasurer, benchers, Chief Justice Morawetz, Elder Henry, Jim Varro and Mr. Mercredi visited Fort William First Nation near Thunder Bay and were welcomed by Chief Peter Collins. Elder Rita Fenton led the group, which included community members, local lawyers and members of the local judiciary, in an Indigenous teaching. This was followed by a Talking Circle. Here, the Treasurer and benchers had an opportunity to listen to and learn from community leaders and members and to share about the work of the Law Society. The Treasurer confirmed the Law Society's commitment to working with Indigenous peoples on matters where the issues and interests of the Indigenous communities intersect with the work of the Law Society under its regulatory mandate.

On June 8, the Treasurer, benchers, Elder Henry, Jim Varro and Mr. Mercredi travelled to Sioux Lookout and Lac Seul First Nation, returning to the place where former Treasurer Paul Schabas presented the Review Panel Report in June 2018. They were greeted by Chief Clifford Bull and met with him and members of Council and learned more about issues and developments in the community. The Treasurer shared the work of the Law Society on implementing the recommendations of the 2018 Review Panel Report. This was followed by a Justice Forum, attended by Ogichidaa (Grand Chief) Francis Kavanagh, Grand Council Treaty #3 and Deputy Grand Chief Anna Betty Achneepineskum, NAN and other leaders and community members, including those working in the justice sector in Lac Seul. Through a series of presentations by the leaders and justice sector representatives from Grand Council Treaty #3, the Law Society delegation learned about Indigenous specific justice programs and services to address the issues and challenges facing Indigenous peoples when they become involved in the criminal justice system. This is impacted by the history of Indigenous peoples in Canada – a history that resulted in loss of culture and identity, loss of land and livelihood and multi-generational trauma suffered through the residential schools experience and other programs that separated families and created a loss of community and a myriad of social problems. They emphasized that for many Indigenous peoples, justice is about healing and that restorative justice principles can play a major role in achieving this objective. The delegation also learned about local policing and the challenges created by resource issues for this crucial service. Chief Bull emphasized the need for Indigenous laws and governance. He also spoke about his desire to see more resources that can be used to explore new justice models and community resources for justice and healing. The Treasurer and Ms. Corbiere had an opportunity to discuss the progress made on the Review Panel recommendations and reaffirm the commitment the Law Society has made to work with Indigenous communities in keeping with the focus of the recommendations and implementation of the Law Society's Indigenous Framework. Chief Bull was grateful for the Law Society's engagement once again in Lac Seul and noted the significance of the delegation's visit in affirming the relationship with the community. He also extended an invitation to the leadership of the courts in Ontario to engage with Indigenous communities in determining how the courts, in seeing that justice is done, can be responsive to the unique issues facing Indigenous peoples involved in the justice system.

On June 9, the Treasurer, Ms. Banning, Mr. Falconer, Elder Henry and Mr. Mercredi travelled to Sandy Lake First Nation for a meeting with Chief Delores Kakegamic<sup>1</sup> and Council. Other leaders who attended were Grand Chief Derek Fox, Nishnawbe Aski Nation; Deputy Grand Chief Anna Betty Achneepineskum; Harvey Yesno, NAN Legal; Don Rusnak, NAN Legal; and Chief of Police Roland Morrison, Nishnawbe Aski Police Service. Presentations were made on justice in Sandy Lake including the Mameenimwaywin Justice Project. Project Coordinator Cordia Goodman, spoke about the challenges as a result of justice participants from the Court/Personnel party not being in the community since November 2019, resulting in lengthy Ontario Court of Justice dockets – there are 269 charges against 78 clients. Some clients in the community have been awaiting trial since 2018. She spoke of the challenges of clients speaking to their lawyers. She also noted the lack of proper court facilities. The audio/video court happens at the Sandy Lake Radio station and when the fly-in Court personnel were attending, they were using the Community Youth Centre which is not an appropriate forum to hold court nor is their appropriate equipment. Other challenges noted were offenders being released into the community without notice and supports and the difficulties in receiving responses to inquiries from the Kenora court. Other presenters noted the need for Indigenous laws and governance, the need for support, importance of relationships and partnerships, and the need for a healing lodge. The Treasurer spoke about the work of the Law Society in improving the regulatory processes for Indigenous peoples, facilitating access to justice, and supports for Indigenous lawyers and paralegals including the Guide for Lawyers Working with Indigenous Peoples.

Memorandum

To: Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee
From: Reshma Budhwani, Policy Counsel, Equity Initiatives
Date: June 17, 2022
Re.: Update on the Law Society's Indigenous Initiatives

---

Purpose

This memo provides background on:

- The status of implementation of the recommendations from the Review Panel on Regulatory and Hearing Processes Affecting Indigenous Peoples ("Review Panel"); and,
- Other Law Society of Ontario ("LSO" or the "Law Society") programs and initiatives dedicated to issues affecting Indigenous peoples.

Background

i. Indigenous Advisory Group

In November 2004, the then-chair of the Equity and Indigenous Affairs Committee ("EIAC"), Joanne St. Lewis, established the Aboriginal Working Group (the "AWG") to act as a resource to EIAC on issues impacting the Indigenous bar and Indigenous peoples in Ontario. Following the release of the 94 Calls to Action from the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (the "TRC"), the Law Society expressed its desire to formally re-establish and strengthen its relationship with Indigenous peoples on justice issues. In 2016, the Law Society partnered with representatives from First Nations, Inuit and Métis communities to establish the Indigenous Advisory Group ("IAG") consisting of Indigenous legal professionals and Elders. The membership of the IAG is composed of 13 members, including three members of the Elders' Council.<sup>1</sup>

Adopting the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples (UNDRIP) as its framework, the IAG advances and encourages the reconciliation of Indigenous peoples and legal systems within the Canadian legal system and promotes the development of the relationships between Indigenous peoples and Canadian legal structures and institutions in a manner that respects Indigenous values, beliefs and legal systems.

---

The IAG's mandate is to:

- Promote the implementation of recommendations from reports generated on Indigenous peoples and Canada's legal system, including the Truth & Reconciliation Commission of Canada's Final Report and Calls to Action and the First Nations Representation on Ontario Juries Report by Justice Frank Iacobucci.
- Encourage partnerships and relationships between Indigenous peoples, the Indigenous Bar Association ("IBA") and the Law Society.
- Interact and partner with the Law Society, EIAC, Benchers committees, working groups, advisory groups, and the Office of the CEO and other staff on all issues affecting Indigenous peoples in relation to the Law Society.
- Identify priorities and make recommendations on the provision of legal services by and for Indigenous peoples in Ontario.
- Initiate, inform, promote and advance reform of policies, procedures, rules and regulations for the benefit of Indigenous peoples.
- Promote public awareness and educate members of the Law Society on issues related to and affecting Indigenous peoples.
- Review, comment and make recommendations on reports affecting Indigenous peoples with respect to the legal profession.
- Assess the progress and effectiveness of initiatives undertaken by the Law Society that address or relate to legal issues affecting Indigenous peoples.

The initiatives described below are carried out in collaboration with the IAG.

ii. Keshen Review Panel

On June 28, 2017, then-Treasurer Paul Schabas announced the creation of a review panel to examine the way in which the Law Society and the Tribunal address regulatory matters involving Indigenous peoples, complaints, and issues. The review was prompted by the Law Society's experience in the prosecution of a Kenora-based lawyer, Douglas Keshen<sup>2</sup>, which raised questions about the Law Society's regulatory and hearing processes involving Indigenous peoples.

Between 2014 to 2017, the Law Society investigated allegations of professional misconduct related to Mr. Keshen's representation of Indigenous clients and the handling of compensation paid under the Indian Residential Schools Settlement Agreement. The investigation culminated in a 25-day conduct hearing in Kenora which ultimately resulted in a significant reduction in the number and nature of the original allegations against Mr. Keshen and the conversion of the conduct hearing into an Invitation to Attend. This prosecution was the first major case<sup>3</sup> for the Law Society involving Indigenous complainants.

The Review Panel was tasked with reviewing the Law Society's complaints, investigation, prosecution and adjudication processes in relation to Indigenous peoples. The review shed light on Indigenous histories, cultures and affairs and the impacts of settler/colonial systems on Indigenous peoples. The Law Society became acutely aware of the importance of establishing and maintaining culturally competent regulatory and hearing processes

The work on the Review Panel was carried out alongside an Independent Reviewer, former First Nations National Chief Ovide Mercredi. As part of the review, the panel engaged with First Nations communities in Treaty 3 and Nishnawbe Aski Nation territories, interviewed complainants and LSO staff and consulted with experts from the Indigenous community. Treasurer Schabas and the panel members also attended a community meeting in Sioux Lookout with First Nations in the north, Elders and residential school survivors.

In May 2018, Convocation adopted the report and the nine recommendations of the Review Panel directed at the Law Society, the Professional Regulation and the Law Society Tribunal to improve the regulatory and hearing processes for Indigenous complainants and licensees.

The Review Panel Report is attached as Appendix "A".

Status of the Implementation of the Recommendations of the Review Panel Report

Below are the key initiatives that have been undertaken since the adoption of the Review Panel report. These are positive steps. However, the Law Society acknowledges that a productive relationship between itself and Indigenous peoples is built on trust. The Law Society is committed to taking sustained and meaningful action as it fulfills its commitment to reconciliation.

i. Improvement to the Law Society's Regulatory Functions

Background

A. Challenges Report

The following outlines the significant steps in the development and implementation of the Challenges Report:

2012: The Challenges Working Group (“Working Group”) begins an engagement process to gather information about barriers faced by racialized licensees.

2014: The Working Group reviews the data from the engagement process and drafts a consultation paper titled Developing Strategies for Change: Addressing Challenges Faced by Racialized Licensees. Convocation approves this consultation paper.

2014-2015: The Working Group consults broadly with licensees, law students, articling students and the public. The Law Firms Diversity and Inclusion Network and legal organizations are also consulted.<sup>1</sup>

2015-2016: The Working Group develops its final report with 13 recommendations, including a number related to measuring inclusion in legal workplaces (LWPs).

2016: Convocation approves the final report and recommendations in December.

2017 forward: the Law Society began implementation of recommendations 3(3), 4, 5 and 6 of the Challenges Report, designed to address systemic racism in the professions, which included:

- In 2018, the inclusion and self-assessment questions were developed for the 2018 Annual Report filings.
- In January 2019, the 2018 Annual Report filings for lawyers and paralegals were launched. The filings included the diversity, inclusion, and self-assessment questions.
- In April 2019, the development of the Inclusion Index commenced.
- In fall of 2019, the Law Society received the final Inclusion Index from the external consultant.

In adopting the Challenges Report, the Law Society committed to measuring progress in addressing barriers faced by racialized licensees in LWPs. This was to be achieved by analyzing data related to licensees' experiences of inclusion in the workplace.

The data was collected pursuant to three recommendations of the Challenges Report:

Recommendation 3(3) - The Law Society will...require a licensee representative of each legal workplace of at least 10 licensees in Ontario to complete, every two years, an equality, diversity and inclusion self-assessment for their legal workplace, to be provided to the Law Society

The Law Society will measure progress by: 1) asking licensees to voluntarily answer inclusion questions, provided by the Law Society, about their legal workplace, every four years; and 2) compiling the results of the inclusion questions for each legal <sup>1</sup> The Working Group gathered information about the challenges faced by racialized licensees using an engagement process, followed by an extensive consultation process. The engagement process included key informant interviews, focus groups, a survey of the profession, and community engagement whereby information was collected from 52 participants by prominent and experienced racialized legal professions. The consultation process included open house learning and consultation programs around the province, and meetings with representatives from law firms, legal clinics, banks, and government and legal associations. The Working Group also received 40 written submissions and feedback from over 1,000 racialized and non-racialized licensees from across the province.

---

workplace of at least 25 licensees in Ontario and providing the legal workplace with a summary of the information gathered.

Recommendation 6 – Inclusion Index

Every four years, the Law Society will develop and publish an Inclusion Index that reflects the following information, including, for each legal workplace of at least 25 licensees: the legal workplace's self-assessment information (Recommendation 3(3)), demographic data obtained from the Lawyer Annual Report and Paralegal Annual Report (Recommendation 4) and information gathered from the inclusion questions provided by the Law Society (Recommendation 5).

To move forward on these two commitments, the LSO collected the following information from licensees in the 2018 Annual Reports:

- Demographic/Self-Identification Questions: Voluntary questions regarding Indigenous identity, Francophone identity, race/ethnicity, gender, sexual orientation and disability.
- Inclusion Questions: Voluntary questions related to licensees' experiences with respect to inclusion, respect and safety in their workplaces. The inclusion questions include a component where licensees were asked to identify diversity-related policies and programming at their LWPs. A list of the inclusion questions are attached as Appendix A.
- Self-Assessment Questions: Mandatory questions related to workplace policies, programs and commitment to equality, diversity and inclusion.<sup>2</sup> These were completed by a licensee representative for LWPs in accordance with Recommendation 3(3).

B. Inclusion Index

In April 2019, the Law Society engaged an external consultant to develop an inclusion index. The data underlying the index comes from the 2018 Annual Report. The index assigns an individual score for each of the three metrics.

- Diversity Score: The diversity score is based on answers to the demographic questions collected in the 2018 Annual Report filings. The demographic composition of each LWP is compared to the demographics of the region in which it is located as measured by Statistics Canada Census data. LWPs with multiple offices were compared against the demographics of their primary region of operation. Ontario-wide entities were compared to province-wide demographics.

Each demographic trait was assigned equal importance and thus weighted equally. Representation for ethnicity, Indigenous identity, gender, and Francophone background was set based on Statistics Canada Census Economic Regions data, which subdivides Ontario into 9 regions. LGBTQ2+ representation was set at 10% for LWPs within Toronto and 5% for all LWPs outside of Toronto, using the consultant's benchmarking data. Representation of persons with a disability was set at 20% for all LWPs, based on census data.

<sup>2</sup> Self-Assessment questions measure for the LWP's commitment to EDI (14 commitments); policies about discrimination, harassment and sexual harassment; whether EDI considerations are made in decision making; and the availability of EDI training or education at the LWP.

- Commitment Score: The commitment score reflects the LWP's self-reported EDI programming and policies plus licensee acknowledgement of this programming (part of the inclusion questions). LWPs with the most implemented programming received top scores, and LWPs with less programming received lower scores. Fourteen out of 192 LWPs did not complete the self-assessment questions. For these LWPs, a commitment score was generated using licensee responses regarding the presence of programming at their LWP.
- Inclusion Score: The inclusion score was generated by aligning each of the 22 inclusion questions to one of five sub-metrics: inclusive culture, access to networks, unbiased feedback and reviews, safe work environment, and flexible work options. To produce the inclusion score for each LWP, the consultant compared the average score on each metric for the dominant group (white, heterosexual, Anglophone men without a disability) to the average score for the non-dominant group. The average response of the dominant group was weighted at 30% of the score, and the average response of the non-dominant group was weighted at 70%.

The index also provides the response rate for each LWP (# of licensee responses), the type of LWP (public interest, corporate, law firm), and the regional location for each LWP.

Based on the LWPs scores in each of the three categories, each LWP was assigned a numerical ranking and an archetype (tentatively named superstar, accidental superstar, inclusive, diverse, accidentally inclusive, accidentally diverse, commitment only, and needs improvement).

The average response rate to the diversity questions across the 192 LWPs was 78%, while the average response rate to the inclusion questions was 68%. The overall response rate across LSO licensees was 80%. While the overall response rate was very high for a survey of this nature, some LWPs had considerably lower response rates. For example the legal department in one institution had the lowest response rate of all LWPs (12% for the diversity questions and 9% for inclusion questions); it ranked 15th out of 192 on the overall index. Similarly, the legal department in another institution, which also had low response rates (26% for the diversity questions and 25% for inclusion questions), ranked 4th out of 192 on the overall index.

LWP Dashboards

In addition to a ranked index, individual dashboards were available for each of the 192 LWPs. The dashboard provides each LWP with:

- an overall index ranking (out of 192) and score (out of 100).

- individual scores and rankings for each of the three metrics (diversity, inclusion, and commitment).
- a diversity composition, which compares the demographics for the LWP against the average for all 192 LWPs.
- an inclusion scorecard for the five sub-metrics for inclusion (inclusive culture, access to networks, unbiased feedback and reviews, safe work environment, and flexible work options). The LWP's scores for the sub-metrics are compared against the average score for all 192 LWPs.

A sample dashboard from Diversio is attached as Appendix B.

C. Events during 2019 to 2022

A draft of the Inclusion Index was delivered in the fall of 2019 and Law Society management and policy counsel undertook an examination of the index and dashboards to gain a thorough understanding of the development process prior to a release of the index. In March 2020, the Law Society shifted its focus to addressing the disruptions caused by the pandemic and, in many respects, that focus continues to be on pandemic-related consequences. In considering the current utility of the index, EIAC took note of many significant developments occurring since fall 2019, including:

- the move from in-person working arrangements to hybrid and remote work, which has changed the nature of workplace interactions in many ways;
- the uncovering of unmarked graves of students enrolled in residential schools, which has highlighted the need for active measures of reconciliation with Indigenous peoples;
- the murder of George Floyd, which prompted a renewed commitment on the part of many to fight racism.

These events, in addition to the passage of time, prompted a confidential peer review of the Inclusion Index to assist EIAC and Convocation in determining next steps regarding the index.

D. Peer Review Panel

Three independent experts were retained as peer reviewers: Michael Ornstein, Sujitha Ratnasingham and Scot Wortley. Their biographies are attached as Appendix C. They possess significant knowledge in survey methodology, research, and equity, diversity and inclusion. Care was taken to retain experts who could provide neutral and objective commentary.

With respect to the Inclusion Index, the review assessed:

- a. impediments to implementing the inclusion index recommendation (Recommendation 6);
- b. the reliability of the data collection and analysis used in 2019 to support the inclusion index;
- c. the extent to which the inclusion data and analysis is relevant for 2022.

The reviewers presented their findings on the index to EIAC at its committee meeting in May. Relevant findings of the peer reviewers and EIAC's conclusions based on those findings are discussed below.

Discussion

EIAC's analysis is grounded in the overarching goal of the Challenges report, which says in its introduction: "The Law Society is committed to advancing equality, diversity and inclusion in the legal professions — a commitment which includes addressing any barriers faced by lawyers and paralegals to full and active participation in the professions."<sup>3</sup>

With respect to the Inclusion Index in particular, the Working Group concluded that such an index would further equity and diversity within the professions by tracking how individual workplaces were progressing towards these goals. It said:

The Working Group also believes that accountability and transparency are key to increasing equality and diversity in the professions. Members of the Working Group have considered a number of methods to ensure that these principles are reflected in the recommendations. The Working Group has decided that in addition to gathering qualitative and quantitative data about legal workplaces, the creation and publication of an inclusion index – an index that would include legal workplaces' assessments of their diversity and inclusion-related achievements and that would allow legal workplaces to demonstrate their performance and progress – would advance the goals of equality, diversity and inclusion. The index would be a valuable tool for legal workplaces and the Law Society to determine whether there is progress in the professions. Legal workplaces could also use the index to attract prospective clients and to recruit talent.<sup>4</sup>

While the goal of the index is to provide transparency and valuable information, the data collection from individual participants was necessarily founded on two critical principles, that the confidentiality of participants' answers would be strictly maintained, and that provision of the data would be completely voluntary. This tension between striving for transparency and respecting confidentiality and choice led to issues with the data and consequently in the index itself, as identified by the peer reviewers.

While the overall response rate was high (78% for demographic questions; 68% for inclusion questions), some LWPs had a very low response rate to the inclusion questions. Some of the highest rated workplaces had response rates of less than 20%. This divergence raises questions about the reliability of the ratings for LWPs.

The risk of violating privacy is a constant, in smaller workplaces (i.e., at or around 25 licensees) and in all workplaces with numerically smaller groups, including licensees who are LGBTQ2+, Indigenous or persons with a disability. The index compensated for this risk by providing global measures of diversity and inclusion, using the methodology described above. To protect privacy, the data is highly aggregated and translated into a score, which can be used to rate the legal workplace. For example, for diversity, the demographic composition of each LWP is compared to the demographics of the region in which it is located as measured by Statistics Canada Census data. For an inclusion score, the answers on the inclusion questions are compared between the dominant group (Anglophone, heterosexual, white men) and the non-dominant group.

However, these global measures have left the LWPs and the Law Society with little indication as to where progress has been achieved and where it has not. For example, assume an LWP had a high diversity score and a low inclusion score. Neither the index nor the dashboard would show if the low inclusion score was workplace wide or concentrated on a specific equity-seeking group of employees. The complexities of education, specialization, recruitment, retention and workplace relationships – all of which impact diversity and inclusion - are difficult to reflect in a single numerical score or archetype.

The peer reviewers noted that aggregated data, such as the global measures used here, has been seen to be less valuable in recent years. For example, the experiences of Black and Indigenous professionals may be significantly different from Asian professionals, although all come from historically disadvantaged groups. For LWPs to improve their performance in equity, diversity and inclusion, data must be more disaggregated, so that specific issues in recruitment, promotion and retention can be identified and addressed.

The reviewers' consensus was that the index was not transparent, in that the methodology and results of the index would not be evident and explicable to LWPs, clients and the professions. However, each reviewer strongly supported the concept of data collection and publication to show progress towards diversity and inclusion in the legal professions. Consequently, the reviewers recommended that the 2018 index not be released and that data collection be paused until EIAC has reconsidered how to collect and publish inclusion data for legal workplaces.

Recommendations and Rationale

EIAC remains strongly committed to the overarching goal of the Challenges Report and to the belief that data collection and publication of diversity and inclusion in employment is a key initiative. In 2016, when the recommendations of the Challenges Report were adopted by Convocation, the Law Society of Ontario was a pioneer in addressing equality, diversity and inclusion in the legal professions. Today, other law societies and regulators in Canada have embraced the goals of the Challenges Report and developed their own measures to address equity, diversity and inclusion among their respective professions.

As an example, in April 2022, benchers from the Law Society of Alberta adopted the following Acknowledgment of Systemic Discrimination to acknowledge the existence and impact of systemic discrimination within the justice system, including within the Law Society and the legal profession:<sup>5</sup>

<sup>5</sup> The full statement can be accessed below: <https://www.lawsociety.ab.ca/about-us/key-initiatives/equity-diversity-and-inclusion-initiatives/acknowledgment-of-systemic-discrimination/>

Systemic discrimination functions due to some of the inequitable principles historically embedded in our systems and institutions. Even if no individual members of the justice system engage in intentional discriminatory behaviour, the inequity embedded within the system still exists and results in disproportionate harmful impacts to those who are marginalized.

We recognize that systemic discrimination goes against principles of fairness that the legal profession values and upholds. Acknowledging that systemic discrimination exists within the Law Society, the legal profession and the justice system is a step towards improving how we protect the public interest and fulfill our regulatory objectives. Acknowledging the impact of systemic discrimination allows us to meaningfully continue the work of making the legal profession more equitable, increasing diversity and promoting inclusion. Where systemic discrimination manifests in policies, procedures and other work of the Law Society, we will identify this and address it.

EIAC considers the statement of the Law Society of Alberta to mirror its own position and objectives as set out in the Challenges Report.

As a pioneer in this field, the Law Society of Ontario experimented, assessed and innovated. Not all experiments are wholly successful. Assessment and further innovation are required to ensure that a partially successful experiment becomes wholly successful. In the case of the Inclusion Index, EIAC recognizes that any index must be transparent in its methodology and of legitimate assistance to its users, i.e., LWPs, licensees and clients.

An index must also reflect the current environment and much has changed with respect to equity matters since the Challenges Report was adopted in 2016 and the Inclusion Index was developed in 2019. Employer and institutional attitudes towards equity and reconciliation have been altered by events highlighting the brutality of racism and cruelty endured by students of residential schools. The inclusion questions developed in 2018 may not be relevant for a remote or hybrid workforce. The sheer passage of time means that the index may no longer reflect the demographics or management approaches of particular LWPs.

The current iteration of the Inclusion Index does not meet the above criteria, for reasons that can only be fully appreciated in hindsight. Further study and adjustment is required to ensure that the Inclusion Index is, in the words of the Working Group, “a valuable tool for legal workplaces and the Law Society to determine whether there is progress in the professions . . . to attract prospective clients and to recruit talent.”<sup>6</sup> Consequently, EIAC adopts the conclusion of the peer reviewers that the current version of the Inclusion Index not be released and that EIAC engage in further study on the collection and publication of data pertaining to equity, diversity and inclusion in legal workplaces. To that end, EIAC recommends the adoption of the above motion, which will amend the Challenges Report, allowing sufficient time for the development of a new index.

The Law Society of Ontario partnered with Diversio to create an Inclusion Index which ranks all legal workplaces with more than 25 lawyers or paralegals. LSO collected data from lawyers and workplaces in the 2019 Annual Report, including demographic, experience, and programming data. Diversio applied its inclusion algorithms to generate an Inclusion Score and ranking for each workplace.

Issue

The Committee is asked to approve for Convocation's consideration a policy on bencher requests for information, as set out in this report.

Background

The Treasurer appointed an Advisory Group of benchers and management to develop a policy for responding to bencher requests for information that is not readily available through the Committee and Convocation process and discussions. Members of the Advisory Group are Robert Adourian, Andrew Spurgeon, Diana Miles and Elliot Spears. Cathy Corsetti and Seymour Epstein, who completed their bencher terms in May and July 2023 respectively, also served on the Group.

The Advisory Group has prepared a policy that defines a process and provides direction to the Law Society for managing these requests. The Committee is asked to review the policy and recommend that Convocation approve it.

Benchers' Entitlement and Access to Information

Benchers fulfill a number of roles at the Law Society. Under the Law Society Act, they are the individuals who govern the affairs of the Law Society, a corporate entity. As such, they fulfill the role of directors and have fiduciary obligations and a duty of care respecting the Law Society. As policy makers, they make decisions for the regulation of the legal professions and create legislation (regulations and by-laws) as part of that work. If they are adjudicators, they fulfill review and decision making functions as members of the Law Society Tribunal.

Benchers require information to perform their roles as governors - directors and policy makers - including their oversight and fiduciary obligations to the organization. Law Society management supports benchers' work to ensure that they receive relevant and appropriate information at the right time and in the right format to perform their duties. The information benchers routinely receive or have access to in this respect includes the following:

- Committee materials;
- Convocation materials (reports for decision and information, both public and in camera) including reports from management, typically through the CEO (both in public and in camera);
- Convocation minutes and transcripts (both public and in camera);
- Additional supporting and educational resources posted in the bencher resource centre;
- Information about major policy or other initiatives through oral or written briefings including at scheduled bencher information sessions

Committee materials include but are not limited to policy development reports, research, the results of surveys or consultation, detailed budgetary information, financial reports and related documents, updates on strategic initiatives, operational division or program reports and updates from stakeholders.

In their oversight role and in the exercise of their fiduciary and duty of care obligations, benchers' entitlement to information is akin to that of a corporate director. Otherwise, in their policy making role, benchers require information to make informed decisions on regulatory and related policy matters. In their adjudicative role, benchers receive information within a hearing process that accords with disclosure of information and procedural rules for administrative tribunal decision making.

The Law Society's governance structure, with committees of the board supporting benchers' oversight and policy making functions, enables the availability of wide-ranging and comprehensive information to benchers. It provides opportunities for benchers to engage in a committee setting, under the leadership of the committee chair, and ask for and discuss information to ensure that they have what they need to fulfill their roles, or to ask questions in Convocation through the Treasurer related to reports before the meeting. It also encourages discipline in deciding what is required for decision making to ensure that Law Society resources and the experienced members of management who support bencher work are utilized appropriately.<sup>1</sup>

Considerations in Framing a Policy

Based on the above, in framing a policy on how to respond to bencher requests for information, the Advisory Group considered:

- The Law Society's obligations with respect to providing information to benchers;
- The scope of Law Society information that benchers require to do their work and perform their functions;
- The person(s) who should be responsible for dealing with requests and the exercise of discretion under the policy;

55. The Chair is to ensure that planning for the meeting's agenda takes into account the time needed by Law Society management to adequately and appropriately prepare materials for the meeting.

...

57. The Chair is responsible for ensuring that

- a. materials for committee deliberations are appropriate for their purpose and include an appropriate level of detail to permit informed discussion;
- b. reports to Convocation are provided at regular intervals;
- c. matters for Convocation's decision include a motion that is clear in its meaning and purpose;
- d. reports include an appropriate level of detail to permit informed decision-making; and
- e. reports include, where appropriate, a range of options for each matter recommended for approval together with the implications thereof.

- Resource implications related to applying the policy in fulfilling requests;
- Circumstances where there is disagreement with how the policy is applied and a process to deal with that;
- Positioning the policy once approved within the Law Society's Governance Practices and Policies.

The Advisory Group referred to one example of a process to address information requests, from the municipal council context, found in the Toronto Municipal Code Chapter 27, Council Procedures, Article 7 - § 27-7.11:

§ 27-7.11. Administrative inquiries and answers.

A. How a Member makes an administrative inquiry.<sup>2</sup>

(1) A member who wants information about the affairs of the City must:

(a) make an administrative inquiry in writing; and

(b) deliver it to the Clerk at least seven business days before the Council meeting.

(2) The relevant City official answers the administrative inquiry in writing and delivers the answer to the Clerk at least one hour before the Council meeting.

(3) The Clerk distributes the answer to members before the start of the Council meeting or reads the answer to Council.

(4) Despite Subsection A(2), a City official may decide that the answer to an administrative inquiry requires work that exceeds the normal duties of their staff.

(5) If Subsection A(4) applies, the City official informs Council of that decision in a written letter to the Clerk at least one hour before the meeting and the Clerk distributes the letter to members before the Council meeting starts.

B. How Council responds to an administrative inquiry.

(1) If, in response to an administrative inquiry, a City official has told Council that the work of answering the inquiry exceeds normal duties, Council, without debate, may vote on whether the City official should answer the administrative inquiry.

(2) Council receives, or refers to the appropriate Council Committee, all administrative inquiries and answers, without debate.

Context for a Policy – Information and Appropriate Purpose

Through its regular and ongoing support of benchers' oversight and policy making functions, as described, management meets benchers' information requirements by utilizing readily available and existing information and information collected through consultation or research at the direction of committees or Convocation. This will encompass relevant operational information that benchers require to assess risks and benefits, costs or other impacts, including those that may arise when reviewing a proposed policy direction or decision. Management is also sensitive and responds to the 'information gap' some benchers may experience given the complexities of the Law Society.

These efforts are necessary and meet two related objectives – ensuring that benchers are able to fulfill their appropriate fiduciary, duty of care, oversight and policy decision making responsibilities as governors of the Law Society, and ensuring that corporate purpose is fulfilled through the leadership of Convocation in accordance with the legislative mandate and Convocation's strategic priorities derived from the mandate. Benchers' and management's responsibilities in this framework help to foster a productive and effective management/board relationship that benefits the work of the organization.

As governors, benchers should understand and respect the line between information that is required for the appropriate purpose of their governance responsibilities and information that is extraneous to that purpose.<sup>3</sup> The proposed policy is intended to help guide and manage bencher

<sup>3</sup> The following from 20 Questions Directors of Not-for-Profit Organizations Should Ask About Director's Duties published by CPA Canada provides some insight into this issue:

10. How knowledgeable do directors have to be in order to discharge their duties?

The law does not require directors to be experts. While directors of not-for-profit organizations owe a duty of care, it is not realistic to expect directors to understand in detail all of the operations, laws and government policies affecting the organization. However, directors should be well-informed.

...

The courts recognize that directors must be guided by what is referred to as the "business judgment rule." They look to see that the directors made a reasonable decision, not a perfect one. In coming to a decision, directors must show that they acted prudently and on a reasonably informed basis.

As a result, directors should:

- have a general knowledge of what laws affect that type of organization
- inform themselves about the governance model and structure of the organization, what the organization does, how it does it and who its beneficiaries are requests for information other than that actively and regularly provided to benchers to meet the appropriate purpose described. The policy defines a process and provides direction to the Law Society for managing these requests.

Components of the Policy

The policy would be engaged where a bencher does not receive information, including operational information, requested

- through the committee or Convocation process, or
- through or outside of the committee process where information is unrelated to the mandate of a committee.

The following are the proposed components of a policy and process for dealing with requests for information:

1. Information that is requested by a bencher must be directly related to a bencher's appropriate duty as a governor of the Law Society and reasonably required to fulfill their oversight or policy making responsibilities and be used for such purposes.
2. The request for information is to be made on a form provided by the Law Society and submitted to the Treasurer's office. The request is to include particulars of the information and how the information aligns with the requirements of paragraph 1.
3. The Treasurer will consult with the CEO about the request and make a determination on the request.
4. If responding to the request would exceed the normal duties of employees assigned for this purpose, the Treasurer is to request from the CEO the scope of the work and associated costs reasonably necessary to fulfill the request and Convocation is to decide whether the request should be fulfilled.
5. If the Treasurer denies a request on the basis that it does not meet the requirements of paragraph 1, the bencher may refer the matter to Convocation (in camera) and Convocation is to decide whether the request should be fulfilled.
6. Information provided in response to a bencher's request for information will be provided to all benchers.

The following guidelines have been established by the courts:

- Directors are not liable for mere errors of judgment.
- Directors are not required to give continuous attention to the organization's affairs.
- The directors' responsibilities are intermittent and performed at periodic board and committee meetings.
- Directors need not attend all board meetings.
- Directors may entrust certain matters of business to officers of the organization.
- Where there are no grounds for suspicion, directors are justified in trusting that officers of the organization will perform their duties honestly.

7. Information provided in response to a bencher's request for information remains confidential to the Law Society subject to Convocation's authority to make it public.

Once adopted by Convocation, the policy will form part of the Law Society's Governance Practices and Policies.

Subject: Advisory Group - Information Requests

Benchers:

In consultation with the CEO, I have established an advisory group of benchers and management to assist the organization in the development of a process for benchers to make requests for information that is not readily available through the Committee process and discussions.

There have been a number of these requests recently, and an increasing number of requests in the past few years. Defining a process will assist all of us to manage those requests appropriately. The advisory group will make their recommendation to SPAC and then ultimately to Convocation, for approval.

The members of the group will be: Robert Adourian, Cathy Corsetti, Seymour Epstein, Andrew Spurgeon, Diana Miles and Elliot Spears.

Please let me know if you have any questions.

SUBMISSION TO THE STANDING COMMITTEE ON SOCIAL POLICY
ON BILL 65,
THE NOT-FOR PROFIT-CORPORATIONS ACT

AUGUST 23, 2010

1. My name is Malcolm Heins. I am the Chief Executive Officer of the Law Society of Upper Canada. The Law Society appreciates this opportunity to comment on Bill 65, the proposed legislation governing not-for-profit corporations.
2. For 213 years, the Law Society of Upper Canada has regulated Ontario's lawyers in the public interest. Since 2007, it has also regulated licensed paralegals in Ontario. Today, the Law Society regulates 40,000 lawyers and 2,700 paralegals.
3. We support the important objectives of the proposed legislation to modernize the legal framework of not-for-profit corporations and charities and strengthen their organizational structure. We recognize that many non-profit organizations lack the kind of corporate governance required to promote accountability and transparency.
4. I am here to express the concerns of the Law Society about the potential application of the proposed legislation to the Law Society as a professional regulator that governs its members in the public interest. Although we are a not-for-profit corporation, many of the provisions of this legislation are antithetical to our mandate to regulate Ontario's lawyers and paralegals in the public interest. These provisions would give our members, the people we regulate, broad powers to veto or curtail regulatory measures adopted by the Law Society in the public interest.

5. The Law Society asks that it be exempted from the application of this legislation except as it may provide otherwise by by-law made under the Law Society Act. The Law Society has a clear and comprehensive corporate and organizational structure, the bulk of which is contained in the Law Society Act and our by-laws. The governance of the Law Society already meets all of the accountability and transparency objectives of the proposed legislation.
6. The Law Society is subject to the current Corporations Act, but is exempt from the application of certain sections. Furthermore, if there is a conflict between a provision of the Law Society Act and a provision of the Corporations Act, the Law Society Act expressly states that the provision of the Law Society Act prevails. The current Corporations Act co-exists with the Law Society Act without difficulty.
7. The legislature has given the Law Society the responsibility, in the Law Society Act, to make by-laws in the public interest with respect to many of the matters dealt with in the Corporations Act. The Law Society has made many by-laws further to this responsibility. As a result, the provisions in the Corporations Act have, over time, come, not to govern the Law Society, but to supplement the Law Society Act and the by-laws in areas where the Law Society Act and the by-laws are silent.
8. Bill 65 removes the Law Society from the regime of the Corporations Act and places it under the Not-for-Profit Corporations Act. While the bill includes many of the provisions contained in the Corporations Act, it also introduces new features, which when applied to the Law Society, fit poorly with its structure and regulatory mandate.

In some situations, Bill 65 would actually negatively affect the ability of the Law Society to fulfill its public interest mandate.

9. Bill 65 does not exempt the Law Society, nor does it amend the Law Society Act to expressly exempt the Law Society from the application of the Not-for-Profit Corporations Act. While the bill provides that in a case of conflict between it and another Act or regulation made under that Act, the other Act or regulation prevails, this is not entirely satisfactory for the Law Society for two reasons:
  - a. Firstly, there are many direct conflicts between the provisions of Bill 65 and our by-laws, which set out most of our regulatory requirements.
  - b. Secondly, there is a great deal of overlap between the provisions of Bill 65 and our by-laws and it is always a matter of interpretation whether there is a conflict when our by-law is silent on an issue and Bill 65 speaks to it. Our by-law may be silent, not because the Law Society has failed to deal with an issue, but because it has decided the issue, in the public interest, in a way that requires silence in the by-law.
10. I want to give you just a few examples where the provisions of Bill 65 do not fit well with the Law Society's public interest mandate.
  - a. Section 17 of the bill is the first example. It requires the members to confirm at the annual general meeting all by-laws made by the Law Society.

This is inconsistent with the Law Society's mandate to regulate in the public interest, as members could vote down by-laws that impose requirements on them in the public interest. The Law Society is exempt from the current provision to this effect in the Corporations Act. Bill 65 does not continue this exemption.

- b. Secondly, section 26 of the bill permits members to remove directors by resolution. This provision could be invoked by Law Society members who are unhappy with an elected bencher's role in the development of a policy or with the decision of an elected bencher on a hearing panel adjudicating a case involving lawyer or paralegal misconduct.
  - c. Thirdly, subsection 173(2) of Bill 65 would permit a member to apply to the court for an oppression remedy. A lawyer or paralegal unhappy with the result of a discipline or licensing hearing, or the results of a licensing examination, could invoke this section. The Law Society Act, together with the regulations and the Rules of Practice and Procedure set out a complete code of procedure for hearings before the Law Society's Hearing Panel, and appeals before the Law Society's Appeal Panel, followed by an appeal to the Divisional Court.
11. These are but a few examples of the provisions of Bill 65 that are inconsistent with the Law Society's mandate to govern its members in the public interest.

There are also a number of other provisions in the bill that are contrary to the governance structure of the Law Society. They relate to the length of a director's term, the means available to a member to dispute an election and the manner in which directors' meetings are conducted.

12. For example, section 45 of the bill allows directors who are not present at a meeting to submit their dissent to any resolution adopted at the meeting within seven days of the meeting. This provision would prevent the immediate announcement of important policy initiatives to the public and the profession once adopted by the Law Society, and could delay implementation of initiatives.
13. As I indicated earlier, Bill 65 provides that where there is a conflict between one of its provisions and the provisions of another Act, the other Act prevails. In the case of the Law Society Act, we have been given the authority by the legislature to make by-laws to govern our members in the public interest. If the Law Society has the authority to make a by-law regarding a particular matter that is also the subject of a provision in Bill 65, we consider that to be a conflict between the two acts, and the Law Society Act prevails. We assume that the legislature intended to give us unlimited authority to make by-laws in the public interest, not just the authority to make by-laws that are consistent with Bill 65. For the sake of clarity and transparency, a clear exemption from the provisions of Bill 65 is necessary.

14. We suggest that a consequential amendment be made to s. 6 of the Law Society Act to state that the Not-for-Profit Corporations Act does not apply to the Law Society except as it may provide by by-law made under the Law Society Act. Section 234 of the bill gives a similar exemption to the Health Colleges.
15. Thank you for your attention. I would be pleased to answer your questions.
